Ephesians, Epistle to the. The NT Epistle opens with an exposition of God's eternal purpose to redeem Jews and Gentiles alike in Christ, and their common destiny of being built up into the Church 'upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone' (1: 3–2: 22). These promised glories for the Church are echoed through the whole Epistle. The author then proceeds to speak of his own position as Apostle of the Gentiles (3: 1–13), and to dwell on the spiritual (3: 14–21) and moral (4: 1–6: 9) implications of conversion, with particular instructions on the duties of the married life (5: 22–33), of children and parents (6: 1–4), and of slaves and their masters (6: 5–9). There is a concluding section exhorting his readers to 'put on the whole armour of God' in their spiritual struggle (6: 10–20).

The Epistle raises many critical questions. It was apparently written when the author was in prison. Considerations of style and theological emphasis, compared with those of the other epistles of St *Paul, have led an increasing number of modern scholars to question its genuineness. The original destination of the Epistle is uncertain. The words 'in Ephesus' in 1: 1 are wanting in some early MSS (B ℵ P^{46}), a circumstance which, combined with the absence of all personal references, has led some scholars to suppose it was a circular letter addressed largely to Christians whom the author had not met (cf. 1: 15, 3: 2), and that a blank was left in the original and the appropriate place-name inserted in the copy sent to each Church. There are close literary and theological parallels with Col., which are almost certainly to be explained by direct connection between the two, e.g. that Eph. is a working up of Col. into a more systematic doctrinal treatise, or even an orderly exposition of the Gospel as preached by Paul, designed to provide a suitable introduction to the first collection of his letters.

Modern comm. by H. Schlier (Dusseldorf, 1957), J. Gnilka (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 10, Fasc. 2; 1971), M. Barth (Anchor Bible, 2 vols. [1974]), C. L. Mitton (New Cent. Bib., 1976), G. B. Caird (New Clar. Bib., RV, on Eph., Phil., Col., and Philem., 1976, pp. 9–94), H. Conzelmann (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 8; 14th edn., by J. Becker and others, on Gal., Eph., Phil., Col., Thess., and Philemon, 1976, pp. 86–124), R. Schnackenburg (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 10; Zurich, etc. [1982]; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1991) and A. T. Lincoln (Word Biblical Comm. 42; Dallas, Tex. [1990]). E. J. Goodspeed, The Meaning of Ephesians (Chicago, 1933). E. Percy, Die Probleme der Kolosser- und Epheserbriefe (Skrifter utgivna av kungl. Humanistika Vetenskapssamfundet i Lund, 39; 1946), pp. 179–474. C. L. Mitton, The Epistle to the Ephesians: Its Authorship, Origin and Purpose (1951). E. J. Goodspeed, The Key to Ephesians (Chicago, 1956). J. C. Kirby, Ephesians, Baptism and Pentecost: An inquiry into the structure and purpose of the Epistle to the Ephesians (1968). A. van Roon, The Authenticity of Ephesians (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 39; 1974 [Eng. tr. of work pub. in Dutch in 1969]). E. Best, Ephesians (New Testament Guides, Sheffield, 1993). V. P. Furnish in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 535–42.

Ephesus. In NT times, Ephesus, one of the largest cities of the Roman world, was the capital of the Proconsular Province of Asia and, although its harbour was then silting up, was still a great port and commercial centre. Its fame was due largely to its great temple, dedicated to Artemis, or 'Diana' as the Romans called her. This, the fifth on the site, had been erected *c.*330 BC and counted as one of the 'Seven Wonders of the World'; and Ephesus's proudest title was that of 'temple warden' (νεωκόρος) to the goddess (Acts 19: 35).

In early Christian times Ephesus was the scene of important labours of St Paul (see esp. Acts 18 and 19), the traditional home of the aged St *John, and the scene of the Third General Council of the Church in AD 431. During St Paul's three years' residence in the city, the great riot took place in the theatre so graphically described in Acts 19: 21–41. The belief that St John the Apostle lived in Ephesus in his old age is widespread, though disputed. An ancient tradition makes the city the scene of his encounter with the heretic *Cerinthus, and the ruins of a large Byzantine church built by *Justinian mark his traditional burial place. Ephesus was one of the 'Seven Churches' addressed by the Seer in the Apocalypse (Rev. 2: 1–7), the Ephesians being commended for their hatred of the works of the *Nicolaitans (2: 6). The ruins of a double church near the theatre are almost certainly those of the church in which the Council met in AD 431. About a mile from the theatre is a cave where the *Seven Sleepers of Ephesus are reputed to have taken refuge during the *Diocletianic persecution. See also EPHESIANS, EPISTLE TO THE; POLYCRATES, ST.

D. G. Hogarth, with others, Excavations at Ephesus: The Archaic Artemisia (British Museum Publication, 1908; atlas in separate vol., 1908). Forschungen in Ephesos veröffentlicht vom Österreichischen archäologischen Institute (Vienna, 1906 ff.). J. Keil, Ephesos: Ein Führer durch die Ruinenstätte und ihre Geschichte (Vienna, 1915; 5th edn., 1964). C. Picard, Éphèse et Claros: Recherches sur les sanctuaires et les cultes de l'Ionie du nord (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 123; 1922). F. Miltner, Ephesos: Stadt der Artemis und des Johannes (Vienna, 1958). C. Foss, Ephesus after Antiquity: A Late Antique, Byzantine and Turkish City (Cambridge, 1979). W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches in Asia (1904), pp. 210–50; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia Minor in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1989]), pp. 35–56. R. Tonneau, OP, 'Éphèse au temps de saint Paul', R. Bibl. 38 (1929), pp. 5–34 and 321–63. P. Antoine in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 2 (1934), cols. 1076–104, s.v.; R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 554–61, s.v. 'Éphèse (1)'; J. Finegan in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 2 (1962), pp. 114–18, s.v.; D. Boyd, ibid., Suppl. Vol. (1976), pp. 269–71. D. Knibbe and others in PW, Suppl. 12 (1970), cols. 248–364 and 1588–1704, s.v. 'Ephesos'.

Ephesus, Council of (431). The third General Council, summoned by *Theodosius II in the hope of settling the *Nestorian controversy. With the support of Memnon, Bp. of Ephesus, St *Cyril of Alexandria, who was the chief opponent of *Nestorius, opened the council on 22 June 431, without waiting for the arrival either of the Syrian bishops, headed by John of *Antioch, who formed the party most likely to take a sympathetic view of Nestorius, or of the legates of the Pope, *Celestine. Nestorius was deposed from his see of *Constantinople and excommunicated, his doctrines condemned, and the Creed of *Nicaea reaffirmed. When they had arrived, the Syrian bishops, joined by *Theodoret and a considerable group who had protested against Cyril's action, held a rival meeting at which Cyril and Memnon were excommunicated. A reconciliation between John and Cyril was finally effected in 433. The council passed eight canons, the first seven dealing with matters arising out of the doctrinal question (in which the Pelagian *Celestius was condemned, along with Nestorius) and the eighth with the jurisdictional rights of *Cyprus. In its rejection of Nestorianism, the council gave formal approval to the title *Theotokos (q.v.).

Earlier texts of 'Acta' pr. in Hardouin, 1, cols. 1271–722; Mansi, 4 (1760), cols. 567–1482; 5 (1761), cols. 7–1022. These are now superseded by the crit. edn. of E. *Schwartz, ACO 1 (5 parts, 1922–30); Fr. tr. of parts 1–3 by A. J. Festugière, Éphèse et Chalcédoine, Actes des Conciles (1982), pp. 11–650. Coptic Acts (of little historical value), ed. W. Kraatz (TU 26, Heft 2; 1904). I. Rucker, Ephesinische Konzilsakten in armenische-georgischer Überlieferung (Sb. (Bayr.), 1930, Heft 3). Canons and some other material, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 37–74. A. d'Alès, Le Dogme d'Éphèse (1931). I. Rucker, Studien zum Concilium Ephesinum zur 1500-Jahrfeier des dritten ökumenischen Konzils (5 Hefte, privately pub., Oxenbronn bei Günzburg a.D., 1930–5). P.-T. Camelot, OP, Éphèse et Chalcédoine (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 2; 1962), pp. 13–75 and 191–209. L. I. Scipioni, Nestorio e il concilio di Efeso (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 1; 1974), esp. pp. 201–98. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 287–377. Fliche and Martin, 4 (1939), pp. 163–96. A. Grillmeier, SJ, in id. and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (1951), esp. pp. 159–64; expanded Eng. tr., Christ in Christian Tradition (2nd edn., rev., 1971), pp. 443–87. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 30–69 (nos. 8620–8867). M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 137–63, s.v. 'Éphèse (Concile de)'; id. in EC 5 (1950), cols. 114–19, s.v. 'Efeso II, Concilio di', with refs. to series of arts. in Échos d'Orient and other bibl.; J. Liébaert in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 561–74, s.v. 'Éphèse (2), Concile de', with extensive refs.; J. H. Crehan, SJ, in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 217–20, s.v., with bibl.

Ephesus, Robber Council of 449. See LATROCINIUM.

Ephesus, Seven Sleepers of. See SEVEN SLEEPERS OF EPHESUS.

ephod. An ancient Israelite liturgical vestment of linen and beaten gold, most probably in the form of a waist-cloth with shoulder-straps. It is described in Ex. 28: 6–12 and 39: 2–5. It was worn apparently only by the high priest, but a similar garment entirely of linen was worn by other persons, as by Samuel when serving before the tabernacle at Shiloh (1 Sam. 2: 18), and by *David when performing a prophetic dance (2 Sam. 6: 4). The same word was also applied to a certain kind of image (frequently in Jgs., 8: 27 and 17: 5).

K. Budde, 'Ephod und Lade', ZATW 39 (1921), pp. 1–42. J. Morgenstern, 'The Ark, the Ephod, and the "Tent of Meeting"', section 7: 'The Ephod', Hebrew Union College Annual, 18 (1943–1944), pp. 1–17. K. Elliger, 'Ephod und Choschen. Ein Beitrag zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der hohepriestlichen Ornats', Vetus Testamentum, 8 (1958), pp. 19–35. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 201–4, with bibl. pp. 464 f.; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 349–52, with bibl. p. 544.

ephor (Gk. ἔφορος). In the E. Church, a lay guardian or protector in whose charge monastic property was often vested from the 10th cent. onwards. The practice was much abused, as such property was apt to be diverted to secular purposes, e.g. the enrichment of the ephor himself. The word is used also of the holders of various ecclesiastical offices.

Ephphatha. The ceremony in the Roman Baptismal rite in which the celebrant in pronouncing the words 'Ephphatha, that is Be opened' (Mk. 7: 34) touches the ears and mouth of the candidate, praying that he may hear and preach the faith. It is found from an early date in the Baptismal service for Easter Eve at Rome and Milan.

Ephraem Syrus, St (*c.*306–73), Syrian biblical exegete and hymn-writer. Acc. to late Syriac sources he was the son of a pagan priest at Nisibis, his native town; but from indications in his own writings most modern scholars believe that his parents were Christians. He was ordained deacon, perhaps by St *James of Nisibis; but it is unlikely that he accompanied him to the Council of *Nicaea (325). After the cession of Nisibis to Persia in 363 Ephraem withdrew into the Roman Empire and settled at *Edessa, where most of his extant works were written. Later very unreliable legends report journeys to Egypt, where he is said to have spent eight years and confuted the *Arians, and to the Cappadocian Caesarea, where he is stated to have visited St *Basil. He became famous for the austerity and sanctity of his life as well as for his learning.

Ephraem's voluminous exegetical, dogmatic, controversial, and ascetical writings are mostly in verse. Their inspiration is scriptural throughout and they make abundant use of typology and symbolism. Although Ephraem abhors any systematic presentation, his theological vision is nevertheless a coherent one. His poetry is divided into hymns (madrāshē) and verse homilies (mēmrē). Over 500 genuine hymns survive, often of great beauty and insight; they were arranged after his death into hymn cycles, of which the most famous are those on Faith (including the five 'On the Pearl'), on Paradise, and on Nisibis (the second half of this cycle, however, is concerned with the *Descent of Christ into Hell). Several of his works, verse as well as prose, were written to counter heretics, esp. *Marcion, *Bardesanes, and *Mani, as well as the Arians and *Anomoeans. Of the biblical commentaries those on Gen. and the *Diatessaron are the most important. He wrote exclusively in Syriac, but his works were translated into Armenian and Greek at a very early date, and via the latter into Latin and Slavonic; many of the works attributed to him in these languages, however, are not genuine. His liturgical poetry had a great influence on the development of both Syriac and Greek hymnography. Feast day in the E., 28 Jan.; in the W., formerly 1 Feb.; from 1920, when he was declared a Doctor of the Church, 18 June; from 1969, 9 June (10 June in American BCP, 1979). See also CODEX EPHRAEMI.

The collection of Ephraem's works by J. S. and S. E. *Assemani and P. B. Mobarek, SJ (3 vols. of Syriac texts (Rome, 1737–46) and 3 vols. of Greek texts (ibid. 1732–46)), is very unsatisfactory. Crit. edn. of Gk. text begun by S. J. Mercati (vol. 1, fasc. 1, Rome, 1915; all pub.). T. J. Lamy (ed.), S. Ephraem Syri Hymni et Sermones (4 vols., Malines, 1882–1902) contains only works not pub. in the Rome edn. Crit. edn., with Ger. tr., of his hymns, by E. Beck: those De Fide (CSCO 154, with tr. 155; 1955), Contra Haereses (ibid. 169, with tr. 170; 1957), De Paradiso with Contra Julianum (ibid. 174, with tr. 175; 1957), De Nativitate (ibid. 186, with tr. 187; 1959), De Virginitate (ibid. 223, with tr. 224; 1962), De Ieiunio (ibid. 246, with tr. 247; 1964), and of his Paschahymnen (ibid. 248, with tr. 249; 1964); also by id. of his Carmina Nisibena (ibid. 218 and 240, with tr. 219 and 241; 1961–3), of his Sermones de Fide (ibid. 212, with tr. 213; 1961) and his Sermo de Domino Nostro (ibid. 270, with tr. 271; 1966); and of his Homiliae de Nicomedia, by C. Renoux, with Fr. tr. (PO 37, fascs. 1–2; 1975); C. W. Mitchell (ed.), St Ephrem's Prose Refutations of Mani, Marcion and Bardaisan (Text and Translation Society, 2 vols., 1912–21); commentaries on Gen. and Ex. ed. R. M. Tonneau (CSCO 152, with Lat. tr. 153; 1955) and on the Diatessaron, with Lat. tr., by L. Leloir, OSB (Chester Beatty Monographs, 8; Dublin, 1963; with additional pages, also Chester Beatty Monographs, 8; Louvain, 1990); Eng. tr. by C. McCarthy (Journal of Semitic Studies Supplement, 2; Oxford, 1993). Comm. on Acts and Epp. survive only in Armenian. Eng. trs. of 'Metrical Hymns and Homilies' by H. Burgess (2 vols., 1835), of Selections by J. Gwynn in NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 13, pt. 2 (1898), with introd. Dissertation, and of Selected Prose Works' by E. G. Matthews and J. P. Amar (Fathers of the Church, 91 etc., 1994 ff.); also by S. [P.] Brock of 12 Poems, The Harp of the Spirit (London, 1975; enlarged to 18 Poems, 1983) and Hymns on Paradise (Crestwood, NY, 1990), and by K. E. McVey of Hymns ['On the Nativity', 'Against *Julian the Apostate', and, 'On Virginity'] (Classics of Western Spirituality [1989]).

E. Beck, Ephräms Polemik gegen Mani und die Manichäer im Rahmen der zeitgenössischen griechischen Polemik und der des Augustinus (CSCO, Subsidia, 55; 1978). P. Yousif, L'Eucharistie chez saint Éphrem de Nisibe (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 224; 1984). S. [P.] Brock, The Luminous Eye: The Spiritual World Vision of St Ephrem (Rome, 1985; revised repr., Cistercian Studies Series, 124; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1992). T. Bou Mansour, La pensée symbolique de saint Ephrem le Syrien (Bibliothèque de l'Université Saint-Esprit, 16; Kaslik, 1988). M. P. Roncaglia, 'Essai de bibliographie sur saint Ephrem', Parole de l'Orient, 4 (1973), pp. 343–70; suppl. by S. [P.] Brock, ibid. 10 (1981/2), pp. 320–7, and 14 (1987), pp. 305–8. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 31–52. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 56–83. E. Beck in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 788–800, s.v. 'Éphrem le Syrien' and D. Hemmerdinger-Iliadou and J. Kirchmeyer, SJ, ibid., cols. 800–22, s.v. 'Éphrem (2) (Les Versions)'; R. M. Murray, SJ, in, A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 220–3; id., in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 755–62, both s.v., with bibl.

epiclesis (Gk. ἐπίκλησις). Although the term originally meant 'invocation' and subsequently 'prayer' in general, it has long been commonly used in Christian writings only for the petition for the consecration of the bread and wine in the Eucharist, and it is usually restricted to the form of this petition which asks the Father to send the Holy Spirit upon the bread and wine to make them into the Body and Blood of Christ. Its history and theological significance are highly controversial.

Early Eucharistic Prayers, such as that in the Apostolic Tradition (early 3rd cent.), have petitions for the illapse of the Holy Spirit on the Church's offering, asking that those who receive the elements may profit thereby; a particular fruit of blessing sought is the gathering into one of all present in the hope of the Kingdom of God. The connection between the epiclesis and the unity of God's people remains in later prayers, but from the 4th cent. the petition is more explicitly for the consecration and transformation of the gifts of bread and wine. Thus the Liturgies of St *James and St *Basil pray that the Holy Spirit might descend 'upon us and upon these gifts'. The Liturgy of St *Chrysostom and the commentary on the liturgy in the Catechetical Lectures of St *Cyril of Jerusalem (*c.*350) are even more explicit in praying for a change in the elements. During the 4th cent. a form of epiclesis which prayed for both the unity and eschatological good of the communicants and for the change of the bread and wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, became common in E. liturgies. In the Egyptian tradition, a very vague epiclesis (originally of the *Logos (or Word) rather than the Holy Spirit) preceded the Words of *Institution. The Greek Liturgy of St *Mark contained a vague epiclesis that the Holy Spirit might 'fill' the Sacrifice, but also petitioned for consecration of the elements after the Words of Institution.

In the W. a petition in epicletic form appears in some of the ancient Hispano-Gallican rites; it comes sometimes before and sometimes after the Institution Narrative, explicit invocations of the Holy Spirit being rather more frequent in the latter position. The Roman *Canon of the Mass contains no such explicit mention of the Holy Spirit, though some scholars have sought to detect traces of an epiclesis in the prayer (Quam oblationem) that the bread and wine may be changed into the Body and Blood of Christ which comes before the Institution Narrative. There is an older tradition of seeking such traces in the Supplices, asking for the acceptance of the earthly sacrifice in heaven that it may be beneficial for us. Rather, the whole sequence from Quam oblationem to the end of Supplices is a unified act of oblation and prayer for that oblation's acceptance. The modern RC Eucharistic Prayers contain a double epiclesis; both prayers are explicitly for the operation of the Holy Spirit, the first that the elements may be changed and the second in connection with the fruits of communion.

T. *Cranmer introduced a reference to the action of the Holy Spirit into the invocation before the Words of Institution in the BCP of 1549 ('With Thy Holy Spirit and Word vouchsafe to bless and sanctify these Thy gifts and creatures of Bread and Wine'). It was removed in 1552 and not reintroduced in 1662. It was restored in the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637, and was used by the *Nonjurors. All the Eucharistic rites in the American BCP (1979) include an epiclesis before or after the Words of Institution, mostly using a form of words based on the 1764 Scottish liturgy, and most of the rites in the ASB have some form of double epiclesis. Many other modern Anglican liturgies contain a double or single epiclesis, in varying positions, some invoking the operation of the Holy Spirit on the elements, some on the communicants, and some more generally on, or through, the Eucharistic action. Rites such as those of the Church of *South India, the *United Reformed Church (1989), and the *Common Order of the Church of Scotland (1994), all provide single epicleses that pray both for the consecration of the elements and for the benefits of communion; such petitions usually come after the Institution Narrative.

J. Brinktrine, De Epiclesis Eucharisticae Origine (Rome, 1923). G. *Dix, OSB, 'The Origins of the Epiclesis', Theology, 28 (1934), pp. 125–37 and 187–202. E. G. C. F. Atchley, On the Epiclesis of the Eucharistic Liturgy and in the Consecration of the Font (*Alcuin Club Collections, 31; 1935). M. Jugie, AA, De Forma Eucharistiae: De Epiclesibus Eucharisticis (Rome, 1943). B. Botte, OSB, 'L'Épiclèse de l'Anaphore d'Hippolyte', RTAM 14 (1947), pp. 241–51; B. *Capelle, OSB, 'L'Anaphore de Sérapion. Essai d'exégèse', Muséon, 59 (1946), pp. 425–43, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 344–58. E. Stommel, Studien zur Epiklese der römischen Taufwasserweihe (Theophaneia, 5; 1950). C. Kern, 'En marge de l'épiclèse', Irénikon, 24 (1951), pp. 166–94. G. S. Smit, 'Épiclèse et théologie des sacrements', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 15 (1958), pp. 95–136. J. H. McKenna, CM, Eucharist and Holy Spirit: The Eucharistic Epiclesis in Twentieth Century Theology (1900–1966) (Alcuin Club Collections, 57; 1975); id., 'The Eucharistic Epiclesis in Twentieth Century Theology (1900–1966)', EL 90 (1976), pp. 289–328 and 446–82; id., 'The Epiclesis Revisited. A Look at Modern Eucharistic Prayers', ibid. 99 (1985), pp. 314–36. J. H. Crehan, SJ, 'Eucharistic Epiklesis: New Evidence and a New Theory', Theological Studies, 41 (1980), pp. 698–712; R. Albertine, MM, 'The Epiclesis Problem—The Roman Canon (Canon I) in the Post-Vatican Liturgical Reform', EL 99 (1985), pp. 337–48. W. R. Crockett, Eucharist: Symbol of Transformation (New York [1989]), pp. 54–63. S. Salaville, AA, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 194–300, s.v. 'Épiclèse eucharistique'; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 1, 1922), cols. 142–84; M. Jugie, AA, in EC 5 (1951), cols. 409–13; J. Laager in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 583–99, s.v. 'Epiklesis, II. Liturgische'.

Epictetus (*c.*50–*c.*130), *Stoic philosopher. He was probably born at Hierapolis in Phrygia. A slave in the household of *Nero, he attended the lectures of the Stoic Musonius Rufus and later became a freedman. He taught in Rome till expelled by *Domitian *c.*90, when he settled at Nicopolis in Epirus. Though he wrote nothing, his discourses were taken down by his disciple, Flavius Arrianus, and issued in two treatises, the longer 'Discourses of Epictetus' (Ἐπικτήτου Διατριβαί), of which four Books survive, and a shorter and more popular 'Enchiridion'. They reveal him as a religious thinker earnestly seeking for truth and concerned to uphold moral righteousness. His conception of God as the Father of men is more in keeping with belief in a personal and transcendent God than with the Stoic pantheism which he inherited. He stressed the kinship of God and man, the brotherhood of men, and the obligation of moral perfection, to be attained by resignation and renunciation (ἀνέχου καὶ ἀπέχου). The influence of Christian ideas on Epictetus or vice versa has often been discussed, but the resemblances hardly go beyond a striking similarity of moral temper. Only once are the Christians ('Galileans') mentioned in his writings, and then contemptuously. He was, however, valued in Christian ascetic circles.

Best edns. of the Discourses are those of J. Schweighäuser (5 vols., Leipzig, 1799–1800, with other works, incl. Christian reworking of Epictetus), H. Schenkl (Teubner edn., 1894; 2nd edn., 1916), and J. Souilhé, with Fr. tr. (Collection des Universités de France, 4 vols., 1943–65; rev. edn., 1975 ff.); edn. based on Schenkl, with Eng. tr., by W. A. Oldfather (Loeb, 2 vols., 1926–8); Enchiridion, ed. J. Schweighäuser (Leipzig, 1798); also repr. in H. Schenkel, op. cit., and, with Eng. tr., in W. A. Oldfather, op. cit. A. Bonhoeffer, Epictet und die Stoa (Stuttgart, 1890); id., Die Ethik des Stoikers Epictet (ibid., 1894); id., Epiktet und das Neue Testament (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, 10; 1911); D. S. Sharp, Epictetus and the New Testament (1914). E. Riondato, Epitteto (Padua, 1965 ff.). W. A. Oldfather, Contributions toward a Bibliography of Epictetus (Urbana, Ill., 1927; suppl. ed. M. Harman, ibid., 1952). A. Jagu, M. Spanneut, and J.-E. d'Angiers, OFM Cap., in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 822–54; M. Spanneut in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 599–681, s.v. 'Epiktet'.

Epicureanism. The system of philosophical ethics founded by the Greek thinker Epicurus (342–270 BC). Epicurus held that the senses, as the one and only source of all our ideas, provided the sole criterion of all truth. On this basis he reasserted the materialistic atomism of Democritus and denied immortality. He did not reject the existence of gods, but refused to concede their interference in human affairs. The goal of human conduct he sought in pleasure, which he equated with freedom from pain and from fear. During and after his lifetime his doctrines proved very attractive. Among later Epicureans were Apollodorus, Zeno of Sidon, and (the most famous) the Roman Lucretius. In the NT, Epicureans are referred to in Acts 17: 18. Fragments of many of Epicurus' writings have been recovered from the charred papyri of Herculaneum.

Fragments of Epicurus ed. H. Usener (Leipzig, 1887), C. Bailey with Eng. tr. (Oxford 1926), and G. Arrighetti (Turin, 1960; rev. edn., 1973). 'Ethica' ed. W. Schmid from Pap. Herc. 1251 (Studia Herculanensia, 1; 1939), and by C. Diano (Florence, 1946). Diogenes Laertius, Lives and Opinions of Eminent Philosophers, 10 (ed. with Eng. tr. by R. D. Hicks, Loeb, 1925, 2, pp. 528–677; ed. H. S. Long, Oxford Classical Texts, 2, 1964, pp. 494–565). C. Bailey, The Greek Atomists and Epicurus: A Study (1928); E. Bignone, L'Aristotele perduto e la formazione filosofica di Epicuro [1936]; A.-J. Festugière, OP, Épicure et ses dieux (1946; 2nd edn., 1968; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1955); N. W. DeWitt, Epicurus and his Philosophy (Minneapolis, 1954); P. Merlan, Studies in Epicurus and Aristotle (Klassisch-Philologische Studien, 22; Wiesbaden, 1960), pp. 1–72; B. Farrington, The Faith of Epicurus (1967); J. M. Rist, Epicurus: An Introduction (Cambridge, 1972); D. Lemke, Die Theologie Epikurs: Versuch einer Rekonstruktion (Zetemata, 57; 1973). H. Jones, The Epicurean Tradition (1989). W. Schmid in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 681–819, s.v. 'Epikur'.

epigonation (Gk. ἐπιγονάτιον, from ἐπιγουνίς, 'thigh'). In the E. Church, a lozenge-shaped vestment, formed of cardboard covered with cloth and decorated with a cross (and sometimes also with elaborately embroidered icons), hanging from the right side. Its use was originally confined to bishops, but in more recent times it has also come to be worn by *archimandrites and *archpriests.

Braun, LG, pp. 550–4.

epiklesis. See EPICLESIS.

epimanikion (Gk. ἐπί, 'on'; Lat. manica, 'sleeve'). The epimanikia are cuffs, usually of embroidered silk, now worn in the E. Church by bishops and priests over the ends of the sleeves of the *sticharion, and by deacons over the ends of the sleeves of the cassock. Their use, which dates at least from the 11th cent., was in the 12th cent. still confined to bishops, and hence they may be a development of the cuffs of the bishop's sticharion itself. They seem to have a W. counterpart in the 'manica' referred to in the description of the *Gallican rite in the Letters attributed to St *Germanus of Paris.

Epiphanius, St (c.315–403), Bp. of Salamis. A native of Palestine, he became an enthusiastic supporter of the monastic movement and founded c.335 a monastery near Eleutheropolis in Judaea. His reputation for earnestness and organization was such that in 367 he was elected by the bishops of Cyprus to become their metropolitan, as Bp. of Salamis (at that time called Constantia). He continued throughout his life an ardent upholder of the faith of *Nicaea, and was intolerant of all suspicion of heresy. Of his writings in defence of orthodox belief, the most important was his 'Panarion', commonly known as the 'Refutation of all the Heresies', in which he described and attacked every heresy known to him from the beginning of the Church. Though, like all his works, it is badly constructed and far too receptive of statements and legends which support his position, it preserves much invaluable historical material. In his later life he took an active part in the *Apollinarian and *Melitian controversies, and after meeting St *Jerome in Rome in 382, joined forces with him in his attack on *Origenism. A visit to *Jerusalem for the purpose in 394 led to serious friction with the bishop, John, in which Jerome also became involved. In 400 he travelled to *Constantinople on behalf of *Theophilus, Bp. of Alexandria, who had expelled the Origenist monks; but, seeing that he was being used as a tool against John *Chrysostom, he set out again for Salamis and died at sea on the way back. Besides the 'Panarion' he also wrote a doctrinal treatise, the 'Ancoratus' (Ἀγκυρωτός), in the MSS of which the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan creed appears perhaps for the first time; treatises 'On Measures and Weights' and 'On Gems'; and also against the use of *images in Christian worship. Feast day, 12 May.

Editio princeps of Epiphanius' chief works by J. Oporinus, Basle, 1544. Much improved text ed. D. *Petavius, SJ, 2 vols., Paris, 1622; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 41–3. More recent text by W. Dindorf, 5 vols., Leipzig, 1859–62. Crit. text of 'Ancoratus' and 'Panarion' (or 'Haereses'), ed. K. *Holl (GCS, 3 vols., 1915–33); 'Panarion' revised by J. Dummer (ibid., 1980 ff.). Eng. tr. of 'Panarion', by F. Williams (Nag Hammadi Studies, 35 and 36; Leiden, 1987–94); Eng. tr. of selected passages by P. R. Amidon, SJ (New York and Oxford, 1990). Syr. text of 'De Mensuris et Ponderibus', ed. J. E. Dean (Chicago, 1935); Georg. text ed., with Fr. tr., by M.-J. van Esbroeck, SJ (CSCO, 460–1; Scriptores Iberici, 19–20; 1984); Georg. text of 'De Gemmis', by R. P. Blake and H. de Vis (Studies and Documents, ed. K. *Lake, 2; London, 1934). K. Holl, 'Die Schriften des Epiphanius gegen die Bilderverehung', Sb. (Berl.), 1916, pp. 828–68, repr. in his Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeshichte, 2 (Tübingen, 1928), pp. 351–87. J. F. Dechow, Dogma and Mysticism in Early Christianity: Epiphanius of Cyprus and the Legacy of Origen (Patristic Monograph Series, 13; Louvain and Macon, Ga. [1988]). A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 324–41 (nos. 3744–807). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 315–18 and 614 f. F. M. Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon (1983), pp. 133–42, 347, and 383 f. W. Schneemelcher in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 909–27; P. Nautin in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 617–31, s.v. 'Épiphane (10), Saint de Salamine'.

Epiphany (Gk. ἐπιφάνεια, 'manifestation'; later τὰ Ἐπιφάνια is used of the feast). Feast of the Church on 6 Jan. It originated in the E., where it was celebrated in honour of the Baptism of Christ (sometimes also in connection with the Nativity) from the 3rd cent. onwards. *Clement of Alexandria (d. *c.*215) reports that the *Gnostic sect of the *Basilideans observed a feast in honour of the Baptism of Christ around this time of year (Strom. 1. 21), and from the 4th cent. there is ample evidence for the feast, which then ranked with *Easter and *Pentecost as one of the three principal festivals of the Church. One of its main features in the E. is the solemn blessing of water.

It was introduced into the W. Church in the 4th cent. but here lost its character as a feast of the Baptism of Christ, which it has retained in the E. Church down to the present day. Instead it became associated with the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles in the person of the *Magi, as is borne out by the Homilies of *Leo I on the 'Theophania' (an alternative name of the feast). In the Mass and Office the Magi were given the chief place, though mention is also made of the Baptism of Christ and of the miracle at Cana. In 1955 both the Octave and Vigil of the Epiphany were abolished, but the Sunday after Epiphany was made a separate feast of the Baptism, which had figured largely in the liturgy of the Octave. In England the Sovereign makes offerings of gold, frankincense, and myrrh in the *Chapel Royal on the feast.

For the main lit. dealing with Christmas and the Epiphany see under CHRISTMAS. On the Epiphany only, John, Marquess of Bute and E. A. W. Budge, The Blessing of the Waters on the Eve of the Epiphany: The Greek, Latin, Syriac, Coptic, and Russian Versions Edited or Translated from the Original Texts (1901). K. *Holl, 'Der Ursprung des Epiphanienfestes', Sb. (Berl.), 1917, pp. 402–38, repr. in Holl's Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, 2 (1928), pp. 123–54. C. Mohrmann, Epiphania (lecture; Nijmegen and Utrecht, 1953). R. H. Bainton, Collected Papers in Church History, 1 (Boston [1962]), pp. 22–38 ('The Origins of the Epiphany'). A. J. Vermeulen, 'Le Développement sémasiologique d'Ἐπιφάνεια et la fête de l'Épiphanie', Græcitas Christianorum Primæva, Suppl. 1 (1964), pp. 7–44. J. *Daniélou, SJ, 'Les Origines de l'Épiphanie et les Testimonia', in A.-M. Dubarle and others, Noël-Épiphanie: ... Semaine liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge [Paris] (Lex Orandi, 40; 1967), pp. 65–84; R.-G. Coquin, 'Les Origines d'Épiphanie en Egypte', ibid., pp. 139–70; A. Renoux, OSB, 'Épiphanie à Jérusalem au IVe et au Ve siècles', ibid., pp. 171–93, and other essays. F. Nikolasch, 'Zum Ursprung des Epiphaniefestes', EL 82 (1968), pp. 393–429, with bibl. C. C. Martindale, SJ, in CE 5 (1909), pp. 504–6; C. Smith in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 480 f., s.v.; E. Pax in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 899–909, s.v. 'Épiphanie, e. Liturgie'; F. Mann and H.-C. Schmidt-Lauber in TRE 9 (1982), cols. 762–70, s.v. 'Epiphaniasfest'.

episcopacy (Gk. ἐπίσκοπος, lit. 'overseer'), the system of Church government by bishops. Where it prevails it is commonly related to the institution of the *Apostolate by Christ. In the NT the word ἐπίσκοπος (AV, 'bishop') appears to be used of the same office as πρεσβύτερος ('presbyter'). See BISHOP.

Episcopal Church in the United States of America. The Church in the *United States of America in communion with the see of *Canterbury. Previously known as the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, it adopted the new title as an alternative in 1967 and as its official designation in 1979.

The first Anglican church in America was built at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607; many other congregations were established in different parts of the Continent, all under the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London; and from 1701 onwards the spread of the Anglican Church was vigorously furthered by the *SPG, founded in that year. But it was only after the War of Independence that the Protestant Episcopal Church was established as an autonomous organization. S. *Seabury (q.v.) was elected by the clergy of Connecticut as their bishop, and, after legal difficulties had prevented his consecration in England, he received episcopal *orders in 1784 at the hands of the bishops of the Episcopalian Church in *Scotland. Further bishops were consecrated in England, however, in 1787 and 1790. At a General Convention in 1789 a constitution and canons were drawn up and the Book of *Common Prayer revised. The Church for a long time met with considerable prejudice on account of its British connections, but gradually this feeling lessened.

The Church was a pioneer in the foundation of theological seminaries and established the *General Theological Seminary in New York as early as 1817 (there are now ten others). During the Civil War of 1861–5 the Church in the southern states formed itself into a separate body, but reconciliation followed the peace in 1865. After that date the Church expanded both at home and abroad, and missionary dioceses were set up in such places as Alaska, Hawaii, the *Philippines, Puerto Rico, Cuba, *China, *Japan, Liberia, and *Brazil. Since 1867 the American Church has taken a prominent part in all the *Lambeth Conferences. Further revisions in the Prayer Book were made in 1892 and in 1928–9; a new Prayer Book, based on rites authorized in 1967 and 1976, became official in 1979. It includes services in both traditional and contemporary language. There is also a single, official hymnal, the latest revision being that of 1982.

The constitution of the Church provides for the laity a major role both in all the legislative bodies and in the vestries of individual churches. Bishops are elected, by majority vote of both clerical and lay order, in diocesan conventions. The ultimate governing body of the Church is the General Convention, which meets every three years. There are no archbishops, but there is a Presiding Bishop: until 1919 the senior bishop by consecration, but now elected by the General Convention. An Executive Council, composed of elected members representing bishops, other clergy, and laity, is the continuing executive organ between meetings of the General Convention.

Theological and ecclesiastical parties run in some measure upon similar lines to those in the C of E. Opposition to the decision of the General Convention in 1976 to permit the ordination of women to the priesthood, and to a lesser degree to the new Prayer Book, led to the formation of several small schismatic bodies. The consecration early in 1989 of the first woman to become a bishop in the Anglican Communion (as suffragan in the diocese of Massachusetts) aroused further controversy. Nevertheless, a woman was elected as diocesan bishop in Vermont in 1993. The generally liberal social programmes established by recent General Conventions have also provoked strong opposition.

The Church has long taken a prominent part in ecumenical activities. Modern developments include the *Consultation on Church Union (COCU), Anglican–RC negotiations, and official joint commissions with *Lutheran and *Orthodox theologians. In 1990 preliminary agreement was reached with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America to establish full eucharistic communion: the final Concord of Agreement is due to be voted on in 1997.

Membership of the Church declined markedly between 1966 and 1990. In the latter year there were just under 2.5 million members (nearly 3.5 million in 1966), with about 1.75 million communicants.

See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

W. S. Perry [Bp. of Iowa] (ed.), Historical Collections relating to the American Colonial Church (5 vols. in 4, relating to Virginia, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Delaware; privately pr. at Hartford, Conn., 1870–8). W. White, Bp. of Pennsylvania, Memoirs of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America (Philadelphia, 1820), with orig. docs. W. S. Perry, The History of the American Episcopal Church, 1587–1883 (2 vols., Boston, 1885); C. C. Tiffany, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America (American Church History Series, 7; New York, 1895); W. W. Manross, A History of the American Episcopal Church (ibid., 1935; 2nd edn., 1950); R. W. Albright, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church (New York and London, 1964). P. M. Dawley, The Episcopal Church and its Work (Greenwich, Conn., 1955). J. T. Addison, The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1789–1931 (New York, 1951). G. E. DeMille, The Catholic Movement in the American Episcopal Church (Philadelphia, 1941; 2nd edn., enlarged, 1950); id., The Episcopal Church since 1900 (New York, 1955). D. E. Sumner, The Episcopal Church's History, 1945–1985 (Wilton, Conn. [1987]). R. W. Prichard, A History of the Episcopal Church (Harrisburg, Pa. [1991] [multicultural approach]). W. S. Perry, The Episcopate in America: Sketches, Biographical and Bibliographical, of the Bishops of the American Church (New York, 1895). A. L. Cross, The Anglican Episcopate and the American Colonies (Harvard Historical Studies, 9; 1902). E. C. Chorley, Men and Movements in the American Episcopal Church (Hale Lectures for 1943; New York, 1946). E. L. Parsons and B. H. Jones, The American Prayer Book: Its Origins and Principles (New York, 1937). M. J. Hatchett, The Making of the First American Book of Common Prayer, 1776–1789 (New York, 1982); id., Commentary on the American Prayer Book (New York, 1980). C. R. Barnes, The General Convention: Offices and Officers, 1785–1950 (Philadelphia, 1951). E. A. White, Annotated Constitution and Canons for the Government of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, adopted in General Convention 1789–1922 (New York, 1924; rev. and cont. to 1981 by J. A. Dykman, 2 vols., Greenwich, Conn., 1984). Also important arts. in the Historical Magazine of the Protestant Episcopal Church (Austin, Tex., 1932 ff.; since 1987 called Anglican and Episcopal History). See also bibl. to UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Episcopalian. Properly a member of any Church ruled by bishops (episcopi), but esp. of the *Anglican Communion as opposed to non-episcopal bodies, e.g. the Church of *Scotland.

episcopi vagantes (Lat., 'wandering bishops'). The name given to persons who have been consecrated bishop in an irregular or clandestine manner or who, having been regularly consecrated, have been excommunicated by the Church that consecrated them and are in communion with no recognized see. A man is also included in this group when the number in communion with him is so small that his sect appears to exist solely for his own sake. W., but not E., theology is generally ready to admit that such consecrations are valid. In modern times the main streams of succession deriving from 'episcopi vagantes' are those founded by A. H. *Mathew, J. R. *Vilatte, and an Armenian, Leon Chechemian, and the principal sects founded and governed by them are the 'American Catholic Church' (Vilatte), the '*Old Roman Catholic Church' (Mathew), the 'Negro Orthodox Church' (Vilatte), and the 'Free Protestant Church of England' (Chechemian). In addition to these are smaller sects and stray bishops whose orders have been obtained by dubious means or come from doubtful sources, as well as certain *Theosophist bishops who trace their orders to Mathew.

A. J. Macdonald, Episcopi Vagantes in Church History (1945); H. R. T. Brandreth, Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (1947; rev. edn., 1961); P. F. Anson, Bishops at Large (1964).

Episcopius. The assumed name of Simon Bisschop (1583–1643), who systematized the typical tenets of *Arminianism. Born at Amsterdam, he studied at *Leiden (1600–6), where he came under the influence of J. Arminius. He was one of the signatories to the *Remonstrance (1610) and in 1612 succeeded F. *Gomar as professor of theology at Leiden. Episcopius was the chief spokesman for the group of thirteen Remonstrants summoned to appear at the Synod of *Dort which condemned and banished them in 1619. He then went to the Spanish Netherlands where he drew up a confession of faith (pub. in Dutch, 1621; in Lat., 1622) for the newly founded Remonstrant Brotherhood. After a few years in France (1621–6), where he continued the exposition of his views, he became minister of the Remonstrant Church in Rotterdam and ultimately (1634) was appointed as the first professor of theology in the Remonstrant seminary at Amsterdam. Laying great stress upon the importance of scholarly scriptural exegesis after the manner of *Erasmus, he emphasized the practical nature of Christianity, affirmed that the Church is based upon a minimum of speculative beliefs, remonstrated against current Calvinist dogmas of *predestination and *original sin, stressed the responsibility of man, not God, for sin, and taught a reduced view of the divinity of Christ and a *subordinationist doctrine of the Trinity.

Opera Theologica, ed. posthumously by S. Curcellaeus and P. van Limborch (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1650–65). Life by P. van Limborch (ibid., 1701). F. Calder, Memoirs of Simon Episcopius (1835). A. H. Heantjens, Simon Episcopius als Apologeet van het Remonstrantisme (Leiden, 1889). H. C. Rogge in PRE (3rd edn.), 5 (1898), pp. 422–4; J. Dutilleul in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 367–9; G. J. Hoenderdaal in Biographish Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 2 (1983), pp. 191–5. See also works cited under ARMINIANISM.

epistemology (Gk. ἐπιστήμη, 'knowledge'), also known as Theory of Knowledge. The philosophical discipline which examines the nature and validity of human cognition.

Epistle. In Christian worship it was long customary for two passages of Scripture to be read or sung at the Eucharist; the former came to be known as the 'Epistle', doubtless because it was normally taken from the NT

Epistles, though sometimes from Acts, and in the W. occasionally from the OT or Rev. In early times, both in the E. and W., the Gospel was preceded by several lessons, of which the Epistle was the last. In the Roman rite, with certain exceptions, only the Epistle survived until 1969; OT readings were then restored on many days, and it is now fairly common on weekdays to have no lesson from the non-Gospel parts of the NT. Until the 8th cent. the reading of the Epistle was assigned to the *lector; it then fell to the *subdeacon and came to be regarded as his special function; in modern times the duty is very often undertaken by a lay person, or by the celebrant himself. The Epistle was formerly read from the *ambo or rood-*screen where such existed. In early times the selection of Epistles was made to provide continuity from Sunday to Sunday; traces of this 'lectio continua' survived, and the principle has been partially restored in the RC Church. The series of Epistles in the BCP was largely taken over from the *Sarum Missal. In the C of E the ASB provides an OT lesson, Epistle, and Gospel throughout the year, but allows the OT lesson or the Epistle to be omitted. The reader or chanter of the Epistle has sometimes been known as the 'Epistoler'; in the *Canons of 1604 (can. 24), the form 'Epistler' occurs. The 'Epistolary' was the medieval name for the book containing the Epistles. In the E. Church an Epistle (called '*Apostle') and Gospel are chanted not only at the Eucharistic liturgy, but at any sacramental celebration (including the *burial service).

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 501–38; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 391–421, with refs. W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, 3, The Roman Epistle-Lectionary (*Alcuin Club Collections, 32; 1935). G. Godu in DACL 5 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 245–344, s.v. 'Épîtres'. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), passim. See also works cited s.v. LECTIONARY.

Epistle of the Apostles. See TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD IN GALILEE.

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum*. The famous pamphlet in the dispute between J. *Reuchlin and the *Dominicans of Cologne. It appeared in two parts (1515 and 1517), the first written chiefly by Crotus Rubianus (1486–1540), the second almost entirely by Ulrich von *Hutten (1488–1523). The title is a parody of the collection of genuine letters to Reuchlin published by him in 1514 and entitled Clarorum virorum epistolae. These imaginary letters are supposed to be addressed to a real person, Ortwin Gratius, who, though a humanist, belonged to the party of the Dominicans. Written in a style parodying the most monkish Latin, they are a witty and bitter satire on the methods of later *Scholasticism, on the religious practices of their age, and on many ecclesiastical institutions and doctrines. Their great popularity contributed much to discredit the old theological learning and its representatives.

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum: The Latin Text with an English Rendering, Notes and an historical Introduction by F. G. Stokes (1909); Stokes's Eng. tr. (only) repr. under the title On the Eve of the Reformation, with new introd. by H. Holborn (New York and London, 1964). R. P. Becker, A War of Fools: The Letters of Obscure Men. A Study of the Satire and the Satirized (Berne, 1981).

Epistula Apostolorum. See TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD IN GALILEE.

epitaphion (Gk. ἐπιτάφιον, 'belonging to burial'). In the E. Church, a richly embroidered veil, on which is represented the scene of Christ's burial. It is carried in procession at the end of *Vespers on *Good Friday and is then placed in the centre of the church, decorated with flowers. At the end of *Orthros of *Holy Saturday it is again carried in procession. In the Greek use, it is then placed on the altar; in the Russian, it is returned to the centre of the church and only placed on the altar at the end of the Midnight Office, immediately before the *Mattins of *Easter Day. It remains on the altar until the eve of *Ascension Day.

epitrachelion (Gk. ἐπιτραχήλιον; from τράχηλος, 'neck'), also peritrachelion. The form of the stole worn by the priest in the E. Church. It is a long strip of material fastened in front and decorated with crosses and a fringe. It is to be distinguished from the *orarion, which is the liturgical garment of the deacon.

Equiprobabilism. The moral system defended by St *Alphonsus Liguori (q.v.). It sought to steer a mid-course between *Probabiliorism and *Probabilism, holding that the stricter course should be followed if the question concerns the cessation of the law, while the laxer course may be pursued if the question is whether the law ever existed.

Era of the Martyrs. See DIOCLETIANIC ERA.

Erasmus, St. See ELMO, ST.

Erasmus, Desiderius (1466/9–1536), 'Roterodammensis' or 'Roterodamus', humanist. There is still doubt about the date of his birth, but he was probably the (illegitimate) son of Rogerius Gerardus. Christened 'Herasmus'; he took in adult life the name of 'Desiderius' as a Latinized form of 'Erasmus', itself a supposed Greek equivalent of his baptismal name. He went to school first at Gouda and then at Deventer, where the humanist, Alexander Hegius, was one of his masters and where he came under the influence of the '*Brethren of the Common Life'. Despite considerable reluctance, he became an *Augustinian Canon at St Gregory's, Steyn, nr. Gouda, in 1487, and eagerly began to read the Classics and the Fathers. In 1492 he was ordained priest. Finding about this time a protector in Henry of Bergen, Bp. of Cambrai, with the agreement of his superiors he left his monastery. In 1495 he began to study at Paris, residing at first at the College of Montaigu. In 1499 he accompanied his pupil, William Blount, 4th Baron Mountjoy (d. 1534), who afterwards became his patron, to England. At Oxford he was deeply influenced by J. *Colet, who encouraged his dislike of *Scholasticism and directed him to the study of the NT. Having returned to the Continent in 1500, he went to Paris and Louvain, where he refused a professorship, and instead began a profound study of Greek. After another visit to England, he made his way to Italy, where he received a doctorate in theology at Turin on 4 Sept. 1506. He continued his Greek studies at *Bologna and in 1507 got in touch with Aldus Manutius, who published his Latin translation of Euripides. Erasmus joined Aldus' 'New Academy' in *Venice, and while there he published the revised version of his Adagia, the Adagiorum chiliades, with which he finally achieved international fame. He visited Rome on three occasions in 1509 and established important friendships with Giovanni de' Medici (later *Leo X), Cardinal Domenico Grimani, and Tomasso Fedra Inghirami, the Librarian of the *Vatican. On the accession of *Henry VIII (1509), Mountjoy induced him to return to England and Erasmus stayed for a time in T. *More's house, where he wrote his witty Μωρίας Ἐγκώμιον. Drawn to Cambridge by St John *Fisher, Erasmus was the first teacher of Greek there, and also lectured in divinity, possibly succeeding Fisher in the newly created Lady Margaret professorship of theology. The promises of financial support which had made Erasmus leave Italy for England never materialized, and in 1514 he left for Basle, where he prepared his translation of the NT for the press of J. *Froben. In 1516 he accepted an invitation to Brussels to the court of the future *Charles V, who made him a royal councillor. Having been freed from all his obligations to his monastery by a Papal brief in 1517, he resumed his wanderings, but in 1521 made his permanent abode at Basle, in Froben's house. In order to keep his freedom he refused many brilliant offers, including one from Francis I at Paris, another from the Archduke Ferdinand at Vienna, and a third from Henry VIII to return to England. When, in 1529, the Reformation was introduced at Basle, he fled to Freiburg im Breisgau, where he lived till 1535, continually advocating religious peace. He died at Basle, whither he had gone to supervise the printing of his edition of *Origen.

Among Erasmus' earliest works are the Adagia (1500), a collection of Greek and Latin proverbs, successively enlarged in later editions, and the Enchiridion Militis Christiani (1504), in which he shows the usefulness of scholarship for the formation of the Christian. His well-known Μωρίας Ἐγκώμιον, seu Laus Stultitiae (1509), is a bitter satire on monasticism and the corruptions of the Church and helped to prepare the way for the Reformation. In 1516 appeared his celebrated edition of the Greek NT with his own translation into classical Latin. Though based on insufficient MS material and not without bias, it exercised a profound influence on theological studies and was several times revised during Erasmus' lifetime, most notably in 1519. In 1524 he entered the Reformation controversy by his Diatribe de Libero Arbitrio, in which he emphasized the importance of human free-will against M. *Luther. Luther replied in his De Servo Arbitrio (1525), which Erasmus answered in its turn by his Hyperaspistes (1526). Next to his Greek NT, his most important work was probably his attempt to put into print reliable texts of the Fathers, among them his favourite St *Jerome (9 vols., 1516), St *Cyprian (1520), *Arnobius (1522) St *Hilary (1523), St John *Chrysostom (various works at different dates), St *Irenaeus (1526), St *Ambrose (1527), St *Augustine (1528–9), St *Basil (1532), and a Latin version of Origen (1536), though in a few of these Erasmus' own share probably did not go much further than writing the prefaces.

The most renowned scholar of his age, Erasmus was a man of vast if not always deep erudition, of uncommon intellectual powers, but averse to metaphysical speculation, esp. in its medieval and Scholastic forms. Though he had himself paved the way for the Reformation by his merciless satires on the doctrines and institutions of the Church, his scholarly character, which abhorred violence and sought tranquillity, prevented him from joining the Protestants, and threw him back on the tradition of the Church as the safeguard of stability. In the later years of his life he became suspect to both parties. Luther inveighed against him as a sceptic and Epicurean, and on the other side, though the Popes, esp. Leo X, had been favourable to him, the University of Paris censured various writings of his between 1525 and 1542. After his death his writings were forbidden by *Paul IV in 1558; this prohibition was partly modified by the Council of *Trent, but reimposed in toto by *Sixtus V in 1590. Later editions of the *Index long continued to forbid certain works and to permit others only if expurgated.

The editio princeps of his Opera Omnia was prepared by his friend and disciple Beatus *Rhenanus (9 vols., Basle, 1540–1). Crit. edns. of his Opus epistolarum by P. S. Allen, H. M. Allen, and H. W. Garrod (11 vols., Oxford, 1906–47, + index by B. Flower and E. Rosenbaum, 1958) and of his Opera Omnia by an international committee of scholars (Amsterdam, 1969 ff.; *c.*30 vols. expected). The edn. of his Opera Omnia by J. *LeClerc (10 vols., Leiden, 1703–6) remains standard for ref. to works not contained in the two modern edns. Eng. trs. of his works and letters are being pub., in Collected Works of Erasmus (Toronto, 1974 ff.). His valuable prefaces to his editions of the Fathers, the NT, and certain other works have been collected by R. Peters and repr. in facsimile (Menston, Yorks, 1970). The 1535 edn. of his Annotations on New Testament has also been reproduced in facsimile, with variants from the earlier edns., ed. A. Reeve and M. A. Screech: vol. 1, The Gospels (London, 1986), vol. 2, Acts–2 Cor. (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 42; Leiden, 1990) [the apparatus is, however, incomplete]. His early impact on England can be studied from E. J. Devereux, Renaissance English Translations of Erasmus: A Bibliography to 1700 (Toronto, etc., 1983).

There is a vast lit. on Erasmus. Major modern studies available in Eng. incl. those of J. Huizinga (Haarlem, 1924; Eng. tr., New York and London, 1924; also with tr. of some letters, London, 1952), R. H. Bainton (New York, 1969; London, 1970), C. Augustijn (Munich, 1986; Eng. tr., 1991) and L. E. Halkin (Paris [1987]; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1993). M. M. Phillips, Erasmus and the Northern Renaissance (1949; 2nd edn., Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1981). A. Flitner, Erasmus im Urteil seiner Nachwelt: Das literarische Erasmus-Bild von Beatus Rhenanus bis zu Jean LeClerc (Tübingen, 1952); B. Mansfield, Phoenix of His Age: Interpretations of Erasmus c.1550–1750 (Toronto, etc. [1979]); id., Man on his Own: Interpretations of Erasmus c.1750–1920 (ibid. [1992]). E. E. Reynolds, Thomas More and Erasmus [1965]. E.-W. Kohls, Die Theologie des Erasmus (Theologische Zeitschrift, Sonderband 1; 2 vols., Basle, 1966). E. Rummel, Erasmus' Annotations on the New Testament: From Philologist to Theologian (Toronto, etc. [1986]); id., Erasmus and his Catholic Critics (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 45; 2 vols., Nieuwkoop, 1989). P. Walter, Theologie aus dem Geist der Rhetorik: Zur Schriftauslegung des Erasmus von Rotterdam (Mainz, 1990). R. J. Schoek, Erasmus of Europe: The Making of a Humanist 1467–1500 (Edinburgh, 1990); A. G. Dickens and W. R. D. Jones, Erasmus the Reformer (1994). A. J. Brown, 'The Date of Erasmus' Latin Translation of the New Testament', Transactions of the Cambridge Bibliographical Society, 8 (1984), pp. 351–80. Contemporaries of Erasmus, ed. P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (3 vols., Toronto, etc. [1985–7]), contains biogs. of some 1,900 contemporaries mentioned by Erasmus in his works and correspondence. Bibls. of Erasmian studies by J.-C. Margolin: for 1936–49 (Paris, 1969), for 1950–61 (ibid., 1963), and 1962–70 (ibid. and Toronto, 1977), with excellent Fr. summaries of the works listed. Works after 1970 are recorded in the annual Bibliographie internationale de l'Humanisme et de la Renaissance (Geneva, 1966 ff.) and in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte. C. Augustijn in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 1–18, s.v., with bibl.

Erastianism. The ascendancy of the State over the Church in ecclesiastical matters, so named from the Swiss theologian, Thomas Erastus (Ger. Lieber or Lüber; 1524–83).

Born at Baden in Switzerland, Erastus studied philosophy and medicine and was appointed professor of medicine at Heidelberg in 1558. When the extreme *Calvinists endeavoured to introduce their 'Holy Discipline' in the Palatinate, Erastus wrote against them his Explicatio Gravissimae Quaestionis, which, however, was not published until 1589 in London. In Erastus' view, the civil authorities in a state which professes but one religion have the right and the duty to exercise jurisdiction in all matters whether civil or ecclesiastical, and to punish all offences; and even such purely ecclesiastical sanctions as *excommunication are subject to their approval.

The book was translated into English under the title The Nullity of Church Censures in 1659, but its ideas had begun to take root in this country from the end of the 16th cent. Erastian tenets influenced R. *Hooker, who defended the supremacy of the secular power in his Ecclesiastical Polity (1594), and they came to the fore in the *Westminster Assembly (1643). They were somewhat modified when applied to the modern secularized state as visualized, e.g., by T. *Hobbes. In this case the representatives of the state, though themselves professing any or no religion, assert their right to legislate on religious matters concerning the Established Church, e.g., when, in 1928, the revised Prayer Book was rejected by Parliament. In this modified sense the term is now generally understood. See also ESTABLISHMENT.

J. N. *Figgis, 'Erastus and Erastianism', JTS 2 (1901), pp. 66–101. A. Bonnard, Thomas Éraste, 1524 1583, et la discipline ecclésiastique (thesis, Lausanne, 1894); R. Wessel-Roth, Thomas Erastus: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der reformierten Kirche und zur Lehre der Staatssouveränität (Veröffentlichungen des Vereins für Kirchengeschichte in der evang. Landeskirche Badens, 15; 1954). J. N. Figgis in DECH, pp. 206 f., s.v.

Erconwald (d. *c.*693), Bp. of London. Born of a princely family, he devoted his fortune to the founding of two religious houses, over one of which, that at Barking, he placed his sister, St *Ethelburga, and over the other at Chertsey he himself acted as abbot. In 675 he succeeded Wini as Bp. of London and proved himself a pious and able prelate. He was buried in *St Paul's Cathedral, where his tomb soon became a centre of veneration. Feast day, 30 Apr.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 4. 6; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 145–7. D. Whitelock, Some Anglo-Saxon Bishops of London (1975), pp. 5–10. W. *Stubbs in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 177 f., s.v. 'Erkenwald'.

Eric of Auxerre. See HEIRIC OF AUXERRE.

Erigena (or more correctly Eriugena), John the Scot (*c.*810–*c.*877), philosopher. An Irishman, he went abroad and gained the patronage of Charles the Bald, who gave him charge of the palace school at Laon. So far as is known, he held no ecclesiastical appointment, but was a scholar in attendance on the king. The latter years of his life are very obscure. The tradition that he was invited to England by *Alfred and taught in the abbey of *Malmesbury rests on a mistaken identification with a later John made by *William of Malmesbury.

Erigena's philosophy, which was suspected of heterodoxy only at a much later date, is an attempted reconciliation of the *Neoplatonist idea of emanation with the Christian idea of creation. In his greatest work, Periphyseon or De Divisione Naturae, he urged that Nature should be divided into four categories. First, Nature which is not created but creates, i.e. God; secondly, Nature which is created and which creates, i.e. the world of primordial causes or Platonic ideas; thirdly, Nature which is created and which does not create, i.e. things perceived through the senses; and lastly, Nature which neither creates nor is created, i.e. God, to whom all things must in the end return. Thus the world was held to begin and end with God. There is a strong savour of pantheism about his teaching; and the treatise was condemned at *Paris in 1210 and again by *Honorius III at Sens in 1225. In his De Divina Praedestinatione, written against *Gottschalk, he argued that in reality, i.e. for God, evil is non-existent, and in consequence sin and its punishment are corollaries, the sin bearing the punishment in itself.

Erigena was a deeply original thinker and a great scholar, with a knowledge of Greek which was quite exceptional for his time. He did an important work in translating the writings of *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite into Latin and writing a commentary on his Celestial Hierarchy. He also translated the Ambigua and the Quaestiones ad Thalassium of St *Maximus the Confessor and the De Hominis Opificio of St *Gregory of Nyssa (which he called De Imagine), and wrote a number of exegetical works.

Collected Works, ed. H. J. Floss for J. P. Migne, PL 122. 125–1244. Crit. edns. of Periphyseon (De Divisione Naturae), bks. 1–3, with Eng. tr. I. P. Sheldon-Williams and L. Bieler (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 7, 9, and 11; Dublin, 1968–81); bk. 4, ed. É. A. Jeauneau, with Eng. tr. by J. J. O'Meara and I. P. Sheldon-Williams, ibid., 13; 1995); of his Carmina, with Eng. tr., by M. W. Herren (ibid. 12; 1993); of his De Divina Praedestinatione, by G. Madec (CCCM 50; 1978); of his Expositiones in Hierarchiam Caelestem by J. Barbet (ibid. 31; 1975); of his tr. of Maximus the Confessor's Quaestiones ad Thalassium by C. Laga and C. Steel (CCSG 7 and 22; 1980–90); of his comm. on the prologue to Jn., with Fr. tr., by É. Jeauneau (SC 151; 1969) and of his (incomplete) comm. on Jn. by id. (ibid. 180; 1972); two letters, ed. E. Dümmler, MGH, Epistolae, 6 (1925), pp. 158–62; full text of his comm. on the De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii of Martianus Capella first ed. C. E. Lutz (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication 34; Cambridge, Mass., 1939); his tr. of Gregory of Nyssa's De Imagine ed. M. Cappuyns, OSB, in RTAM 32 (1965), pp. 205–62. Eng. tr. of Periphyseon by I. P. Sheldon-Williams, rev. by J. J. O'Meara (Cahiers d'études médiévales, Cahier spécial, 3; Montreal, 1987). The comm. on *Boethius' Opuscula Sacra attributed to Erigena ed. E. K. Rand (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, 1, Heft 2; 1906); the authenticity of the ascription of this work to Erigena has been challenged by M. Cappuyns, OSB, 'Le plus ancien commentaire des "Opuscula sacra" et son origine', RTAM 3 (1931), pp. 237–72; H. Silvestre, 'Le Commentaire inédit de Jean Scot Érigène au mètre ix du livre III du "De Consolatione Philosophiae" de Boèce', RHE 47 (1952), pp. 44–122; E. K. Rand, 'The Supposed Autograph of John the Scot', University of California Publications in Classical Philology, 5 (1920), pp. 135–41, with plates [fasc. 8].

M. Cappuyns, OSB, Jean Scot Erigène: Sa vie, son œuvre, sa pensée (Universitas Catholica Lovaniensis. Dissertationes ... 2nd ser. 26; 1933); J. J. O'Meara, Eriugena (Oxford, 1988), incl. Eng. tr. of homily on prologue of Jn. (pp. 158–76), and bibl. M.

Cappuyns, 'Glose inédite de Jean Scot sur un passage de Maxime', RTAM 31 (1964), pp. 320–4, with text; id., 'Les "Bibli Vulfadi" et Jean Scot Érigène', ibid. 33 (1966), pp. 137–9. D. Moran, The Philosophy of John Scottus Eriugena (Cambridge, 1989); W. Otten, The Anthropology of Johannes Scottus Eriugena (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 20; Leiden, 1991). Proceedings of various international conferences on Erigena, esp. R. Roques (ed.), Jean Scot Érigène et l'histoire de la Philosophie (Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, 561; 1977); W. Beierwaltes (ed.), Eriugena: Studien zu seinen Quellen (Abh. (Heid.), 1980, Abh. 3); G.-H. Allard (ed.), Jean Scot Écrivain (Cahiers d'études médiévales, Cahier spécial, 1; Montreal and Paris, 1986); and W. Beierwaltes (ed.), Eriugena Redivivus (Abh. (Heid.), 1987, Abh. 1). M. Brennan, 'A Bibliography of Publications in the Field of Eriugenian Studies, 1800–1975', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 18 (1977), pp. 401–47. R. Roques in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 735–61, s.v. 'Jean Scot (Érigène)'.

Ernesti, Johann August (1707–81), German *Lutheran theologian. For the first part of his career he was chiefly engaged in classical teaching, and brought out several famous editions of ancient authors. After holding professorships in Leipzig in non-religious subjects, he became in 1759 a theological professor there. His chief importance lies in his attempt to reconcile the theological tradition of his Church with historical criticism of the Bible, in opposition alike to uncritical rationalism and to mystical and allegorical interpretation. He insisted that the meaning of Scripture must be determined by philological and grammatical considerations and not by dogmatic presuppositions. His principal work was his Institutio interpretis Novi Testamenti (1761).

Collected works in Opuscula Oratoria, Orationes, Prolusiones et Elogia (Leipzig, 1762), Opuscula Philologica Critica (ibid., 1764; 2nd edn., 1776), Opuscula Theologica (ibid., 1773) and Opuscula Varii Argumenti (ibid., 1794). Eulogy by A. W. Ernesti is appended to the Opusculorum Oratoriorum Novum Volumen (ibid., 1791), pp. 253–72. G. Heinrici in PRE (3rd. edn.), 5 (1898), pp. 469–74.

Errington, George (1804–86), titular RC Abp. of Trebizond. A native of Yorkshire, he attended St Cuthbert's College, Ushaw (1814–21) and then entered the *English College in Rome. He was appointed its vice-rector in 1832, but a breakdown in his health forced him to resign the post. Eight years later, in 1840, he returned to England with N. P. S. *Wiseman. He was president of St Mary's College, Oscott (1843–7) and then served as a mission priest in Liverpool and Salford. After the re-establishment of the RC hierarchy (1850), he was made Bp. of Plymouth in 1851, but left his diocese in 1855, when he was appointed coadjutor to Wiseman and titular Abp. of Trebizond, with the right of succession to the see of *Westminster. During the following years his relations with Wiseman became strained owing to his coolness towards converts from the *Oxford Movement, and esp. towards H. E. *Manning, and in 1860 the cardinals advised Errington's removal. After he rejected a proposal of *Pius IX that he should resign, his connection with Westminster was severed by the Pope in 1862. Though twice offered sees elsewhere, Errington refused to leave England, still hoping to secure succession to Westminster after Wiseman's death. In 1869–70 he took part in the First *Vatican Council, where he was one of the signatories of the Anti-Infallibility Petition. He spent his remaining years as tutor of the theological students at St Paul's College, Prior Park.

W. Ward, The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman, 2 (1897), pp. 253–88, 321–94, and 587–637. E. [R.] Norman, The English Catholic Church in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 131–8, 259–62, and 307 f. C. Kent in DNB 17 (1889), p. 398.

Erskine, Ebenezer (1680–1754), leader of the most important 18th-cent. secession from the Church of *Scotland (those who seceded are sometimes referred to as the 'Secession Church'). Minister at Portmoak from 1703 and at Stirling from 1731, he was fervently loyal to the Reformed and Covenanting tradition, deploring the inroads allegedly being made upon it by the authorities of his day. He thus declined to take the Oath of Abjuration of the Pretender imposed by Act of Parliament in 1712 on grounds of its *Erastian form, though certainly not because of any personal allegiance to the Stuart cause. A sermon which he preached in 1732 against 'respect for persons' (upholding the rights of ordinary Church members) in ministerial settlements ('God's promise of guidance is given not to heritors or patrons but to the Church, the Body of Christ') brought him into conflict with the socially deferential General Assembly. He and three other ministers felt obliged to 'make a secession' from the 'prevailing party' in the Established Church, forming themselves into an 'associate presbytery' in Dec. 1733. In 1736 he issued a 'judicial testimony' against the Established Church, and in 1740 he was formally deposed from his charge. Within a few years, and despite internal divisions, the Seceders had become a powerful Evangelical force in the religious life of Scotland. They divided in 1747 over the *Burgher Oath but came together again in the *United Secession Church in 1820. Erskine's sermons have been described as 'probably the finest religious literature that Scottish Protestantism has generated'.

Sermons and Discourses (4 vols., Edinburgh, 1761). A. R. McEwen, The Erskines [1900]. J. McKerrow, History of the Secession Church (1839; rev. edn., 1841), esp. pp. 37–67 and 810–19; J. H. Leckie, Secession Memories: The United Presbyterian Contribution to the Scottish Church (Edinburgh, 1926), pp. 13–66. P. H. van Harten, De Prediking van Ebenezer en Ralph Erskine (Utrecht thesis; The Hague [1987]), with summary in Eng. A. Gordon in DNB 17 (1889), pp. 404–7.

Erskine, Thomas (1788–1870), Scottish religious thinker. Erskine trained as a lawyer and was admitted as a member of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh in 1810. When he succeeded to the family estates at Linlathen, Angus, in 1816, he gave up the bar and devoted himself to the study of theology, making personal contact with religious and philosophical thinkers of diverse views in many countries, and publishing a number of books. He developed very liberal opinions, finding the true meaning of Christianity mainly in its conformity with man's spiritual and ethical needs. In 1831 he warmly took up the cause of J. McLeod *Campbell after his deposition by the General Assembly for teaching the universal atonement. In England he was attracted to the teaching of F. D. *Maurice. Erskine never severed formal connection with the Church of Scotland, though he used to read the service of the BCP.

W. Hanna, Letters of Thomas Erskine of Linlathen (2 vols., 1877). H. F. Henderson, Erskine of Linlathen: Selections and Biography (1899). N. R. Needham, Thomas Erskine of Linlathen: His Life and Theology 1788–1837 (Rutherford Studies, 1st ser. 3; Edinburgh [1990]). W. Benham in DNB 17 (1889), pp. 444 f.

eschatology (from Gk. ἔσχατος, 'last', and λόγος, 'discourse'), the doctrine of the last things, that is the ultimate destiny both of the individual soul and the whole created order. The term first appears in English in the 19th cent., but the topic forms the subject of the final section of the creeds and systematic theologies. When the end of the world did not come as expected in the early Church, it became peripheral to most Christian theology, but the imminent expectation of it erupted from time to time in sectarian circles (see MILLENARIANISM). Meanwhile, the concept was gradually individualized. The author of Ecclus. 7: 36 had advised his readers to 'remember your last things' (LXX: τὰ ἔσχατά σου), i.e. 'the end of your life' (RSV) and the 'Four Last Things', death, judgement, heaven, and hell, formed the subjects of *Advent preaching. In the 19th cent. ideas of historical development fuelled the secularized eschatologies of G. W. F. *Hegel and Karl Marx, and the discovery of early Jewish *Apocalypses drew the attention of biblical scholars to the eschatological material in Scripture. In the OT it is sometimes associated with *Messianic hopes (e.g. Jer. 23: 5–6), but usually not (e.g. Jer. 31). Apocalypses from Daniel to Revelation are often strongly eschatological, as is the *Qumran material, whereas Rabbinic material contains proportionately much less. Mk. 13, Mt. 24, and the writings of St *Paul show how important this expectation of the end of this age was for early Christianity, but it was above all the claim of J. *Weiss in 1892 that Christ Himself spoke primarily of God's final intervention that made systematic theologians aware of the centrality of eschatology. A. *Schweitzer popularized this view of Christ and saw in it the key to His whole strategy. Others, notably C. H. *Dodd (following R. *Otto) eliminated this futuristic aspect of the phrase '*kingdom of God' by describing His teaching as 'realized eschatology'. The extent of the eschatological element in Christ's teaching is disputed among exegetes (see JESUS CHRIST), but most feel that Schweitzer failed to do justice to His moral teaching. K. *Barth and R. *Bultmann reinterpreted the concept, stressing its relationship to Christ, but eliminating its future scope. Recent attempts to retrieve this, like those of J. *Moltmann and the *liberation theologians, owe much to Marxism but have a strongly biblical character. See also PAROUSIA.

The large number of studies on the subject generally incl. F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life (1912); [A. W. H.] P. Althaus, Die letzten Dinge (Gütersloh, 1922; 5th edn., 1949); J. *Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934); A. E. *Taylor, The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938); M. Werner, Die Entstehung des christlichen Dogmas (Berne, 1941; 2nd edn., Tübingen, 1954; Eng. tr., 1957); J. A. T. *Robinson, Jesus and His Coming: The Emergence of a Doctrine (1957); R. Bultmann, History and Eschatology (Gifford Lectures, 1955; Edinburgh, 1957); J. Moltmann, Theologie der Hoffnung (1964; Eng. tr., 1967).

On the biblical teaching, besides the works of A. Schweitzer and K. Barth (qq.v.), important studies incl. H. *Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit (1895; Eng. tr. of part in B. W. Anderson (ed.), Creation in the Old Testament (Issues in Religion and Theology, 6; 1984), pp. 25–52); H. Gressmann, Die Ursprung der israelitisch-jüdischen Eschatologie (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 6; 1905); S. [O. P.] *Mowinckel, Han som kommer (1951; Eng. tr., He That Cometh, Oxford, 1956); H. P. Müller, Ursprünge und Strukturen alttestamentlicher Eschatologie (Beihefte zur ZATW, 109; 1969); D. E. Gowan, Eschatology in the Old Testament (Edinburgh, 1987); and a collection of essays of various dates ed. H. D. Preuss, Eschatologie im Alten Testament (Weg der Forschung, 480; Darmstadt, 1978). R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism and in Christianity (Jowett Lectures for 1898–9; 1899; 2nd edn., 1913). J. Weiss, Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes (1892; 2nd edn., 1900; Eng. tr. of 1st edn., 1971); R. Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934; Eng. tr., 1938); C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom (1935); id., The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936), esp. Appendix on 'Eschatology and History', pp. 193–240; A. N. Wilder, Eschatology and Ethics in the Teaching of Jesus (New York, 1939; rev. edn., 1950); W. G. Kümmel, Verheissung und Erfüllung: Untersuchungen zur eschatologischen Verkündigung Jesu (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 6; 1945; 2nd edn., 1953; Eng. tr., 1957); N. Perrin, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus (1963); A. T. Lincoln, Paradise Now and Not Yet: Studies in the Role of the Heavenly Dimension in Paul's Thought with Special Reference to his Eschatology (Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series, 43; Cambridge, 1981); and a collection of essays of various dates ed. B. Chilton, The Kingdom of God (Issues in Religion and Theology, 5; 1984). On patristic eschatology, B. E. Daley, The Hope of the Early Church (Cambridge, 1991). A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1331–419, s.v. 'Parousie'; D. L. Petersen and others in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 575–609, s.v. See also bibl. to APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE.

Esdras, Books of. 'Esdras' is the Greek and Latin form of *Ezra. In the *Septuagint there are two books of this title—Esdras A, a Greek book based on parts of 2 Chron., Ez., and Neh., with an interpolated story not extant in Hebrew; and Esdras B, a straightforward rendering of the Hebrew Ezra-Neh. (treated as one book). In the current form of the *Vulgate these are increased to four, namely: I and II Esdras, i.e. St *Jerome's rendering of Ezra and Neh., treated as separate books; III Esdras, the *Old Latin version of Esdras A; and IV Esdras, another book not extant in Greek (see below). For the original Vulgate Jerome deliberately confined himself to the first two of these, rejecting the other two as uncanonical (Praef. in Esd., c. Vigil. 7); but all four books are commonly included (with some confusion in the numbering) in Latin biblical MSS. In 1546 the Council of *Trent (sess. 4) finally rejected III and IV Esdras from the RC *Canon, and in subsequent editions of the Vulgate they appear (with the Prayer of *Manasses) as an Appendix following the NT. In the *Geneva Bible (1560) and subsequent English Versions, I and II Esdras of the Vulgate are entitled 'Ezra' and 'Nehemiah', while III and IV Esdras are the '1' and '2' Esdras of the Apocrypha.

1 ESDRAS (i.e. Esdras A of the LXX, III Esdras of the Vulgate, or The Greek Ezra) recounts the story of Israel from Josiah to Ezra. It is mainly composed of matter taken from the Heb. canonical books:

(a) 1–2 are taken from 2 Chron. 35 and 36, Ez. 1 and 4: 7–24, and contain nothing original. The material from Ez. 4: 7–24 is here placed in a different context (1 Esd. 2: 16–30); it is possible that 1 Esdras here gives a more reliable chronology than the canonical Ezra.

(b) 3: 1–5: 6: a story of the competition of three young men of the bodyguard of Darius in solving the riddle 'What thing is strongest?' The victory is found to rest with neither 'wine' nor 'the king' nor 'women', but with 'truth'. This leads on to a speech by Zerubbabel (see ZECHARIAH), in favour of monotheism as the worship of the God of Truth. Adjudged the winner, Zerubbabel receives as his prize from Darius royal assistance for the Jews in their rebuilding of the Temple. This story finds no parallel in the Heb. canonical books.

(c) 5: 7–9: 55: a list of the returning exiles (Ez. 2) and subsequent narrative concerning Ezra, taken from Ez. 3: 1–4: 5 and 5–10, Neh. 7: 73–8: 13.

There is no agreement about the origin of the work. Some have argued that 'the Greek Ezra' was a re-editing of Esdras B found in the Septuagint, i.e. the straightforward Greek version of Ezra-Neh. (E. *Schürer), or of some other Greek translation (H. *Ewald); others have claimed that it was derived independently from the Heb. (H. St J. Thackeray). From the Lat. of 4: 41 comes the often cited sentence Magna est veritas et praevalet (frequently misquoted as praevalebit), 'Great is truth and it prevails' (or 'will prevail'). The book is generally dated between c.200 and c.50 BC.

2 ESDRAS (IV Esdras of the Vulgate, or The Ezra-Apocalypse) is composite, viz.:

(a) 1–2: an introductory section beginning Liber Esdrae Prophetae Secundus, extant only in Latin. This is a denunciation of the sins of Israel, largely following in phraseology and content the OT prophets. Part of it (esp. 2: 10–48) is also based on the NT and Christian belief, e.g. the vision of the multitude of the redeemed and of the Son of God in 2: 42–8 (the only definitely Christian passage in the Apocrypha).

(b) 3–14: the 'Ezra-Apocalypse' proper. This Jewish work is the oldest part of the composite 2 Esdras. The writer, speaking in the name of Salathiel ('who am also Ezra'), relates his visions and discourses with an angel. Ch. 13 contains a vision of the Messiah described as a Man, seen rising from the depths of the sea (i.e. from somewhere inaccessible to human knowledge, 13: 51–2), who destroys a hostile multitude by the breath of his mouth (cf. 2 Thess. 2: 8) and gathers to himself a peaceable multitude (explained as the *Ten Tribes, 13: 39 f.).

This central section of the book (3–14) was probably written in Hebrew. It is extant in Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, Armenian, Sahidic, and Georgian versions as well as in Latin; a Greek version (not recovered) is quoted by *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 3. 16) and in the Apostolic Constitutions* (8. 7). The visions of the Eagle (chs. 11–12) and of the Man, and the story of Ezra and the scriptural canon (ch. 14), were believed by G. H. Box to be of different authorship from the rest of the 'Ezra-Apocalypse'. The Apocalypse proper is dated by most scholars after the fall of Jerusalem (AD 70) and reasons are advanced for placing it not later than the reign of Hadrian (117–38).

(c) 15–16. These chapters, which are no part of the Ezra-Apocalypse, were apparently written as a Christian appendix to 2 Esdras (IV Esdras of the Vulgate) and in some MSS are separately reckoned as 'V Esdras', or sometimes (where chs. 1–2 are reckoned as 'V Esdras') 'VI Esdras', but they never appear to have been separately current.

On 1 Esdras, S. A. *Cook in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 1–58. C. C. Torrey, Ezra Studies (Chicago, 1910); id., 'A Revised View of First Esdras', in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday (New York, 1945), pp. 395–410. Modern comm. by J. M. Myers (Anchor Bible, 1974, on 1 and 2 Esd., pp. 1–104) and R. J. Coggins (New Camb. Bib., 1979, on 1 and 2 Esd., pp. 4–75).

On 2 Esdras, Lat. text ed. R. L. Bensly, with introd. by M. R. James (Texts and Studies, 3, no. 2; Cambridge, 1895); also by A. F. J. Klijn (TU 131; 1983). Syriac text ed. R. J. Bidawid, The Old Testament in Syriac according to the Peshitta Version, pt. 4, fasc. 3 (Leiden, 1973), 2nd item. Lat. text, with Fr. trs. of Syriac and Ethiopic versions, and comm. by L. Gry (2 vols. Paris, 1938). Eng. tr., with comm. and Lat. text in appendix, by G. H. Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse: Being Chapters 3–14 of the Book commonly known as 4 Ezra, or II Esdras (1912); further Eng. tr. of the same section, with comm., by id. in R. H. Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 542–624; Eng. tr. of the whole of 2 Esdras (chs. 1–16) by B. M. Metzger in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 517–59. Modern comm. on the whole of 2 Esdras by J. M. Myers (Anchor Bible, 1974, on 1 and 2 Esdras, pp. 105–354), M. A. Knibb (New Camb. Bib., 1979, on 1 and 2 Esd., pp. 76–305), and J. Schreiner (Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit, Band 4, Lieferung 4; 1981). T. A. Bergren, Fifth Ezra: The Text, Origin and Early History (Society of Biblical Literature, Septuagint and Cognate Studies Series, 25; Atlanta [1990]).

Espen, Zeger Bernhard Van. See VAN ESPEN, ZEGER BERNHARD.

Espousals of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Desponsatio BVM). A feast of the Latin Church. Its institution in honour of St *Joseph was advocated by P. *d'Ailly and J. *Gerson, but its existence as a feast of Mary is first attested in 1517, when *Leo X permitted its celebration to the Nuns of the Annunciation. Since then it has spread to several countries, notably Germany and Spain, but its observance has never been extended to the Universal Church. It is usually kept on 23 Jan.

Essays and Reviews (1860). A collection of essays by seven authors who believed in the necessity of free inquiry in religious matters. Among them were M. *Pattison's 'Tendencies of Religious Thought in England, 1688–1750', B. *Jowett's 'The Interpretation of Scripture', and F. Temple's 'The Education of the World'. The volume at first attracted little notice and the Guardian reviewed it in a temperate although hostile manner, but when Bp. S. *Wilberforce denounced its liberalism in violent terms in the Quarterly, general interest was aroused. A meeting of the bishops at Fulham condemned the book in Feb. 1861, and the archbishop issued this condemnation as an encyclical. The Lower House of *Convocation proposed a synodical condemnation, and legal action was taken against two of the essayists (H. B. Wilson and R. Williams), who were condemned to deprivation for a year, although they secured the reversal of this verdict by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. As a protest against the minimizing spirit of the volume, 11,000 clergymen declared their belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures and the eternity of punishment, and the book was at length synodically condemned in 1864.

H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, esp. 4 (1897), pp. 38–62 and 68–81. I. Ellis, Seven against Christ: A Study of 'Essays and Reviews' (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 23; Leiden, 1980).

Essays Catholic and Critical (1926). An influential volume of fifteen essays by a group of *Anglo-Catholic scholars on leading themes of Christian belief, with special attention to the issues raised by recent biblical studies and philosophy. The editor was E. G. Selwyn (1885–1959; later Dean of *Winchester), the other contributors E. O. James, A. E. *Taylor, A. E. J. Rawlinson, W. L. Knox, L. S. Thornton, E. C. *Hoskyns, J. K. Mozley, E. J. Bicknell, K. E. *Kirk, E. Milner-White, A. H. Thompson, N. P. *Williams, and W. Spens. The essayists maintained that the terms 'catholic' and 'critical' were not antithetical, but stood for two movements which in union led to a deeper understanding of historic Christianity. Typical of the book are essays seeking to reconcile religion with primitive anthropology and the fact of the *Fall with psychological theories of human nature, and to reinterpret the Person and Work of Christ in the light of contemporary criticism of the *Synoptic Gospels.

Essenes. A Jewish ascetic sect, mentioned neither in the Bible nor the *Talmud, but referred to by *Philo, *Josephus, and the elder Pliny. The name may mean 'the pious ones' or (perhaps more likely) 'the healers'. They seem to have originated in the 2nd cent. BC, and come to an end in the 2nd cent. AD, and never to have passed beyond the limits of Palestine. At the beginning of the Christian era they numbered about 4,000. Their manner of life was highly organized and communistic; they imposed on candidates for membership a three-year novitiate, with oaths of obedience and secrecy; and they abstained from all but the simplest forms of earning their livelihood. Their piety was in some respects akin to that preached by *Judaism of a *Pharisaic type, though it is possible that details of their worship and teaching came from non-Jewish sources. The suggestions, occasionally made, that various figures in the early Church, including even Christ Himself, had Essene connections, remain unsubstantiated. The '*therapeutae' mentioned by Philo are very similar to the Essenes, but are prob. not identical. Many scholars have identified the Essenes with the community of the Dead Sea Scrolls (q.v.).

The chief sources are Josephus, Jewish Antiquities, 13. 5. 9; 15. 10. 4 f.; 18. 1. 5; id., Jewish War, 2. 8. 2–13; Philo in *Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica, 8. 11, and Pliny, Natural History, 5. 17. Convenient collection of texts by A. Adam, Antike Berichte über die Essener (Kleine Texte, 182; 1961; 2nd edn. by C. Burchard, 1972). Texts also ed., with Eng. tr. and introd., by G. Vermes and M. D. Goodman, The Essenes according to the Classical Sources (Sheffield, 1989). J. B. *Lightfoot, St Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon (1875), pp. 83–95 and 114–79. S. Wagner, Die Essener in der wissenschaftlichen Diskussion vom Ausgang des 18. bis zum Beginn des 20. Jahrhunderts: Eine wissenschaftsgeschichtliche Studie (Beiheft zur ZATW, 79; 1960). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 555–74 and 583–90, with bibl. B. Rigaux, OFM, in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1013–35; J. J. Collins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 619–26, both s.v., with bibl.

Establishment. In ecclesiastical usage the term is applied to the recognition by the state of a particular Church as that of the state. It implies a relationship of the two bodies, but the closeness of that relationship varies widely from the *theocracy of 16th cent. *Geneva to the situation in *Scotland, where the *Presbyterian Church, though established, is virtually independent of state control. Whether a Church is established or not, ultimate power inevitably rests with the secular authority. In OT Judaism and in much of the ancient world, religious observance was a part of the civil order, but the first move towards the establishment of the Christian Church must be dated from the time of the Emp. *Constantine (d. 337); he not only granted toleration to Christianity but gave the Church a favoured position in the Empire and exercised considerable control over its affairs. The Emp. *Theodosius (379–95) took the process a stage further, making heresy a legal offence as well as using the power of the state to combat paganism. Imperial control of the Church was far greater in the E. than in the W., but as Christianity spread throughout Europe, it was the conversion of the rulers which was the key factor, and esp. among the Germanic tribes, those who provided the endowments for the Church claimed rights of patronage. During the Middle Ages there were numerous disputes between lay rulers and the Papacy (e.g. the *Investiture Controversy); despite the growth and centralization of Papal power, there were determined efforts to restrict its exercise, e.g. in Sicily, where *Ferdinand the Catholic in 1514 proclaimed himself responsible for both spiritual and temporal affairs. After the Reformation the RC Church remained as the established religion in much of Europe (as recently as 1953 it was recognized as 'the only religion of the Spanish nation'), but elsewhere, most notably in *France, the Church was largely under the controlling influence of the Crown. In Protestant states, as the jurisdiction of the Pope was repudiated, national Churches were established. '*Cuius regio, eius religio' was a natural extension of Germanic principles and only took a stage further the claims of medieval emperors and kings to have an authority parallel to that of the Pope, and of equally Divine origin. The establishment of national Churches completely rejecting the authority of the Pope, while asserting their continuity with the primitive Church, involved some adjustments; these normally included financial support for the established Church by the state and more direct control over appointments and other matters. By the 18th cent., however, the whole idea of established Churches was being challenged. The American constitution forbade an establishment of religion, on grounds of principle. In *Ireland and *Wales the Anglican Church was disestablished in 1869 and 1919 respectively, mainly because it was not the Church of the majority of the Christian inhabitants. More generally the secularization of society in the 19th and 20th cents. has led to the separation of Church and state and the consequent disestablishment of the Church in parts of Europe, e.g. in the *Netherlands in 1848 and in France in 1910. In South America, Asia, and Africa the establishment of independent states normally involved the separation of Church and state and the disestablishment of Churches set up by the former colonial powers.

In England the C of E is the established Church. Its peculiar position is reflected in the fact that 26 of its bishops have seats in the House of Lords, while no other ecclesiastical body is so represented ex officio. In turn a measure of control over its affairs is exercised by the state. This balance is immediately due to what is known as the 'Royal Supremacy'. The Act of *Supremacy of 1534, which was one of the key elements in the English Reformation, declared *Henry VIII 'the only supreme head in earth of the Church of England'. When the Act (repealed under *Mary) was restored under *Elizabeth I, she was more modestly described as 'the only supreme governor of this realm . . . as well in all spiritual or ecclesiastical things or causes as temporal'. This distinction was continued by *Charles II in the Declaration which forms a preface to the *Thirty-Nine Articles and is echoed in Article 37. What, however, began under Henry VIII as an exclusively royal supremacy (aimed at excluding Papal jurisdiction and claiming authority for the *divine right of kings derived from the status of the kings of Judah in the OT) was, with the general constitutional shift, to become by the end of the 17th cent. mainly a Parliamentary Supremacy. After the Reformation the only way of enacting new legislation for the Church was by authority of Act of Parliament. This situation was somewhat modified by the *Enabling Act (1919) which conferred power on the *Church Assembly (now superseded by the General *Synod) of the C of E to legislate on any matter by Measure. Parliament, however, retained ultimate control in that no Measure is effective until it receives the Royal Assent, which can be given only if the Measure is presented to the Sovereign with the approval of both Houses of Parliament. A further step towards independence was achieved with the approval by Parliament of the Church of England (*Worship and Doctrine) Measure (1974), which gave the General Synod power to legislate by Canon on forms of worship. Canons (formerly passed only by *Convocation) are of limited effect, being binding only on ecclesiastical personae, and of no effect if in any way contrary to the general law of the land, and therefore unable to modify the BCP, which had the statutory authority of the Acts of *Uniformity. In addition, since the Reformation, Canons have required, and still require, the Royal Assent. The Crown has also a wide measure of patronage. Some of this (e.g. *advowsons) is little different from that vested in individuals and corporations, but much derives from the Act of Supremacy whereby the Crown appoints all bishops and deans, albeit, in the case of diocesan bishops, after considerable consultation with representatives of the Church. (For current practice see CROWN APPOINTMENTS COMMISSION.) A further aspect of the Royal Supremacy can be seen in the fact that the Church's Courts are, like all courts of law, the Queen's Courts, whose decisions are binding on everyone. See also ERASTIANISM.

On the establishment of the C of E, E. G. Moore, An Introduction to English Canon Law (Clarendon Law Series, Oxford, 1967), pp. 10–16; 3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson (London, 1992), pp. 10–15; Halsbury's Laws of England (4th edn.), 14 (1975), pp. 163–71 (paras. 345–60). E. T. Davies, Episcopacy and Royal Supremacy in the Church of England in the XVIth Century (Oxford, 1950), pp. 59–137; C. Cross, The Royal Supremacy in the Elizabethan Church (Historical Problems, Studies and Documents, 8; 1969); id., 'Churchmen and the Royal Supremacy' in F. Heal and R. O'Day (eds.), Church and Society in England: Henry VIII to James I (1977), pp. 15–34. H. Chadwick, 'Royal ecclesiastical supremacy' in B. Bradshaw and E. Duffy (eds.), Humanism, Reform and Reformation: The Career of Bishop John Fisher (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 169–203.

Esther, Book of. This Book relates an episode in the reign of Xerxes I (here called 'Ahasuerus'), King of Persia from 486 to 465 BC. It tells how Esther, a kinswoman of the Jew, Mordecai, attained a position of influence and honour as the royal consort, and used it to save her fellow-countrymen when they were in danger of extermination by the grand-vizier, Haman. Although there may be an historical basis for the story, in its present form it seems to be a popular romance; it contains indeed very little of a directly religious purport, and no mention is made in the Book of the name of God. The probable reason for its inclusion in the *canon of the OT was that it described the institution of *Purim (q.v.), a feast still kept as one of the annual commemorations of the Jewish year. Nothing is known of the author. The Greek Bible contains certain additional chapters, which appear in the English Bible in the *Apocrypha; they supply further detail not found in the Hebrew version as we have it today. There are no quotations from Esther in the NT nor, so far, have any fragments of the Book been found among the biblical MSS at *Qumran.

Comm. by L. B. Paton (ICC, 1908), H. *Gunkel (Tübingen, 1916), M. Haller (HAT, Reihe 1, 18, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Est., Lam., 1940), pp. 114–36, repr., with introd. by E. Würthwein in 2nd edn. (1969), pp. 165–96; H. Ringgren (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 16, on Song of Songs, Lam., Est., 1958, pp. 113–44), H. Bardtke (KAT 17. 4/5, on Eccles. and Est., 1963, pp. 239–408), C. A. Moore (Anchor Bible, 1971), A. Meinhold (Zürcher Bibelkommentare, AT 13; 1983), and D. J. A. Clines (New Cent. Bib., on Ezr., Neh., and Est., 1984, pp. 251–333). Id., The Esther Scroll: The Story of the Story (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 30; Sheffield [1984]). Series of important arts. repr. in Studies in the Book of Esther, ed., with substantial introd., by C. A. Moore (New York [1982]), incl., pp. 130–41, B. W. Anderson, 'The Place of the Book of Esther in the Christian Bible', orig. pr. in Journal of Religion, 30 (1950), pp. 32–43. Eissfeldt, pp. 505–12 and 767, with further bibl. See also bibl. to PURIM.

Estienne, Henri; Robert. See STEPHANUS.

Estius (1542–1613), Latinized name of Willem Hessels van Est, exegete and hagiographer. He was a native of Gorcum in S. Holland and studied at Louvain, where one of his masters was M. *Baius. He became a doctor of theology in 1580, and professor at *Douai in 1582. In 1595 he was made chancellor of the university of Douai, the theological faculty of which at that time ranked among the foremost in Europe. His Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium (1603) was a well-documented history of the *Gorcum Martyrs, to one of whom his family was related, and considered the most important piece in the process of their beatification. His principal work, the Commentarii in Omnes Divi Pauli et Catholicas Epistolas (1614–16), is valuable esp. for its careful exegesis of the literal sense and its judicious choice of *patristic material, following the *Antiochene rather than the *Alexandrian school. It was frequently reprinted down to the end of the 19th cent. Estius, who was considered a saint by his friends and pupils, took part in the controversies of his time, esp. in that on *Molinism, in which he opposed the *Jesuits. He also left extensive notes for a new edition of St *Augustine. He was called 'Doctor Fundatissimus' by *Benedict XIV.

All Estius' publications, except the Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium, were posthumous. Collected edn. of his biblical works, 3 vols., Venice, 1659. J. Ferrer, Pecado original y justificación en la doctrina de Guillermo Estio (Madrid, 1960). L. Salembier in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 871–8, with bibl.

Eternal City, the (Lat. Urbs Aeterna). A designation of Rome found in classical writers such as Ovid and Tibullus, as well as in official documents of the period of the Empire. As applied to Christian Rome, it emphasizes the continuous and pervasive influence of the see in the history of (esp. W.) Christendom.

eternal life. In Christianity, not only a life of endless duration but the fullness of life of which the believer becomes possessed here and now through participation in God's eternal being. It unites the strong sense of historical process characteristic of Hebrew thought with elements from the Greek (*Platonic) belief that man's true life lies in a timeless world in which he is freed from the impediments of material and temporal existence. The modern appreciation of its implications owes much to F. D. *Maurice, for whom eternal life was sharing in the life of God and eternal death refusal to share in that life ('Eternity has nothing to do with time or duration'), and also to F. *von Hügel, notably his book Eternal Life (1912). In the NT its conditions are esp. emphasized in St John's Gospel.

J. Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934). F. D. Maurice, Theological Essays (1853), pp. 436 f. See also bibl. to IMMORTALITY.

Ethelbert, St (d. 616), King of Kent. A descendant of Hengist, the legendary ancestor of the Jutish royal house of Kent, he became king *c.*560 and is stated by *Bede to have extended his power to all England south of the Humber. His marriage with Bertha, daughter of Charibert, the Frankish king, marks the first introduction of Christianity into Anglo-Saxon England, since Charibert insisted that she should be free to practise her Christian faith (Bede, HE 1. 25). Probably through Bertha's influence, he welcomed St *Augustine and the Roman mission in 597, was himself converted in the same year, and thenceforward gave his full support to the cause of Christianity in his realm. He was thus the first Christian English king. Feast day, 24 Feb.; in modern calendars, 25 Feb.

Almost the sole authority is Bede, HE 1. 25 f. and 32 f., and 2. 3–5; the refs. in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, s. 565 and 568, introduce chronological difficulties. See comm. to Bede's HE by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 32–4, 36 f., 44–6, 54 f., and 59–61, with further bibl. The best edn. of his 'Dooms' (or law code), with Ger. tr., by F. Liebermann, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, 1 (ed. Savigny-Stiftung, 1903), pp. 3–8; also ed., with Eng. tr., by F. L. Attenborough, The Laws of the Earliest English Kings (Cambridge, 1922), pp. 4–17.

Ethelbert, St (d. 794), King of the East Angles and martyr. He is said to have been treacherously killed by *Offa of Mercia or his wife, Cynethryth, to whose daughter he was to have been betrothed. He was buried at *Hereford, where the cathedral is placed under his patronage, jointly with that of the BVM. Feast day, 20 May.

An unreliable Life, abridged from that in the Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliae of Richard of Cirencester (ed. J. E. B. Mayor, RS 1, 1863, pp. 262–94), is repr. from J. Brompton, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem (1652), cols. 748–54, in the AASS, Mai. 5 (1685), pp. 241*–6*, with certain miracles from a Life by Giraldus (Cotton MS Vitell. E. VII, destroyed 1731), pp. 246* f. Summary, with other MS Lives, in Hardy, 1, pt. 2 (1862), pp. 494–6. Giraldus' Life ed. M. R. James in EHR 32 (1917), pp. 214–44. W. *Stubbs in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 215 f., s.v. 'Ethelbert (3)'.

Ethelburga, St (d. *c.*676), Abbess of Barking. She was the sister of St *Erconwald, Bp. of London, and the first abbess of his *double monastery at Barking in Essex. The dedication of the church at Bishopsgate is perhaps to be ascribed to her, but there were a number of other prominent women of the same name in Anglo-Saxon Christianity. Feast day, 11 Oct.

The chief authority is *Bede, HE 4. 6–9; notes in edn. of C. Plummer, 2 (Oxford, 1896), pp. 217–9, and comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (ibid., 1988), pp. 146 f.; 11th-cent. Life by *Goscelin, largely based on Bede, ed. M. L. Colker in Studia Monastica, 7 (1965), pp. 398–417, with introd. pp. 383–97. 'Acta' by J. Capgrave pr. in AASS, Oct. 5 (1786), pp. 649–52.

Etheldreda, St (d. 679), founder of the *double monastery at *Ely. The daughter of Anna, a Christian king of the East Angles, she was married at an early age to an ealdorman of the South Gyrwe, but retained her virginity. On his death, three years later, she withdrew to the Isle of Ely for a life of prayer. After five years, at the request of her relatives, she returned to the world to marry Egfrith of Northumbria, but refused to consummate this marriage also. After another 12 years she obtained Egfrith's consent to become a nun and *c.*672 received the veil from St *Wilfrid at Coldingham, where her aunt, Ebbe, was abbess. About a year later she founded the double monastery of Ely, of which she was abbess until her death. From another form of her name, 'St Audrey', the word 'tawdry' is derived through the cheap finery exposed for sale at St Audrey's fair. Feast day, 23 June; of her translation, 17 Oct.

The chief authority is *Bede, HE 4. 3, 19 f.; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 159–61; see also pp. xxviii f. Liber Eliensis (ed. E. O. Blake, Camden Society, 3rd ser. 92; 1962, esp. pp. 1–40, passim). *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton (RS, 1870), pp. 323 ff. C. W. Stubbs, Historical Memorials of Ely Cathedral: Two Lectures (1897), Lecture 1, with notes, 'The Shrine of St Audrey', pp. 1–94. C. J. Stranks, St Etheldreda Queen and Abbess (Ely Cathedral Monographs [7]; 1975).

Ethelhard (d. 805), Abp. of *Canterbury. (He is to be distinguished from Ethelhard, Bp. of *Winchester, d. 759.) He was prob. Abbot of 'Hlud' (? 'Lydd' or 'Louth') when, in 791, he was elected to the archbishopric, apparently as *Offa's nominee. He was not consecrated until two years later. The opposition of the Kentish people to a Mercian archbishop, which probably caused this delay, broke out openly in 796, when Eadbert Praen, a cleric and member of the royal house of Kent, headed the rebellion of the Kentish nobility and forced the archbishop to flee. After Eadbert's capture, in 798, Ethelhard recovered his see, and now strove to restore it to its old power which it had lost when Offa had obtained archiepiscopal status for *Lichfield from *Hadrian I. This was abolished in 802 after a visit of Ethelhard to *Leo III at Rome, and the Papal decision in favour of Canterbury was acknowledged by the Council of *Clovesho in 803, which marked an important step towards national unity. Throughout his life Ethelhard enjoyed the friendship of *Alcuin, who gave him active support in his difficulties.

Docs. relating to his episcopate in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 467–535. Two of Alcuin's letters to him, with other information, are given by *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton (RS, 1870), pp. 17–19. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 179 f.

Ethelwold, St (*c.*908–84). Bp. of *Winchester. Like St *Dunstan, with whom he was closely associated all his life, he was one of the leaders of the reform movement in the English Church in the late 10th cent. He was first a monk at *Glastonbury, then Abbot of Abingdon, and from 963 Bp. of Winchester. Together with St Dunstan and St *Oswald of Worcester he effected the revival of English monasticism, which had fallen on evil days during the anarchy and confusion of the Danish invasions; he took as his model Continental usages, including those of the abbey of Fleury. The Regularis Concordia was partly, perhaps mainly, his work. He is very probably the author of an account of the monastic revival of his time ('King Edgar's Establishment of the Monasteries'). He was also responsible for translating the 'Rule of St *Benedict' into English; his concern for precision and clarity was a factor in establishing the Winchester dialect as the standard literary language in the late Old English period. Feast day, 1 Aug.

[M. M.] A. Schröer (ed.), Die angelsächsischen Prosabearbeitungen der Benedictinerregel (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, 2; Kassel, 1885; repr. with additional material by H. Gneuss, Darmstadt, 1964). The Proem to the Regularis Concordia and 'An Account of King Edgar's Establishment of Monasteries' are conveniently pr. in Councils & Synods . . . I, A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke, 1 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 133–41 and 142–54. Lives by Wulfstan, monk of Winchester, and *Aelfric, ed., with Eng. tr., by M. Lapidge and M. Winterbottom, Wulfstan of Winchester: The Life of St Æthelwold (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1991). D. J. V. Fisher, 'The Early Biographies of St Ethelwold', EHR 67 (1952), pp. 381–91. J. A. *Robinson, The Life and Times of St Dunstan (1923), pp. 104–22. E. John, 'The Beginning of the Benedictine Reform in England', R. Bén. 73 (1963), pp. 73–87. H. Gneuss, 'The Origin of Standard Old English and Æthelwold's School at Winchester', Anglo-Saxon England, 1 (1972), pp. 63–83; M. Gretsch, 'Æthelwold's Translation of the Regula Sancti Benedicti and its Latin Exemplar', ibid. 3 (1974), pp. 125–51. B. Yorke (ed.), Bishop Æthelwold: His Career and Influence (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1988). D. Parsons (ed.), Tenth-Century Studies: Essays in Commemoration of the Millennium of the Council of Winchester and Regularis Concordia (1975). See also other works cited under REGULARIS CONCORDIA.

Etheria. See EGERIA.

Ethical Movement. In 1876 an association, the 'Society for Ethical Culture', was founded in the USA by Felix Adler (1851–1933), to unite those who hold that morality is the fundamental element in religion. It is, in Adler's own words, 'based upon three tacit assumptions, sex purity, the principle of devoting the surplus of one's income beyond that required for one's own genuine needs to the elevation of the working classes, and, finally, continued intellectual development'. Adler originally professed the Jewish faith, but the movement quickly broke off relations with both Judaism and Christianity. A corresponding movement for Great Britain, begun in 1887 by Stanton Coit, did not meet with corresponding support, though certain prominent British philosophers (e.g. J. H. Muirhead, B. *Bosanquet, S. Alexander, and J. S. Mackenzie) expressed sympathy with it.

Ethics and Religion: A Collection of Essays by Sir John Seeley, Felix Adler, and Others (1900). F. Adler, The Religion of Duty (1905); id., An Ethical Philosophy of Life (1918). W. M. Salter, Ethical Religion (Boston, 1889); W. L. Sheldon, An Ethical Movement (1896). S. Coit (ed.), Ethical Democracy: Essays in Social Dynamics (1900). H. J. Bridges (ed.), Aspects of Ethical Religion: Essays in honor of Felix Adler (New York, 1926). H. B. Radest, Toward Common Ground: The Story of the Ethical Societies in the United States (New York [1969]). B. Kraut, From Reform Judaism to Ethical Culture: The Religious Evolution of Felix Adler (Cincinnati, 1979). G. Spiller in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 412–14, s.v.; B. Kraut in M. Eliade (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Religion, 5 (1987), pp. 171–3, s.v. 'Ethical Culture'.

Ethiopian (or Abyssinian) Church, one of the *Oriental Orthodox Churches. Christianity was introduced into Ethiopia in the 4th cent. by St *Frumentius (q.v.) and Edesius of Tyre, but it is disputed whether King Azanas, known to have been Christian from a Greek inscription found in 1969, was the same person as King Ezana (Aizanas) to whom the Emp. Constantius wrote concerning Frumentius. The arrival of the 'Nine Saints', perhaps from Syria, in the late 5th cent. helped to spread Christianity, and in the first half of the 6th cent. the kingdom of *Axum in N. Ethiopia became an important Christian power under King Kaleb, who avenged the Jewish King Dhu Nuwas's persecution of Christians in Himyar. During the Axumite period the Bible and various patristic writings (notably the collection known as the 'Qerellos') were translated into Ethiopic (Ge'ez).

The advent of *Islam led to the rapid decline of the Ethiopian kingdom from the 7th cent. onwards and to its isolation from the rest of the Christian world. Little is known of its history until the rise of the Zagwe dynasty (1137–1270), to one of whose kings, Lalibela, the construction of the rock-hewn churches at Roha (Lalibela) is attributed. Only after the restoration in 1270 of the Solomonic dynasty (claiming descent from the Queen of Sheba and Menelik, her son by *Solomon) do historical sources become plentiful. At this time the Church was revitalized by the reforms of Tekla Haymanot, the founder of the influential monastery, Debra Libanos, and missionary work was undertaken in the south. Under King Amda Sion (1314–44), the national saga, called the 'Kebra Nagast' or 'Glory of Kings', was written. During the 14th–15th cent. many theological texts were translated from Arabic, sometimes incorporating material ultimately of W. origin (e.g. the 'Miracles of the Virgin'). The reign of the energetic King Zar'a Ya'qob (1434–68) witnessed several ecclesiastical reforms. In 1441–2 some Ethiopian monks from Jerusalem attended the Council of *Florence. During the Muslim incursions (1520–51) there was widespread destruction of churches and books.

In the 16th and 17th cents. there were extensive contacts with the Portuguese, who sent both military help and missionaries. The *Jesuits enjoyed particular success and in 1626 King Susenyos gave his formal obedience to the Papacy and abjured '*Monophysitism' on behalf of his people. Public outcry at this action, however, led to his abdication and the expulsion of the Jesuits (1632). The country became closed to missionary work until the 19th cent. Theological debate with the Jesuits gave rise to internal disputes concerning the meaning of the 'Unction' of Christ, the 'Unctionists' holding that the Holy Spirit provided the unction, and the 'Unionists' that the Son was both anointer and anointed.

From the time of Frumentius until 1959 the head of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church was a metropolitan bishop, or '*Abuna', normally a *Copt, appointed by the Coptic Orthodox Patriarch. In 1959, the Church became fully independent and its head now has the title of Patriarch.

The language of the liturgy (and of all literature until the 19th cent.) is Ge'ez, which died out as a spoken language in the early Middle Ages. There is now also a considerable Christian literature in Amharic. A distinctive feature of Ethiopian Christianity lies in its many Judaic features.

There is a small *Uniat Ethiopian Catholic Church, governed (since 1961) by a metropolitan bishop, and generally following the rites of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church.

M. Lequien, Oriens Christianus, 2 (Paris, 1750), cols. 641–60. H. M. Hyatt, The Church of Abyssinia (Oriental Research Series, 1928). A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), esp. pp. 130–69. J. S. Trimingham, The Christian Church and Missions in Ethiopia (1950). E. Ullendorff, The Ethiopians (1960; 2nd edn., 1965), esp. pp. 97–115. M. Chaîne, La Chronologie des temps chrétiens de l'Égypte et de l'Éthiopie (1925). T. Tamrat, Church and State in Ethiopia, 1270–1527 (Oxford, 1972). S. Kaplan, The Monastic Holy Man and the Christianization of early Solomonic Ethiopia (Studien zur Kulturkunde, 73; 1984). P. [G.] Caraman, The Lost Empire: The Story of the Jesuits in Ethiopia 1555–1634 (1985). D. Crummey, Priests and Politicians: Protestant and Catholic Missions in Orthodox Ethiopia, 1830–1868 (Oxford, 1972). S. A. B. Mercer, The Ethiopic Liturgy (Hale Lectures for 1914–15; Milwaukee, 1915). E. Hammerschmidt, Studies in the Ethiopic Anaphoras (Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, 25; 1961); id., Stellung und Bedeutung des Sabbats in Äthiopien (Studia Delitzschiana, 7; 1963). T. Uqbit, Current Christological Positions of Ethiopian Orthodox Theologians (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 196; 1973). E. Littmann, 'Geschichte der äthiopischen Litteratur' in C. Brockelmann, Geschichte der christlichen Litteraturen des Orients (1907), pp. 185–269; J. M. Harden, An Introduction to Ethiopic Christian Literature (1926); E. Cerulli, Storia della letteratura etiopica (Milan, 1956; 3rd edn., Florence, 1968). A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), pp. 293–322; D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee; rev. edn., 1937), pp. 150–60; rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 2 (London, 1961), pp. 193–203; P. Verghese (ed.), Koptisches Christentum: Die orthodoxen Kirchen Ägyptens und Äthiopiens (Die Kirchen der Welt, 12; Stuttgart, 1973), pp. 133–207. E. Hammerschmidt and others in J. Assfalg and P. Kruger (eds.), Kleines Wörterbuch des Christlichen Orients (Wiesbaden, 1975), pp. 53–73. E. Coulbeaux in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 922–69, s.v. 'Éthiopie (Église d')'; C. Santi, OFM, and others in EC 5 (1951), cols. 684–708, s.v. 'Etiopia'; B. Velat in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1453–77, s.v. 'Éthiopie'; F. Heyer in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 572–96, s.v. 'Äthiopien'; G. Haile in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 5 (1987), pp. 173–7, s.v., all with bibl.

Ethiopic Versions of the Bible. Bible translation into Ethiopic (Ge'ez) prob. began in the 4th–5th cent., basically from Greek, but with some influence from Syriac and possibly also Hebrew. From the 14th cent. there were revisions based on *Arabic texts. Almost all Ethiopic biblical MSS date from the 13th/14th cent. or later. The extent of the canon of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church is unclear in detail, but most lists of books said to comprise the canon include (in addition to the OT, NT, and most of the *Deuterocanonical Books) various other items such as *Jubilees, 1 *Enoch, and the Ethiopic *Didascalia.

There is no satisfactory complete edn., though most Books of the OT have been pub., and the NT was first ed. by Petrus Aethiops (Tesfa Sion) (Rome, 1548). Edns. of Ethiopic biblical texts to date are cited in E. Ullendorff, Ethiopia and the Bible (Schweich Lectures, 1967; 1968); there are more recent edns. of Rev. by J. Hofmann (CSCO 281–2, Scriptores Aethiopici, 55–6; 1967, incl. Lat. tr.; with crit. discussion, ibid. 297, Subsidia, 33; 1969); of Mic. by H. F. Fuhs (Bonner Biblische Beiträge, 28; 1968); of Hos. by id. (ibid. 38; 1971); and of 1 Enoch by M. A. Knibb (2 vols., Oxford, 1978, incl. Eng. tr.). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 215–56. R. [T.] Beckwith, The Old Testament Canon of the New Testament Church and its Background in Early Judaism (1985), pp. 478–505. R. W. Cowley, The Traditional Interpretation of the Apocalypse of St John in the Ethiopian Orthodox Church (Cambridge, 1983); id., Ethiopian Biblical Interpretation (University of Cambridge Oriental Publications, 38; 1988). B. Botte, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 825–9, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', IV. 'Versions Éthiopiennes'; G. Mink and S. P. Brock in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 205–7, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen' I. 8., 'Die Übersetzungen ins Äthiopische'; R. Zuurmond in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 808–10, s.v. 'Versions, Ancient (Ethiopic)'.

Eucharist. (1) NAME. The title 'Eucharist' (Gk. εὐχαριστία, 'thanksgiving') for the central act of Christian worship is to be explained either by the fact that at its institution Christ 'gave thanks' (1 Cor. 11: 24, Mt. 26: 27, etc.) or by the fact that the service is the supreme act of Christian thanksgiving. Early instances of its occurrence are in the Didache* (9. 1), in St *Ignatius (Philad. 4, etc.), and in St *Justin (Apol. 1. 66). Other names for the service are the 'Holy Communion', the '*Lord's Supper', the '*Mass' (qq.v.), and, in the E. Church, the 'Divine Liturgy'.

(2) ORIGIN. In the NT there are four accounts of its institution, one by St *Paul in 1 Cor. 11: 23–5, and three in the *Synoptic Gospels (Mt. 26: 26–8, Mk. 14: 22–4, Lk. 22: 17–20). It is recorded that it was celebrated by the early Christian community at *Jerusalem (Acts 2: 42, 46) and by St Paul on his visit to Troas (Acts 20: 7). These passages show that from a very early date the service was a regular part of Christian worship, and was held to have been instituted by Christ. There is no record of the institution in the Fourth Gospel, but its existence is suggested in Jn. 6: 32–58. Traditionally it has been held that there was preparation for it in the OT, e.g. in the presentation of bread and wine by *Melchizedek, King of Salem (Gen. 14: 18), in the offerings of fine flour and wine (e.g. Lev.

2, 23: 13), in the descriptions of the meal to which Wisdom invites in Prov. (9: 1–5) and Ecclus. (24: 19–21), in the *Passover, and in the '*Kiddush'; and it has sometimes been held that the Divine preparation for it included some pagan sacramental rites as well. The main background in the NT, however, is Jewish and not pagan.

(3) Doctrine. The development of Eucharistic doctrine was gradual. In the *patristic period there was remarkably little in the way of controversy on the subject, but the emphases were different in different parts of the Church.

(a) That the Eucharist conveyed to the believer the Body and Blood of Christ was universally accepted from the first, and language was very commonly used which referred to the Eucharistic elements as themselves the Body and Blood. Even where the elements were spoken of as 'symbols' or 'antitypes' there was no intention of denying the reality of the Presence in the gifts. From the 4th cent., language about the transformation of the elements began to become general; but both before and after this, while some theologians wrote as if they believed in the persistence of the bread and wine after consecration, others wrote as though they held them to be no longer there. In the later part of the patristic period, the same lines of thought are continued uncontroversially, though there is a tendency towards a division between the precursors of *transubstantiation on the one side and those who emphasized the continued reality of the bread and wine (as well as the presence of the Body and Blood) in the consecrated elements on the other. Later, as the earlier conception of a 'symbol' as that which conveys and is what it represents gave way to the understanding of it as being other than what it represents, the description of the bread and wine as symbols dropped out or was denied. But hardly anywhere is there any attempt at precise formulation. The Fathers who made important contributions to the early development of Eucharistic doctrine include St *Cyril of Jerusalem, St *Chrysostom, St *Gregory of Nyssa, St *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theodoret, St *Ambrose, St *Augustine, and St *John of Damascus.

The first controversies on the nature of the Eucharistic Presence date from the earlier Middle Ages. In the 9th cent. *Paschasius Radbertus raised doubts as to the identity of Christ's Eucharistic Body with His Body in heaven, but won practically no support. Considerably greater stir was provoked in the 11th cent. by the teaching of *Berengar, who opposed the doctrine of the Real Presence. He retracted his opinion, however, before his death in 1088. These controversies had the effect of making some more precise definition desirable. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) used the current term 'transubstantiation' to assert the Real Presence against the *Cathari. Later in the century this teaching was worked out in much detail, with the assistance of the newly recovered philosophy of *Aristotle, notably by St *Thomas Aquinas. It was maintained that consecration effected a change in the 'substance' of the Bread and Wine, whereas the 'accidents' (i.e. the outward appearance) remained. Concurrently with this development went a great increase in Eucharistic devotion and the institution by Urban IV (1261–4) of the Feast of *Corpus Christi (1264).

At the Reformation, great controversies on the subject took place. M. *Luther defended a doctrine of *consubstantiation, acc. to which after the consecration both the bread and wine and the Body and Blood of Christ coexisted. U. *Zwingli, on the other hand, affirmed that the Lord's Supper was primarily a memorial rite, and that there was no change in the elements whatever. It was this deep-rooted divergence of Eucharistic belief that prevented the union of the forces of the German and Swiss Reformers, despite the attempt to heal the breach at the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529). J. *Calvin and his followers held a view of the Eucharist intermediate between these two. They denied that any change in the elements took place, but maintained that the faithful received the power or virtue of the Body and Blood of Christ, a doctrine which thus became known as *virtualism; and this or a very similar doctrine was held by some of the chief Anglican Reformers. At the Council of *Trent (sess. 13, 11 Oct. 1551), where recent disputes had made some formulation desirable, the doctrine of transubstantiation was reaffirmed in language more explicit than in 1215, but care was taken to avoid any formal definition of it in terms of accidents and substance, despite the general acceptance of this explanation among the leading RC theologians of the time.

Since the 16th cent. great attention has continued to be paid to Eucharistic doctrine in all parts of W. Christendom. It has been the subject of many refinements in the RC Church, e.g. in the writings of M. *Cano, F. *Suárez, J. de *Lugo, J. B. *Franzelin. Apart from transubstantiation, which on the prima facie reading of the 28th of the *Thirty-Nine Articles is excluded, a large variety of doctrines has been held in the C of E. The ambiguous, if not actually divergent, language of the BCP has encouraged the coexistence of these doctrines. It has been maintained that the consecrated elements are the Body and Blood of Christ, or that they possess the virtue of the Body and Blood, or that the faithful communicant receives with them the Body and Blood, or that they are merely symbols in the modern sense of the word. There has also been considerable variety of teaching in the Nonconformist Churches.

Since the Second *Vatican Council various RC theologians have explored the use of the notions of 'transignification' and 'transfinalization' as expressing the mode of the Eucharistic Presence. The encyclical 'Mysterium Fidei' of Pope *Paul VI in 1965, while it emphasized the doctrine of transubstantiation which the Pope held to be in danger, explicitly asserted that 'as a result of transubstantiation the species of bread and wine undoubtedly take on a new significance and a new finality'.

(b) From at least the end of the 1st cent. it was also held that the Eucharist is in some sense a sacrifice, though here again definition was gradual. The suggestion of sacrifice is contained in much of the NT language. In Judaism bread and wine were sacrificial elements, and the words at the institution, 'covenant' (διαθήκη), 'memorial' (ἀνάμνησις), 'poured out' (ἐκχυννόμενον), all have sacrificial associations. In early post-NT times the constant repudiation of animal sacrifice and emphasis on life and prayer at Christian worship did not hinder the Eucharist from being described as a sacrifice from the first. This aspect of Eucharistic doctrine, rather than any precise understanding of the Eucharistic Presence, was the centre of discussion in the E. Church, and a Council at *Constantinople in 1157 upheld the teaching that the Liturgy makes present the Sacrifice of Christ that is 'eternally celebrated' upon the 'altar on high'. It was long, however, before any attempt was made, either in the E. or W., to define more closely the nature of the sacrifice, though from the 14th cent. onwards a vast literature on the subject developed. Among the Reformation theologians there arose a strong tendency either to deny the sacrifice or to explain it in an unreal sense. The Council of Trent, on the other hand, dealt fully with the doctrine of the Sacrifice of the Mass. It affirmed that the Sacrifice of the Mass was propitiatory (propitiatorium), that it availed for the living and the dead, that it did not detract from the sufficiency of the Sacrifice of *Calvary. It embodied its teaching on the sacrifice in nine canons (sess. 22; 17 Sept. 1562).

During the 20th cent. a good deal of attention has been paid to the nature of the Eucharistic Sacrifice. Many modern writers have stressed the close relation between what takes place on the earthly altar and the perpetual Sacrifice of Christ in Heaven. In this connection F. C. N. Hicks and others have urged that the purpose of all sacrifice is life, the victim being slain not for its death as such but to liberate its blood, which is pre-eminently its life. M. *de la Taille (q.v.) elaborated the parallelism between the Oblation at the Last Supper and that on the Christian altar, holding that both were integrally related to the one immolation on Calvary. Another development (A. *Vonier, OSB; E. Masure) has been to interpret the Eucharistic Sacrifice in terms of sacrament, setting out from the conviction that it is of the essence of a sacrament to be meaningful and significant. More recently, theologians have emphasized the element of *anamnesis (or memorial) as central to an understanding of the Eucharist. This thinking is reflected in the Report of the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission (q.v.) which achieved a measure of agreement on the nature of the Eucharistic Sacrifice by stressing the notion of anamnesis, understood as 'the making effective in the present of an event in the past'. The Eucharist is thus presented as 'a means through which the atoning work of Christ on the cross is proclaimed and made effective in the Church'.

In a less theoretical direction the *Liturgical Movement emphasized that the Eucharist is the commemoration of the whole paschal mystery, the passion, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, and brought out its relationship to the corporate nature of the Church and the role of the laity in its celebration. The Constitution of the Second Vatican Council on the Sacred Liturgy, while primarily concerned with liturgical reform, took up some of these insights. It lays stress on the corporate nature of the Eucharist, on the function of the laity in the Church's Eucharistic life, and on the sociological significance of Eucharistic worship, expressed in the active participation of the people. It declares that 'at the Last Supper . . . our Saviour instituted the Eucharistic Sacrifice of His Body and Blood' and that 'He did this in order to perpetuate the sacrifice of the Cross throughout the centuries until He should come again and so to entrust to His beloved spouse, the Church, a memorial of His death and resurrection'. It does not, however, go into detail about the precise nature of the sacrifice.

See also EUCHARISTIC PRAYERS.

On the history of the Eucharist: C. *Gore, The Body of Christ (1901); P. *Batiffol, Études d'histoire et de théologie positive, 2nd ser., L'Eucharistie (1905); D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (2 vols., 1909); J. Betz, Eucharistie in der Schrift und Patristik (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 4, Heft 4a; 1979); B. Neunheuser, OSB, Eucharistie in Mittelalter und Neuzeit (ibid. 4, Heft 4b; 1963); H. B. Meyer, SJ, Eucharistie: Geschichte, Theologie, Pastoral (Gottesdienst der Kirche, 4; Regensburg, 1989). A. *Schweitzer, Das Abendmahl in Zusammenhang mit dem Leben Jesu und der Geschichte des Urchristenthums (1901; Eng. tr., Macon, Ga. [1982]); M. Goguel, L'Eucharistie des origines à Justin Martyr (1909); H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926; Eng. tr., Leiden, 1953–79). J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (1935; 3rd edn., 1960; Eng. trs., 1955 and 1966). H. Schürmann, Eine quellenkritische Untersuchung des Lukanischen Abendmahlsberichtes Lk. 22, 7–38 (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 19, Heft 5; 20, Hefte 4–5; 1953–7). R. Feneberg, Christliche Passafeier und Abendmahl: Eine biblisch-hermeneutische Untersuchung der neutestamentliche Einsetzungsberichte (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 27; 1971). X. Léon-Dufour, SJ, Le partage du pain eucharistique selon le Nouveau Testament ([1982]; Eng. tr., New York [1987]). E. B. *Pusey, The Doctrine of the Real Presence as contained in the Fathers (1855); C. Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation, Diss. 3: 'Transubstantiation and Nihilianism' (1895); J. [R.] Geiselmann, Die Eucharistielehre der Vorscholastik (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, 15, Hefte 1–3; 1926); G. Macy, The Theologies of the Eucharist in the Early Scholastic Period: A Study of the Salvific Function of the Sacrament according to the Theologians c.1080–c.1220 (Oxford, 1984); B. J. Kidd, The Later Medieval Doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice (1898); M. Rubin, Corpus Christi: The Eucharist in Late Medieval Culture (Cambridge, 1991). T. G. A. Hardt, Venerabilis et adorabilis Eucharistia: Eine Studie über die lutherische Abendmahlslehre im 16. Jahrhundert (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 24; 1988). C. W. Dugmore, Eucharistic Doctrine in England from Hooker to Waterland (1942); id., The Mass and the English Reformers (1958). F. Clark, SJ, Eucharistic Sacrifice and the Reformation (Oxford, 1960; 2nd edn., 1967). P. [N.] Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist: An Essay in Historical Development (1965; 2nd edn., 1992). J. C. Bowmer, The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in Early Methodism (1951).

On the theology of the Eucharist: R. I. *Wilberforce, The Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1853); J. B. Franzelin, Tractatus de SS. Eucharistiae Sacramento et Sacrificio (1868); W. *Sanday (ed.), Different Conceptions of Priesthood and Sacrifice (1900); M. de la Taille, Mysterium Fidei (1921; Eng. tr. of books 1 and 2, 2 vols., 1941–50); A. Vonier, OSB, A Key to the Doctrine of the Eucharist (1925); F. C. N. Hicks, The Fullness of Sacrifice (1930); E. Masure, Le Sacrifice du Chef (2nd edn., 1932; Eng. tr., The Christian Sacrifice, 1944). Y. [T.] Brilioth, Eucharistic Faith and Practice, Evangelical and Catholic (Eng. tr. by A. G. Hebert, 1930). E. L. Mascall, Corpus Christi: Essays on the Church and the Eucharist (1953; 2nd edn., 1965). G. *Aulén, För eder utgiven (Stockholm, 1956; Eng. tr., Eucharist and Sacrifice, Philadelphia, 1958; Edinburgh, 1960). M. Thurian, L'Eucharistie: Mémorial du Seigneur, Sacrifice d'action de grâce et d'intercession (Collection Communauté de Taizé; Neuchâtel, 1959; Eng. tr., The Eucharistic Memorial, Ecumenical Studies in Worship, 7–8; 1960–1). O. *Casel, The Mystery of Christian Worship (1962), and other works of this author. E. *Schillebeeckx, OP, Christus Tegenwoordigheid in de Eucharistie (1967; Eng. tr., The Eucharist, 1968). J. M. Powers, SJ, Eucharistic Theology (New York, 1967; London, 1968), with bibl. [on recent RC thinking]. G. Wainwright, Eucharist and Eschatology (1971). Report of the Anglo-Catholic Congress, 1927 (subject: The Holy Eucharist); Thinking about the Eucharist (essays by members of the Archbishops' Commission on Christian Doctrine, with a Preface by I. T. Ramsey; 1972). J. Betz in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 4 (pt. 2; Einsiedeln [1973]), pp. 185–313. C. J. Cocksworth, Evangelical Eucharistic Thought in the Church of England (Cambridge, 1993). P. J. Fitzpatrick, In Breaking of Bread: The Eucharist and Ritual (ibid., 1993).

On the liturgy of the Eucharist: G. *Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy [1945]; J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Missarum Sollemnia: Eine genetische Erklärung der römischen Messe (2 vols., 1948; 4th edn., 1958; Eng. tr. of 1949 edn., New York, 1951–5), and other works of this author; J. D. Crichton, Christian Celebration: The Mass (1971). Various authors in C. [P. M.] Jones, G. Wainwright, and E. J. Yarnold, SJ (eds.), The Study of Liturgy (1978), pp. 147–288; rev. edn. (1992), pp. 184–338. A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (new edn.), 2: R. Cabié, L'Eucharistie (1983; Eng. tr., 1986).

C. Ruch and others in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 795–1316, s.v. 'Messe'.

Eucharistic Congresses. International congresses organized by the RC Church for promoting devotion to the Blessed Sacrament. Their ancestor, a local gathering arranged through the exertions and enthusiasm of Mgr Gaston de Ségur, met at Lille in 1881. In succeeding years the Congresses have gradually developed to their present international character. That of 1908 which met in London was the first occasion on which a Papal *legate had entered England since Cardinal R. *Pole (d. 1558).

Reports of some of the Congresses have been pub. shortly afterwards. J. Vaudon, L'Œuvre des congrès eucharistiques, ses orgines (1911); M. L. Paladini, Die eucharistischen Kongresse: Ursprung und Geschichte (1912). Current RC directions are contained in the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Sacra Communione et de Cultu Mysterii Eucharistici extra Missam (1973), nos. 109–12 (pp. 44 f.), Eng. tr., Holy Communion and Worship of the Eucharist Outside Mass, 1, Rites (1978), pp. 57 f. N. Mitchell, OSB, Cult and Controversy: The Worship of the Eucharist Outside Mass (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 4; New York, 1982), esp. pp. 342 f. T. F. Meehan in CE 5 (1909), pp. 592–4, s.v.; J. C. Willke in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 617 f., s.v.

Eucharistic fast. By this is commonly understood complete abstinence from food and drink for a period preceding the reception of Holy Communion. Unlike other forms of fasting, it is designed less as a form of asceticism than to do honour to the Eucharistic Gifts.

The traditional period of the fast was from the previous midnight. The practice appears to have developed gradually. The earliest express legislation on the subject is in the Council of *Hippo of 393 (can. 28), which allowed, however, an exception on *Maundy Thursday; this decree was re-enacted at Carthage in 397 (can. 29). St *Augustine (ep. 54, ad Januarium; *c.*400) advocates the fast, believing it to be of universal observance and dating back to Apostolic times. Throughout the Middle Ages its observance was virtually universal. It was also taken over by the Reformers, who tended to stress esp. its disciplinary value. Among Protestants, however, it gradually died out; in England it also seems to have almost disappeared in the 18th cent. In the 19th cent. the observance was assiduously encouraged by the *Tractarians and their followers. It led to the institution of the early morning Celebration and the discouragement of communicating at the mid-morning High Celebration, except by the (still fasting) celebrant. Another consequence was that *Evening Communions (q.v.) were originally deprecated by High Churchmen. By the end of the 19th cent. the practice had become widespread in the C of E and was a strong devotional influence. The proposed BCP of 1928 contained the rubric: 'It is an ancient and laudable custom of the Church to receive this Holy Sacrament fasting. Yet for the avoidance of all scruple it is hereby declared that such preparation may be used or not used, according to every man's conscience in the sight of God.' Any mention of the subject seems to be absent from modern liturgies and it seldom figures even in devotional literature of recent times. The practice of the RC Church (see below) has influenced many Anglicans.

Since the beginning of the 20th cent. the RC Church has shown an increasing tendency to relax and curtail the discipline. Influences in this direction have been the encouragement of more frequent Communion (see COMMUNION, FREQUENCY OF) and the disorganization of social habits, especially during the Second World War. Special relaxations were gradually introduced for those in sickness and on active service, and for others for whom a rigid fast would have been burdensome. These dispensations were standardized in *Pius XII's Apostolic Constitution 'Christus Dominus' (16 Jan. 1953) and the accompanying instruction. His motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' of 19 March 1957 laid down that the consumption of water at any time did not break the natural fast; in future a three-hour fast from solid food and alcoholic drink and a one-hour fast from non-alcoholic liquid was to be observed before the reception of Holy Communion; the celebrating priest was to reckon the period of the fast from the beginning of Mass. On 21 Nov. 1964 *Paul VI reduced the period of the Eucharistic fast to one hour before the reception of Holy Communion. Acc. to the CIC (1983), can. 919, 'Whoever is to receive the blessed Eucharist is to abstain for at least one hour before holy Communion from all food and drink, with the sole exception of water and medicine'. There are, however, exceptions for priests celebrating a second or third Mass on the same day, the elderly and sick, and for those caring for them.

In the E. Church a strict Eucharistic fast is observed from bedtime on the previous day.

H. T. Kingdon, Fasting Communion (1873; 2nd edn., 1875, much extended); F. W. Puller, SSJE, Concerning the Fast before Communion (1903); J. Wickham Legg (ed.), Papal Faculties allowing Food before Communion (CHS, no. 87; 1905). P. *Dearmer, The Truth about Fasting, with special Reference to Fasting Communion (1928). J. M. Frochisse, SJ, 'A propos des origines du jeûne eucharistique', RHE 28 (1932), pp. 594–609; G. R. Dunstan, 'The Fast before Communion', Theology, 53 (1950), pp. 11–19 and 57–64. The Ap. Const. 'Christus Dominus' is pr. in AAS 45 (1953), pp. 15–24, with the accompanying Instruction, ibid., pp. 47–51. Both are repr., with Eng. tr. and comm., in W. Conway, The New Law on the Eucharistic Fast (Dublin, 1954). 'Sacram Communionem' is pr. in AAS 49 (1957), pp. 177 f.; the 1964 regulation ibid. 57 (1965), p. 186. A. Bride in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 142–81, s.v. 'Jeûne eucharistique'. A. M. Carr in NCE 5 (1967), p. 847, s.v. 'Fast, Eucharistic'.

Eucharistic Prayers, forms of the central prayer of the Eucharist (q.v), known in the E. as the *Anaphora. From at least the 6th cent., the Roman rite knew only one form, the *Canon of the Mass. As the word Eucharist implies, a major theme of such prayers is thanksgiving. Their origin is prob. to be found in the Jewish prayers of blessing at meals and synagogue blessings, prayers that blessed God for creation, gave thanks for redemption, and made supplication. Many of the early Christian prayers were not so much one single prayer as a series of short prayers, a form apparently preserved in the Roman Canon. Until well into the 3rd cent., and possibly later, the bishop as the normal leader at the Eucharist, would have improvised the prayer, and the forms that survive from this early period are probably only possible models (e.g. the Eucharistic prayer in the Apostolic Tradition*; cf. also St Polycarp's prayer before his martyrdom in the Martyrdom of Polycarp, 14; the Didache* may provide another example). The 4th and 5th cents. saw the composition of the great prayers in the liturgies attributed to St *Basil, St John *Chrysostom, and others. In the *Gallican, old Spanish (*Mozarabic) and *Ambrosian rites the prayer continued to be in the form of several short prayers. The composition of Eucharistic prayers continued in *Syrian Orthodox areas until well into the Middle Ages, but in the W. the suppression of the Gallican rites and the severe restriction of other local liturgies left the Roman Canon virtually the only Eucharistic Prayer in use. At the Reformation *Lutherans suppressed all of the Canon except the *Preface and the Words of *Institution; *Reformed Church orders often used those words as a warrant for celebration and had no equivalent to a Eucharistic Prayer. In the C of E the 1552 BCP retained the Preface but separated the Prayer of *Humble Access from the prayer containing the institution narrative (called the Prayer of Consecration from 1662), itself separated from the rest of the Eucharistic Prayer after the Words of Institution by the Communion.

Eucharistic Prayers usually contain the following elements: a thanksgiving for creation and redemption, at some point in which the Sanctus almost invariably occurs; the words of Christ at the *Last Supper (seen as exclusively consecratory in W. theology from the Middle Ages until modern times); the *Anamnesis or prayer of Oblation; the *Epiclesis or invocation of the Holy Spirit (upon the elements and upon the communicants); and usually some form of intercession, in union with the saints, for the living and departed, and a final doxology. Some ancient prayers did not contain all these elements; the original Anaphora of *Addai and Mari may not have had the Words of Institution, and the Epiclesis is undeveloped in the Roman Canon.

In 1968 the Congregation of Sacred *Rites provided three Eucharistic Prayers for use in the RC Church as alternatives to the Roman Canon, which in a slightly revised form became Eucharistic Prayer I. Prayer II is an adaptation of the prayer in the Apostolic Tradition, with the addition of the Sanctus and the rearrangement of sections, esp. the Words of Institution which, for pastoral reasons, are the same in all three new prayers. Prayer III is a modern composition more in the tradition of the Canon, but with elements from other sources. Prayer IV is related to an ancient prayer once current in Egypt and later adapted to form what is known as the Anaphora of St Basil; new intercessions have been added. All three have an Epiclesis before and after the consecration, and intercessions in which there is a brief invocation of the BVM and the saints. Further Eucharistic Prayers have subsequently been authorized, beginning with those for Reconciliation and for Children in 1975. By this time the different Provinces of the Anglican Communion had devised a variety of Eucharistic Prayers, and since then liturgical revision has proceeded apace in most Churches. Rite A of the ASB has four Eucharistic Prayers, as has the American Lutheran Book of Worship of 1983, while the 1989 *United Reformed Church order has three. The Eucharistic rite of the Church of *South India (1962), which has been widely influential, was based on the Apostolic Tradition.

A. Hänggi and I. Pahl (eds.), Prex Eucharistica: Textus e variis liturgiis antiquioribus selecti (Spicilegium Friburgense, 12; 1968); I. Pahl (ed.), Coena Domini, 1: Die Abendmahlsliturgie der Reformationskirchen im 16./17. Jahrhundert (ibid. 29; 1983). R. C. D. Jasper and G. J. Cuming (eds.), Prayers of the Eucharist: Early and Reformed (1975; 2nd edn., New York, 1980).

H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), esp. pp. 125–32; Eng. tr. (Leiden, 1979), pp. 102–8; G. *Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy [1945], pp. 50–5. J. P. Audet, 'Literary Forms and Contents of a Normal Εὐχαριστία in the First Century', in K. Aland and others (eds.), Studia Evangelica, 1 (TU 73; 1959), pp. 643–62. L. Bouyer, Eucharistie: Théologie et spiritualité de la prière eucharistie ([1966]; Eng. tr., 1968). L. Ligier, SJ, 'The Origins of the Eucharistic Prayer: From the Last Supper to the Eucharist', Studia Liturgica, 9 (1973), pp. 161–85. C. Giraudo, La Struttura letteraria della preghiera eucaristica (Analecta Biblica, 92; 1981). A. Bouley, OSB, From Freedom to Formula: The Evolution of the Eucharistic Prayer from Oral Improvisation to Written Texts (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, 21; Washington, DC [1981]). E. Mazza, Le Odierne Preghiere Eucaristiche (1984; Eng. tr., The Eucharistic Prayers of the Roman Rite, New York [1986]). F. C. Senn (ed.), New Eucharistic Prayers: An Ecumenical Study of their Development and Structure (ibid. [1987]).

Eucharistic vestments. In the W. the traditional vestments of the priest celebrating Mass are the *alb, *amice, *chasuble, *girdle, *maniple, and *stole. They derive from the ordinary secular clothing of Roman citizens in the 2nd cent., the alb being a development of the tunica, the chasuble of the paenula, and the maniple of the mappula. In the E. Church the vestments are fundamentally the same but differ in shape. In the RC Church the celebration of the Mass without vestments is normally forbidden. In the C of E since the *Reformation their history is complex. The 1549 BCP ordered a 'white alb plain, with a vestment or cope', but in the 1552 BCP they were abolished. The *Ornaments Rubric in the 1662 BCP, however, at least on a prima facie interpretation, orders their use. After falling into complete disuse for over two centuries, they were restored on the authority of the Rubric in the 19th cent., being first worn at Wilmcote in Warwickshire in 1845. From that time controversy on the subject raged violently. In 1908 a sub-committee of five bishops reported to the Upper House of Convocation that their use was permitted, if not commanded, by the Ornaments Rubric; they were tolerated by the rubrics of the proposed Prayer Book of 1927–8, and can. B 8 of the 1969 Canons permits 'an alb with the customary vestments'. See also COPE AND VESTMENTS.

For bibl., see under separate vestments and also under VESTMENTS and ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

Euchelaion (Gk. εὐχέλαιον). In the Greek Church, the regular term for the Sacrament of Holy *Unction.

Eucherius, St (d. *c.*450), Bp. of Lyons. Accompanied by his wife and two sons, he entered the famous monastery of *Lérins and became a keen exponent of the ascetic way of life. He was elected to the see of Lyons at some time between 432 and 441 (when he attended the Synod of *Orange), but of his administration we know very little. His extant writings comprise two exegetical works (Formulae Spiritalis Intelligentiae and Instructiones ad Salonium), a Passio Agaunensium Martyrum (on the *Theban Legion) and two small ascetic treatises (De Laude Heremi and De Contemptu Mundi). Acc. to *Gennadius of Marseilles he made a summary of the writings of John *Cassian, though it is uncertain whether any of this survives. Feast day, 16 Nov.

Authentic works in J. P. Migne, PL 50. 701–832 (with account of earlier edns., cols. 687–98). Crit. edn. (unfinished) by K. Wotke (CSEL 31; 1894). Gennadius, De Viris Ill. 63 [64]. N. K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), esp. pp. 151–60. S. Pricoco, L'Isola dei santi: Il cenobio di Lerino e le origini del monachesimo gallico (1978), passim. A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 504–7. L. R. Wickham in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 522–5; S. Pricoco in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1270–2 (Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 295), both s.v., with bibl.

Euchites (Gk. εὐχῆται or εὐχῖται). The heretical sect also known as the *Messalians (q.v.). The Greek, like the Syriac, title means 'those who pray'.

Euchologion (Gk. εὐχολόγιον). In the E. Church, the liturgical book containing the text and rubrics of the three Eucharistic rites in current use (of St *Chrysostom, of St *Basil, and the Liturgy of the *Presanctified), the invariable parts of the Divine *Office, and the prayers required for the administration of the *Sacraments and *Sacramentals. It thus combines the essential parts of what in the W. is contained in the *Missal, *Pontifical, and *Rituale.

Among the earliest MSS of the Euchologion are the 'Barberini Codex S. Marci III. 55 (77)', now Vat. gr. 366; the Cod. Porphyr., formerly of the Imperial Library at St Petersburg; and the Cod. Sin. 957; all 8th–9th cent. The earliest pr. texts come from Venice (1526, 1544, 1550, etc.). A collection of texts, with crit. discussion, in J. *Goar, OP, Εὐχολόγιον, sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; 2nd edn., Venice, 1730). P. de Meester, OSB, Studi sui sacramenti amministrati secondo il Rito Bizantino [1947], pp. 189–240. Id. in EC 5 (1951), cols. 784–6, s.v.

eudemonism. The ethical theory which defines the end of right action as εὐδαιμονία, 'well-being'. The classical exponent of this system is *Aristotle. St *Thomas Aquinas, who uses St. *Augustine's term beatitudo ('blessedness') for εὐδαιμονία, found a place for it in Christian moral philosophy; but in his account the 'well-being' of man is discovered in the vision of God. This Christian eudemonism has been criticized, especially by the *Quietists, on the ground that it leaves no room for the pure disinterested love of God, which should be the foundation of Christian morals. Among Anglican moral philosophers, H. *Rashdall defended a form of eudemonism.

R. A. Gauthier in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 1660–74, s.v., with refs.

Eudes, St John (1601–80), French missioner. Born at Ri in Normandy and educated at the *Jesuit college at Caen, he was accepted by the Superior General of the *Oratory in 1623 and priested in 1625. After heroic service in plagues in 1627 and 1631, he spent ten years in conducting missions. In 1641 he founded the 'Order of our Lady of Charity', dedicated to the heart of Mary, to care for fallen women, which in 1644 was entrusted to the *Visitandines of Caen. In 1643 he withdrew from the Oratory and founded at Caen the 'Congregation of Jesus and Mary', dedicated to the hearts of Jesus and Mary, an association of priests whose object was to conduct seminaries. In 1657 the Caen sisters set up an independent community ('Sisters of our Lady of Charity of the Refuge'), with a fourth vow, to care for fallen women.

St John Eudes shares with St *Margaret Mary Alacoque the claim to have initiated devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus. He sought to give it a theological foundation and wrote several offices of the feast. He also fostered devotion to the heart of Mary, introducing in his congregation a feast in its honour in 1648, and publishing in 1670 Le Cœur admirable de la Mère de Dieu. The best known of his other writings is La Vie et le royaume de Jésus (1637). He was beatified in 1909 and canonized in 1925. Feast day, 19 Aug.

The 'Congregation of Jesus and Mary', whose members are commonly known as 'Eudists', was almost extinguished by the Revolution. It was reconstituted in 1826 and is now chiefly concerned with secondary education. In recent times it has been active in South America, the *United States, and esp. *Canada. In 1835 a separate congregation, the Sisters of our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd, was formed to establish reformatories.

Œuvres complètes pub. with introd. and notes, 12 vols., Paris, 1905–9; Lettres choisies et inédites ed. C. Berthelot du Chesnay, CJM (Namur, 1958). The primary Life by P. Hérambourg, CJM (1661–1720) was ed. by A. Le Doré (Paris, 1869) and, more accurately, by D. Boulay, CJM (ibid., 1925; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., and Dublin, 1960). Modern Lives by D. Boulay (4 vols., Paris, 1905–8), H. Joly ('Les Saints', 1907; Eng. tr., 1932), E. Georges (Paris, 1925), and A. Pioger (Paris, 1940). Bremond, 3 (1921), pp. 583–671. C. Lebrun, CJM, La Spiritualité de S. Jean Eudes (1933; Eng. tr., 1934). C. Berthelot du Chesnay, Les Missions de Saint Jean Eudes (1967). P. Milcent, CJM, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 488–501, s.v. 'Jean (90) Eudes'.

E. Georges, La Congrégation de Jésus et Marie, dite des Eudistes (1933). Heimbucher, 2, pp. 592–5. C. Berthelot du Chesnay in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1331–5, s.v. 'Eudistes', with further bibl.

Eudists. See previous entry.

Eudoxius (*c.*300–370), *Anomoean leader. A native of *Armenia, in the later 330s he was made by his *Arian friends Bp. of Germanicia and took part in many of the Arian councils. In 357 he secured possession of the see of *Antioch; and though soon forced to withdraw, he became Bp. of *Constantinople in 360. Of his writings only a few fragments survive.

M. Tetz, 'Euxodius-Fragmente?', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 3 (TU 78; 1961), pp. 314–23. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 253 f. (nos. 3405 and 3410). M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1484–7; M. Spanneut in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1337–40, both s.v.

Eugenius III (d. 1153), *Cistercian, Pope from 1145. Bernardo Pignatelli of Pisa entered the Cistercian abbey of *Clairvaux under St *Bernard in 1135 and was subsequently made Abbot of San Anastasio at Rome. Elected Pope in 1145, he had to flee before his consecration, owing to his refusal to recognize the sovereignty of the Roman Senate. He went to Farfa, where he was consecrated, and from there to Viterbo, and in 1147 to France, where he worked for the Second *Crusade, which he commissioned St Bernard to preach. He held synods at *Paris (1147), Trier (1147), *Reims (1148), dealing chiefly with matters of doctrine, esp. the heresy of *Gilbert de la Porrée and the visions of St *Hildegard, and at Cremona (1148), where he excommunicated *Arnold of Brescia, who had become the leader of the rebellious Roman Senate. In 1149 he returned to Rome but had to leave it again. In 1153 he concluded the Treaty of Constance with *Frederick I (Barbarossa), who guaranteed the rights of the Church. Early in the same year Eugenius had re-entered Rome, where he died seven months later. An ardent reformer of the morals of the clergy and of monastic observance, he had formed his life on the spiritual counsels of St Bernard, who had written for him his famous ascetical treatise 'De Consideratione'. His cult was approved by *Pius IX in 1872. Feast day, 8 July.

592 of Eugenius' letters in J. P. Migne, PL 180. 1013–614, with refs. Jaffé, 2 (2nd edn., 1888), pp. 20–89. The principal sources are the Life by Card. Boso in LP (Duchesne, 2, 1892, pp. 386 f.) and the account of *John of Salisbury, Historia Pontificalis (ed. M. Chibnall, 1956, repr., Oxford, 1986, passim; see index). H. Gleber, Papst Eugen III., 1145–1153, unter besondere Berücksichtigung seiner politischen Tätigkeit (Beiträge zur mittelalterlichen und neueren Geschichte, ed. F. Schneider, 6; 1936). G. del Guerra and others, Il Beato Eugenio III, a cura del Capitolo della Primaziale di Pisa (Pisa, 1954). M. Maccarrone, Papato e Impero dalla elezione di Federico I alla morte di Adriano IV (1152–1159) (Lateranum, NS 25; 1959), pp. 11–103. E. Caspar, 'Die Kreuzzugsbullen Eugens III', NA 45 (1924), pp. 285–305, with text. Mann, 9 (1914), pp. 127–220. M.-A. Dimier in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1349–55, s.v. 'Eugène III'; I. Daniele in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (1964), cols. 196–201, s.v. 'Eugenio III'.

Eugenius IV (1383–1447), Pope from 1431. Gabriele Condulmaro was born of a wealthy Venetian family, and at an early age entered an *Augustinian monastery. In 1408 he was appointed Cardinal-Priest of San Clemente by his uncle, Gregory XII. He was elected Pope in 1431, one of his first acts being to dismiss the Council of *Basle (q.v.), which had met in the summer of the same year. The Council refused to dissolve, however, and reasserted the theory of *conciliar supremacy, which had been defended at *Constance. In 1433 Eugenius gave way and recognized the Council as canonical. A year later a revolt in Rome forced the Pope to flee to Florence, where he remained until 1443. His relations with the Council remained tense. In 1438, against the wishes of the majority, he transferred the Council to Ferrara and in the following year to Florence. The union of the Greek and Roman Churches at Florence in 1439, though not permanent, greatly increased his authority. Meanwhile the continuing Council of Basle deposed him and elected an antipope, Felix V (Amadeus VIII, Duke of Savoy) in 1439. In 1443 Eugenius returned to Rome. In the following year the *Crusade against the Turks in which he was deeply concerned ended with the defeat of the Christians at Varna. With France relations had become strained owing to the semi-schismatic *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438), but through the skill of his envoy, Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini (later *Pius II), the Pope secured a diplomatic success which brought the Empire over to his side (1447). See also FLORENCE, COUNCIL OF.

Eugenius was a Pope of austere piety, a vehement opponent of nepotism, but often imprudent in his policy. His residence at Florence brought him into contact with the Italian Renaissance, and he showed himself a patron of art and literature.

F. P. Abert, Papst Eugen der Vierte (1884). J. Gill, SJ, Eugenius IV: Pope of Christian Union (Westminster, Md., 1961; London [1962]). E. v. Ottenthal, 'Die Bullenregister Martins V und Eugens IV', Mittheilungen des Instituts für oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung. Ergänzungsband 1 (1885), pp. 401–589. P. Paschino, Roma nel rinascimento (Storia di Roma, 12; 1940), pp. 120–65. J. W. Stieber, Pope Eugenius IV, the Council of Basel and the Secular and Ecclesiastical Authorities in the Empire (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 13; Leiden, 1978). C. M. de Witte, 'Les Bulles pontificales et l'expansion portugaise au XV[e] siècle', RHE 48 (1953), pp. 683–718, esp. pp. 697–718, incl. texts. Pastor, 1 (1891), pp. 281–361. E. Delaruelle, E. R. Labande, and P. Ourliac in Fliche and Martin, 14 (parts 1–3; 1962), pp. 229–447, passim. P. de Vooght in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1355–9, s.v. 'Eugène IV'.

Eugippius (c.455–c.535), Abbot of Lucullanum, near Naples. He wrote a Life of St *Severinus of Noricum (c.511) and a monastic Rule, recently discovered. He also compiled a collection of extracts from the writings of St *Augustine which was much read in the Middle Ages. He was prob. involved in the revision of the *Vulgate text of the Gospels.

Works pr. J. P. Migne, PL 62. 549–1200. Crit. edn. by P. Knoell (CSEL 9; 2 pts., 1895–6). Rule ed. F. Villegas and A. de Vogüé (CSEL 87; 1976). M. Cappuyns in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1376–8; V. Pavan in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1278 f. (Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 296), both s.v. For edns. and works on the Life of St Severinus see SEVERINUS, ST.

Euhemerism. The theory that the ancient beliefs about the gods originated from the elaboration of traditions of actual historical persons. The name is derived from Euhemerus, a Sicilian writer (c.315 BC), who developed this thesis in a book, Ἱερὰ Ἀναγραφή. Christian apologists, like *Lactantius, saw in this theory the true explanation of the origins of the Greek gods.

F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker, 1 (1923), pp. 300–13 (no. 63). H. F. van der Meer, Euhemerus van Messene (Amsterdam thesis, 1949); J. W. Schippers, De Ontwikkeling der Euhemeristische Godencritiek in de Christelijke Latijnse Literatuur (Utrecht thesis; Groningen, 1952), with summary in Eng. J. D. Cooke, 'Euhemerism: A Mediaeval Interpretation of Classical Paganism', Speculum, 2 (1927), pp. 396–410; T. S. Brown, 'Euhemerus and the Historians', HTR 39 (1946), pp. 259–74. J. Geffcken in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 572 f.; K. Thraede in RAC 6 (1966), cols. 877–90, s.v., with bibl.

eulogia (Gk. εὐλογία, 'a blessing'). The word was used in early times both actively for a 'benediction' and passively for 'something blessed'. In the latter sense it was applied to the blessed bread which was distributed to *catechumens and others after the Mass was ended, for consumption either before leaving the church or at home later. See also PAIN BÉNIT.

A. Stuiber in RAC 6 (1966), cols. 900–28, s.v., with bibl.

Eunan, St. See ADOMNÁN, ST.

Eunomius (d. 394), *Arian Bp. of Cyzicus in Mysia. Of Cappadocian peasant origin, he went to *Alexandria, where he became a pupil of *Aetius (q.v.) c.356. He returned with him to Antioch, attending the Arian synod summoned there by *Eudoxius, and was made deacon. With Eudoxius and Aetius, he was delated to the Emp. Constantius by *Basil of Ancyra on charges of conspiracy and banished to Phrygia. After the deposition of Basil in 360, however, Eudoxius was made Bp. of Constantinople and Eunomius was consecrated Bp. of Cyzicus. He accepted the see only when Eudoxius promised to restore Aetius, a promise never fulfilled. The clergy were hostile and after a successful defence of his doctrine at a synod in Constantinople, Eunomius resigned a few months later. Uncompromising support for Aetius led to an abortive arraignment for heresy by *Acacius in 361. Constantius' death and the accession of *Julian gave the party breathing-space, but under *Jovian and later Valens, the breach with Eudoxius became final. Banished and recalled under Valens, under *Theodosius Eunomius was again banished, ultimately to Dakora, where he died.

Eunomius' principal work, an Ἀπολογητικός (known as his 'First Apology'), was composed *c.*360, and is prob. the defence of his doctrine which he made at Constantinople. It was answered by St *Basil of Caesarea, whose reply survives. Eunomius issued a rejoinder, Ὑπὲρ τῆς Ἀπολογίας Ἀπολογία (his 'Second Apology') in three books, prob. in 378. St *Gregory of Nyssa's Contra Eunomium (*c.*382) was a reply to this work and constituted an elaborate attack on the whole system. Eunomius also wrote two further books on the same controversy and a commentary on Romans, which, like his letters, are now lost, and another treatise Ἔκθεσις πίστεως (383), to which Gregory replied in his Refutatio Confessionis Eunomii.

Eunomius' doctrine was *Anomoean. He taught a single supreme Substance whose simplicity is opposed to all, even virtual, distinction whether of properties or attributes. This Substance, which he called ἀγεννησία ('ungenerated Being'), he held to be absolutely intelligible. He denied that the generation of the Son took place within the Divine Nature, but regarded Him as a being immediately produced by the Father, from whom He received the creative power which caused Him to resemble the Father. Among the beings created by the Son the Holy Spirit held the first place. He is the Son's instrument for the sanctification of souls. Scripture plays a more significant role in Eunomius' system than in the writings of his forerunner Aetius, but the most prominent feature of his teaching is its stress on the importance of exactitude of doctrine for the life of faith. His views met with no lasting success and were soon forgotten. His chief importance for the history of theology lies in the reaction his theses provoked, esp. from the *Cappadocian Fathers, whose doctrine of God and of human knowledge of God largely took shape as a critique of Eunomius.

Extant Works ('First Apology', Ἔκθεσις, and Fragments pr. in full, with Eng. tr., and summary of the 'Second Apology'), ed. R. P. Vaggione (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1987). Basil's reply, together with Eunomius' 'First Apology' ed., with Fr. tr., by B. Sesboüé, SJ, and others (SC 299 and 305; 1982–3) (Eunomius' Apology, SC 305, pp. 179–299). Frags. of the 'Second Apology' are preserved in Gregory's Contra Eunomium; best edn. by W. Jaeger, Gregorii Nysseni Opera, 1–2 (Leiden, 1960). Ancient sources incl. *Photius, Cod. 138, and *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 120. *Socrates, HE 4. 7, *Philostorgius, HE 10. 6, and passim. E. Cavalcanti, Studi Eunomiani (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 202; 1976). J. *Daniélou, SJ, 'Eunome l'Arien et l'exégèse néo-platonicienne du Cratyle', Revue des Études grecques, 69 (1956), pp. 412–32. R. Mortley, From Word to Silence, 2 (Theophaneia, 31; Bonn, 1986), pp. 135–59. M. [F.] Wiles, 'Eunomius: Hair-Splitting Dialectician or Defender of the Accessibility of Salvation?', in R. [D.] Williams (ed.), The Making of Orthodoxy: Essays in Honour of Henry Chadwick (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 157–172. F. Diekamp, 'Literargeschichtliches zu der eunomianischen Kontroverse', BZ 18 (1909), pp. 1–13; L. R. Wickham, 'The Date of Eunomius' Apology: A Reconsideration', JTS NS 20 (1969), pp. 231–40. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 306–9. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 260 f. (nos. 3455–60). E. Venables in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 286–90, s.v.; M. Spanneut in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1399–405, s.v. 'Eunomius (2) de Cyzique'; L. Abramowski in RAC 6 (1966), cols. 936–47, s.v.; A. M. Ritter in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 525–8, s.v.

Euphemia, St (perhaps 4th cent.), virgin and martyr. She was greatly venerated in the E., esp. as patroness of the church where the Council met at *Chalcedon in 451; but the legends are all late and unreliable. There is a church dedicated to her in *Rome which was restored by Pope *Sergius (687–701). Her name occurs in the *Ambrosian Canon of the Mass. Feast day, 16 Sept.

AASS, Sept. 5 (1755), pp. 255–86. F. Halkin, SJ (ed.), Euphémie de Chalcédoine: Légendes byzantines, with appendix by P. Canart (Subsidia Hagiographica, 41; 1965), with refs. A. M. Schneider, 'Sankt Euphemia und das Konzil von Chalkedon', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (1951), pp. 291–302. R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1409 f., s.v. 'Euphémie (3)'.

Europe, Diocese in. A diocese of the C of E, created in 1980 by the union of the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London in Northern and Central Europe with the former diocese of Gibraltar. It is officially known as the Diocese of Gibraltar in Europe. In 1633 jurisdiction over Anglican congregations outside the British Isles was vested in the Bp. of London; from the 19th cent. dioceses and provinces were established in all parts of the world. These included the extra-provincial diocese of Gibraltar, created in 1842, with responsibility for territories bordering on the Mediterranean, incl. Turkey, and other parts of Southern Europe. The Bp. of London retained jurisdiction over Northern and Central Europe; from 1883 he delegated this responsibility to a *suffragan bishop, from 1925 styled Bp. of Fulham. In 1970 the Bp. of Fulham was also given charge of the diocese of Gibraltar. In 1980 a single diocese in Europe was formed. It is attached to the Province of *Canterbury and subject to the metropolitan jurisdiction of the Archbishop with the Bp. of London as the episcopal Visitor of the diocese. The diocesan bishop is appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury, the Bp. of London, and an episcopal member of the Standing Committee of the Anglican Consultative Council acting jointly; he himself, acting jointly with the Abp. of Canterbury and the Bp. of London, appoints his suffragan bishop. The cathedral church of the Holy Trinity in Gibraltar is the cathedral of the diocese; the collegiate church of St Paul at Valletta is a pro-cathedral, as also, since 1981, is the church of the Holy Trinity, Brussels.

Eusebian Canons and Sections. The system of tables (κανόνες) devised by *Eusebius of Caesarea to enable the reader of the Gospels to turn up passages ('sections') in the other Gospels that are parallel to the one before him or contain similar subject-matter. These tables are often prefixed or appended to the Gospels in Greek and Latin MSS, esp. down to the 13th cent. The passages themselves are numbered consecutively in the margins of the Gospels in red ink, together with an indication of the number of the table to consult. Sometimes the table was elaborately illuminated. Eusebius himself explained the system in his epistle to Carpianus, mentioning the pioneer work of *Ammonius Saccas, to whom the numbering of the sections was formerly ascribed. They were of great use in identifying passages before the now current division into chapters and verses became established.

The Canons and Eusebius' letter to Carpianus are conveniently pr. in E. *Nestle and K. Aland (eds.), Novum Testamentum Graece (27th edn., Stuttgart, 1993), pp. 84*–89*, with note, p. 79*. J. W. *Burgon, The Last Twelve Verses of the Gospel according to St Mark (1871), pp. 125–32, 295–312. E. Nestle, 'Die eusebianische Evangelien-Synopse', Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, 19 (1908), pp. 40–51, 93–114, 219–32. C. Nordenfalk, 'The Eusebian Canon-Tables: Some Textual Problems', JTS NS 35 (1984), pp. 96–104.

Eusebius (*c.*260–*c.*340), Bp. of *Caesarea, the 'Father of Church History'. He was a pupil of the scholar and martyr *Pamphilus, who trained him in the tradition of *Origen and imbued him with a hatred of *Sabellianism which remained with him all his life. After Pamphilus' death (310), he fled from the persecution to *Tyre, and then into Egypt, where he spent some months in prison. By 315 he was Bp. of Caesarea. During the *Arian controversy he supported Arius and was condemned by the Council of Antioch (324/5). At the Council of *Nicaea he was reinstated by the Emp. *Constantine when he produced the baptismal creed of Caesarea as evidence of his orthodoxy. But (despite what Eusebius says) this creed cannot have formed the basis of the *Nicene Creed (q.v.), which Eusebius ultimately accepted. His acceptance was, however, half-hearted, and he continued as one of the opponents of *Athanasius. About 327 he was offered the bishopric of Antioch, but refused it. In 335 he attended the Council of Tyre and the dedication of the church of the Resurrection at *Jerusalem, and was afterwards summoned by Constantine to advise on the case of Athanasius. He delivered the 'Tricennial Oration' in honour of the 30th anniversary of Constantine's accession to power in 336 and was active until he died.

Of Eusebius' many writings the most celebrated is his 'Ecclesiastical History', the principal source for the history of Christianity from the Apostolic Age till his own day. As with all Eusebius' writings, its literary style is poor. But it contains an immense range of material on the E. Church (he has little to say about the W.), largely in the form of long extracts taken over bodily from earlier writers. If Eusebius' interpretation of these documents was sometimes in error, this is to be explained by his want of critical judgement and not by conscious perversion of the facts. The 'History' consists of ten books, of which the last three deal in great detail with the events of his own time. Indeed, it is widely (though not universally) held that the 'History' had originally ended before 303 with book 7, and that the later books were added in successive editions, the final edition with book 10 being revised as late as *c.*325. Besides the original Greek, it survives in *Latin, *Syriac, and *Armenian versions.

Among his other historical writings are: 'The Martyrs of Palestine', an account of the *Diocletianic persecution between 303 and 311, of which he was an eye-witness; a 'Chronicle' in two books, i.e. a summary of universal history with a table of dates; and a 'Life of Constantine', a panegyric which, though excessive in its flattery, contains invaluable historical matter. His apologetic writings include a defence of Christianity 'Against Hierocles' (a pagan governor of Bithynia), and a pair of treatises, the 'Preparation for the Gospel' and the 'Demonstration of the Gospel'. The former of these (in 15 books) shows why Christians accept the Hebrew and reject the Greek tradition, while the latter (in 20 books, only partly extant) attempts to prove Christianity by the OT. The 'Preparation' contains many quotations from classical authors now lost. His other extant writings are a work on the Incarnation called 'The Theophany', two books against *Marcellus of Ancyra, a collection of OT passages foretelling the coming of Christ, commentaries on the Psalms and Isaiah (which employ the allegorical methods of Origen), a book on Problems of the Gospels, a treatise on 'Easter' (De solemnitate Paschali) in which he expounds the Eucharistic *Sacrifice, and a valuable work on Biblical topography called the Onomasticon.

His writings are repr., from various sources, in J. P. Migne, PG 19–24; crit. edn. by I. A. Heikel and others (GCS, 9 vols. in 11, 1902–75). Editio princeps of HE by R. *Stephanus (Paris, 1544); much improved text by H. *Valesius (ibid., 1659); crit. text, with Rufinus' version, by E. *Schwartz and T. *Mommsen in the GCS edn. of his works (2 vols., 1903–8); this is repr., with notes and Fr. tr. by G. Bardy, and index by P. Périchon, SJ (SC 31, 41, 55, and 73; 1952–60). Crit. edns., with Fr. tr., of the 'Preparation for the Gospel' by É. des Places, SJ, and others (ibid. 206, 215, 228, 262, 266, 292, 307, 338, and 369; 1974–91), and of 'Against Hierocles' by id. (ibid. 333; 1986). Eng. trs. of HE by K. *Lake and J. E. L. Oulton (2 vols., Loeb, 1926–32), H. J. Lawlor and J. E. L. Oulton (2 vols., London, 1927–8), R. J. Deferrari (Fathers of the Church, 19 and 29; 1953–5), and G. A. Williamson (Harmondsworth, 1965; rev. by A. Louth, 1989).

H. J. Lawlor, Eusebiana (1912); J. Stevenson, Studies in Eusebius (1929); D. S. Wallace-Hadrill, Eusebius of Caesarea (1960). H. Berkhof, Die Theologie des Eusebius von Caesarea (Amsterdam, 1939); R. Farina, L'Impero e l'Imperatore cristiano in Eusebio di Cesarea: La prima teologia politica del cristianesimo (Bibliotheca Theologica Salesiana, Series I: Fontes, 2; Zurich, 1966). R. M. Grant, Eusebius as Church Historian (Oxford, 1980). C. Luibhéid, Eusebius of Caesarea and the Arian Crisis (Dublin, 1981). T. D. Barnes, Constantine and Eusebius (1981), esp. pp. 81–188. É. des Places, Eusèbe de Césarée Commentateur (Théologie historique, 63 [1982]). P. W. P. Walker, Holy City, Holy Place? Christian Attitudes to Jerusalem and the Holy Land in the Fourth Century (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1990), esp. pp. 3–130 and 347–410. H. W. Attridge and G. Hata (eds.), Eusebius, Christianity, and Judaism (Studia Post-Biblica, 42; Leiden, etc., 1992). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 262–75 (nos. 3465–507). Bardenhewer, 3 (1912), pp. 240–62; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 217–24 and 591 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 309–45. J. B. *Lightfoot in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 308–48; E. Schwartz in PW 6 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 1370–439; J. Moreau in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1437–60, s.v. 'Eusèbe (17) de Césarée de Palestine'; id. in RAC 6 (1966), cols. 1052–88, s.v., with bibl.; J. Stevenson in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 633–6, s.v.; D. S. Wallace-Hadrill in TRE 10 (1982), cols. 537–43, s.v. See also bibl. to CONSTANTINE.

Eusebius, Bp. of Dorylaeum. See after EUSEBIUS, ST, BP. OF SAMOSATA.

Eusebius (d. *c.*359), Bp. of Emesa (Homs) in Syria. He was a native of *Edessa, a biblical exegete and writer on doctrinal subjects, of *Semiarian sympathies, and prob. a disciple of *Eusebius of Caesarea. Having declined to fill the see of *Alexandria when *Athanasius was deposed in 339, he became Bp. of Emesa shortly afterwards. Until modern times only fragments of his writings (mainly in exegetical catenae) were known. A collection of some 14 homilies (in Latin translation) of his Caesarean namesake (first pub. by J. *Sirmond, SJ, in 1643) had been conjecturally ascribed to him; this ascription was confirmed when A. *Wilmart, OSB, and later E. M. Buytaert, OFM, demonstrated that Eusebius was indeed the author of 17 homilies, also in Latin translation, ascribed to him in a Troyes MS (523), which contains two homilies of the Sirmond collection. A collection of sermons in Armenian which is ascribed to him also contains some which are held to be authentic. A collection of Latin sermons of Gallican provenance has long gone under the name of 'Eusebius'; these are believed to be derived from *Faustus of Riez (q.v.).

Crit. text of his sermons (in Latin) ed. E. M. Buytaert, OFM, in SSL, fasc. 26 (1, La Collections de Troyes; Discours 1–17), 1953; fasc. 27, 1957 (2, La Collection de Sirmond; Discours 18–29). Armenian collection ed. N. Akinian in Handes Amsorya, 70–72 (1956–8; for details see CPG 2 (1974), pp. 279 f. (no. 3531). Part of an encomium on Eusebius by *George of Laodicea is preserved in *Socrates, HE 2. 9, and *Sozomen, HE 3. 6. A. Wilmart, OSB, 'Le Souvenir d'Eusèbe d'Émèse', Anal. Boll. 38 (1920), pp. 241–84 (text, pp. 263–84). E. M. Buytaert, OFM, 'L'Authenticité des dix-sept opuscules contenus dans le MS. T. 523 sous le nom d'Eusèbe d'Émèse', RHE 43 (1948), pp. 1–89; id., L'Héritage littéraire d'Eusèbe d'Émèse: Étude critique et historique (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 24; 1949). D. Amand de Mendieta, 'La Virginité chez Eusèbe d'Émèse et l'ascétisme familial dans la première moitié du IV^e siècle', RHE 50 (1955), pp. 777–820. O. Perler, 'Pseudo-Ignatius und Eusebius von Emesa', Hist. J. 77 (1958), pp. 73–82. H. J. Lehmann, Per Piscatores: Studies in the Armenian Version of a Collection of Homilies of Eusebius of Emesa and Severian of Gabala (Århus, 1975). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 276–82 (nos. 3525–43). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 224 and 592 f. For the sermons of Eusebius 'Gallicanus', see CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 312–14 (nos. 966–966a). They are ed. J. Leroy and F. Glorie (CCSL 101, 101A and 101B; 1970–1).

Eusebius (d. *c.*342), Bp. of Nicomedia. He was the leader of the Arian party in the first half of the 4th cent. In early life he had been a disciple of *Lucian of Antioch, with *Arius as his fellow-pupil. His first see was Berytus (modern Beirut), but when Arius turned to him after his condemnation by *Alexander, Bp. of *Alexandria, Eusebius was already Bp. of Nicomedia, the imperial capital in Asia Minor. There he used his influence at court on Arius' behalf. Although at the Council of *Nicaea (325), he signed the Creed, shortly afterwards he was exiled because of his support for Arius. On his return in 328/9 he led the struggle against *Athanasius, securing his deposition at the Synod of Tyre (335). In 337 he baptized the dying *Constantine. He was translated from Nicomedia to *Constantinople in 339, and in 341 he assembled the Dedication Council at *Antioch which marked the beginning of the ascendancy of Arianism in the Councils of the Church. His followers were commonly known by his name (οἱ περὶ Εὐσέβιον).

A. Lichtenstein, Eusebius von Nikomedien: Versuch einer Darstellung seiner Persönlichkeit und seines Lebens unter besonderer Berücksicht seiner Führerschaft im arianischen Streite (1903). G. Bardy, Recherches sur Saint Lucien d'Antioche et son école (Études de Théologie Historique, 1936), pp. 296–315. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 190–3. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 7 f. (nos. 2045–56). G. Bareille in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1539–51, s.v. 'Eusèbe (6) de Nicomédie'; M. Spanneut in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1466–71, s.v. 'Eusèbe (24) de Nicomédie'.

Eusebius, St (d. 371), Bp. of Vercelli from 340. He was born in Sardinia. A strong supporter of orthodoxy in the *Arian conflict, at the request of Pope *Liberius he accompanied St *Lucifer of Cagliari on his embassy to Constantius in 354. After the Synod of Milan (355) he was exiled to the E., whence he did not return until the reign of *Julian (362). He lived with his clergy at Vercelli under rule and has hence been sometimes regarded by the *canons regular as one of their founders (with St *Augustine of Hippo). Three of his letters have survived, and the ancient *Old Latin Gospel Codex in the cathedral library of Vercelli (cod. a) is ascribed, though improbably, to Eusebius' own hand. He also made a Lat. trans. of *Eusebius of Caesarea's 'Commentary on the Pss.', now lost. A treatise, De Trinitate, traditionally attributed to St *Athanasius, has been ascribed to him, though this ascription has been widely contested. Feast day, 2 Aug. (until 1969, 16 Dec.).

J. P. Migne, PL 12. 9–972 (on the Codex, 9–948; text of Epistolae, 947–54). Crit. edn. of his three letters, of certain letters addressed to Eusebius, the De Trinitate, and other material, by V. Bulhart (CCSL 9, 1957, pp. 1–205). J. S. Ferrerius, S. Eusebii Vercellensis . . . ejusque in Episcopatu Successorum Vita (Rome, 1602). CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 34–6 (nos. 105–11e). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 366 f. and 626. V. C. De Clercq in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1477–83, s.v. 'Eusèbe (33) de Verceil', with bibl.

Eusebius, St (d. 380), Bp. of Samosata by 360. He supported the election of *Melitius to the see of *Antioch and shared his subsequent opposition to *Arianism. Later he became closely associated with St *Basil of Caesarea, from whom he was the recipient of several letters, and St *Gregory of Nazianzus. In 374 he was exiled for his orthodoxy to Thrace, but four years later recalled by the Emp. Gratian. He was killed by an Arian woman who threw a brick at his head. Feast day in E., 22 June; in W., 21 June.

Theodoret, HE 5. 4. 8. AASS, Jan. 4 (1707), pp. 235–42. Syr. Life, perh. based on Gk. sources, in P. Bedjan (ed.), Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, 6 (1896), pp. 335–77. F. Halkin, SJ, 'Une Vie grecque d'Eusèbe de Samosate', Anal. Boll. 85 (1967), pp. 5–15; P. Devos, SJ, 'Le Dossier syriaque de S. Eusèbe de Samosate', ibid., pp. 195–240, incl. Fr. tr. of Syr. Life. H. R. Reynolds in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 369–72, s.v. 'Eusebius (77), bishop of Samosata'; M. Spanneut in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1473–5, s.v. 'Eusèbe (29) de Samosate'.

Eusebius (mid-5th cent.), Bp. of Dorylaeum. He was an ardent advocate of theological orthodoxy. In 429, at that time a lawyer of *Constantinople, he made a public protest against the teaching of *Nestorius in a 'Contestatio' (Διαμαρτυρία) addressed to the clergy of Constantinople. By 448 he had become Bp. of Dorylaeum in Phrygia Salutaris, in which year he led the attack on the heresy of *Eutyches at the 'Home Synod' at Constantinople. In 449 he was deposed and exiled by the '*Latrocinium' of *Ephesus. After the accession of the Emp. *Marcian (450), the theological policy of the court was reversed. Eusebius was reinstated in his see and took a prominent part at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where he assisted in drafting its Definition of the Faith.

His Contestatio in Mansi, 4 (1740), cols. 1007–12. Early Lat. version in J. P. Migne, PG 84. 581–3. Crit. edn. of Gk. in E. *Schwartz, ACO 1. 1. 1 (1927), pp. 101 f. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 152 f. (nos. 5940–44). G. Bareille in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1532–7, s.v., with bibl.

Eustace, St, also 'Eustachius', early Christian martyr. His very existence is doubtful. Acc. to 7th-cent. legends he was a Roman general under Hadrian and converted by a vision of a stag with a crucifix between its antlers, which occurred at Guadagnolo near Praeneste (Palestrina). (Details from the story were later incorporated in the legend of St *Hubert, q.v.) He and his family are said to have been later roasted to death in a brazen bull. Some of his relics appeared in the 12th cent. in *Paris, where they were destroyed by the *Huguenots in 1567. He is one of the 14 so-called *Auxiliary Saints and is the patron of the city of Madrid and (with St Hubert) of hunters. Feast day, 20 Sept. (dropped in the W. in 1969).

Legends of St Eustace and his family in AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 106–37. A. Monteverdi, La leggenda di S. Eustachio (Bergamo, 1909); id., I testi della leggenda di S. Eustachio (ibid., 1910). H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'La Légende de saint Eustache', Académie Royale de Belgique. Bulletins de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Brussels, 1919, pp. 175–210, with full bibl. refs.; repr. in Mélanges d'hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, 42; 1966), pp. 212–39. O. Engels, 'Die hagiographischen Texte Papst Gelasius' II. in der Überlieferung der Eustachius-, Erasmus- und Hypolistuslegende', Hist. J. 76 (1957), pp. 118–33, esp. pp. 119–25, with refs. R. Aubert in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 6 f., s.v. 'Eustache (1)', with bibl.

Eustathius, St, Bp. of *Antioch from *c.*324 to *c.*327. A native of Side, he was Bp. of Beroea (modern Aleppo) before his translation to Antioch. At the Council of *Nicaea (325) he was given a position of honour, and on his return to his diocese banished many of his clergy suspected of *Arianism. His uncompromising support for the Nicene position brought him into conflict with, among others, *Eusebius of Caesarea, who charged him with *Sabellianism. Eustathius' deposition was secured at a council in Antioch (perhaps as early as 326) and he was banished by *Constantine to Thrace, where he remained until his death (see MELITIAN SCHISMS (2)). He was famed for his eloquence. Of his writings only 'de Engastrimutho' (against *Origen) survives complete, but there are several fragments of, and references to, Eustathius' other works. He criticized Arian Christology for denying Christ's human soul, thereby foreshadowing later Antiochene objections to *Apollinarianism. Feast day, 16 July.

Collection of texts and frags. in J. P. Migne, PG 17. 609–1066. The sermon pr. in F. Cavallera, S. Eustathii Episcopi Antiochensis in Lazarum, Mariam et Martham Homilia Christologica (Paris, 1905; with useful collections of frags.), is prob. not the work of Eustathius. More recent edn. of frags., with discussion, in M. Spanneut, Recherches sur les écrits d'Eustathe d'Antioche, avec une édition nouvelle des fragments dogmatiques et exégétiques (Mémoires et Travaux publiés par des professeurs des Facultés Catholiques de Lille, 55; 1948). Crit. edn. of 'De Engastrimutho' in E. Klostermann, Origenes, Eustathius und Gregor von Nyssa über die Hexe von Endor (Kleine Texte, 83; 1912), pp. 16–62. Crit. reconstruction of his Ep. to *Alexander of Alexandria on the subject of *Melchizedek in B. *Altaner, 'Die Schrift Περὶ τοῦ Μελχισεδέκ des Eustathios von Antiocheia', BZ 40 (1940), pp. 30–47, repr. in his Kleine patristische Schriften (TU 83; 1967), pp. 343–62. F. Scheidweiler, 'Die Fragmente des Eustathios von Antiocheia', BZ 48 (1955), pp. 73–85. H. Chadwick, 'The Fall of Eustathius of Antioch', JTS 49 (1948), pp. 27–35, repr. in his History and Thought of the Early Church (1982), no. 13. On his theology, R. V. Sellers, Eustathius of Antioch and his Place in the Early History of Christian Doctrine (1928). M. Spanneut, 'La Position théologique d'Eustathe d'Antioche', JTS NS 5 (1954), pp. 220–4. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 243–53 (nos. 3350–98). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 309 f. and 613. M. Spanneut in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 13–23, s.v. 'Eustathe (2) d'Antioche'.

Eustathius (*c.*300–after 377), Bp. of Sebaste in Pontus from *c.*357. In his youth he was a pupil of *Arius at *Alexandria, and throughout his life vacillated in his attitude to the *Nicene cause. At the synods of *Ancyra (358) and Lampsacus (364) he defended *homoiousian doctrines. His main interests, however, esp. in his earlier years, were in the *monastic movement, in the organization of which he took a prominent part. In this connection he seems to have greatly influenced St *Basil the Great, with whom for a time he was on terms of close friendship, in the foundation of his rule. In his later years he became the leading spirit in Asia Minor in furthering the *Macedonian heresy.

F. *Loofs, Eustathius von Sebaste und die Chronologie der Basilius-Briefe: Eine patristische Studie (1898); J. Gribomont, OSB, 'Le Monachisme au IV^e s. en Asie Mineure: de Gangres au Messalianisme', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 2 (TU 64; 1957), pp. 400–15; id., 'Eustathe le Philosophe et les voyages du jeune Basile de Césarée', RHE 54 (1959), pp. 115–24. S. Salaville, AA, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1565–71, s.v., with bibl.; J. Gribomont in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 26–33, s.v. 'Eustathe (7) de Sébaste'; id., in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1708–12, s.v. 'Eustathe (2) de Sébaste'.

Eustochium, St Julia (370–*c.*419), a Roman virgin of noble descent. With her mother, St *Paula, she came under the influence of St *Jerome, who counselled them in an attempt to lead the life of the Egyptian hermits in the midst of Rome. A letter (Jerome, Ep. 22) which he addressed to her on the subject of virginity created such a stir that they were obliged to leave the city (385). After visiting Syria and Egypt on the way, they settled in *Bethlehem, where they built four monasteries, of which Eustochium assumed the direction on her mother's death in 404. Feast day, 28 Sept.

In addition to Ep. 22 (PL 22. 394–425), St Jerome addressed to Eustochium Epp. 31 (ibid. 445 f.) and 108 (ibid. 878–906); a letter from Paula and Eustochium is pr. among Jerome's Epp. (no. 46; ibid. 483–92); further refs. incl. those in Epp. 54 (ibid. 550–60) and 66 (ibid. 639–47). AASS, Sept. 7 (1760), pp. 630–45. W. H. Fremantle in DCB 2 (1880), p. 392, s.v., with further refs.; P. Antin, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1715–18, s.v.

Euthalius. The reputed author of a collection of editorial material found in many MSS of the Greek NT. The editor's work, which consisted of (1) an arrangement of the text in short lines as an aid to reading it aloud, (2) a system of references to quotations from other parts of the Bible, and (3) a division of the Books into chapters, with summary headings of their contents, extended over the Pauline Epp., the Acts, and the Catholic Epp. Attached to the Euthalian prologue to the Pauline Epp. is a 'Martyrium Pauli' which appears to date from either 458 (L. A. Zacagni) or 396 (F. C. *Conybeare); but the reasons for identifying the author of this item with that of the rest of the Euthalian material now seem insufficient, and J. A. *Robinson has argued that Euthalius is to be dated in the middle of the 4th cent. Virtually nothing further is known of him beyond the fact that he is described as 'a deacon'. Adequate grounds for identifying him with the author of a long confession of faith (7th cent.), ascribed to 'Euthalius, Bp. of Sulce', are wanting.

L. A. Zacagni, Collectanea Monumentorum Veteris Ecclesiae Graecae et Latinae, 1 (Rome, 1698), pp. 401–708, mostly repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 85. 619–790. J. A. Robinson, 'Euthaliana', Texts and Studies, 3. 3 (Cambridge, 1895); E. von Dobschütz, 'Euthaliusstudien', ZKG 19 (1899), pp. 107–54; F. C. Conybeare, 'The Date of Euthalius', ZNTW 5 (1904), pp. 39–52; G. Zuntz, 'Euthalius = Euzoius?', VC 7 (1953), pp. 16–22; J. W. Marchand, 'The Gothic Evidence for "Euthalian Matter" ', HTR 49 (1956), pp. 159–67. S. [P.] Brock, 'The Syriac Euthalian Material and the Philoxenian Version of the NT', ZNTW 70 (1979), pp. 120–30. J. N. Birdsall, 'The Euthalian material and its Georgian versions', Oriens Christianus, 68 (1984), pp. 170–95. CPG 2 (1974), p. 301 (nos. 3640–2).

euthanasia. See DYING, CARE OF THE.

Euthymius, St (377–473), monk. A native of Melitene in Lesser Armenia, where he was ordained priest, he came to *Jerusalem in 405. After living as a monk and solitary in several places near Jerusalem, he finally established *c.*426 a *lavra at Khan-el-Ahmar. In the period immediately following *Chalcedon (451), he was one of the very few in Palestine who remained unwavering in his support of the Council. He exercised a formative influence upon Palestinian monasticism, and among his many disciples was St *Sabas. Feast day, 20 Jan.

The principal authority is the Life by *Cyril of Scythopolis; crit. edn. by E. *Schwartz, in TU 49 (pt. 2; 1939), pp. 3–85; Fr. tr. by A.-J. Festugière, Les Moines d'orient, 3. 1 (1962). R. Génier, OP, Vie de Saint Euthyme le Grand (1909). S. Vailhé, AA, 'Saint Euthyme le Grand', Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 12 (1907), pp. 298–312, 337–55; 13 (1908), pp. 181–91, 225–46; 14 (1909), pp. 189–202, 256–63. D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 83–100. J. Darrouzès in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1720–2, s.v. 'Euthyme (2)'.

Euthymius (mid-11th cent.), monk of the Περίβλεπτον monastery at *Constantinople. He wrote a polemical work against the Phundagiagitae, a sect of the *Bogomils, which was prob. known to *Euthymius Zigabenus, under whose name it survived, and with whom he has long been confused. He was prob. also the author of the so-called 'First Invective' against the Armenians.

The text of his 'Contra Phundagiagitas' in J. P. Migne, PG 131. 47–58, is incomplete; better edn. in G. Ficker, Die Phundagiagiten (Leipzig, 1908), pp. 3–86. The 'First Invective' is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 132. 1155–1218, under the name of 'Isaac the Catholicos'. V. Grumel, 'Les Invectives contre des Arméniens du "Catholicos Isaac" ', Revue des études byzantines, 14 (1956), pp. 174–91. Beck (1959), pp. 532 f.

Euthymius Zigabenus (early 12th cent.), Byzantine theologian. Nothing is known of his life, except that at the command of the Emp. Alexis Comnenus, he wrote a work against all heresies, the Πανοπλία Δογματική. In this the old heresies are refuted by an array of patristic texts; the new ones, comprising the last 6 of 28 chapters, are treated more independently. The most interesting is the section (27) on the *Bogomils, our knowledge of whom rests almost entirely on this and the account by Euthymius, monk of the Peribleptos (see previous entry). The work was supplemented later by the Θησαυρὸς Ὀρθοδοξίας of *Nicetas Acominatos (d. *c.*1217). Euthymius' other important works are his extensive commentaries on the Psalms, the Four Gospels, and the Epp. of St Paul, in which he utilizes mainly patristic sources, esp. St *Chrysostom. His works are remarkable esp. for the account they take of the literal sense of the Bible, an achievement unusual among the later Greek exegetes.

The Gk. text of his 'Panoplia Dogmatica', was first pub. by Metrophanes Gregoras (Tergovist, 1710); of his Comm. on Pss. by A. Bongiovanni (Venice, 1763); of his Comm. on Gospels by C. F. Matthaei (3 vols. bound in 4, Leipzig, 1792); and of his Comm. on Pauline Epp. by N. Kalogeras, Abp. of Patras (2 vols., Athens, 1887). Collected edn. in J. P. Migne, PG 128–131. More complete text of 'Panoplia Dogmatica', 27, in G. Ficker, Die Phundagiagiten (Leipzig, 1908), pp. 87–111. J. Wickert, 'Die Panoplia Dogmatica des Euthymios Zigabenos', OC 8 (1911), pp. 278–388. M. Jugie, AA, 'La Vie et les œuvres d'Euthyme Zigabène', ÉO 15 (1912), pp. 215–25. Modern study (in Greek) by A. N. Papavassiliou (2nd edn., Nicosia, 1979). Krumbacher, pp. 82–4; Beck (1959), pp. 614–16, with bibl. refs. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1577–82; G. Podskalsky in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 557 f., both s.v.

Eutyches (*c.*378–454), heresiarch. He was *archimandrite of a large monastery at *Constantinople, with great influence at court through the eunuch Chrysaphius. His keen opposition to *Nestorianism led him to be accused in 448 by *Eusebius of Dorylaeum of the opposite heresy of confounding the two natures in Christ (see CHRISTOLOGY). Deposed by *Flavian, Abp. of Constantinople, after synodical action, he then appealed to Pope *Leo for support, and by court influence secured a retrial and acquittal at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus in 449. Meanwhile, Leo repudiated his doctrines in his '*Tome'. A change of emperor in 450 turned the scales against him, and at the Council of *Chalcedon in 451 he was deposed and exiled. Eutyches affirmed that there was only one 'nature' (φύσις) in Christ 'after the union', and denied that His manhood was consubstantial with ours, a view which was held to be incompatible with our redemption through Him. Although the *Oriental Orthodox Churches share his language of 'one nature after the union', they explicitly condemned him for his denial that Christ's human nature was consubstantial with ours. See also MONOPHYSITISM.

E. *Schwartz, 'Der Prozess des Eutyches', Sb. (Bayr.) Jhrg. 1929, Heft 5 [texts with notes and comm.]. R. Draguet, 'La Christologie d'Eutychès d'après les Actes du Synode de Flavien (448)', Byzantion, 6 (1931), pp. 441–57; B. Emmi, OP, 'Leone ed Eutiche', Angelicum, 29 (1952), pp. 3–42. T. Camelot, OP, in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 229–42, and H. Bacht, ibid. 2 (1953), pp. 197–222 and 224–8. M. Jugie in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1582–609, s.v. 'Eutychès et eutychianisme', with full bibl.; J. H. Crehan, SJ, in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 243–6, s.v.; L. R. Wickham in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 558–65, s.v. For further bibl., see s.v. MONOPHYSITISM.

Eutychianism. See MONOPHYSITISM.

Evagrius Ponticus (346–99), spiritual writer. A native of Pontus, he was ordained deacon by St *Gregory of Nazianzus and became a noted preacher at *Constantinople. In 382 he departed to the *Nitrian desert, where he became a friend and disciple of St *Macarius of Egypt. Here he spent the rest of his life. From 553 onwards he was condemned several times for *Origenistic views.

Recent studies show that he occupies a central place in the history of Christian spirituality. The first monk to write extensively, he deeply influenced *Palladius, *Cassian, *Diadochus of Photike, and *Maximus the Confessor. Influenced by, and developing, Origenistic metaphysics, he worked out an account of the progress of the monk (or hermit) through ἀπάθεια (see APATHEIA) to contemplation, showing great psychological insight. His writings (largely lost or extant only in Lat. or Syr. translations) include his 'Monachos' or 'Practicos' (on the spiritual life of the monk); 'Gnostic Chapters' (a more advanced treatment of the same subject), prefaced by a brief work called The Gnostic; a treatise 'On Prayer' (at one time attributed to *Nilus of Ancyra); a collection of Apophthegms; and several letters. He also produced *scholia on Pss., Prov., and other biblical Books, which have only been discovered (sometimes only in part) in modern times.

Works (incomplete) in J. P. Migne, PG 40. 1213–86; also ibid. 79. 1165–1200 (De Oratione of 'Nilus'). W. Frankenberg, Evagrius Ponticus in Abh. (Gött.), NF 13. 2, 1912, pp. 49–635 (Syr. texts, with new Gk. retranslation). J. Muyldermans, Evagriana Syriaca: Textes inédits du British Museum et de la Vaticane (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 31; 1952), with Fr. tr.; Syr. text and Fr. tr. of Kephalaia Gnostica ed. A. Guillaumont (PO 28. 1; 1958). Crit. edns. of Monachos, with introd. and Fr. tr., by A. and C. Guillaumont (SC 170–1; 1971); of The Gnostic, with Fr. tr., by idd. (ibid. 356; 1989); and of scholia on Prov., with Fr. tr., by P. Géhin (ibid. 340; 1987). Eng. trs. of Monachos and 'On Prayer' by J. E. Bamberger, OCSO (Cistercian Studies Series, 4; '1970' [1972]). R. Melcher, Der 8. Brief des hl. Basilius ein Werk des Evagrius Ponticus (1923). J. Muyldermans, A travers la tradition manuscrite d'Évagre le Pontique: Essai sur les manuscrits grecs conservés à la Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 3; 1932), and other works of this author. S. Marsili, OSB, Giovanni Cassiano ed Evagrio Pontico: Dottrina sulla carità e contemplazione (Studia Anselmiana, 5; 1936). I. Hausherr, 'Le Traité de l'oraison d'Évagre le Pontique', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 35 (1959), pp. 121–46, 241–65, 361–85; 36 (1960), pp. 3–35, 137–87, repr. as Les Leçons d'un Contemplatif (1960). A. Guillaumont, Les 'Képhalaia Gnostica' d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens (Patristica Sorbonensia, 5; 1962). J. Driscoll, OSB, The 'Ad Monachos' of Evagrius Ponticus: Its Structure and a Select Commentary (Studia Anselmiana, 104; 1991). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 49–53; A. Louth, Origins of the Christian Mystical Tradition (ibid., 1981), pp. 100–13. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 78–97 (nos. 2430–82). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 265–7 and 601 f. J. Lemaitre, R. Roques, and M. Villier in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1775–85, s.v. 'Contemplation'; A. and C. Guillaumont ibid. 4 (1960), cols. 1731–44, s.v.; idd. in RAC 6 (1966), cols. 1088–107, s.v.

Evagrius Scholasticus (*c.*536–600), Church historian. A native of Coele-Syria, he was a lawyer by profession. His 'History', which is in six books, extends from the Council of *Ephesus (431) to 594, and thus continues the Histories of *Eusebius and his successors. Though a poor theologian and a credulous gatherer of legends, he made use of several excellent sources and, like Eusebius of Caesarea, incorporated extracts from them.

'Ecclesiastica Historica' with Lat. tr., ed. H. *Valesius and W. Reading in Historiae Ecclesiasticae, 3 (Cambridge, 1720), pp. 249–473; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (2). 2415–906. Crit. edn. by J. Bidez and L. Parmentier ('Byzantine Texts', London, 1898). Eng. tr., with short account of Evagrius and his writings, together with *Theodoret, in Bohn's Ecclesiastical Library (1854), pp. 251–467. Fr. tr., with notes, by A.-J. Festugière, OP, in Byzantion, 45 (1975), pp. 188–488. P. Allen, Evagrius Scholasticus, the Church Historian (SSL 41; 1981). CPG 3 (1979), p. 398 (no. 7500). Bardenhewer, 5 (1932), pp. 119 f.; G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, 1 (2nd edn., Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, 10; 1958), pp. 257–9. A. de Halleux in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 1495–8, s.v. [in Suppl.]; M. J. Higgins in NCE 5 (1967), p. 645, s.v.

Evangeliary. (1) A book containing the complete text of the Four Gospels. (2) The liturgical book containing the portions of the Four Gospels which are read as the 'Gospel' at the *Eucharist, arranged acc. to their place in the ecclesiastical calendar. When in the 10th cent. the practice of incorporating the text of the 'Gospel' into the *Sacramentaries began to become general, the Evangeliaries lost much of their importance, though in recent years they have in some places been brought back into prominence. The 1969 Ordo Missae recommended that the Gospel Book be carried in procession and placed on the lectern before the Gospel was read.

W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, 2. The Roman Gospel Lectionary (Alcuin Club Collections, 30; 1934).

Evangelical Alliance. An interdenominational body, formed in London in 1846, to 'associate and concentrate the strength of an enlightened *Protestantism against the encroachments of *Popery and *Puseyism, and to promote the interests of a Scriptural Christianity'. Those responsible for its foundation included E. *Bickersteth and the Congregational minister John Angell James (1795–1859). It was the only definitely ecumenical organization which arose out of the evangelical movement of the 19th cent. It received support in varying degrees from almost the whole of the Protestant world, though the keen controversy on *slavery at its first meeting delayed the institution of a branch in the USA till 1867. Friedrich Wilhelm IV, who strongly favoured it, summoned a large meeting to Berlin in Sept. 1857; but it never gained a real hold in Germany, where its place was taken by the '*Evangelische Bund' (q.v.). Much work was done by the Alliance in the 19th cent. for oppressed religious minorities in Europe. In the 20th cent. its influence greatly declined and the American branch was dissolved in 1944. In 1951, however, the American National Association of Evangelicals and the British Evangelical Alliance held a joint conference at Woadschoten in the Netherlands. At this meeting the World Evangelical Fellowship was founded. It is composed of national interdenominational bodies of evangelical background, and has a statement of faith close to that of the Evangelical Alliance. From the first the Evangelical Alliance has observed a week early in January as an annual week of prayer.

J. A. Arnold, 'These Fifty Years. A Brief Epitome of the History of the Evangelical Alliance', in Jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance: Proceedings of the Tenth International Conference held in London June–July 1896 (1897), pp. 43–64. J. W. Ewing, Goodly Fellowship: A Centenary Tribute to the Life and Work of the World's Evangelical Alliance, 1846–1946 [1946]; J. E. Orr, The Second Evangelical Awakening in Britain (1949). R. Rouse and S. C. Neill, A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1 (2nd edn., 1967), esp. pp. 255–7 and 318–24. J. Cochlovius in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 650–6, s.v. 'Evangelische Allianz'. Reports of the General Conferences were usually issued under the title The Religious Condition of Christendom.

Evangelical Association. See following entry.

Evangelical Church. A small Protestant religious body, sometimes known as the Albright Brethren from their founder Jacob Albright (1759–1808), a native of Pennsylvania and a member of the *Lutheran Church. After an experience of conversion in 1791, Albright associated himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church and in 1796 began to preach among the Germans living in his state. Failing to win the support of his Methodist leaders, he created for his followers an independent organization. At a conference in 1809, his followers agreed to be known as the 'So-called Albright People', and from 1816 as the 'Evangelical Association'. About 1890 internal controversies led to a schism, but this was healed in 1922, and the reunited body called itself the 'Evangelical Church'. In 1946 it joined with another Church of similar background in the USA, the United Brethren in Christ, to form the Evangelical United Brethren Church; this itself merged with the Methodist Church in 1968 to form the United Methodist Church.

W. W. Orwig, Geschichte der Evangelischen Gemeinschaft, 1 [to 1845] (all pub., Cleveland, Oh. 1857; Eng. tr., ibid., 1858); R. Yaekel, Albright and his Co-Labourers (ibid., 1883); id., History of the Evangelical Association (2 vols., ibid., 1892–5). S. P. Spreng, 'History of the Evangelical Association', in The American Church History Series, 12 (New York, 1894), pp. 383–439. A. Stapleton, Annals of the Evangelical Association of North America and History of the United Evangelical Church (Harrisburg, Pa., 1900); R. W. Albright, A History of the Evangelical Church (ibid., 1942). F. A. Norwood, The Story of American Methodism (Nashville and New York [1974]), esp. pp. 111–18 and 419–25. R. Kücklich, Die evangelische Gemeinschaft in Europa: III. Festschrift zum 75-jähr. Jubiläum ihres Bestehens, 1850 1925 (1925).

Evangelical Church in Germany (Evangelische Kirche in Deutschsland). The federation of autonomous Protestant territorial Churches (Landeskirchen) in Germany.

A precursor of the federation may be seen in the Eisenach Conference of the governing bodies of the territorial Churches (1852–1903); in 1903 the regional Churches formed a closer link through the German Evangelical Churches Committee, in 1922 changed into the German Evangelical Church Federation, which existed until Nazi pressure in 1933 led to the establishment of the German Evangelical Church and the conflict between the *German-Christians and the *Confessing Church over its government. Leaders of the Confessing Church played a prominent part in the establishment of the Evangelical Church in Germany after the end of the Second World War.

Seven of the 27 member Churches were already united in the Evangelical Church of the Union, which owed its origin to the attempt of King Frederick William III of Prussia in 1817 to unite the Lutheran and Reformed Churches in his province. Within these Churches, which form the largest single unit in the Evangelical Church in Germany, there is full sacramental fellowship, but the strictly Lutheran Churches are not yet officially in full communion with them or with the other smaller Reformed bodies. In 1948 the Lutheran regional Churches formed the United Evangelical Lutheran Church of Germany within the Evangelical Church in Germany. In 1969 the 8 Landeskirchen of E. Germany were forced to withdraw from the Evangelical Church in Germany and formed their own League of Evangelical Churches. A fresh attempt was then made to reach a greater measure of unity between the remaining (W. German) members of the Evangelical Church in Germany. This was based on the so-called *Leuenberg Concord of 1973 which was adopted by the Protestant Churches in E. and W. Europe. However, although the central bodies of the Evangelical Church in Germany passed the reform, it failed to achieve ratification in all the member Churches. Following the unification of Germany in 1990, steps were taken to unite the two Evangelical Churches, and in 1991 the Landeskirchen of the former German Democratic Republic rejoined those of the Evangelical Church in Germany.

The Evangelical Church in Germany is governed by a Council, a Conference of Churches, and a Synod. These central bodies have discussed major matters of public policy ever since 1945, incl. German rearmament, nuclear weapons, and reconciliation with Germany's eastern neighbours. The legacy of the 1930s has made the question of the proper political role of the Church an acute one. The Evangelical Church in Germany has been at the centre of political controversy but has reaffirmed its belief that the Church should not be bound to a particular political view.

H. Brunotte, Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland: Geschichte, Organisation und Gestalt der EKD (Gütersloh, 1964). F. Spotts, The Churches and Politics in Germany (Middletown, Conn., 1973), passim. H. Rudolph, Evangelische Kirche und Vertriebene 1945 bis 1972 (Arbeiten zur kirchlichen Zeitgeschichte, Reihe B, 11–12; 1984–5). R. F. Goeckel, The Lutheran Church and the East German State: Political Conflict and Change under Ulbricht and Honecker (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1990). E. Wilkens in Evangelisches Staatslexikon, ed. H. Kunst and others (2nd edn., 1975), cols. 639–50; W.-D. Hauschild in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 656–77, both s.v. 'Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland'. Annual reports on the Evangelical Church in Germany (and until 1990 on the League of Evangelical Churches in the GDR) appear in Kirchliches Jahrbuch für die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland (formerly Kirchliches Jahrbuch für die evangelischen Landeskirchen Deutschlands) (Gütersloh, 1948 ff.).

Evangelical Counsels. See COUNSELS OF PERFECTION.

Evangelicalism. (1) In a wider sense the term 'Evangelical' has been applied since the Reformation to the Protestant Churches by reason of their claim to base their teaching pre-eminently on the 'Gospel'. The Church created in Prussia in 1817 by the union of *Lutheran and *Reformed was officially known as the 'Evangelical Church' (Evangelische Kirche). A more recent instance is the inclusive designation of all the Protestant Churches of Germany as the 'Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland' (see EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN GERMANY).

(2) In Germany and Switzerland, the word 'Evangelical' (evangelisch) was long in use, esp. of the Lutheran group of Protestant Churches as contrasted with the *Calvinist ('Reformed') bodies.

(3) In the C of E the term is currently applied to the school which lays special stress on conversion and salvation by faith in the atoning death of Christ. The group originated in the 18th cent. to bring reality into religion when a low tone pervaded English life and many clergy were negligent and worldly. It has several points of contact with the *Methodist movement, esp. in the more Calvinistic form of G. *Whitefield. The most influential leaders of the early period were H. *Venn (1725–97) and J. *Newton (1725–1807); they encouraged the Evangelical clergy to respect parochial boundaries and not to separate from the C of E. To a rather later period belonged C. *Simeon (1759–1836). He made Evangelicalism a force at *Cambridge and indirectly at the other universities, and prepared clergy and laity for work in the parishes and overseas; those who came under his influence included H. *Martyn (1781–1812). Simeon also bought livings, esp. in towns, and founded a body of trustees to administer Church patronage in accordance with Evangelical principles. At the same time the Elland Society built up a large fund to finance Evangelical ordinands. Various clerical societies kept Evangelicals together. Dislike of their religious earnestness led to much opposition, but the piety and humanity of the Evangelicals gradually won them a large following. In parliament W. *Wilberforce (1759–1833) led a group known as 'the Saints'; they campaigned vigorously for the abolition of the *slave trade and the extension of missionary enterprise in *India. The Church Missionary Society (*CMS) and the Colonial (later Commonwealth) and Continental Church Society (*CCCS) both owe their origin to the Evangelicals. They were also involved in the early growth of the *British and Foreign Bible Society.

From about 1830 Anglican Evangelicalism narrowed and there were divisions between the extreme and moderate Evangelicals, esp. over belief in the return of Christ before the millennium. There was a general acceptance of belief in the verbal inspiration of the Bible and resistance to the findings of science and biblical criticism. The more extreme views found expression in the Record*, under the control of Alexander Haldane (1810–82); its contributors included H. M'Neile (1795–1879) of Liverpool, H. Stowell (1799–1865) of Salford, and F. *Close (1797–1882) of Cheltenham. More moderate views were found in the Christian Observer (1802–77), whose first editor was Z. *Macaulay. E. *Bickersteth (1786–1850) and H. *Venn (1796–1873) of the CMS were among the leaders of moderate Evangelicalism. On the positive side the first Evangelical bishops, H. *Ryder (1777–1836), J. B. *Sumner (1780–1862), and C. R. *Sumner (1790–1874), raised the standard of episcopal care in their dioceses, esp. in the administration of *Ordination and *Confirmation. Scripture readers from the London City Mission (founded in 1835) and the *CPAS worked effectively in the inner cities. Lord *Shaftesbury (1801–85) initiated the Factory Acts. The centre of Evangelicalism is the home and family, and from Evangelical families came many Christian leaders, not all of whom remained Evangelical. Early rising and family prayers have been at the heart of Evangelical piety.

Anglican Evangelicalism changed direction again under the American influence of the revivalist movements of the 1870s and 1880s and of the *Keswick Convention. Foreign missions became the priority. With the stress on personal consecration and world evangelism, social and political reform disappeared from the Evangelical programme and was discouraged in university Christian unions. The most important Evangelical figure of this period was Bp. J. C. *Ryle (1816–1900).

In the 20th cent. there has been a deep division among Evangelicals. *Liberal Evangelicals accepted the findings of biblical criticism and in 1923 formed the *Anglican Evangelical Group Movement. Conservative Evangelicals, on the other hand, stood firm on the authority of Scripture and its verbal inspiration, and in 1922 the *BCMS broke away from the CMS on this issue. Max Warren (1904–77), who in 1942 became secretary of the CMS, did all that he could to liberalize Evangelical attitudes in the face of the growing influence of the more *Fundamentalist American Evangelicals; he sought to promote Evangelical research and writing on a broad basis by the formation of the 'Evangelical Fellowship for Theological Literature' (1942–72). In the post-war period the Conservative Evangelicals, under the leadership of John Stott (b. 1921), have experienced a revival which has made them one of the most influential elements in the C of E. The 'crusades' of Billy *Graham, the Charismatic Movement, a serious interest in academic theology, and experiments in new forms of worship and evangelism have all contributed to this growth. The first National Evangelical Anglican Conference at Keele in 1967 broke the isolation of a century. Since then Conservative Evangelicals have played a full part in the General *Synod and other councils of the C of E, often working with *Anglo-Catholics in opposition to liberalism. They now take part in the *Ecumenical Movement, and there has been a new concern for politics and social justice and a more positive attitude towards the enjoyment of culture.

D. W. Bebbington, Evangelicalism in Modern Britain: A History from the 1730s to the 1980s (1989); K. Hylson-Smith, Evangelicalism in the Church of England 1734–1984 (Edinburgh, 1989). L. E. Binns, The Early Evangelicals: A Religious and Social Study (1953); C. I. Foster, An Errand of Mercy: The Evangelical United Front, 1780–1837 (Chapel Hill, NC [1960]); F. K. Brown, Fathers of the Victorians: The Age of Wilberforce (Cambridge, 1961). K. [J.] Heasman, Evangelicals in Action: An Appraisal of their Social Work in the Victorian Era (1962); [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church, 1 (1966), pp. 440–55; I. [C.] Bradley, The Call to Seriousness: The Evangelical Impact upon the Victorians (1976); M. [M.] Hennell, Sons of the Prophets: Evangelical Leaders of the Victorian Church (1979); P. Toon, Evangelical Theology 1833–1856: A Response to Tractarianism (1979); E. Jay, The Religion of the Heart: Anglican Evangelicalism and the Nineteenth-Century Novel (Oxford, 1979); D. M. Rosman, Evangelicals and Culture [1984]; R. Manwaring, From Controversy to Co-Existence: Evangelicals in the Church of England 1914–1980 (Cambridge, 1985); E. [G.] Rupp, Religion in England 1688–1791 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 325–490; B. Hilton, The Age of Atonement: The Influence of Evangelicalism on Social and Economic Thought, 1785–1865 (Oxford, 1988); M. A. Noll and others (eds.), Evangelicalism: Comparative Studies of Popular Protestantism in North America, the British Isles, and Beyond, 1700–1900 (New York and Oxford, 1994).

Evangelical Union. A religious denomination formed in Scotland in 1843. In 1841 James *Morison (1816–93), minister of a United Secession congregation in Kilmarnock and a close biblical student, was suspended by his presbytery for his anti-Calvinistic views. He affirmed that Christ made atonement for all and condemned the doctrine of unconditional election. In 1843, along with three other ministers, he founded the 'Evangelical Union', which was soon joined by a number of Scottish Congregationalists. The Union was an association of independent Churches over which it exercised no jurisdiction. Its members were commonly called 'Morisonians'. In 1897 most of the Churches in the Union joined with the Congregational Union of Scotland.

H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960), pp. 116–34, 165–82.

Evangelische Bund (Ger., 'Evangelical League'). An alliance of German Protestants founded in 1886–7 by Prof. W. *Beyschlag and others for the defence of Protestant interests against the growing power of Catholicism. It furthered its purposes by contacts with the secular press and through the issue of literature of its own, as well as by other methods. The movement, which took on a strongly nationalistic colour in the years immediately preceding the War of 1914–1918, had gained by 1914 a membership of 540,000, though its influence decreased subsequently. After 1933 a greater emphasis on the theological basis led to a better understanding of Catholic thinking. The headquarters of the Evangelische Bund in Berlin, with its library and archives, were destroyed in 1942, but in 1947 it established an institute for confessional research at Bensheim in Hessen. This has provided a centre specializing in the study of non-Protestant Churches, in particular the RC Church and its attitude to social and political questions. Contact is maintained with similar organizations in W. and E. Europe and there are frequent conferences.

H. Hüttenrauch, Der evangelische Bund: Sein Werden, Wachsen und Wirken (1911). W. Beyschlag, Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des evangelischen Bundes (1926). G. Maron (ed.), Evangelisch und Ökumenisch: Beiträge zum 100jährigen Bestehen des Evangelischen Bundes (Kirche und Konfession, 25; Göttingen, 1986). W. Fleischmann-Bisten and H. Grote, Protestanten auf dem Weg: Geschichte des Evangelischen Bundes (Bensheimer Hefte, 65; ibid., 1986). W. Beyschlag in PRE (3rd edn.), 3 (1897), pp. 549–53, s.v. 'Bund, Evangelischer'; H. Grote in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 683–6, s.v.

Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland. See EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN GERMANY.

evangelist (Gk. εὐαγγελιστής, 'a proclaimer of the εὐαγγέλιον or Gospel').

(1) In the NT the word is thrice used of a travelling missionary (Acts 21: 8; Eph. 4: 11; 2 Tim. 4: 5). Probably no special office is designated, but the evangelist ordinarily combined his duty of proclaiming the Gospel with such offices as those of *bishop or *deacon. *Philip, e.g., was both a 'deacon' and an 'evangelist' and the Apostles are also said to have 'evangelized'. In modern usage the word is applied to certain laymen in Protestant Churches who undertake popular preaching.

(2) In a more technical sense, the author of one of the canonical Gospels, i.e. exclusively St *Matthew, St *Mark, St *Luke, and St *John. This usage established itself in the 3rd cent. Traditionally the four evangelists are symbolized respectively by a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle, on the basis of Rev. 4: 6–10.

Evangelistarium (Gk. εὐαγγελιστάριον). In the Orthodox Church, a book of tables indicating the Gospel lections for each year in accordance with the varying date of *Easter.

Evangelium Veritatis. A *Gnostic treatise included among the Coptic texts discovered at *Nag Hammadi, which opens with the words 'The Gospel of Truth'. 'Gospel' here seems to bear the non-technical sense of 'good news', and the phrase is not given separately as a title. The work expounds the mission of Jesus as 'the Word' or 'the Name' of the Father, alludes briefly to His teaching ministry, and comments on His death on the Cross and its significance. There are numerous similarities with the New Testament, but also some unusual features, such as the attribution of evil to Error, personified as a female figure (Planē). *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 3. 11. 9) mentions a work produced by the disciples of *Valentinus, which was composed not long before the time of writing (c. AD 180) and 'presumptuously' entitled 'Veritatis Evangelium' (Gospel of Truth), though quite unlike the other gospels; it has been suggested that the present work is in question, that it was written by Valentinus, and represents the less unorthodox thought of his early years (c. AD 140). The work certainly shows little trace of the elaborate speculations which are usually associated with the Valentinian system; some scholars, however, believe that they are presupposed, though not emphasized, in order to conciliate orthodox opinion; others that the work has no connection with Valentinus.

Facsimile, with edn. of Coptic text and translations into Fr., Ger. and Eng., by M. Malinine, H.-C. Puech, and G. Quispel, Evangelium Veritatis (Zurich, 1956, with suppl., 1961). Coptic text also pr., with Eng. tr., introd. and bibl., by H. W. Attridge and G. W. MacRae, SJ, in H. W. Attridge (ed.), Nag Hammadi Codex I (Nag Hammadi Studies, 22–3; 1985), 1, pp. 55–122, with notes, 2, pp. 39–135. Eng. tr. also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 38–51. J.-É. Ménard, L'Évangile de Vérité (Nag Hammadi Studies, 2; Leiden, 1972). H.-C. Puech in Schneemelcher, 1 (1959), pp. 160–6; Eng. tr., 1 (1963), pp. 233–41. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 71–3 (no. 1177).

Evanson, Edward (1731–1805), divine. After becoming Vicar of *Tewkesbury in 1769, and of Longdon in Worcestershire in 1770, he developed views with *Unitarian affinities, advocating the removal of the *Nicene and *Athanasian creeds from the BCP. A prosecution instituted against him in 1775 before the Bp. of *Gloucester failed on a technical point, but in 1778 he resigned his living and became a schoolmaster at Mitcham. Here he held occasional services and administrations of the Lord's Supper, which he considered the only Sacrament. Besides some controversial writings against J. *Priestley, he published The Dissonance of the Four Generally Received Evangelists (Ipswich, 1792), in which he accepted only the Gospel of Luke. His book was the earliest formal attack on the traditional authorship of St John's Gospel.

His Sermons were issued in 2 vols. in 1807, prefixed by a Life. T. Falconer replied to his book on the Gospels in his *Bampton Lectures for 1810 (pub. 1811). F. Strachotta, Edward Evanson, 1731–1805 (Theologische Arbeiten zur Bibel-, Kirchen-, und Geistesgeschichte, 12; Halle, 1940). DNB 18 (1889), pp. 78 f. (unsigned).

Evanston, Illinois. The Second Assembly of the *World Council of Churches met at Evanston in 1954.

The Evanston Report, ed. W. A. Visser 't Hooft (1955).

Eve. The first woman, the wife of *Adam. Acc. to Gen. 3: 20 she was so named because she was the mother of all living beings; but the Hebrew word (חַוָּה) for Eve may have meant 'serpent', and her name thus been associated with the primitive myth that all life originated in a primeval serpent. Eve is tempted by the serpent to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge; she and Adam disobey, '*fall', and are driven out from *Eden; and Eve is punished with the pain of childbirth. In the NT (1 Cor. 11: 9 f., 1 Tim. 2: 13 ff.) the relationship of Adam and Eve is used by St *Paul to support his teaching about the relative status of man and woman in Christian worship. It was a common medieval conceit that the Latin form of her name ('Eva'), spelled backwards, was the first word of the angel's address to the BVM ('Ave') and symbolized the reversal of Eve's fall through the Incarnation. Recently the figure of Eve has become important for *Feminist Theology.

The principal discussions are to be found in comm. on GENESIS, cited s.v. A. M. Dubarle, OP, 'Les Fondements bibliques du titre marial de Nouvelle Ève', Mélanges Jules Lebreton, 1 (Rech. S.R. 39; 1951), pp. 49–64. M. Leisch-Kiesl, Eva als Andere: Eine exemplarische Untersuchung zu Frühchristentum und Mittelalter (Cologne, 1992). E. Mangenot in DTC 5 (1915), cols. 1640–55; M. Planque, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1772–88, both s.v.

Evelyn, John (1620–1706), Anglican diarist. Born at Wotton in Surrey, he was educated at Southover free school, near Lewes, and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1641 he visited the Netherlands and later (1643–5) travelled extensively in France and Italy. In 1647 at Paris he married Mary, the daughter of Sir Richard Browne (1605–1683), a girl of not more than 12 years. In 1649, after the King's execution, he went abroad again. After his final return (Feb. 1652), he settled at Sayes Court, a large estate near Deptford. Here he interested himself in rural pursuits until the *Restoration, carrying on a friendly correspondence with John *Wilkins, then Warden of Wadham, and Robert *Boyle, with both of whom he was closely associated in the creation of the Royal Society. He also became connected with Jeremy *Taylor, whom, among other dispossessed clergy, he befriended under the Commonwealth. He enjoyed the favour of *Charles II and *James II and was on intimate terms with many leading personalities of the time. He held several royal appointments, nobly remaining at his post when one of these required his residence in London during the Great Plague. He played a prominent part in Church affairs, esp. in the rebuilding of *St Paul's Cathedral, and continued to take an active interest in the Royal Society. After the Revolution he lived in comparative retirement.

Evelyn's wide interests made him a prolific writer. The Diary, if it lacks the liveliness of that of Pepys (1633–1703), is a true reflection of his character and an important document for social history. It reveals him as a man of scholarly temperament and wide culture, which he combined with a firm devotion, and a strong loyalty to the royalist cause even though he disapproved of much of the life of the Court. His best-known works include Fumifugium (1661), Sculptura (1662), and Sylva (1664). Of more specifically religious interest are his Mystery of Jesuitism (1664), The Pernicious Consequences of the New Heresie of the Jesuites Against the King and the State (anon., 1666) and his translation of The Golden Book of St John Chrysostom concerning the Education of Children (1659); and two posthumous publications, The Life of Mrs. [Margaret] Godolphin (ed. S. *Wilberforce, 1847) and The History of Religion (ed. R. M. Evanson, 2 vols., 1850).

Extracts from his Diary and some letters first pub. by W. Bray (2 vols., London, 1818). The complete text ed., with comm., by E. S. de Beer (6 vols., Oxford, 1955); repr., with some omissions and no comm. (Oxford Standard Authors, 1959). Modern Life by A. Ponsonby (London, 1933); short study by E. Higham (ibid., 1968). W. G. Hiscock, John Evelyn and Mrs. Godolphin (1951); id., John Evelyn and his Family Circle (1955). J. Bowle, John Evelyn and his World (1981). G. [L.] Keynes, John Evelyn: A Study in Bibliophily with a Bibliography of his Writings (Cambridge, 1937; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1968).

evening Communion. There are possible references to evening celebrations of the Eucharist in the NT (e.g. 1 Cor. 11: 21), but it would appear that an early hour of the day soon became the usual time. After the *Reformation certain Protestant Churches, which held the service to be mainly commemorative, celebrated the Lord's Supper in the morning or evening indiscriminately. In the C of E the practice of evening Communion appears to date from the middle of the 19th cent. It was introduced by W. F. *Hook at Leeds in 1852 in order to meet the needs of his industrial parish. From the first it met with much opposition (notably from H. P. *Liddon) as in conflict with the traditional rule of fasting from the previous midnight, and until the middle of the present cent. it was a mark of *Low Churchmanship. In the RC Church rules about the *Eucharistic Fast were relaxed and evening Masses permitted in military establishments during the Second World War. In 1953 *Pius XII's encyclical 'Christus Dominus' permitted evening Masses generally on *Feasts of Obligation, *First Fridays, and certain other occasions. The *Maundy Thursday Mass was restored to an evening hour in 1955 and two years later in the motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' permission for an evening Mass was extended to every day when pastoral reasons demanded it. Since then celebrations of the Eucharist in the evening have become generally accepted in the RC Church in both parish churches and religious houses, and are also now found in both *High and Low Church circles in the C of E.

The practice was deprecated in many episcopal charges in the 19th cent., notably by S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of *Oxford. [H. P. Liddon], 'Evening Communion', The Christian Remembrancer, 40 (1861 for 1860), pp. 191–214; repr., with additions and notes [by W. *Bright; also anon.], as Evening Communion Contrary to the Teaching and Practice of the Church in all Ages (1872); J. Hughes-Games, Evening Communion: The Argument for the Practice Stated and the Objections against it Answered (1894). E. Dekkers, OSB, 'L'Église ancienne a-t-elle connu la messe du soir?', in Miscellanea Liturgica in Honorem L. Cuniberti Mohlberg, 1 (Bibliotheca 'Ephemerides Liturgicae', Sect. Hist., 22; 1948), pp. 231–57, with refs. See also bibl. to EUCHARISTIC FAST.

Evening Prayer. See EVENSONG. The term is also sometimes used of the evening Office (*Vespers) provided in the 1971 *Breviary.

Evensong. The name given in medieval England to the canonical hour of *Vespers. It is now in common use for the BCP service of Evening Prayer. The structure of this latter is closely related to the traditional type of Divine service. After preparatory prayers the service proper opens with the versicles and responses, 'O Lord, open thou, etc.', and the *Lord's Prayer. This is followed by certain Psalms varying acc. to the day of the month, a reading from the OT, the *Magnificat, a further reading from the NT, and the *Nunc Dimittis. After the recitation of the *Apostles' Creed follow the *Kyrie Eleison, the Lord's Prayer, versicles and responses, the Collect for the day, two invariable collects, 'in quires and places where they sing' the *anthem, and further prayers. In substance it is a conflation of the *Sarum services of Vespers and *Compline. The name 'Evensong', found in the 1549 BCP, was replaced by 'Evening Prayer' in 1552, but came back again (in the Table of Proper Lessons) in 1662.

In the ASB, Ps. 134, the *Phos Hilaron, or the Easter Anthems precede the Psalms of the day; the recitation of the Psalter at Mattins and Evensong may be spread over about ten weeks; and there are alternative canticles to the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. If the Eucharist is to follow, the service is drastically curtailed. There is also a Shorter Form, with one biblical reading and one canticle, which varies according to the day of the week. Other modern Anglican liturgies have made similar modifications.

Evergetinos, Paul (d. 1054), compiler of an influential monastic *florilegium. After founding a monastery called Theotokos Evergetis near *Constantinople, around 1050 he put together a selection of spiritual texts in four books, each containing 50 chapters. It was entitled by him Synagoge, but is usually referred to as the Evergetinon. It draws on a relatively small library of authors (e.g. John *Cassian, *Barsanuphius, *Diadochus, *Ephraem Syrus, *Isaac of Nineveh, *Mark the Hermit, and Maximus the Confessor), but it is remarkable for the wealth of its anonymous hagiographical material (drawn mainly from the Menologion and monastic collections) and the solidity of its teaching. Frequently copied in the Middle Ages, its publication by *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (Venice, 1783) won for it an immense influence in modern Greek Orthodox spirituality.

There is no crit. edn. of the Evergetinon, but the 1783 text has often been reissued, e.g. 4 vols., Athens, 1977. The basic modern study is that of M. Richard in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 502 f., s.v. 'Florilèges spirituels grecs, 3. Florilèges monastiques, 20, L'Évergétinon', repr. in his Opera Minora, 1 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1976), first item. I. Hausherr, SJ, 'Paul Évergétinos a-t-il connu Syméon le Nouveau Théologien?', OCP 23 (1957), pp. 58–79; repr. in his Études de Spiritualité Orientale (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 183; 1969), pp. 262–83. Beck (1959), p. 587. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 562–4, s.v. 'Paul Évergétinos'.

On the monastery, R. Janin, AA, La Géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, première partie, Le Siège de Constantinople et le patriarcat œcuménique, 3, Les églises et les monastères (2nd edn., 1969), pp. 178–84.

Evurtius, St (4th cent.), Bp. of Orléans. The correct form of St *Enurchus (q.v.).

Ewald, Heinrich Georg August (1803–75), OT theologian and orientalist. He was educated at the University of Göttingen, where he taught from 1827 to 1837. In 1838 he went to *Tübingen and joined in the attack on F. C. *Baur and the Tübingen School. From 1847 to 1867 he was back in Göttingen. He was the author of a long series of books. His 'Hebrew Grammar' (1827) was a landmark in the history of OT philology, but of even greater influence was his Geschichte des Volkes Israel (5 vols., 1843–55; two further vols. on the Apostolic Age were added to the 2nd edn. in 1858–9). In its English translation (vol. 5, 1865; the rest, 1867–86) it much influenced British scholarship. Ewald exercised a restraining influence on some of the negative tendencies of the OT criticism of his day.

Life by T. Witton Davies (London, 1903). T. K. *Cheyne, Founders of Old Testament Criticism (1893), pp. 66–118. J. Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 91–103.

Exaltation of the Cross. The feast in honour of the Cross of Christ, observed on 14 Sept. It is also known as 'Holy Cross Day'. In the W. Church, the *Martyrology and *Offices commemorate on this day the exposition of the supposed true Cross at *Jerusalem in 629 by the Emp. *Heraclius, after his recovery of it from the Persians into whose hands it had fallen in 614. Actually this event in Jerusalem took place in the spring, and the date, 14 Sept., has become attached to it through confusion with a much earlier commemoration kept in Jerusalem on that day, namely of the dedication in 335 of the basilica built by the Emp. *Constantine on the site of the *Holy Sepulchre. It seems likely that the '*Invention' of the Cross, formerly observed on 3 May, was commemorated on this day before the celebration of the incident of 629.

The first clear mention of the Feast in the W. is in the notice of Pope *Sergius (687–701) in the LP (ed. Duchesne), 1, p. 374; cf. Duchesne's note, pp. 378 f. There is an early ref. to the adoration of the Cross at Jerusalem in the *Pilgrimage of Egeria (chs. 48 f.); but Egeria does not record its date of observance in the calendar. Cf. A. Bludau, Die Pilgerreise der Aetheria (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 15, Hefte 1–2; 1927), pp. 185–90. L. de Combes, Études sur les souvenirs de la Passion: La Vraie Croix perdue et retrouvée (1902; Eng. tr., 1907). H. Thurston, SJ, 'Relics, Authentic and Spurious' [The Cross and Title], The Month, 155 (1930), pp. 420–9. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3131–9, s.v. 'Croix (Invention et exaltation de la vraie)'; A. Bugnini in EC 4 (1950), cols. 960–3, s.v. 'Croce VII'. See also bibl. to INVENTION OF THE CROSS.

examining chaplains. The duty of examining candidates for holy orders belongs properly to the *archdeacon, as the BCP Ordinal shows. But can. C 7 of the 1969 Canons requires further that candidates be diligently examined by the archdeacons 'and other ministers appointed for this purpose', regarding their knowledge of Holy Scripture and the doctrine, discipline, and worship of the C of E. Can. 35 of the 1604 Canons specified that examining chaplains should be at least three in number; should be members of the cathedral church, if possible, or at any rate of the diocese; and should assist at the laying-on of hands. These requirements no longer apply.

S. C. Gayford in PBD (1912), pp. 326 f., s.v. 'Examination'.

exapostilarion (Gk. ἐξαποστειλάριον, from ἐξαποστέλλω, 'dismiss'). A *troparion occurring at the end of the *canon at *Orthros in the E. Church.

exarch. The title of: (1) certain civil governors in the later Roman Empire, notably the Exarch of *Ravenna; (2) certain bishops lower in rank than *patriarchs but having rights over the *metropolitans of one civil diocese (though the title has sometimes been given to patriarchs and metropolitans themselves).

excardination (Lat. cardo, 'hinge'; hence excardinare, 'to unhinge'). In W. canon law, the liberation of a cleric from his present *Ordinary with a view to fresh enlistment ('incardination') under a new superior. For details see INCARDINATION.

ex cathedra. See CATHEDRA.

Exceptions. The long list of objections made by the *Puritans at the *Savoy Conference (1661) to the existing Prayer Book (of 1604) with a view to its revision. They were directed against certain of the Book's doctrinal affirmations and ceremonial prescriptions, as well as minor matters where no question of principle was involved. The Puritans pressed for such changes as the omission of *Lent and of saints' days with their vigils, the use of the AV instead of the text of the *Great Bible (1539) for all scriptural passages in the Book, the substitution of the word 'minister' for 'priest' and 'curate', and of 'Lord's Day' for 'Sunday'. Of a few of these 'Exceptions' account was taken in the revised Book of 1662, but for the most part they were disallowed.

Text in E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences . . . connected with . . . the Book of Common Prayer (1840), ch. 7, § S.

Exclusion, Right of (Lat. Ius Exclusionis or Ius Exclusivae). The right formerly claimed by the heads of certain Catholic states to name a particular candidate whom they desired to exclude from being elected Pope. The claim goes back to the 16th cent., and the last occasion on which it was exercised was by the Austrians in 1903 (against Cardinal Rampolla). The right was finally annulled by *Pius X in Commissum Nobis (20 Jan. 1904) and Vacante Sede Apostolica (25 Dec. 1904).

Exclusion Controversy. The crisis caused by the attempt of the Whigs, led by the first Earl of Shaftesbury, to exclude James, Duke of York (later *James II), from the succession to the throne after his brother *Charles II. Liberties, religion, and property were held to be in danger from the RC views and absolutist inclinations of the Duke. The crisis was set in motion by T. *Oates's announcement of the *Popish Plot, and the question of Exclusion dominated elections to and sessions of three successive Parliaments in 1679–81. A Bill to exclude James failed to pass beyond the Commons in 1679, and another was rejected by the Lords next year; at the Oxford Parliament of 1681 Charles II took advantage of fears of another civil war and scored a complete triumph over the Whigs, which he followed up with various successful counter-measures against them in the next two years. The controversy gave rise to much polemical writing (e.g. by J. *Dryden and J. *Locke) and to violent anti-Catholic feeling.

J. R. Jones, The First Whigs: The Politics of the Exclusion Crisis, 1678–1683 (1961). K. H. D. Haley, The First Earl of Shaftesbury (Oxford, 1968), passim. T. Harris, London Crowds in the Reign of Charles II: Propaganda and Politics from the Restoration until the Exclusion Crisis (Cambridge, 1987), esp. pp. 62–188. See also bibls. to CHARLES II and JAMES II.

excommunication. An ecclesiastical censure imposed by competent authority which excludes those subjected to it from the communion of the faithful and imposes on them other deprivations and disabilities. It does not profess to extend to the union of the soul with God, since that union is held to depend on the immediate effect of sanctifying grace and to be unaffected by any act of the Church. Hence it is not impossible for a man to be excommunicated and yet to be and remain in a state of grace.

In early times excommunication could be either 'greater' or 'less'. Basically, the greater deprived a man of his right to administer or receive the Sacraments and of all intercourse, private or public, with his fellow Christians, and of all rights and privileges in the Church. The lesser deprived him only of the right to receive the Sacraments and to hold ecclesiastical office. In the modern RC Church a related distinction between those excommunicate '*vitandi' and 'tolerati' survived until recently, supported by an elaborate legal structure. This has been radically changed by the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici. Excommunication is now one of the censures or 'medicinal' *penalties; it is either declared or imposed by an ecclesiastical authority, or it is incurred automatically, e.g. by procuring an *abortion. All excommunicated persons are forbidden to celebrate the Sacraments or to receive them (except when in danger of death), to take any ministerial part in ceremonies of public worship, or to exercise any ecclesiastical offices, ministries, functions, or acts of government. If the excommunication has been imposed or declared, some additional consequences follow: if the excommunicated person tries to take a ministerial part in public worship, he is to be prevented from doing so or the liturgical action is to stop, unless there is a serious reason to the contrary; acts of governance which would otherwise have been valid, though illicit, are invalidated; and no income from offices connected with the Church may be enjoyed (can. 1331).

In the Anglican Church the use of excommunication is implied in the rubrics of the BCP and was openly threatened in the canons of 1604. In the 17th cent. it was fairly commonly applied for a variety of misdemeanours, but after the *Restoration its frequent use brought it into discredit with both the laity and the spiritual authorities, and it became increasingly rare in the C of E. The 1969 Canons, however, still envisage the possibility of dying after being 'declared excommunicate for some grievous and notorious crime', and excommunication is more common in the Anglican Churches overseas, esp. in missionary dioceses. Except in the case of heathen converts, it is usually confined to 'minor excommunication'.

W. Doskocil, Der Bann in der Urkirche: Eine rechtsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Münchener theologische Studien, 3. Kanonistische Abteilung, 11; 1958). F. D. Logan, Excommunication and the Secular Arm in Medieval England (Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, Studies and Texts, 15; Toronto, 1968). E. Vodola, Excommunication in the Middle Ages (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1986]). A. Boudinhon in CE 5 (1909), pp. 678–91, s.v.; É. Jombart in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 915–27, s.v.; W. Doskocil in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 1–22, s.v. 'Exkommunikation', with extensive bibl. See also comm. to CODEX IURIS CANONICI, cited s.v.

exegesis (from Gk. ἐξηγέομαι, 'I narrate', 'explain'). The act of explaining a text, in theology usually a sacred text. The explanation may include translation, paraphrase, or commentary on the meaning. Its purpose may be either to describe the author's meaning or to apply that meaning to a contemporary situation. Its rules are governed by the science of *hermeneutics (q.v.).

On account of the obscurities of Scripture, biblical exegesis has been practised from early times, both by Jews and Christians. In the time of Christ it was practised by *Philo, the *Qumran community and the Rabbis, according to different methods. These were also employed by the writers of the NT, who likewise presupposed the Divine inspiration of the OT. In conflict with *Gnostic exegetes, Christian writers, esp. St *Irenaeus and *Tertullian, insisted that the meaning of Scripture be elucidated in conformity with apostolic tradition. A chiefly allegorical mode of interpretation was fostered esp. in the *Alexandrian school, whose earliest exponents were *Clement and *Origen. By contrast, the school of *Antioch, represented, among others, by St John *Chrysostom and *Theodore of Mopsuestia, cultivated the explanation of the literal sense of the Bible. The most important exegetes among the W. Fathers were St *Jerome and St *Augustine, who sought to combine the two kinds of exegesis, though the former emphasized the literal, the latter the allegorical, sense. Among the later Greek Fathers the science of exegesis was represented esp. by *Hesychius of Jerusalem, St *John of Damascus, and *Euthymius Zigabenus. In the W. many of the Schoolmen were concerned with the methods of exegesis, notably *Peter Lombard, *Alexander of Hales, and St *Thomas Aquinas. They favoured the fourfold method of literal, allegorical, moral, and anagogical (or mystical) exegesis; their chief contribution was an increase in the systematization of materials and in logical order.

At the *Reformation, many Protestant theologians, esp. J. *Calvin, rejected the authority of the Church's tradition as a criterion for exegesis, substituting the interior witness of the Holy Spirit. Such teaching made possible a variety of individual interpretations, although in practice *Lutheran, *Reformed, and *Anglican orthodoxy maintained the traditional exegesis of, e.g., Christological and Trinitarian passages. Since, for Protestants, the Bible became the supreme norm of doctrine, biblical study was accorded a position of high value. It was, therefore, in Protestantism that literary and historical criticism, undermining the traditional doctrine of inspiration, was practised by English *Deists, and emerged strongly in Germany in the 18th cent. J. S. *Semler, J. J. *Wettstein, and J. A. *Ernesti were among the earliest biblical critics. From the beginning of the 19th cent. much attention was given to the origin, nature, and history of the individual biblical documents and to reconstructions of biblical history, including the life of Jesus. These investigations, esp. the work of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule, claimed freedom from the guidance of theology in presenting a descriptive explanation of the texts in their own historical context. The conclusions yielded sometimes conservative, sometimes radical, results. In England, under the influence of *Methodism in the 18th cent. and of the *Oxford Movement in the 19th, exegesis developed along mainly conservative lines. With notable exceptions among the *Modernists, RC exegesis until fairly recent times largely ignored or reacted against critical scholarship. Although from 1902 the work of RC biblical critics has been guided by the decisions of the *Biblical Commission, the encyclical 'Divino Afflante Spiritu' (1943) of Pope *Pius XII, with its cautious encouragement of the use of modern critical techniques and its affirmation of the freedom of scholarly research, has fostered work marked by a new openness and independence. This openness to modern critical methods has been further developed since the Second *Vatican Council.

The prestige of descriptive biblical exegesis created many problems for a doctrinal theology built upon the older theory of inspiration. Among 20th-cent. theologians and exegetes, K. *Barth was prominent in maintaining the independence of Church Dogmatics from a merely descriptive exegesis. R. *Bultmann, by contrast, held that biblical criticism emphasizes the need to reinterpret the meaning of the whole biblical message in a modern framework. His call for *demythologization precipitated a renewed interest in hermeneutics.

F. W. *Farrar, History of Interpretation (*Bampton Lectures for 1885; 1886); W. *Sanday, Inspiration (Bampton Lectures for 1893; 1893). R. M. Grant, The Bible in the Church (New York, 1948; rev. edn. as A Short History of the Interpretation of the Bible, 1965); J. D. Wood, The Interpretation of the Bible (1958); J. D. Smart, The Interpretation of Scripture (1961). R. *Simon, Histoire critique des principaux commentateurs du Nouveau Testament (Rotterdam, 1693). J. G. Rosenmüller, Historia Interpretationis Librorum Sacrorum in Ecclesia Christiana (5 parts, Heidelberg and Leipzig, 1795–1814). J. Bonsirven, SJ, Exégèse rabbinique et exégèse paulinienne (1939). B. de Margerie, SJ, Introduction à l'histoire de l'exégèse (4 vols., 1980–90 [up to St *Bernard]). M. Simonetti, Profilo Storico dell'Exegesi Patristica (1981; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1994); T. Finan and V. Twomey (eds.), Scriptural Interpretation in the Fathers: Letter and Spirit (Dublin [1995]). B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (1941; 3rd edn., 1983); C. Spicq, OP, Esquisse d'une histoire de l'exégèse latine au Moyen Age (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 26; 1944); B. Bischoff, 'Wendepunkte in der Geschichte der lateinische Exegesis im Frühmittelalter', Sacris Erudiri, 6 (1954), pp. 189–281; repr. in id., Mittelalterliche Studien, 1 (Stuttgart, 1966), pp. 205–73; H. de *Lubac, SJ, Exégèse médiévale (Théologie, 41, 42, 59; 1959–64). W. G. Kümmel, Das Neue Testament: Geschichte der Erforschung seiner Probleme (Orbis academicus, 3. 3; 1958; Eng. tr., 1973). S. [C.] Neill, The Interpretation of the New Testament 1861 1961 (Firth Lectures, 1962; 1964; 2nd edn., The Interpretation of the New Testament 1861–1986 by Neill and T. Wright, Oxford, 1988). G. Vermes and R. P. C. Hanson in The Cambridge History of the Bible, 1, ed. P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans (1970), pp. 199–231 and 412–53 respectively; G. W. H. Lampe, J. Leclercq, OSB, B. Smalley, S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, and E. J. J. Rosenthal, ibid. 2, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (1969), pp. 102–279. See also bibl. to HERMENEUTICS.

exemplarism. The view of the *Atonement (sometimes also known as the 'moral' or 'subjective' theory) which holds that the value of the Death of Christ for us lies purely in the moral example which it sets us of complete love and self-surrender, thus moving our imagination and will to repentance and holiness. Those who object to this view criticize it rather as inadequate than as erroneous. One of its chief supporters in recent times was H. *Rashdall, in The Idea of Atonement (1919), but exemplarist ideas can be traced as far back as the works of P. *Abelard (d. 1142/3), if not further.

exemption. In an ecclesiastical sense, freedom from control by one's normal superior (usually the bishop of the diocese) and hence in general immediate subjection either to the superior of one's religious house or order, or to the Pope. The term 'exempt' is also applied to dioceses which are not subject to a metropolitan but are directly under the Holy See. The earliest known instance of monastic exemption is that granted by Pope *Honorius I in 628 to the Abbey of *Bobbio. Such exemptions, which from the 11th cent. became common and from the 12th cent. the normal rule, were the cause of much friction between the bishops and the religious orders in the Middle Ages. Other corporations (e.g. cathedral chapters) or private persons were also increasingly granted exemptions, and by the 16th cent. the practice had been carried to an extreme. One of the chief reforms effected by the Council of Trent was the restoration to the bishop of his proper ordinary jurisdiction. The 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici changed the legal impact of exemption by making it subordinate to the rightful autonomy of life, especially of governance, enjoyed by all *Institutes of Consecrated Life. This autonomy means that each Institute has its own discipline in the Church and can preserve whole and entire its spirit, character, and sound traditions; local bishops are charged to safeguard and protect this autonomy (can. 586). In certain circumstances the Pope can withdraw ('exempt') Institutes from the governance of local bishops and subject them to himself or another ecclesiastical authority (can. 591).

J. D. O'Brien, SJ, The Exemption of Religious in Church Law (Milwaukee, Wis. [1943]). D. *Knowles, OSB, 'Essays in Monastic History, 4: The Growth of Monastic Exemption', Downside Review, 50 (1932), pp. 201–31 and 396–436. K. Pennington, Pope and Bishops: The Papal Monarchy in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries [Philadelphia, 1984], pp. 154–89. R. Ombres, OP, 'Iusta Autonomia Vitae. Religious in the Local Church', Clergy Review, 69 (1984), pp. 310–19, with bibl. E. Fogliasso in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 637–46, s.v.; id., ibid., cols. 646–65, s.v. 'Exemption des religieux', with bibl.

exequatur (Lat., 'he may perform'). The right, also known as the 'Regium Placet', claimed by certain governments to prevent ecclesiastical enactments of the Roman see from taking automatic effect in their territories. In the 17th and 18th cents. the *Jansenists and the *Gallicanists, e.g. Z. B. *Van Espen in his De Promulgatione Legum Ecclesiasticarum (1712), were the chief supporters of these claims from the ecclesiastical standpoint. The attempts of the Papacy in more recent times to restrain it, e.g. that of *Pius IX in his Syllabus of 1864, have met with varying success, and certain modern governments have continued to exercise some controlling power of this kind.

H. Papius, 'Zur Geschichte des Placets', Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, 18 (1867), pp. 161–237. A. Bertola in EC 5 (1950), cols. 917–19, s.v.; R. Naz in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 10–14, s.v. 'Placet'; C. B. du Chesnay in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 717 f., s.v.

Exeter (in Roman times, Isca Dumnoniorum). By *c.*680 English settlers had established within the walls a monastery which was refounded or restored by Kings *Athelstan in 932, *Edgar in 968, and Canute in 1019. But it was once more a decayed minster by 1050, when Bp. Leofric of *Crediton, who combined the dioceses of Devon and Cornwall, converted it into a new see safe from Viking attack. The boundaries of the diocese remained practically unchanged until the formation of the see of *Truro in 1876. It is now almost conterminous with the county of Devon.

Although Leofric organized a secular cathedral following the Rule of St *Chrodegang, the monastic buildings remained until William Warelwast (Bp. 1107–37) began to erect a Norman cathedral of which only the towers remain. The present structure was begun by Walter Bronescombe (Bp. 1258–80). Peter Quivel (or Quinel, Bp. 1280–91) introduced the decorated style in which most of the cathedral is built and transformed the towers into transepts. The building was dedicated by John Grandison (1327–69) and completed by Thomas Brantingham (1370–94). Under the Commonwealth it was temporarily divided by a brick wall and used as two dissenting chapels. The interior was restored under the direction of G. G. *Scott between 1870 and 1877. Notable are its *miserere seats dating from the episcopate of William Briwere (1224–44), a clock made at *Glastonbury in 1285 and brought to Exeter in 1314, the Bishop's throne installed by Walter de *Stapeldon (1308–26), and the magnificent 14th- and 15th-cent. image screen across the west front. In the library are preserved *Edward the Confessor's charter confirming the changes he and Leofric had made and granting the new see to Leofric, the 10th-cent. 'Exeter Book' presented by Leofric, and the Exon Domesday. Edmund Lacy (Bp. 1420–55) was honoured as a popular saint. Other famous bishops include R. *Foxe (1487–92), M. *Coverdale (1551–3), J. *Hall (1627–41), H. *Phillpotts (1831–69), and F. *Temple (1869–85).

The University of Exeter received its charter in 1955.

The fullest account is to be found in the learned works of George Oliver (1781–1861), the chief of which are The History of Exeter (1821; 2nd edn., 1861); Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Devon (1828; '2nd edn.', really a new work, 3 vols., 1839–42); Monasticon Diœcesis Exoniensis (1846); and Lives of the Bishops of Exeter and a History of the Cathedral (1861). Selection of Episcopal Registers, ed. F. C. Hingeston-Randolph (9 vols., 1886–1909); that of E. Lacy (Bp. of Exeter, 1420–55), ed. G. R. Dunstan (*Canterbury and York Society, parts 129, 132, 134, 137, and 139; 1963–72). Facsimile reprod. of the Exeter Book, with introductory chs. by R. W. Chambers, M. Förster, and R. Flower (Exeter and London, 1933). R. J. E. Boggis, A History of the Diocese of Exeter (Exeter, 1922). F. Barlow and others, Leofric of Exeter: Essays in Commemoration of the Foundation of Exeter Cathedral Library in A.D. 1072 (Exeter, 1972). V. Hope and J. Lloyd, Exeter Cathedral: A Short History and Description (ibid., 1973); F. Kelly (ed.), Medieval Art and Architecture at Exeter Cathedral (British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions, no. 11; 1991); W. Swanton (ed.), Exeter Cathedral: A Celebration (Exeter, 1991). N. Orme, Exeter Cathedral as it was 1050–1550 (ibid., 1986). C. Brooks and D. Evans, The Great East Window of Exeter Cathedral (ibid., 1988). N. [B. L.] Pevsner, South Devon (The Buildings of England; Harmondsworth, 1952), pp. 128–55. H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 223–52, s.v.

Exeter Hall. A building in the Strand, London, which was erected *c.*1830 and used for religious and philanthropic assemblies, esp. by those of Evangelical sympathies, down to 1907. 'Exeter Hall' thus came to be used allusively as a title for a certain type of *Evangelicalism.

Exile, the. A term commonly used, esp. by OT scholars, for the *Babylonian Captivity (q.v.).

Existentialism. The term, which derives from S. *Kierkegaard (d. 1855, q.v.), is usually applied to certain types of modern philosophical thinking which share a practical concern for the individual existing person and his freedom. Such thinking stands in radical opposition to objective philosophy (e.g. the thought of R. *Descartes), positivist science, and mass society. Although such thinkers as St *Augustine and B. *Pascal have been claimed as ancestors of Existentialism, the contemporary movement goes back mainly to Kierkegaard, F. W. *Nietzsche, and E. Husserl (1859–1938): Kierkegaard with his emphasis that 'God is a subject and therefore exists only for subjectivity in inwardness' (e.g. in his Concluding Unscientific Postcript, 1846), Nietzsche with his stress on man not as a combination of mind and body, but as one who possesses a will (e.g. Der Wille zur Macht, 1901; Eng. tr., The Will to Power, 1909–10), and Husserl, whose *Phenomenology provided a systematic method of describing the universal elements in human consciousness (e.g. in his article 'Phenomenology' in EB 14th edn., 1927). The main body of Existentialist writings appears to derive from the discovery of Kierkegaard in Germany in the early 20th cent., esp. by theologians in opposition to Liberal Protestantism, and from the shattering of cultural values in Europe after the First World War.

Attempts have been made to divide Existentialist authors into two groups, namely the secular—among whom are included M. *Heidegger, M. Merleau-Ponty (1908–61), and J. P. Sartre (1905–80)—and the religious, e.g. Kierkegaard, G. Marcel (1889–1973) and K. *Jaspers. But there are differences within each group and sometimes real affinities between them.

Heidegger in Sein und Zeit (1927; Eng. tr., Being and Time, 1962) explored the 'nature of Being' as philosophy's major theme. Access to this theme is gained only by considering man in his historical, temporal sense. In his later, semi-oracular writings Heidegger claimed that poetry could announce, and expose us to, Being. Sartre's principal early work, L'Être et le Néant: Essai d'ontologie phénoménologique (1943; Eng. tr., Being and Nothingness, 1957), stresses being-for-itself, that is, human consciousness with personal, chosen values, as man faces an apparently absurd world with feelings of anguish and disgust. Sartre's ideas also found expression in plays and novels, e.g. La Nausée (1938; Eng. tr., 1962). His later Critique de la raison dialectique, vol. 1 (1960; Eng. tr., 1976), signals the eclipse of individualism in favour of Marxism.

Marcel became a RC in 1929. He abandoned idealist philosophy to embrace a Christian personalism whose keynote is hope. This position is expressed in Être et avoir (1935; Eng. tr., Being and Having, 1949). Jaspers' philosophy dealt with being-as-self rather than being-as-object. In his Philosophie (1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1969–71) he set out the limits of scientific knowledge, explored Existence as the possibility of self-determination, and in his metaphysics sought to relate Existence to an elusive Transcendence described only through ciphers or symbols.

The question of a Christian Existentialism has been a prominent element in Protestant theological debate for over 50 years. With its origins in Kantianism and modern research on M. *Luther, and stimulated by the *Dialectical Theology of the 1920s, it was taken up by R. *Bultmann, who drew on Heidegger's analysis. Opponents have claimed that Existentialism, which is anti-metaphysical and anti-cosmological in character, reduces theology to anthropology, dissolves the historical foundations of Christianity, and treats salvation as no more than a self-generated decision in favour of authentic existence. Supporters have claimed that an Existential standpoint is implicit in the NT, that to acknowledge the salvation event as part of history only serves to confirm the radical nature of faith, locating salvation not in external events but in an encounter between the hidden God and our personal existence.

Existentialism was condemned by the encyclical '*Humani Generis' (1950), but it has continued to exercise an important influence on some RC theologians (e.g. K. *Rahner). There are signs, however, that theological Existentialism is losing some of its appeal, as theologians concern themselves with social problems and again explore metaphysical questions.

J. Wahl, Études kierkegaardiennes (1938); id., Existence humaine et transcendance (1944); P. Foulquier, L'Existentialisme (1946); E. Mounier, Introduction aux existentialismes (1947); J. Hessen, Existenzphilosophie (Essen, 1948); H. J. Blackham, Six Existentialist Thinkers ('1951' [1952]); F. H. Heinemann, Existentialism and the Modern Predicament (1953); J. Macquarrie, An Existentialist Theology: A Comparison of Heidegger and Bultmann (1955); id., Existentialism (1972), with bibl.; D. E. Roberts, Existentialism and Religious Belief (New York, 1957); W. Barrett, Irrational Man: A Study in Existential Philosophy (New York, 1958; London, 1961); M. Warnock, Existentialism (Oxford, 1970).

Exodus, Book of. The second Book of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows the Gk. and Lat. versions, the Heb. title (וְאֵלֶּה שְׁמוֹת 'And these are the names') being the first words of the text. The Book records the events attending the 'Exodus' (i.e. the release of the Israelites under *Moses from their Egyptian bondage) and Yahweh's subsequent giving of the Law on Mount *Sinai. It describes the oppression of the Israelites, who had settled in Egypt in the time of Joseph, at the hands of a new king (1); the birth and preservation of Moses from slaughter, and his Divine commission to deliver his fellow-slaves (2–4); the refusal of the Pharaoh to release the Israelites, even in the face of the 'plagues' (the waters turned to blood; frogs; swarms of flies; etc.), until the loss of his first-born made him relent, and the institution of the *Passover (5: 1–12: 36); the escape of the Israelites through the miraculous parting of the *Red Sea and the destruction of their Egyptian pursuers in its returning waters (12: 37–18: 27); the encampment of the Israelites at Mount Sinai and Moses' ascent to the summit of the mount, where he received from Yahweh the Ten *Commandments and a large body of other legislation, moral, ceremonial, and religious (19–40).

The authorship of the Book has, like that of the Pentateuch as a whole, traditionally been ascribed to Moses. Modern biblical scholars are divided between those who agree that the Book forms part of a unified composition but assign the whole to a later time than that of Moses, and those who believe the Book, and indeed the rest of the Pentateuch, to be a composite work, its strata prob. having been written between the 9th and the 5th cent. BC. Perhaps the earliest item is the couplet ascribed to Miriam in 15: 21, which may well be one of the oldest fragments of the OT. Critical scholarship has been much exercised about the date of the Exodus. The extreme limits seem to be 1580 BC and 1215 BC, and at present most scholars favour either the first or second third of the 13th cent. BC.

Elsewhere in the Bible, frequent and fervent references to the Exodus occur (e.g. Ps. 78: 43–53, Is. 51: 10, Mic. 6: 4–5, Heb. 11: 27–9). Indeed the deliverance has throughout Jewish history been regarded as the outstanding instance of God's favour to His chosen people. Christian writers from NT times have used the imagery of the Passover in ch. 12 with reference to the sacrifice of Christ on Calvary and mediately to the Christian sacrifice of the *Eucharist. In modern times, the Exodus has become an important symbol of liberation for many groups, from Black Christians in the United States of America to so-called *Liberation theologians of Latin America.

Comm. by S. R. *Driver (Camb. Bib., RV, 1911), J. *Weiss (Graz and Vienna, 1911), G. Beer (HAT, Reihe 1, Abt. 3, 1939), M. *Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 5; 1959; Eng. tr. 1962), J. P. Hyatt (New Cent. Bib., 1971), B. S. Childs (Old Testament Library, 1974), and J. I. Durham (Word Biblical Comm., Waco, Tex. [1987]). W. Beyerlin, Herkunft und Geschichte der ältesten Sinaitraditionen (Tübingen, 1961; Eng. tr., Oxford [1966]); G. Fohrer, Überlieferung und Geschichte des Exodus: Eine Analyse von Ex. 1 15 (Beihefte zur ZATW, 91; 1964). R. W. L. Moberly, At the Mountain of God: Story and Theology in Exodus 32 34 (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 22; Sheffield, 1983). H. Cazelles, PSS, Autour de l'Exode (Études) (1987).

On the Exodus, C. F. *Burney, Israel's Settlement in Canaan: The Biblical Tradition and its Historical Background (Schweich Lectures for 1917; 1918). H. H. Rowley, From Joseph to Joshua: Biblical Tradition in the Light of Archaeology (Schweich Lectures for 1948; 1950). S. Herrmann, Israels Aufenthalt in Ägypten (Stuttgarter Bibelstudien, 40 [1970]; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 27; 1973). R. de Vaux, OP, Histoire ancienne d'Israël, 1 (Études Bibliques, 1971), pp. 339–421; Eng. tr. (1978), pp. 359–452. E. W. Nicholson, Exodus and Sinai in History and Tradition (Oxford, 1973). J. J. Bimson, Redating the Exodus and Conquest (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 5; Sheffield, 1978; 2nd edn., 1981); G. I. Davies, The Way of the Wilderness: A Geographical Study of the Wilderness Itineraries in the Old Testament (Society for Old Testament Study, Monograph Series, 5; Cambridge, 1979). On the Exodus theme in later tradition, B. van Iersel and A. Weiler (eds.), Exodus—A Lasting Paradigm (Concilium, 189; 1987).

Brief introd. by W. Johnstone, Exodus (Old Testament Guides; Sheffield, 1990). J. *Daniélou, SJ, in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 22–44, s.v., with bibl.; W. Johnstone in A Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation, ed. R. J. Coggins and J. L. Houlden (1990), pp. 222–6, s.v.

exomologesis (Gk. ἐξομολόγησις). Properly a full or public *confession of sin. In the early Church the word was applied to the whole process of confession, satisfaction, and forgiveness by which a penitent sinner was reconciled to the Church.

ex opere operato. A term in use among theologians at least since the early 13th cent. to express the essentially objective mode of operation of the sacraments, and its independence of the subjective attitudes of either the minister or the recipient. The 'opus operatum' ('act done') is contrasted with the doing of the act, whether the 'opus operans' ('act doing') or the 'opus operantis' ('act of the doer'). To say, therefore, that a sacrament confers grace 'ex opere operato' is to assert in effect that the sacrament itself is an instrument of God, and that so long as the conditions of its institution are validly fulfilled, irrespective of the qualities or merits of the persons administering or receiving it, grace is conferred. It is this property of being effective 'ex opere operato' which Catholic theologians hold to differentiate the sacraments from other channels of Divine grace. The doctrine, which does not deny that right dispositions are necessary on the part of the recipient if grace is to be really effectual, was formally approved at the Council of *Trent (sess. 7, de sacramentis in genere, can. 8).

exonarthex (Gk. ἐξωνάρθηξ). The outer *narthex or porch in E. churches.

exorcism. The practice of expelling evil spirits by means of prayer or set formulas was common among the Jews and pagans, and was taken over by the Christian Church after the example of Christ and His Apostles (cf. Mt. 10: 1 ff., Lk. 11: 14 ff., Acts 16: 18, 19: 13 ff., etc.). Exorcism has been practised on persons possessed with an evil spirit from NT times onwards. It has always been applied to catechumens; and the BCP of 1549 preserved one such prayer in the Baptismal Office. In the Latin rite three exorcisms were long included in the Baptismal rite before the actual Baptism. The 1969 RC Order for the Baptism of Infants, however, includes only one exorcism, which may be omitted, while the 1972 Order for Adult Initiation provides exorcisms at various stages of the restored catechumate, but none in the Baptismal rite. The Baptismal exorcisms do not presuppose a state of possession, but are prayers asking for the restraint of the powers of evil.

An elaborate rite for the exorcism of evil spirits is contained in the Rituale Romanum*; its use is restricted to priests who have episcopal permission; and the rite itself is under review. In England in the 1960s and 1970s interest in the occult and the spread of the *Charismatic Movement led in many Churches to concern with demon possession and to a revival of the practice of exorcism in the C of E. The report of a commission, appointed in 1963 by R. Mortimer, Bp. of *Exeter, was published in 1972; it recommended the appointment of an exorcist in each diocese. After a tragic case in 1974 attracted publicity, in 1975 the Abp. of *Canterbury issued some guidelines, namely that exorcism should be carried out only in collaboration with the resources of medicine, in the context of prayer and sacrament, with a minimum of publicity, by experienced persons authorized by the diocesan bishop, and that it must be followed by continuing pastoral care. Following these guidelines, individual diocesan bishops formulated appropriate policy for their dioceses.

J. *Martène, OSB, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (3 vols., Rouen, 1700–2), vol. 1, pp. 32 f., 52 f., 81, 159–61; 2, pp. 259, 302 f., 307 f., 347, 359, 371, 390, 394, 400, 427, 431 f., 446, 451, 465, 474, 488 f.; 3, pp. 498 and 517–20. F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872), pp. 16–62. F. J. Dölger, Der Exorzismus im altchristlichen Tauf- ritual (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 3, Hefte 1–2; 1909). L. Delatte, Un Office byzantin d'exorcisme (Ms. de la Lavra du Mont Athos, Θ 20) (Académie royale de Belgique, Classe de Lettres, Mémoires, Collection in-8°, 2nd ser. 52; 1957), with introd., text, and comm. R. M. Woolley, Exorcism and the Healing of the Sick (CHS, 1932). Exorcism: The Report of a Commission convened by the Bishop of Exeter, ed. R. Petitpierre, OSB (1972). Id., Exorcising Devils (1976). The guidelines of the Abp. of Canterbury were issued in response to a question in the General Synod; they are pr. in Report of the Proceedings of the General Synod, 6 (1975), p. 361. J. Richards, But deliver us from evil: An Introduction to the Demoniac Dimension in Pastoral Care (1974). J. Forget in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1762–80, s.v. 'Exorcisme'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (1922), cols. 964–78, s.v. 'Exorcisme, exorciste'. See also bibl. s.v. EXORCIST.

exorcist. The second of the traditional *Minor Orders. The power of exorcizing evil spirits, however, was never confined to the members of a particular order (cf. preceding entry). Bishops and priests from the earliest times assumed the primary responsibility for the sick and possessed, and even laymen are known to have exercised the gift of healing. The office of 'exorcist' is first mentioned in a letter of Pope *Cornelius (d. 253). Its duties came to include the imposition of hands on '*energumens' and the exorcizing of *catechumens. In the RC Church these functions of the exorcist have long been practically extinct, and the office only a step to the priesthood. It was finally suppressed in 1972.

T. Bischofberger, Die Verwaltung des Exorcistats nach Massgabe des römischen Benediktionale (1884; rev. edn. by C. Wehrmeister, 1927). F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (RQ, Suppl., 7; 1897), pp. 114–32 and 172–4. See also bibl. to previous entry and works cited under MINOR ORDERS.

Exoucontians. The extreme *Arians of the 4th cent., so called from their doctrine that the Son was created out of non-being (ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων). Their leader was *Aetius. They were also known as 'Aetians' and '*Anomoeans'.

expectant. A name formerly used of a candidate for the *Presbyterian ministry in *Scotland before he had received a licence to preach the Gospel.

expectant, the Church. The body of Christians waiting between earth and heaven, in what is traditionally called *Purgatory, and thus distinguished from the Church in *Heaven (*triumphant) and that still on earth (*militant).

Expectation Sunday. A title occasionally given to the Sunday between *Ascension Day and *Whitsunday. The name is in reference to the Apostles' 'expectation' of the Descent of the Holy Spirit after Christ's Ascension (Acts 1: 4 f.).

expiation. The atoning or making up for an offence committed against God or one's neighbour. Christianity claims that the only sufficient expiation of human sin is the offering made by Jesus Christ of His earthly life and death, and that of this offering the merits are infinite. Acc. to Catholic theology, its effects are applied to the soul in baptism and (for sins thereafter committed) in absolution. In virtue of its all-sufficiency the performance by Christians of good or pious works, done as penance, has value only through their being effected in union with the perfect expiation offered by Christ. See also ATONEMENT.

Expiation, Day of. An alternative name for the Jewish feast usually known as the Day of *Atonement (Tisri 10).

Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament. For more than a thousand years of the Church's history it was not customary to show public devotion to the *Reserved Sacrament. From c. the 11th cent., however, in the W. there were the beginnings of a public manifestation of faith and love of the sacramental presence of Christ in the Eucharist. This showed itself in the desire of the people to look at the Host when elevated during Mass (see ELEVATION); to have it exposed for veneration outside Mass, and carried in solemn processions. Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament as a service apart from Mass is first found in the late 14th cent.

In modern practice there are two forms of exposition: (1) the solemn form when a large Host is exposed to view in a *monstrance, placed on or above the altar, surrounded by lights and often by flowers, and censed; and (2) the simple form in which the *ciborium containing Hosts for Communion is shown at the open doors of the *tabernacle. Since 1967 in the RC Church exposition may always be by either form; it takes place in accordance with the regulations of the bishop. In either case there are biblical readings, hymns, prayers, and a time of silence, and sometimes a homily. The rite concludes with the blessing of the people with the Host (veiled in the simple form of exposition). In the past the blessing was often given after only a brief period of exposition, in a form of the service popularly known as '*Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament'; it is now forbidden to give the blessing on its own. See also FORTY HOURS' DEVOTION.

J. B. Thiers, Traité de l'exposition du St Sacrement de l'autel (Paris, 1673). F. Raible, Das Tabernakel einst und jetzt: Eine historische und liturgische Darstellung der Andacht zur aufbewahrten Eucharistie (1908), pp. 150–316 passim. H. Thurston, SJ, 'Our Popular Devotions', no. 4, 'Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament: Part II, Exposition', The Month, 98 (1901), pp. 58–69; id., 'Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament', ibid. 99 (1902), pp. 537–40. E. Dumoutet, Le Désir de voir l'Hostie et les origines de la dévotion au Saint Sacrament (1927), pp. 75–98. The current RC legislation on Exposition and Benediction is contained in the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Sacra Communione et de Cultu Mysterii Eucharistici extra Missam (1973), nos. 82–100 (pp. 38–42); Eng. tr., Holy Communion and Worship of the Eucharist Outside Mass, 1, Rites (1978), pp. 44–54, with supplementary appendix on the 'Rite of Eucharistic Exposition and Benediction', pp. 64–95. N. Mitchell, OSB, Cult and Controversy: The Worship of the Eucharist Outside Mass (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 4; New York, 1982), esp. pp. 176–81, 211–13, 337–40. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 5 (1909), pp. 713 f., s.v., with bibl.

Exsurge, Domine. The bull issued by *Leo X on 15 June 1520 threatening to excommunicate M. *Luther, the 'new *Porphyry' (novus Porphyrius). It listed 41 propositions, attributed to Luther, which it condemned as 'heretical or scandalous or false or offensive to pious ears, or seductive to simple minds and standing in the way of the Catholic faith'. They dealt with such matters as *indulgences, *penance, *purgatory, sacramental *grace, and the Pope's teaching authority. Its promulgation in Germany was entrusted to J. *Eck, whose unpopular and provocative methods met with fierce opposition both at Leipzig (29 Sept.) and at *Wittenberg (3 Oct.). After an unsuccessful appeal for a *General Council on 17 Nov., Luther finally broke with the Papacy by publicly burning the bull at Wittenberg on 10 Dec. 1520.

For the text (somewhat abbreviated), see Kidd, no. 38; propositions also in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 487–92 (nos. 1451–92). P. Kalkoff, 'Die Übersetzung der Bulle "Exsurge" ', ZKG 45 (1926), pp. 382–99, with refs. to earlier arts. by this author; H. Roos, SJ, 'Die Quellen der Bulle "Exsurge Domine" (15.6.1520)' in J. Auer and H. Volk (eds.), Theologie in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Michael Schmaus zum sechzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht (Munich, 1957), pp. 909–26. See also works cited under LUTHER.

extra-liturgical services. Services for which no fixed form is provided in the authorized liturgical formularies. For the form of such functions the person conducting them is responsible, subject to the directions of the bishop and parish priest.

Extravagantes. The term, at one time applied to certain officially recognized Papal *decretals which had 'wandered outside', i.e. were not included in, the 'Decretum' of Gratian ('extra decretum vagantes'), is now used almost exclusively of the two concluding sections of the Corpus Iuris Canonici, viz. the 'Extravagantes Ioannis XXII' (on which see JOHN XXII) and the 'Extravagantes Communes'. The latter is a collection of decretals of various Popes from Urban IV (d. 1264) to Sixtus IV (d. 1484). Down to 1917, when the Codex Iuris Canonici was issued, the official authority of many items in the Extravagantes was allowed, though it belonged to them only as individual documents, and not because of any authority attaching to these two collections as a whole.

Crit. text by E. Friedberg in his edn. of Corpus Iuris Canonici, 2 (1881), cols. 1201–312; cf. also Friedberg's Prolegomena, ibid., cols. lxiv–lxviii. 'Extravaganres Iohannis XXII', also ed. J. Tarrant (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series B, vol. 6; Vatican City, 1983). G. Le Bras, C. Lefebvre, and J. Rambaud, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, 7, L'Age Classique (1965), pp. 254–6, with refs. P. Torquebiau in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 640–3, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici, V. Les Extravagantes'.

Extreme Unction. See UNCTION.

Exultet. In the W. liturgy, the 'Paschal Proclamation' (praeconium paschale) or 'Paschal Praise' (laus paschalis) sung by the deacon standing near the *Paschal Candle on *Holy Saturday, and so named from its opening word, 'exultet'. It seems that originally it was the practice for the deacon to compose his own praeconium; but the form which came into general use can be traced back to 7th/8th-cent. Gaul and had generally displaced other forms by the 9th cent. There were local variations and some parts fell out of use during the Middle Ages. The chant to which it is sung is one of the finest in the Latin liturgy.

In S. Italy, from the early 10th to the 14th cent., it was customary to write out this *Prose (sometimes in the local, or Vetus Itala, form), with appropriate musical directions, on rolls known as 'Exultet Rolls'. The text, finely written in Beneventan script, was divided into sections interspersed with illuminated pictures disposed in the reverse way from the text, so that the pictures might be the right way up for the congregation when the section of the roll which had been read had been slipped over the back of the *ambo. About 30 such rolls are known to survive.

The principal documents are pr. in H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta, 2 (pt. 1; Rome, 1957), pp. 627–50. L. *Duchesne, Les Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 242–6; Eng. tr. of 3rd edn. (1903), pp. 252–6. H. M. Bannister, 'The Vetus Itala Text of the Exultet', JTS 11 (1910), pp. 43–54. P. *Capelle, OSB, 'L'"Exultet" pascal, œuvre de Saint Ambroise', Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, 1 (Studi e Testi, 121; 1946), pp. 219–46; reply by M. Huglo, OSB, 'L'Auteur de l'Exultet pascal', VC 7 (1953), pp. 79–88. Id. in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 6 (1980), pp. 334–6, s.v., with bibl.

On the Exultet Rolls, A. M. Latil, OSB (ed.), Le miniature nei rotoli dell'Exultet (Monte Cassino, 1899; coloured plates); M. Avery, The Exultet Rolls of South Italy, vol. 2 (plates; all pub.; Princeton, NJ, 1936). G. Cavallo, Rotoli de Exultet dell'Italia meridionale (Bari, 1973). There is also a facsimile edn. of an 11th-cent. Exultet Roll from Monte Cassino (of great artistic merit) in the British Library (Add. MS 30337), with introd. by J. P. Gilson (London, 1929).

Exuperius, St (d. after 410), Bp. of Toulouse. He was renowned for his liberality to the poor and also to monks, and for having finished the basilica of St Saturninus at Toulouse. St *Jerome dedicated to him his Commentary on Zech. Feast day, 28 Sept.

For the text of Pope *Innocent I's Ep. to Exuperius (Ep. 6; 20 Feb. AD 405), with its important list of the Canonical Books of Scripture, prescriptions on clerical celibacy, etc., see J. P. Migne, PL 20. 495–502. AASS, Sept. 7 (1760), pp. 623–30. H. Crouzel, 'Saint Jérôme et ses Amis Toulousains', Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique, 73 (1972), pp. 125–46, esp. pp. 129–38. G. Bareille in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 2022–7.

Eyck, Hubert and Jan Van. See VAN EYCK, HUBERT and JAN.

Ezekiel, Book of. One of the three 'Major' Prophetic Books of the OT, the other two being *Isaiah and *Jeremiah. The Book falls into five main divisions: (1) Chs. 1–24. The message here is one of denunciation and the main theme the forthcoming destruction of *Jerusalem and *Judah at the hands of the Babylonians. (2) Chs. 25–32. A series of prophecies directed against foreign nations, namely Ammon (25: 1–7), Moab (25: 8–11), Edom (25: 12–14), Philistia (25: 15–17), *Tyre and Sidon (26–8), and Egypt (29–32). (3) Chs. 33–7. Prophecies relating to the redemption and restoration of the Jewish people. Ch. 37 describes the forthcoming restoration under the vivid image of the raising of dry bones to new life. (4) Chs. 38–9. The dramatic account of an assault upon the land of *Israel by *Gog and the overthrow of him and his forces by *Yahweh. (5) Chs. 40–8. A detailed vision of the ideal theocracy and esp. the form and worship of the reconstructed *Temple.

Ezekiel was a Jerusalem priest, prob. carried captive to *Babylonia by Nebuchadnezzar in the first deportation in 597 BC. There he appears to have experienced a call to *prophecy in 593 BC; this call is heard in the context of a vision of the Glory of God moving across the plain as though on a chariot (chs. 1–3). Some scholars have held that Ezekiel had a ministry in Jerusalem as well as in Babylonia, and a few that he was never in Babylonia at all, but the commonest view is that the whole of his ministry was spent in Babylonia. His experience, shared by his fellow-exiles, seems to have convinced him of the universality of the rule of Yahweh, present in Babylonia as in Palestine. Traditionally the entire Book was regarded as the work of Ezekiel, but in the 20th cent. some have held that only a relatively small part of it goes back to the Prophet himself. Today the majority would regard the bulk of the Book as coming from Ezekiel, with most of the rest deriving from prophetic circles influenced by the tradition of his words.

The theology of Ezekiel is characterized by a strong emphasis on the majesty of Yahweh, the God of Israel. Yahweh's holiness is manifested in the rigorous judgement upon His people which is the theme of the first part of the Book (chs. 1–24); later it is because of Yahweh's own holiness that He restores His people, acting for the sake of his 'holy name', lest the nations should misunderstand Israel's suffering as evidence that Yahweh is a weak God. Israel does not deserve restoration but Yahweh will nevertheless give her a 'new heart' and a 'new spirit' and so enable her to respond positively to Him (ch. 36). These themes may be seen as anticipating the emphasis on freely given *grace characteristic of St *Paul.

Many scholars have found a marked stress on the responsibility of the individual in Ezekiel, though others have given less weight to this theme. Such individualistic features as do occur are balanced by a complementary belief in the corporate nature of the religious community, seen in the detailed provision for the future life of the restored nation. Some features of the language of the Book appear to point the way towards the rise of the *Apocalyptic literature. The combination of both Priestly and Prophetic themes is striking. The Book had great influence in post-exilic Israel and Ezekiel (like *Ezra) has sometimes been called 'The Father of Judaism'.

Comm. by C. H. *Cornill (Heb. text, Ger. tr. and comm., Leipzig, 1886), A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, 1892; rev. for RV text by A. W. Streane, 1916), J. Herrmann (KAT 11; 1924), G. A. Cooke (ICC, 1936). G. Fohrer and K. Galling (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 13; 1955), W. Eichrodt (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 22; 2 vols., 1959–66; Eng. tr., 1970), W. Zimmerli (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 13; 18 parts, 1955–69; 2nd edn., 2 vols., 1979; Eng. tr. of 1st edn., 2 vols., Philadelphia, 1979–83). D. M. G. Stalker (Torch Bib. Comm., 1968), J. W. Wevers (New Cent. Bib., 1969). M. Greenberg (Anchor Bible, 1983 ff.), and W. H. Brownlee and L. A. Allen (Word Biblical Comm., 28–29; Waco, Tex., and Dallas [1986–90]). G. Hölscher, Hesekiel: Der Dichter und das Buch (Beihefte zur ZATW, 39; 1924); C. C. Torrey, Pseudo-Ezekiel and the Original Prophecy (Yale Oriental Series, Researches, 18; 1930); V. Herntrich, Ezechielprobleme (Beihefte zur ZATW, 61; 1932); H. W. *Robinson, Two Hebrew Prophets (1948), pp. 63–125; C. G. Howie, The Date and Composition of Ezekiel (Journal of Biblical Literature Monograph Series, 4; 1950); H. H. Rowley, 'The Book of Ezekiel in Modern Study', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 36 (1953–4), pp. 146–90; J. Garscha, Studien zum Ezechielbuch: Eine redaktionskritische Untersuchung von Ez 1–39 (Berne, 1974); K. W. Carley, Ezekiel among the Prophets (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 31; 1975); F. Hossfeld, Untersuchungen zu Komposition und Theologie des Ezechielbuches (Forschung zur Bibel, 20; Würzburg, 1977); B. Lang, Ezechiel: Der Prophet und das Buch (Erträge der Forschung, 153; Darmstadt, 1981); P. [M.] Joyce, Divine Initiative and Human Response in Ezekiel (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 51; Sheffield [1989]); K.-F. Pohlmann, Ezechielstudien: Zur Redaktionsgeschichte des Buches und zur Frage nach den ältesten Texten (Beihefte zur ZATW, 202; 1992). H. McKeating, Ezekiel (Old Testament Guides; Sheffield, 1993).

Eznik (5th cent.), Bp. of Bagrevand in *Armenia. A native of Kolb and a disciple of St *Mesrob, he was one of the most polished and learned of early Christian Armenian writers. His principal surviving work is a treatise, The Confutation of the Sects (*c.*441–8), in four books, directed respectively against (1) the pagans, (2) the religion of the Persians, (3) the Greek philosophers, and (4) the *Marcionites. He also took part in translating the Armenian version of the Bible, and, acc. to native tradition, wrote some homilies which have perished.

The Confutation of the Sects has been pub. (in Armenian) at Smyrna (1762) and Venice (1826, 1863). Crit. edn. by L. Mariès, SJ, and C. Mercier (PO 28, fasc. 3, with literal Fr. tr. and notes, fasc. 4; 1959). Earlier Fr. tr. by Le Vaillant de Florival (Paris, 1853); Ger. trs. by J. M. Schmid (Vienna, 1900) and S. Weber, Ausgewählte Schriften der armenischen Kirchenväter, 1 (Munich, 1927), pp. 1–180. L. Mariès, SJ, 'Le De Deo d'Eznik de Kolb, connu sous le nom de "Contre les sectes"', Revue des Études Arméniennes, 4 (1924), pp. 113–205; 5 (1925), pp. 11–130. C. F. J. Dowsett, 'On Eznik's Refutation of the Chaldean Astrologers', ibid., NS 6 (1969), pp. 45–65. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 209–16; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 352 and 623, with bibl. V. Inglisian in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 118–28, s.v.

Ezra. The Jewish priest and scribe, who played a central part in the reform of *Judaism in the 5th or 4th cent. BC. His activities are recorded in the Books of *Ezra and Nehemiah, and of 1 *Esdras. On his arrival in *Jerusalem from Persia 'in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king' (Ez. 7: 7), he set about his purposes on the basis of a royal warrant. His work marks the stage in the history of Judaism at which the distinction between the universalist and exclusivist attitudes to the Gentiles became clearly defined, and as a champion of the latter Ezra took strict measures to secure the racial purity and distinctiveness of the Jewish people. Ezra (like *Ezekiel) has sometimes been called 'the Father of Judaism'. After his establishment in Jerusalem, he promulgated a code of laws (Neh. 8: 1–12); one of the first responses to this act was a solemn observance of the Feast of *Tabernacles. The chronology of the period is obscure and there is considerable confusion in the OT record. The traditional date of Ezra's arrival in Jerusalem is 458 BC. This date is supported by some scholars; others favour 428 (arguing that in Ez. 7: 7 'the seventh year' should read 'the thirty-seventh year') or 398 (on the assumption that Artaxerxes II was the king mentioned). If this last date is correct, Ezra belonged to a later generation than *Nehemiah, who arrived in Jerusalem in 444.

For bibl. see the following entry.

Ezra and Nehemiah, Books of. These Books continue the history of the Hebrew people begun in the Books of *Chronicles, extending the narrative from the end of the Babylonian Exile (*c.*539 BC) down to the latter half of the 5th, or perhaps the beginning of the 4th, cent. BC; the greater part of it is concerned with the work of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ez. 1–6 relates the return of the exiles from Babylon, the efforts made to rebuild the *Temple at *Jerusalem and the encouragement given to the project by the prophets *Haggai and *Zechariah; 7–10 deals with Ezra's mission to Jerusalem and the reforms he introduced, notably in the matter of mixed marriages. Neh. 1–7 contains Nehemiah's plans for the restoration of Jerusalem; 8–10 record the reading and acceptance of the Law; 11 and 12 describe arrangements for the occupation of the city; and 13 narrates a further series of Nehemiah's reforms.

It is generally supposed by modern scholars that the compiler of the Books wrote at a date considerably later even than the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, though opinion is divided as to whether he was also the author of the Books of Chronicles. There are a number of apparent historical inaccuracies in the Books, e.g. in the chronological details of the Persian kings, the foundation of the Temple, and the arrival of Ezra in Jerusalem (see preceding entry). These have been accounted for by the insufficient data and the preconceived ideas of a compiler of much later date. Some critics, however, have recently defended the historical reliability of much of the material. The compiler clearly drew his matter from several sources. Certain sections (written in the first person) appear to be derived from the 'Memoirs of Ezra' and the 'Memoirs of Nehemiah'. Ez. 4: 8–6: 18 and 7: 12–26 are written in *Aramaic, not Hebrew, and may therefore have been taken from a collection of official Aramaic documents; the various catalogues of names which occur may also derive from official sources. See also ESDRAS, BOOKS OF.

Comm. by H. E. *Ryle (Camb. Bib., RV, 1893), W. Rudolph (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 20; 1949), K. Galling (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 12; on Chron., Ezra, and Neh., 1954, pp. 186–255), J. M. Myers (Anchor Bible, 1965), R. J. Coggins (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1976), D. J. A. Clines (New Cent. Bib., on Ezra, Neh., and Est., 1984, pp. 1–249), H. G. M. Williamson (Word Biblical Comm., 16; Waco, Tex., 1985), and J. Blenkinsopp (London, 1989). H. G. M. Williamson, Ezra and Nehemiah (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield [1987]).

C. C. Torrey, The Composition and Historical Value of Ezra-Nehemiah (Beihefte zur ZATW, 2; 1896). Id., Ezra Studies (Chicago, 1910). H. H. Schaeder, Esra der Schreiber (1930). G. von *Rad, 'Die Nehemia-Denkschrift', ZATW 76 (1964), pp. 176–87. S. *Mowinckel, Studien zu dem Buche Ezra-Nehemia (Skrifter utgitt av Det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo, Hist.-filos. Klasse, NS 3, 5, 7; 1964–5). J. A. Emerton, 'Did Ezra go to Jerusalem in 428 BC?', JTS, NS 17 (1966), pp. 1–17, with refs. U. Kellermann, Nehemia: Quellen, Überlieferung und Geschichte (Beihefte zur ZATW, 102; 1967). S. Japhet, 'The Supposed Common Authorship of Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah investigated anew', Vetus Testamentum, 18 (1968), pp. 330–71. J. Bright, A History of Israel (3rd edn., 1981), pp. 391–402 (Excursus II: 'The Date of Ezra's Mission to Jerusalem', with full bibl. on this subject).

F

Faber, Frederick William (1814–63), *Oratorian and hymn writer. Born at Calverley, a small town in W. Yorkshire, he was educated at Shrewsbury and Harrow and at Balliol and University Colleges, Oxford. In 1837 he was elected to a Fellowship at the latter college. His upbringing was *Calvinist; but at Oxford he came under the influence of J. H. *Newman and collaborated in the work on the Library of the Fathers. In 1837 he was ordained deacon and in 1839 priest. In 1842 he was appointed Rector of Elton, Cambs. Two years later he published a short Life of St Wilfrid which created a sensation from its RC sympathies. On 17 Nov. 1845 he was received into the RC Church, a few weeks after Newman. With other converts he formed a small community, the 'Brothers of the Will of God', at Birmingham; in 1847 he was ordained priest; and in 1848, with his companions, joined the Oratory of St *Philip Neri, recently introduced into England by Newman. In 1849 Faber became the head of the London branch, at first established in King William Street, Strand, and from 1854 on its present site in the Brompton Road. Relations between the London and Birmingham Oratories were not always happy, with Newman disapproving of Faber's florid devotion and *Ultramontane attitudes.

Faber was the author of many hymns and devotional books. His writings owe their popularity to a combination of fervent spirituality and a lucid style. They have been translated into many languages. Among the better known are All for Jesus (1853), Growth in Holiness (1854), and The Creator and the Creature (1858). Perhaps the most popular of his hymns is 'My God, how wonderful Thou art'.

Life and Letters, ed. J. E. Bowden (1869; new edn., 1888). F. A. Faber (brother), A Brief Sketch of the Early Life of F. W. Faber (1869). Life by R. [G.] Chapman (London, 1961). D. Gorce, Faber: Un Anglican à l'âme franciscaine (années d'avant sa conversion) 1814–1845 [1967]. G. M. Gozzelino, La Vita Spirituale nel Pensiero di Federico Guglielmo Faber (Bibliotheca Theologica Salesiana, 1st ser. 4; Zurich, 1969). J. F. Quinn, 'Newman, Faber and the Oratorian Separation: A Reappraisal', Recusant History, 20 (1990–1), pp. 106–26. T. Cooper in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 108–11; L. Cognet in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 3–13, s.v. 'Faber (3), Frédéric-William', with further bibl.

Faber, Jacobus (*c.*1455–1536), also known as Lefèvre d'Étaples or Stapulensis, early French humanist. A native of Étaples, after ordination to the priesthood he devoted himself to the study of the classics at *Paris, where he made the acquaintance of some of the leading humanists. In 1492 he went to Italy and there became keenly interested in the ancient philosophers, esp. Aristotle. In 1507 Guillaume Briçonnet, then abbot of *St-Germain-des-Prés and later Bp. of Meaux, appointed him librarian of the monastery. Exchanging his secular for religious studies, he published in 1512 a Latin commentary on St Paul's Epistles. Two critical essays on St *Mary Magdalene (1517 and 1518) were followed by his formal condemnation by the *Sorbonne for heresy in 1521. As he was by then involved in a diocesan programme of reform at Meaux (instigated by Briçonnet), the government, fearing an infiltration of *Lutheranism, also condemned him and in 1525 he was forced to flee to Strasbourg. Later he was taken under the protection of the Queen of Navarre. He never accepted the Reformation doctrines on grace, justification, and predestination, and his attitude to the Reformation has been compared with that of *Erasmus. His other writings include the first printed text of the (Lat.) *Ignatian Epp. (Paris, 1498) and a translation of the NT into French (1523; from the *Vulgate), followed by the Pss. in 1525 and the OT complete in 1528.

Prefatory Epistles and Related Texts, ed. E. F. Rice, Jun. (New York and London, 1972). The Epistres et Evangiles pour les cinquante et deux dimenches de l'an, written by Faber and his followers [or pupils], ed. G. Bedouelle and F. Giacone (Leiden, 1976). Studies by C. H. Graf (Strasbourg, 1842) and J. Barnaud (Paris, 1900). A. Renaudet, Préréforme et humanisme à Paris pendant les premières guerres d'Italie (1494–1517) (2nd edn., 1953), passim. E. F. Rice, Jun., 'The Humanist Idea of Christian Antiquity: Lefèvre d'Étaples and his Circle', Studies in the Renaissance, 9 (1962), pp. 126–60, incl. list of patristic texts ed. Faber, pp. 142–7. R. M. Cameron, 'The Charges of Lutheranism brought against Jacques Lefèvre d'Étaples', HTR 63 (1970), pp. 119–49, with refs. G. Bedouelle, Lefèvre d'Étaples et l'Intelligence des Ecritures (Travaux d'Humanisme et de Renaissance, 152; 1976); id., Le Quincuplex Psalterium de Lefèvre d'Étaples: Un guide de lecture (ibid. 171; 1979), incl. repr. of 1513 edn. of the Quincuplex Psalterium (first pub., 1509). G. Bedouelle in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 781–3, s.v., with bibl.

Faber, Johann (1478–1541), German theologian. A native of Leutkirch in Württemberg, he studied at *Tübingen and Freiburg, and in 1530 became Bp. of Vienna. Ferdinand I employed him on several important missions, including a visit to England to engage *Henry VIII's help against the Turks. His lifelong friendship with *Erasmus led him at first to sympathize with P. *Melanchthon and U. *Zwingli in their desire to reform the Church; but as the underlying doctrinal cleavage manifested itself, he withdrew his support from the Reformation programme and became a zealous defender of Catholic orthodoxy, earning the title 'the hammer of the heretics'. His works consist chiefly of controversial treatises and a few collections of sermons.

Faber's Malleus in Haeresim Lutheranam was first pub. Cologne, 1524; modern edn. by A. Naegele, Corpus Catholicorum, 23–26; Münster i.W., 1941–52; 'Opuscula', ed. J. *Cochläus, Leipzig, 1537; 'Opera' (mostly sermons, letters, and diaries), ed. Cologne, 3 vols., fol., 1537–41. A. Horawitz, 'Joh. Heigerlin (genannt Faber), Bischof von Wien, bis zum Regensburger Convent' in Sb. (Wien), 107 (1884), pp. 83–220. Further study by L. Helbling (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Hefte 67–8; Münster i.W., 1941). J. Wodka in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 329–34, s.v. 'Fabri (2), Johannes'; H. Immenkötter in TRE 10 (1982), pp. 784–8, s.v. 'Fabri, Johann', both with bibl.

Fabian, St (d. 250), Bp. of Rome from 236. Little is known of his pontificate beyond the fact that when the Decian Persecution broke out early in 250, he was among the first to suffer martyrdom. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis, it was he who divided the city of Rome into seven ecclesiastical regions, each of them in the charge of a deacon. His body was buried in the *catacomb of San Callisto and later moved to the church of San Sebastiano, where it was discovered in 1915. Feast day, 20 Jan.

*Cyprian, Ep. 9; LP (Duchesne), 1 (1885), pp. 148 f. P. Styger, 'Scavi a San Sebastiano', RQ 29 (1915), pp. 73–110 (esp. 'La scoperta del corpo di S. Fabiano', pp. 100–5); F. Grossi-Gondi, SJ, S. Fabiano, papa e martire dopo le scoperte sull'Appia (1916). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 1057–64, s.v.; P. Nautin in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 316 f., s.v. 'Fabien (1)'.

Fabiola, St (d. 399), Roman matron. She belonged to the patrician gens Fabia. Having divorced her first husband for his vicious life, she remarried (contrary to the Church canons). After the death of her second 'husband', she did public penance before the *Lateran and entered on a life of great austerity, distributing her immense wealth to the poor and tending the sick. In 395 she went to *Bethlehem, where she stayed with St *Paula and St *Eustochium and put herself under the direction of St *Jerome. The tensions created by the *Origenistic controversy, her personal distaste for the isolated convent life at Bethlehem, and finally the incursion of the Huns into Palestine, led her to return to Rome, where she continued her charitable works until her death. Feast day, 27 Dec.

To St Fabiola St Jerome addressed two letters: Epp. 64 and 78; the principal source is the letter which Jerome wrote on her death, Ep. 77. W. H. Fremantle in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 442 f., with refs. See also bibl. to JEROME.

Fabri, Felix (1438–1502), a learned *Dominican, from 1468 based at Ulm, who in his Evagatorium left a vivid account of his journeys in 1480 and 1483–4 to Egypt and the Holy Land, where he visited *Jerusalem. He wrote many other works.

Evagatorium, ed. G. D. Hassler (Stuttgart, 1843–9); Eng. tr. by A. Stewart (Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society, 7–10; 1892–3). H. F. M. Prescott, Friar Felix at Large: A Fifteenth-century Pilgrimage to the Holy Land (New Haven, Conn., 1950); id., Once to Sinai: The Further Pilgrimage of Friar Felix Fabri (1957). P. S. Allen, The Age of Erasmus (1914), pp. 238–51. A. Duval in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 326–9, s.v. 'Fabri (1), Félix'; K. Hannemann in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 2 (1980), cols. 682–9, s.v., with bibl.

Fabri, Johannes. See FABER, JOHANN.

Fabricius, Johann Albert (1668–1736), *Lutheran classical scholar and bibliographer. Born at Leipzig and educated there and at Quedlinburg, in 1693 he settled in Hamburg as a private librarian. From 1699 until his death he taught rhetoric and ethics and was rector of the Johanneum from 1708 to 1711.

Fabricius was an indefatigable student whose monumental bibliographical work, if lacking in scientific accuracy, laid the foundations for all subsequent histories of literature. His Bibliotheca Graeca (14 vols., 1705–28; revised and continued by G. C. Harles, 1790–1812) covered the period from Homer to the fall of *Constantinople (1453). His other compilations include the Bibliotheca Latina (1697; revised and enlarged, 3 vols., 1721–2), Bibliotheca Latina Mediae et Infimae Aetatis (5 vols., 1734–6; vol. 6, in collaboration with C. Schoettgen, 1746). He also did important work on the Apocrypha, publishing the Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti (2 vols., 1703, enlarged with 3rd vol., 1719) and the Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti (1713). He also produced the first collected edition of the works of St *Hippolytus (2 vols., 1716–18), and editions of Sextus Empiricus (1718), St *Philaster of Brescia (1721) and Dio Cassius (completed by H. S. *Reimarus, 1750–1).

H. S. Reimarus (son-in-law), De Vita et Scriptis Joannis Alberti Fabricii Commentarius (Hamburg, 1737). There is also a brief introd. on Fabricius's life and works prefixed to the edn. of his Bibliotheca Latina (6 vols. bound in 3, Florence, 1858), vol. 1, pp. xx–xxiv. B. Heurtebize in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 2063–5; H. Reincke in Neue Deutsche Biographie, 4 (1959), pp. 732 f., both s.v.

Faculties, Court of. The court of the Abp. of *Canterbury which grants faculties (see FACULTY). Its judge, who is called the 'Master of the Faculties', is usually the same person as the *Dean of the Arches and Auditor. After it had been enacted by the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 that dispensations, licences, and faculties which had previously been granted by the Pope were henceforth to be granted by the Abp. of Canterbury in the provinces both of Canterbury and of *York, the Court of Faculties was established in 1534 to take over this jurisdiction.

D. S. Chambers (ed.), Faculty Office Registers 1534–1549: A Calendar of the first two Registers of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Faculty Office (Oxford, 1966), with valuable introd. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

faculty. A dispensation or licence from an ecclesiastical superior permitting an action to be done or a position to be held which without it could not lawfully be done or held. Thus the Preface to the *Ordinal in the BCP forbids anyone to be admitted a deacon under 23 years of age 'unless he have a Faculty'. Under the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 the Court of *Faculties was created to restrain persons from suing for dispensations from Rome. As in every diocese the consecrated lands and buildings, with their contents, are in the ultimate guardianship of the Bishop, faculties are necessary for additions or alterations to churches and churchyards. They are normally issued by the Bishop's *Chancellor or, since the Care of Churches and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1991, in uncontested cases by the *Archdeacon, and without a faculty the erection of, e.g., an altar, a statue, or a memorial tablet in a church is illegal. When once erected (whether with or without a faculty), a fresh faculty is needed for the removal of such objects, even temporarily. Where there is litigation over matters involving faculties, the case is first heard in the *Consistory Court. If the Chancellor gives a conclusive certificate that a point of doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial ('a reserved matter') is involved, an appeal lies from there to the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, while if he certifies that no such point is involved, it lies to the *Arches Court of Canterbury or to the Chancery Court of York, and thence to the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In the academic world a faculty is the organization for the teaching of a particular subject, so called because it can grant a faculty to receive or to supplicate for a degree. The traditional faculties are those of theology, canon and civil law, medicine, and arts.

G. H. Newsom, Faculty Jurisdiction of the Church of England (1988; 2nd edn. by G. L. Newsom, 1993). M. Hill, Ecclesiastical Law (1995), pp. 384–464.

Facundus (6th cent.), Bp. of Hermiane in the province of Byzacena in Africa. In the *Monophysite controversy he was one of the chief supporters of the *Three Chapters. In view of the dispute he made his way to *Constantinople, and in 547–8 completed there an apology for the accused in his treatise 'Pro Defensione Trium Capitulorum', in which he upheld the orthodoxy of each of the three theologians concerned—*Ibas, *Theodore of Mopsuestia (in this case with some reserves), and *Theodoret—and argued forcibly that to condemn the Three Chapters meant to reject the Christology of *Chalcedon (451). After his return to Africa, and the anathematization of the Three Chapters at the Second Council of Constantinople (553), he and his supporters were excommunicated for a time by Pope *Vigilius. He defended himself in two further writings, both of them dating from c.571—'Contra Mocianum Scholasticum' and 'Epistola fidei catholicae in defensione trium capitulorum'.

Works ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ, Paris, 1629; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 67. 527–878; crit. edn. by J.-M. Clément, OSB, and R. Vander Plaetse (CCSL 90A; 1974). Study (in Russian) by A. Dobroklonskij (Moscow, 1880; discussed by A. *Harnack in TLZ, 1880, cols. 632–5). R. B. Eno, 'Doctrinal Authority in the African Ecclesiology of the Sixth Century: Ferrandus and Facundus', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 22 (1976), pp. 95–113, esp. pp. 100–13; M. Simonetti, 'Haereticum non facit ignorantia. Una nota su Facondo di Ermiane e la sua difesa dei Tre Capitoli', Orpheus, NS 1 (1980), pp. 76–105. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 320–4; M. Pellegrino in EC 5 (1950), cols. 954 f., s.v. 'Facondo di Ermiana'.

Fairbairn, Andrew Martin (1838–1912), *Congregational theologian. Of Covenanting ancestry, Fairbairn was born at Inverkeithing in Fife and studied at Edinburgh University. He was successively minister of the *Evangelical Union churches at Bathgate (1860–72) and St Paul's Street, Aberdeen (1872–7), principal of the (Congregational) Airedale Theological College at Bradford (1877–86), and first principal of Mansfield College, Oxford (1886–1909). Through visits to Germany he came under the influence of I. A. *Dorner, F. A. G. *Tholuck, and E. W. *Hengstenberg, and warmly advocated theological liberalism. His eloquence, learning, and personal character won him a unique position among Congregational ministers in his generation. His writings include Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History (1876), The Place of Christ in Modern Theology (1893), Catholicism, Roman and Anglican (1899), and The Philosophy of the Christian Religion (1902). He also took an active part in religious and political controversy, notably in connection with the Education Act of 1902.

W. B. Selbie, Life of Andrew Martin Fairbairn (1914). P. [B.] Hinchliff, God and History: Aspects of British Theology 1875–1914 (Oxford, 1992), pp. 185–97. W. B. Selbie in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 179 f.

faith. The term is used in at least two quite distinct senses in a Christian context.

(1) It is applied objectively to the body of truth ('the Christian faith') to be found in the *Creeds, in the definitions of accredited *Councils, in the teachings of doctors and saints, and, above all, in the revelation contained in the Bible. This complex of doctrine is held to embody or else follow from the teaching of Christ Himself, and as God's supreme revelation to mankind to be wilfully rejected by man only at the peril of his salvation. Technically it is known as 'the faith believed in' (fides quae creditur).

(2) To this objective faith is opposed 'subjective' faith. Faith thus understood is the first of the three '*theological virtues', set by St *Paul side by side with 'hope' and 'love' (1 Cor. 13: 13). It is the human response to Divine truth, inculcated in the Gospels as the childlike and trusting acceptance of the *Kingdom and its demands, and known as 'the faith whereby belief is reached' (fides qua creditur). Acc. to orthodox theologians, faith in this latter sense is a supernatural, not a natural, act. The Christian can make an act of faith only in virtue of God's action in his soul.

Such clarity was, however, reached only gradually. The Greek word for faith (πίστις) was already current in philosophical circles in contrast to knowledge (ἐπιστήμη, γνῶσις); it signified intellectual assent based on unspecifiable grounds, understood either disparagingly (as by *Plato), or as the grasp of first principles (as by *Aristotle). The NT, prob. influenced by Hebrew usage, understood by faith less intellectual assent than personal trust: it is this that is the foundation of the Christian's relationship to God and Christ, and it is often correlated with knowledge (e.g. Jn. 17 and 1 Cor. 13). *Clement of Alexandria was the first to draw these traditions together, defending the Christian stress on faith against pagan (Platonic) criticism by invoking the Aristotelian understanding, so that faith is seen as a divinely given assent to the fundamental principles of Christianity. Clement's synthesis gradually established itself among Christian theologians. At the same time, though apparently independently, the Platonic tradition revalued πίστις, so that for *Proclus it is ranked with truth and love.

With St *Augustine the classic understanding of faith was achieved. Faith demands an act of the will, and is thus more than intellectual. He defined it as 'thinking with the giving of assent' (cum assentione cogitare). This voluntaristic moment in the act of faith accounts for the moral quality which it is held to possess and the conviction that wilful unbelief, as a misdirection of the will, merits the censure of God. To express this twofold element in the full act of faith, *Peter Lombard distinguished between (a) 'unformed faith' (fides informis), i.e. pure intellectual assent to a proposition, and (b) 'faith formed by love' (fides formata caritate), i.e. the developed faith, e.g. of St Paul in Gal. 5: 6. It is in the light of this distinction that the apparent opposition between the teaching of the author of the Epistle of St *James and that of St Paul about faith has been held to be capable of reconciliation.

As a supernatural act, faith is a higher faculty than reason. In the developed teaching of the Middle Ages, a distinction (which can be traced back to *Boethius) was drawn between those truths accessible to the human intellect by the light of natural reason, e.g. the existence of God, and those which could be appropriated only by faith, e.g. belief in the Trinity. There was difference of opinion as to whether there were any truths which could in a full sense be the objects of both faith and reason; in so far as any overlap was conceded, it was held by the most reputable theologians that the truths of reason and of faith were coincident. Only in the later and decadent Scholasticism was it maintained that one and the same proposition could be proved untrue by reason and accepted as true by faith.

At the Reformation, the part of faith in the Christian religion received a new emphasis. M. *Luther's teaching on *justification by 'faith alone' stressed the voluntaristic side of faith, in so far as faith was allowed to be a human act at all. The chief moment in it was trust (fiducia), and supremely personal trust and confidence in the atoning work of Christ. The Lutheran theologians of the next generation analysed the act of faith into its three components of knowledge (notitia), assent (assensus), and trust (fiducia), though they held that the two former were subordinate to fiducia. The Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles, while by referring favourably to justification by faith only (Art. XI) and denying merit to works done before justification (Art. XIII) they guard against ascribing virtue to human effort apart from divine grace, assert, nevertheless, that works which are the fruit of faith are pleasing to God (Art. XII). The ancient opposition between faith and knowledge re-emerged in the wake of the *Enlightenment in such thinkers as I. *Kant and S. *Kierkegaard, for whom faith is so contrasted with knowledge as to be a subjective attitude without objective content.

The Second *Vatican Council both exemplified and initiated a new phase in the inter-confessional exploration of faith. In the first place it did not conceive the 'truth' of 'the Gospel' in such exclusively propositional terms as previous theologians had done. Scriptural truth is that 'which, for the purpose of our salvation, God wished to be consigned to Holy Writ'. That is to say, the truth is Christ Himself, and what He has done for men, not a series of theological or anthropological propositions. Further, in expounding this 'truth' that is Christ and His work, the RC Church now acknowledges in a new way that Scripture and Tradition form a single source of revelation, and is willing to distinguish between the deposit of truth itself and the mode in which this truth is communicated. There are contingent elements in doctrinal definitions, and therefore doctrines may be, and indeed must be, reformulated, as they undergo development.

Secondly, RC theologians have shown a remarkably profounder grasp of the 'Protestant' principle of justification by faith alone, an understanding richer in many ways than that of many Protestants. The Second Vatican Council also recognized the importance of conscience as a gift to the human person that must never be overridden, but always called to the affirmations of faith willingly.

Classic discussion in St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, II (2), qq. 1–7. J. *Butler, *The Analogy of Religion (1736); J. H. *Newman, An Essay in Aid of a Grammar of Assent (1870; ed., with introd. and notes, by I. T. Ker, Oxford, 1985). From the vast modern literature, the foll. may be mentioned: M. C. *D'Arcy, SJ, The Nature of Belief (1931; 2nd edn., 1958); J. *Oman, The Natural and the Supernatural (1931); D. M. Emmet, Philosophy and Faith (1936); B. Mitchell (ed.), Faith and Logic: Oxford Essays in Philosophical Theology (1957); id., The Justification of Religious Belief (1973); J. [D.] Hick, Faith and Knowledge (Ithaca, NY, 1957; 2nd edn., London, 1967); id. (ed.), Faith and the Philosophers (1964); J. Pieper, Über den Glauben (Munich, 1962; Eng. tr., 1964); W. Cantwell Smith, Faith and Belief (Princeton, NJ, 1979). S. Harent in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 55–514, s.v. 'Foi'; A. de Bovis, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 529–619, s.v. 'Foi'; C. H. Pickar and others in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 792–804, s.v.

Faith, Defender of the. See DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.

Faith, Promoter of the. See PROMOTOR FIDEI.

Faith, St (d. *c.*287), virgin and martyr. Acc. to the legend which dates from the 8th or 9th cent., she suffered for the faith at Agen in Aquitaine, under Maximian Hercules and the procurator Dacian, together with St Caprasius. Dulcidus, Bp. of Agen (5th cent.), translated her relics to a basilica which he built in honour of St Faith and St Caprasius, and many miracles are believed to have taken place at her shrine. Her relics were brought *c.*855 to the abbey of Conques, which became a famous place of pilgrimage, visited e.g. by the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa. Her cult was very popular in the Middle Ages, and many churches were dedicated to her, among them that of Farringdon Ward Within, London. This was pulled down in 1240 to make room for the choir of *St Paul's Cathedral, a chapel of which was then dedicated to St Faith. This dedication survives in the 'St Faith's Chapel' in the crypt of the present cathedral. Feast day, 6 Oct.

AASS, Oct. 3 (1770), pp. 263–329, incl. text of Acta, pp. 288 f.; other versions of the Acta listed in BHL 1 (1898–1899), pp. 441–4 (nos. 2928–65), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 334–6. The Liber Miraculorum Sancte Fidis, ed. A. Bouillet (Paris, 1897). On the 11th-cent. Chanson de Sainte Foi (ed., with modern Fr. tr., by A. Thomas, Paris, 1925), see E. Hoepffner and P. Alfaric, La Chanson de Sainte Foy (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, 32 and 33; 1926). A. Bouillet and L. Servières, Sainte Foy, vierge et martyre (1900). L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, 2 (2nd edn., 1910), pp. 144–6. J. Daoust in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 1358–64, s.v. 'Foy (Sainte)'.

Faith and Order. The branch of the *Ecumenical Movement of which the chief object has been to bring about the reunion of the Christian Churches, and by which the Conferences at *Lausanne in 1927 and *Edinburgh in 1937 were organized. It is now absorbed in the *World Council of Churches.

L. Vischer (ed.), A Documentary History of the Faith and Order Movement, 1927–1963 (St Louis [1963]); G. Gassmann (ed.), Documentary History of Faith and Order 1963–1993 (Faith and Order Paper, 159; Geneva [1993]).

Faithful, Mass of the (Lat. Missa Fidelium). The part of the *Mass which extends from the *Offertory to the end. It contains all the most essential parts of the service. It is so named because in early times the (unbaptized) *catechumens were dismissed before the Offertory and only the baptized (the 'fideles') remained to join in the Eucharistic offering.

falda. A white vestment formerly worn over the alb and reaching from the hips to the ground. Its use was confined to the Pope, who, until recently, wore it on solemn occasions.

E. Dante in EC 5 (1950), col. 962, s.v., with ill., col. 961.

faldstool (Lat. faldistorium). In the RC Church the folding stool used in the *sanctuary by bishops and other prelates when they do not occupy the throne. The absence of a back enables it to be used both for sitting on and as a *prie-dieu. Unlike the throne, it may be used not only by the bishop of the diocese but also by prelates who have no *ordinary jurisdiction in the place.

Falk, Paul Ludwig Adalbert (1827–1900), German Liberal politician. In 1872 he was appointed Minister of Public Worship and Education by Bismarck with explicit instructions to defend the rights of the state against the Church in the *Kulturkampf. In this he succeeded only in two points, namely in excluding the Church from the supervision of schools and from civil marriage. His *May Laws, designed to put the relations between Church and state on an entirely new basis, were a failure owing to the uncompromising resistance not only of the Catholic Church but also of orthodox Protestantism to a measure destructive of all positive Christian education. Bismarck's consequent change of policy in 1879 caused Falk's resignation and also marked the end of the Kulturkampf.

Short study by H. R. Fischer (Hamm, 1901); full Life by E. Foerster (Gotha, 1927). R. Ruhenstroth-Bauer, Bismarck und Falk im Kulturkampf (Heidelberger Abhandlungen, 70; 1944). K. Kupisch in RGG (3rd edn.), 2 (1958), cols. 862–4, s.v. 'Falk (1), Adalbert', with further refs. See also works cited under KULTURKAMPF.

Fall, the. The first act of disobedience of *Adam and *Eve whereby humanity lost its primal innocence and entered upon its actual condition of sin and toil. As described in Gen. 2 f., Eve, tempted by the serpent, ate of the forbidden fruit of the 'tree of the knowledge of good and evil' in the Garden of *Eden, and then induced Adam to follow her example. The punishment was expulsion from Paradise, the imposition of toilsome work on Adam and the pains of childbirth on Eve, and the decree of perpetual enmity between the serpent, which would 'bruise [man's] heel', and the man, who would 'bruise [the serpent's] head' (Gen. 3: 15). Acc. to traditions as old as the *Apocrypha, Eve's sin involved mankind in the loss of immortality (cf. Ecclus. 25: 24), and the serpent was identified with the Devil (cf. Wisd. 2: 23 f.). These conclusions are not drawn elsewhere in the OT. The story itself suggests rather that Adam and Eve were not originally possessed of immortality (though they might have obtained it; cf. Gen. 3: 22 f.). What the biblical narrative teaches positively is that sin arose by free human choice, and that all human life has been thereby radically altered for the worse, so that its actual state is very different from that purposed for it by the Creator. The doctrine of evil which it inculcates is, as against every form of dualism (which makes evil as well as good of Divine origin), pantheism (which denies the distinction between Creator and creation), or determinism (which denies human free will), that sin arose through free human agency; and this belief is integral to Christianity and Judaism alike.

Other questions, often more prominent in theological debate but really subordinate to this fundamental doctrine, concern (1) the ultimate origin of the evil manifested in Eve's and Adam's sin, (2) the historicity of the story of Gen. 2 f., and (3) the nature and extent of the consequences of the Fall for mankind. These issues are closely intertwined.

The common Christian belief down to modern times considered the Fall of Adam and Eve as an historical event. The serpent, which is represented in the Gen. narrative quite naïvely as a talking animal, was identified with the Devil or Satan, a spiritual being, who must have been created good and himself previously fallen, and hence the original Fall was inferred to be that of Satan rather than that of Adam and Eve. Adam and Eve being considered as historical persons and all subsequent humanity as their descendants, the consequences of the Fall were held to affect all mankind by inheritance, or even by a theory of 'seminal identity' by which an ancestor's act may involve all his descendants also (cf. Heb. 7: 9 f.). Acc. to the view expressed in Wisd. and Ecclus. (cf. above) and strongly endorsed by St *Paul (Rom. 5: 12 ff., 1 Cor. 15: 22), it was Adam's sin that 'brought death into the world' because 'in Adam all sinned' and therefore became liable to death. It is noteworthy that, as St Paul appeals to this belief as a premiss accepted by his readers, it appears to have been generally accepted in the early Church, at least among Gentile Christians, and the Fall thus to have been, from the first, part of the background against which the Christian doctrine of Redemption was expounded. Until the rise of *Pelagianism it was not a subject of controversy. The Greek Fathers, however, tended to minimize the evil done to man by the sin of Adam, laying more stress on the responsibility of each individual, while the Latins (esp. St *Augustine), emphasizing the enormity of Adam's transgression and the magnitude of its consequences for mankind, developed the doctrine of *Original Sin (q.v.), which Pelagius opposed by denying the reality of any evil consequences from the Fall to subsequent mankind. *Origen (q.v.), almost alone among the Fathers, found the ultimate source of evil in a pre-mundane Fall or falls of equal created spirits who, by voluntarily declining to a greater or less degree from the goodness in which they were created, became respectively demons, men, or angels. For him the human fall took place in a spiritual pre-natal existence (De Princ. 2. 8 f.) and the story of Eden was to be interpreted allegorically (De Princ. 4. 3).

In modern times the whole concept of the Fall has often been rejected as inconsistent with the facts of man's development known to science, esp. with evolution. The biblical story itself belongs to the realm of myth and is told with much anthropomorphic and metaphorical detail. Orthodox Christian apologists insist, however, that man possesses a power of moral choice not shared with the animals; that at some stage in human development this God-given power began to be misused; and that once begun, such wrong use has necessarily affected subsequent generations and given rise to the vast accumulated power of sin in the world. They would say that it was this fact which made necessary the redemption of the world by Christ. Since it was in close connection with the doctrine of Redemption that Christian thought about the Fall developed, the Church has seen in the story of Gen. 2 f. a fundamental truth about man in his relation to God, even if the truth is held to be there conveyed in legendary form.

Belief in the fall of Adam is defined as de fide by the Council of *Trent, Sess. V, Can. 1 (AD 1546). F. R. Tennant, The Sources of the Doctrines of the Fall and Original Sin (1903); id., The Origin and Propagation of Sin (Hulsean Lectures, 1902). N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (Bampton Lectures for 1924, 1927). L. Ligier, Péché d'Adam et péché du monde (Théologie, 43 and 48; 1960–1), with extensive refs. J. [H.] Hick, Evil and the God of Love (1966). J. Denney, J. A. MacCulloch, and D. S. Margoliouth in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 701–15, s.v. See also comm. on Gen. and bibl. to ORIGINAL SIN.

False Decretals. A collection of canon law documents said in the text to be the work of '*Isidore Mercator' (q.v.), but in fact compiled *c.*850, prob. in France in the circle of the opponents of *Hincmar, Abp. of Reims. In its fullest form it contains three sections, the second and third of which are based on the genuine canons of councils and *decretals of the 7th-cent. *Collectio Hispana, though much adapted and interpolated. The first section consists of letters in the names of pre-Nicene Popes from *Clement I to *Miltiades (d. 314), and includes the *Donation of Constantine; all are spurious. A shorter form, containing only the decretals from Clement to *Damasus (d. 384), circulated independently. The forgeries deal with many issues, but show a special concern for the protection of the rights of diocesan bishops against their metropolitans and the laity, and for the Papal supremacy as their guarantee. The compiler or compilers produced a number of related works, based on very wide reading, though the False Decretals were by far the most influential. They were drawn on extensively in the canon law collections of the reform associated with *Gregory VII, and so many of them reappear in the Decretum of *Gratian. They seem to have been known to Pope *Nicholas I by 865; although some of his contemporaries asserted that they were forgeries, throughout the rest of the Middle Ages they were generally assumed to be historical. Both T. *More and J. *Fisher, unaware of their true character, used them to defend the claims of the Papacy. Their genuineness was systematically attacked by the Magdeburg *Centuriators in 1559, and is now universally rejected.

Editio princeps in J. Merlin, Concilia (Paris, 1524 ['1523']); they are also pr. in subsequent edns. of the Concilia. The 2nd edn. of Merlin's text (Cologne, 1530) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 130. P. Hinschius (ed.), Decretales Pseudo-Isidorianae et Capitula Angilramni (Leipzig, 1863), has a valuable preface, but is only partly based on the manuscripts and has many limitations. P. Fournier and G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, 1 (1931), pp. 127–233. E. Seckel, Die erste Zeile Pseudoisidors, die Hadriana-Rezension In nomine domini incipit praefatio libri huius und die Geschichte der Invokationen in den Rechtsquellen, posthumously ed. by H. Fuhrmann (Sb. (Berl.), Klasse für Philosophie, Geschichte, Staats-, Rechts- und Wirtschaftswissenschaften, Jahrgang 1959, no. 4; 1959), with detailed bibl. S. Williams, Codices Pseudo-Isidoriani (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series C, 3; New York, 1971). H. Fuhrmann, Einfluss und Verbreitung der pseudoisidorischen Fälschungen (Schriften der MGH, 24; 3 vols., 1972–4), with discussion of bibl. to date. J. Richter, 'Stufen pseudoisidorischer Verfälschung', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 64 (1978), pp. 1–72. E. Seckel in PRE (3rd edn.), 16 (1905), pp. 265–307, s.v. 'Pseudoisidor', retains much of its value. H. Fuhrmann in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 820–4, s.v.

Familists. The members of a sect called the 'Family of Love', founded by H. *Nicholas (q.v.) in Emden in 1540. Though opposed to *solifidianism, they believed in the '*Inner Light' and the birth of Christ in their own souls; they rejected the services and sacraments of the official Churches, but were advised by their founder to conform outwardly to the religion of the State. The sect won supporters in Germany, the Netherlands, France, and England. On the Continent of Europe it all but disappeared soon after 1600, but in England, despite Queen *Elizabeth I's 'Proclamation against the Sectaries of the Family of Love' in 1580 and the arrest of a number of its members, it survived until the end of the 17th cent. Nicholas's books were reprinted under O. *Cromwell and were widely read by the *Quakers and the English admirers of J. *Boehme.

Chronica, Ordo Sacerdotis, Acta HN: Three Texts on the Family of Love, ed., with Eng. summaries, by A. [A. H.] Hamilton (Leiden, 1988). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia [1962]), esp. pp. 477–82; 3rd edn. (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirksville, Mo. [1992]), pp. 723–9. H. de la Fontaine Verwey, 'The Family of Love', Quaerendo, 6 (1976), pp. 219–71. A. [A. H.] Hamilton, The Family of Love (Cambridge, 1981). J. D. Moss, "Godded with God": Hendrik Niclaes and his Family of Love (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 71, pt. 8; 1981). N. Smith, Perfection Proclaimed: Language and Literature in English Radical Religion 1640–1660 (Oxford, 1989), pp. 144–84.

fan, liturgical (Lat. flabellum, Gk. ῥιπίδιον or ἑξαπτέρυγον, 'six-winged', so called because the figure of a seraph appears upon it). From the 4th cent. at latest, fans were sometimes used at the Eucharist for keeping flies and other insects away from the oblations, and the practice continued in the W. down to the 14th cent. Their use survives in the *Byzantine, *Armenian, *Coptic, and *Syrian Orthodox rites, though their significance now is purely symbolic. As a mark of honour, until recently two fans were used whenever the Pope was carried in procession on the '*sedia gestatoria'.

Braun, AG, pp. 624–60, with plates 140–2. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1610–25, s.v. 'Flabellum', with extensive bibl. to date.

Fanar, the. See PHANAR, THE.

fanon. Of uncertain derivation, the word has been applied to several accessories of religious worship, apparently common to all being the fact that they are made from an embroidered piece of stuff. Among them are the *maniple; the white linen cloth in which the congregation formerly brought their Eucharistic offerings; the strings of the *mitre; the *humeral veil of the *subdeacon; and processional banners. In modern usage the word is confined to the collar-shaped liturgical garment (Ital. fanone) until recently worn by the Pope over his *amice when celebrating a solemn pontifical Mass. This garment was at one time known as the 'orale'.

Braun, LG, pp. 52–7.

Farel, Guillaume (1489–1565), Reformer of French Switzerland. While studying in Paris (*c.*1509–17), he came under the influence of J. *Faber (Stapulensis). He adopted Protestantism in the early 1520s and became involved with a group of scholars and theologians of Protestant sympathies (incl. Faber) who were active in Meaux under the leadership of its Bishop, Guillaume Briçonnet. After the group's dispersal, in 1524 Farel moved to Basle, where he disputed with the opponents of the Reformation. He was banished a few months later, prob. at the instigation of *Erasmus. He prepared the first Protestant liturgy in French (La maniere et fasson) prob. in 1528, though the earliest known copy dates from 1533, and in 1529 he published his famous Sommaire, a declaration of Protestant belief. He introduced the Reformation in Neuchâtel in 1530. Together with P. *Viret, he established the Reformation in the Canton of Vaud and in 1534–6 in Geneva. It was he who persuaded J. *Calvin to stay in Geneva, and the two were expelled together in 1538. Farel then returned to Neuchâtel, where he put into practice the Genevan Reformation model. Later, he was active in bringing about the *Consensus Tigurinus (1549).

Farel's Le Pater Noster et le Credo en Françoys [devotional expositions] was repr. from the first edn. [1524], with slight emendations and introd. by F. [M.] Higman (Geneva, 1982). Modern Lives by M. Kirchhofer (2 vols., Zurich, 1831–4; Eng. tr., 1837), S. Delattre (Paris, 1931), the monumental composite vol., Guillaume Farel, 1489–1565: Biographie nouvelle écrite d'après les documents originaux par un groupe d'historiens, professeurs et pasteurs de Suisse, de France et d'Italie (by C. Schnetzler and others), ed. by the Comité Farel (Neuchâtel and Paris, 1930), and D. Nauta (Amsterdam, 1978). Actes du Colloque Guillaume Farel, Neuchâtel, 29 septembre–1ᵉʳ octobre 1980, ed. P. Barthel and others (Cahiers de la Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie, 9; 2 vols., Geneva, etc., 1983), with catalogue of Farel's correspondence, 2, pp. 13–104, and bibl. of his works, pp. 105–45. H. Heyer, Guillaume Farel: Essai sur le développement des idées théologiques (thesis, Geneva, 1872; Eng. tr., Texts and Studies in Religion, 54; Lewiston, Queenston, and Llandaff [1990]). E. Jacobs, Die Sakramentslehre Wilhelm Farels (Zürcher Beiträge zur Reformationsgeschichte, 10; 1978). O. Fatio in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 30–6, s.v.

farmery, also 'fermery', another form of 'infirmary', esp. of a monastery. It was usually a separate building in the charge of the *infirmarian (q.v.). In it the normal monastic discipline as to food and other matters was greatly relaxed.

Farrar, Frederic William (1831–1903), Dean of *Canterbury. He was educated at *King's College, London, where he was influenced by F. D. *Maurice, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and became in turn housemaster at Harrow (1855), headmaster of Marlborough (1871), Canon of Westminster and Rector of St Margaret's (1876), and Dean of Canterbury (1895). A 'Broad Church Evangelical', he had great influence on the religious feeling and culture of the Victorian middle classes, esp. through his Life of Christ (1874), which went through 12 editions in a year, and his Life and Works of St Paul (1879). In these he expressed devout faith interpreted by wide scholarship and set out in a popular style. His Eternal Hope (1877), a collection of sermons in which he questioned the doctrine of eternal punishment for the wicked, provoked great controversy. Besides other theological works, Farrar wrote fiction. Eric; or Little by Little (1858), a school tale partly autobiographical, was long popular.

Life by R. Farrar, son (London, 1904), with list of his works, pp. xiii–xxii. R. Bayne in DNB, 1901–1911, 2 (1912), pp. 9–12.

fast. See FASTS AND FASTING.

Fastidius (early 5th cent.), British ecclesiastical writer. *Gennadius (De vir. ill. 56) calls him 'Britannorum episcopus' and attributes to him two works, 'De vita christiana' and 'De viduitate servanda'. Their identity is much disputed. The 'De vita christiana' has sometimes been held to be the work of the same title preserved among the works of St *Augustine; this is certainly *Pelagian, but there are substantial objections to the attribution to Fastidius. Other scholars have sought to identify his 'De vita christiana' with the first work in the 'Corpus Pelagianum' printed by C. P. *Caspari. If this hypothesis were correct, it would follow that Fastidius left Britain for Sicily *c.*410, was converted to Pelagianism by a 'noble lady', intended to visit Rome (perhaps to meet Pelagius), and returned to Britain as bishop *c.*430. The attempts to attribute to Fastidius a work beginning 'Audi, filia', preserved among the writings of *Caesarius of Arles, and the other items in Caspari's 'Corpus Pelagianum' are even more speculative.

C. P. Caspari, Briefe, Abhandlungen und Predigten aus den zwei letzten Jahrhunderten des kirchlichen Altertums und dem Anfange des Mittelalters (Oslo, 1890), pp. 3–167, with notes pp. 223–389; texts, mainly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Suppl. by A. Hamman, OFM, 1 (1958), cols. 1375–505 and 1687–94. The pseudo-Augustinian 'De vita christiana' is repr. from the Benedictine edn. of Augustine in J. P. Migne, PL 40. 1031–46; 'Audi, filia' is repr. ibid. 67. 1094–8. All these works are repr., with Eng. tr. (except for the Ps.-Augustinian 'De vita christiana') in R. S. T. Haslehurst, The Works of Fastidius (1927; inaccurate). G. Morin, OSB, 'Le De vita christiana de l'évêque breton Fastidius et le livre de Pélage "ad viduam"', R. Bén. 15 (1898), pp. 481–93; id., 'Fastidius ad Fatalem? Pages inédites du Vᵉ siècle d'après le manuscrit CCXXI de Reichenau', ibid. 46 (1934), pp. 3–17, with refs. to earlier arts. I. Kirmer, OSB, Das Eigentum des Fastidius im pelagianischen Schrifttum (Diss., Würzburg, 1937), attributing 12 works to Fastidius; R. F. Evans, 'Pelagius, Fastidius, and the Pseudo-Augustinian De Vita Christiana', JTS NS 13 (1962), pp. 72–98, with full history of the controversy; J. Morris, 'Pelagian Literature', ibid. 16 (1965), pp. 26–60. G. de Plinval in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 676 f., s.v. See also bibl. to PELAGIANISM.

fasts and fasting. Fasting, which was rigorously practised in Judaism and by the disciples of St *John the Baptist, was apparently recommended by Christ both by example and teaching (Lk. 4: 2, Mt. 6: 16–18 and Mk. 2: 20). It was observed by the Apostles (Acts 13: 2, 14: 23, 2 Cor. 11: 27), and in the early Church regular weekly fast days soon developed, *Wednesday and Friday being mentioned in the Didache. In the W. *Saturday was later substituted for Wednesday (*c.*400), but again abolished in more recent times. The fast of *Lent (q.v.), which was from the beginning connected with the feast of *Easter, lasted originally only two days, but it had been extended to 40, at least in many places, by the 4th cent. (*Athanasius, Festal Epp.). The E. Church added three further periods of fasting, *Advent (from 15 Nov.), from the Monday after *Pentecost to Sts *Peter and *Paul, and the fortnight before the *Assumption. The W. only developed the *Vigil fasts before the great feasts and the fasts of the *Ember Days.

In early times fasting meant entire abstention from food for the whole or part of the fast day and, in the latter case, a restricted diet. In the E. Church it is still observed with considerable strictness: during the whole of Lent, for example, the ancient rules continue to be followed by many, no meat being eaten, nor animal products (eggs, milk, butter, cheese), and fish only on certain days. In principle, during Lent only one meal is taken, in the middle of the afternoon (after *Vespers), but this discipline is generally confined to monastic circles. In modern RC practice fasting generally means one chief meal at midday and a small 'collation' in the morning and in the evening; in the past, it also included *abstinence from flesh meat, though Days of Abstinence have been distinguished from Fast Days since 1781. The quantity and quality of food to be taken on Fast Days is now simply to conform with approved local custom. The only two universally obligatory Fast Days in the RC Church are *Ash Wednesday and *Good Friday (CIC (1983), can. 1251). The obligation to fast binds those who have attained their majority until they are 60 (can. 1252). In the C of E the BCP contains a 'Table of the Vigils, Fasts and Days of Abstinence' to be observed in the year, but no specific directions are given as to their mode of observance. They were generally kept in the 16th and 17th cents., and as late as the primacy of G. *Sheldon (1663–77) dispensations were taken out for setting aside the Lenten fasts. Their observance was revived in the 19th cent. under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, and the 1969 Canons (B 6. 3), referring to the Days of Fasting etc., listed in the BCP, notes that 'the forty days of Lent, particularly Ash Wednesday and the Monday to Saturday before Easter, ought specially to be observed'.

As a penitential practice, fasting is designed to strengthen the spiritual life by weakening the attractions of sensible pleasures. The early Church continued the Jewish custom of linking fasting and prayer, and in the lives of the saints the two almost always go together. More or less rigorous fasts are practised in all the more austere religious orders, e.g. by the *Carthusians, *Cistercians, and *Carmelites. See also ABSTINENCE and EUCHARISTIC FAST.

A. Linsenmayr, Entwicklung der kirchlichen Fastendisziplin bis zum Konzil von Nicäa (1877); J. Schümmer, Die altchristliche Fastenpraxis: Mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Schriften Tertullians (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, Heft 27; 1933). Useful introd. on the nature and purpose of fasting, with details of Orthodox practice, by K. [T.] Ware in The Lenten Triodion, tr. by Mother Mary and K. [T.] Ware (The Service Books of the Orthodox Church, 1978), esp. pp. 13–28 and 35–37. V. Staley, The Fasting Days Appointed to be Observed in the English Church (2nd edn., 1899). A. J. Maclean, 'Fasting and Abstinence', in W. K. L. Clarke (ed.), Liturgy and Worship (1932), pp. 245–56, with bibl. Id. and A. R. Whitman in PBD (1912), pp. 333 f., s.v. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2481–501, s.v. 'Jeûnes'; P. M. J. Clancy in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 847–50, s.v. 'Fast and Abstinence'. J. Muddiman in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 773–6, s.v. See also bibl. to ABSTINENCE, LENT, EMBER DAYS, VIGILS, and EUCHARISTIC FAST.

Father (Lat. Pater). Originally the title of bishops (cf. the BCP *Ordinal, where the bishop is addressed as 'Reverend Father in God'), it was later applied esp. to confessors, called in medieval English 'ghostly fathers'. As a title of religious the term properly belongs only to *Mendicant Friars, whereas monks and *canons regular are called *Dom (Lat. Domnus or Dominus). In England, however, all RC priests, whether regular or secular, are now called 'Father', a custom introduced apparently from Ireland in the latter half of the 19th cent. and favoured by H. E. *Manning and others. It has also come into widespread currency among Anglo-Catholics. On the Continent other terms are used for the secular clergy, e.g. 'Monsieur le Curé' (or 'Monsieur le Vicaire') in French, or 'Don' in Italian. 'The Holy Father' is a popular title of the Pope.

Fathers, Apostolic. See APOSTOLIC FATHERS.

Fathers, White. See WHITE FATHERS.

Fathers of the Church. From an early date the title (πατήρ) was applied to bishops as witnesses to the Christian tradition, but from the end of the 4th cent. it was used in a more restricted sense of a more or less clearly defined group of ecclesiastical authors of the past whose authority on doctrinal matters carried special weight. St *Basil and St *Gregory of Nazianzus are among the first to prove the orthodoxy of their teaching by appealing to the agreement of series of patristic texts, later known by the technical term 'consensus Patrum'. In the great Christological controversies of the 5th cent. all parties claimed the authority of the Fathers for their teaching, e.g. St *Cyril of Alexandria and the Council of *Ephesus (431) as well as *Theodoret. By the end of the 5th cent. the term had come to be applied also to teachers who were not bishops, e.g. to St *Jerome. The so-called '*Gelasian Decree' gives a list of works of the 'Holy Fathers' which includes even those of the layman *Prosper of Aquitaine. Acc. to the commonly accepted teaching, the Fathers of the Church were characterized by orthodoxy of doctrine, holiness of life, the approval of the Church, and antiquity. This last condition was variously interpreted till the 18th cent. From that time the patristic period is generally held to be closed with St *Isidore of Seville in the W. and St *John of Damascus in the E. Among the E. Orthodox, however, no such limitation is found, and many Orthodox theologians hold the witness of the Fathers to be an abiding mark of the Church.

The authority of the Fathers was held by the older Catholic theologians to be infallible only when they taught a doctrine unanimously. The teaching of individual Fathers, on the other hand, though not lightly to be set aside, was admittedly liable to error. In modern usage *Tertullian, *Origen, and a few other ancient authors, though not of unimpeachable orthodoxy, are usually numbered among the Fathers of the Church. In any case, it is a popular rather than an exact title and, unlike '*Doctor of the Church', not formally conferred.

Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 37–50 ('Kirchenvater, Kirchenschriftsteller und Kirchenlehrer'). G. *Florovsky, 'The Authority of the Ancient Councils and the Tradition of the Fathers', in Glaube, Geist, Geschichte: Festschrift für Ernst Benz, ed. G. Müller and W. Zeller (Leiden, 1967), pp. 177–88; repr. in id., Bible, Church and Tradition: An Eastern Orthodox View (Belmont [1972]), pp. 93–103. É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1192–215, s.v. 'Pères de l'Église'.

Fatima. A small town in the middle of Portugal, famous as a place of pilgrimage to the Basilica and Shrine of Our Lady of Fatima.

On 13 May 1917 three illiterate children, between the ages of 10 and 13, saw a vision of a lady, who reappeared on five subsequent occasions. On the last she declared herself to be 'Our Lady of the Rosary', told them to recite the Rosary daily, and asked for a chapel to be built in her honour. Two of the children died in 1919, but the third,

Lucia Santos (still alive in 1995), became a *Carmelite nun at Coimbra. She wrote two accounts of the visions, in 1936–7 and 1941–2, and by permission of authority she was allowed to reveal a part of the 'secret'. It is thus that we learn the 'Threefold Message of Fatima', namely the practice of Penance, the recitation of the Rosary, and Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Publication of the full 'secret', which could not be unsealed until 1960, has been postponed indefinitely. The end of Communist rule in the Soviet Union has been seen by some as a fulfilment of the promise of the lady on her third appearance that 'if my requests are heeded Russia will be converted'.

There is a vast literature; the more important works include L. Fischer, Fátima: Das portugiesische Lourdes (1930), and other works of this author; L. Gonzaga da Fonseca, SJ, Le meraviglie di Fatima (2nd edn., 1932; many subsequent edns.); W. T. Walsh, Our Lady of Fátima (1949). There is also a popular account by F. Ryan, OP, Our Lady of Fatima (Dublin, 1939), and an attractive record of a pilgrimage to Fatima by C. C. Martindale, SJ, Portuguese Pilgrimage (1949), with bibl., p. 148. E. Dhanis, SJ, 'À propos de "Fatima et la critique"', Nouvelle Revue Théologique, 74 (1952), pp. 580–606. R. Aubert in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 679–82, s.v.

Faulhaber, Michael von (1869–1952), German cardinal. A native of Franconia, he was ordained priest in 1892, spent the years from 1895 to 1898 in Rome, taught theology at Würzburg University from 1899 to 1903, and was appointed professor of OT theology at Strasbourg in 1903. In 1910 he became Bp. of Speyer, and in 1917 Abp. of Munich; he was created cardinal in 1921. In his earlier years Faulhaber made some important contributions to *patristics, notably in his edition in Die Prophetenkatenen nach römischen Handschriften (1889), and in assigning to St *Hesychius of Jerusalem a commentary on the Psalms formerly attributed to St *Athanasius (1901). Later he became the leader of the right-wing German Catholics, and, though originally impressed by A. Hitler after his accession to power (1933), he soon became one of the most courageous and outspoken critics of the Nazis. He also published several books dealing with contemporary problems, e.g. the emancipation of women.

L. Volk (ed.), Akten Kardinal Michael von Faulhabers 1917–1945 (Veröffentlichungen der Kommission für Zeitgeschichte, Reihe A, 17, 26 [1975–8]). Episcopus: Studien über das Bischofsamt ... zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht (1949); Festschrift Kardinal Faulhaber zum achtzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht [1949]. A. Martini, SJ, 'Il Cardinale Faulhaber e l'enciclica "Mit Brennender Sorge"', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 2 (1964), pp. 303–20. G. Schwaiger, 'Kardinal Michael von Faulhaber', ZKG 80 (1969), pp. 359–74. V. Conzemius in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 692–711, s.v.

Faustinus and Jovita, Sts (2nd cent.), martyrs of Brescia. Acc. to the legend, they were brothers of noble birth whose faith excited the wrath of their fellow-townsmen of Brescia. They were taken prisoner under Trajan, and then tortured and transported to Milan, Rome, and Naples, making innumerable converts on the way. Owing to their persistence Hadrian, who happened to pass through Brescia, ordered their execution. Several cities (incl. Brescia, Rome, and *Bologna) claim to possess their relics. It is very doubtful if any of the incidents in the legend is historical, and no mention of them is made by the two best-known early ecclesiastical writers of Brescia, *Philaster and *Gaudentius. Feast day, 15 Feb., suppressed in 1969.

'Acta' with discussion in AASS, Feb. 2 (1658), pp. 805–21. Further discussion and texts ed. F. Savia, SJ, 'La Légende des SS. Faustin et Jovite', Anal. Boll. 15 (1896), pp. 5–72, 113–59, and 377–99. A. Rimoldi in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 735 f., s.v.

Faustus of Milevis (late 4th cent.), *Manichaean propagandist. A native of Milevis, he won fame as a rhetorician at Rome. When Faustus visited Carthage in 383, *Augustine, himself still a Manichee, put himself under his direction; but he found Faustus a fraud, and thus the way was prepared for his acceptance of the Catholic faith. Faustus' teachings can be partly reconstructed from Augustine's Contra Faustum Manichaeum (*c.*400).

For bibl., see AUGUSTINE, ST.

Faustus of Riez, St (d. *c.*490), monastic teacher and theologian. Probably of British or Breton origin, he entered the monastery of *Lérins and in 433 succeeded Maximus as abbot. About 460 he became Bp. of Riez (in Provence), but was later driven from his see by the Visigothic king, Euric, on account of his opposition to Euric's *Arianizing policy. His treatise De Gratia was written *c.*472 to refute the *Predestinarian doctrines condemned by recent councils of Arles and Lyon (and elsewhere ascribed by Faustus to a certain Lucidus). In this work he adopted a *Semipelagian position, insisting even more strongly than John *Cassian on the necessity of human co-operation with Divine grace, and on the initial free will of men, even when in sin, for the acceptance of that grace. His prowess as a preacher is attested by *Sidonius Apollinaris and *Gennadius of Marseilles; a collection of Gallic sermons transmitted under the name of *Eusebius (of Emesa) may be partly based on a corpus of his homiletic works. Though his teaching on grace was condemned at the Second Council of *Orange in 529, he is revered as a saint in the S. of France. Feast day, 28 Sept.

Opera [excluding sermons of Pseudo-Eusebius, but including several others now not regarded as authentic], ed. A. G. Engelbrecht (CSEL 21, 1891, pp. 1–348). J. P. Migne, PL 58. 783–870. Suppl. ed. A. Hamman, OFM, 3 (1963), cols. 492–709, incl. sermons attributed to Eusebius. Crit. edn. of these last by J. Leroy and F. Glorie (CCSL 101, 101A, and 101B; 1970–1). L. A. van Buchem, OP, L'Homélie pseudo-eusébienne de Pentecôte: L'Origine de la Confirmatio en Gaule Méridionale et l'interprétation de ce rite par Fauste de Riez (Nijmegen, 1967), incl. text. G. Weigel, SJ, Faustus of Riez; an historical introduction (Philadelphia, 1938 [rare]). T. A. Smith, De Gratia: Faustus of Riez's Treatise on Grace and its Place in the History of Theology (Christianity and Judaism in Antiquity, 4; Notre Dame, Ind. [1990]), with bibl. E. L. Fortin, AA, Christianisme et Culture philosophique au cinquième siècle (Études Augustininennes, 1959), pp. 43–74. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 311–16 (nos. 961–77). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 473 f. and 651. P. Viard in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 731–4, s.v.; R. J. H. Collins in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 63–7, s.v.; M. Simonetti in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1336–8; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 320 f., s.v.

Fawkes, Guy (1570–1606). The most famous member of the *Gunpowder Plot conspiracy. Born in Yorkshire, he was brought up a Protestant, but becoming a Papist he sold his English property and joined the Spanish Army in 1593. In 1604 he was brought into the Plot by R. *Catesby and given the task of firing the gunpowder. While keeping watch on the cellar he was arrested (5 Nov. 1605), but disclosed the conspiracy only under torture. In company with his fellow-conspirators, T. Winter, A. Rokewood, and R. Keyes, he was executed on 31 Jan. 1606. See also GUNPOWDER PLOT.

[R. Davies], The Fawkes's of York in the Sixteenth Century: including notices of the Early History of Guye Fawkes, the Gunpowder Plot Conspirator (1850), esp. pp. 27–47. D. Carswell (ed.), The Trial of Guy Fawkes and Others: The Gunpowder Plot ('Notable British Trials', 1934). H. Garnett, Portrait of Guy Fawkes: An Experiment in Biography (1962); E. N. Simons, The Devil of the Vault: A Life of Guy Fawkes (1963). A. J. Loomie, SJ, Guy Fawkes in Spain: The 'Spanish Treason' in Spanish Documents (Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, Special Supplement, 9; 1971). See also bibl. to GUNPOWDER PLOT.

Fayûm Gospel Fragment. A brief papyrus fragment, written in the 3rd cent. AD, discovered in Egypt in 1882, which contains an imperfect account of the prediction of St *Peter's denial, closely akin to Mk. 14: 27–30. It is probably an extract from a lost gospel abbreviating and reworking synoptic material; it is less likely to be a fragment of some early ecclesiastical writer who was making a free quotation from the canonical gospels. It is preserved at Vienna among the Rainer Papyri.

The text was pub. by G. *Bickell in ZKT 9 (1885), pp. 498–504. A. *Harnack, 'Das Evangelienfragment von Fajjum', appended to A. Resch, Agrapha (TU 5, Heft 4; 1889), pp. 481–97. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), p. 87; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), p. 102. J. van Haelst, Catalogue des Papyrus Littéraires Juifs et Chrétiens (1976), p. 588 (no. 589). H. Y. Gamble in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 778 f.

Fayumic. A dialect of *Coptic spoken in early Christian times in Middle Egypt. The NT was translated into it, probably from *Sahidic, but only a few fragments of the version exist. It was formerly known (incorrectly) as 'Bashmuric', from a province in the Delta.

feasts, ecclesiastical. These come under three chief headings: (1) SUNDAYS. The weekly commemoration of the Resurrection, which falls on the first day of every week. Sundays have been kept by Christians from Apostolic times as days of worship, and in 321 the Emp. *Constantine proclaimed that Sunday should be a general holiday.

(2) MOVABLE FEASTS. Of these the most important are (a) *Easter, the annual commemoration of the Resurrection, and (b) *Pentecost or Whitsunday, the 7th Sunday after Easter, the commemoration of the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the Church. These commemorate events which took place at the times of the Jewish *Passover and Feast of *Weeks, and like them vary with the Paschal full moon. Certain other feasts, and also the fast of *Lent, vary with the date of Easter.

(3) IMMOVABLE FEASTS. Of these the earliest were probably the anniversaries of martyrs, which were kept at Rome from the 3rd cent., and in Asia Minor as early as the 2nd. Later, other saints were commemorated either on their death-day or the day of translation of their relics, or occasionally on other days. By the 4th cent. various fixed festivals of the Lord, esp. *Christmas and the *Epiphany, became generally observed, and later various feasts of the BVM, with other feasts of the Lord, were added.

Ecclesiastical feasts are observed by a '*Proper' in the *Eucharist and *Offices. The fullest calendars in present use are those of the RC and Orthodox bodies; the BCP provides a list of days to be observed, and a further list without specific instructions that they must be kept. Both together are of modest dimensions, and many modern Anglican liturgies provide an enlarged calendar.

The term festum (commonly translated 'feast' in English) is one of the classifications in the current RC calendar. Festa are of less importance than solemnitates ('solemnities') and of greater significance than memoriae ('memorials'). They usually commemorate less important events in the life of the Lord or saints.

See bibl. to YEAR, LITURGICAL.

Feasts of Obligation. In the RC Church, feast days of outstanding importance which the laity as well as the clergy are obliged to observe by hearing Mass on the day itself or the evening of the previous day and by abstaining from 'work or business that would inhibit the worship to be given to God, the joy proper to the Lord's Day, or the due relaxation of mind and body'. The 1983 CIC (can. 1246) lists, besides all *Sundays, *Christmas Day (25 Dec.), the *Epiphany (6 Jan.), the *Ascension, *Corpus Christi, the Solemnity of the BVM (1 Jan.), her *Assumption (15 Aug.) and *Immaculate Conception (8 Dec.), the feasts of St *Joseph (1 May), Sts *Peter and *Paul (29 June), and *All Saints (1 Nov.). Since, however, Episcopal Conferences, may, with the approval of the Holy See, suppress certain of these days or transfer them to a Sunday, the list is likely to vary in different countries.

Feathers Tavern Petition (1772). A petition to Parliament signed at the Feathers Tavern, Strand, London, by *c.*250 liberal Christians for the abolition of subscription to the *Thirty-Nine Articles, and its replacement by a simple declaration of belief in the Bible. Among its principal sponsors were Francis Blackburne, Archdeacon of Cleveland (1705–87), Theophilus *Lindsey, and John Jebb (1736–86). The petition was presented to the Commons by Sir William Meredith and debated on 6 February 1772. Largely through the influence of a speech of E. Burke it was defeated on a division by 217 votes to 71.

The text of the petition is pr. among The Works . . . of Francis Blackburne, ed. by his son, F. Blackburne, vol. 7 (1805), pp. 15–19, with various associated docs. in the same vol. The greater part of Burke's speech on the subject, which he preserved with a view to possible pub., is in his Works, 1st edn., vol. 5 (1812), pp. 323–36 (ed. F. H. Willis and F. W. Raffety, 6 vols., World's Classics, vol. 3 (1906), pp. 291–303). G. M. Ditchfield, 'The Subscription Issue in British Parliamentary Politics, 1772–79', Parliamentary History, 7 (1988), pp. 45–80, esp. pp. 48–51.

Febronianism. The movement in the RC Church in Germany in the 18th cent. against the claims of the Papacy, esp. in the temporal sphere. It may be considered from some points of view as the German counterpart of *Gallicanism. In 1742 the three Archbishop-Electors invited J. N. von *Hontheim (q.v.), suffragan Bp. of Trier, to investigate their existing grievances against Rome, and in 1763 he published his findings in De statu ecclesiae et legitima potestate Romani pontificis, under the pen-name of 'Justinus Febronius'. The book, while recognizing that the Pope was the head of the Church and the supervisor of Church administration and (subject to the Universal Church or a General Council) of faith and morals, attacked the medieval accretions of temporal power. It advocated that Church affairs should be kept as far as possible in episcopal and civil hands, and that all Papal claims based on the *False Decretals should be annulled. In 1764 it was put on the *Index, but in 1769 it received the approval of the Archbishop-Electors, who drew up a list of thirty objections against the Papal claims. The Archbishop-Electors attempted to assert their claims at Bad *Ems (q.v.) in 1786, but without success. The outbreak of the French Revolution and lack of support from other German bishops caused the movement to collapse. See also WESSENBERG, I. H. VON.

O. Meyer, Febronius, Weihbischof Johann Nicolaus von Hontheim und sein Widerruf (Tübingen, 1880); J. Küntziger, Fébronius et le fébronianisme (Mémoires couronnés et autres mémoires publiés par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique. Collection in-8°, 44; 1891; présenté à la Classe des Lettres dans la séance du 6 mai, 1889). V. Pitzer, Justinus Febronius: Das Ringen eines katholischen Irenikers und die Einheit der Kirche im Zeitalter der Aufklärung (Kirche und Konfession, 20; Göttingen, 1976). A. *Fortescue in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 807–9, s.v.; T. Ortolan in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 2115–24, s.v. 'Febronius'; V. Pitzer in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 67–9, s.v. 'Febronius/Febronianismus', all with bibl.

Fechner, Gustav Theodor (1801–87), psychologist and spiritualistic philosopher. He spent nearly all his life at Leipzig, where he held a professorship from 1834 to 1839. He became well known as a psychologist by his law ('Fechner's Law') of the mathematical relation between the intensity of a sensation and the corresponding stimulus. In philosophy he expounded an extreme form of '*animism', contending that all existents in the universe were endowed with consciousness, and that everything was enclosed by the all-pervasive Being of God. His writings include Elemente der Psychophysik (2 vols., 1860) and Die Tagesansicht gegenüber der Nachtansicht (1879).

There is an Eng. tr. of Fechner's Das Büchlein vom Leben nach dem Tode (orig. pub. under name of Dr Mises; 1836) by H. Wernekke (London, 1882). Selections of his Works in Eng. tr. by W. Lowrie, Religion of a Scientist (New York and London, 1946), with bibl. Life by J. F. Kuntze (nephew; Leipzig, 1892). K. Lasswitz, Gustav Theodor Fechner (1896). J. Brožek and H. Gundlach (eds.), G. T. Fechner and Psychology: International Gustav Theodor Fechner-Symposium, Passau, 12–14 June, 1987 (Passauer Schriften zur Psychologiegeschichte, 6; 1988). A. Zweig in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 3 (1967), pp. 184–6, s.v.

Felicity, St (2nd cent.), Roman martyr. She is one of the seven Roman martyrs named in the Depositio Martyrum of the '*Liberian Catalogue' for 10 July. Acc. to the acta (not later than 6th cent.), she was martyred with her seven sons. Acc. to F. C. *Burkitt and V. L. Kennedy, she is the Felicity referred to in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day, 23 Nov. She has also been commemorated with her sons ('The Seven Brothers') on 10 July.

Acta in T. *Ruinart, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 21–3. Further sources listed in BHL, pp. 429 f. (nos. 2853–5), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 325 f. F. C. Burkitt, 'St Felicity in the Roman Mass', JTS 32 (1930–1), pp. 279–87; V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di antichità cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 164–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 1259–98, s.v. 'Félicité (Passion et cimetière de)'; R. Aubert in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 864–6, s.v. 'Félicité (3)', with bibl.

Felicity, St (d. 203), African martyr. She was one of the companions of St *Perpetua (q.v.), with whom she was martyred. Feast day, 7 Mar. (formerly 6 Mar.).

For the contemporary acta, see PERPETUA.

Felix, St (d. *c.*648), Bp. of Dunwich. He was a native of Burgundy. After converting the East Anglian prince, Sigeberht, then in exile, to Christianity, he made his way to England where, under the direction of Honorius, Abp. of *Canterbury, he successfully preached the Gospel to the heathen in East Anglia. He fixed his episcopal see at the seaport town of Dunwich in Suffolk (now mainly submerged) and acc. to *Bede (HE 2. 15) ruled his diocese for 17 years. His name survives in Felixstowe in Suffolk and Felixkirk in N. Yorks. His relics were preserved at Ramsey Abbey. Feast day, 8 Mar.

The chief authority is Bede, HE 2. 15; 3. 18, 20, 25; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 77 f., 111 f., 115, and 223, with further refs. Short account also in *William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum, 2. 74 (ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton, RS, 1870, p. 147). M. *Creighton in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 291 f.

Felix (d. 818), Bp. of Urgel in Spain. With *Elipandus, Bp. of Toledo, he was one of the leaders of the *Adoptianist heresy. He was charged as a heretic at the Council of Ratisbon (792) in the presence of *Charlemagne, but, on being vanquished in debate, solemnly recanted and a little later publicly renounced his error before *Hadrian I at Rome. Shortly afterwards, however, he became convinced of his heresy again. He professed to be unconvinced by a criticism that *Alcuin wrote of his doctrines and, on his refusal to give way, he was formally accused at the Councils of *Frankfurt (794) and Aachen (799 or 800). At the latter Alcuin apparently persuaded him that his teaching was at variance with Christian tradition, notably as expressed in St *Cyril of Alexandria and St *Leo, and he recanted a second time. But his orthodoxy was not considered altogether irreproachable, and he remained until his death under the supervision of the Abp. of Lyons.

Confessio repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 881–8. The Liber de Variis Quaestionibus adversus Judaeos seu ceteros Infideles vel plerosque Haereticos, ed. A. C. Vega and A. E. Anspach (Escurial, 1940), who ascribed it to St *Isidore of Seville, has been claimed as the work of Felix, by J. Madoz, SJ, 'Una obra de Félix de Urgel, falsamente adjudicada a San Isidoro de Sevilla', Estudios eclesiásticos, 23 (1949), pp. 147–68; the attribution has not won general assent. O. Engels in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), col. 342. See also works cited s.v. ADOPTIANISM.

Fell, John (1625–86), Bp. of *Oxford. He was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he became a Student at the early age of 11. His loyalty to the Crown caused his ejection in 1648, but he contrived with a small group of friends to maintain the C of E service in a private house, and at the Restoration he was rewarded with a canonry at Christ Church and, in Nov. 1660, with the deanery. He took the keenest interest in the spiritual and intellectual life of the college, to which he attracted an impressive array of scholars and noblemen. He regularly went to service four times daily. In 1676 he became Bp. of Oxford, retaining the deanery. His own writings include Lives of H. *Hammond (1661) and R. *Allestree (1684) and a valuable critical edition (the so-called 'Oxford text') of the writings of St *Cyprian (1682). In addition, his patronage of young divines and his labours in re-establishing the University Press did much for the strength of patristic learning in the restored C of E. As the local diocesan, a firm vice-chancellor, and the head of one of the most powerful colleges, Fell largely brought about the re-imposition of Anglican orthodoxy on the University after 1660. He was resolute in opposing Popery, an enemy to Nonconformity and a staunch Tory. He it was who expelled J. *Locke from his Studentship at Christ Church at the order of *Charles II in his time of triumph. He is the subject of the well-known epigram beginning 'I do not love thee, Dr. Fell' (a translation prob. by Thomas Brown, a Christ Church undergraduate, of Martial, Epigrams, 1. 32).

S. Morison and H. Carter, John Fell, the University Press, and the 'Fell' types (Oxford, 1967), esp. pp. 3–58. M. Clapinson (ed.), Bishop Fell and Nonconformity: Visitation Documents from the Oxford Diocese, 1682–83 (Oxfordshire Record Society, 52; 1980). H. L. Thompson, Christ Church ('University of Oxford, College Histories', 1900), pp. 82–104. G. G. Perry in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 293–5. See also works cited under CHRIST CHURCH.

Fellowship of St Alban and St Sergius. See ALBAN, ST, AND ST SERGIUS, FELLOWSHIP OF.

Feminist Theology. A theological movement of various strands which are united in a determination to secure change for the better in terms of social justice for women. Its origins may be traced to 19th-cent. social campaigns, such as that against slavery, and the suffragette movement, but it was only after the end of the Second World War (1945), and particularly in the 1980s, that it posed a serious challenge within the Christian tradition. The catalysts were RC women responding to the work of the Second *Vatican Council, most notably Mary Daly, Rosemary Radford Ruether, and Elisabeth Schüssler Fiorenza.

The central issue for feminist theology is the unease within the Christian tradition about associations of the female or feminine with the godlike. Feminist theologians (men as well as women) argue that the female/feminine can image God in as full (and as limited) a way as God is imaged by the male/masculine. Since it is agreed that God transcends both sex and gender, feminist theologians urge the need for a humanly inclusive theology, the 'envisioning' of God in a gender-inclusive way. They argue that since it is as normal a part of the human experience to be female as male, theology needs to come to terms with this reality in a way that it has not previously done. The insights and experiences of women are as important in theology as those of men, and this claim requires re-evaluation of the language of doctrine and liturgy at least. (They sometimes speak of the*a*logy rather than theology.)

The differences between men and women are, they argue, purely biological in function, but what a particular tradition or society makes of these differences is of importance, and it is held that the Christian tradition has fostered a disabling gender construction for women. The central stumbling-blocks to attributing the full 'image of God' to women have been fourfold. First, the failure to find the feminine in God, already mentioned. The others are the insistence that woman is wholly derivative and hence secondary to man; the assumption that woman is characterized by passivity; and the tendency to identify women with bodiliness as opposed to the transcendent mind. While men have been traditionally characterized as active, intelligent, and strong—qualities which are attributed par excellence to God—the religiously sanctioned gender construction of women is that they are passive, emotional, weak, and particularly responsible for sin and evil. With this view is linked an assumption about the role of men and women in procreation. Whereas women are now held to have at least an equal part in human reproduction, the earlier belief was that it was the male who is primarily creative and that the child originates essentially only from one source. This view is regarded as entrenched in Christian symbolism and is held to exert influence on discussions over the ordination of *women and of marriage and family life, as well as the appropriate language for God, notably metaphors of mother/father.

Feminist theologians are not concerned to pretend that the differences between the sexes can be obliterated, since there is no necessary connection between the perception of the differences and the devaluation of women on theological grounds. The meaning of other and same sex relationships is, however, of importance to them, given the experience of heterosexuality and such devaluation. They are also increasingly attentive to the complications which race, class, and particular contexts add to the theological enterprise, and they are aware of the importance of global inter-religious dialogue for women. Central also to feminist theology is the integration of ethics with theology, not only in the interests of women themselves, and in paying attention to neglected areas of men's lives, so transforming relationships between the sexes, but also in the interests of children, who are normally perceived as the responsibility of their mothers rather than of both parents. Attention is therefore paid to the values of which women are culturally the bearers, such as care, interdependence, etc., and the fact that one reason why (universally) women are poor is that they not only bear children, but also do most of the work in rearing them. This is regarded as another area of disjunction between the language of 'fathering' for God and the experience of women. Issues about pregnancy-termination, the use of fetal tissue, artificially assisted human reproduction and ethical questions arising from developments in human genetics are integral to the feminist theological-ethical agenda. Feminist theology is established as a discipline in many higher educational institutions and is influential in ecclesiastical life as a movement in active lay theology and spirituality.

A collection of representative articles was ed., with comm. and bibl., by A. Loades, Feminist Theology: A Reader (1990). Other works by feminist theologians incl. V. Saiving Goldstein, 'The Human Situation: A Feminine View', Journal of Religion, 40 (1960), pp. 100–12; M. Daly, The Church and the Second Sex (1968; repr., with new afterword, Boston [1985]); id., Beyond God the Father: Toward a Philosophy of Women's Liberation (Boston [1973]; London, 1986); M. A. Farley, 'Sources of Sexual Inequality in the History of Christian Thought', Journal of Religion, 56 (1976), pp. 162–76; J. Plaskow, Sex, Sin and Grace: Women's Experience and the Theologies of Reinhold Niebuhr and Paul Tillich (Washington, DC [1980]); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, In Memory of Her: A Feminist Theological Reconstruction of Christian Origins (New York and London, 1983); R. R. Ruether, Sex and God-Talk (1983); id., Women-Church: Theology and Practice of Feminist Liturgical Communities (San Francisco [1985]); G. Lloyd, The Man of Reason: 'Male' and 'Female' in Western Philosophy (1984), pp. 28–37 (on Augustine and Aquinas); P. Trible, Texts of Terror: Literary-Feminist Readings of Biblical Narratives (Overtures to Biblical Theology, 13; Philadelphia [1984]); id., God and the Rhetoric of Sexuality (ibid. [1987]); M. Hayter, The New Eve in Christ: The Use and Abuse of the Bible in the Debate about Women in the Church (1987); A. Loades, Searching for Lost Coins: Explorations in Christianity and Feminism (1987); G. Ramshaw, Worship: Searching for Language (Washington, DC, 1988), pp. 151–87 ('Naming God'); U. King, Women and Spirituality: Voices of protest and promise (1989), with bibl.; J. M. Soskice (ed.), After Eve (1990); and D. Hampson, Theology and Feminism (Oxford, 1990).

Fénelon, François de Salignac de la Mothe (1651–1715), Abp. of Cambrai. He was born in Périgord, of an ancient and distinguished, but impoverished, family. He studied at *St-Sulpice, was ordained *c.*1675, and served in the parish. In 1678 he became superior of the Nouvelles Catholiques, an institution for the education of girls and women recently converted from Protestantism. In 1685–6 he took part in a mission in the Saintonge to instruct those forcibly converted through the *Dragonnades; he was strict on orthodoxy, but humane in his approach. In 1687 he published his Traité de l'éducation des filles, written at the request of the Duchess of Beauvillier. Two years later he was appointed tutor to Louis XIV's grandson, the Duke of Burgundy, for whom he wrote the educational novel Télémaque (pub. 1699, but not in its complete form until 1717). In this work, intended for a future king, he wrote in favour of a limited absolutism, rejected wars of aggression, and held that kings and their policies are subject to moral law in the true interest of the state. The implied criticism of Louis XIV hindered his career. In the autumn of 1688 he met Mme *Guyon; he was impressed by her account of her spiritual experiences (which he regarded as authentic), and esp. by her doctrine of pure love and 'passive' prayer, though he did not apparently care for her voluminous writings in the *Quietist vein. He defended her for a long time and was therefore implicated when she was censured in 1694. In 1693 he was elected a member of the French Academy. In 1695 he became Abp. of Cambrai and later in the same year signed the Thirty-Four Articles of *Issy which condemned Quietism. In 1697, however, he published his Explication des maximes des saints sur la vie intérieure (Eng. tr., 1698), defending the concept of disinterested love and citing the works of recognized (esp. canonized) spiritual writers in support of his position. The book was attacked by J. B. *Bossuet and a long and bitter controversy ensued, sustained by intrigues in Rome. Fénelon was banished from court in the summer of 1679 and spent the rest of his life in his diocese. Here his charitable giving mitigated suffering, esp., but not only, during the War of Spanish Succession. When, under pressure from Louis XIV, Pope Innocent XII condemned 23 propositions from Fénelon's book (Brief of 12 Mar. 1699), he submitted unreservedly, and when the *Jansenist controversy broke out again, he wrote in defence of the orthodox teaching on grace and other matters. He developed his spiritual teaching in his Traité sur l'existence de Dieu (part pub. in 1712; Eng. tr., 1713; the whole not until 1718; Eng. tr., 1720). He was much sought after as a spiritual director. He had considerable influence in the 18th cent., both inside and outside France, and among Protestants (esp. on J. *Wesley), partly because of the Life written by Ramsay.

Œuvres complètes pub. in 35 vols., Versailles and Paris, 1820–30 ('Édition de Versailles'), and 10 vols., Paris, 1848–52 ('Édition de Saint-Sulpice'), repr. Geneva, 1971; modern edn. by J. Le Brun (Paris, 1983 ff.). Œuvres spirituelles, also ed. F. Varillon, SJ (Paris [1954]); Correspondance, ed. J. Orcibal and others (vols. 1–5, Paris, 1972–6; vols. 6 ff., Geneva, 1987 ff.). Eng. tr. of selection of his letters by D. Sandford (London, 1957) and J. McEwen, with introd. by T. *Merton (ibid. [1964]), and of his Traité de l'éducation des filles, with introd. and notes, by H. C. Barnard (Cambridge, 1966). A. M. Ramsay, Histoire de la vie de Messʳ François de Salignac de la Motte-Fénelon (La Haye, 1723; Eng. trs., 1723 and 1897). Introductory studies by K. D. Little (New York [1951]), M. Raymond (Les écrivains devant Dieu, Bruges, 1967), and J. H. Davis (Boston [1979]). H. *Bremond, Apologie pour Fénelon (1910); É. Carcassonne, Fénelon: L'Homme et l'œuvre [1946]; Dix-septième siècle, nos. 12–14 (1951–2), special issue devoted to Fénelon; J.-L. Goré, L'Itinéraire de Fénelon: Humanisme et spiritualité (1957); F. Varillon, Fénelon et le pur amour (Maîtres spirituels [1957]); L. Cognet, Crépuscule des mystiques: Fénelon, Bossuet (Tournai [1958]); B. Dupriez, Fénelon et la Bible: Les origines du mysticisme Fénelonien (Travaux de l'Institut Catholique de Paris, 8 [1961]); R. Spaemann, Reflexion und Spontaneität: Studien über Fénelon (Stuttgart, 1963); H. Hillenaar, Fénelon et les Jésuites (Archives internationales d'histoire des idées, 21; The Hague, 1967); M. Haillant, Fénelon et la Prédication (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris-Nanterre, Série A, vol. 6; 1969); id., Culture et imagination dans les œuvres de Fénelon (1982–3); H. Gouhier, Fénelon philosophe (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 1977). L. Ceyssens, 'Autour de la bulle Unigenitus: Fénelon', Antonianum, 59 (1984), pp. 482–540, repr. in id. and J. A. G. Tans, Autour de l'Unigenitus (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 76; 1987), pp. 521–79. Popular account by M. de la Bedoyere, The Archbishop and the Lady (1956). L. Cognet in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 151–70; id. in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 958–87, both s.v. Revue Fénelon (Paris, 1911 ff.).

Feophan the Recluse, St. See THEOPHAN THE RECLUSE, ST.

Ferdinand II (1578–1637), Holy Roman Emperor. Educated by the *Jesuits at Ingolstadt University, Ferdinand was one of the chief upholders of the *Counter-Reformation. As ruler of Inner Austria since 1596, he had already done much to re-establish Catholicism there when he became Emperor in 1619. He then set about extirpating Protestantism from all the Habsburg domains. Anticipating his repressive measures, the Protestants of Bohemia rebelled and attempted to replace him as king with the *Calvinist Elector Palatine *Frederick III. Although Ferdinand suppressed this revolt, his decision to punish Frederick broadened the conflict into the *Thirty Years War. Continued Catholic successes in the 1620s culminated when his generals, Wallenstein and Tilly, forced the Protestant leader, Christian of Denmark, to agree to the Treaty of Lübeck (1629). Under the influence of his Jesuit confessor, William Lamormaini, Ferdinand published the 'Edict of Restitution', ordering Protestants to restore to the Catholics all appropriated ecclesiastical property within their dominions. Once again the Protestants rebelled, and for a time under *Gustavus Adolphus they almost overthrew the Emperor. Gustavus's death in battle (1632) saved Ferdinand, and for the rest of his reign the Thirty Years War pursued its desultory and disastrous course.

F. C. Khevenhiller, Annales Ferdinandei (9 vols., Regensburg, 1640–6). F. Hurter, Geschichte Kaiser Ferdinands II und seiner Eltern (11 vols., Schaffhausen, 1850–64). J. Loserth (ed.), 'Akten und Korrespondenzen zur Geschichte der Gegenreformation in Innerösterreich unter Ferdinand II', Fontes Rerum Austriacarum: Österreichische Geschichts-Quellen. Abt. 2, Diplomataria et Acta, 58 (1906) and 60 (1907). H. Sturmberger, Kaiser Ferdinand II. und das Problem des Absolutismus (Österreich Archiv; 1957); J. Franzl, Ferdinand II: Kaiser im Zwiespalt der Zeit (Graz, 1978); R. Bireley, SJ, Religion and Politics in the Age of the Counterreformation: Emperor Ferdinand II, William Lamormaini, SJ, and the Formation of Imperial Policy (Chapel Hill, NC [1981]).

Ferdinand V (1452–1516), 'the Catholic', King of Castile and León and II of Aragon. The son of John II of Aragon, in 1469 he married his cousin, *Isabella, the disputed heiress of the Castilian throne. Together they defeated the rival candidate, who was aided by the Portuguese and various Castilian noble families. Ferdinand and Isabella ruled jointly both in Castile and later in Aragon, where Ferdinand inherited his father's throne in 1479. Here they resolved internal social revolts and countered the French threat to the northern border. Isabella's death in 1504 was followed in 1506 by that of their daughter's consort Philip the Handsome; this allowed Ferdinand to resume authority in Castile as governor in his daughter's name. He is known primarily as a skilful politician abroad and for making Spain a dominant power in Italian politics through a reorganized and efficient army. He recovered Roussillon and Cerdagne from the French in 1493, conquered Orán in North Africa in 1509, and helped to bring Lower Navarre under Castilian control in 1512. As a consequence of his political skills, he was enshrined in Machiavelli's Prince. For his conquest of the Moors of Granada in 1492 and his zeal for the Spanish *Inquisition he and Isabella were called the '*Catholic Kings' by *Alexander VI.

W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella (3 vols., '1838' [1837], and many later edns.); R. B. Merriman, The Rise of the Spanish Empire in the Old World and the New, 2 (New York, 1918; repr. 1962); J. M. Doussinague, La política internacional de Fernando el Católico (1944); J. A. Maravall and others, Pensamiento político, política internacional y religiosa de Fernando el Católico (V Congreso de Historia de la Corona de Aragón. Estudios, 2; Saragossa, 1956); J. Vicens Vives, Historia crítica de la vida y reinado de Fernando II de Aragón (vol. 1 only [to 1481], 1962); J. H. Elliott, Imperial Spain 1469–1716 (1963), pp. 5–135; J. Pérez, L'Espagne des Rois Catholiques [1971]; id., Isabelle et Ferdinand: Rois Catholiques d'Espagne [1988]. F. [F. R.] Fernández-Armesto, Ferdinand and Isabella [1975]. L. Suárez Fernández, Los Reyes Católicos: La Expansión de la Fe (Forjadores de Historia, 16 [1990]), and other works of this author. J. N. Hillgarth, The Spanish Kingdoms 1250–1516, 2 (Oxford, 1978), pp. 349–628, with bibl. pp. 667–84 ('The Catholic Monarchs 1474–1516'). J. M. Batista i Roca in The New Cambridge Modern History, 1, ed. G. R. Potter (1957), pp. 316–42. Tarsicio de Azcona, OFM Cap., in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 1027–42, s.v. 'Ferdinand (5) le Catholique', with extensive bibl.

feretory (Lat. feretrum, from Gk. φέρειν, 'to carry'). Another name for a *shrine (q.v.), in which a saint's relics are deposited and venerated.

feria. While in classical Latin the word means 'feast day' or 'holiday', in ecclesiastical language it is applied to such days (other than Saturdays and Sundays) on which no feast falls. The history of this change of meaning is involved and somewhat obscure. Since 1969 in the RC Church, lessons have been supplied for every day in the year, but apart from those days (e.g. in *Advent) with special collects, the rest of the Mass is normally taken from that of the previous Sunday. Before 1969, on ferias with no office of their own, the Sunday Mass was resumed in toto, unless a *Votive Mass was substituted. Under present arrangements, the ferial Masses of Ash Wednesday and Holy Week take precedence over all other celebrations; on other days the 'Ritual Masses' (e.g. those for weddings and ordinations) may be substituted for the ferial Mass and, except on the weekdays of Lent and the last week of Advent (which take precedence over obligatory memorials), Votive Masses and 'Masses for Various Occasions' may also be substituted. The BCP provides that 'the Collect, Epistle and Gospel appointed for the Sunday shall serve all the week after, where it is not in this book otherwise ordered'; the ASB provides lessons for every day.

'Feria' is applied to weekdays already in *Tertullian (De jejunio, 2). For some suggestions as to how the word changed its meaning, see art. by R. Sinker in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 667 f., s.v.

Fermentum (Lat., 'leaven'). In *Rome (5th cent.), the fragments of the Bread of the Eucharist sent on Sundays from the Papal Mass to the presbyters in the parish churches (tituli) to typify the unity of the faithful in Christ. The practice is attested by Pope *Innocent I (Ep. xxv ad Decentium, 5). In a modified form it survived on *Maundy Thursday down to the 8th cent.

Innocent's letter to Decentius, ed. R. Cabié (Bibliothèque de la RHE 58; 1973), pp. 26–8, with Fr. tr., pp. 27–9, and note on Fermentum, pp. 50–3. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du Haut Moyen Age, 2 (SSL 23; 1948), pp. 61–4; J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Fermentum. Ein Symbol kirchlicher Einheit und sein Nachleben im Mittelalter', in Colligere Fragmenta: Festschrift A. Dold, ed. B. Fischer and V. Fiala (Beuron, 1952), pp. 185–90. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 5 (1922), cols. 1371–4, with patristic refs.

Ferrandus (d. before Apr. 548), deacon of the Church of Carthage (the traditional praenomen 'Fulgentius' is prob. mistaken). His 'Breviatio canonum' is an important epitome, systematically arranged, of canons of the early councils, Greek and African. There survive also his Life of St *Fulgentius, and some letters, two of them bearing on the *Theopaschite Controversy.

Works ed. P. F. Chifflet, Dijon, 1649; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 67. 877–962, and ('Vita Fulgentii') ibid. 65. 117–50; some further letters in PL, Suppl. 4 (1967), cols. 22–39. Crit. edn. of the 'Breviatio' by C. Munier, Concilia Africae A.345–A.525 (CCSL 149; 1974), pp. 284–311. Life of Fulgentius also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd. on life and works of Ferrandus, by G. G. Lapeyre (Paris, 1929). M. Simonetti, 'Ferrando di Cartagine nella Controversia Teopaschita', in H. J. Auf der Maur and others (eds.), Fides Sacramenti, Sacramentum Fidei: Studies in Honour of Pieter Smulders (Assen, 1981), pp. 219–32. A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1: Prosopographie de l'Afrique Chrétienne (303–533) (1982), pp. 446–50. M. Jourjon in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 181–3, s.v. 'Ferrand (1)'. See also bibl. to FULGENTIUS.

Ferrar, Nicholas (1592–1637), founder of *Little Gidding. A native of London, in 1605 he entered Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he was one of the most brilliant of his generation, and in 1610 was elected a Fellow. In 1613 he had to leave Cambridge on account of his health and during the next five years travelled on the Continent, chiefly in Germany, Italy, and Spain. Having returned to England in 1618 he was employed by the Virginia Company, of which he became Deputy-Treasurer in 1622. Shortly before the dissolution of the Company, in 1624, he was returned to Parliament, but the sombre political prospect as well as his religious aspirations determined him to give up the brilliant career which was opening before him. In 1625 he settled at Little Gidding, an estate 11 miles NW of Huntingdon, bought by his mother in the preceding year. There he was joined by his brother and brother-in-law with their families in order to establish a kind of community life in accordance with the principles of the C of E. In 1626 he was ordained deacon by W. *Laud, and under his direction this household of some 30 persons lived a life of prayer and work under a strict rule. Ferrar himself played a full part in the life of the community. His austerity was exemplified in a very sparing diet, little sleep, and an almost complete absence of recreation. His piety and ideals, essentially biblical and founded on the BCP, were warmly approved by the Bp. of Lincoln, J. *Williams. In 1633 *Charles I visited Little Gidding and was greatly impressed by their life. The community incurred, however, the hostility of the *Puritans, and after Ferrar's death was denounced in a pamphlet entitled The Arminian Nunnery (1641) as an attempt to introduce RC practices in the country. Most of Ferrar's manuscripts were destroyed in a Puritan raid in 1646, which also brought the community to an end. His only publications are translations of J. de *Valdés' Divine Considerations and L. *Lessius's treatise On Temperance. Feast day in the ASB, 2 Dec.; in the American BCP (1979), 1 Dec.

See also LITTLE GIDDING.

A full Life was compiled by his brother John Ferrar (d. 1657), but was never printed. Part of this survives in a copy made by the Cambridge antiquary, T. Baker (d. 1740), now in the Cambridge University Library. Another Life by F. Peck (d. 1743), who used all the Ferrar papers, was also not printed. A good short Life by F. Turner, Bp. of Ely (d. 1700), based on the work of J. Ferrar, is in the British Library (Add. MS 34656); it was copied by S. Jebb (d. 1772), whose MS is in Cambridge University Library. Both J. Ferrar's and Peck's works were used in P. Peckard, Memoirs of the Life of Mr. Nicholas Ferrar (Cambridge, 1790); subsequently the MSS of both disappeared. Baker's copy of J. Ferrar's Life and Turner's Life ed. J. E. B. Mayor, Nicholas Ferrar: Two Lives (Cambridge, 1855; misleadingly describing the latter as the 'Life of Nicholas Ferrar by Doctor Jebb'). A crit. text of Baker's MS, supplemented where possible by selections from Turner and Peckard, ed. B. Blackstone, The Ferrar Papers (1938), pp. 3–94, with 'A Selection of Family Letters', pp. 223–312. T. T. *Carter (ed.), Nicholas Ferrar: His Household and his Friends (1892); H. P. K. Skipton, The Life and Times of Nicholas Ferrar (1907); A. L. Maycock, Nicholas Ferrar of Little Gidding (1938). M. *Creighton in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 377–80. See also bibl. to LITTLE GIDDING.

Ferrar MSS. A group of NT *minuscule MSS (nos. 13, 69, 124, 346, 543, 1689, and some half-dozen others), the common origin of the first four of which was established in 1868 by W. H. Ferrar, Trinity College, Dublin. They are also known as 'Family 13'. They date from the 11th to the 15th cent. They were prob. written in Calabria or are descendants of a Calabrian archetype. They have affinities with the *Caesarean type of text. A peculiarity of them is the placing of the '*pericope adulterae' (Jn. 7: 53–8: 11) after Lk. 21: 38.

K. *Lake and S. Lake, Family 13 (The Ferrar Group): The Text according to Mark (Studies and Documents, 11; 1941); J. Geerlings, Family 13—The Ferrar Group: The Text according to Matthew (ibid. 19; 1961); id., Family 13 (The Ferrar Group): The Text according to Luke (ibid. 20; 1961); id., Family 13 (The Ferrar Group): The Text according to John (ibid. 21; 1962). Id., The Lectionary Text of Family 13 according to Cod. Vat. Gr. 1217 (ibid. 18; 1959).

Ferrara–Florence, Council of. See FLORENCE, COUNCIL OF.

festivals, ecclesiastical. See FEASTS, ECCLESIASTICAL.

festum. See FEASTS, ECCLESIASTICAL.

Fête-Dieu ('Feast of God'). The French title for the Feast of *Corpus Christi.

Fetter Dienstag (Ger., 'Fat-Tuesday'). An old German name for *Shrove Tuesday, now Fastendienstag or Fastenabend, from the practice of consuming on that day the eggs and fat prohibited during Lent. (Fr. mardi gras.)

Fetter Donnerstag (Ger., 'Fat-Thursday'). The Thursday preceding *Ash Wednesday, traditionally observed, like the following Monday and (*Shrove) Tuesday, as a day of feasting. (Fr. jeudi gras.)

Feuardent, François (1539–1610), French *patristic scholar and controversialist. A native of Coutances, he studied at Bayeux and *Paris, and after becoming a *Franciscan was ordained priest in 1561. For some years he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the cause of the Catholic League, preaching extensively in Paris and the Low Countries. The chief of his numerous writings against *Calvinism is his Theomachia Calvinistica (1604), in which he claimed to refute 1,400 errors of his Calvinist adversaries. His patristic writings, the most valuable part of his work, include editions of St *Ildefonsus of Toledo (1576), St *Irenaeus (1576; reissued, Cologne, 1596), Michael *Psellus (1577), St *Ephraem Syrus (1579), *Arnobius (1596), and *Lactantius (never published). He also commented on several Books of the Bible and produced a new edition of the *postils of *Nicholas of Lyra.

Édouard, OFM Cap., in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 2262–5.

Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas (1804–72), German philosopher. He began as a student of theology at Heidelberg. In 1824 he went to Berlin, where he came under the personal influence of G. W. F. *Hegel and decided to exchange theology for philosophy. In 1828 he began teaching at Erlangen, but for the greater part of his life held no public office. He sought to recast Hegel's teaching in a positivistic sense openly hostile to Christianity. Rejecting all belief in transcendence, he held that theology and philosophy were properly concerned only with the nature of man, who was the true ens realissimum. Christianity was but an illusion, in Hegelian language the 'dominance of subjectivity' (die Allmacht der Subjektivität). Of his many writings the most celebrated was his Wesen des Christentums (1841; Eng. tr. by George Eliot as The Essence of Christianity, 1854). He exercised a far wider influence than the intrinsic merits of his writings deserved, notably on F. *Nietzsche and R. Wagner, and esp. on K. Marx and the whole Communist school in Germany. His other writings include Grundsätze der Philosophie der Zukunft (1843), Das Wesen der Religion (1845), Theogonie (1857), and Gottheit, Freiheit und Unsterblichkeit (1866; vol. 10 of Sämmtliche Werke).

Collected Works in 10 vols., Leipzig, 1846–66; new edn. by W. Bolin and F. Jodl, 10 vols., Stuttgart, 1903–11; also ed. W. Schuffenhauer and others, 16 vols., Berlin, 1967 ff. Selected Letters, ed. W. Bolin (2 vols., Leipzig, 1904) and W. Schuffenhauer (ibid., 1963). The first draft of Das Wesen der Religion was reconstructed by F. Tomasoni (Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia dell'Università di Milano, 119; Florence, 1986). K. Grün, Ludwig Feuerbach (2 vols., 1874). F. Engels, Ludwig Feuerbach und der Ausgang der klassischen deutschen Philosophie (1888; Eng. trs., Chicago, 1903, and London [1934]). S. Rawidowicz, Ludwig Feuerbachs Philosophie: Ursprung und Schicksal (1931). G. Nüdling, Ludwig Feuerbachs Religionsphilosophie: Die Auflösung der Theologie in Anthropologie (Paderborn, 1936; 2nd edn., 1961). K. E. Bockmühl, Leiblichkeit und Gesellschaft: Studien zur Religionskritik und Anthropologie im Frühwerk von Ludwig Feuerbach und Karl Marx (Forschungen zur systematischen Theologie und Religionsphilosophie, 7; 1961). E. Schneider, Die Theologie und Feuerbachs Religionskritik (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 1; Göttingen, 1972). A. Philonenko, La Jeunesse de Feuerbach 1828–1841: Introduction à ses Positions Fondamentales (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 2 vols., 1990). V. A. Harvey, Feuerbach and the Interpretation of Religion (Cambridge, 1995). J. Salaquarda in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 144–57, s.v.

Feuillants. The reformed *Cistercians of Le Feuillant (formerly Fulium) in the neighbourhood of Toulouse, founded in 1577 by Abbot J. de la Barrière (1544–1600). After expelling from his house, which had grown lax and corrupt, those who would not accept his reform, the Abbot established a new rule stricter than the original. *Gregory XIII approved his action in 1581 and in 1589 *Sixtus V established the independence of the order. In 1588 a similar order for women, the 'Feuillantines', was begun. The Feuillants spread to Italy, where they were called 'Reformed Bernardines', and both the French and Italian branches produced some distinguished men, among them Cardinal J. Bona (d. 1674). In the 17th cent. the rigours of the original rule were somewhat relaxed. The order came to an end during the Napoleonic wars. Some *martyrologies describe de la Barrière as 'Venerable', and keep his feast on 25 Apr.

C. J. Morotius, O. Cist., Cistercii Reflorescentis seu Cong. cistercio-monasticarum B. Mariae Fuliensis in Gallia et reformatorum in Italia Chronologica Historia (Turin, 1690). G. Crucifix-Bultingaire, Feuillants & Feuillantines (privately pr., Paris, 1961). Gallia Christiana*, 13 (1785), cols. 216–21. [P. Helyot,] Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, et des congrégations séculières, 5 (1718), pp. 401–20; Heimbucher, 1, pp. 374–6. Life of Jean de la Barrière by A. Bazy (Toulouse, 1885). E. M. Obrecht, OCR, in CE 6 (1909), pp. 64 f., s.v.; M. Standaert in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 274–87, s.v.; L. Ferrando in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 1338–44, s.v., both with bibl.

Fichte, Johann Gottlieb (1762–1814), German Idealist philosopher. He was educated at Schulpforta and at the universities of Jena and Leipzig, where he studied Protestant theology. In 1790 he became acquainted with I. *Kant's philosophical system. His 'attempt at a critique of all revelation' (Versuch einer Kritik aller Offenbarung, 1792) showed his great powers, and he was appointed professor of philosophy at Jena in 1794, but dismissed in 1799 for atheism. In 1807–8 he delivered his famous Reden an die deutsche Nation which had great influence on the development of German nationalism and the overthrow of Napoleon. From 1809 till his death he was professor at the newly founded university of Berlin.

Fichte claimed that his philosophical doctrines were implicit in those of I. Kant, which he sought to develop on the lines of 'spontaneity' and 'autonomy'. Acc. to him the objects of our knowledge are the products of the consciousness of the ego as regards both their matter and their form. This ego, however, is not the individual 'I', but the Absolute Ego, which can be known only by philosophical intuition. It develops in three phases. In the first it posits itself, in the second it posits a non-ego against itself, and in the last it posits itself as limited by the non-ego. Acc. to Fichte God is the Absolute Ego, 'the living operative moral order'; but He is not to be conceived as personal. True religion consists in 'joyously doing right'. When society will have reached a condition in which morality is the norm, the existence of the Church will be unnecessary.

Fichte expounded his doctrines, which have been summed up as 'ethical pantheism', in a long series of works. Among the more important were Grundlage der gesamten Wissenschaftslehre (1794–5), Grundlage des Naturrechts (1796), Erste and Zweite Einleitung in die Wissenschaftslehre (both 1797), System der Sittenlehre (1798), Der geschlossene Handelsstaat (1800), Die Bestimmung des Menschen (1800), Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters (1806), and Anweisung zum seligen Leben (1805), the last his chief contribution to the philosophy of religion.

Sämmtliche Werke (ed. I. H. Fichte, son), 8 vols., Berlin, 1845–6. Nachgelassene Werke, ed. id., 3 vols., Bonn, 1834–5. Crit. edn. of Werke, incl. Nachgelassene Schriften and Briefe, under the auspices of the Bayerische Akademie by R. Lauth and others (Stuttgart, 1962 ff.). Eng. tr. of 'Popular Works', 2 vols., London, 1848–9. Modern Eng. trs. include: Early Philosophical Writings by D. Breazeale (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1988); Attempt at a Critique of all Revelation by G. Green (Cambridge, 1978), with introd., pp. 1–30; Foundations of Transcendental Philosophy by D. Breazeale (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1992); Science of Knowledge, with the First and Second Introductions, ed. and tr. by P. Heath and J. J. Lachs (New York, 1970; Cambridge, 1982); and The Vocation of Man, with introd., by P. Preuss (Indianapolis and Cambridge [1987]). J. G. Fichte im Gespräch: Berichte der Zeitgenossen, ed. E. Fuchs and others (Specula, 1; 6 vols. in 7, Stuttgart, etc., 1978–92). Lives by I. H. Fichte (2 Thle., Sulzbach, 1830–31), K. Fischer (Geschichte der neueren Philosophie, 5, Heidelberg, 1869; 4th edn., vol. 6, ibid., 1914), R. Adamson (Knight's Philosophical Classics, 1881), F. Medicus (Leipzig, 1914). X. Léon, La Philosophie de Fichte (1902); id., Fichte et son temps (3 vols., 1922–7). G. H. Turnbull, The Educational Theory of J. G. Fichte (Liverpool, 1926; with translations). M. Wundt, Fichte-Forschungen (1929). W. Ritzel, Fichtes Religionsphilosophie (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, NF 5 [1956]). M. Buhr (ed.), Wissen und Gewissen: Beiträge zum 200. Geburtstag Johann Gottlieb Fichtes 1762–1814 (1962). A. Philonenko, La Liberté humaine dans la philosophie de Fichte (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 1966). T. Rockmore, Fichte, Marx, and the German Philosophical Tradition (Carbondale, Ill., and London [1980]). J. Widmann, Johann Gottlieb Fichte: Einführung in seine Philosophie (Sammlung Göschen, 2219; 1982). F. Neuhouser, Fichte's Theory of Subjectivity (Cambridge, 1990). H. M. Baumgartner and W. G. Jacobs, J. G. Fichte-Bibliographie (Stuttgart, 1968). R. Adamson in EB (11th edn.), 10 (1910), pp. 313–16; W. Janke in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 157–71, both s.v.

Ficino, Marsilio (1433–99), Italian humanist and philosopher. Born at Figlione near Florence, he was intended by his father to be a physician. At some stage, however, he came under the patronage of Cosimo de' Medici (1398–1464), who, under the influence of *Gemisthus Plethon (who had come to Florence for the Council, 1439), had conceived the idea of founding a Platonic Academy, of which Ficino became head. As a result of Cosimo's patronage he had applied himself to Greek literature and language, and before long he had made himself a competent Greek scholar. He undertook a complete fresh translation of Plato, a task which, by leading him to consult many of the chief scholars of the day, did much to promote the study of Plato and philosophy generally. By the death of Cosimo (1464) ten of the Dialogues were finished and the whole was completed and published at Florence in 1484.

Meanwhile, Ficino's original mind, with its love of nature and its bent towards mysticism, gained him a wide influence. In 1473, after some hesitation, he sought ordination to the priesthood and became exemplary in his new duties. He continued to defend his 'Platonic philosophy', which meant for him not only the teachings of the *Neoplatonists but all the nobler elements in Greek thought. This synthesis of Christianity and Greek mysticism he expounded in De Religione Christiana (1476; dedicated to Lorenzo de' Medici, d. 1492), in immediate intention directed esp. against the critics of Christianity among the contemporary *Averroists. In 1487 he was appointed a Canon of Florence, where his expositions of the Gospels and Epistles formed the basis of his 'Commentaries'. His principal philosophical work, Theologia Platonica de Immortalitate Animorum (written between 1469 and 1474), largely based on Plato's Phaedo, appeared in 1482. In his later years he translated into Latin *Plotinus, *Porphyry, and *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite. Shortly before his death he was charged with magic, on the grounds of his belief in planetary influences, but he succeeded in purging himself.

Though he lacked critical judgement and had little sense of history, his erudition, wide sympathies, and enthusiasm gave him a far-reaching influence. He was sought out by scholars from all over Europe, among them J. *Colet and J. *Reuchlin, and kept up a large correspondence. His Florentine 'Academy' did not survive him, but his version of Plato remained the standard Latin text for the next hundred years.

Letters pub. Venice, 1495. Collected Works pub. in 2 vols., Basle, 1561, 1576, and Paris, 1641. Supplementum Ficinianum: Marsilii Ficini Florentini Philosophi Platonici Opuscula Inedita et Dispersa, ed. P. O. Kristeller (2 vols., Florence, 1937). Modern edns. of his Comm. on Plato's Symposium, with Eng. tr., by S. R. Joyce (University of Missouri Studies, 19, no. 1; Columbia, 1944; 2nd edn., Dallas, Tex., 1985) and, with Fr. tr., by R. Marcel (Les Classiques de l'humanisme. Collection publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 1956); of his Theologia Platonica de Immortalitate Animorum by id. (2 vols., ibid., 1964); of the Comm. on the Philebus, with Eng. tr., by M. J. B. Allen (Publications of the Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies, University of California, Los Angeles, 9; 1975); of passages on the soul in the Phaedrus, by id. (ibid. 14; 1981); of the Comm. on the Sophist, with Eng. tr., by id. (Berkeley, Los Angeles, and Oxford [1989]); of De triplici vita (orig. pub. Florence, 1489), with Eng. tr., by C. V. Kaske and J. R. Clark (Medieval & Renaissance Texts & Studies, 57; Binghamton, NY, 1989); and of his Letters by S. Gentile (Florence, 1990 ff.). Eng. tr. of Letters, by members of the Language Department of the School of Economic Sciences, London (1975 ff.). [A. M.] J. Festugière, La Philosophie de l'amour de Marsile Ficin et son influence sur la littérature française au XVI^e siècle (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 31. 3; 1941). P. O. Kristeller, The Philosophy of Marsilio Ficino (New York, 1943; rev. edn. of Italian tr., Florence, 1988, with recent bibl.). R. Marcel, Marsile Ficin (Paris, 1958). F. A. Yates, Giordano Bruno and the Hermetic Tradition (1964), passim; A. Field, The Origins of the Platonic Academy of Florence (Princeton, NJ, 1988). G. C. Garfagnini (ed.), Marsilio Ficini e il Ritorno di Platone (Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento, Studi e Testi, 15; 2 vols., 1986), incl. P. O. Kristeller, 'Marsilio Ficino and his Work after Five Hundred Years', vol. 1, pp. 15–196, with extensive bibl.

Fidei Defensor. See DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.

Fideism. A term applied to a variety of doctrines which hold in common belief in the incapacity of the intellect to attain to knowledge of divine matters and correspondingly put an excessive emphasis on faith. Though such systems have a long history, the word itself was apparently coined (for their own doctrines) by the Paris Protestant theologians, A. *Sabatier and E. Ménégoz (1838–1921), whose irrationalism derived from I. *Kant and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. Later it came to be used much more widely and for the most part in a hostile sense. Scholastic theologians regularly charged the *Modernists with 'Fideism' in their theories of knowledge.

Fidelium, Missa. See FAITHFUL, MASS OF THE.

Fides Damasi (or Faith of Damasus). An important credal formula which was formerly attributed to St *Damasus or St *Jerome, but which, in view of its MS tradition, its influence on other creeds, and some of its theological expressions, is now generally thought to have originated in S. Gaul towards the end of the 5th cent. It is closely related in structure to the *Athanasian Creed, consisting like it of an exposition of Trinitarian doctrine (probably including the *Filioque) followed by a carefully reasoned Christological statement. It should not be confused with the *Tome of Damasus (Tomus Damasi).

The text is conveniently pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 48 f. (nos. 71–2); A. E. Burn, An Introduction to the Creeds (1899), pp. 244–8, incl. text; J. N. D. Kelly, The Athanasian Creed (Paddock Lectures, 1962–3; 1964), pp. 10 f., with text pp. 134 f. J. A. de Aldama, SJ, 'El Simbolo "Clemens Trinitas" ', Gregorianum, 14 (1933), pp. 485–500, esp. pp. 495–500; id., El Simbolo Toledano I (Analecta Gregoriana, 7; 1934), esp. pp. 127 f.

Fides Hieronymi. An early form of the *Apostles' Creed, prob. late 4th cent. Ascribed in the manuscripts to St *Jerome, it has also been attributed to St *Gregory of Elvira; but there is no consensus. Attention was drawn to its existence in several MSS (St Mihiel 28; Oxford, Bod. 147; Cambridge, Trinity College, O. 5. 5; London, B. Lib., Royal 6. B. XIII) by Dom G. *Morin. It is one of the earliest Latin Creeds with the words 'descended into hell' ('descendit ad inferna') and 'the *communion of saints' ('sanctorum communionem').

G. Morin, OSB, 'Un Symbole inédit attribué à saint Jérôme', R. Bén. 21 (1904), pp. 1–9, incl. text. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'La Lettre de Potamius à Saint Athanase', ibid. 30 (1913), pp. 257–85, esp. pp. 274 f. Text also pr. by V. Bulhart in works ascribed to Gregory of Elvira (CCSL 69; 1967), pp. 273–5.

Field, Frederick (1801–85), biblical and patristic scholar. Educated at Christ's Hospital and Trinity College, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of his college in 1824, and from 1842 to 1863 was rector of Reepham in Norfolk. In the latter year he resigned his living and moved to *Norwich in order to devote his entire time to scholarship. In 1870 he became a member of the OT Revision Company. Field was one of the most learned and accurate patristic scholars of the 19th cent. His editions of St *Chrysostom's 'Homilies on St Matthew' (3 vols., 1839) and 'on St Paul's Epistles' (1849–62) marked the first attempt at establishing a critical text since the time of H. *Savile and B. de *Montfaucon. His splendid edition of Origen's Hexapla (2 vols., 1867–75) embodied the results of many years' research. He was also a keen student of the Greek text of the OT and NT, which he sought to understand in the light of a wide knowledge of classical literature; and many of his results in this field were contained in his Otium Norvicense (3 parts, 1864–81; part 3 republished posthumously, with additions by the author, 1897).

W. A. Greenhill in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 402–4, s.v.

Field, John (1545–88), *Puritan. Little is known of his early life, but he was described as a Bachelor of Arts of *Christ Church, Oxford, when he was ordained priest, uncanonically early, by E. *Grindal in 1566. From 1568 he worked as lecturer, curate and schoolmaster in his native London, where he was soon a leading member of an extreme Puritan group. He was debarred from preaching for eight years (1571–9), and in 1572, after the failure of a move to moderate the Act of Uniformity in the Puritan interest, he wrote the bitter and pungent 'View of Popish Abuses yet remaining in the English Church' which appeared with Thomas Wilcox's Admonition to the Parliament. Both were sentenced to one year's imprisonment for breach of the Act of Uniformity, but had set the pattern for a succession of Presbyterian manifestos. Field's aim, especially in face of Abp. *Whitgift's energetic campaign for conformity, was the further reform of the Church of England by the imposition of a hierarchy of Presbyterian synods and by the substitution of a more austere form of public prayer, with greater provision for preaching. As corresponding secretary of the London conference of extreme Puritan ministers he showed himself an adept propagandist and organizer; however, he failed in his attempt to impose a Presbyterian uniformity on English Puritans, and became ready to rely on 'the multitude and people' to achieve the introduction of the new discipline. Though again suspended from preaching after 1585 he was protected from worse penalties by sympathizers on the Queen's Council. He probably provided material for the *Marprelate Tracts; but as the organizing genius of extreme Elizabethan Puritanism Field had no successor.

Field's activities (esp. in connection with elections to and proceedings in Parliament) are still shrouded in some obscurity; little of his correspondence has been pr. (his letters to Anthony Gilby are in Cambridge University Library, Baker MS 32), his works are scattered, and the 'Register' of evidences for the Puritan controversy which he compiled has not been pr. in full. P. Collinson, 'John Field and Elizabethan Puritanism', in S. T. Bindoff and others (eds.), Elizabethan Government and Society: Essays presented to Sir John Neale (1961), pp. 127–62, repr. in id., Godly People [1983], pp. 335–70. Id., The Elizabethan Puritan Movement (1967), passim. A. Gordon in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 205 f.

Field, Richard (1561–1616), Dean of *Gloucester. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and became Divinity Reader at *Winchester Cathedral in 1592, Rector of Burghclere *c.*1595, chaplain in ordinary to Queen *Elizabeth I in 1598, and Prebendary of Windsor in 1604. In 1604 he took part in the *Hampton Court Conference and in 1609 he was appointed Dean of Gloucester (where, however, he rarely resided). His principal work, his treatise Of the Church (Bks. 1–4, 1606; Bk. 5, 1610), was primarily conceived as an apology for the C of E against Rome, though controversy was subordinated to the exposition of principles. The notes of the true Church were (1) Antiquity, (2) Succession, (3) Unity, (4) Universality, and (5) the name 'Catholic'; and Field argued that the counterpart of the modern RC Church was to be found in early times in the *Donatists, with their claims to exclusiveness and purity. Field held that the Protestant bodies on the Continent were also part of the Church of Christ. The intimate friend of R. *Hooker, H. *Savile, and other noted scholars, Field was one of the most learned and acute theologians of his age.

There is a modern repr. of his treatise Of the Church, pub. by the Eccl. Hist. Soc., 4 vols., 1847–52. Some Short Memorials concerning the Life of . . . Richard Field . . . by his son N. Field . . . published by John *Le Neve (1717). R. Hooper in DNB 18 (1889), pp. 410–12.

Fifth Monarchy Men. A fanatical sect of the middle of the 17th cent. whose members aimed at bringing in the 'Fifth Monarchy' (Dan. 2: 44) which should succeed the four empires of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome. During it, Christ was to reign with His saints for a thousand years (Rev. 20: 4). For a time they supported O. *Cromwell, in the belief that the Commonwealth was a preparation for the Fifth Monarchy, but when they found their theocratic hopes unlikely to be realized they turned against him. After unsuccessful risings in 1657 and 1661, the leaders were beheaded and the sect died out.

E. Rogers, Some Account of the Life and Opinions of a Fifth-Monarchy-Man: Chiefly extracted from the Writings of John Rogers, Preacher (1867); C. H. Firth, The Life of Thomas Harrison (from Proceedings of the American Antiquarian Society, at the Semi-Annual Meeting, April 26, 1893; Worcester, Mass., 1893). L. F. Brown, The Political Activities of the Baptists and Fifth Monarchy Men in England During the Interregnum (Washington, DC, and London, 1912); W. M. Lamont, Godly Rule: Politics and Religion 1603–60 (1969); B. S. Capp, The Fifth Monarchy Men: A Study in Seventeenth-century Millenarianism (1972); R. L. Greaves, Deliver Us From Evil: The Radical Underground in Britain, 1660 1663 (New York and Oxford, 1986), passim.

Figgis, John Neville (1866–1919), Anglican historian and theologian. The son of a Brighton minister of 'Lady *Huntingdon's Connexion', he was educated at St Catharine's College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of F. W. *Maitland and M. *Creighton. After being received into the C of E, in 1894 he was ordained to a curacy at Kettering. In 1896 he published The Divine Right of Kings, an original attempt to exhibit the permanent religious significance of the doctrine from a study of its development. From 1896 to 1902 he was lecturer at St Catharine's and chaplain to Pembroke College, and from 1902 to 1907 rector of Marnhull in Dorset. In the meantime he had become an ardent disciple and correspondent of Lord *Acton, some of whose writings he later edited. In 1907 appeared From Gerson to Grotius, a useful contribution to the history of political thought. In the same year he entered the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield. In 1908–9 he delivered the *Hulsean Lectures on The Gospel and Human Needs (1909). His other writings include Civilisation at the Cross Roads (1912), and The Political Aspects of St Augustine's 'City of God' (1921; posthumous). Figgis's brilliance and depth of thought, clothed in an easy style, made him an unusually effective apologist. In his conception of the Christian State, he was a resolute opponent of the idea of absolute sovereignty and was among the first Christian thinkers alive to the dangers to religion and human freedom of the modern omnicompetent State.

Part of his Churches in the Modern State (1913) is repr. in P. Q. Hirst (ed.), The Pluralist Theory of the State (1989), pp. 111–27, with introd. pp. 1–47, passim. M. G. Tucker, John Neville Figgis: A Study (1950). An introd. by G. R. Elton to a 1965 repr. of Figgis's The Divine Right of Kings is repr. in Elton, Studies in Tudor and Stuart Politics and Government, 2 (Cambridge, 1974), pp. 193–214. D. [G.] Nicholls, The Pluralist State (1975), passim. A. Wilkinson, The Community of the Resurrection (1992), esp. pp. 118 f., 139–41. W. H. *Frere in DNB, 1912–1921, p. 181.

Filaret. See PHILARET.

Filaster. See PHILASTER.

Filioque (Lat., 'And the Son'). The dogmatic formula expressing the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit (q.v.), added by the W. Church to the Nicene-Constantinopolitan *Creed immediately after the words 'the Holy Spirit . . . who proceedeth from the Father'. It is no part of the original Creed, but is first met with as an interpolation (acc. to the usual texts) at the Third Council of *Toledo (589). In 796 its use was defended by *Paulinus of Aquileia at the Synod of Friuli and from c.800, when the Creed began to be generally chanted at the Mass throughout the Frankish Empire, the words became widely familiar. Its introduction by Frankish monks in 807 into their monastery at *Jerusalem on the Mount of *Olives aroused strong but easily understandable opposition from the E. monks of St *Sabas, and when the matter was referred to *Leo III he tried to suppress the addition to the formula while approving the doctrine. He caused the Creed in its original form to be engraved on two silver tables deposited at the tomb of St *Peter. The 'Filioque', however, continued to be sung, and soon after 1000 had been adopted also at Rome. Since the time of *Photius, who violently denounced it, the 'Filioque' has been made the chief ground of attack by the Orthodox Church on the Church of Rome. At the Reunion Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439), the acceptance of the doctrine, though not of the addition to the Creed, was imposed on the Greeks as a condition of the short-lived union. English theologians, following the *Thirty-Nine Articles, have generally accepted the W. tradition, e.g. R. *Hooker, J. *Pearson, and E. H. *Browne, and it was vigorously upheld by E. B. *Pusey in On the Clause 'And the Son' (1876). Discussions on the formula took place between Anglicans, *Old Catholics, and the E. Church at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875, and again at St Petersburg in 1912 in the conversations between F. W. Puller, SSJE, and Russian Orthodox theologians, but in both cases without positive results. More recent discussion (between the Orthodox and RCs, Anglicans, and others, and in the *World Council of Churches) have been similarly fruitless, though Anglican theologians participating in such discussions are often disposed to agree to dropping the Filioque from the Creed. See also DOUBLE PROCESSION.

The history of the phrase is discussed in all works on the Creed, its doctrinal significance in treatises on the Holy Spirit. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 358–67. G. B. Howard, The Schism between the Oriental and Western Churches, with special references to the addition of the Filioque to the Creed (1892). P. de Meester, OSB, 'Études sur la théologie orthodoxe', 4, 'Le Filioque', R. Bén. 24 (1907), pp. 86–103. A. E. Burn, 'Some Spanish MSS. of the Constantinopolitan Creed', JTS 9 (1908), pp. 301–3. M. Jugie, AA, 'Origine de la controverse sur l'addition du Filioque au symbole', RSPT 28 (1939), pp. 369–85. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Pape Léon III et le "Filioque"', in *1054–1954: L'Église et les églises. Études et travaux . . . offerts à Dom Lambert Beauduin, 1 (Chevetogne, 1954), pp. 309–22; repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 3 (1967), pp. 35–46. L. Vischer (ed.), Spirit of God, Spirit of Christ: Ecumenical Reflections on the Filioque Controversy (*Faith and Order Paper, 103; 1981). A. Palmieri in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 2309–43, s.v., with full bibl.; J. Gill, SJ, in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 913 f., s.v. See also bibl. to DOUBLE PROCESSION.

Finan, St (d. 661). The successor of St *Aidan as Bp. of *Lindisfarne. He was an Irishman by birth, and in his earlier life a monk of *Iona. He vigorously and consistently upheld the Celtic ecclesiastical traditions against the successors of St *Augustine of Canterbury, who, coming from the South, strove to bring English customs into closer conformity with those of Rome. He was a keen missionary and baptized Peada, ruler of the Middle Angles, and Sigebert, King of Essex. Feast day, 9 or 17 Feb.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 17, 21 f., and 25–7; notes ad loc., ed. C. Plummer, 2 (1896), pp. 176–8 and 188 f.

Finding of the Cross. See INVENTION OF THE CROSS.

Finland, Christianity in. The origins of Christianity in Finland are obscure. It seems clear, however, that by the 12th cent. Finland had received Christianity from *Sweden and *Russia. Henry, Bp. of Uppsala, an Englishman murdered *c.*1160, took part in the conversion of the Finns. In 1220 an independent Church organization, centred on the episcopal see of Turku (Åbo) was established under Bp. Thomas (prob. also an Englishman). In the 15th cent. the Church of Finland had sufficient eminence for its divines to hold prominent positions in the world of learning, the best known being Olaus Magni, Bp. of Turku from 1450 to 1460, who was twice rector of the *Sorbonne.

*Lutheranism was introduced into Finland in 1523 by Peter Särkilax (d. 1530); Michael Agricola (1512–57) was later prominent in the Reform Movement. The latter gained a ready hearing through his issue of popular Finnish religious writings, while his translation of the NT (1548) virtually created the Finnish written language. Severe measures were taken for the extermination of RCism. In Karelia (E. Finland), however, the population remained Orthodox, though it suffered persecution when the land fell to Sweden in 1617. In 1807 Finland came under Russian rule, and the Orthodox Church of Finland then rapidly increased in numbers and influence. By Acts of 1869 and 1889 RCism was tolerated for the first time since 1523, but the RCs form a very small minority. The National Church of Finland is a Lutheran body. Like other Lutheran Churches it was influenced by *Pietism in the 18th cent. Episcopal succession was lost in 1884, when all three sees became vacant simultaneously and their successors were consecrated by the (non-episcopal) Dean of Turku, but it has gradually been recovered with the help of the Church of Sweden. In 1934 the Church of Finland and the C of E negotiated mutual Eucharistic hospitality; the Porvoo Agreement of 1992 provides for common membership of the Churches and an interchangeable ministry. The Church of Finland is much the largest Church, to which over 90 per cent of the population belong. It has long had women theologians and since 1987 has ordained women. The Orthodox Church in Finland is a second established State Church. When Finland gained independence from Russia in 1917–18, the Finnish Orthodox Church declared itself autonomous; this autonomy was recognized by Patr. *Tikhon in 1921, but after the Church joined the jurisdiction of the Patr. of *Constantinople in 1923 recognition by Moscow was withdrawn in 1924 and only restored in 1957. In 1980 the General Assembly decided to seek autocephalous status. About 1 per cent of the population belong to the Orthodox Church. There are also a number of *Pentecostals. The percentage of the population overtly practising Christianity is high in Finland, though since 1923 it has been possible to register with the state as of no religion.

G. Sentzte, Die Kirche Finnlands (Helsinki, 1963; abbreviated Eng. tr., ibid., 1963). M. Sinnemäki, The Church in Finland (Helsinki, 1973). L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches: A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965), esp. pp. 68–75. P. G. Lindhardt, Skandinavische Kirchengeschichte seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (Die Kirche in ihrer Geschichte: Ein Handbuch, . . . ed. B. Moeller, Band 3, Lieferung M3; Göttingen [1982]), pp. 302–7. A. Malin, Der Heiligenkalendar Finnlands: Seine Zusammensetzung und Entwicklung (Suomen Kirkkohistoriallisen Seuran, 20; Helsingfors, 1925). V. Purmonen (ed.), Orthodoxy in Finland, Past and Present (Kuopio, Finland, 1981; 2nd edn., 1984). J. H. Wuorinen, A History of Finland (New York and London, 1965), esp. pp. 31–42 and 60–6. W. A. Schmidt, 'Recent Research in Ecclesiastical History in Finland', JEH 7 (1956), pp. 226–37. W. Schmidt and others in RGG (3rd edn.), 2 (1958), cols. 960–99, s.v.; J. Gallén in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 217–31, s.v.; B. Krug in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 185–92, s.v. 'Finnland, II'.

The Church of England and the Church of Finland: A Summary of the Proceedings at the Conferences held at Lambeth Palace, London, on October 5 and 6, 1933, and at Brändö, Helsingfors, on July 17 and 18, 1934 (1935). G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity, 3rd ser., 1930–48 (1948), nos. 188–92, pp. 146–53.

Finney, Charles Grandison (1792–1875), American evangelist. Born in Connecticut, he moved with his family to the western part of New York State in 1794. In 1821 he underwent a powerful conversion experience. Giving up the profession of law, he was ordained by the *Presbytery of Oneida, NY, in 1824, and began his spectacular, and controversial, rise to prominence as an itinerant revivalist preacher. Beginning in villages, by 1827 he was preaching in cities on the E. coast. In 1829 he preached his first revival meeting in New York City and soon settled there as a pastor. In 1835 he was appointed Professor of Theology in the recently founded Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. Abandoning Presbyterianism for *Congregationalism, in 1837 he became pastor of the First Church (Congregational) in Oberlin, while remaining Professor of Theology at the College. In 1851 he became its President. He continued to hold revival meetings in various cities until 1860, visiting Great Britain in 1849–51 and again in 1859–60.

Finney almost singlehandedly transformed *revivalism in America. He popularized so-called 'new measures': 'protracted meetings' (with the cessation of all non-religious activities over a period of several days), the 'anxious bench', prayer meetings, public prayer for individuals by name, and a dramatic, even confrontational, pulpit style. He became a staunch opponent of *Calvinism and *predestination, espousing a theology of human responsibility and agency in conversion. He argued that successful revivals (and conversions) were not the results of divine grace alone; they were the result of 'the right use of constituted means'. Finney, along with Oberlin's first President, Asa Mahan, was a proponent of Oberlin Perfectionism, which affirmed that 'obedience to the moral law, or a state of entire consecration to God in this life' were states of moral perfection attainable by individuals. Finney was also an advocate of coeducation and the abolition of *slavery. His writings include Lectures on Revivals of Religion (1835) and Lectures on Systematic Theology (1846).

An expurgated edn. of his Memoirs pub., New York and London, 1876; complete restored text ed. G. M. Rosell and R. A. G. Dupuis (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1989). His Lectures on the Revivals of Religion, ed., with introd., by W. G. McLoughlin (Cambridge, Mass., 1960). Life by G. F. Wright (New York, 1891). Modern study by K. J. Hardman (Syracuse, NY, 1987; Darlington, Co. Durham, 1990). W. J. McLoughlin, Modern Revivalism: Charles Grandison Finney to Billy Graham (New York [1959]), pp. 3–121.

Finnian, St (6th cent.). Irish annals and genealogies distinguish two saints, Finnian of Clonard (d. 549) and Finnian of Moville (d. 579). One or other is likely to be the Vennianus auctor who wrote to St *Gildas about matters of monastic discipline and who composed the Poenitentiale Vinniani used by St *Columbanus. *Adomnán's 'Life of St *Columba' also mentions a St 'Uinnianus', 'Finnio' or

'Findbarr'. The early forms of the name suggest that the saint was a Briton who settled in Ireland, but identifications with the cults at Moville and Clonard are disputed, and it has been suggested that there may have been only one person. By the 8th cent. Finnian of Clonard had an established reputation as a teacher and there is an undated Latin Life of him. Finnian of Moville remained obscure. Feast day, Finnian of Clonard, 12 Dec.; Finnian of Moville, 10 Sept.

Poenitentiale Vinniani, ed., with Eng. tr., by L. Bieler, The Irish Penitentials (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 5; Dublin, 1963), pp. 74–95. Frags. of Gildas's answer to Finnian are among those pr., with Eng. tr., by H. Williams in his edn. of Gildas, De Excidio Britanniae (Cymmrodorion Record Series, 3; 1899–1901), pp. 255–71. L. Fleuriot, 'Le "saint" breton Winniau et le Pénitentiel dit "de Finnian" ', Études celtiques, 15 (1976–8), pp. 607–14; P. Ó Riain, 'St Finnbarr: A Study in a Cult', Journal of the Cork Historical and Archaeological Society, 82 (1977), pp. 63–82; D. N. Dumville, 'Gildas and Uinniau', in M. Lapidge and D. N. Dumville (eds.), Gildas: New Approaches (Studies in Celtic History, 5; Woodbridge, 1984), pp. 207–14.

The Life of St Finnian of Clonard is ed. W. W. Heist, Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae (Subsidia Hagiographica, 28; Brussels, 1965), pp. 96–107, and discussed by K. Hughes in EHR 69 (1954), pp. 352–72, and in Anal. Boll. 73 (1955), pp. 342–62; 75 (1957), pp. 337–9.

Fioretti. See LITTLE FLOWERS OF ST FRANCIS.

firmament (lit. 'something made solid'). In the OT (Gen. 1: 6, etc.), the word commonly refers to the dome or canopy of heaven, which was supposed by the Hebrews to be a solid vault dividing the upper or celestial from the lower or terrestrial waters. It was conceived that the upper waters came down as rain through opened sluices, and that above these waters Yahweh sat enthroned. In Ezek. (1: 26, etc.) the word appears to denote the base supporting God's moving throne.

Firmicus Maternus, Julius (d. after 360), rhetorician. Little is known of him beyond the facts that he was prob. of Sicilian origin and converted to Christianity in adult life. While still a pagan, he wrote his Mathesis in eight books, a compendium of astrology interwoven with moral reflections. His most important work, the De errore profanarum religionum (written at Rome *c.*347), is an appeal to the emperors Constantius and Constans to destroy the pagan idols by force. A treatise in three books, Consultationes Zacchaei et Apollonii, has been ascribed to him, prob. mistakenly, by Dom G. *Morin.

The Consultationes and De Errore, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 1071–166, and 12. 971–1050. Crit. edns. of Mathesis by W. Kroll, F. Skutsch and K. Ziegler (2 vols., Teub., 1898–1913), De Errore by K. Ziegler (ibid., 1907, and, with Ger. tr., Munich, 1953) and, with Fr. tr., by R. Turcan (Collection des Universités de France, 1982), and of the Consultationes by G. Morin, OSB (Florilegium Patristicum, 39; 1935). Eng. trs. of De Errore by C. A. Forbes (ACW 37 [1970]) and of Mathesis by J. R. Bram (Park Ridge, NJ [1975]). P. Courcelle, 'Date, source et genèse des "Consultationes Zacchaei et Apollinii" ', Revue de l'histoire des religions, 146 (1954), pp. 174–93. B. Studer in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 569–72. P. Hadot in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 384–8, s.v.; K. Ziegler in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 946–59, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Firmilian, St (d. 268), Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia from *c.*230. A great admirer of *Origen, Firmilian once summoned him to the Cappadocian Caesarea for instruction and later went himself to Origen's *Caesarea (in Palestine) to sit at his feet. He supported St *Cyprian against Pope *Stephen I in his doctrine that baptism could be validly performed only within the confines of the Church, and that heretics on joining the Church must therefore be 'rebaptized'. His only extant writing is a letter on the subject addressed to Cyprian (Cyp., Ep. 75). In 264 he was president of the first of the synods of Antioch held to consider the case of *Paul of Samosata, and died on his way to the second. Feast day in the E., 28 Oct.

Our chief source of information about Firmilian is *Eusebius, HE 6. 27; 6. 46. 3; 7. 5. 1; 7. 14; 7. 28. 1; 7. 30. 4 f. Opera Cypriani, ed. W. Hartel (CSEL 3 (2); 1871), pp. 810–27 (the Lat. tr. is apparently the work of Cyprian himself; there are no sufficient grounds for holding it to be interpolated). B. Bossue, SJ, 'De Firmiliano . . . Commentarius Historicus', AASS, Oct. 12 (1867), pp. 470–510. G. A. Michell, 'Firmilian and Eucharistic Consecration', JTS NS 5 (1954), pp. 215–20. Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 312–14. J. *Chapman, OSB, in CE 6 (1909), pp. 80 f., s.v.; P. Nautin in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 249–52, s.v.

First Fridays. The special observance of the first Friday in each month in the RC Church is based on the promise which Christ is supposed to have made to St *Margaret Mary Alacoque (1647–90) that unusual graces and favours would be given to all who received Holy Communion on the first Friday of nine consecutive months. Those who fulfilled this obligation could rest in the assurance that they would have the grace of full repentance, that they would not die in sin or without the sacraments, and that the *Sacred Heart would be their refuge at the hour of death. Though still observed, the devotion receives less emphasis than it formerly did now that more frequent Communion is general.

J. O'Connell, The Nine First Fridays: The 'Great Promise' of the Sacred Heart of Jesus to Saint Margaret Mary. Its Origin, Authenticity and Meaning (1934), incl. bibl.

first-fruits. See ANNATES.

fish (Gk. ἰχθύς). In Christian art and literature the fish is a symbol of Christ, also sometimes of the newly baptized and of the Eucharist. It came into use in the 2nd cent., but neither its origin nor its meaning have so far been completely elucidated. It occurs in *Tertullian's 'De Baptismo', where the writer compares the neophytes to little fishes, following the Fish, in connection with the idea of the second birth in the waters of Baptism. This image is found also in the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas, in the Inscription of *Abercius, in *Clement of Alexandria, and in many other old Christian documents; but it is doubtful whether the symbol is exclusively Christian or influenced by Babylonian and Indian mythology. Opinions are also divided as to whether the symbol is derived from the acrostic ΙΧΘΥΣ = Ἰησοῦς Χριστός Θεοῦ Υἱὸς Σωτήρ ('Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour'), or the acrostic from the symbol. The acrostic is frequently held to have originated in *Gnostic circles, since it is found in the '*Sibylline Oracles'. In the 4th and 5th cents. the fish became an emblem also of the Eucharist, and is frequently found in the paintings of the *catacombs in combination with bread and wine. In recent years, in some parishes of the C of E certain associations willing to help those in need have adopted the symbolism of a fish.

From early times fish, esp. in a dried condition, has taken the place of meat on days of fasting and abstinence. See FAST.

J. B. *Pitra, OSB, Spicilegium Solesmense, 3 (Paris, 1855), pp. 499–543 ('ΙΧΘΥΣ, sive de Pisce Allegorico et Symbolico'); J. B. *de Rossi, ibid., pp. 545–84 ('De Christianis Monumentis ΙΧΘΥΝ exhibentibus'); H. Achelis, Das Symbol des Fisches und die Fischdenkmäler der römischen Katakomben (Marburg, 1888); R. Pischel, 'Der Ursprung des christlichen Fischsymbol', Sb. (Berl.), 1905 (1), pp. 506–32; C. R. Morey, 'The Origin of the Fish-Symbol', Princeton Theological Review, 8 (1910), pp. 93–106, 231–46, and 401–32; 9 (1911), pp. 268–89; 10 (1912), pp. 278–98. I. Scheftelowitz, 'Das Fisch-Symbol im Judentum und Christentum', Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, 14 (1911), pp. 1–53. F. J. Dölger, ΙΧΘΥΣ (vol. 1, RQ, Suppl. 17; 1910; 2nd edn., Münster i.W., 1928; vols. 2–5, ibid., 1922–43). L. Werhahn-Stauch, 'Christliche Fischsymbolik von den Anfängen bis zum hohen Mittelalter', Zeitschrift für Kunstgeschichte, 35 (1972), pp. 1–68. R. St J. Tyrwhitt in DCA 1 (1880), pp. 673 f., s.v., and pp. 625–8, s.v. 'Eucharist (in Christian Art)'; F. Cumont in PW 9 (pt. 1; 1914), cols. 844–50, s.v. 'Ichthys'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1990–2086, s.v. ΙΧΘΥΣ; J. Quasten in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 943–6, s.v. 'Fish, Symbolism of'; J. Engemann in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 1021–97, s.v. 'Fisch, B. Christlich'.

Fisher, Geoffrey Francis (1887–1972), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Higham-on-the-Hill, Leics., he was educated at Marlborough and Exeter College, Oxford. He was successively assistant master of Marlborough (1911), Headmaster of Repton (1914, succeeding W. *Temple), and Bp. of *Chester (1932). His translation to London in 1939 gave wider scope for his administrative ability, which he showed in his attempt to establish some ritual conformity by the issue of Bishops' Regulations, and more markedly by his chairmanship of the *Church Assembly Committee set up to deal with pastoral reorganization required by war damage, and of the Churches' Main War Damage Committee. He became involved in the '*Sword of the Spirit' movement in 1940; his careful diplomacy ensured continued ecumenical participation in it at a difficult time. In 1945 he was translated to Canterbury. In 1946 he preached the influential Cambridge sermon on *reunion, a subject in which he displayed great interest during his archiepiscopate; he was chairman of the *World Council of Churches at its inauguration in 1948, and in 1960, when he travelled to meet the Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem, the Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, and Pope *John XXIII, he was the first Archbishop of Canterbury to visit the Vatican since 1397. The second Anglican Congress took place in Minneapolis with his encouragement in 1954. He presided over the *Lambeth Conferences of 1948 and 1958, which owed their representative character partly to his careful preparation, especially in America, and partly to the establishment of new provinces among the emergent nations, among them *West Africa (1951), Central Africa (1955), and East Africa (1959). He also set up the East Asian Episcopal Conference in 1954 and raised the Bishopric in *Jerusalem to metropolitan rank in 1957. He thus divested himself of authority over the African and Asian parts of the Anglican Communion. At home his support ensured the amalgamation of *Queen Anne's Bounty with the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners to form the *Church Commissioners for England in 1948. From 1946 onwards he devoted considerable time to what he regarded as one of his most important tasks, the revision of the Canon Law, though new *Canons were not authorized until 1969. The most widely travelled Archbishop of Canterbury to date, because of television he was also the most widely seen. He resigned in 1961, and was granted a life barony.

E. [F.] Carpenter, Archbishop Fisher: His Life and Times (Norwich, 1991). Shorter study by W. Purcell (London, 1969). P. A. Welsby, A History of the Church of England 1945–1980 (Oxford, 1984), pp. 3–108 and 177 f. I. H. White-Thomson in DNB, 1971–1980, pp. 316–18.

Fisher, St John (1469–1535), Bp. of *Rochester. Educated at Michaelhouse, *Cambridge, he became a doctor of divinity and was elected vice-chancellor in 1501. The following year he was appointed to the theology lectureship founded by Lady *Margaret Beaufort at Cambridge, and some time between 1497 and 1504 he became her confessor. Encouraging her patronage of his university, he assisted in her two foundations of Christ's and St John's Colleges. In 1504 he was appointed Bp. of Rochester and Chancellor of Cambridge University, and from 1505 to 1508 he was also President of Queens' College. Fisher was one of the greatest scholars of his day. His library was said to be the finest in England, and he was a friend of *Erasmus, whom he persuaded to teach Greek at Cambridge. He was also devoted to the welfare of his diocese, and even in his lifetime he was regarded as a model bishop. He enjoyed a high reputation as a preacher, and was chosen in 1509 to preach at Henry VII's funeral and at the memorial service of the Lady Margaret. Despite a later attribution, he was not the author of *Henry VIII's Assertio Septem Sacramentorum, but when Protestant doctrines became prominent in the 1520s Fisher emerged as one of the leading defenders of Catholicism. His Assertionis Lutheranae Confutatio (1523) was one of the most popular Catholic attacks on M. *Luther of the decade; his De Veritate Corporis et Sanguine Christi in Eucharistia (1527) mounted a major defence of Catholic Eucharistic doctrine against J. *Oecolampadius. Both these works heavily influenced polemicists and even the Council of *Trent. When Henry VIII began to seek a divorce from Catherine of Aragon in 1527, Fisher soon became her foremost defender, writing several books on her behalf. From that time his relations with Henry deteriorated. He strenuously opposed Henry's attacks on the liberties of the English Church, securing the mitigation of Convocation's first submission to the King as Supreme Head by the insertion of the saving clause 'as far as the law of Christ allows' (1531). Because of his opposition to the King he was included in the Act of Attainder against Elizabeth *Barton (1534), although his sentence of imprisonment was commuted to a fine. After refusing to take the oath required by the Act of Succession, he was imprisoned in the Tower (Apr. 1534), where he wrote a 'spiritual consolation' for his sister Elizabeth, a *Dominican nun. On 7 May 1535 he was tricked into denying the royal supremacy by a messenger who claimed that the King wanted Fisher's opinion in confidence for his conscience's sake. Fisher was given six weeks to reconsider the matter, during which time news arrived that *Paul III had created him a cardinal. At his trial on 17 June, his defence that he had not denied the supremacy maliciously was dismissed by a ruling that all denials were malicious. He was found guilty of treason and condemned to death; he was beheaded on 22 June 1535. He was beatified in 1885 and canonized in 1935. Feast day, formerly 9 July; now, with Thomas *More, 22 June.

Opera collected by his fellow English RCs and pub. at Würzburg, 1597, various works written by him in Eng. being tr. into Lat. for the purpose. Facs. repr., Farnborough, 1967. The English Works of John Fisher, ed. J. E. B. Mayor (EETS, Extra Series, 27; 1876; repr. 1935 with text of additional sermon, pp. 429–76). J. Rouschausse (ed.), Erasmus and Fisher: Their Correspondence 1511–1524 (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 16; Paris, 1968), prints 18 surviving letters, with notes and Eng. tr. Modern edn. of his Sacri Sacerdotii Defensio contra Lutherum (1525) by H. K. Schmeink (Corpus Catholicorum, 9; Münster i.W., 1925); Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett (London, 1935). The Spirituall Consolation (first pub. c.1578) and the Treatise of Prayer in the Eng. tr. by St A[lban] R[oe], OSB (Paris, 1640), repr. in facs. (English Recusant Literature 1558–1640, 11; Menston, Leeds, 1969). Pre-1641 edns. of his works in languages other than Eng. are listed in A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 62–5 (nos. 415–40). The earliest Life, a composite production chiefly written between 1567 and 1576, was first ed. by T. Bailey, The Life and Death of John Fisher (1655); a more accurate edn. by F. van Ortroy, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 10 (1891), pp. 121–365, and 12 (1893), pp. 97–281. One MS (BL Harleian MS 6382), ed. R. Bayne (EETS, Extra Series, 117; 1921). Modernized edn. by P. Hughes (London, 1935). T. E. Bridgett, CSSR, Life of Blessed John Fisher (1888); E. E. Reynolds, Saint John Fisher (1955; rev. edn., 1972); M. Macklem, God Have Mercy: The Life of John Fisher of Rochester (Ottawa [1967]); E. L. Surtz, SJ, The Works and Days of John Fisher (Cambridge, Mass., 1967); J. Rouschausse, La Vie et l'Œuvre de John Fisher (Nieuwkoop [1972]); B. Bradshaw and E. Duffy (eds.), Humanism, Reform and Reformation: The Career of Bishop John Fisher (Cambridge, 1989); R. Rex, The Theology of John Fisher (ibid., 1991). BRUC, pp. 229–30. J. K. McConica in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 (1986), pp. 36–39, s.v.

Fisher, Samuel (1605–65), *Quaker. Educated at Trinity College and New Hall, Oxford, he was a *Puritan lecturer and then a *Baptist minister in Ashford before he joined the *Friends in 1655. Apart from a tour of the Netherlands, Germany, and Italy in 1657–8, he preached mainly in Kent and later in London, where he was imprisoned in 1661 and again in 1662. His numerous works include Rusticus ad Academicos . . . The Rustick's Alarm to the Rabbies, or The Country Correcting the University and Clergy (pub. in 1660, after the Restoration); it is considered the most important piece of Quaker controversial writing of the Commonwealth period.

Collected works repr. as The Testimony of Truth Exalted (1679). A. C. Bickley in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 70–2.

Fisher the Jesuit (1569–1641), i.e. John Fisher, RC controversialist. His real name was Percy. Born in Co. Durham, he was converted to the RC faith as a young man. After studying abroad, he joined the *Jesuits in 1594 and served many years on the English mission, where he made a name for himself in private disputations and public controversy and won (among others) W. *Chillingworth and the Countess of Buckingham to the Roman faith. Among his Anglican opponents were *James I and Bps. F. *White and W. *Laud. Laud published in 1639 a lengthy Relation of his conference with Fisher, and this was several times reprinted. Fisher himself published several controversial and apologetical works.

Modern edn. of W. Laud, A Relation of the Conference between William Laud, late Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mr. Fisher the Jesuit, with introd. and notes, by C. H. Simpkinson ('The English Theological Library', 1901). T. H. Wadkins, 'King James I meets John Percy, SJ (12 May, 1622). An unpublished manuscript from the religious controversies surrounding the Countess of Buckingham's conversion', Recusant History, 19 (1988), pp. 146–54. H. Foley, SJ, Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 1 (1877), pp. 521–42. A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, 'A Catalogue of Catholic Books in English printed abroad or secretly in England, 1558–1640', Biographical Studies, 3 (1956), pp. 242–4 (nos. 603–10). T. Cooper in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 63 f.

fistula. A tube, usually of gold or silver, through which the laity occasionally received communion from the chalice at the Eucharist in the Middle Ages. Its use came to be confined to solemn Papal Masses, when the Pope and his deacon received communion in this way. Since 1969 in the RC Church both celebrant and laity have been permitted to receive communion through a calamus or reed; nothing is laid down about the material from which it should be made.

Braun, AG, pp. 247–65, and plate 48. H. J. Hotham in DCA 1 (1875), p. 675, s.v.; W. Henry in DACL 2 (pt. 2; 1910), col. 1583, s.v. 'Calamus', with bibl.

FitzRalph, Richard (c.1295–1360), Abp. of *Armagh. He became Chancellor of *Oxford University in 1332 and of *Lincoln Cathedral in 1334, Canon of *Lichfield in 1335, Dean of Lichfield in 1337, and Abp. of Armagh in 1347. He was a celebrated preacher, deeply imbued with scholasticism, and an eager promoter of learning among his clergy. From 1334 to 1336 he visited the Papal court at *Avignon and became involved in the controversy over the *Beatific Vision arising from the pronouncements of *John XXII. From 1337 to 1344 he was again at Avignon and engaged in a controversy with emissaries of the *Armenian Church; this led to the composition of his attack on the Greek and Armenian standpoint in his 'Summa de Questionibus Armenorum' (pub. 1511). His final visit to Avignon started in 1357 and was concerned with his attack on the *Mendicant Orders, maintaining that voluntary begging was against the teaching of Christ. He formulated his opinion in the treatise 'De Pauperie Salvatoris', in which he dealt with the question of evangelical poverty and the connection of dominion, possession, and use with the state of grace; it later greatly influenced J. *Wycliffe. His position was not officially condemned, and he died three years later at Avignon.

Modern edn. of his 'De Pauperie Salvatoris' appended to R. L. Poole's edn. of Wycliffe's De Dominio Divino (Wyclif Society, 1890), pp. 273–476. L. L. Hammerich, The Beginning of the Strife between Richard FitzRalph and the Mendicants, with an edition of his autobiographical Prayer and his Proposition Unusquisque (Copenhagen, 1938). G. Leff, Richard FitzRalph, Commentator on the Sentences: A Study in Theological Orthodoxy (Manchester [1963]). K. Walsh, A Fourteenth Century Scholar and Primate: Richard FitzRalph in Oxford, Avignon, and Armagh (Oxford, 1981), with bibl. G. Meersseman, OP (ed.), 'La Défense des ordres mendicants contre Richard Fitz Ralph, par Barthélemy de Bolsenheim O.P. (1357)', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 5 (1935), pp. 124–73. A. Gwynn, SJ, 'The Sermon Diary of Richard FitzRalph, Archbishop of Armagh', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, 44 (1937–8), section C, pp. 1–57. J.-F. Genest, 'Contingence et Révelation des Futurs: La Quaestio Biblica de Richard FitzRalf', in J. Jolivet and others (eds.), Lectionum Varietates: Hommage à Paul Vignaux (Études de philosophie médiévale, 65; 1991), pp. 199–246, incl. text. R. L. Poole in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 194–8. BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 692–4, s.v., with refs.

Five Mile Act. The common name for the Nonconformists Act 1665, which was one of the penal statutes, part of the so-called Clarendon Code, passed to secure the position of the C of E at the Restoration. It specifically dealt with those clergymen who had refused to conform to the Act of *Uniformity 1662. It prohibited Nonconformist ministers from preaching, teaching, or coming within five miles of a city, or corporate town, or parish where they had previously officiated, unless they had taken the non-resistance oath, declaring that they would not 'at any time endeavour any alteration of Government either in Church or State'. The Act gave the informer legal status by empowering the Justices of the Peace to commit offenders upon the sworn testimony of a third party. Its effects were severely felt by the Dissenters, as their congregations were chiefly situated in the towns, but indirectly it contributed to the spread of Nonconformity in the countryside.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 620–3 (no. 118); mainly repr. in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 416–18.

flabellum. See FAN, LITURGICAL.

Flacius, Matthias (1520–75), from his birthplace also known as Illyricus, *Lutheran theologian. He was born in the Venetian town, Albona (now Labin in Croatia), and attended the school of San Marco in *Venice. He was sent to Germany on the advice of the Franciscan Provincial, Baldo Lupetina, his uncle, who was later judicially put to death by drowning for his sympathies for the Reformation. Flacius studied Greek with Simon Grynaeus in Basle and with Matthias Garbitius in *Tübingen, where he also studied Hebrew with the radical Lutheran Johannes Forster. Having arrived in *Wittenberg in 1541, he was appointed professor of Hebrew in 1544. He became an outstanding Hebraist. While apparently not a close personal friend of M. *Luther, he supported the so-called *Gnesio-Lutheran tendency and after Luther's death defended Lutheran teaching against what he regarded as concessions to RCs. In 1548 he tried in vain to unite the theological faculty at Wittenburg against the *Augsburg Interim and had to leave for Magdeburg, where he stayed until 1557. From there he wrote against the *Adiaphorists, marking his distance from P. *Melanchthon's conciliatory line. He was the leading force behind the work of the *Centuriators of Magdeburg, but probably not one of the authors. His Catalogus Testium Veritatis (1556) seeks out historical support for Lutheran doctrine and displays wide learning. In 1557 he became professor of NT at Jena. Here his view of free will, which in the 1580s was to make T. Heshusius accuse him of *Manichaeism, led him into conflict with V. *Strigel and other defenders of *synergistic doctrines, and he lost his post in Dec. 1561. He then went to Regensburg, where he worked on his Clavis Scripturae Sacrae (1567). This outlines a method of biblical exegesis in part based on philological work, and in part on the manuals of rhetoric by P. Melanchthon and Andreas Hyperius. After the fall of his protector, the count of Ortenberg, Flacius rapidly lost support and left Regensburg for Antwerp (1566–7), Strasbourg (1567–73), where he dedicated his Glossa Compendiaria in Neuen Testamentum (1570) to the city council, and finally Frankfurt am Main, where he died in the care of the *Magdalenes. See also MISSA ILLYRICA.

Lives by J. B. Ritter (Frankfurt, 1725) and W. Preger (Erlangen, 2 parts, 1859–61). L. Haikola, Gesetz und Evangelium bei Matthias Flacius Illyricus (Studia theologica Lundensia, 1; 1952); R. Keller, Der Schlüssel zur Schrift: Die Lehre vom Wort Gottes bei Matthias Flacius Illyricus (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, NF 5 [1984]). P. Polman, OFM, 'Flacius Illyricus, historien de l'Église', RHE 27 (1931), pp. 27–73. O. K. Olson, 'Matthias Flacius Illyricus', in J. Raitt (ed.), Shapers of Religious Traditions in Germany, Switzerland, and Poland, 1560–1600 [1981], pp. 1–17. J. F. Gilmont in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 311–26; O. K. Olson in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 206–14, with bibl.

flagellants. The bands of men who in later medieval times scourged themselves in public procession, often to the accompaniment of psalms, in penance for the sins of the world. The anarchy and famine caused by war in North and Central Italy, and perhaps the prophecies of *Joachim of Fiore, combined to produce a conviction of the Divine displeasure; in 1260, prob. originating at Perugia, there was an outbreak of such manifestations throughout Italy. The movement was spontaneous and embraced all classes; it was not originated by the clergy or the religious orders. Its adherents engaged in processions, scourgings, and observances in churches; devotion to the BVM was a prominent feature, and social reconciliation and moral reform were strongly promoted. The movement may be regarded as an aspect of the long history of *fraternities. It quickly spread across the Alps to Germany, France, and the Low Countries. In 1348–9, the Black Death led to a revival of the movement, particularly in Northern Europe and above all in Flanders and N. France. When the University of *Paris was asked to pass judgement on it, it referred the matter to the Papacy at *Avignon, where Pope *Clement VI in 1349 called for its suppression by ecclesiastical and secular authorities. However, it survived into the 15th cent., esp. in Thuringia. In Italy, processions of flagellants, orthodox in belief, continued to be held at intervals until the 19th cent. In some missionary areas such observances have persisted, subject to ecclesiastical regulation and restraint, until more recent times.

For the main sources see Haupt, cited below. P. Runge (ed.), Die Lieder und Melodien der Geissler des Jahres 1349 nach der Aufzeichnung Hugo's von Reutlingen (1900); U. Berlière, OSB, 'Trois Traités inédits sur les flagellants de 1349', R. Bén. 25 (1908), pp. 334–57. L. A. *Muratori, Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi, 6 (Milan, 1742), pp. 446–82, diss. 75, 'De Piis Laicorum Confraternitatibus earumque Origine, Flagellantibus, et Sacris Missionibus'. Il movimento dei Disciplinati nel settimo centenario dal suo inizio (Perugia—1260): Convegno internazionale: Perugia, 25–28 Settembre 1960 (Deputazione di Storia Patria per l'Umbria, Appendice al Bollettino 9; 1962). A. Hübner, Die deutschen Geisslerlieder (1931). N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (rev. edn., 1970), pp. 127–47. G. [A.] Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, 2 (1967), pp. 485–93, with bibl. R. Kieckhefer, 'Radical tendencies in the flagellant movement of the mid-fourteenth ceniury', Journal of Medieval and Renaissance Studies, 4 (1974), pp. 157–76; id., Repression of Heresy in Medieval Germany (Liverpool, 1979), pp. 79–82 and 96 f. H. Haupt in PRE (3rd edn.), 6 (1899), pp. 432–44, s.v. 'Geisselung (kirchliche) und Geisslerbruderschaften', with bibl.; L. A. St L. Toke in CE 6 (1909), pp. 89–92, s.v.; P. Bailly in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 392–407, s.v. 'Flagellants', sections 1–3; G. Alberigo in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 327–37, s.v.; G. Cecchini in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 60–72, both s.v.

flags on church towers. Acc. to a ruling given in 1938 by the Earl Marshal, the proper flag to fly on a church tower in England is the red Cross of St *George, with an escutcheon of the Arms of the See in which the church is ecclesiastically situate in the first quarter; but, where this flag cannot be obtained, custom sanctions the use of the plain St George's Cross. No rules have been laid down as to the occasions on which the flag is to be flown, but it is usual for this to be done on important Church festivals, on special occasions of rejoicing, and sometimes on days of national observance.

Flavia Domitilla. See DOMITILLA, FLAVIA.

Flavian, St (d. 449), Patr. of *Constantinople from 446. He is remembered for the important part which he took in the *Monophysite struggle. In 448 he had excommunicated *Eutyches at a synod at Constantinople (the so-called σύνοδος ἐνδημοῦσα) for heretical teaching about the Person of Christ. In the following year Imperial pressure secured the reversal of this decision at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus, and the maltreatment that Flavian suffered here is said to have caused his death a few days later. His remains were subsequently brought solemnly to Constantinople by the Empress *Pulcheria. He was vindicated at the Council of *Chalcedon, which regarded him as a martyr. Feast day in the E., variously 16, 17, 18 Feb. and 12 Nov.; in the W., 18 Feb.

Flavian's libellus appellationis, written immediately after the Latrocinium and directed to Pope *Leo, was found in 1874 by G. Amelli, the librarian of the *Ambrosiana, in the Novara Capitular MS 30 and first pub. by Amelli in S. Leone Magno e l'Oriente (1882). It was reissued by T. *Mommsen, NA 11 (1886), pp. 362–4. A subsequent edn., with an important introd., was pub. by T. A. *Lacey, Appellatio Flaviani: The Letters of Appeal from the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 449, addressed by Flavian and Eusebius to St Leo of Rome (Church Historical Society, 70; 1903). V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1 (fasc. 1, 2nd edn., 1972), pp. 75–84 (nos. 94–110a). H. Chadwick, 'The Exile and Death of Flavian of Constantinople: A Prologue to the Council of Chalcedon', JTS NS 6 (1955), pp. 17–34. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 150–2 (nos. 5930–8). J. Liébaert in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 390–6, s.v. 'Flavien (13)'.

Fléchier, Esprit (1632–1710), French preacher and man of letters. After studying at Tarascon, he was ordained and went to *Paris where, in 1671, he was appointed lecteur (tutor) to the Dauphin. He was chiefly known and admired for his sermons, in particular his funeral orations (most notably that on Turenne). In 1673 he was elected a member of the French Academy. In 1685 he became Bp. of Lavaur and in 1687 of Nîmes, where he exerted a conciliatory influence in the aftermath of the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685).

Œuvres complètes, ed. by G. M. Ducreux (10 vols., Nîmes, 1782) and by J. P. *Migne (2 vols., Paris, 1856). A. E. Delacroix, Histoire de Fléchier d'après les documents originaux (1865). Modern Life by G. [F. X. M.] Grente (Paris, 1934). A. Fabre, La Jeunesse de Fléchier (2 vols., 1882); id., De la correspondance de Fléchier avec Mme Deshoulières (1872); id., Fléchier, orateur (1872). Notice by C. A. Sainte-Beuve prefixed to M. Chéruel (ed.), Les Mémoires de Fléchier sur les Grands-Jours d'Auvergne (1856), pp. iii–xxxix. G. Grente in Dictionnaire des Lettres Françaises: Le Dix-Septième Siècle (1954), pp. 427–32.

Fleming, Richard (d. 1431), Bp. of *Lincoln and founder of Lincoln College, Oxford. Educated at University College, Oxford, he became a Prebendary of *York in 1406. In 1407 he was Junior Proctor at Oxford. At this period he had *Wycliffite sympathies, which brought him into conflict with T. *Arundel, Abp. of *Canterbury, then attempting to eradicate *Lollard doctrine from the university. In 1408 he became rector of Boston, Lincs, and in 1420 Bp. of Lincoln. In 1423 Fleming represented the English nation at the Councils of Pavia and Siena, where he made an eloquent speech before *Martin V championing the Papacy. In 1424 Martin V promoted him to the see of York, but the Chapter having already elected the Bp. of *Worcester, the King's ministers refused to confirm the appointment. In 1427 Fleming founded Lincoln College, Oxford, primarily as a school for opponents of Wycliffite teaching (which he himself had long since forsworn).

His Episcopal Register, ed. N. H. Bennett (*Canterbury and York Society, 73; 1984 ff.). V. [H. H.] Green, The Commonwealth of Lincoln College 1427–1977 (Oxford, 1979), pp. 2–6. For his supposed Lollard sympathies, Snappe's Formulary and Other Records, ed. H. E. Salter (Oxford Historical Society, 80; 1924), pp. 95–100 and 121–8. R. L. Poole in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 282–4. BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 697–9, s.v. 'Flemyng, Richard'.

Fletcher, John William (1729–85), Vicar of Madeley in Salop from 1760. (His original name was de la Fléchère.) A Swiss by birth and education, he arrived in England in 1750. Prob. late in 1753 he joined the *Methodist movement (then still within the C of E) and underwent a 'conversion' experience in Jan. 1754. In 1757 he was ordained deacon and priest on two successive Sundays, and in 1760 he accepted the living of Madeley as a benefice providing more work and less income than another which he had been offered and declined. From 1768 to 1771 he also exercised, so far as his parochial duties allowed, a general supervision over Lady *Huntingdon's college at Trevecca for the training of ministers. Although he resisted John *Wesley's desire to designate him as his successor in the leadership of the Methodists, his sanctity won him a strong personal influence in the movement as well as among the colliers in his parish. He was a prominent advocate of Wesley's doctrine of 'Christian *perfection'. His theological works include six 'Checks to Antinomianism' (1771–5), which was occasioned by the disputes between the '*Arminians' and the '*Calvinists'. He also controverted the *Unitarian doctrines of J. *Priestley.

Collected works, 9 vols., London, 1800–4; 7 vols., ibid., 1826; and 2 vols., Shebbear, Devon, and London, 1835. Lives by J. Wesley (London, 1786) and J. Benson (ibid., 1805). L. Tyerman, Wesley's Designated Successor (1882). G. Lawton, Shropshire Saint: A Study in the Ministry and Spirituality of Fletcher of Madeley (1960). P. P. Streiff, Jean Guillaume de la Fléchère, John William Fletcher, 1729 1785: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Methodismus (Basler und Berner Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 51 [1984]). J. H. Overton in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 312–14.

Fleury (Lat. Floriacum). The place owed its celebrity to the (real or supposed) transference hither in the 7th cent. of the remains of Sts *Benedict and *Scholastica from *Monte Cassino after the Lombards had ravaged Italy, and the large monastery that was erected to house them. It is also known as Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire. Its most famous monk was *Abbo; the reign of his successor, Abbot Gauzlin (1004–30), was also a high point of its monastic and architectural history. Fleury played a considerable part in the monastic revival in England in the 10th cent. In 1790 the abbey was suppressed and most of the buildings demolished, the only part to survive being the magnificent Romanesque basilica, which became the parish church. In 1944 monks from the abbey of La Pierre-qui-Vire returned to Fleury, and a new abbey has been built.

M. Prou and A. Vidier (eds.), Recueil des chartes de l'Abbaye de Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire [up to 1245] (Documents publiés par la Société historique et archéologique du Gâtinais, 5–6; 1900–37). Vita Gauzlini, written by Andrew, a monk of Fleury who had made his profession under Gauzlin, ed., with Fr. tr., by R.-H. Bautier and G. Laboury (Sources d'histoire médiévale, 2; 1969). A. Vidier, L'Historiographie à Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire et les miracles de saint Benoît (posthumously pub., 1965). Various papers on Fleury in Studia Monastica, 21 (1979), an issue devoted to the Cult and Relics of St Benedict and St Scholastica; cf. Il Sepolcro di San Benedetto, 2 (Miscellanea Cassinese, 45; 1982), pp. 293–310. D. W. Rollason, 'The Miracles of St Benedict: A Window on Early Medieval France', in H. Mayr-Harting and R. I. Moore (eds.), Studies in Medieval History presented to R. H. C. Davis (1985), pp. 73–90. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 6 (Oxford, 1953), pp. xviii–xxi. M. Mostert, The Library of Fleury: A Provisional List of Manuscripts (Middeleeuwse Studies en Bronnen, 3; Hilversum, 1989). L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2610–13, s.v. 'St-Benoît-sur-Loire', with extensive bibl. J. Laporte, OSB, in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 441–76, s.v.

Fleury, Claude (1640–1723), ecclesiastical historian. Born in Paris, he was educated by the *Jesuits at the Collège de *Clermont. In 1658 he was called to the bar and practised there until 1667. In 1668 he met J. B. *Bossuet and under his influence took Holy Orders in 1669. In 1672 he was appointed tutor to the young Princes de Conti and in 1680 to the Duc de Vermandois (an illegitimate son of Louis XIV). From 1689 he acted, together with F. de S. de la M. *Fénelon, as tutor to Louis XIV's grandsons. He was given the Cistercian abbey of Loc-Dieu (in the region of Aveyron in S. France) *in commendam in 1684. In connection with his teaching he composed a Traité du choix et de la méthode des études (1686; Eng. tr., 1695), with a chapter on the education of women. In 1694 he was elected a member of the French Academy. In the *Quietist controversy Fleury, as a friend of both opponents, tried to assess the theological errors without renouncing his loyalty to either, even though he somewhat favoured Fénelon's position. Bossuet, in the end, vouched for his orthodoxy. In 1706 he became Prior of Notre-Dame-d'Argenteuil, near Paris. After Louis XIV's death (1715), he was chosen confessor to the young Louis XV, as one who was 'neither *Jansenist nor *Molinist nor *Ultramontane, but Catholic'.

Fleury's chief work is his Histoire ecclésiastique (20 vols., 1691–1720), the first large-scale history of the Church, which is deservedly held in repute for its learning and judgement. He enlisted the help of the *Maurist historians J. *Mabillon and B. de *Montfaucon. Before his death Fleury had reached the year 1414; it was continued to 1778 by J. C. Fabre and others. It was censured for its *Gallican views, but Pope *Benedict XIV prevented its being put on the *Index in 1740. Fleury's ninth Discours sur l'histoire ecclésiastique, the Discours sur les libertés de l'Église Gallicane (1733), however, was put on the Index, as were some of his other works. Besides treatises on secular law, his other writings include Institution du droit ecclésiastique (1677), Les Mœurs des Israélites (1681), Les Mœurs des Chrétiens (1682; Eng. tr., 1698), and Grand Catéchisme historique (1683; Eng. tr., 1726).

Several collections of Fleury's sermons and treatises were issued posthumously, incl. Discours (2 vols., Paris, 1752) and Opuscules (5 vols., Nîmes, 1780). J. *Wesley incorporated an Eng. tr. of extracts from Les Mœurs des chrétiens in his 'Christian Library' (3rd edn., 1767). Eng. tr. of portions of the Histoire ecclésiastique, by J. H. *Newman (3 vols., 1842–44). F. Gaquère, La Vie et les œuvres de Claude Fleury, 1640–1723 (Paris, 1925). R. E. Wanner, Claude Fleury (1640–1723) as an Educational Historiographer and Thinker (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 76; The Hague, 1975). A. Dodin in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 412–19, s.v.; D. Gorce in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 479–89, s.v. 'Fleury (3) Claude'.

Flight into Egypt, the. As recorded in Mt. 2: 13 f., St *Joseph and the BVM journeyed from *Bethlehem into Egypt, taking the infant Jesus out of danger from *Herod the Great after the visit of the *Magi. After Herod's death they returned to *Nazareth (Mt. 2: 23). A reflection of the career of *Moses is clear; any historical basis for the story is, however, often questioned.

Flood, the. Acc. to Gen. 6: 5–9: 17, God brought a 'flood of waters' upon the earth 'to destroy all flesh' (Gen. 6: 17), because of the wickedness of the human race; only *Noah and his family, with specimens of each species of animal life, were preserved in the *Ark to repeople the earth. Scholars who support the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origin of the *Pentateuch claim to discern within the biblical text a conflation of two sources, '*J' and '*P'. The account is related to Mesopotamian traditions of a great flood. There is a Sumerian flood story and allusions to this flood in the Sumerian King List (both on tablets of *c.*1900–1700 BC). The Babylonian Epic of Atra-ḫasīs offers the fullest account, in which the flood is the gods' answer to the problem of human noise after previous attempts to diminish their numbers had failed. It survives in incomplete copies dating from *c.*1650 to *c.*500 BC. No surviving copy contains the episode of the sending out of three birds from the Ark, which closely parallels Gen. 8: 6–12, but the flood story, including reference to the birds, is incorporated in the Babylonian *Gilgamesh Epic 11, and Berossus, a Babylonian priest *c.*300 BC, also summarizes it. There can be little question that the biblical version ultimately depends on a Babylonian source, and this no doubt drew on memories of exceptional floods in Sumer in the first half of the third millennium BC. Archaeological evidence of such floods has been found at several sites.

W. G. Lambert and A. R. Millard (eds.), Atra-ḫasīs: The Babylonian Story of the Flood, with The Sumerian Flood Story, ed. M. Civil (Oxford, 1969), incl. Eng. tr. On the material parallel to the Gen. account, also W. G. Lambert in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 67–79, s.v. 'Babylonien und Israel'. J. P. Lewis, A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish and Christian Literature (Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 42–120, 156–80. W. M. Clark, 'The Flood and the Structure of Pre-patriarchal History', ZATW 83 (1971), pp. 184–211; R. Oberforcher, Die Flutprologe als Kompositionsschlüssel der biblischer Urgeschichte (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 8; 1981). J. P. Lewis in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 798–803, s.v. See also comm. on GENESIS, cited s.v., and bibl. to ARK and NOAH.

Florence, Council of (1438–45). This was a continuation of the Council at *Basle, which Pope *Eugenius IV transferred first to Ferrara in 1438, to Florence in 1439, and to Rome in 1443; the whole is reckoned by RCs as the 17th *Oecumenical Council. The chief object of the Council of Florence was reunion with the Greek Church, which sought support from the W. against the Turks, who were nearing *Constantinople. After a majority of the members assembled at Basle had refused to move to a place more convenient to the Greeks, Eugenius IV transferred the Council to Ferrara, where it opened on 8 Jan. 1438. Among its most distinguished members were the Greek Emperor, John VIII Palaeologus, and Joseph, Patr. of Constantinople. Its leading theologians included, on the Latin side, Card. J. *Cesarini and the *Dominican, John of Montenero; on the Greek the unionist *Bessarion, Metropolitan of Nicaea and later cardinal, and the anti-unionist Mark, Metropolitan of *Ephesus. The Council was formally inaugurated on 9 April, but delay caused by the Emperor led to the formation of a commission of 10 Latins and 10 Greeks to decide which were the principal points of controversy. These were the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit, the use of unleavened *bread for the *Eucharist, the doctrine of *purgatory and the primacy of the Pope. The next two months were spent in informal discussion on purgatory. The first public session (on 8 Oct. 1438) debated, on the choice of the Greeks, the *Filioque clause as an addition to the Creed. The Greeks asserted that any addition to the Nicene Creed, even of a single word, whether it was doctrinally correct or not, was, according to the prohibition enacted at the Council of *Ephesus, illegal, and its perpetrators excommunicated. The Latins claimed that the prohibition referred to meaning, not words. Discussion, without agreement, continued in 13 sessions until 13 Dec., by which time the Papal exchequer was empty.

On 10 Jan. 1439 the Council was transferred to Florence, the city having agreed, against future repayment, to finance it. From 2 to 24 Mar. in eight sessions it debated the Filioque clause as doctrine—whether the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father only, acc. to the Greeks, or from the Father and the Son, acc. to the Latins—without agreement. Public sessions having thus failed, various expedients were tried to lead to union, in the course of which Bessarion addressed to the Greek synod his 'Oratio Dogmatica', urging that the Double Procession was taught more or less explicitly by both Greek and Latin Fathers. The Latins gave the Greeks a precisely worded statement of doctrine, which the Greeks modified, and then would not clarify the resulting ambiguities. In the prevailing atmosphere of defeat, as a last resort, on 27 May the Pope addressed the Greeks. Thereupon the unionists among the Greeks urged with renewed energy what to all Greeks was axiomatic, that saints cannot err in faith, so that, though Latin saints and Greek saints expressed their faith differently, substantially they were in agreement. The argument prevailed. By 8 June the Greeks had accepted the Latin statement of doctrine. On 10 June Patriarch Joseph died. Statements on the Eucharist and on Papal primacy, which caused some difficulty, on purgatory and on the legitimacy of the Filioque clause were presented to the Greeks and eventually accepted. These were incorporated into the Decree of Union, beginning with the words '*Laetentur Coeli', which was eventually signed on 5 July 1439 and solemnly promulgated the following day. Mark of Ephesus was the only Greek bishop to refuse his signature.

After the departure of the Greeks the Council remained in session to deal with the continuing Council of Basle and the union with other E. Churches. All members of the Council of Basle were declared heretics and excommunicated, and the superiority of the Pope over the Councils was affirmed in the bull 'Etsi non dubitemus' of 20 Apr. 1441. Union was established with the *Armenians in 1439 and with the *Copts of Egypt in 1442. In 1443 the Council was transferred to Rome. Little is known of its further activities, except that unions were effected with several other E. Churches, such as the *Syrians (1444) and certain *Chaldeans and *Maronites of Cyprus. There is no record of any official closing of the Council.

The union of the Greeks was challenged by popular sentiment in Constantinople, and many of the older bishops recanted. Mark of Ephesus throughout remained against the union, though Bessarion and other of the younger prelates continued in favour. Constantinople was captured by the Turks in 1453 and the union ceased. That with Armenia lasted until the fall of Caffa to the Turks in 1475. Exact information about the other unions is lacking.

The importance of the Council of Florence lies in its definition of doctrine and in the principle it established for Church union—unity of faith with diversity of rite—a principle followed in several subsequent unions and still valid.

Hardouin, 9, cols. 1–1080; Mansi, 31 (1798), cols. 459–1120, and in suppl. to vol. 31 (1801), cols. 1121–998. Crit. edn. of relevant material in Concilium Florentinum: Documenta et Scriptores. Editum consilio et impensis Pontificii Instituti Orientalium Studiorum (11 vols., Rome, 1940–77, esp. vol. 5, the Acta Graeca, ed. with Lat. tr. by J. Gill, SJ (1953), and vol. 6, the Acta Latina, ed. G. Hofmann, SJ (1955)). Text of decrees, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 513–91, with introd., pp. 453 f. Eng. tr. of various primary docs. in C. M. D. Crowder, Unity, Heresy and Reform 1378–1460: The Conciliar Response to the Great Schism (1977), pp. 165–81. E. Cecconi, Studi storici sul concilio di Firenze (Naples, 1869, with docs.). Hefele and Leclercq, 7 (pt. 2; 1916), pp. 951–1106. G. Hofmann, SJ, Papato, conciliarismo, patriarcato, 1438–1439: Teologi e deliberazioni del Concilio di Firenze (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae edita a Facultate Historiae Ecclesiasticae in Pontificia Universitate Gregoriana, 2 (pt. 1; collectionis totius n. 2; 1940)). J. Gill, SJ, The Council of Florence (Cambridge, 1959); id., Personalities of the Council of Florence (Oxford, 1964). J. Décarreaux, Les Grecs au Concile de l'Union, Ferrare–Florence 1438–1439 [1970]. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 267–86. G. Alberigo (ed.), Christian Unity: The Council of Ferrara-Florence 1438/39 1989 (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 97; 1991). P. De Vooght, OSB, in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 561–8, s.v. J. Gill, SJ, in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 289–96, s.v. 'Basel-Ferrara-Florenz, Konzil von. II. Das Konzil von Florenz', both with bibl. See also bibl. to BASLE, COUNCIL OF and EUGENIUS IV.

Florentius Radewijns (1350–1400). One of the earliest members of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He belonged to the group which had come under the influence of G. *Groote, and on Groote's death in 1384 became the head of the community which he had founded at Deventer in the Netherlands. His house here was the first settled establishment of the Brethren, who seem previously not to have lived under a common roof. Under his influence the monastery at *Windesheim was founded in 1387.

The principal authority is the Life by *Thomas à Kempis, pr. among the latter's works (Nuremberg, 1494, fol. 38ʳ–fol. 44ʳ, and in all later edns.); Eng. tr. by J. P. Arthur, The Founders of the New Devotion (1905), pp. 81–162. A. Hyma, The 'Devotio Moderna' or Christian Renaissance (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1925]), esp. pp. 49–58, virtually repr. in his The Brethren of the Common Life (ibid., 1950), pp. 55–63; R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 317–25. M. van Woerkum, SCJ, 'Florentius Radewijns: Leven, Geschriften, Persoonlijkheid en Ideeën', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 24 (1950), pp. 337–64. Id. in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 427–34, s.v. 'Florent (4) Radewijns'; G. Epiney-Burgard in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 7 (1989), cols. 967–72, s.v. 'Radewijns, Florens'. See also other works cited under BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE; DEVOTIO MODERNA; GROOTE, G.; and WINDESHEIM.

florilegium (Lat. flos, 'a flower', and lego, 'I gather', by extension 'I read'). A collection of selected passages from the writings of previous authors. Special interest attaches to the Greek *patristic florilegia. Besides those composed of excerpts from commentaries on the Bible and known as *catenae, a considerable number of dogmatic florilegia compiled from the 5th cent. onwards have survived. Such collections of passages (χρήσεις) were often drawn up to establish the orthodoxy or heterodoxy of individual theologians, and many became incorporated into the Acta of the ecclesiastical councils. For the historian they are often of much value, esp. when they preserve passages from works of which the bulk has been lost. A patristic florilegium of a non-dogmatic kind is the collection of extracts made by *Gregory of Nazianzus and *Basil of Caesarea from the writings of *Origen and known as the *'Philocalia'.

Latin florilegia are well established from the 5th cent. onwards. Their material is patristic, later supplemented by excerpts from Carolingian authors such as Haymo of Auxerre (d. *c.*865), and later still by excerpts from major 12th-cent. writers such as *Hugh of St-Victor and St *Bernard. The early florilegia were dogmatic and ascetic, as, for example, the Augustinian florilegium by *Prosper of Aquitaine and the widely known ascetic florilegium by *Defensor of Ligugé. In the later Middle Ages florilegia became preaching tools, a notable example, well organized and indexed, being the Manipulus Florum of Thomas of Ireland (d. before 1338).

Among the more important dogmatic florilegia are the 'Doctrina Patrum de Incarnatione Verbi' (preserved in MSS Vat. gr. 2200, Bodl. Misc. 184, etc.; ed. F. Diekamp, Münster i.W., 1907; 2nd edn. by B. Phanourgakis and E. Chrysos, ibid., 1981) and the 'Anti-Chalcedonian Collection in Vat. gr. 1431' (ed. E. *Schwartz, Abh. (Bayr.), 32, Heft 6, 1927; with valuable discussion of florilegia generally). M. Richard, 'Notes sur les Florilèges dogmatiques du Vᵉ et du VIᵉ siècle', in Actes du VIᵉ Congrès International d'Études Byzantines, 1 (1950), pp. 307–18; id., 'Les Florilèges diphysites du Vᵉ et du VIᵉ siècle', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (Würzburg [1951]), pp. 721–48; R. H. and M. A. Rouse, Preachers, Florilegia and Sermons: Studies on the Manipulus florum of Thomas of Ireland (Studies and Texts, 47; Toronto, 1979). Krumbacher, pp. 206–18. M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, 1 (1909), pp. 114–16 and 183–8; J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et Moyen-Âge, 2 (1947), pp. 289–98. H. M. Rochais, P. Delhaye, and M. Richard in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 435–512, s.v. 'Florilèges spirituels'; H. M. Rochais in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 979 f.; H. Chadwick in RAC 7 (1969), cols. 1131–60; esp. cols. 1143–60; E. Mühlenberg and F. Brunhölzl in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 215–21, all s.v., with bibl.

Florovsky, George (1893–1979), Russian theologian. The son of a Russian priest, he graduated in arts at Odessa University (1916), subsequently lecturing there in philosophy (1919–1920). Leaving Russia in 1920, he went first to Sofia and then to Prague, where he was made lecturer in the faculty of law (1922–6). In 1926 he became Professor of Patristics at the Orthodox Theological Institute of St Sergius in Paris, and later Professor of Dogmatics. He was ordained priest in 1932. Moving to the USA in 1948, he became successively Professor and Dean at St Vladimir's Russian Orthodox Seminary, New York (1948–55), Professor of Eastern Church History at Harvard Divinity School (1956–64), and Visiting Professor at Princeton University (from 1964). He wrote extensively on the Greek Fathers (mainly in Russian), urging the necessity for a 'neo-Patristic synthesis', and he published an elaborate study of Russian religious thought, Ways of Russian Theology (in Russian, Paris, 1937; Eng. tr. in Collected Works, 5–6). He played a leading part in the *Ecumenical Movement, from 1937 serving regularly as a delegate at assemblies of the *Faith and Order movement and of the *World Council of Churches.

Collected Works [in Eng.], after his death ed. R. S. Haugh, vols. 1–5 (incomplete, Belmont, Mass., 1972–9); complete edn., incorporating reissue of earlier edn. (14 vols. + index, ibid., 1987 ff.). D. Neiman and M. Schatkin (eds.), The Heritage of the Early Church: Essays in honor of ... Georges Vasilievich Florovsky (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 195; Rome, 1973), with list of his works, pp. 437–51. G. H. Williams, 'Georges Vasilievich Florovsky: his American career (1948–1965)', The Greek Orthodox Theological Review, 11 (1965), pp. 7–107. Y. N. Lelouvier, Perspectives russes sur l'Église: Un théologien contemporain, Georges Florovsky (1968). C. Künkel, Totus Christus: Die Theologie Georges V. Florovskys (Forschungen zur systematischen und ökumenischen Theologie, 62 [1991]).

Florus (d. *c.*860), deacon of Lyons. Little is known of his life, but he was prob. born in the region of Lyons. He served successive Abps. of Lyons, *Agobard, Amolo, and Remigius, and was a canon of the cathedral church. His works on canon law, liturgy, and theology, which he appears never to have signed, were written in their service. When *Amalarius was made administrator of the see of Lyons and tried to make changes in the liturgy, Florus attacked him in a series of works, one of which, the 'Expositio Missae', continued to be read. He took part in the controversy on predestination, defending *Gottschalk and attacking Johannes Scottus *Erigena. He was deeply versed in patristic writings, and the manuscripts at Lyons contain many traces of his editorial work. He compiled various Expositions on the Pauline Epistles, based on the writings of different Fathers; the one based on works of St *Augustine circulated widely under the name of *Bede.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL 119. 11–424, incl. analysis (only) of the Exposition based on Augustine; the text is pr. among the works of Bede (e.g. Bedae Opera, 6 (Cologne, 1688), cols. 31–823). Presentation of other Expositions on the Pauline Epistles attributed to Florus, by P.-I. Fransen, OSB, in R. Bén. 87 (1977), pp. 349–71 (extracts from St *Ephraem); 94 (1984), pp. 195–228 (St *Jerome); 98 (1988), pp. 278–317 (St *Gregory the Great); and of a collection of patristic and conciliar excerpts 'De fide' by C. Charlier, OSB, in Traditio, 8 (1952), pp. 81–109. Crit. edn. of the 'Expositio Missae' by P. Duc, Étude sur l'Expositio Missae de Florus de Lyon (Belley, 1937). Martyrology ed. J. Dubois, OSB, and G. Renaud, Édition pratique des martyrologes de Bède, de l'anonyme lyonnais et de Florus (1976). Three letters ed. E. Duemmler in MGH, Epistolae, 5 (1899), pp. 206–10, 267–74, and 340–3. Crit. edn. of his verse by id. in MGH, Poetae, 2 (1884), pp. 509–66, and by K. Strecker, ibid. 4 (1923), pp. 930 f. C. Charlier, OSB, 'Les Manuscrits personnels de Florus de Lyon et son activité littéraire', in Mélanges E. Podechard (Lyons, 1945), pp. 71–84; id., 'La Compilation augustinienne de Florus sur l'Apôtre. Sources et authenticité', R. Bén. 57 (1947), pp. 132–67. A. Cabaniss, 'Florus of Lyons', Classica et Mediaevalia, 19 (1958), pp. 212–32. C. Charlier in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 514–26, s.v.; M. Cappuyns, OSB, in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 648–54, s.v. 'Florus (6) de Lyon'.

Flüe, Nikolaus von. See NICHOLAS OF FLÜE.

Focolare, the (Ital., 'hearth'). A lay movement, predominantly RC, but with ecumenical membership and aspirations. Officially styled 'Opera di Maria' ('Work of Mary'), it was founded during the Second World War by Chiara Lubich (b. 1920) in Trent, N. Italy, when the city was under bombardment; it dates its foundation to 7 Dec. 1943. It received papal approval from *John XXIII in 1962 and its statutes were sanctioned by *John Paul II in 1990. The Focolare includes both celibate and married people, as well as children, priests, and religious. It sees its spirituality as containing the whole Gospel, interpreted from the angle of Christ's prayer 'May they all be one' (Jn. 17: 21) and works to this end through dialogue between the Churches, with other religions, and with contemporary culture. It is active in almost every country, with members from most Christian denominations, as well as people of other faiths and non-believers. It has its own publishing houses, training centres, and small townships. In 1977 Chiara Lubich was awarded the Templeton Prize for progress in Religion.

L'Unità è la nostra avventura: Il movimento dei Focolari [ed. S. Veronesi and others] (Rome, 1986; Eng. tr., Brooklyn, NY [1987]). E. [H.] Robertson, Chiara ([Belfast] 1978); id., The Fire of Love: A Life of Igino Giordani 'Foco' (1989), esp. pp. 157–251.

folded chasuble. A form of the *chasuble pinned up in front (planeta plicata) formerly worn in the W. Church by the *deacon and *subdeacon at *High Mass in penitential seasons. Its use at a normal High Mass was dropped in 1960, though it survived at *Ordinations until 1968. The so-called *broad stole worn by the deacon at the reading of the Gospel is in origin also a 'folded chasuble', but folded in another way.

Braun, LG, pp. 166–9 ('Anlegungsweise der Kasel bei den Diakonen, Subdiakonen und Akolythen. Die Planeta Plicata').

Foliot, Gilbert (*c.*1110–87), Bp. of London. Born into the lower ranks of the English aristocracy, he was a clerk and a pupil of Robert *Pullen, perhaps at Oxford. Before 1130 he became a monk at *Cluny. On account of the respect inspired by his austerity, learning, and social connections, his rise was swift; he became one of the claustral priors of Cluny, Prior of Abbeville, and in 1139 Abbot of *Gloucester. King Stephen appointed him to the abbacy, prob. at the instigation of Miles, castellan of Gloucester, Foliot's cousin. Gradually he came to play an important, although usually controversial, part in ecclesiastical and political affairs. A friend of *Theobald, Abp. of *Canterbury, he was elected Bp. of *Hereford at the Council of Reims (1148) through Angevin influence, but he made his peace with Stephen. A disappointed candidate for the Archbishopric of Canterbury in 1162, with Thomas *Becket's support he was translated to London in 1163. When Henry II quarrelled with Becket in Oct. 1163, Foliot supported the King, esp. at Becket's trial at Northampton (Oct. 1164) and became one of the Archbishop's greatest enemies, refusing to repeat the profession of obedience to Canterbury which he had already made in 1148, advancing London's claim to metropolitan status, and orchestrating the royalist bishops' opposition to the 'traitor'. After Becket's flight into exile (Nov. 1164), in his capacity as Dean of the Province of Canterbury, Foliot operated as its acting-head until Becket excommunicated him for recalcitrance on Palm Sunday 1169. On his appeal to Rome, the Pope empowered the Bp. of *Exeter and the Abp. of Rouen to absolve him (Easter 1170). On 29 Nov., however, on the authority of Papal letters dated 16 Sept., Becket reanimated the excommunication, now reinforced by suspension, because Foliot had taken part in the coronation of the King's son on 14 June in derogation of the rights of the Church of Canterbury. When Becket on his return to England refused to absolve him, Foliot crossed to the King's court in Normandy and took part in the discussions which led to Becket's murder. After successfully purging himself of complicity, he was released from excommunication on 1 Aug. 1171 and from suspension on 1 May 1172. Thereafter he resumed a leading position in the English Church. Among his theological works are commentaries on the Lord's Prayer and on the Song of Songs. Many of his letters and acta have survived.

The Letters and Charters of Gilbert Foliot, Abbot of Gloucester (1139–48), Bishop of Hereford (1148–63) and London (1163 87). An edn. projected by Z. N. Brooke, completed by [S.] A. Morey, OSB, and C. N. L. Brooke (Cambridge, 1967); earlier edn. of letters repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 190. 739–1068, index, 1500–6. 'Expositio in Cantica Canticorum', ed. P. Young (London, 1638), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 202. 1147–304. [S.] A. Morey, OSB, and C. N. L. Brooke, Gilbert Foliot and his Letters (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, NS 11; 1965). [M.] D. *Knowles, The Episcopal Colleagues of Archbishop Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures for 1949, 1951), esp. pp. 37–49. G. G. Perry in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 358–60.

Folkestone Ritual Case. See RIDSDALE JUDGEMENT.

font (Lat. fons, 'spring of water'). Receptacle for baptismal water, normally made of stone, more rarely of metal. In early times, when adult Baptism by immersion was the rule, it was a large basin below ground-level in which the neophyte stood while the water was poured over him. When infant Baptism came to be the norm, the font, still rather large, was raised slightly above the ground so that the child could conveniently be immersed by the minister. Later still, when *affusion became the prevalent form of Baptism in the West, fonts became smaller and higher, being frequently richly ornamented, and gradually took on their present cup shape. They also came to be covered by a lid that was sometimes locked to preserve the purity of the baptismal water and to guard it from profanation. In some churches the font stands either in a separate chapel (*baptistery) or is railed off in a locked enclosure. The 1969 (RC) Ordo Baptismi lays down that the font may be in any convenient part of the church to allow the congregation to assemble for Baptisms. In the Orthodox Church it is now customary to employ a portable font, made of metal and kept in the sacristy when not in use.

F. Simpson, A Series of Ancient Baptismal Fonts Chronologically Arranged (1828); [T. Combe], Illustrations of Baptismal Fonts (1844), with introd. by F. A. Paley. F. Bond, Fonts and Font Covers (1908); C. J. Wall, Porches and Fonts (1912), pp. 175–338; E. Tyrrell-Green, Baptismal Fonts (1928); G. Pudelko, Romanische Taufsteine (1932); G. Zarnecki, English Romanesque Lead Sculpture: Lead Fonts of the twelfth century (1957). J. G. Davies, The Architectural Setting of Baptism (1962). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1, 1939), cols. 1080–119, s.v. 'Piscine'.

Fontevrault, Order of. A 'double order' of monks and nuns, living under the rule of one abbess, though in separate convents. In 1100 Bl Robert d'Arbrissel (d. 1116) founded an abbey at Fontevrault, SE of Saumur in France, on the basis of the *Benedictine Rule, with certain more rigorous additions, and in *c.*1115 gave it a constitution with Petronilla as its first abbess. Dependent houses were soon established in many parts of France, and a few in England and Spain. In the 13th cent. the Order was very poor, but considerably prospered in the 14th, and after a period of decadence in the 15th was reformed by successive abbesses between 1475 and 1502. It disappeared in the Revolution of 1789, but was revived as an order for women only by Mme Rose in 1806, certain modifications being then made to the original Rule.

[H. Nicquet, SJ], Histoire de l'ordre de Fontevrault (Angers, 1586; Paris, 1642). Édouard [pseudonym of A. Biron], Fontevrault et ses monuments ou histoire de cette royale abbaye depuis sa fondation jusqu'à sa suppression, 1100 1793 (2 vols., 1873–4); L. F. Bossebœuf, Fontevrault: Son histoire et ses monuments (Tours [1890]). Histoire de l'ordre de Fontevrault, 1100–1908, by the Religious of Sainte-Marie-de-Fontevrault-de-Boulaur now located in Vera in Navarre (3 vols., Auch, 1911–15). L. A. Picard, L'Ordre de Fontevrault de 1115 à 1207 (Saumur [1933]). S. Poignant, L'Abbaye de Fontevrault et les filles de Louis XV (1966). J. Dalarun, L'Impossible Sainteté: La vie retrouvée de Robert d'Arbrissel (v.1045 1116), fondateur de Fontevraud (1985); id., Robert d'Arbrissel, fondateur de Fontevraud (1986). J. Daoust in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 961–71, s.v.; J.-M. Bienvenu in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 704–13, s.v. 'Robert (2) d'Arbrissel', both with bibl.

fool in Christ. See SALOS.

Fools, Feast of. A mock religious festival which was widely celebrated in the Middle Ages on or about 1 Jan., esp. in France. It may have grown out of a 'festival of the *subdeacons', sometimes kept on 1 Jan. The feast was an occasion of much buffoonery and extravagance, often approaching the blasphemous, and several ecclesiastical reformers (e.g. R. *Grosseteste, Bp. of Lincoln) made attempts to suppress it. In 1435 very severe penalties were imposed by the Council of *Basle for its observance, and it seems to have finally disappeared in the middle of the 16th cent. See also MISRULE, LORD OF; BOY BISHOP; ASSES, FEAST OF.

E. K. Chambers, The Mediaeval Stage (1903), 1, pp. 274–335; J. Heers, Fêtes des fous et Carnavals [1983], esp. pp. 105–89. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 6 (1909), pp. 132 f., s.v.

foot-pace. See PREDELLA.

foot-washing. See PEDILAVIUM.

Forbes, Alexander Penrose (1817–75), Bp. of Brechin, the 'Scottish Pusey'. Originally in the East India Company, he entered Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1840. Here he came under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, gave up his intention of returning to India and decided to be ordained. On the nomination of E. B. *Pusey, he became Vicar of St Saviour's, Leeds, in 1847, but a few months later he was elected Bp. of Brechin, where he remained for the rest of his life and laboured to further Tractarian principles in Scotland. His defence of the doctrine of the Real Presence in his primary charge, delivered on 5 Aug. 1857, led to his censure in 1860 by the college of bishops. Later he became keenly interested in the cause of the *Old Catholics. A close friend of R. M. *Benson, he took a particular interest in the foundation of the *Society of St John the Evangelist. His writings, mainly practical, but with a sound scholarly (esp. *patristic) basis, included A Commentary on the Seven Penitential Psalms (1847), *A Short Explanation of the Nicene Creed (1852; 2nd edn., much enlarged, 1866), a translation of Part I of Claude Arvisenet's Memoriale Vitae Sacerdotalis (1853), and An Explanation of the Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1867–8; written at Pusey's suggestion). He also published, partly in conjunction with his brother (see following entry), several liturgical and hagiographical texts.

D. J. Mackey, Bishop Forbes: A Memoir (1888); W. Perry, A. P. Forbes (1939); R. Strong, Alexander Forbes of Brechin: The First Tractarian Bishop (Oxford, 1995). M. [C.] Lochhead, Episcopal Scotland in the Nineteenth Century [1966], pp. 106–38. A. Vian in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 378 f.

Forbes, George Hay (1821–75), *patristic scholar. Brother of the preceding, he was hampered throughout his life by severe paralysis of the legs. At an early age he developed keen liturgical interests, while his High Church beliefs brought him into relation with the *Tractarians. In 1848, despite his infirmity, he was ordained deacon by Patrick Torry, Bp. of St Andrews (1844–52), and in the same year started an Episcopal mission at Burntisland. Ordained priest by his brother in 1849, he worked as a model pastor, building a church at Burntisland and setting up his own printing press. The liturgical texts which he edited, mostly from his own press, included The Ancient Liturgies of the Gallican Church (with J. M. *Neale, 3 parts, 1855–67) and the *Arbuthnott Missal (with A. P. *Forbes, 1864). The edition of the *Sarum Missal, by F. H. Dickinson, published at Burntisland in 1861–83, also embodied much of his work. All his publications reflected his meticulous accuracy, and he was described by E. *Bishop as 'facile princeps among those who have dealt with Western Liturgy in the last century'.

W. Perry, George Hay Forbes: A Romance in Scholarship (1927). M. [C.] Lochhead, Episcopal Scotland in the Nineteenth Century [1966], pp. 154–60.

Forbes, William (1585–1634), first Bp. of Edinburgh. A native of Aberdeen, he was educated at Marischal College in the town, where he was for a time professor of logic. After holding various offices, he was appointed by *Charles I Bp. of Edinburgh in 1634, but died two months later. He is remembered esp. for his erudite Considerationes modestae et pacificae controversiarum de Justificatione, Purgatorio, Invocatione Sanctorum, Christo Mediatore et Eucharistia, published posthumously in 1658. It shows Forbes as a strong *High Churchman, keen on reconciliation with Rome and zealous for episcopacy. In his treatment of the *Eucharist he defended a doctrine of the Real Presence; and though he criticized the doctrine of *transubstantiation, he denied that it was heretical. He also held that the Eucharist was a propitiatory sacrifice.

The Considerationes Modestae were reissued, with Eng. tr., by G. H. *Forbes (LACT, 2 vols., 1850–6).

Forged Decretals. See FALSE DECRETALS.

Form. The word 'form', taken literally, is synonymous with 'shape', but it is used by philosophers in a wider sense. For *Plato a form (εἶδος or ἰδέα) was an eternal transcendent prototype which acted as a pattern for each sort of earthly reality. *Aristotle held that forms existed only within things themselves, making them what they are and (in living things) controlling their development. St *Augustine followed Plato, but, like many other Christians, he adopted the Middle *Platonic understanding of the forms as thoughts of the divine mind which find expression in created reality. In the Middle Ages Aristotle's distinction of form and matter was revived and given a much extended use.

Medieval thinkers distinguished several kinds of 'forms', the more important being: (1) 'substantial forms', which are the principles determining prime matter to a particular nature, e.g. man or horse; (2) 'accidental forms', which determine substances to some accidental mode of being, e.g. whiteness or greatness; (3) 'separated forms', which exist apart from matter, thus the angels and human souls after death. Acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas there can be only one substantial form for every being, whereas the Franciscan school admits several. The concept of the substantial form was used in the question of the relations between soul and body. Acc. to the Thomist teaching, approved by the Council of *Vienne in 1312 and the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1513, the rational soul is the form of the human body which gives it its human condition. The idea that reality is constituted by form and matter (*hylomorphism) was also employed in connection with the theology of the *Sacraments. The form was held to consist of the words which give significance to the sacramental use to which the matter was put. Thus in Baptism the matter of the sacrament was water, whereas its form consisted of the Trinitarian formula employed.

The notion of form has continued to play an important role. G. W. *Leibniz saw forms as part of reality; his 'monads' were a kind of pure form. I. *Kant used the word 'form' in a subjective sense independent of the Platonic tradition, to denote the basic characteristics of human experience. He therefore distinguished between the two forms of perception (Anschauungsformen), i.e. space and time, and the forms of thought (Verstandesformen) arranged in 12 'categories' of unity, plurality, totality, etc., which are valid a priori. G. W. F. *Hegel saw the forms of being as controlled by a single form-giving principle, the Absolute Idea. In E. Husserl's (1859–1935) *Phenomenology, the form is understood neither metaphysically nor subjectively, but is grasped by the perceiving subject. Modern *Existentialism tends to depreciate the notion of form as a purely human convention which impairs our freedom.

formalism. The word is used in religious contexts in at least three senses. (1) Undue insistence on the outward observances of religion or the prescriptions of a moral code, with a corresponding neglect of the inner spirit or significance which the 'forms' were designed to safeguard.

(2) In the 17th cent. the word was used of readiness to support the religious body or party in power at the moment, i.e. for religious time-serving. This sense is now obsolete.

(3) Of theories of ethics which look for the ground of moral action in the form of the moral law alone (e.g. in the '*Categorical Imperative' of I. *Kant), without reference to any specific purposes or values which it is desired through the action to achieve or realize. An elaborate criticism of the Kantian form of this doctrine is contained in Max Scheler's Der Formalismus in der Ethik und die materiale Wertethik (1913–16).

formal sin. A sinful act which is both in itself wrong and known by the person committing it to be wrong. See also MATERIAL SIN.

Form Criticism (Ger. Formgeschichte). As applied esp. to the Bible, the attempt to discover the origin and trace the history of particular passages by analysis of their structural forms. It entails three distinct processes: (1) the analysis of the material into the separate units, the form of each of which is held to have been gradually fixed in the process of transmission from mouth to mouth; (2) the recovery of the earlier history of these forms; and (3) the ascertainment of the historical setting which determined the various forms.

The method was first applied by H. *Gunkel to the narratives of Gen. (1901) and extended by H. Gressmann to the narratives about *Moses (1903) and the other Books of the *Pentateuch. Gunkel's principal application of Form Criticism, however, was in the study of the Psalms; he concluded that Hebrew religious poetry had a long history, that its forms had taken shape in oral tradition at a comparatively early date and had become fully developed before the Exile (*c.*586 BC). So fruitful was the technique that it has since been widely applied to the rest of the OT.

The most notable use of Form Criticism has been upon the oral traditions behind the *Synoptic Gospels. J. *Weiss pointed the way in his article in Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart (1st edn., 1912) and in 1919 M. *Dibelius published his analysis of the Gospels into various literary forms, assigning them to preachers, teachers, and narrators, and assuming that the earliest original form to which we can get back is the short sermon, such as we find in Acts. A little later, R. Bultmann (1921) produced a still more detailed analysis, while M. Albertz (1921) argued that the Gospel discourses were in part modified by early 'community debates', and G. Bertram (1922) that the form of the narrative of Christ's Passion (which most Form-Critics regard as much more primitive than the rest of the Gospel) was influenced by the liturgical needs and practices of the early Church. The main classes of form which emerge are: (1) Paradigms (i.e. models for preachers) or Apophthegms*. These are short stories culminating in a saying of Jesus, such as that of the Tribute Money (Mk. 12: 13–17); (2) Miracle Stories; (3) Sayings; and (4) Historical Narratives and Legends (i.e. narrative material). It is widely agreed that the needs of the Church helped to preserve and mould the traditions about Jesus; more controversial is the claim that they were created in this context or that their use in the Church can be inferred from their literary form (Sitz im Leben*).

In so far as the method has been applied to the remaining books of the NT, attention has tended to be concentrated on the identification of catechetical material and liturgical formulae, such as 'baptismal' phrases, and lists of virtues and vices. It is held that the isolation of these categories of material behind the NT Epistles throws light on the life of the early Church, and in particular that it may be used to explain the parallels between various Epistles without supposing their authors to have been dependent on one another.

M. Dibelius, Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (1919; 3rd edn., 1959; Eng. tr., From Tradition to Gospel, 1934); R. Bultmann, Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition (1921; 2nd edn., 1931; Eng. tr., 1963); V. Taylor, The Formation of the Gospel Tradition (1933); R. H. *Lightfoot, History and Interpretation in the Gospels (1935); P. Carrington, The Primitive Christian Catechism: A Study in the Epistles (Cambridge, 1940); E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St Peter (1946), pp. 363–466; B. Gerhardsson, Memory and Manuscript: Oral Tradition and Written Transmission in Rabbinic Judaism and Early Christianity (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsalensis, 22; 1961); id., Evangeliernas Förhistoria (Lund, 1977; Eng. tr., The Origins of the Traditions, 1979); K. Koch, Was ist Formgeschichte? Neue Wege der Bibelexegese (Neukirchen, 1964; 2nd edn., 1967; Eng. tr., 1969); E. Güttgemanns, Offene Fragen zur Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, Theologische Abhandlungen, 54; 1970; Eng. tr., Candid Questions concerning Gospel Form Criticism, Pittsburgh, 1979); G. M. Tucker, Form Criticism of the Old Testament (Philadelphia [1971]); J. H. Hayes (ed.), Old Testament Form Criticism (Trinity University Monograph Series in Religion, 2; San Antonio, Tex. [1974]); W. H. Kelber, The Oral and Written Gospel (Philadelphia [1983]); J. Barton, Reading the Old Testament: Method in Biblical Study (1984), pp. 30–44; K. Berger, Formgeschichte des Neuen Testaments (Heidelberg, 1984). J. Barton and V. K. Robbins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 938–44, s.v.

Formgeschichte. See FORM CRITICISM.

Formosus (*c.*816–96), Pope from 891. He became Cardinal-Bp. of Porto in 864, and was employed by successive Popes on several diplomatic missions. As Pope he acted constructively towards the E. Church, in 892 proposing a compromise solution to the vexed question of *Photius' ordinations. After his death the party opposed to him in Imperial politics charged him with usurpation of the Holy See, and a synod convened by Pope Stephen VI (896–7) in Jan. 897 exhumed, stripped, and mutilated his body, and declared him deposed. Succeeding Popes, however, reversed the decisions of this synod.

His Letters (8) in J. P. Migne, PL 129. 837–48; crit. edn. of four letters by G. Laehr in MGH, Epistulae, 7 (1928), pp. 366–70. Hefele and Leclercq, 4 (2; 1911), pp. 708–19, with bibl. J. Duhr, 'Le Concile de Ravenne en 898. La Réhabilitation du Pape Formose', Rech. S.R. 22 (1932), pp. 541–79; id., 'Humble Vestige d'un grand espoir déçu. Épisode de la vie de Formose', ibid. 42 (1954), pp. 361–87. Fliche and Martin, 7 (1940), pp. 20–6, 113 f. F. Vernet in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 594–9, with suppl. bibl. by P. Viard in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 1093 f.; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 114 f.

Formula Missae et Communionis. The reformed Communion Service, prepared for N. Hausmann, Pastor of Zwickau, which M. *Luther put out in Dec. 1523. The Latin language was kept, and as far as the Creed the traditional form of the Roman Mass was scarcely altered. The 'Mass of the *Faithful', however, underwent drastic revision. The *Offertory was made into a mere preparation of the elements, without any prayers; the Words of *Institution were included in the *Preface; then followed immediately the singing of the *Sanctus and the '*Benedictus qui venit', during which the *Elevation took place; and the rest of the *Canon was omitted altogether. During the giving of Communion, which was to be in both kinds, the *Agnus Dei was sung. The purpose of this unprecedented arrangement was to avoid any suggestion of the doctrine of the Eucharistic sacrifice. The form of service, moreover, was intended only to give general guidance to the celebrant, who was left free to modify it as he wished. It was upon this rite that Luther's 'German Mass' of 1526 and the majority of the later Lutheran liturgies were modelled.

Text ed. H. *Lietzmann in his Kleine Texte für theologische und philologische Vorlesungen und Übungen, no. 36 (Bonn, 1909). A. L. Richter, Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des sechszehnten Jahrhunderts, 1 (1846), pp. 1–17, incl. text, pp. 2–7. Text and further refs. in E. Sehling, Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts, 1 (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 3–9. Extracts in Kidd, pp. 127–32 (no. 66). F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, 1 (1915), pp. xxxi f.

Formula of Concord. See CONCORD, FORMULA OF.

Forsyth, Peter Taylor (1848–1921), *Congregational minister and theologian. After holding five pastorates, he became principal of Hackney College, Hampstead, in 1901. In early life he was a liberal in theology, largely through the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel and A. *Ritschl; but he later radically modified his attitude to liberalism through a deep sense of need of Atonement through the Cross. By the freshness of his approach to the fact of Redemption, combined with a study of all recent work on the subject, he gave a new significance to such words as 'substitution', 'penalty', and 'satisfaction'. If his many published writings did not pretend to scholarship in the narrower sense, they were full of penetrating discussions. They include The Cruciality of the Cross (1909); The Person and Place of Jesus Christ (1909), in which a form of *kenoticism is linked with a doctrine of progressive Incarnation; The Work of Christ (1910), where it is argued that, in the Atonement, God is both reconciler and reconciled; The Christian Ethic of War (1916); The Justification of God (1916); and The Soul of Prayer (1916). Since his death, he has been recognized as one of Britain's foremost Nonconformist theologians.

Selections from his practical writings, ed. H. Escott, Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921), Director of Souls (1948), with biog. and bibl. notes, pp. xvii–xx, and 'An Appraisement', pp. 3–33. Memoir by J. Forsyth Andrews (daughter) prefixed to 2nd edn. of his Work of Christ (1938), pp. vii–xxviii. His Positive Preaching and Modern Mind (1908) was repr., with 'A Contemporary Assessment' by D. G. Miller and others, P. T. Forsyth: The Man, the Preachers' Theologian, Prophet for the 20th Century (Pittsburgh, 1981), pp. 1–112. W. L. Bradley, P. T. Forsyth: The Man and his Work (1952); J. H. Rodgers, The Theology of P. T. Forsyth (1965); T. Hart (ed.), Justice the True and Only Mercy: Essays on the Life and Theology of Peter Taylor Forsyth (Edinburgh, 1995).

Fortescue, Adrian (1874–1923), writer on liturgical and historical subjects. Educated at the Scots College at Rome (1891–4) and at Innsbruck University (1894–9), he was ordained priest in 1898. After serving several parishes and missions in England he became the RC parish priest at Letchworth in 1907, where he built a church which he made a centre of liturgical life. Apart from his pastoral work he devoted himself to writing on a variety of subjects, esp. on Liturgy and on the E. Churches. The Orthodox Eastern Church (1907), The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), and The Uniate Eastern Churches (1923) all cover a wide range of historical material. The Mass (1912) was a useful summary of modern studies in the Roman rite. The Ceremonies of the Roman Rite (1918; 12th edn., rev. by J. B. O'Connell, 1962) was until recently a widely used directory of ceremonial practice.

J. G. Vance and J. W. Fortescue (distant cousin), Adrian Fortescue: A Memoir (1924), with list of main works, pp. 61 f. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), col. 1739, s.v. 'Liturgistes' (critical).

Fortunatus, Venantius. See VENANTIUS FORTUNATUS.

Forty Hours' Devotion (also known as the Quarant' Ore or Quarantore). A modern Catholic devotion in which the Blessed Sacrament is exposed (see EXPOSITION) for a period of c. 40 hours, and the faithful pray before it by turns throughout this time. Since 1967 the Exposition has been interrupted for the celebration of Mass unless the celebration takes place in a chapel apart from the exposition area. In its present form the devotion began in Italy in the 16th cent. The period of 40 hours was probably fixed as that during which Christ's body rested in the tomb. The 1918 Codex Iuris Canonici* (can. 1275) ordered that the devotion should be held annually in all RC churches where the Bl Sacrament was habitually reserved; the 1983 Code (can. 942) simply recommends an annual exposition for an appropriate time (which is not defined), and then only if a fitting attendance of the faithful is expected.

H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week: Chapters on Catholic Observance and Ritual (1904), pp. 114–48, incl. bibl. notes; J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Die Andacht der vierzig Stunden und das heilige Grab', Liturgisches Jahrbuch, 2 (1952), pp. 184–98. N. Michell, OSB, Cult and Controversy: The Worship of the Eucharist Outside Mass (New York [1982]), pp. 311–18. C. Cargnoni, OFM Cap., in Dict. Sp. 13 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2702–23, s.v. 'Quarante-Heures'.

Forty Martyrs of England and Wales. Forty English and Welsh RCs put to death by the State between 1535 and 1680. The heightened standards of proof demanded by the RC Church for *canonization, and the consequent increase in time and money needed for gathering and presenting evidence, in 1960 led the promoters of the causes of those who had been executed between 1535 and 1680 to concentrate their attention on a select number, termed the Forty Martyrs. The faithful were encouraged to ask favours in the name of the whole group, and the Roman authorities agreed to accept proof of two resulting miracles (the number prescribed by *Canon Law) for the whole group instead of each member of it. The group is representative of all the 357 martyrs whose causes are still formally in progress, these 40 being drawn from the most popular among the 199 who were beatified in 1886, 1895, or 1929; it comprises 13 secular priests (incl. Cuthbert *Mayne), 3 *Benedictines, 3 *Carthusians, 2 *Franciscans, 1 *Augustinian Friar, 1 *Bridgettine, 10 *Jesuits (incl. Edmund *Campion and Robert *Southwell), and 7 layfolk, of whom 3 are women (incl. Margaret *Clitherow). The Forty Martyrs were canonized by Pope *Paul VI on 25 October 1970. Feast day, 25 Oct.

A general pamphlet, Forty Martyrs, and 24 others describing the lives of all the martyrs have been pub. since 1960 by the Office of the Vice-Postulation, 114 Mount Street, London. C. Tigar, Forty Martyrs of England and Wales (Osterley, 1961). G. F. Nuttall, 'The English Martyrs 1535–1680: a statistical review', JEH 22 (1971), pp. 191–7.

Forty Martyrs of Sebaste. See SEBASTE, FORTY MARTYRS OF.

Forty-Two Articles. The collection of Anglican doctrinal formulae which were issued in 1553. They were accompanied by a Royal Mandate, dated 19 June 1553, requiring all clergy, schoolmasters, and members of the universities on taking their degrees, to subscribe to them. They were, for the most part, drafted by T. *Cranmer, not later than the spring of 1552; final minor changes were made in the autumn. It is very doubtful, despite the assertion on their title that they had been 'agreed on by the bishops and other learned men in the Synod at London, in the year of our Lord God MDLII', whether they ever received the authority of *Convocation. Owing to the restoration of the RC faith under Mary (1553–8), they were never enforced, but they formed the basis of the later *Thirty-Nine Articles.

The text (both Lat. and Eng.) is pr. in E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England, 1 (1896), pp. 70–89, with introd. pp. 12–29. G. *Burnet, The History of the Reformation of the Church of England, ed. N. Pocock, 5 (Oxford, 1865), pp. 314–29, prints the Eng. text with notes of the differences between the Forty-Two and the Thirty-Nine Articles.

forty-two line Bible. See MAZARIN BIBLE.

forum (Lat., 'place of public assembly', hence 'judicial tribunal'). In *moral theology the term is applied to the exercise by the Church of her judicial power. A distinction is made between the 'internal forum', where, esp. in the Sacrament of *Penance, judgement is given on matters which relate to the spiritual good of the individual, and the 'external forum', e.g. the ecclesiastical courts, where the public good of the Church and her members is in question. The term 'forum of conscience' (forum conscientiae) is also used of the decisive authority of conscience over every individual soul.

Fosdick, Harry Emerson (1878–1969), American divine. He was ordained to the *Baptist ministry in 1903. From 1904 to 1915 he was pastor at Montclair, NJ, and from 1908 also taught homiletics at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. In 1918 he was called to a *Presbyterian pulpit, but owing to *Fundamentalist pressure requiring his acceptance of traditional Presbyterian standards of doctrine, he withdrew in 1925. From 1926 to 1946 he was minister of the Baptist Riverside Church, New York. In his later years his approach to dogma was more positive. He wrote many books from the evangelical liberal point of view, among them The Manhood of the Master (1913), The Meaning of Prayer (1915), The Modern Use of the Bible (1924), A Pilgrimage to Palestine (1928), Successful Christian Living (1937), Living under Tension (1941), and A Faith for Tough Times (1952).

A collection of Fosdick's Riverside Sermons, with introd. by H. P. Van Dusen (New York, 1958), was issued in honour of his 80th birthday. His autobiog., Living of These Days (New York, 1956; London, 1957). R. M. Miller, Harry Emerson Fosdick: Preacher, Pastor, Prophet (New York, 1985).

fossors (Lat. fossores or fossarii, from fodere, 'to dig'), grave-diggers. In very early Christian times they were regarded as inferior clergy, and in the latter part of the 4th and earlier part of the 5th cent. became powerful corporations, with the management of the *catacombs in their hands. They had power to sell grave-spaces, and numerous inscriptions survive in which such sales are recorded. Included in their corporations were the artists who adorned Christian tombs. Burial in the catacombs at Rome becoming impossible after the fall of the city in 410, the inscriptions of the fossores virtually cease, but a chronicle as late as the 6th cent. includes them among the clerici. They were also called lecticarii from their habit of carrying the corpse on a lectica ('bier'), as well as copiatae (probably from the Gk. κόπος, 'labour').

F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (RQ, Supplementheft 7; 1897), pp. 57–60 and 163–5. E. Conde Guerri, Los 'Fossores' de Roma Paleocristiana (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 33; 1979) with bibl. J. Stevenson, The Catacombs [1978], pp. 20–3. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2065–92, s.v. 'Fossoyeurs', with refs.

Foucauld, Charles de. See DE FOUCAULD, CHARLES.

Foundations. A theological symposium, published in 1912. It professed to be a 'statement of Christian belief in terms of modern thought', and consisted of nine essays, with an introduction by B. H. *Streeter. The contributors, who were all Oxford men, were, in addition to Streeter, N. S. Talbot, R. Brook, A. E. J. Rawlinson, R. G. Parsons, W. *Temple, and W. H. Moberly. The book marked a definite stage in current theological debate and it exercised much immediate influence, but its optimistic liberalism and immanental standpoint proved increasingly unacceptable in succeeding decades. On its publication the book created much controversy, notably over some of Streeter's conclusions in his essay on the Historic Christ.

See the contemporary religious journals. R. A. *Knox, 'Absolute and Abitofhell' (orig. pub. 1912; repr. in Essays in Satire, 1928), is a brilliant satire 'in the manner of Mr. John Dryden'. Cf. also R. A. Knox, Some Loose Stones (1913). F. A. Iremonger, William Temple (1948), ch. 9 (pp. 155–66); P. [B.] Hinchliff, God and History (Oxford, 1992), pp. 232–47.

Fountains Abbey. A *Cistercian abbey, three miles SW of Ripon, which was founded in 1132 by monks from the *Benedictine abbey of St Mary's, *York; it became a daughter house of *Clairvaux the following year. Numbers increased so rapidly that by 1150 it was itself able to found 12 daughter-houses. At the Reformation the monastery was surrendered to the Crown by Abbot M. Bradley, on 26 Nov. 1539. It was the richest of the Cistercian houses at the time of the *Dissolution. The extensive remains of the church and cloister buildings are without parallel; the most conspicuous structure of the ruins is the great tower, built by Abbot Huby *c.*1500, a splendid example of Perpendicular work.

Main primary material in J. R. Walbran (ed.), Memorials of the Abbey of St Mary of Fountains (Surtees Society, 42 and 67; 1863–78). W. H. St John Hope, 'Fountains Abbey', Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, 15 (1900), pp. 269–402. D. Nicholl, Thurstan, Archbishop of York (York, 1964), pp. 151–91. L. G. D. Baker, 'The Genesis of English Cistercian Chronicles. The Foundation History of Fountains Abbey', Analecta Cisterciensia, 25 (1969), pp. 14–41; and 31 (1975), pp. 179–212. R. Gilyard-Beer, Fountains Abbey, Yorkshire (Ministry of Public Buildings and Works Official Guidebook; HMSO, 1970). J. Solloway in VCH, York, 3 (1913), pp. 134–8. J. Lefèvre in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 1318–27, s.v.

Four Causes, the. Acc. to *Aristotle, there are four kinds of cause, viz.: 'material' (that of which a thing is made); 'formal' (what a thing is, i.e. the genus, species, etc., which distinguishes it from other things); 'efficient' (the effective or motive force which brings it into being); and 'final' (the end or purpose of its existence). St *Thomas Aquinas, who attempted to set the Aristotelian philosophy in a Christian context, associates the second cause with God (conceived as exemplary cause) and refers the third, and fourth causes directly to God, who is at once the origin of the separate and individual being of everything, the effective creative force, and the reason and end of the being of all that exists (Summa Theol. 1. 44).

Four Crowned Martyrs. See QUATTRO CORONATI.

Four Gallican Articles. See GALLICAN ARTICLES.

Fourteen Holy Helpers. See AUXILIARY SAINTS.

Fox, George (1624–91), founder of the Society of *Friends (q.v.). He was born at Drayton-in-the-Clay (now Fenny Drayton) in Leicestershire, where his father was a weaver. While he was apprenticed to a shoemaker, he looked after the latter's sheep. In 1643 he felt the call to give up all ties of family and friendship and spent the next years travelling in search of enlightenment. In 1646 he abandoned attendance at church, relying increasingly on the *Inner (or Inward) Light of the living Christ. The following year he began to preach, teaching that truth is primarily to be found in the inner voice of God speaking to the soul. He was frequently imprisoned, first at Nottingham in 1649, but his enthusiasm and moral earnestness soon attracted followers whom he began to form into a stable organization. From 1652 he was based at Swarthmoor Hall, near Ulverston, the house of Judge Thomas Fell, whose widow Margaret (1614–1702) he married in 1699. To promote the growth of the Society of Friends he undertook frequent missionary journeys—to Ireland in 1669, to the West Indies and N. America in 1671–3, to the Netherlands and Germany in 1677, and to the Netherlands again in 1684. He was a magnetic personality of great spiritual power, selfless devotion, and patience in persecution, and of remarkable organizing abilities. He died on 31 Jan. 1691. His famous Journal, prepared for publication by Thomas Ellwood, was first issued in 1694.

A collection of his doctrinal writings was pub. under the title Gospel-Truth Demonstrated (1706). There is an (incomplete) edn. of his Works (8 vols., Philadelphia, 1831; repr., New York, 1975). Complete edn. of his Journal by N. Penney (2 vols., Cambridge, 1911); his Short Journal and Itinerary Journals, also ed. id. (ibid., 1925); good edn. for general readers by J. L. Nickalls (ibid., 1952; repr., London, 1975). Pastoral Letters, ed. T. C. Jones, 'The Power of the Lord is Over All' (Richmond, Ind., 1989). A lost work was reconstructed by H. J. *Cadbury as George Fox's 'Book of Miracles' (Cambridge, 1948). T. Hodgkin, George Fox (1896); A. N. Brayshaw, The Personality of George Fox (1918; repr., 1919; rev. edn., 1933); H. E. Wildes, Voice of the Lord: A Biography of George Fox (Philadelphia, 1965); H. L. Ingle, First among Friends: George Fox and the Creation of Quakerism (New York and Oxford, 1994). A. Gordon in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 117–22.

Foxe, John (1516–87), martyrologist. He went to Brasenose College, *Oxford, at an early age, and was Fellow of Magdalen from 1539 to 1545. On the accession of Queen *Mary he fled to the Continent, and stayed successively at Strasbourg, Frankfurt, and Basle, where he met other Protestant refugees, notably J. *Knox and E. *Grindal. At this period he wrote a history of the Christian persecutions, first issued in Latin at Strasbourg in 1554. An expanded English edition appeared in 1563 as the Acts and Monuments of matters happening in the Church, commonly known as 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs'. The book, which was approved and officially publicized by the bishops, went through four editions in Foxe's lifetime. Its chief object was to extol the heroism and endurance of the Protestant martyrs of Mary's reign. Its homely style, combined with its vivid descriptions of the sufferings imposed on the victims of Papist tyranny, gained it great popularity. It still retains major historical value, particularly in preserving early Protestant oral tradition and documents, despite the obvious bias which Foxe's commentary displays. By 1559 he had returned to England and in 1560 he was ordained priest by E. Grindal, Bp. of London. Though he subsequently received a prebendal stall both at *Salisbury and *Durham, he lived mainly in London, working on successive revisions of his Acts and Monuments and writing other historical, polemical, and devotional works.

Source material for his work ed. J. Gough Nichols, Narratives of the Days of the Reformation, chiefly from the manuscripts of John Foxe (Camden Society [1st ser.], 77; 1859). Earliest Life, pr. in Eng. and Lat. in vol. 2 of the 1641 edn. of his Acts and Monuments (no pagination); it professes to be the work of his son. Acts and Monuments, ed. G. Townsend (8 vols., 1843–9), contains a further Life (1, pp. 1–160) and a defence of the veracity of the work (pp. 161–236). J. F. Mozley, John Foxe and his Book (1940); W. Haller, Foxe's Book of Martyrs and the Elect Nation (1963); V. N. Olsen, John Foxe and the Elizabethan Church (1973). J. Facey, 'John Foxe and the Defence of the English Church', in P. [G.] Lake and M. Dowling (eds.), Protestantism and the National Church in Sixteenth Century England (1987), pp. 162–92. BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 212–14.

Foxe, Richard (? 1448–1528), Bp. of *Winchester and founder of Corpus Christi College, *Oxford. He appears to have been educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and also studied at Cambridge and Paris. After Henry VII's accession (1485), as a reward for earlier services, he was appointed bishop successively of *Exeter (1487), *Bath and Wells (1492), *Durham (1494), and Winchester (1501), preferments intended primarily to provide him with financial means while engaged in important diplomatic work. Under *Henry VIII (1509–47) he at first retained his ascendancy, but from 1511 onwards he was gradually superseded by T. *Wolsey. Only in the later years of his life did he seriously concern himself with his episcopal duties. His sympathies for the New Learning found expression in his foundation of Corpus Christi College, at Oxford, in 1515–16.

The Register of Richard Fox while Bishop of Bath and Wells, A.D. MCCCCXCII MCCCCXCIV, ed. E. C. Batten (1889), incl. Life (pp. 1–142); part of this Register is ed. with that of Robert Stillington by H. C. Maxwell-Lyte (Somerset Record Society, 52; 1937), pp. 174–200; The Register of Richard Fox Lord Bishop of Durham 1494 1501, ed. M. P. Howden (Surtees Society, 147; 1932). Letters of Richard Fox, 1486 1527, ed. P. S. and H. M. Allen (1929). J. Greatrex, 'On Ministering to "Certayne Devoute and Religiouse Women": Bishop Fox and the Benedictine Nuns of Winchester Diocese on the Eve of the Dissolution', in W. J. Sheils and D. Wood (eds.), Women in the Church (Studies in Church History, 27; 1990), pp. 223–35. T. Fowler in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 150–6. BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 715 19; BRUC, pp. 239-41.

Fra Angelico, Fra Bartolommeo. See ANGELICO, BL FRA, BARTOLOMMEO FRA.

Fraction. The formal breaking of the bread which in all Eucharistic liturgies takes place before the Communion. It goes back to Christ's action at the *Last Supper (Mt. 26: 26 and parallels) and was a sufficiently striking element in the primitive rite to make the 'breaking of bread' (Acts 2: 42; cf. 20: 7) a regular name for the Eucharist.

The precise moment of the Fraction varies. In the Roman rite it has traditionally come immediately after the Lord's Prayer, where the rubrics required that the Host be divided into three parts and one of them dropped into the chalice (the 'commixture'). Since 1969, however, the celebrant has broken a small portion from the Host and placed it in the chalice immediately after the *Kiss of Peace; during the *Agnus Dei which follows he divides the Host into a number of portions which are used for the communion of the people. In other rites the Fraction is considerably more elaborate. Thus in the *Byzantine rite the Host is divided into four portions, which are arranged on the paten in the form of a cross, and one of them is then put into the chalice. In the *Mozarabic rite the Host is divided into nine portions, seven of which are then arranged in the form of a cross. A rubric in the 1662 BCP orders the breaking of the bread immediately before it is consecrated, a most unusual position. At the time of the Fraction, the Koinonikon is sung in the Byzantine Liturgy, the Confractorium in the Ambrosian, and the Agnus Dei in the Roman rite.

'Fractio Panis' as a title is used of the early 2nd-cent. fresco which perhaps depicts an early Eucharist in the Cappella Greca in the *Catacomb of St *Priscilla, uncovered by J. Wilpert in 1893.

L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 62, 79 f., 175–7, 208–12 (Eng. tr., 1903, pp. 63, 85, 184–6, 218–22). T. Schermann, 'Das "Brotbrechen" im Urchristentum', Biblische Zeitschrift, 8 (1910), pp. 33–52 and 162–83. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Rite de la fraction dans la messe romaine', R. Bén. 53 (1941), pp. 5–40; id., 'Fraction et commixtion', La Maison Dieu, 35 (1953), pp. 79–94; both repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 287–331. R. Cabié in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en prière (édition nouvelle), 2 [1983], pp. 128–31 and 182 f.; Eng tr. (1986), pp. 109–13 and 214 f. W. E. Scudamore in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 686–9, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2103–16, s.v. 'Fractio Panis'.

On the fresco mentioned above, cf. J. Wilpert, Fractio Panis: Die älteste Darstellung des Eucharistischen Opfers in der 'Cappella Greca' (1895).

France, Christianity in. Christianity appears to have been introduced into Gaul as early as the 2nd cent. by missionaries from Asia Minor. The Christian community at Lyons suffered persecution in 177 and St *Irenaeus, its bishop, was a man of more than local stature as an apologist and theologian. From the 3rd cent. contacts with Rome had been formed, and a Gallic episcopate, with many new sees, geographically based on the Roman administrative divisions of Gaul, was established between *c.*250 and 313. A synod of the W. Church at *Arles in 314 included among its participants 14 Gallic bishops and the following century saw the definitive organization of the Gallo-Roman Church. Among the most illustrious saints and scholars of the period were St *Martin of Tours, St *Hilary of Poitiers, St *Paulinus of Nola and St *Germanus of Auxerre. Their writings and those of their contemporaries show that Gaul was as aware as other parts of the W. Church of the major controversies, such as *Novatianism, *Arianism, *Priscillianism, and *Semipelagianism. In the adjustment to new rulers and the gradual transformation of the old Roman forms of government in the 5th and early 6th cents., the bishops, such as St *Sidonius Apollinaris of Clermont and St *Caesarius of Arles, acquired a new prominence as leaders and spokesmen of the people. This aspect of the bishop's role continued throughout the Merovingian period, as is clear from the career of St *Gregory of Tours. The occupation of S. Gaul by Arian Visigoths seems to have done little to disrupt the life of Catholic bishops. With the conversion of the Frankish king *Clovis to Catholicism and his conquest of Gaul, however, the way was prepared for a fruitful, if tense, relationship between the Church and the secular rulers, exemplified in the relations between Clovis and St *Remigius of Reims, and between the rulers of Burgundy and St *Avitus of Vienne. Clovis convened the council of Orléans in 511 and many Church synods were held subsequently in Gaul, the canons of which were embodied in later classical collections, notably the Vetus Gallica, produced in the region of Lyons *c.*600 and subsequently disseminated from Autun *c.*700. The liturgy of the early Gallic Church (the so-called *Gallican rite) appears to have had affinities with the *Ambrosian rite of Milan, but Roman usage gained prominence during the 7th and 8th cents. The Gallo-Roman bishops and their Frankish successors supported missionary enterprises, such as those of St *Amandus, in the peripheral regions of the Frankish kingdom, esp. to the north and east. Such work was given a new impetus with the inspiration provided by the followers of the Irishman, St *Columbanus. Many new monasteries, such as *Luxeuil and *Corbie, were founded, often in close conjunction with the landed aristocracy. Thus a new stratum of monastic life was added to the earlier foundations inspired by Martin, John *Cassian, and the monks of the Rhône–Saône river valley.

A new phase in the history of the Frankish Church was inaugurated by the Carolingian rulers, *Pepin III, who secured the throne definitively in 751, his son *Charlemagne, and his successors. In close conjunction with the Englishman, St *Boniface, Carloman, Pepin's brother, convened Church councils which set out to reform and reorganize the Church in Frankish Gaul. Pepin, aided by St *Chrodegang, did likewise, and Charlemagne was able to build on their achievements by means of legislation touching on all aspects of the Church's life. His son, *Louis the Pious, continued the work, his most notable achievement in this sphere being the promotion of the Rule of St *Benedict. In due course the clergy took up the royal initiative and their work is apparent in the range of synodal and episcopal statutes produced in the 9th and 10th cents. As well as dealing with doctrinal affairs, such as *Iconoclasm, *Adoptianism, predestination, the dispute over the Filioque clause in the *Nicene Creed, and matters of ecclesiastical discipline such as Christian marriage and divorce, the Frankish Church was notable for its regularization of the liturgy and use of the *Gregorian Sacramentary, its formulations of standardized Gospel and Epistle *lectionaries and *homiliaries, its promotion of the Dionysio-Hadriana collection of *canon law, the development of ecclesiastical chant, and an influential revision of the *Vulgate text of the Bible. Many notable theologians contributed to the intellectual debates of the day, among them *Theodulf of Orléans, *Alcuin, *Agobard of Lyons, *Gottschalk, and *Hincmar of Reims. From the time of Pepin III's accession a close relationship was established between the Frankish rulers and the Papacy, which was expressed dramatically by the coronation of Charlemagne as Emperor in 800.

In 987 Hugh Capet succeeded the last Carolingian ruler of France (a political area whose boundaries had been largely determined in 843, although the achievement of political and national unity was a long and gradual process). Hugh was loyally supported by the Abp. of Reims, and the Capetians and the Church usually worked closely together to their common benefit. Under the earlier kings the period of the *Investiture Controversy saw no open clash with the Papacy over the king's claim to confer on bishops the *ring and *crosier, while two reforming Popes, *Urban II and *Callistus II, were Frenchmen, and France stood out as the homeland of the *Crusades. A number of 12th-cent. Popes came to France as a refuge from political difficulties at Rome; the title 'most Christian king' became a regular formula in Papal letters to the Capetians. In the 10th and 11th cents. the reformed monastic connection of *Cluny increasingly provided the Capetian monarchy with a model for centralization; *Suger, Abbot of *St-Denis, was a devoted and politically skilful servant of Kings Louis VI (reigned 1108–37) and Louis VII (reigned 1137–80), as well as a pioneer of Gothic architecture. During the 12th cent. France saw the development of *Cistercian monasticism with its outstanding representative in St *Bernard of Clairvaux, as well as of *canons regular. The growth of cathedral schools and then of universities, esp. that of *Paris, made France a country of great writers and theologians such as Peter *Abelard and *Peter Lombard; in the 13th cent. St *Thomas Aquinas taught for a time at Paris. In the 12th cent. the *Albigensians spread widely in S. France; beginning under Philip II Augustus (reigned 1180–1223) the Albigensian Crusades (1209–29) were promoted under Pope *Innocent III and enabled the Capetian monarchy to assimilate Languedoc into the Frankish kingdom. Under St *Louis IX feudal and Christian monarchy in France reached its apogee, although Louis was far from being a supporter of the political plans and wishes of Pope *Innocent IV.

Philip IV ('the Fair') (reigned 1285–1314) brought about the completion of the development of Capetian monarchy from suzerainty to virtual sovereignty. The power of the feudal lords was curtailed, and the imprisonment of Pope *Boniface VIII at Anagni in 1303 by Philip's agents was a severe blow to Papal power and prestige. The election to the Papacy in 1305 of *Clement V was followed by its emigration to *Avignon, within the French dominion. So far from being a French captivity of the Papacy, it was France that was most thoroughly raided for benefices in a period of great expansion in Papal 'provisions'. In both matters of benefices and finance a tacit agreement between the Popes and the Kings of France allowed each to pillage the Church. *Gallicanism took form as Church Councils sought to deprive the Pope of his control over benefices and taxation as a means to end the *Great Schism of 1378. However the apparent alternation between Gallicanism, expressed, e.g., in the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges of 1438, and submission to the Papacy (e.g. in the concordat of 1472) concealed a continuation of complicity. While French power suffered military defeat, royal propaganda enhanced the position of the King of France as second head of the Gallican Church.

The Concordat of 1516 between *Leo X and Francis I (reigned 1515–47) was essentially a diplomatic agreement in the context of the Italian wars, but it had considerable impact on Christianity in France. By conceding to the French Crown the right to nominate to major benefices, it disposed her monarchs to seek accommodation rather than a break with Rome. It also dictated the (unsuccessful) strategy of J. *Calvin and T. *Beza, which aimed to capture the support of the Crown, and thus of the bishops, so that with the backing of ecclesiastical authority the entire Gallican Church could be transformed on Protestant principles. Until the adoption of the RC faith in 1593 by *Henry IV the *Huguenots kept alive the hope that this might be achieved. In the event they obtained only a limited measure of protection in the Edict of *Nantes (1598). The Gallican hierarchy persisted in regarding the reformed religion as heretical, and systematic attempts were made to undermine its teachings and persuade its adherents to return to the traditional faith. The protection offered by the law was steadily eroded in the course of the 17th cent. and finally removed in 1685 with the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. By this time the number of French Protestants had long been in decline; north of the Loire they had never recovered their vigour after the Massacre of St *Bartholomew's Day in 1572.

The 15th and early 16th cent. in France was a time of active piety, manifested in much construction and elaboration of churches, chantry chapels and oratories, cults of the BVM and of the saints, purchases of *indulgences and endowing of private Masses. These features testified to lively collective devotion but also to individual anxiety provoked by the doctrine of *purgatory and by fears about the after-life. For some educated men traditional forms of piety came to look like superstitions, rationally unacceptable because they had lost their power to reassure. They sought security in the scrutiny of texts, turning to the Bible and to the works of such commentators as *Erasmus, J. *Faber and M. *Luther, all of whose writings provoked debate and elicited a diversity of response. Search for spiritual reassurance was common to Protestantism and to the revitalized Catholic devotion of which it was at the outset itself a part.

Later in the 16th cent. RC Christianity in France was invigorated by post-*Tridentine piety. Florid expressions of penitential fervour gave way to devotion of a contemplative character in the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement and among the French *Oratorians, both strong at Court. In the 17th cent. the French Church was illuminated by the lives of St *Francis de Sales and St *Vincent de Paul, and by the eloquence and leadership of prelates such as J. B. *Bossuet and F. *Fénelon. It saw the foundation of *seminaries to train the parochial clergy, while Louis XIV (reigned 1643–1715) initiated the rule that promotion to the episcopate required an apprenticeship in diocesan administration. The King affirmed the power of his Crown, not only against the Protestants, but also against Rome, inducing the clergy to publish the *Gallican Articles in 1682. He also struck against the *Jansenists. Their movement, which in France stemmed from Antoine *Arnauld, was opposed by the *Jesuits, and Louis, believing it to be 'republican', destroyed their spiritual centre at *Port-Royal and encouraged the designs of the Jesuits leading to the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713). The bull was ridiculed by men of the *Enlightenment, and the Jansenist clergy appealed to a future General Council against it. In the mid-18th cent. the Abp. of Paris debarred dying Jansenists from the Last Sacraments, provoking a wave of *anticlerical bitterness. The Parlement defended the Jansenists and forced Louis XV to expel the Jesuits from France in 1764.

Except in large cities, religious practice was almost universal. The parish clergy were well-educated and the splendour of the liturgical observances in the great collegiate churches unsurpassed. The education of children was in ecclesiastical hands and the care of the sick and poor was dependent on the dedicated work of women in the religious orders. But intellectually the Church could make only a halting reply to criticism (as from *Voltaire and J.-J. *Rousseau) and it was the target of anticlericalism, partly because of its intolerance (only in 1787 did Protestants receive a grudging toleration), but chiefly on account of its wealth. This was largely in the hands of the aristocracy, who monopolized practically all the bishoprics and well-paid canonries and held the abbatial revenues of the monasteries *in commendam, while a third of the parish priests were on subsistence wages.

In the Revolution of 1789, Church property was sold to pay off the national debt, *tithe was abolished, and the taking of monastic vows ended. The *Constitutional Church, set up by the *Civil Constitution of the Clergy (1790), was a new ecclesiastical order. After the National Assembly imposed an oath to the Civil Constitution on priests who wished to retain office, about half accepted, though some later revoked their oath when they learned that Rome had condemned the settlement. When the Revolutionary Government went to war against the kings of Europe, the clergy were regarded as a fifth column, and during the terror of 1793–4, they suffered cruel victimization. The *Concordat of 1801 (q.v.), between Napoleon and *Pius VII, 'restored the altars' by creating a new episcopate which included 16 bishops of the pre-revolutionary Church, 12 from the Constitutional Church, and 32 newly consecrated. Despite the provisions of the *Organic Articles (1802), the Concordat increased the prestige of Rome and weakened the old independent Gallican spirit of the French clergy, especially in the light of Pius VII's reaction to Napoleon's conduct. From then onwards *Ultramontanism became a force, moving to its major triumph at the First *Vatican Council (1870). Meanwhile the years following 1801 saw the founding of numerous religious orders at home and the intensification of missionary activity to all parts of the world. The names of '*Lourdes' and the '*Curé d'Ars' (qq.v.) are indicative of a widespread growth in personal piety.

The various political changes in France during the 19th cent. did not disturb the position of the RC Church. Meanwhile Calvinism revived in some measure, and French Evangelicals took a prominent part in missionary work in Africa and elsewhere. The split in 1872 between orthodox, moderates, and liberals weakened the Calvinist community considerably.

The identification of so many Churchmen with the régime of Napoleon III and, later, with proposals for a royalist restoration, led the politicians of the Third Republic to adopt anticlerical policies, and towards the end of the 19th cent. various acts were passed to weaken the influence of the Church. The most significant of these was the Education Act of 1882 which completely secularized primary education, and subsequent acts which placed restrictions on religious teaching in secondary education. Pope *Leo XIII's call to French Catholics to rally in support of the Republic in 1892 was little heeded and the Church's involvement in politics led to a sharp reaction on the part of succeeding governments. In the early years of the 20th cent. most religious orders were expelled from France, and in 1905, after a series of quarrels between the French government and the Holy See, the entire severance of Church and State took place. The State grant to the Church ceased and all recognition of the Church as an institution ceased with it. Henceforth no distinction was made between clergy and others in regard to liability for military service and no pious bequests, except to individuals, were legally valid. On the other hand, Catholics and Protestants alike had their rights of assembly as private persons guaranteed by the State.

In the same period some of the most radical thinking in ecclesiastical circles had been taking place in France. The *Modernist movement included the attempts of A. *Loisy to bring biblical exegesis into line with modern scientific discoveries and the attempts of the philosophical thinkers (notably M. *Blondel and L. *Laberthonnière) to bring dogma into line with modern philosophical systems and the modern mind. The first decades of the 20th cent. also witnessed the growth in importance of 'social catholicism', which was marked by concern for the fate of the poor in a capitalist society.

During the First World War the French clergy fought side by side with the laity, and in this way the estrangement of many of the French laity from the Church was much diminished. Unobtrusively the religious orders returned and the inter-war period was marked by moderation in the relations between the Church and State. At the same time French Catholic scholarship flourished under the leadership of J. *Maritain and É. *Gilson. It remained vigorous for some time after the end of the Second World War, exemplified in the publications of G.-Y. *Congar, H. de *Lubac, P. *Teilhard de Chardin, and J. *Daniélou, while French Dominicans in Jerusalem produced the first Catholic scholarly translation of Scripture (1948–54; Eng. tr., the 'Jerusalem Bible', 1966). The basis for a new social and political orientation among Christians in France had been laid by the philosophy of Emmanuel Mounier (1905–50). In the periodical Esprit, which he founded in 1932, he propounded a spiritual humanism, with socialist leanings, which was gradually accepted by the hierarchy; at the same time he introduced a revived personal and spiritual dimension into socialist thought. The loss of the working classes to the Church in the 19th cent. has lent particular importance to social issues in French ecclesiastical thinking. The publication in 1943 of a book by A. Godin and Y. Daniel entitled La France, pays de mission?—the question mark was included at the request of the ecclesiastical authorities—spurred attempts to tackle the problem. These included the activities of worker priests in the region of Marseilles in the 1940s and 1950s and the fostering of *Catholic Action as the dominant instrument of pastoral work among every class of society. Consequently, in the period of unrest which followed the 'events' of May 1968, many of the clergy found themselves allied to the students and workers. Meanwhile, the political party, the Mouvement Républicain Populaire, represented social Catholicism after the Second World War, and in 1984 Catholics were able to defeat the plans of the socialist government to integrate Church schools in the state system. Despite the reactionary movement led by Abp. M. Lefèvre, the changes introduced by the Second *Vatican Council were absorbed at parish level. In 1966 the huge diocese of Paris was divided into four separate, but closely linked dioceses, in a pattern which has been followed in other parts of the world. In the 1980s the Church established two *broadcasting stations, Radio Notre-Dame in Paris and Radio Fourvière in Lyons. Protestants, Orthodox and Jews now also use these stations. In 1988 *c.*80 per cent of the population described themselves as RC, though only 10 per cent practised their religion.

A large mass of documentary material is contained in Gallia Christiana* (q.v.). Much information on the history of the Church will be found in all histories of France, e.g. E. Lavisse, Histoire de France depuis les origines jusqu'à la Révolution (9 vols., 1900–11); id., Histoire de France contemporaine, depuis la Révolution jusqu'à la paix de 1919 (10 vols., 1920–2), both with detailed bibls. [R. F. W.] Guettée, Histoire de l'Église de France (12 vols., 1847–56). G. Goyau, Histoire religieuse de la France (1922; new edn., with continuation by G. Hanotaux, 1942). C. Poulet, OSB, Histoire de l'Église de France (3 vols., 1944). A. Latreille, E. Delaruelle, J. R. Palanque, and R. Rémond, Histoire du catholicisme en France (3 vols., 1957–62). J. Le Goff and R. Rémond (eds.), Histoire de la France religieuse (4 vols., 1988–92).

L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule (3 vols., 1894–1915). E. Griffe, La Gaule Chrétienne à l'époque romaine (3 vols., 1947–65; 2nd edn. of vols. 1–2, 1964–6). R. W. Mathisen, Ecclesiastical Factionalism and Religious Controversy in Fifth-Century Gaul (Washington, DC [1989]). J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983); R. McKitterick, The Frankish Church and the Carolingian Reforms 789–895 (1977). J. Chélini, L'Aube du Moyen Age: Naissance de la chrétienté occidentale. La vie religieuse des laïcs dans l'Europe carolingienne (750–900) (1991). F. Prinz, Frühes Mönchtum im Frankenreich (Munich, 1965; 2nd edn., Darmstadt [1988]). V. Martin, Les Origines du gallicanisme (2 vols., 1939). E. M. Hallam, Capetian France, 987–1328 (1980), esp. pp. 99–110, 190–203, 230–9, and 310–24. P. E. Schramm, Der König von Frankreich: Das Wesen der Monarchie vom 9. zum 16. Jahrhundert (2 vols., Weimar, 1939; 2nd edn., 1960). F. Lot and R. Fawtier, Histoire des Institutions Françaises au Moyen Âge, 3: Institutions Ecclésiastiques (1962). J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'état au temps de Philippe le Bel (SSL 8; 1926). N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme d'occident (4 vols., 1896–1902).

F. Lebrun (ed.), Histoire des Catholiques en France du XVe siècle à nos jours [1980]. [P. G. J. M.] Imbart de La Tour, Les Origines de la réforme (4 vols., 1905–35). J. K. Farge, Orthodoxy and Reform in Early Reformation France: The Faculty of Theology of Paris, 1500–1543 (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 32; Leiden, 1985). R. M. Kingdon, Geneva and the Consolidation of the French Protestant Movement 1564–1572 (Geneva and Madison, Wis., 1967). D. R. Kelley, The Beginning of Ideology: Consciousness and Society in the French Reformation (Cambridge, 1981). Selection of docs. ed. A. Duke and others, Calvinism in Europe, 1540–1620 (Manchester and New York [1992]), pp. 57–128; M. Prestwich, 'Calvinism in France, 1559–1629' in id. (ed.), International Calvinism 1541–1715 (Oxford, 1985), pp. 71–107. A. N. Galpern, The Religions of the People in Sixteenth-Century Champagne (Harvard Historical Studies, 92; Cambridge, Mass., 1976). N. M. Sutherland, Princes, Politics and Religion 1547–1589 (1984) [collected essays incl. some not previously pub.]. D. Crouzet, Les Guerriers de Dieu: La violence au temps des troubles de religion, vers 1525—vers 1610 (2 vols. [1990]).

L. N. Prunel, La Renaissance catholique en France au XVIIe siècle (1921). J. McManners, French Ecclesiastical Society under the Ancien Régime: A Study of Angers in the 18th century (Manchester, 1960). T. Tackett, Religion, Revolution and Regional Culture in 18th-Century France: The Ecclesiastical Oath of 1791 (Princeton, NJ, 1986). J. McManners, The French Revolution and the Church (1969).

A. Dansette, Histoire religieuse de la France contemporaine (2 vols., 1948–51; rev. edn., 1965; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1961). G. Constant, L'Église de France sous le consulat et l'empire, 1800–1814 (1928). C. S. Phillips, The Church in France, 1789–1848: A Study in Revival (1929); id., The Church in France, 1848–1907 (CHS publications, NS, no. 19; 1936). A. Gough, Rome and Paris: The Gallican Church and the Ultramontane Campaign 1843–1853 (Oxford, 1986). B. Reardon, Liberalism and Tradition: Aspects of Catholic Thought in Nineteenth-Century France (Cambridge, 1975). S. Mours, Un Siècle d'évangélisation en France (1815–1914) (2 vols., 1963). E. Lecanuet, Cong. Orat., L'Église de France sous la Troisième République (2 vols., 1907–10). J. McManners, Church and State in France, 1870–1914 (1972). A. R. Vidler, A Century of Social Catholicism, 1820–1920 (1964), pp. 3–78 and 112–40. E. Poulat, Intégrisme et catholicisme intégral: Un réseau secret international antimoderniste: La 'Sapinière' (1909–1921) (1969). Id., Naissance des prêtres-ouvriers (1965). M. Kelly, Pioneer of the Catholic Revival: The Ideas and Influence of Emmanuel Mounier (1979). [J. Loew], Journal d'une mission ouvrière, 1941–1959 (1959). H. Godin and Y. Daniel, La France, pays de mission? ([1943]; partial Eng. tr., with other material, M. Ward, France Pagan? The Mission of Abbé Godin, 1949). W. Bosworth, Catholicism and Crisis in Modern France: French Catholic Groups at the Threshold of the Fifth Republic (Princeton, NJ, 1962).

E. Mâle, L'Art religieux du 12e siècle en France (1922); id., L'Art religieux du 13e siècle en France (1898; Eng. tr., 1913); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du moyen-âge en France (1908). J. Evans, Monastic Architecture in France, from the Renaissance to the Republic (Cambridge, 1964). R. [M.] Griffiths, The Reactionary Revolution: The Catholic Revival in French Literature 1870–1914 (1966). Bremond. G. Goyau, La France missionnaire dans les cinq parties du monde (2 vols., 1948). J. Fontaine and others in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 785–997, s.v.; E. Delaruelle and others in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 2–25, s.v.; J.-R. Palanque and others in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 1–157, s.v. See also bibls. to ACTION FRANÇAISE, CONCORDAT, CONSTITUTIONAL CHURCH, GALLICANISM, HUGUENOTS, JANSENISM, MODERNISM, and QUIETISM.

Frances of Rome, St (1384–1440), Sta Francesca Romana, foundress of the *Oblates of St Benedict of Tor de' Specchi. Born at Rome, she was married in 1397 to Lorenzo de' Ponziani, although she desired to enter religion. She was an exemplary wife and mother, at the same time living a life under rule with her husband's brother's wife, Vannozza. She and her family suffered much when Ladislas of Naples took Rome in 1408. In 1425 she realized her long-cherished plan of founding a society of pious women, not under strict vows, to help the poor. At first called the Oblates of Mary, they later became known as the Oblates of Tor de' Specchi from the house in which they lived. After Lorenzo's death (1436) Francesca entered the community and became Superior. An account of her visions and spiritual struggles was taken down by Giovanni Mattiotti, her confessor, and forms the main part of his Life of her. She was canonized in 1608 and *Pius XI declared her a patroness of motorists. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Lat. recension of Life by Giovanni Mattiotti pr. in AASS, Mar. 2 (1668), pp. *92–*176; It. recension (prob. the earlier) ed. M. Armellini (Rome, 1882); modern It. tr. by M. Scarpini (Florence, 1923). Life by M. M. Anguillaria (Rome, 1641) adds little; Lat. tr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. *176–*211. Account of canonization, ibid., pp. *212–*216; introd., pp. *88–*92. P. T. Lugano, OSB (ed.), I processi inediti per Francesca Bussa dei Ponziani (Santa Francesca Romana), 1440–1453 (ST 120; 1945), with refs. to earlier works, esp. p. xxxiv; see esp. arts. in Rivista storica benedettina. G. M. Brasó, OSB, 'Identificazione delle fonti autografe della biographia di Santa Francesca Romana', Benedictina, 21 (1974), pp. 165–87. Modern Lives by G. Fullerton (London, 1855), J. Rabory (Paris, 1884), Cresse de Rambuteau (ibid., 1900), Berthem-Bontoux (ibid., 1931), and C. Albergotti (Rome, 1940). E.

Vaccaro and M. L. Casanova in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (Rome [1965]), cols. 1011–28, s.v. 'Francesca Romana', with extensive bibl.

Francis of Assisi, St (1181/2–1226), founder of the *Franciscan Order. The son of Pietro Bernardone, a rich cloth merchant of Assisi, and his wife, Pica, Francis assisted his father in his business until he reached the age of 20. Gallant, high-spirited, and generous, he lived as a youth the life usual for one of his station. In 1202, during a border dispute between Perugia and Assisi, he was taken prisoner and held captive for a year. After his release he returned to Assisi and his old ways and endured a long illness. Setting off again for war in 1204, he was directed by a vision to return to Assisi, where he began to lose all taste for his former life. On a pilgrimage to Rome, he was moved to compassion by the beggars outside *St Peter's and, exchanging his clothes with one of them, spent a day himself begging for alms. This experience affected him deeply. When he returned to Assisi, he broke with his old companions, was disowned by his father, then overcame his fear of leprosy by embracing a leper, and devoted himself to repairing churches, starting with S. Damiano. One morning *c.*1208, while attending Mass in the church of the *Portiuncula in the plain below Assisi, he heard the Lord's words read, bidding His disciples leave all (Mt. 10: 7–19), and at once understood them as a personal call. He discarded staff and shoes, put on a long dark garment girded with a cord, and set out to save souls. Before long he gathered round him a band of like-minded men.

When the number of his followers reached 12, Francis drew up a short and simple rule for them ('Regula Primitiva') and on a visit to Rome in 1209 secured for it the oral approval of *Innocent III. On his return he spent some time at Rivo Torto near Assisi and from there he sent out friars two by two to preach. They called themselves 'friars minor' (fratres minores), and increased rapidly. In 1212 his ideals were accepted by St *Clare (q.v.), a noble lady from Assisi, who founded a similar society for women centred on the church of S. Damiano. In 1214–15 Francis tried to reach Africa by way of S. France and Spain, but illness forced him to return to Italy. In 1215 he was probably at the Fourth *Lateran Council where his new rapidly growing Order somehow escaped the command to adopt an existing rule. According to one tradition, he obtained the '*Portiuncula Indulgence' (q.v.) from *Honorius III in 1216. At the Chapter at Assisi at Pentecost 1217 the Order was divided into provinces and ministers were appointed to supervise them. In 1219 Francis went to Egypt; he was present at the siege and capture of Damietta (Nov. 1219) and afterwards visited the Ayyubid sultan al-Kamil.

During his absence in the E., Francis put two vicars in charge of the Order, but owing to their mismanagement he had to return to correct abuses. He was helped in this task by his friend Card. Ugolino of Segni, the future *Gregory IX. Francis codified his rather amorphous rule into what is known as the 'Regula Prima', but withheld submitting it for approval. Continuing disagreements among the friars and the opposition of prelates to their way of life led him, against the wishes of some friars, to rewrite and shorten the rule and to submit it for Papal approval. On 29 Nov. 1223 Honorius III solemnly approved his rule, hence known as the 'Regula Bullata', the first rule to receive Papal approbation. It was during these years that Francis resigned as Minister General of the Order and handed over its day-to-day running to a friar whom he called the Minister General—first to Peter Cathanii (d. 1221), then to *Elias of Cortona—but without relinquishing real leadership of the Order. It was about this time that lay people began to associate themselves with his Order to form a '*Third Order'. In 1223 Francis arranged for apparently the first Christmas *crib to be made. The evidence that he was a *deacon derives mainly from the account of this incident. In Sept. 1224 he received on Mount La Verna, a retreat in the Apennines granted to him and his friars by the Lord of Chiusi, the gift of the *Stigmata. He died at the Portiuncula on 3 Oct. 1226. Less than two years later, on 16 July 1228, he was canonized by Gregory IX. In 1230 his body was moved to the newly built church on the edge of Assisi. Feast day, 4 Oct. (Commemoration of the Stigmata, 17 Sept.).

Francis's generosity, his simple and unaffected faith, his passionate devotion to God and man, his love of nature and his deep humility have made him one of the most cherished saints in modern times. The revival of interest in him among the more educated owes much to the study of P. *Sabatier, the Calvinist pastor at Strasbourg, who combined original research into the early Franciscan documents with warm sympathy for, and a fascinating presentation of, his ideals.

See also FRANCISCAN ORDER, CANTICLE OF THE SUN, and LITTLE FLOWERS OF ST FRANCIS.

The authentic writings of Francis are all quite short and their canon is still not fixed. They include two Rules (the 'Regula Prima' and the 'Regula Bullata'), the Rule for those living in hermitages ('Regula pro Eremitoriis'), the Testament, 28 Admonitions, 8 letters, the 'Salutation of the BVM' and other liturgical works, and the 'Canticle of the Sun'. The earliest collected edn. is that of L. *Wadding, OFM (Antwerp, 1623, often repr.). Crit. edn. by K. Esser, OFM (Spicilegium Bonaventurianum, 13; Grottaferrata, 1976; also, with less full apparatus, Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, 12; ibid., 1978). Earlier edn. of works in Lat. by the Franciscans at Quaracchi (ibid. 1; 1904; 3rd edn., 1949) and H. Boehmer and others (Tübingen and Leipzig, 1904; 3rd edn., 1961). Esser's text is repr., with Fr. tr., introd. and notes by T. Desbonnets, OFM, and others (SC 285; 1981). Eng. trs. by P. Robinson, OFM (London, 1906), J. Meyer, OFM (Chicago, 1952), L. Sherley-Price (London, 1959), B. Fahy, OFM (ibid. [1964]), and in Francis and Clare, The Complete Works, tr. R. J. Armstrong, OFM Cap., and I. C. Brady, OFM (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982), pp. 25–166.

Friars began writing about Francis soon after his death. The attempt to determine the authors of the different medieval Lives, their date and importance comprises what is known to scholars as the 'Franciscan Question'. The earliest Life is the 'Vita Prima' of *Thomas of Celano, commissioned by Pope Gregory IX on the canonization of Francis. Next in date is the so-called 'Legenda Trium Sociorum' and possibly the 'Anonymus Perusinus', which may be the memoirs of Brothers Bernard and Giles. In 1246 Thomas of Celano wrote a 'Vita Secunda', based on the reminiscences of the companions of Francis and other early friars, and supplemented it with a 'Tractatus de miraculis'. In 1260 the General Chapter commissioned St *Bonaventure to write a new Life of Francis and in 1266 made this 'Legenda Major' the 'authorized Life', ordering the destruction of all earlier Lives. This led to the growth of oral legends which culminated in the 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius', which became in the later Italian condensation, 'I Fioretti di San Francesco' ('The Little Flowers of St Francis', q.v.). The earlier material, notably the writings of Brother Leo, had not, however, entirely perished and has been recovered in modern times, with much controversy. P. Sabatier mistakenly believed that the 'Speculum Perfectionis', a collection of stories about St Francis based on this material, was written at the Portiuncula in 1227, whereas the true date is 1318. A better candidate is the collection of stories in Perugia MS 1046 brought to light in 1922 by F. Delorme, OFM, and known by various names, incl. the 'Legenda Perusina' and 'Compilatio Assisiensis'. It almost certainly predates 1246. A work of a different kind, but with its own special value, is the 13th-cent. allegory about St Francis and Lady Poverty, the 'Sacrum Commercium'. In the later Middle Ages the most important work was Bartholomew of Pisa's 'Liber de Conformitate Vitae b. Patris Francisci ad Vitam Domini Nostri Jesu Christi', presented by its author to the General Chapter of the Franciscans in 1399.

There are crit. edns. of the Lives and 'Tractatus de miraculis' by Thomas of Celano and the 'Legenda Major' of Bonaventure, with other material, by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (Analecta Franciscana, 10; 1926–41); of the 'Legenda Trium Sociorum' by T. Desbonnet, OFM, in Archivum Franciscanum Historicum, 67 (1974), pp. 38–144; the 'Anonymus Perusinus' by L. Di Fonzo, OFM Conv., in Miscellanea Franciscana, 72 (1972), pp. 117–483; the 'Legenda Perusina' by R. B. Brooke as Scripta Leonis, Rufini et Angeli Sociorum S. Francisci (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1970, with Eng. tr.), and by M. Bigaroni, OFM, as Compilatio Assisiensis (Pubblicazioni della Biblioteca Francescana Chiesa Nuova—Assisi, 2; Assisi, 1975); of 'Speculum Perfectionis' by P. Sabatier (British Society of Franciscan Studies, 13 and 17; 1928–31); of the 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius' by J. Cambell, M. Bigaroni, and G. Boccali, all OFM (Pubblicazioni della Bibliotheca Francescana Chiesa Nuova—Assisi, 5; Assisi, 1988); the 'Little Flowers' by G. Pagnani, OFM (Rome [1959]), and the 'Sacrum Commercium' by S. Brufani (Medioevo Francescano, Testi, 1; Assisi, 1990). All of these, except the 'Anonymus Perusinus', have been tr. into Eng., some many times. Most of them have been conveniently, though uncritically, collected by M. A. Habig, OFM, St Francis of Assisi: Writings and Early Biographies (Chicago [1973]; 3rd edn., 1979, also pub. in London). Modern edn. of Bartholomew of Pisa's 'Liber de Conformitate' by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (Analecta Franciscana, 4–5; 1906–12).

Among modern Lives special importance attaches to that of P. Sabatier (Paris, 1893; Eng. tr., 1894), which inaugurated modern Franciscan studies. It was preceded by those of K. Hase (Leipzig, 1856) and Mrs [M. O. J.] Oliphant (London, *c.*1870). The more important Lives since that of Sabatier include those of J. Jörgensen (Copenhagen, 1907; Eng. tr., 1912), Fr. Cuthbert [Hess], OSFC (London, 1912), O. Englebert (Paris, 1947; rev. edn., 1982; Eng. trs., 1950 and Chicago [1965]), and A. Fortini (4 vols. in 5 [Assisi, 1959]; abbreviated Eng. tr., New York, 1981). Good popular studies by G. K. *Chesterton (London [1923]), T. S. R. Boase (ibid., 1936), J. R. H. Moorman (ibid., 1950), M. de la Bedoyere (ibid., 1962), R. Manselli (Rome, 1980), and J. Green (Paris, 1983; Eng. tr., 1985). Pictorial biog. by L. von Matt and W. Hauser (Zurich, 1952; Eng. tr., 1956). W. Seton (ed.), St. Francis of Assisi, 1226–1926: Essays in Commemoration (London, 1926); M. W. Sheehan, OFM Cap. (ed.), St Francis of Assisi: Essays in Commemoration, 1982 (St Bonaventure, NY, 1982). J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of S. Francis of Assisi (Publications of the University of Manchester, 274, Historical Series, 79; 1940); R. Manselli, Nos qui cum eo fuimus: Contributo alla questione Francescana (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, 28; 1980). L. Di Fonzo, OFM Conv., 'Per la cronologia di S. Francesco. Gli anni 1182–1212', Miscellanea Francescana, 82 (1982), pp. 1–115. Id. in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 683–98, s.v. 'François (8) d'Assise'; id. in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 513–27, s.v. 'Francesco, di Assisi', both with further bibl. See also works cited under STIGMATIZATION.

Francis Borgia, St. See BORGIA, ST FRANCIS.

Francis of Paola, St (1416–1507), founder of the Order of *Minims. Coming from a modest, deeply religious family, he spent a year with the *Franciscans as a boy in fulfilment of a vow of his parents. Here he developed a great love of austerity, and in 1431 began to lead a strictly ascetic life as a hermit, first in a cave near the Tyrrhenian Sea, then in a nearby forest. About 1435, the date held to be that of the foundation of his order, he was joined by others, and before long he was the spiritual guide of a group of hermits, with whom from *c.*1452 he began to live in community. Other foundations followed later. He became renowned for his holiness throughout Italy and beyond its frontiers, and many miraculous cures were attributed to him. His fame was such that Louis XI of France, in terror of death after an apoplectic fit, sent for him; while his son, Charles VIII, kept him near him as his spiritual director and built him two monasteries. The last three months of his life St Francis spent preparing himself for death in his cell in complete solitude. He was canonized in 1519 and declared 'Patron of Italian Seafarers' in 1943. His emblem is the word CARITAS in a circle of rays. Feast day, 2 Apr.

AASS, Apr. 1 (1685), pp. 103–234. The 'anonymous Life' [by L. Clavense] also ed. G. M. Perrimezzi (2 vols., Rome, 1707). Modern Life by G. M. Roberti (Rome, 1915). A. [M.] Galuzzi, OM, Origini dell'Ordine dei Minimi (Corona Lateranesis, 11; 1967). R. Fiot, Saint François de Paule à Amboise (pamphlet for the Association des Amis de Saint François de Paul; Chambray-les-Tours [1975]). The apostolic letter of Pope *Pius XII appointing him patron of Italian seafarers is pr. in AAS 35 (1943), pp. 163 f. F. Russo, MSC, Bibliografia di San Francesco di Paola (Supplemento al 'Bollettino Ufficiale dell'Ordine dei Minimi', 3, no. 1; 1957). R. Fiot in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1040–51, s.v. 'François (19) de Paule'; A. Galuzzi, OM, in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 742–5, s.v. 'François (50) de Paule', with further bibl.

Francis de Sales, St (1567–1622), Bp. of Geneva from 1602, and one of the leaders of the *Counter-Reformation. Born at the castle of Sales in Savoy, he was educated at Annecy, Paris (1578–88; first at the Collège de *Clermont and then at the *Sorbonne), and Padua (1588–92), reading theology and law. Despite attractive offers of a position by the Duke of Savoy, he felt a strong vocation to holy orders, and in 1593 was ordained priest and made Provost of Geneva. He undertook a mission in the largely Protestant Chablais and, in the face of personal danger and suffering, he won many *Calvinists to Catholicism by his unfailing spirit of charity and his engagement in controversy in a conciliatory spirit. In 1599 he was nominated Coadjutor-Bp. of Geneva, though he was not consecrated until he succeeded to the see in 1602. During that year he went to Paris and met P. de *Bérulle, the circle around Mme *Acarie, and St *Vincent de Paul. He administered his diocese from Annecy in a reforming spirit, also continuing regularly to preach and minister as confessor. In 1604 he met St *Jane Frances de Chantal in Dijon; he became her director and with her founded the *Visitation Order in Annecy in 1610. His most famous writings, the *Introduction to the Devout Life (1609; q.v.) and the Treatise on the Love of God (1616; Eng. tr. 1630), designed for those more advanced in the spiritual life, were adapted for publication from instructions given to individuals. Both works had considerable influence on later spiritual writings. He was beatified in 1661, canonized in 1665, and declared a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1877 and 'Patron of Catholic Journalists' in 1923. Feast day, 24 (formerly 27) Jan. See also BOSCO, ST JOHN, and SALESIANS.

The best edn. of his Œuvres complètes is that pub. by the Visitandines of Annecy (26 vols., Annecy, 1892–1932 + vol. 27, 'table analytique' by A. Denis, 1964); Eng. tr. by H. B. Mackey, OSB, and others, under the direction of J. C. Hedley, OSB (6 vols., 1883–1908). Crit. edn. of his Œuvres [Introduction à la Vie Dévote, Traité de l'Amour de Dieu, and Receuil des Entretiens spirituels], by A. Ravier and R. Devos (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade [1969]) and of his Correspondance: Les Lettres d'amitié spirituelle, by A. Ravier, SJ (Bibliothèque Européenne [1980]). Selected letters tr. into Eng., with introd., by E. [C. V.] Stopp (1960). The primary contemporary authority is C.-A. de Sales (nephew), De Vita et Rebus Gestis . . . Francisci Salesii (Lyons, 1634; mod. Fr. tr., 2 vols., 1857). J. P. Camus, L'Esprit du bien-heureux François de Sales (6 vols., 1639–41; abridgement by P. Collot, 1727, frequently repr.; Eng. trs. of this abridgement, 1872, 1910, and New York, 1952). A. J. M. Hamon, Vie de Saint François de Sales (2 vols., 1854; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1925–9); F. Trochu, Saint François de Sales (2 vols., Paris, 1946); E. J. Lajeunie, OP, Saint François de Sales: L'Homme, la pensée, l'action (2 vols., posthumously pub. [1966]). Other modern studies incl. those of M. de la Bedoyere (London, 1960), E.-M. Lajeunie ('Maîtres spirituels', 1962), R. Murphy (Paris, 1964), R. Bady ('Les écrivains devant Dieu' [1970]), and C. H. Palmer (Ilfracombe, 1974). P. Serouet, De la vie dévote à la vie mystique: Saint Thérèse d'Avila, Saint François de Sales [1958]. R. Kleinman, Saint François de Sales and the Protestants (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 52; Geneva, 1962). H. Lemaire, Les Images chez Saint François de Sales (1962). R. Devos, Saint François de Sales, par les témoins de sa vie: Textes extraits des procès de béatification (Annecy, 1967). Mémorial du IV^e Centenaire de la Naissance de Saint François de Sales 1567 1967 (ibid. [1968]). Julien-Eymard d'Angers, OFM Cap., L'Humanisme Chrétien au XVIIe Siècle: St François de Sales et Yves de Paris (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 31; The Hague, 1970), pp. 1–78. H. Bordes and J. Hennequin (eds.), L'Unidivers Salésien: Saint François de Sales hier et aujourd'hui. Actes du Colloque International de Metz, 17–19 septembre 1992 (1994). V. Brasier, E. Morganti, and M. St Durica, Opera e scritti riguardanti San Francesco di Sales: Repertorio bibliografico 1623 1955 (Biblioteca del 'Salesianum', 44; 1956); J. Struś, SDB, 'San Francesco di Sales 1567–1622. Rassegna bibliografica dal 1956', Salesianum, 45 (1983), pp. 635–71. Bremond, 1 (1916), pp. 68–127; Eng. tr., 1 (1928), pp. 55–100. P. Serouet in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1057–97, s.v. 'François (25) de Sales'; R. Devos in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 753–60, s.v. 'François (63) de Sales', both with extensive bibl.

Francis of Vitoria. See VITORIA, FRANCESCO DE.

Francis Xavier, St (1506–52), 'Apostle of the Indies' and 'of *Japan'. He was one of the greatest of Christian missionaries, and an original member of the *Jesuits. The son of an aristocratic Spanish-Basque family, he was born in Navarre. While studying at the University of Paris, he met St *Ignatius of Loyola, and on 15 Aug. 1534 with him and five others made a vow of lifelong poverty and service either in the Holy Land or wherever the Pope should send them. He was ordained priest in 1537. In 1540 Pedro de Mascarenhas, Portuguese ambassador to the Papal court, petitioned *Paul III for Jesuits to evangelize the East. At two days' notice, Xavier, then secretary of the Society, left Rome and sailed from Lisbon on 7 Apr. 1541. In May 1542 he reached Goa, which he made his headquarters. From there he went on to Travancore, Malacca, the Molucca Islands, and *Sri Lanka. In 1549 he landed in Japan, the language of which he studied, and founded there a Church which endured through great persecutions. He returned to Goa in 1552, but left in the same year for a mission to China. On the way, at the island of Sancian (Changchuan; S. of Canton), he fell ill and died before he could enter the country. His body was brought to the church of the Good Jesus at Goa, where it lies magnificently enshrined. His work is remarkable for the extent of his journeys (in spite of his invariable seasickness) and the large number of his converts. The Jesuits have attributed to him more than 700,000 conversions. Wherever he preached he left organized Christian communities. His methods have sometimes been attacked, e.g. he has been criticized for not attempting to understand the oriental religions, for invoking the help of the *Inquisition, for approving the persecution of the *Church of the East, and for using the government at Goa as a means of proselytizing. The well-known hymn, 'O Deus, ego amo Te' ('My God, I love Thee, not because', tr. E. *Caswall), long ascribed to Xavier, appears to be a Latin rendering of a Spanish sonnet by an unknown 17th-cent. author. He was canonized in 1622, and *Pius X named him patron of the work of the Congregation for the *Propagation of the Faith. Feast day, 3 Dec.

Monumenta Xaveriana (Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, 2 vols., Madrid, 1899–1912); letters also ed. G. Schurhammer, SJ, and J. Wicki, SJ (ibid., vols. 67 and 68; Rome, 1944–5). Eng. tr. of Letters and Instructions by M. J. Costelloe, SJ (St Louis, 1992). H. Tursellini, SJ, De Vita Francisci Xaverii (Rome, 1594; Eng. tr., Paris, 1632). Modern Lives by J. Brodrick, SJ (London, 1952), G. Schurhammer (2 vols. in 4, Freiburg, 1955–73; Eng. tr., 4 vols., Rome, 1973–82), and J. M. Recondo, SJ (Madrid, 1988). Various papers by Schurhammer assembled in his Gesammelte Studien, 3. Xaveriana (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 22; 1964). A. C. Ross, A Vision Betrayed: The Jesuits in Japan and China 1542 1742 (Edinburgh [1994]), pp. 13–51. Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 675–731. G. Schurhammer in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1099–1107, s.v. 'François (28) de Xavier'; J. Wicki in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1059 f., s.v. 'Xavier, Francis, St', both with bibl.

Franciscan Order. The Order of Friars Minor was founded by St *Francis of Assisi (q.v.) in 1209, when he gave his followers their first rule, now lost. This rule was recast in 1221 and brought into its final form in 1223, when *Honorius III confirmed it by bull, whence it is known as 'Regula bullata'. Its distinguishing mark is the insistence on complete poverty not only for individual friars but corporately for the whole order. The friars were to live by the work of their hands or, if need be, by begging, but were forbidden to own any property or to accept money. With the rapid spread of the order and the need for settled houses, this ideal soon proved unworkable if taken literally. Thus two schools of thought developed in the order. The one, whose members were called '*Spirituals', insisted on interpretation acc. to the letter, the other, followed by the majority, preferred a more moderate view in accordance with the requirements of the times. From 1245 onwards the discussion grew violent and endangered the unity of the order, though it temporarily abated under the conciliatory influence of St *Bonaventure, who was General from 1257 to 1274. From 1310 to 1312 the question was debated before the Pope, and in 1317–18 decided against the stricter party by two bulls of *John XXII which permitted the order corporate ownership. Many of the Spirituals fled and became schismatics under the name of '*Fraticelli'. In 1321 the problem of poverty arose again, this time in the theoretical form as to whether Christ and the Apostles had owned property, and a heated scholastic discussion between Franciscans and *Dominicans developed. These futile disputes, together with the Black Death (1348–52) and the *Great Schism (1378–1417), led to a general decline of the order in the 14th cent. Laxity also increased as their material prosperity grew. But during this period many efforts at reform were made, and a return to poverty was brought about by the so-called '*Observants', who opposed the lax '*Conventuals'. The 'Observants' gained ecclesiastical recognition when in 1415 the Council of *Constance granted their French province special provincials, and in 1443 *Eugenius IV provided them with a separate Vicar General. In 1517 they were finally separated from the Conventuals and declared the true Order of St Francis. Early in the 16th cent. another reform, introduced by Matteo di Bassi (1495–1552), led to the establishment of the *Capuchins (q.v.), whose rule was drawn up in 1529.

During the 17th and 18th cents. reform parties sprang up again. Of these the chief were the 'Reformati', the *Recollects and the *Discalced, who lived after their own statutes, though remaining under the same General. Besides these internal differences, the political events of the 18th and 19th cents., esp. the French Revolution, the secularization of *Joseph II, the revolutions in Spain (1834), Poland (1831), Italy, and the *Kulturkampf in Prussia, did great harm to the order. At the end of the 19th century, however, it regained new vigour by the reunion of its different branches, which was confirmed by *Leo XIII in 1897.

The order, which has always cultivated popular preaching and missionary activities, has given a great number of saints to the Church, the best known being St *Antony of Padua, popular as a miracle-worker. Though not primarily instituted as a learned order, it has produced many celebrated scholars, among them St Bonaventure, *Duns Scotus, and *William of Ockham. Among the popular devotions they promoted are the *Angelus, the *crib, and the *Stations of the Cross. Franciscans were among the chief defenders of the *Immaculate Conception in the Middle Ages.

To the Franciscan friars are attached a Second Order of contemplative nuns (the *Poor Clares, q.v.) and a *Third Order (q.v.), now divided into Regular and Secular Tertiaries.

In 1224 the first Franciscans to establish themselves in England arrived under *Agnellus of Pisa and settled at once at *Canterbury, London, and *Oxford. Their piety and learning won them a ready hearing, and by the middle of the century there were some 50 friaries and over 1,200 friars in England. Their early history (down to *c.*1258) was vividly described by Thomas of Eccleston ('De Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam'). John *Pecham, one of their number, held the see of Canterbury from 1279 to 1292. In the 14th cent., when they no longer possessed the same moral and intellectual qualities, they became the object of J. *Wycliffe's attacks. The Observants were introduced by Henry VII and acted as confessors to *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon; but they were scattered before the *Dissolution. Since the middle of the 19th cent., many Franciscan houses have been re-established.

In the C of E a group inspired by Franciscan ideals settled near Batcombe (Cerne Abbas) in Dorset in 1921, to minister in the first place to the unemployed who tramped the roads. In 1931 they took vows and were constituted a religious community. They have grown considerably in numbers and influence and have been active in evangelistic work, esp. in the universities. A small Anglican community for women has also been started with its headquarters at Freeland, Oxon.

The most important source for the order as a whole, apart from its official docs., is L. *Wadding, OFM (q.v.), Annales Minorum (8 vols., Lyons, 1625–54; later edns. much extended); id., Scriptores Ordinis Minorum (Rome, 1650; suppl., with corrections, by J. H. Sbaralea, OFM, 1806). Bullarium Franciscanum (4 vols., ed. J. H. Sbaralea, OFM, Rome, 1759–68; 3 further vols. ed. C. Eubel, OFM, ibid., 1898–1904, + Epitome et Supplementum by id., Quaracchi, 1908; NS ed. U. Hüntemann, OFM, and J. M. Pou y Marti, OFM, 3 vols., ibid., 1929–49). Analecta Franciscana, sive Chronica aliaque varia Documenta ad Historiam Fratrum Minorum Spectantia, ed. by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (11 vols. to date, Quaracchi, 1885–1970). Useful collection of sources for the history of the order in England ed. J. S. Brewer and R. Howlett, Monumenta Franciscana (2 vols., RS, 1858–82). For details of edns. of early constitutions and other sources see A. G. Little, A Guide to Franciscan Studies (Helps for Students of History, 23; 1920). G. Golubovich, OFM, and others, Biblioteca Bio-Bibliografica della Terra Santa e dell'Oriente Francescano: Serie Prima: Annali (5 vols., Quaracchi, 1905–27); Nuova Serie: Documenti (14 vols., ibid., 1921–39; further vols. in preparation, Cairo); Serie Terza: Documenti (2 vols., Ethiopia Francescana, Quaracchi, 1928–48); Serie Quarta: Studi (Cairo, 1954 ff.). Docs. on the Chinese Mission pr. in Sinica Franciscana (Rome, 1929 ff.).

H. Holzapfel, OFM, Handbuch der Geschichte des Franziskanerordens (1909). A. Masseron, Les Franciscains ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux', 1931; Eng. tr., 1931). A. Gemelli, OFM, Il francescanesimo (2nd edn., Vita e pensiero, 1932; Eng. tr., 1934). [M. Badin, in religion] Père Gratien de Paris, OFM Cap., Histoire de la fondation et de l'évolution de l'ordre des Frères Mineurs au XIII^e siècle (1928). F. de Sessevalle, of the Third Order, Histoire générale de l'ordre de Saint François, la première partie, le moyen-âge, 1209–1517 (2 vols., 1935–7). R. M. Huber, OFM Conv., A Documented History of the Franciscan Order, 1182–1517 (Milwaukee, Wis., and Washington, DC, 1944). J. [R. H.] Moorman, A History of the Franciscan Order from its origins to the year 1517 (Oxford, 1968). R. B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government: Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959). M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty: The Doctrine of the Absolute Poverty of Christ and the Apostles in the Franciscan Order, 1210–1323 (CHS, 1961). D. Nimmo, Reform and Division in the Medieval Franciscan Order from Saint Francis to the Foundation of the Capuchins (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, 33; Rome, 1987). A. G. Little, Studies in English Franciscan History (Ford Lectures for 1916; Publications of the University of Manchester, 113, Historical Series, 29; 1917) and other works; [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Religious Orders in England [1] (1948), pp. 114–45, 171–93, 205–52. J. R. H. Moorman, The Franciscans in England (1974). Father Cuthbert [Hess], OFM Cap., The Friars and How They Came to England (1903; Eng. tr. of Thomas of Eccleston's 'De Adventu FF. Minorum in Angliam', with pref. essay, 'On the Spirit and Genius of the Franciscan Friars', pp. 1–128). L. Lemmens, OFM, Geschichte der Franziskanermissionen (Missionswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen und Texte, ed. J. Schmidlin, 12; 1929). The many collections of studies and periodicals devoted to the affairs of the order incl. the pubs. of the British Society of Franciscan Studies (19 vols., Aberdeen, 1908–37), Études franciscaines (Paris, 1899 ff.), La Verna (Florence, 1903–14; then called Studi Francescani, ibid., 1914 ff.), Archivum Franciscanum Historicum (Quaracchi, 1908 ff.), Franziskanische Studien (Münster i.W., 1914 ff.), Revue d'Histoire Franciscaine (Paris, 1924 ff.), and Fran- ciscan Studies (New York, 1941 ff.). Heimbucher, 1, pp. 656–814, with detailed bibl. M. Bihl, OFM, and Z. Engelhardt, OFM, in CE 6 (1909), pp. 281–302, s.v. 'Friars Minor, Order of'; Édouard d'Alençon, OFM Cap., in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 809–63, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs'; E. Longpré, OFM, and others in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1268–401, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs'; L. di Fronzo, OFM Conv., in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 464–511, s.v. 'Francescani (1209–1517)'; E. Frascadore, OFM, and others, ibid., cols. 839–911, s.v. 'Fratri Minori simpliciter dicti'; K. S. Frank, OFM, in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 4 (1995), cols. 30–5, s.v. 'Franziskaner', all with bibls. See also bibls. to CAPUCHINS, OBSERVANTS, RECOLLECTS, and SPIRITUAL FRANCISCANS.

Franciscus a Sancta Clara. See DAVENPORT, CHRISTOPHER.

Franck, Sebastian (*c.*1499–*c.*1542), German humanist and radical reformer. After studying at Ingolstadt and Heidelberg, he was ordained priest. He became a *Lutheran in the 1520s, and held pastoral appointments from 1526 in Ansbach-Bayreuth and then in Gustenfelden. Becoming disenchanted with this work, he moved to Nuremberg and worked in the printing trade. His increasingly radical ideas damaged his reputation with the city magistrates and he moved to Strasbourg, from which he was expelled in 1531. After brief stays at Kehl and Esslingen, he came to Ulm in 1533. Despite tense relations with the civic authorities, he was not expelled until 1539. He spent his final years in Basle. Franck promoted a form of undogmatic Christianity which was equally offensive to Catholics and Protestants. His varied writings are largely secular, but his historical compilation Chronica (3 vols., 1531) expressed his radical religious views. His more specifically theological works include a German edition of A. Althamen's Diallage (1528; a treatise against the *Anabaptists) and an index to the Bible (1539). He also produced German translations of S. Fish's Supplication of Beggars (1529) and of *Erasmus' Moriae Encomium with *Agrippa's De Vanitate Scientiarum (1534).

Life by C. A. Hase (Leipzig, 1869). Modern study by W. E. Peuckert (Munich, 1943). H. Weigelt, Sebastian Franck und die lutherische Reformation (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 186; 1972). S. Ozment, Mysticism and Dissent (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1973), pp. 137–67; G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, 1957; London, 1962), pp. 264–7, 457–65, and 499–504; 3rd edn. (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirksville, Mo. [1992]), pp. 394–8, 694–703 and 747–50. Bibliography by K. Kaczerowsky (Wiesbaden, 1976). A. Séguenny in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 307–12, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Francke, August Hermann (1663–1727), German *Pietist and educationalist. He was born at Lübeck, and after studying philosophy and theology at Erfurt and Kiel became a lecturer at Leipzig in 1685. He was attracted to a pietistic form of religion and held 'Collegia Philobiblica' in which the Bible was expounded on devotional lines. Through P. Anton he came into contact with P. J. *Spener, whose spirituality deeply impressed him and who became his mentor. In 1691 he was appointed professor of Greek and Oriental languages at the newly founded University of Halle and pastor of Glaucha, nr. Halle, where his sermons and pastoral activities soon attracted a large congregation. In 1695 he laid the foundation of his famous Institutes, later known as 'Franckesche Stiftungen', by opening a poor-school in his house. In 1696 he founded his 'Paedagogium' and his orphanage. Both grew rapidly, and during the next years other institutions, such as a publishing house and a dispensary, were added. In 1698 he became professor of theology; this appointment strengthened his position. In his struggles with his orthodox opponents, as well as with representatives of *Enlightenment thought, he was supported by the Prussian king, Frederick William I, who in 1723 at Francke's suggestion removed the philosopher Christian *Wolff from Halle. Francke's theology was similar to that of Spener, but he placed more emphasis on the need for an inner religious struggle ('Busskampf'). At the same time the strict ethical code which he tried to impose gave his form of Pietism a legalist turn which influenced the development of Pietism, esp. in North and Central Germany.

His works, which are mainly of a devotional and practical character, ed. E. Peschke (Texte zur Geschichte des Pietismus, Abt. II; 1981 ff.). Life by G. Kramer (2 vols., Halle a.S., 1880–2). A. Nebe, Neue Quellen zu August Hermann Francke (1927). E. Beyreuther, August Hermann Francke 1663–1727: Zeuge des lebendigen Gottes (Marburg [1956]); id., August Hermann Francke und die Anfänge der ökumenischen Bewegung (Leipzig, 1957). E. Peschke, Studien zur Theologie August Hermann Franckes (2 vols., 1964–6); id., Bekehrung und Reform: Ansatz und Wurzeln der Theologie August Hermann Franckes (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 15; 1977). K. Deppermann, Der hallesche Pietismus und der preussische Staat unter Friedrich III. (I.) (Göttingen [1961]). Id. in M. Greschat (ed.), Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 241–60, with bibl. E. Beyreuther in RGG (3rd edn.), 2 (1958), cols. 1013–15, s.v. 'Francke (1), August Hermann'; F. de Boor in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 312–20, s.v. See also bibl. to PIETISM.

Frankfurt, Councils of. Frankfurt am Main was the scene of some 16 Imperial councils during the Carolingian epoch. The best known of them was called by *Charlemagne in 794 to condemn the *Adoptianist heresy. It was attended by bishops from all over the Frankish kingdoms, including Aquitaine and Italy. Besides repudiating Adoptianism it condemned the decree of the Second Council of *Nicaea (787) on the worship of *icons, probably through a misunderstanding of the distinction made between λατρεία and προσκύνησις.

On the Council of 794, Hardouin, 4, cols. 865–912; Mansi, 13 (1767), cols. 829–56; crit. edn. by A. Werminghoff in MGH, Concilia, 2 (pt. 1; 1906), pp. 108–71. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 1045–60 and 1240–6. C. de Clercq, La Législation religieuse franque de Clovis à Charlemagne, 1 (Louvain, 1936), pp. 184–91; F. L. Ganshof, 'Observations sur le Synode de Francfort de 794', in Miscellanea Historica in Honorem Alberti de Meyer, 1 (Université de Louvain, Recueil de travaux d'histoire et de philologie, 3rd ser. 22; 1946), pp. 306–18. L. Wallach, Alcuin and Charlemagne: Studies in Carolingian History and Literature (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, 32; 1959), pp. 147–77 passim. S. Anton in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 561 f.; W. Hartmann in Lexicon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 740 f., with bibl.

Franzelin, Johann Baptist (1816–86), Austrian cardinal and theologian. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1834, and in 1857 was appointed professor of dogmatic theology at the Roman College. He took a prominent part in preparing the First *Vatican Council, where he acted as one of the leading theologians. In 1876 he was raised to the cardinalate. A theologian of great learning and accuracy of mind, he wrote a long series of dogmatic works of which the chief was his De Divina Traditione et Scriptura (1870). In his treatise on the Eucharistic Sacrifice (1868) he followed J. de *Lugo in teaching that the immolation in the Sacrifice consisted in the reduction to a lower state of Christ's human nature by being clothed in the species of bread and wine. Franzelin took an active part in the controversy with Greek Orthodox and Protestant scholars on the procession of the Holy Spirit, setting forth the traditional W. doctrine in his Examen doctrinae Macarii Bulgakov (1876).

'Commentarius de Vita Eminentissimi Auctoris' prefixed to his posthumous Theses de Ecclesia Christi (1887), pp. v–xxxi. N. Walsh, SJ, John Baptist Franzelin, SJ . . .: A Sketch and a Study (Dublin, 1895). F. Gaar, Das Prinzip der göttlichen Tradition nach Joh. Baptist Franzelin (Ratisbon [1973]). P. Walter, Johann Baptist Franzelin (1816 1886): Jesuit, Theologe, Kardinal (Bolzano, 1987). Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 674 f. P. Bernard in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 765–7; supplementary bibl. in DHGE 18 (1977), col. 1032, s.v.

Fraser, Alexander Campbell (1819–1914), idealist philosopher. He was a pupil of Sir William Hamilton at Edinburgh, and in 1844 was ordained in the *Free Church of Scotland, which had been created by the schism in the previous year, to the charge of Cramond, nr. Edinburgh. On Hamilton's death in 1856, he succeeded to his professorship at the University and held the chair till 1891. His main philosophical interest was the study of G. *Berkeley, whose writings he twice edited for the Clarendon Press (1871, 1901). The earlier edition was accompanied by a volume of Berkeley's Life and Letters incorporating much new material, and in 1881 he contributed the volume Berkeley to Blackwood's Philosophical Classics. He also published a set of *Gifford Lectures on The Philosophy of Theism (1895–6). Though his own philosophical position was greatly influenced by the doctrines of Berkeley, Fraser did not follow him slavishly; and his success as a teacher owed more to his ability to stimulate interest in the issues of philosophy than to the inculcation of any particular conclusions. He described the course of his philosophical development in his Biographia Philosophica (1904).

J. Kellie, Alexander Campbell Fraser: A Sketch of his Life and Philosophical Position (1909). A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, 'Alexander Campbell Fraser, 1819–1914', Mind, 24 (1915), pp. 289–325; id. in DNB, 1912–1921 (1927), pp. 195–7.

frater, the hall of a monastery or friary used for meals or refreshment. The word is in origin related to 'refectory' (refectorium) through the Old French refraitour.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Mediaeval England (1961), pp. 34 f.

fraternities. During and after the Middle Ages, fraternities of many kinds were founded in the Church to meet the religious and social needs of clergy and laity. Their primary purpose was to secure for their members mutual support in death through Masses, prayers, and alms, as well as intercessions in sickness and other religious benefits. They also provided in financial and material ways for such contingencies as death, sickness, and natural disasters, and by social gatherings such as corporate meals they promoted fellowship and recreation. They aspired to foster peace and concord among their members by providing a forum for the resolving of disputes. Through their almsgiving they made a considerable contribution to the relief of poverty. Their distant origins lay in the collegia of the classical world and in early Germanic Schutzgilden; they developed rapidly from Carolingian times when *Hincmar of Reims already attested their multiplication in his concern to safeguard their religious as well as their convivial character. The Abbotsbury Guild Statutes (dating from between *c.*1025 and *c.*1050) are a good early example of the statutes by which they came to be governed. Such fraternities, with the features of being locally based, having their own officials and statutes, and assembling periodically for religious and social purposes, should be distinguished from the looser spiritual confraternities of monasteries and from monastic unions of prayers and benefits, as well as from specifically trade associations. Until the 13th cent., fraternities may usefully be classified as rural or parish, abbatial (i.e. affiliated to an abbey), and urban (esp. in towns with episcopal sees); clerical, or mixed clerical and lay, fraternities were not uncommon. Thereafter, fraternities increasingly catered for burgeoning forms of lay piety; increasing lay self-awareness sometimes gave rise to fraternities exhibiting zeal against sinful clergy and even radical anti-clericalism. Italy saw particularly significant developments, esp. the emergence from *c.*1260 of the so-called disciplinati or *flagellants, who were much concerned to counter heresy and sodomy, as well as to appease civil strife and to relieve poverty. Many fraternities were associated with the orders of *Mendicant Friars, and these were often not specifically attached to any particular territory; the most striking example was the *Dominican confraternity of the BVM which evolved into the world-wide Confraternity of the *Rosary.

In the modern RC Church, fraternities are governed by canon law covering public and private associations of the faithful (CIC (1983), cans. 298–329). Each has to have its own statutes, defining its purposes, government, and membership.

L. A. *Muratori, Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi, 6 (Milan, 1742), pp. 446–82, diss. 75, 'De Piis Laicorum Confraternitatibus earumque Origine, Flagellantibus, et Sacris Missionibus', incl. some primary docs. Hincmar's Synodical Capitula of 852, chs. 14–16, are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 125. 777–8. The Abbotsbury Guild Statutes are pr., with Eng. tr. in Councils & Synods with Other Documents Relating to the English Church, 1: A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke, 1 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 516–20. The extensive modern lit. includes J. Wollasch, 'Gemeinschaftsbewusstsein und soziale Leistung im Mittelalter', Frühmittelalterliche Studien, 9 (1975), pp. 268–86; G. G. Meersseman and G. P. Pacini, Ordo fraternitatis: Confraternite e pietà dei laici nel medioevo (Italia Sacra. Studi e documenti di storia ecclesiastica, 24–6; 1977); N. J. Housley, 'Politics and Heresy in Italy: Anti-Heretical Crusades, Orders and Confraternities, 1200–1500', JEH 33 (1982), pp. 193–208; and Le Mouvement Confraternel au Moyen Age: France, Italie, Suisse. Actes de la table ronde . . . Lausanne 9 11 Mai 1985 (Collection de l'École française de Rome, 97; 1987). Collections of papers on 'Le confraternite in Italia tra Medioevo e Rinascimento', ed. G. De Rosa, Ricerche di Storia Sociale e Religiosa, NS 9, nn. 17–18 (1980); on 'La Sociabilità Religiosa nel Mezzogiorno: le confraternite laicali', ed. V. Paglia (ibid. 19, nn. 37–8; 1990). P. Horden, 'The Confraternities of Byzantium', in W. J. Sheils and D. Wood (eds.), Voluntary Religion

(Studies in Church History, 23; Oxford, 1986), pp. 25–45, with other arts. on fraternities in the W. Church, pp. 85–109. G. Le Bras in Fliche and Martin, 12 (pt. 1 [1964]), pp. 414–17. C. Lefebvre in DIP 2 (1973), cols. 1442 5, s.v. 'Confraternità'.

Fraticelli. Originally a term of contempt for heretical *Franciscans, it was applied to two groups, both confined mainly to Italy. The Fraticelli de Paupere Vita were followers of Angelo Clareno (d. 1337); some of them were reconciled to the Order in the 15th cent. The Fraticelli de Opinione were followers of Michael of Cesena (d. 1342; hence 'Michaelites'); they were organized as a Church with their own bishops, priests, and women preachers. Both groups were extinct by 1500. See also SPIRITUAL FRANCISCANS.

D. L. Douie, The Nature and the Effect of the Heresy of the Fraticelli (Publications of the University of Manchester, 220; Historical Series, 61; 1932).

Frederick I (Barbarossa) (*c.*1122–90), German King and Emperor. On the death of his uncle, Conrad III, in 1152, the German princes elected Frederick of Swabia King, partly because he was on his mother's side a Guelph, as well as being a Hohenstaufen on his father's. He secured peace in the German kingdom by the gradual introduction of a new system of quasi-regal duchies which replaced the old tribal units, and by allowing his Guelph cousin, Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, a virtually free hand in the north-east. In Italy, however, the treaty of Constance, which he concluded with Pope *Eugenius III in 1153 and renewed with *Hadrian IV in 1155, gave less freedom of movement to him than to the curia, and after his coronation as Emperor in 1155 he was unable to move south against the Normans. His aggressive policy towards the Lombard communes sought not only to reclaim regalian rights but to administer them for his own profit. Similar plans further south threatened the temporal lordship of the Papacy, and the growing tension between Frederick and Hadrian IV was aggravated by questions of protocol at their first meeting. At the Diet of Besançon in 1157 he and his chancellor, Rainold of Dassel, took exception to Hadrian's description of the empire as a Papal gift (beneficium), and insisted that the 'holy empire' (sacrum imperium; see HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE) was a 'free crown' governed by the sacred Roman law. The law students were put under the Emperor's protection at Roncaglia in 1158. When, at the Papal election of 1159, two popes emerged, Frederick at the Council of Pavia in 1160 recognized the candidate of the minority of cardinals, Victor IV, against *Alexander III. The schism, which lasted for 17 years, was mainly a conflict of interests, but it isolated Frederick and the German bishops who supported him from the clerical élite of France and the Anglo-Norman world. A military solution proved impossible. After Frederick had suffered heavy losses at Rome through malaria in 1167, the resistance of the communes revived. He was faced with the need to make concessions either to the Lombard League or to Alexander III and after his defeat at Legnano in 1176 he preferred to submit to the Pope. He was able to gain much from Alexander and his successors without forcing a final settlement of the territorial conflict in central Italy. His long absences in Italy weakened his position in Germany, where Henry the Lion rebelled and revived the old Guelph–Hohenstaufen feud. After Henry's overthrow in 1181, however, Frederick became an awe-inspiring figure, and his power was increased by the marriage in 1186 of his son and heir, Henry, to Constance, the heiress of the Norman kingdom of Sicily. His piety was conservative: he wanted to resemble *Charlemagne, whom he had had canonized by one of his antipopes in 1165. He saw in the *Crusade the culmination of his strivings and in 1189 he set out at the head of a large host by the land route through Hungary. He considered an attack on *Constantinople, but the submission of Isaac Angelus was enough to deflect the army across the Dardanelles, and Frederick was drowned in the river Saleph in Cilicia.

'Constitutiones', ed. L. Weiland in MGH, Constitutiones et Acta Publica Imperatorum et Regum, 1 (1893), pp. 191–463. 'Diplomata', ed. H. Appelt and others (MGH, Diplomata Regum et Imperatorum Germaniae, 10; 5 vols., 1975–90). The central narrative source until 1160 is *Otto of Freising and Rahewin's Gesta Frederici, ed. G. Waitz and B. de Simson (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1912) and F. J. Schmale (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 17; 1965). Eng. tr. by C. C. Mierow (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 49; 1953). For the later period, Ottonis de Sancto Blasio Chronica, ed. A. Hofmeister (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1912). For the Crusade, see A. Chroust (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte des Kreuzzuges Kaiser Friedrichs I (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, NS 5; 1928). W. von Giesebrecht, Geschichte der deutschen Kaiserzeit, 5 (2 pts., Leipzig, 1880–8) and 6 (ed. B. von Simson, ibid., 1895); H. Simonsfeld, Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reiches unter Friedrich I, 1: 1152 1158 (Jahrbücher der Deutschen Geschichte, 1908). Modern studies by R. Wahl (Munich, 1941; 3rd edn., 1950), K. Jordan (Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, 13; 1959), M. Pacaut ([Paris] 1967; Eng. tr., 1970), P. Munz (London, 1969), and F. Oppl (Darmstadt, 1990). Cf. also K. Jordan, Heinrich der Löwe (Munich, 1979; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1986), passim. H. Heimpel in Neue Deutsche Biographie, 5 (1961), pp. 459–78, s.v., with bibl.

Frederick II (1194–1250), Holy Roman Emperor and King of Sicily. His father, the Hohenstaufen Emp. Henry VI, died at Messina in 1197 and his mother Constance the following year, so that the young Frederick grew up in Palermo, the victim of intrigues and struggles which damaged not only the rights of his crown but also his personality. His guardian, Pope *Innocent III, tried to keep him and the regno (S. Italy and Sicily) under his tutelage, but he needed Frederick's help against the Guelph Emp. Otto IV, who, after Innocent had crowned him in 1209, broke his engagements to the Papacy in Italy. Frederick was thus able to regain his lost family position north of the Alps; when in 1220 the German princes and bishops were induced to elect his son Henry VII King of the Romans, the empire and the regno once more had a single ruler of the Hohenstaufen dynasty, a situation which both the Papacy and the Lombard cities had reason to fear. Already in 1215, at his coronation at Aachen, Frederick had taken the cross, but he needed time to rebuild the government of his S. Italian kingdom and postponed his departure more than once. Excommunicated by Pope *Gregory IX, he set out in 1228 and by agreement with the Sultan al-Kamil he regained Jerusalem for the Latins and crowned himself King in the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre. Here also he uttered the first of his great manifestos, exalting his majesty by presenting himself as the instrument of God in the place of David. Back in Italy he reconquered his invaded provinces and with many concessions wrested absolution and peace from the reluctant Pope by the Peace of San Germano in 1230. In Germany he crushed a rebellion of his son Henry and astonished the princes with his exotic Saracen guards and oriental spendour. Yet in 1236, at the translation of his recently canonized kinswoman, St *Elizabeth, he wore the cowl of a *Cistercian monk. Shortly afterwards he opened his long-delayed offensive against the Lombard communes, and the inevitable and final breach with the Papacy followed. Gregory IX again excommunicated Frederick and released his subjects from obedience to him on 20 March 1239. Although Frederick was subsequently able to secure the election of *Innocent IV in 1243, Innocent at the General Council of *Lyons on 17 July 1245 declared Frederick guilty of *heresy and *sacrilege and deposed him from both the emperorship and the Sicilian kingship. Frederick's propaganda yielded nothing to the Papacy's in grandeur of style and struck a new note of warning against the curia's greed and ambition. His emperorship became increasingly messianic and eschatological, while his enemies branded him as *antichrist. The military strength of the anti-imperial cities and conspiracy and treachery in his entourage exposed the narrow base of his regime and its ruthless fiscal severity in the south, but when he died at Castel Fiorentino in 1250 the conflict was not yet clearly decided in Italy or in Germany. Frederick could charm and dazzle, but suspicion, pride, and obstinacy marred his judgement. An accomplished linguist, fluent in Arabic and interested in the sciences no less than the occult, he transcended the conventions of W. Christian kingship, not always to his advantage. He has been wrongly hailed as the prophet, if not the founder, of the modern state. His actions and the rhetoric of his chancery only took the ideas of sacred emperorship to their furthest limits. They remained unfulfilled, but neither the culture of his court nor the tenor of his anti-papal propaganda perished with him.

Principal official docs. pr. in J. L. A. Huillard-Bréholles (ed.), Historia Diplomatica Friderici Secundi (6 vols. in 11, Paris, 1852–61, with important introd. in prefatory vol., ibid., 1859). E. Winkelmann, Kaiser Friedrich II. (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 2 vols. [1218–33]; 1889–97). H. Conrad and others (eds.), Die Konstitutionen Friedrichs II. von Hohenstaufen für sein Königreich Sizilien (Studien und Quellen zur Welt Kaiser Friedrichs II., 2; 1973); H. Dilcher, Die Sizilische Gesetzgebung Kaiser Friedrichs II.: Quellen der Constitutionen von Melfi und ihrer Novellen (ibid. 3; 1975). The standard modern work, despite its visionary and transcendent cast, is the Life by E. Kantorowicz (Berlin, 1927; suppl. vol., 1931; Eng. tr., 1931). In Eng. there is also a modern study by T. C. van Cleve (Oxford, 1972). Other studies include those of 'Georgina Masson' [Marion Johnson] (London, 1957), H. M. Schäller (Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, 34; 1964), and S. Abulafia (London, 1988). A collection of papers pub. 1939–1965, ed. G. Wolf, Stupor Mundi: Zur Geschichte Friedrichs II. von Hohenstaufen (Wege der Forschung, 101; Darmstadt, 1966); J. Fleckenstein (ed.), Probleme um Friedrich II. (Studien und Quellen zur Welt Kaiser Friedrichs II., 4; 1974). N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (rev. edn., 1970), pp. 108–126. K. J. Leyser, Medieval Germany and its Neighbours 900–1256 (1982), pp. 269–76. Id., 'Frederick Barbarossa and the Hohenstaufen Polity', Viator, 19 (1988), pp. 153–76, repr. in id., Communications and Power in Medieval Europe: The Gregorian Revolution and Beyond, ed. T. Reuter (1994), pp. 115–42, with other relevant material, pp. 143–55. C. A. Willemsen, Bibliographie zur Geschichte Kaiser Friedrichs II. und der letzten Staufer (MGH, Hilfsmittel, 8; 1986). See also bibl. to CRUSADES.

Frederick III (1463–1525), Elector of Saxony, surnamed 'the Wise' (not be confused with Frederick II (1482–1556), Elector of the Palatinate, also known as 'the Wise'). Succeeding his father Ernst as Elector in 1486, from the outset Frederick was interested in humanist education and Church reform. In 1502 he founded the University of *Wittenberg and later invited M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon to teach there. When Luther was cited to Rome in 1518, Frederick's attempts to have the matter settled in Germany led to Luther's interview with Card. T. de V. *Cajetan at Augsburg later that year and to C. von *Miltitz's mission to Saxony. Frederick consistently sought to protect Luther, refusing to implement the bull '*Exsurge Domine' in 1520 and arranging safe custody for him at the *Wartburg after the Diet of *Worms had outlawed him in 1521. How far he himself accepted Lutheran doctrine is disputed. A devout Catholic in his earlier years, he supported Luther and permitted Lutheran changes in Wittenberg. Yet, while he acceded to Luther's request to abandon the annual display of his collection of relics (one of the largest collections in Europe), he could not bring himself to part with them, and he protested against the iconoclastic tendencies of some of Luther's followers. See also SPALATIN, GEORG.

G. Spalatin's historischer Nachlass und Briefe: Aus dem Originalhandschriften hrsg. von C. G. Neudecker and L. Preller, 1: Friedrichs des Weisen Leben und Zeitgeschichte (1851). I. Ludolphy, Friedrich der Weise, Kürfürst von Sachsen, 1463–1525 (Göttingen [1984]), with extensive bibl. P. Kirn, Friedrich der Weise und die Kirche (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, 30; 1926). I. Ludolphy in TRE 11 (1983), pp. 666–9, s.v. 'Friedrich der Weise', with extensive bibl.

Frederick III (1515–76), Elector Palatine of the Rhine, surnamed 'the Pious'. Through his wife Maria (d. 1567), the daughter of Casimir of Bayreuth, whom he married in 1537, Frederick became well disposed towards the Reformation, though she was more inclined to *Lutheranism, he to *Calvinism. In 1559 he succeeded to the Electorate. At first he sought to compromise between Calvinism and Lutheranism, but from the start he favoured the Reformed wing, and in 1563 his publication of the *Heidelberg Catechism put the Palatinate firmly in the Calvinist camp. He welcomed Calvinist refugees from *France and the *Netherlands, and supplied aid to the Calvinist rebels in those countries. He also supported Calvinism in many parts of Germany outside his own lands, and constantly intrigued against the Catholic princes to secure the abrogation of the 'ecclesiastical reservation' in the 1555 Peace of *Augsburg. His son, Louis VI, who succeeded him in 1576, abandoned Calvinism for Lutheranism; on his death in 1583, policy was reversed again by Frederick's second son, John Casimir, who restored Calvinism and brought up in that faith his young nephew Frederick IV, in whose name he ruled until his own death in 1594.

Letters ed. A. Kluckhohn (2 vols. in 3, Brunswick, 1868–72); id., Friedrich der Fromme, Kurfürst von der Pfalz, der Schützer der reformirten Kirche, 1559–1576 (Nördlingen, 1879). D. Visser (ed.), Controversy and Conciliation: The Reformation and the Palatinate 1559–1583 (Pittsburg Theological Monographs, NS 18; Allison Park, Pa., 1986). [W.] O. Chadwick, 'The Making of a Reforming Prince: Frederick III, Elector Palatinate', in R. B. Knox (ed.), Reformation, Conformity and Dissent: Essays in Honour of Geoffrey Nuttall (1977), pp. 44–69. H. J. Cohn, 'The Territorial Princes in Germany's Second Reformation, 1559–1622', in M. Prestwich (ed.), International Calvinism 1541–1715 (Oxford, 1985), pp. 135–65, esp. pp. 148–54. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 3 (1936), pp. 376–8 (nos. 32124–48).

Free Church Federal Council. Following a congress in Manchester in 1892 a National Free Church Council was formed to which was affiliated a loose network of local councils. Membership was not grounded on any representative principle and the annual assembly dealt with a wide range of public questions as well as theological and ecclesiastical matters. Hugh Price *Hughes, a *Methodist, and John *Clifford, a *Baptist, played notable parts in the movement. In 1919, under the leadership of J. H. *Shakespeare of the Baptist Union, the Federal Council of Evangelical Free Churches was organized. There was a declaratory statement of common faith and practice, which excluded *Unitarians, and membership was put on an officially approved representative basis. In 1940 the National Free Church Council united with the Federal Council in the Free Church Federal Council. The National Free Church Women's Council has now also been amalgamated. The present body brings together 18 Free Church Denominations or Councils for common thought and action, and seeks to offer to the wider ecumenical life of the Churches a distinctive Free Church contribution.

E. K. H. Jordan, Free Church Unity: History of the Free Church Council Movement 1896–1941 (1956). J. Munson, The Nonconformists (1991), pp. 157–84.

Free Church of England. A small Protestant body which traces its beginnings to a dispute in 1843 between H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of *Exeter, and one of his clergy, James Shore, in charge of Bridgetown chapel-of-ease, Totnes. Shore's cause was taken up by T. E. Thoresby (d. 1883), a Minister of the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion, and eventually in 1863 the Free Church of England received definite shape in association with the latter. It accepted the *Thirty-Nine Articles and recognized the legitimacy of episcopacy, though its ministry at first was presbyterian. Later in the century it became affiliated to a similar group, which had separated in 1873 from the Protestant Episcopal (Anglican) Church in USA under G. D. Cummins, formerly Assistant Bp. of Kentucky, and known as the 'Reformed Episcopal Church'. This association enabled the English body to obtain episcopal orders. In 1927 the two bodies were legally united.

F. Vaughan [Bishop Primus], A History of the Free Church of England, otherwise called the Reformed Episcopal Church (Bath [1938]; 2nd edn. [Wallasey], 1960). G. H. Jones in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 629–31, with bibl., p. 632, s.v. 'Reformed Episcopal Church'.

Free Church of Scotland. The religious body formed at the *Disruption (1843) by the separation of nearly a third of the ministers and members of the established Church of *Scotland. In 1900 it united with the *United Presbyterian Church to form the *United Free Church (q.v.).

Free Churches. See NONCONFORMITY.

Free from Rome Movement. See LOS VON ROM.

Free Spirit, Brethren of the. See BRETHREN OF THE FREE SPIRIT.

Freemasonry, Christianity and. The origins of the Freemasons go back probably to the 12th cent., when the English masons established a religious fraternity under the protection of St *John the Baptist, to guard the secrets of their craft. In the later Middle Ages this brotherhood came to be concerned almost exclusively with the moral and religious education of its members. It was abolished by *Edward VI in 1547, but later reorganized for social and educational purposes, and in the 18th cent. became a stronghold of *Deism. Freemasonry spread from England to many other countries. In France, Italy, and the other Latin countries the Masonic Lodges were openly hostile to the Church and to religion in general, whereas in England, Germany, and the Germanic countries they professed for the most part an undoctrinal Christianity. The hostility of Latin Freemasonry to religion led to its repeated condemnation by the Church and the prohibition of membership by RCs under pain of excommunication. The subject was dealt with by many Popes, among them Clement XII (1738), *Benedict XIV (1751), *Pius VII (1814), *Pius IX (1864), and *Leo XIII (1884), and acc. to the 1917 Code of Canon Law (CIC (1917), can. 2335) Freemasons automatically incurred excommunication reserved to the Holy See. The 1983 Code makes no specific mention of Freemasonry, but on 26 Nov. 1983 the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith declared that membership of Masonic associations was still forbidden to RCs on pain of being in grave sin and of exclusion from Holy Communion. In Great Britain as well as in the USA Freemasonry, though undogmatic, demands belief in God from its members and is not hostile to religion as such. It is concerned chiefly with philanthropic and social activities and has the support of royalty and the nobility, many of whom it counts among its members. Members of the E. Orthodox Church are forbidden to become Freemasons under pain of excommunication.

Freer Logion. A passage added to the text of Mk. 16: 14 in the 5th-cent. Greek Codex 'W' (now in the Freer Museum at Washington) which includes a saying attributed to the Risen Christ. In response to a plea that He should reveal His righteousness, He is reported as saying: 'The limit of the years of the power of Satan is fulfilled; but other fearful things draw near even upon them for whom, because they had sinned, I was delivered unto death that they may return unto the truth and sin no more; that they may inherit the spiritual and incorruptible glory of righteousness in heaven. But go ye into all the world', etc. [as in Mk. 16: 15]. Though the saying forms no part of the original text, as the whole of Mk. 16: 9–20 is a later addition to the gospel, its language is in agreement with its context, and it may well be of the same provenance and date. It appears to have been known to St *Jerome.

Text in H. A. Sanders, The Washington Manuscript of the Four Gospels (University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series, 9; 1912), p. 246; repr. in V. Taylor, The Gospel According to St Mark freewill offerings. In ancient *Israel's sacrificial system, one of the three forms of peace offering (Lev. 7: 11–18) was so named because it went beyond what legal demands required. It resembled the 'votive offering' in being made in connection with a prayer for particular blessings, but differed in being offered whether the blessing was granted or not. The Feast of *Weeks was customarily accompanied by such a freewill offering (Deut. 16: 10). In modern times the term has been applied to a method of Church finance whereby members of the congregation agree to pay regular contributions to a 'freewill offering fund' over and above, or in place of, the usual collections made in times of Divine service.

(1952), with Eng. tr., pp. 614 f.; Eng. tr. also in Schneemelcher (5th edn.), 1 (Eng. tr., 1991), pp. 248 f. C. R. Gregory, Das Freer Logion (Versuche und Entwürfe, 1; 1908).

Freewillers. A small group of religious radicals who were active in SE England from the 1540s to the 1560s. Led by one Henry Hart or Harte (d. by 1557), they resisted the growing trend of English Protestant thought towards *predestination, proclaimed the importance of human free will in gaining salvation, and advocated religious *toleration. Persecuted by *Mary and opposed by other Protestants, notably J. *Bradford, they dispersed and have no traceable links with the later English *Arminians.

J. W. Martin, 'English Protestant Separatism at its Beginnings: Henry Hart and the Free-Will Men', Sixteenth-Century Journal, 7, no. 2 (1976), pp. 55–74; id., 'The First that Made Separation from the Reformed Church of England', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 77 (1986), pp. 281–312. M. T. Pearse, 'Free Will, Dissent, and Henry Hart', Church History, 58 (1989), pp. 452–9. D. A. Penny, Freewill or Predestination: The Battle over Saving Grace in mid-Tudor England (Royal Historical Society Studies in History, 61; 1990).

French Protestants. See HUGUENOTS.

frequency of Communion. See COMMUNION, FREQUENCY OF.

Frere, Walter Howard (1863–1938), Bp. of *Truro. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and Wells Theological College, he was ordained in 1887. He was a *High Churchman, and in 1892 joined the *Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield, of which he was Superior from 1902 to 1913, and again from 1916 to 1922. In 1923 he became Bp. of Truro. He was a leading authority on liturgical matters, and, in matters of practice, an advocate of 'English' rather than 'Roman' forms of ceremonial. His writings in this field include The Use of Sarum (2 vols., 1898, 1901); A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (based on F. Procter's earlier work; 1901); and The Principles of Religious Ceremonial (1906). He was also actively interested in promoting the reunion of Christendom, esp. between the Anglican and E. Orthodox Churches; and he took part in the *Malines Conversations. In 1935 he resigned the see of Truro and ended his life at Mirfield.

J. H. Arnold and E. G. P. Wyatt (eds.), Walter Howard Frere: A Collection of his Papers on Liturgical and Historical Subjects (*Alcuin Club Collections, 35; 1940); R. C. D. Jasper (ed.), Walter Howard Frere: His Correspondence on Liturgical Revision and Reconstruction (ibid. 39; 1954). Memoir ed. C. S. Phillips (London, 1947). A. Wilkinson, The Community of the Resurrection (1992), passim. A. H. Thompson in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 296 f.

friar. The popular title of a brother (frater) or member of one of the Mendicant Orders founded during the Middle Ages. The Latin frater was originally used for all religious, but as the Mendicant Orders dropped other terms, such as dominus and monachus, frater or 'friar' came to designate their members in particular. In England these orders were chiefly distinguished by the colours of their mantles, the four chief being the 'Grey Friars' (*Franciscans), the 'Black Friars' (*Dominicans), the 'White Friars' (*Carmelites), and the '*Augustinian Friars'. Among others were the 'Trinity' or 'Red Friars', and the '*Crutched' or 'Crossed Friars'.

Friday (Old Engl. frigedæg, 'day of [the goddess] Frig', the wife of Odin). In the Christian Church, Friday is widely kept as a weekly commemoration of the Passion of Christ, being traditionally observed by *abstinence from meat (*Christmas Day, if it falls on a Friday, is excepted by the rubrics of the BCP, and, in the RC Church, certain other great festivals also) or by other acts of penitence or charity. The *Wednesday and Friday fasts were probably derived from the Jewish bi-weekly fast. The primitive practice was to keep a complete fast until 3 p.m., when a service took place, which in some places was the *Eucharist, and elsewhere in essentials an *Ante-Communion. Friday is the Muslim sabbath, in commemoration of the creation of *Adam on this day (Gen. 1: 24–31). See also FIRST FRIDAYS, GOOD FRIDAY, and PAENITEMINI.

Early refs. to the observance of Friday in Didache*, 8. 1, and *Hermas, Simil. 5. 1. For the Friday abstinence, see CIC (1983), cans. 1250–53. G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 11; 1959), pp. 168–206.

Fridays, First. See FIRST FRIDAYS.

Frideswide, St (d. traditionally 735, but 727 acc. to the oldest source), patron saint of the city and University of *Oxford. The little that is known of her depends on a brief account by *William of Malmesbury and two 12th-cent. Lives. Acc. to the oldest of these, she was the daughter of Didanus, 'King of Oxford'; she was consecrated a virgin and became the first abbess of a convent founded by her father in Oxford. Sought in marriage by Algar, 'King of Leciester', the Life reports that she was transported miraculously to Bampton, Oxon, where she hid for three years; Algar meanwhile tried to enter Oxford, but was struck dead at the town gate. Frideswide also spent some time in retreat at Binsey, near Oxford, where a holy well appeared in answer to her prayers. She returned to Oxford before her death. A monastery bearing her name and occupied by secular canons is known to have existed in Oxford in 1002. Its occupants were succeeded by *Augustinian Canons in or before 1122. Her relics were translated on 12 Feb. 1180 and again in 1289; the shrine became a place of pilgrimage until its spoliation in 1538. Twice a year it was solemnly visited by the University and in 1434 Abp. H. *Chichele ordered her feast (19 Oct.) to be observed as that of the patroness of the University. In 1525 St Frideswide's monastery was suppressed by T. *Wolsey as part of his plan for Cardinal College; and in 1546 the monastic church became the cathedral of the new diocese of Oxford. In 1561 the relics of St Frideswide were mixed by J. *Calfhill with the remains of the wife of *Peter Martyr (Vermigli) which had been buried in the cathedral under *Edward VI. Her festival was abolished in 1549, but it appears in the Latin BCP of 1560 and in the Oxford University Calendar. A service attended by University and civic dignitaries is held on or near 19 Oct.

AASS, Oct. 8 (1853), pp. 533–90. F. M. Stenton, 'St Frideswide and her Times', Oxoniensia, 1 (1936), pp. 103–12; repr. in Preparatory to Anglo-Saxon England, ed. D. M. Stenton (Oxford, 1970), pp. 224–33; J. Blair, 'Saint Frideswide Reconsidered', Oxoniensia, 52 (1987), pp. 71–127. Id. (ed.), 'Saint Frideswide's Monastery at Oxford: Archaeological and Architectural Studies', ibid. 53 (1988), pp. 1–275, repr. separately, Gloucester, 1990. The Cartulary of the Monastery of St Frideswide at Oxford was ed. S. R. Wigram (Oxford Historical Society, 28 and 31; 1895–6).

Friedrich. See also FREDERICK.

Friedrich, Johannes (1836–1917), Church historian. Born at Poxdorf in Upper Franconia, he was educated at Bamberg and Munich, and taught at Munich from 1862. He soon gained a great reputation for sound historical judgement and in 1869 J. A. Hohenlohe (1823–96), Abp. of Ephesus (in partibus) and afterwards (1876) Cardinal, a leading German prelate, took him as his secretary to Rome for the First *Vatican Council. He joined his former mentor J. J. I. von *Döllinger (to whom he sent much of the material for *Quirinus's Letters from Rome) and others in resisting the definition of Papal Infallibility, believing it to be historically indefensible. He left Rome before the Council ended, but he refused to accept the decrees and in April 1871 he was excommunicated. The Bavarian Government offered him protection and in 1872 he was nominated professor of church history at Munich. He was at first a leading member of the *Old Catholic communion in Germany, but withdrew when it ceased to uphold clerical celibacy. His writings, which were many, include Johann Wessel (1862); Die Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands (2 vols., 1867–9); Tagebuch während des vatikanischen Concils (1871), followed by a Verteidigung (1872); a large-scale Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils (3 vols., 1877–87); Beiträge zur Geschichte des Jesuitenordens (1881); *Johann Adam Möhler (1894); and Ignaz von Döllinger (3 vols., 1899–1901).

F. Hacker, 'Johannes Friedrich als Führer der altkatholischen Bewegung', Internationale kirchliche Zeitschrift, 8 (1918), pp. 252–74.

Friends, Society of, commonly known as *Quakers (q.v.). A body with Christian foundations, originally called 'Children of the Light', 'Friends in the Truth', 'Friends of the Truth', or 'Friends'. The present official title, 'Religious Society of Friends', came into general use in the 19th cent.; in some parts of the USA the style 'Friends' Church' has been employed since the late 19th cent.

The Quaker movement arose out of the religious ferment of the mid-17th cent. G. *Fox, its leader, emphasized the immediacy of Christ's teaching within each person and held that to this ordained ministers and consecrated buildings were irrelevant. By 1655, when Quakers were mentioned in a proclamation of O. *Cromwell, they had spread throughout Britain and Ireland and to the Continent of Europe, and in 1682 W. *Penn founded Pennsylvania as a 'Holy Experiment' on Quaker principles. In their meetings Friends waited silently upon the Lord without a pre-arranged order of worship, believing that God would use any one of those present, man or woman, to minister. Their refusal to take *oaths or pay *tithes, or to accept any authority which they felt conflicted with their inner guidance, and their testimony against 'hat honour' and flattery of language and manner, led to persecution under the Commonwealth, intensified after the Restoration (1660). Over 20,000 of them were fined or imprisoned, and at least 450 died in gaol, before the *Toleration Act 1688 ended widespread persecution.

During the 18th cent. Quakerism was influenced by *Quietism, and in the 19th cent. by the *Evangelical Movement, both in Britain and in the USA. In America a split occurred in 1827–8 as a result of the teaching of E. *Hicks, whose emphasis on 'Christ within' seemed to undervalue the authority of Scripture and the historic Christ. Beginning in 1845 there were further secessions by conservative groups maintaining mystical emphases and stressing the traditional 'plainness of speech, behaviour and apparel'. In Britain there were three minor secessions: that following the evangelical 'Beacon' controversy of the 1830s, so named from the book, A Beacon to the Society of Friends (1835) by Isaac Crewdson (1780–1844), which criticized Hicks's views, and those of the conservative Fritchley Friends and a small group of 'rationalist' Friends in Manchester, both by the early 1870s.

Between 1667 and 1671 Fox, with other Friends, established a series of Meetings for Church Affairs. The primary meeting was, and still is, the Monthly Meeting, in Britain covering several congregations which may have Preparatory Meetings. Monthly Meetings were grouped into Quarterly Meetings, covering larger areas, and in 1668 a Yearly Meeting was established for the whole of Britain. The Monthly Meeting still retains its central position, with responsibility for membership, pastoral care, and matters of discipline. In Britain General Meetings have now replaced Quarterly Meetings. Each of the world's Yearly Meetings is autonomous, but through the Friends World Committee for Consultation (established in 1937), all Quakers have opportunities to reach a better understanding of their varying backgrounds. In 1675 the London Yearly Meeting established a Meeting for Sufferings, primarily to consider ways of securing redress from persecution and other sufferings. This still meets regularly as a standing representative committee entrusted between Yearly Meetings with the care of matters affecting the Society in Britain. In other Yearly Meetings the titles Representative Meeting or Permanent Board are generally used for similar bodies.

The religious tenets of 17th-cent. Friends are set out in the classic work of R. *Barclay, Theologiae Verae Christiana Apologia (1676). Modern Friends continue to affirm their belief in the *Inner (or Inward) Light and the direct experience of God's Spirit, guiding, saving, and empowering them for action as well as growth. Like Barclay, they value the Bible, but regard it as 'a secondary rule subordinate to the Spirit'. Relying on the leadings of the Spirit, they have no set liturgy or creeds, and, believing that all life can be sacramental, they have no *Sacraments as such, though they believe in a spiritual baptism and communion. There is no ordained ministry in the Society and all members are encouraged to contribute to the Meeting according to their gifts, but certain officers accept specific duties for limited periods. 'Elders' are responsible for the nurture of the spiritual life of the Meeting and 'overseers' for the pastoral care of its members. In their Meetings for Church Affairs, Friends seek to discern God's will, and the 'clerk' records the 'sense of the Meeting'; no decision is taken by voting. The Society's discipline, corporately agreed by the members, is recorded in a Book of Discipline, which is regularly revised. In parts of the USA silent worship with spontaneous ministry has been replaced by prearranged forms, often led by a paid pastor. Such structured worship is also found in other parts of the world where Friends have had missions.

Friends' opposition to oaths and military service early brought them into conflict with the civil authorities, and during the 20th cent. many have been imprisoned for their witness against war. Until the middle of the 19th cent., like other Nonconformists, they were excluded from the universities in England, and many sought to express their convictions in commerce, industry, and banking. Friends have become widely known for their commitment to social and educational progress, penal reform, the promotion of peace and justice, and, esp. in the 20th cent., international relief. In 1947 the Nobel Peace Prize was given jointly to the (British and Irish) Friends Service Council and the American Friends Service Committee. The Friends World Committee for Consultation is recognized as a non-governmental organization with consultant status at the United Nations, and Friends have established a Quaker Council for European Affairs in Brussels. They are involved in the *Ecumenical Movement and work closely with members of other Churches and faiths. Their former attitude to music and the theatre has changed considerably and many Quakers are now enthusiastic supporters of the arts.

Besides Barclay's Apology (see above) the classic work on the Society of Friends is W. Sewel, The History of the Rise, Increase, and Progress of the Christian People called Quakers (1722; his own Eng. tr. of a work orig. pub. in Dutch, 1717). W. C. Braithwaite, The Beginnings of Quakerism (1912; 2nd edn. by H. J. *Cadbury, Cambridge, 1955); id., The Second Period of Quakerism (1919; 2nd edn. by H. J. Cadbury, Cambridge, 1961); R. M. Jones, The Later Periods of Quakerism (2 vols., 1921); A. N. Brayshaw, The Quakers (1921; 3rd edn., 1938); R. M. Jones, The Faith and Practice of the Quakers (1927); E. Russell, The History of Quakerism (New York, 1943, repr., Richmond, Ind., 1979); H. Brinton, Friends for 300 Years (New York [1952]; London, 1953); E. Vipont, The Story of Quakerism (1954; repr., with additional chapter, Richmond, Ind., 1977); J. Sykes, The Quakers: A New Look at their Place in Society (1958); J. Punshon, Portrait in Grey: A Short History of the Quakers (1984); H. Barbour and J. W. Frost, The Quakers (New York, etc., 1988). H. Barbour, The Quakers in Puritan England (1964); E. Isichei, Victorian Quakers (Oxford, 1970); J. O. Greenwood, Quaker Encounters (3 vols., York, 1975–8); R. Bauman, Let your Words Be Few: Symbolism of Speaking and Silence among Seventeenth-Century Quakers (Cambridge Studies in Oral and Literate Cultures, 8; 1983); M. J. Sheeran, SJ, Beyond Majority Rule: Voteless Decisions in the Religious Society of Friends (Philadelphia [1983]). Journal of the Friends' Historical Society (1903 ff.); Bulletin of the Friends Historical Society (later Association; then Quaker History) (Philadelphia, 1906 ff.).

Friends of Cathedrals. See CATHEDRALS, FRIENDS OF.

Friends of God. See GOTTESFREUNDE.

Frith, John (*c.*1503–33), Protestant martyr. He was educated at Eton and graduated from King's College, Cambridge. In 1525 T. *Wolsey made him a junior canon of his newly founded 'Cardinal College' (Christ Church), Oxford. In 1528 he was imprisoned for heresy, but escaped to the Continent, where he assisted W. *Tyndale with his work on the Bible. On his return in 1532 he was arrested, and after a book of his on the Eucharist (written for a friend and not intended for publication) had come into the hands of T. *More, he was condemned to death for denying that *purgatory and *transubstantiation were necessary dogmas, and burned at Smithfield on 4 July 1533. Ostensibly at Marburg, but in fact at Antwerp, he had published A Pistle to the Christen Reader: Antithesis wherein are compared together Christ's Acts and our Holy Father the Pope's (1529) and A Disputation of Purgatory (1531).

The Whole Works of W. Tyndall, John Frith and Doct. Barnes, ed. by J. *Foxe ('1572'), incl. short Life (separately paginated). Frith's Works, largely reproduced from the edn. of T. Russell (London, 1831), with variants noted at the foot of each page, and other primary material, ed., with full introd., by N. T. Wright (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 7; copyright, 1978 [pub. 1983]). W. A. Clebsch, England's Earliest Protestants 1520–1535 (Yale Publications in Religion, 11; 1964), pp. 78–136; C. R. Trueman, Luther's Legacy: Salvation and English Reformers, 1525–1556 (Oxford, 1994), esp. pp. 121–55. BRUO 1501–1540, pp. 218–20. A. C. Bickley in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 278–80.

Froben, Johann (*c.*1460–1527), 'Frobenius', printer and scholar. A native of Hammelburg, Bavaria, Froben started a press in Basle in 1491. After working in close association with Johannes Amerbach (1443–1513) and Johannes Petri (d. 1512), Froben started publishing on his own account in 1512. His press was renowned throughout Europe for the excellent quality of its type and high standards of scholarship and accuracy. *Erasmus moved into his house *c.*1513 and prepared a long series of editions for his press, the most famous being the editio princeps of the Greek NT (1516). Among the Church Fathers whose works Erasmus edited through Froben were *Jerome (1516), *Cyprian (1520), and *Hilary of Poitiers (1523). After Froben had issued some of M. *Luther's Latin writings in 1518, he published nothing further by any of the authors of the Protestant Reformation. After his death the press was carried on by his son, Jerome Froben, and his son-in-law, Nicolaus Episcopius.

Various of his letters are pr. among the correspondence of Erasmus, ed. P. S. Allen (11 vols., Oxford, 1906–47; for details see index vol., 1958) and in Die Amerbachkorrespondenz, ed. A. Hartmann, vols. 1–3 (Basle, 1942–7). I. Stockmeyer and B. Reber, Beiträge zur Basler Buchdruckergeschichte (1840), pp. 85–115, incl. list of books pub. by him. P. S. Allen, 'Erasmus' Relations with his Printers', Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, 13 (1916), pp. 297–321, repr. in id., Erasmus: Lectures and Wayfaring Sketches (Oxford, 1934), pp. 109–37. E. Hilgert, 'Johann Froben and the Basel University Scholars, 1513–1523', Library Quarterly, 41 (1971), pp. 141–69. P. G. Bietenholz in id. and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 (Toronto, etc. [1986]), pp. 60–3, with bibl. A. Pfister in Neue Deutsche Biographie, 5 (1960), pp. 638–40.

Froissart, Jean (*c.*1335–*c.*1404), French chronicler. He was a native of Valenciennes, and at an early age visited the English court, whither he returned in 1361. The consort of Edward III, Philippa of Hainault, became his benefactress, and he travelled to Scotland, Gascony, and Milan. He returned to Hainault in 1368. From 1373 to 1382 he was parish priest at Lestinnes-au-Mont, and from 1382 until his death private chaplain of Guy de Châtillon, Count of Blois, and canon of Chimay. These offices, however, did not prevent him from undertaking lengthy journeys over much of Europe collecting first-hand information for his work. These famous 'Chroniques' relate in four books the history of the more considerable European countries between 1325 and 1401, most of it being based on eye-witness accounts. The work presents a remarkably lively picture of the times of the Hundred Years War, though it is unreliable in chronological and geographical details. Up to 1361 much of it is derived from a similar work by Jean le Bel, a canon of St-Lambert, Liège. Froissart also wrote poems of love and adventure in the style of his time.

Œuvres de Froissart: Chroniques ed. Baron [J.] Kervyn de Lettenhove (25 vols. in 26 parts, Brussels, 1867–77, with rev. edn. of id., Froissart: Étude littéraire sur le XIVme siècle (2 vols. bound in one, 1857) in vol. 1) and Poésies ed. A. Scheler (3 vols., ibid., 1870–72). Best edn. of the Chroniques, pub. by the Société de l'Histoire de France, ed. S. Luce, G. Raynaud, L. and A. Mirot (1869 ff.: 15 vols. to 1975). Eng. tr. by Sir John Berners (London, 1523), ed. W. P. Ker (6 vols., 1901–3). Eng. tr. of selected passages by G. Brereton (Penguin Classics, 1968). F. S. Shears, Froissart: Chronicler and Poet (1930); G. G. Coulton, The Chronicler of European Chivalry (1930); J. J. N. Palmer (ed.), Froissart: Historian (Woodbridge, Suffolk [1981]); P. F. Ainsworth, Jean Froissart and the Fabric of History: Truth, Myth, and Fiction in the Chroniques (Oxford, 1990).

frontal (Lat. antependium, pallium altaris). The panel of embroidered cloth, or in some cases of wood or metal, ornamented with carving or enamel, placed in front of the altar. It is most usual for the frontal to be changeable, and its colour to agree with the liturgical colour of the season or day; and a *rubric in the 1570 *Missal ordered this practice to be followed 'where possible' (quoad fieri potest; Rubr. Gen. 20). There is no ruling on the subject in the 1970 Missal. The Anglican Canons of 1604 ordered that the Lord's Table should be 'covered, in time of Divine Service, with a carpet of silk or other decent stuff, thought meet by the Ordinary of the place' (can. 82); the requirement is repeated in the 1969 Canons (F 2).

Froude, Richard Hurrell (1803–36), *Tractarian. The elder brother of James Anthony Froude, the historian, he was educated at Eton and Oriel College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow (1826) and shortly afterwards (1827) a tutor, of his college. Intimacy with his colleague, J. H. *Newman, greatly influenced both. After travels with Newman in the Mediterranean in the winter of 1832–3, he took part in the conference on Church reform at Hadleigh Rectory (July 1833), and collaborated closely with Newman and J. *Keble in the early stages of the Tractarian Movement, though symptoms of consumption caused him to spend much of his remaining years out of England. His Remains, which were edited posthumously, with a preface by Newman (part 1, 2 vols., 1838; part 2, 2 vols., 1839), and which were largely extracts from his private diary, provoked a storm. His strictures on the Reformers, the more exaggerated of them written half jestingly, were thought disloyal by those who had not known Froude personally, while the records of his spiritual and ascetic practices, which even his close friends had not suspected to lie behind his handsome appearance and lively manner, and his praise of clerical celibacy and devotion to the BVM, startled his readers.

The primary source is his Remains, referred to above. J. H. Newman, Apologia pro Vita Sua (ed. M. J. Svaglic, Oxford, 1967, pp. 33–5). R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1891), ch. 3 (with some recollections by Lord Blachford appended, pp. 50–56). L. I. Guiney, Hurrell Froude: Memorials and Comments (1904). W. J. Baker, 'Hurrell Froude and the Reformers', JEH 31 (1970), pp. 243–59. P. Brendon, Hurrell Froude and the Oxford Movement (1974). P. Gauthier, La Pensée religieuse de Richard Hurrell Froude, 1803–1836 [1977].

Fructuosus, St (d. 259), Bp. of Tarragona. With two deacons, Augurius and Eulogius, he was arrested in the *persecution under Valerian and burnt at the stake in the amphitheatre. The acta of his passion seem certainly authentic. His martyrdom is referred to by *Prudentius (Peristephanon, hymn 6) and St *Augustine (serm. 273). Feast day, 21 Jan.

AASS, Jan. 2 (1643), pp. 339–42. P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 8 (ST 65; 1935), 'Gli atti di S. Fruttuoso di Tarragona', pp. 127–99, incl. text, pp. 182–94; this text is adapted, with Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 176–85. J. den Boeft and J. Bremmer, 'Notiunculae Martyrologicae', VC 35 (1981), pp. 43–56, esp. pp. 49–52.

Fruits of the Holy Spirit. These, based on Gal. 5: 22 f. (AV, RV), are 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance', to which the *Vulgate text adds 'modesty, continence, chastity', making 12 in all. That the correct number of the fruits is 12 is defended on theological grounds by St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. II. 1, q. 70, a. 3.

A. Gardeil, OP, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 944–9; C. A. Bernard, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1569–75, both s.v. 'Fruits du Saint-Esprit'.

Frumentius, St (*c.*300–*c.*380), 'Apostle of the Abyssinians'. Acc. to *Rufinus (HE 1. 9 f.), Aedesius and Frumentius were the two young companions of a Tyrian merchant, Meropius. After all three were captured by 'barbarians' on the way back from a voyage to 'India', Meropius was executed, but the other two, who were both Christians, were taken before their captors' king, whom they later assisted in the government of his country. Frumentius took advantage of the opportunity to carry on mission work, and on reporting the fruits of his work at *Alexandria, he was consecrated Bp. of *Axum by St *Athanasius (Apol. ad Constantium, 31). He appears to have been a strong opponent of *Arianism. Feast day, among the Greeks, 30 Nov.; among the *Copts, 18 Dec.; in the W., 27 Oct.

Frumentius is also mentioned in the 5th-cent. histories of *Socrates (1. 19), *Sozomen (2. 24), and *Theodoret (1. 22). F. Thelamon, Païens et Chrétiennes au IVe Siècle: L'apport de l' "Histoire ecclésiastique" de Rufin d'Aquilée (Études Augustiniennes, 1981), pp. 37–83. B. W. W. and F. A. Dombrowski, 'Frumentius/

Abbā Salāmā: zu den Nachrichten über die Anfänge des Christentums in Äthiopien', OC 68 (1984), pp. 114–69. J. Doresse in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1416–20, s.v. 'Edesius (2) et Frumentius' and ibid. 19 (1981), col. 242, s.v. 'Frumence', with bibl.

Fry, Elizabeth (1780–1845), *Quaker prison reformer. Born at Norwich, the third daughter of John Gurney, banker, in 1800 she married Joseph Fry, a London merchant and a 'Plain Quaker', by whom she had a large family. In 1808 she established a girls' school at Plashet, nr. East Ham. In 1811 she was recorded as an approved 'minister' in the Society of Friends and became a noted speaker. In 1813 her interest was aroused in the appalling state of the prisons and, at the instigation of William Forster (1784–1854) and Stephen Grellet (1773–1855), she devoted herself to the welfare of female prisoners in Newgate. Here her Bible readings made a deep impression. In 1817 she formed an Association for the Improvement of the Female Prisoners in Newgate 'to provide for the clothing, instruction, employment of the women; to introduce them to a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and to form in them as much as possible those habits of order, sobriety and industry which may render them docile and peaceable while in prison, and respectable when they leave it'. She also campaigned for the separation of the sexes in prison, classification of criminals, and female supervision of women, and in 1818 she gave evidence on the state of the prisons to a committee of the House of Commons. Between that time and her final illness in 1843 she visited every convict ship that carried women prisoners to the colonies. She also devoted herself to other classes of the helpless, taking part in the formation of a night shelter in London (1820) and instituting visiting societies in Brighton and elsewhere to deal with mendicancy. In her later years she travelled extensively in Europe, fostering prison reform. Behind all her philanthropic work there was a strong Christian impulse and she never ceased to combine it with active evangelization.

Her writings include Observations on the Visiting, Superintendence and Government of Female Prisoners (1827), Texts for Every Day in the Year (1831) and a report, issued jointly with her brother, J. J. Gurney, on Irish social conditions (1827). In 1846 an asylum was founded in her memory in Mare Street, Hackney, for women discharged from prison under the name of the 'Elizabeth Fry Refuge'.

Memoir, with extracts from her journal and letters, ed. by two of her daughters (2 vols., 1847; rev. and enlarged edn. 1848; abridged edn. by Mrs F. Cresswell, daughter, 1856). R. B. Johnson (ed.), Elizabeth Fry's Journeys on the Continent 1840–1841, from a Diary kept by her Niece, Elizabeth Gurney (1931). Other Lives by T. Timpson (London, 1847), S. Corder (ibid., 1853), J. Whitney (Boston, 1936; London, 1937), J. [H. S.] Kent (London, 1962), and J. Rose (ibid., 1980). W. G. Blaikie in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 294–6.

Fulbert, St (*c.*970–1028), scholar and Bp. of *Chartres. Born in N. France—perhaps in Picardy—he studied the liberal arts under Gerbert of Aurillac (later Pope *Sylvester II), probably at *Reims. By 1004 he was a deacon at Chartres cathedral and teaching in the cathedral school. As Bp. of Chartres (1006–28) Fulbert encouraged sound learning, advised both his metropolitan, Abp. Leutheric of Sens, and King Robert the Pious on practical and legal questions, and took diligent pastoral care of his diocese. He began the rebuilding of Chartres cathedral after the fire of 1020; the undercroft of the present building is Fulbert's work. His principal extant writing is a collection of over 100 letters and 24 poems; the former are concerned mainly with politics and administration, the latter range from schoolroom mnemonics and anecdotes to autobiography and prayers. Also attributed to Fulbert, with varying degrees of security, are a long prayer to the BVM, several Marial and other sermons, and further poems, including the Easter hymn, 'Chorus Novae Ierusalem' ('Ye choirs of New Jerusalem'). Feast day, 10 Apr.

Opera Varia ed. C. de Villiers (Paris, 1608); works repr. mainly from the 'Magna Bibliotheca Patrum' with additions and introd. notices in J. P. Migne, PL 141. 163–374. Crit. edns. of his Letters and Poems, with Eng. tr., by F. Behrends (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1976), and of his hymns by G. M. Dreves in AHMA 50 (1907), pp. 280–9. C. Pfister, De Fulberti Carnotensis Vita et Operibus (Paris thesis; Nancy, 1885). L. C. MacKinney, Bishop Fulbert and Education at the School of Chartres (Texts and Studies in the History of Mediaeval Education, 6; Notre Dame, Ind., 1957). Y. Delaporte, 'Fulbert de Chartres et l'École Chartraine de Chant liturgique au XI[e] siècle', Études grégoriennes, 2 (1957), pp. 51–81. J. M. Canal, CMF, 'Los sermones marianos de San Fulberto de Chartres († 1028)', RTAM 29 (1962), pp. 33–51; id., 'Texto critico de algunos sermones marianos de San Fulberto de Chartres o a él atribuibles', ibid. 30 (1963), pp. 55–87, with 'Adición', pp. 329–33; id., 'Los sermones marianos de san Fulberto de Chartres. Conclusión', ibid. 33 (1966), pp. 139–47. H. Barré, Prières anciennes de l'Occident à la Mère du Sauveur [1963], pp. 150–62. Manitius, 2, pp. 682–94. Raby, pp. 258–63, with bibl., p. 478. A. Clerval in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 964–7; F. Behrends in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 216 f., with illustration of contemporary MS, both s.v.

Fulda. The *Benedictine abbey of Fulda in Hesse Nassau was founded in 744 by St Sturmius, a disciple of St *Boniface, to assist missionary work among the Saxons. Boniface's tomb made it a great pilgrimage centre, and it became a rich and powerful corporation with lands all over Germany. Under *Rabanus Maurus (abbot, 822–42), it was one of the foremost centres of Christian culture in Europe. It possessed a very fine library, of great importance for the transmission of classical and patristic texts, which disappeared during the *Thirty Years War. In the 16th cent. the *Lutherans gained control for a time, but mainly through the work of the *Jesuits the abbey was again firmly established in Catholic hands shortly after the beginning of the 17th cent. In 1803 the abbey was finally secularized, but from 1821 Fulda has been an episcopal see.

Annales Fuldenses conveniently ed. F. Kurze (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum, 7; 1891). Urkundenbuch des Klosters Fulda, 1, ed. E. E. Stengel (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen und Waldeck, 10; 3 parts, 1913–58). Die Klostergemeinschaft von Fulda im früheren Mittelalter, ed. K. Schmid (Münsterische Mittelalter-Schriften, 8; 3 vols. in 5 parts; 1978); useful summary by M. Parisse, 'La communauté monastique de Fulda', Francia, 7 (for 1979; 1980), pp. 551–65. P. Lehmann, Fuldaer Studien (Sb. (Bayr.), 1925, Abh. 3, and 1927, Abh. 3); id., 'Die alte Klosterbibliothek Fulda und ihre Bedeutung', Aus der Landesbibliothek Fulda, 2 (1928), pp. 5–12, repr. in id., Erforschung des Mittelalters, 1 (Leipzig, 1941), pp. 213–31, with further refs. K. Christ, Die Bibliothek des Klosters Fulda im 16. Jahrhundert: Die Handschriften-Verzeichnisse (Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, Beiheft 64; 1933). K. Lübeck, Fuldaer Studien (Veröffentlichung des Fuldaer Geschichtsvereins, 27–9; 1949–51), and other works of this author. E. E. Stengel, Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Reichsabtei Fulda (Fulda, 1960). A. Brall (ed.), Von der Klosterbibliothek zur Landesbibliotek: Beiträge zum zweihundertjährigen Bestehen der Hessischen Landesbibliothek Fulda (Bibliothek des Buchwesens, 6; 1978), with bibl. H. Hoffmann, Buchkunst und Königtum im ottonischen und frühsalischen Reich (Schriften der MGH, 30/1; 1986), pp. 132–80. U. Hussong, 'Studien zur Geschichte der Reichsabtei Fulda bis zur Jahrtausendwende', Archiv für Diplomatik, 31 (1985), pp. 1–225; 32 (1986), pp. 129–304, with extensive bibl. J. Semmler in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 218–20; J. Leinweber and R. Aubert in DHGE 19 (1981), cols. 339–66; M. Sandmann in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 1020–2, all s.v.

Fulgentius, St (468–533 or perhaps, as recent scholars have argued, *c.*462–527), Bp. of Ruspe in N. Africa. He abandoned the Roman civil service for the monastic life, and suffered constant persecution from the *Arian king, Thrasamund. Soon after becoming Bp. of Ruspe *c.*507 (or 502), he was banished to Sardinia with 60 other Catholic bishops, returned to Africa *c.*515 (or 510) for a public debate with the Arian clergy, was banished again two years later, and finally allowed by King Hilderic to return in 523. This last date is fixed by the death of Thrasamund, and it is known that Fulgentius died at the age of 65, but the rest of the chronology of his life is disputed. It is, however, clear that he was of a scholarly disposition, that he knew some Greek, and that he was a thoroughgoing follower of St *Augustine. He wrote many treatises, of little originality, against Arianism and *Pelagianism. A few letters survive, but of the many sermons ascribed to him, about eight are certainly authentic. His Life was written by his friend *Ferrandus of Carthage. Feast day, 1 Jan.

Works ed. by the Maurist L. Mangeant (Paris, 1684) repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 65. 103–1020; crit. edn. by J. Fraipont, OSB (CCSL 91 and 91A; 1968). Life by Ferrandus ed., with Fr. tr., by G. G. Lapeyre (Paris, 1929). H.-J. Diesner, Fulgentius von Ruspe als Theologe und Kirchenpolitiker (Stuttgart [1966]). M. Simonetti, 'Note sulla "Vita Fulgentii" ', Anal. Boll. 100 (1982), pp. 277–89. C. Tibiletti, 'Polemiche in Africa contro i teologi provenzali', Augustinianum, 26 (1986), pp. 499–517. A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1 (1982), pp. 507–13. Bardenhewer, 5 (1932), pp. 303–16; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 489 f. and 655. P. Langlois in RAC 8 (1972), cols. 632–61, with extensive bibl.

Fulgentius Ferrandus. See FERRANDUS.

Fulke, William (1538–89), *Puritan theologian. He was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1564. He soon became involved in the *Vestiarian Controversy; indeed his zeal in persuading nearly 300 members of his college to abandon the use of the surplice in chapel led to his expulsion for a time. However, he benefited from the patronage of the Earl of Leicester, and, after receiving other preferment, he was elected Master of Pembroke Hall in 1578. He continued to take a prominent part in the Puritan cause and in 1581 disputed with the *Jesuit, St Edmund *Campion. His many treatises in defence of extreme Protestant principles were learned and effective, though their language was often coarse and virulent. By a strange irony, it was largely his polemical attack on the *Reims version of the NT (the text of which Fulke printed side by side with that of the '*Bishops' Bible') that led to its becoming widely known in England and opened the way for its influence on the language of the AV. He also wrote extensively on astronomy.

Modern edns. of his Defence of the Sincere and Holy Translations of the Holy Scriptures . . . against the Cavils of Gregory Martin (1583) by C. H. Hartshorne (*Parker Society, 1843), with biographical memoir, pp. i–xi, and of his refutations of works by T. *Stapleton, J. Martiall, and N. *Sanders by R. Gibbings (ibid., 1848). W. McKane, Selected Christian Hebraists (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 76–110, with notes pp. 226–31 and bibl. pp. 249 f. E. Venables in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 305–8.

Fuller, Andrew (1754–1815), *Baptist divine. A native of Cambridgeshire, he was ordained pastor of the Baptist congregation at Soham in 1775, and in 1782 became minister at Kettering. While at Soham he published The Gospel worthy of all Acceptation [1785], a book directed against the extreme form of *Calvinism which allowed 'nothing spiritually good to be the duty of the unregenerate'. The book greatly impressed W. *Carey, and when in 1792 the Baptist Missionary Society was founded, with Fuller as its first secretary, Carey spoke of him as 'holding the rope' while he himself 'went down into the mine'. In 1793 he published a defence of Calvinistic Baptist teaching against some *Socinian charges that free grace implies moral relaxation, and against *Deism he wrote The Gospel its own Witness (1799). He also published collections of expository and other sermons.

Complete Works, with a Memoir of his life by A. G. Fuller (son), in 23 parts (London [c. 1831–] 1846). J. Ryland, The Work of Faith, the Labour of Love, and the Patience of Hope illustrated; in the Life and Death of the Reverend Andrew Fuller (1816). Further Memoirs of his Life and Writings by J. W. Morris (London, 1815) and T. E. Fuller, grandson (ibid., 1863). G. Laws, Andrew Fuller: Pastor, Theologian, Ropeholder (1942). B. Stanley, The History of the Baptist Missionary Society 1792 1992 (Edinburgh, 1992), pp. 4–35 passim. W. G. Blaikie in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 309 f.

Fuller, Thomas (1608–61), Anglican historian. Educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, he was later Curate of St Benet's, Cambridge (1630–3), Rector of Broadwindsor, Dorset (1634–1641), Curate of Waltham Abbey (from *c.*1649; where he was summoned before O. *Cromwell's *Triers, though he managed to escape deprivation), and Rector of Cranford (1658–61). His witty and popular style won him a wide reputation. Of his historical writings, the most renowned are his Church-History of Britain (1655) and his Worthies of England (posthumous, 1662), on both of which Fuller worked for a great part of his life, collecting some of his material during his campaigns with the royalist forces in the Civil War. Of a more popular kind was The Holy State and the Profane State (1642), a series of 'characters' illustrating the Christian moral ideal. He also wrote a History of the Holy War (1639), on the *Crusades, besides other works.

Full Life, with bibl., by J. E. Bailey (1874). Collected Sermons, ed. J. E. Bailey and W. E. A. Axon (1891); Selections, ed. E. K. Broadus (1928). W. Addison, Worthy Dr. Fuller (1951). S. Gibson, 'A Bibliography of the Works of Thomas Fuller, D.D.', with introd. by G. [L.] Keynes, in Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, 4 (1936), pp. 63–161.

Fullo, Petrus. See PETER THE FULLER.

Fundamentalism. A movement in various Protestant bodies which began in the late 19th cent. and developed after the First World War (1914–18), esp. in the USA. It has roots in the Bible itself, the Reformation, Protestant orthodoxy, and evangelical *revivalism, but it arose in the late 19th cent. in reaction against evolutionary theories, liberal theology, and biblical criticism. A series of Bible Conferences of Conservative Protestants was held in various parts of America; that of Niagara in 1895 issued a statement of belief containing what later came to be known as the 'five points of fundamentalism', namely the verbal inerrancy of Scripture, the Divinity of Jesus Christ, the * Virgin Birth, a substitutionary theory of the *Atonement, and the physical and bodily return of Christ. The term 'fundamentalism', however, appears to derive from a series of tracts entitled The Fundamentals, published between 1910 and 1915. In 1919 the World's Christian Fundamentals Association was founded; it organized rallies in many American cities and during the following decade several Protestant denominations, esp. *Baptists, *Presbyterians, and *Disciples of Christ, were divided into Fundamentalist and Modernist wings. Some leading scholars were condemned and rival seminaries established. The controversy attacted widespread public attention in 1925 when William Jennings Bryan (1860–1925), the American Democratic leader, assisted in the prosecution of J. T. Scopes, a schoolteacher of Dayton, Tennessee, who was convicted on the charge of violating the state law by teaching the doctrine of biological evolution in the so-called 'monkey trial'.

The word is applied in a broader sense to other religious and political groups (e.g. 'Muslim Fundamentalism') and since 1950 these have grown in strength, generally supporting conservative social positions and adding aggression to the so-called 'moral majority' in America. In some areas it has been reinforced by a *charismatic tendency and has sometimes been associated with *Millenarianism. It now often has little connection with denominational boundaries, but remains hostile to the *Ecumenical Movement. In Britain it is found within conservative Protestant denominations, but the term is rejected as pejorative.

J. I. Packer, 'Fundamentalism' and the Word of God (1958); E. R. Sandeen, The Roots of Fundamentalism: British and American Millenarianism 1800–1930 (1970); G. M. Marsden, Fundamentalism and American Culture: The Shaping of Twentieth-Century Evangelicalism: 1870–1925 (New York and Oxford, 1980); J. Barr, Fundamentalism (1977; 2nd edn., 1981); id., Escaping from Fundamentalism (1984).

funeral services. See BURIAL SERVICES.

G

Gabbatha. Acc. to Jn. 19: 13, the place in *Jerusalem where *Pilate sat down in judgement on Christ. The 'Hebrew' (more accurately, the *Aramaic) word is stated in the Gospel to be the equivalent of the Greek Λιθόστρωτος, 'Pavement'. The site of the official residence (praetorium) of Pilate, where Gabbatha was, has not been conclusively identified by archaeologists. However, Gabbatha is now thought more likely to have been in the huge 'upper' palace in the Upper City built by *Herod the Great between the site of the modern Citadel at the Jaffa Gate and the Armenian Garden than in the much less elaborate Antonia, at the NW corner of the Temple Area, where a stone pavement, of uncertain Roman date, exposed beneath the Ecce Homo convent of the Sisters of Sion, is popularly referred to as the Lithostroton.

Le Père Barnabè, d'Alsace, OFM, Le Prétoire de Pilate et la Forteresse Antonia (1902). L. H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1922), pp. 562–86. L. H. Vincent, OP, 'L'Antonia et le prétoire', R. Bibl. 42 (1933), pp. 83–113; id., 'Autour du prétoire', ibid. 46 (1937), pp. 563–70; id., 'Le Lithostrotos évangélique', ibid. 59 (1952), pp. 513–30; P. Benoit, OP, 'Prétoire, Lithostroton et Gabbatha', ibid., pp. 531–50, repr. in his Exégèse et Théologie, 1 (1961), pp. 316–39. M. Aline de Sion, La Forteresse Antonia à Jérusalem et la question du Prétoire (Paris thesis; Jerusalem, 1957). P. Benoit, OP, 'L'Antonia d'Hérode le Grand et le Forum Oriental d'Aelia Capitolina', HTR 64 (1971), pp. 135–67, repr., with revisions, in Exégèse et Théologie, 4 (1982), pp. 311–46. J. Wilkinson, Jerusalem as Jesus knew it: Archaeology as Evidence [1978]), pp. 137–42.

Gabirol, Solomon Ibn. See AVICEBRON.

Gabriel (Heb.), 'man of God'. One of the seven *archangels. He is mentioned in Dan. 8: 15 f. and 9: 21 f., where he assists Daniel in the understanding of his visions. In the NT he foretells the birth of St *John the Baptist to his father, *Zachariah, and announces the conception of the Lord to the BVM (Lk. 1: 11 f., 1: 26). As the messenger of Divine comfort, he is accorded in Jewish theology the place of highest rank after *Michael. Feast day in the E., 26 Mar.; in the W., formerly 24 Mar. (i.e. the day before the *Annunciation); now, with Michael and *Raphael, on 29 Sept.

E. B. *Pusey, Daniel the Prophet (1864), pp. 520 f. O. *Bardenhewer, Mariä Verkündigung: Ein Kommentar zu Lk. 1, 26–38 (Biblische Studien, 10, Heft 5; 1905), pp. 48–59. J. Michl in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 239–43, s.v. 'Engel VI (Gabriel)'. See also general commentaries on St Luke's Gospel (s.v.).

Gabriel Severus (*c.*1540–1616), theologian. A native of the Morea, Gabriel was consecrated Metropolitan of Philadelphia, now Ala-Shehr, in Asia Minor, in 1577. The see being in Turkish hands and its duties slight, Gabriel migrated to Venice to act as bishop for the Greek Christians in the Venetian Republic. There he acquired a reputation as a theologian and anti-Latin controversialist: but while opposing the RC Church, at the same time he borrowed heavily from the methods and terminology of Latin Scholasticism. His best-known work is a defence of the Greek practice of venerating the eucharistic elements at the *Great Entrance on the ground that, being dedicated for consecration, they are no longer common bread and wine, but have become 'holy' and 'honourable' by participation (μετοχικῶς), and therefore deserve a reverence only second in order to the adoration due to the consecrated Eucharist. Some of his writings were translated into Latin by R. *Simon and published by him at Paris in 1671 as Fides Ecclesiae Orientalis seu Gabrielis Metropolitae Philadelphiensis Opuscula.

M. Jugie, AA, 'Un théologien grec du XVI[e] siècle, Gabriel Sévère et les divergences entre les deux Églises', EO 16 (1913), pp. 97–108, with bibl. D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 1 (1909), pp. 173–5. G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 118–24. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 977–83, s.v., with bibl.

Gaetano da Thiene. See CAJETAN, ST.

Gairdner, James (1828–1912), English historian. In 1846 he entered the Public Record Office. His many writings include editions of the *Calendar of Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII (London, 1862–1905) and of the Paston Letters (1872–5), as well as Henry VII (1889), The English Church in the Sixteenth Century (1902), and Lollardy and the Reformation in England (4 vols., 1908–13). A diligent and accurate historian, he wrote particularly on the period of the *Reformation in England, where he believed that modern historians had commonly done less than justice to the Catholic case.

Preface by W. Hunt in his edn. of Gairdner's Lollardy and the Reformation, 4 (posthumous, 1913), pp. v–xii. R. H. Brodie in DNB, 1912–1921, p. 206; D. M. Loades in J. Cannon and others (eds.), The Blackwell Dictionary of Historians (1988), pp. 146 f.

Gairdner, William Henry Temple (1873–1928), Anglican missionary. Educated at Rossall and Trinity College, Oxford, he went to Cairo as a *CMS missionary in 1898, was ordained priest in 1901, and worked in co-operation with his friend Douglas Thornton, whose biography he wrote (1908), until the latter's death in 1907. After prolonged study of Arabic and Islamics, he threw himself into the reorganization of the Arabic Anglican Church, with the determination to make it a living spiritual home for converted Muslims. He became the apostle of Arabic Christian scholarship and a pioneer teacher of the colloquial language, producing a Conversation Grammar of Egyptian Colloquial Arabic (1917), The Phonetics of Arabic (1925), besides hymns and versified Gospel stories in the vernacular. He also published many other works, devotional, exegetic, doctrinal, musical, and linguistic, in Arabic and in English, the Reproach of Islam (1909) being the best known.

C. E. Padwick, Temple Gairdner of Cairo (1929). M. D. Gairdner (widow; ed.), W. H. T. G. to his Friends: Some Letters and Informal Writings of Canon W. H. Temple Gairdner of Cairo, 1873–1928 [1930].

Gaisford, Thomas (1779–1855), Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, from 1831. Educated at Christ Church, he became Regius Professor of Greek in 1812. In 1829 he was offered the bishopric of Oxford on the death of C. *Lloyd, but refused it. His reputation rests chiefly on his contributions to the study of the Greek classics (e.g. Hephaestion, Herodotus, Stobaeus). In the field of *Patristics, he prepared critical editions of *Eusebius of Caesarea's Praeparatio (1843) and Demonstratio Evangelica (1852), as well as of the Byzantine lexicographer *Suidas (1834).

H. R. Luard in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 370–2, s.v. H. L. Thompson, Christ Church (1900), pp. 193–202.

Gaius, also Caius (early 3rd cent.), Roman presbyter. Acc. to *Eusebius (HE 2. 25. 6; cf. 6. 20. 3), he was an orthodox Churchman (ἐκκλησιαστικὸς ἀνήρ). Under *Zephyrinus (198–217) he held a debate with a Montanist, Proclus. He accepted the 13 Epp. of St Paul, but rejected the Gospel and Rev. of St John, holding them to be the work of *Cerinthus (see ALOGI). *Photius describes him as 'Bishop of the Gentiles' (ἐθνῶν ἐπίσκοπος), but this is probably due to confusion with *Hippolytus, with whom, as we learn from a Commentary of the Jacobite, Dionysius Bar-Salibi (12th cent.), Gaius also had a controversy. His reference to the 'trophies of the apostles' (τὰ τρόπαια τῶν ἀποστόλων, Eusebius, HE 2. 25. 7) has been one of the key texts in the discussions about the excavations under *St Peter's, Rome.

E. Prinzivalli, 'Gaio e gli Alogi', Studi Storico Religiosi, 5 (1981), pp. 53–68. In Eng. there is a useful note to their tr. of Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History by H. J. Lawlor and J. E. L. Oulton, 2 (1928), p. 208.

Galatians, Epistle to the. St *Paul apparently wrote this letter from *Ephesus or Macedonia to his Galatian converts on receiving news of a movement requiring them to keep all the commands of the Jewish Law, and thereby (as he thought) endangering the whole value of their faith in Christ. Though J. H. *Ropes and others have suggested that he was at the same time opposing a different group which called for the total rejection of the Jewish Law and even of moral standards, this theory has never been established.

The Epistle opens with an account of Paul's career from his conversion onwards, intended to show (1) that he had received his commission directly from God; (2) that no human teacher had authority to change the Gospel that he, Paul, had preached; and (3) that the original *Apostles at Jerusalem, i.e. *Peter, *James, and *John, had recognized the rightfulness of his mission to the Gentiles. He then emphasizes the futility of trying to live by 'works of the law' and maintains that the way in which a person is justified in the sight of God is not that of 'law' but of 'faith'. This is argued from the case of *Abraham, who was justified by faith in God's promises. As these promises to Abraham were fulfilled in Christ, all external considerations, such as whether a believer is a Jew or a Greek, are transcended; Christians are one in Christ Jesus. They receive the gift of the Spirit, and it is the Spirit which is the source of the Christian life, yielding its fruit in 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance' (5: 22). The Epistle ends with a further warning to the readers not to put their trust in Jewish observances.

The Epistle was written with a passionate intensity and is universally recognized as genuine. Traditionally it has been held that it was addressed to Christians in the country of Galatia in the interior of Asia Minor, which had been peopled by Gauls in the 3rd cent. BC (the 'N. Galatian theory'). Many scholars, however, have argued that 'Galatia' means the Roman province of Galatia, which covered a much wider area in Asia Minor, and of which the S. part included the cities of Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Derbe, and Lystra, mentioned in Acts 13 f. (the 'S. Galatian theory'). On either theory there are complex problems as to how to relate the events in Paul's life as recorded in Gal. 1 f. with those in Acts. Older scholars were almost unanimous in identifying the journey to Jerusalem in Gal. 2: 1–10 with that in Acts 15. But some biblical students, among them J. *Calvin, but esp. exponents of the 'S. Galatian theory', have equated it with the journey in Acts 11: 29 f. and have thereby explained the absence of references to the 'decrees' of Acts 15: 20 on the hypothesis that the Epistle was written before the Council had taken place; that would be in AD 50 or a little earlier, and Galatians would then be the earliest of the Pauline Epistles. Most scholars, however, prefer a later date in the mid-50s because of the contacts with the language and subject-matter of Romans, and some reconcile Paul's record with Acts by supposing that Acts 11 and 15 stem from different sources but refer to the same visit.

Modern comm. by J. B. *Lightfoot (Cambridge and London, 1865), W. M. *Ramsay (London, 1899), E. de W. Burton (ICC, 1921), G. S. Duncan (Moff. Comm., 1934), H. Schlier (HKNT, Siebente Abteilung; 10th edn., 1949), P. Bonnard (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 9, with Eph., 1953, pp. 9–132), H. N. Ridderbos, tr. into Eng. by H. Zylstra (New London Commentary, Grand Rapids, 1953; 2nd edn., London, 1954), J. Bligh, SJ (London, 1969), D. Guthrie (New Cent. Bib., 1969), F. Mussner (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 9; 1974), D. Lührmann (Züricher Bibelkommentar, NT 7; 1978), H. D. Betz (Hermeneia; Philadelphia [1979]), F. F. Bruce (New International Greek Testament Commentary; Exeter, 1982), R. N. Longenecker (Word Biblical Comm., 41; Dallas, Tex. [1990]), and J. D. G. Dunn (Black's NT Comm., 1993). J. H. Ropes, The Singular Problem of the Epistle to the Galatians (Harvard Theological Studies, 14; 1929). E. P. Sanders, Paul, the Law, and the Jewish People (Philadelphia [1983]), passim. C. K. Barrett, Freedom and Obligation: A Study of the Epistle to the Galatians (1985); J. M. G. Barclay, Obeying the Truth: A Study of Paul's Ethics in Galatians (Edinburgh, 1988). Kümmel, pp. 294–304. H. D. Betz in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 872–5.

Gale, Thomas (*c.*1635–1702), antiquary. After studying at Trinity College, Cambridge, he became successively Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge (1666), High Master of St Paul's School (1672), and Dean of *York (1697). A versatile scholar of European reputation and a correspondent of J. *Mabillon, he was the editor of Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Quinque (1687) and Historiae

Britannicae Scriptores (1691), the latter of which contained as its first three items the texts of *Gildas, Nennius, and Eddi. The Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores (1684), often attributed to Gale, was in fact the work of William Fulman, who collaborated with Gale in some of his other writings. These three folios, which were all published anonymously at Oxford, contained the monastic chronicles of several of the lesser houses such as Burton and Margam, and are a valuable source, not only for local history, but also for the study of the history of medieval England in general. He was also the author of several other works, including an unpublished edition of *Origen's '*Philocalia'.

J. E. B. Mayor, Cambridge in the Time of Queen Anne (1911), pp. 448–50, incl. sources and list of MSS. D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), esp. pp. 69–72 and 213–21; 2nd edn. (1951), pp. 59–61 and 168–74. G. Goodwin in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 378–80.

Galerius (d. 311), Roman Emperor. An Illyrian of humble birth, he rose in the army and in 293 was appointed by *Diocletian as his co-adjutor ('Caesar') in the E.; on Diocletian's abdication in 303 he succeeded him as Augustus. According to Christian writers his influence had inspired the persecution initiated in 303. Unable to enforce his dominance in the W., and suffering from an illness gloatingly described by *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecutorum, 33), he finally issued an edict of toleration in 311 (see PERSECUTIONS). He died soon afterwards.

The chief Christian sources are Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum, 9–35, and *Eusebius, HE 8. 16 f. T. D. Barnes, Constantine and Eusebius (1981), pp. 8–34, 39, and 159. W. Ensslin in PW 14 (1930), cols. 2516–28, s.v. 'Maximianus (Galerius)'.

Galgani, St Gemma (1878–1903), Italian *stigmatic. She was born of poor parents at Camigliano in Tuscany and lived most of her life at Lucca. Ill-health frustrated her desire of becoming a *Passionist nun, though she took the three vows privately and, in addition, a vow of perfection. She enjoyed frequent ecstasies, and received the stigmata and marks of scourging intermittently between 1899 and 1901. Apart from her conviction of occasional diabolical possession, her spiritual life was normally peaceful. She was beatified in 1933 and canonized in 1940. Feast day, 11 Apr.

Lettere, ed. by the Passionists, with preface by E. Pellegrinetti (Isola del Liri, 1941); Estasi, diario, autobiografia, ed. idd., also with preface by E. Pellegrinetti (ibid., 1943). The principal secondary authority is the Life by her confessor, Germano di S. Stanislao (Rome, 1907; many subsequent edns.). Substantial modern studies by E. Zoffoli, CP (Rome, 1957) and J.-F. Villepelée (3 vols., Hauteville, Switzerland, 1971–8); in Eng. there are Lives by B. Williamson (London [1932]) and [C. C.] Amedeo della Madre del Buon Pastore, CP (Rome, 1933; Eng. tr., 1935). Federico dell'Addolorata, CP, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 183–7, s.v. 'Gemma Galgani', with detailed bibl., with additional bibl. in DHGE 20 (1984), col. 337, s.v. 'Gemma Galgani'.

Galilee (Heb. הַגָּלִיל). (1) Originally the term was applied only to part of the tribe of Naphtali, but in NT times it was given to all the district in N. Palestine extending from the Mediterranean to the *Jordan, and the word is now generally used in this sense. It constituted one of the four Roman divisions of Palestine. Its position on the main trade routes between Egypt and Syria had made it from early times a cosmopolitan province. It was the scene of almost all the Lord's earlier life and of a great part of His ministry and included such places as *Nazareth, *Capernaum, *Bethsaida, and Magdala. Many of its chief towns were situated on the 'Sea of Galilee', a lake some 680 ft. below the level of the Mediterranean through which the R. Jordan flows.

(2) In medieval cathedrals, an outer porch or chapel to which penitents are said to have been admitted on *Ash Wednesday, before being brought into church to do their *penance.

S. Klein, Beiträge zur Geographie und Geschichte Galiläas (1909); id., Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte und Geographie Galiläas (Palästina-Studien, Heft 1; 1923). A. Alt, 'Die Stätten des Wirkens Jesu in Galiläa territorialgeschichtlich betrachtet', Beiträge zur biblischen Landes und Altertumskunde, 68 (1951), pp. 51–71; separate Eng. tr. as Where Jesus Worked (1961). M. Goodman, State and Society in Roman Galilee, A.D. 132–212 (Totowa, NJ, 1983). G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (25th edn.; 1931), pp. 413–63. S. Freyne in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 895–9, s.v. 'Galilee' (Hellenistic/Roman); A. Ronen and others in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 2 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 449–58, s.v.

Galilei, Galileo (1546–1642), Italian mathematician and scientist, usually known simply as 'Galileo'. An early attempt to enter the monastic life was foiled by his father, the musical theorist Vincenzio Galilei, who envisaged a medical career for his son. Nevertheless Galileo did not complete his medical course at the University of Pisa, but turned to mathematics and in 1589 became professor of mathematics at Pisa; in 1592 he was appointed to the more lucrative chair at Padua. At this time he developed ideas on a new science of motion that eventually found mature expression in his Discorsi e Dimostrazioni Matematiche intorno à Due Nuove Scienze (1638). By asking, not about the causes of motion, but rather how they would occur in certain ideal situations, he concluded that an unimpeded horizontal motion would continue indefinitely at uniform speed, and an unimpeded vertical motion would be uniformly accelerated—ideas that can be seen as leading towards Newtonian physics. In 1609 Galileo heard of a new optical instrument, later known as the telescope; he soon had exemplars made for himself and embarked on a systematic observation of the heavens. His results, which he used for supporting a heliocentric *Copernican cosmology, were published in Sidereus Nuncius (1610) and Istoria e Dimostrazioni intorno alle Macchie Solari (1613). In 1610 he moved to Florence as Chief Mathematician and Philosopher to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and soon the theological implications of Copernicanism became a matter of great concern (which they had not been hitherto). Galileo in 1615 composed a long letter (pub. in 1636, Lettera a Madama Cristina di Lorena, Granduchessa di Toscana) on the relation of astronomy to Scripture, in which he advocated a liberal use of the principle of *accommodation in interpreting biblical passages seemingly inconsistent with the motion of the earth. Matters came to a head in 1615 and early 1616 when the theologians of the *Holy Office asserted that to maintain the immobility and centrality of the sun as opposed to that of the earth was heretical, and soon Copernicus' De revolutionibus orbium caelestium (pub. in 1543) was placed on the *Index, pending correction.

Galileo was informed of the decision and was reported to have acquiesced in it. For some years he was publicly silent about Copernicanism, but when his friend Maffeo Barberini became Pope *Urban VIII in 1623, he gained the impression that he could discuss the new system, provided that he treated it as hypothetical and did not introduce biblical arguments. The result was his Dialogo sopra i Due Massimi Sistemi del Mondo (1632), which was more faithful to the letter than the spirit of this understanding, and contained an apparent insult to the Pope. Galileo was summoned before the *Inquisition, made to recant, and spent the rest of his life under house arrest. His famous words Eppur si muove (None the less it does move) seem to be legendary. The 'Galileo Affair' has been a continuing leitmotif in accounts of the meeting of science and religion, and Pope *John Paul II in 1981 appointed a commission to study the case and in 1992 endorsed its report admitting the 'subjective error' of Galileo's judges.

The standard edn. of his works is the 'Edizione nationale' by A. Favoro (20 vols., Florence, 1890–1909; repr. 1968). Eng. trs. include Discoveries and Opinions of Galileo, tr. S. Drake (Garden City, NY, 1957; tr. of Siderius Nuncius and Lettera a Madama Cristina di Lorena, with extracts from other works); Siderius Nuncius, tr. A. van Helden (Chicago, 1989); Dialogo sopra i Due Massimi Sistemi del Mondo, tr. S. Drake (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1953); and Discorsi e Dimostrazioni, tr. id. (Madison, Wis., 1974). The secondary bibl. is vast; E. McMullin (ed.), Galileo: Man of Science (New York and London [1967]) incl. convenient updating of bibls. of Carli, Favaro and Boffito (see below). Useful biogs. by J. Brodrick, SJ (London [1964]), L. Geymonat (Turin, 1957; Eng. tr., New York and London, 1965), S. Drake, Galileo at Work: His Scientific Biography (Chicago and London, 1978), and, on an introductory level, id., Galileo (Past Masters, Oxford, 1980). S. M. Pagano (ed.), I Documenti del Processo di Galileo Galilei (Collectanea Archivi Vaticani, 21; 1984). Eng. tr. of various primary docs., with introd., by M. A. Finocchiaro, The Galileo Affair: A Documentary History (Berkeley, Calif., etc. [1989]). Secondary works dealing with Galileo's relations with the Church include G. de Santillana, The Crime of Galileo (1958); J. J. Langford, Galileo, Science and the Church (New York, 1966); P. Poupard (ed.), Galileo Galilei: 350 ans d'histoire 1633 1983 (Tournai [1983]); O. Pedersen, 'Galileo and the Council of Trent: The Galileo Affair Revisited', Journal for the History of Astronomy, 14 (1983), pp. 1–29; G. V. Coyne, SJ, and others (eds.), The Galileo Affair: A Meeting of Faith and Science. Proceedings of the Cracow Conference, 24 to 27 May 1984 (Vatican City, 1985); R. S. Westfall, 'The Trial of Galileo: Bellarmino, Galileo, and the Clash of Two Worlds', Journal for the History of Astronomy, 20 (1989), pp. 1–23, repr., with other material, Essays on the Trial of Galileo (Vatican City, 1989). P. Redondi, Galileo eretico (1983; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ, 1987; London, 1988), argues provocatively that the underlying cause of Galileo's condemnation was his espousal of an atomism that was seen as inconsistent with the doctrine of *transubstantiation. Comprehensive bibl. covering the period 1568–1895 by A. Carli and A. Favaro (Rome, 1896), 1896 1940 by G. Boffito (ibid., 1943); and 1942–1964 by E. Gentili (Milan, 1966). S. Drake in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 5 (1981 edn.), pp. 237–49, s.v.

Gall, St (*c.*550–*c.*650), missionary. It is unclear whether he was of Frankish or Alemannian origin, but he was certainly one of the followers of St *Columbanus, from whom he separated in 612 when the latter went to Italy. Gall remained in that part of Swabia which is now Switzerland, living mainly as a hermit. He is symbolically represented in art by a bear. Feast day, 16 Oct.

The famous monastery of St Gallen was founded *c.*719 on the site of Gall's hermitage. From the end of the 8th cent. its '*scriptorium' and collection of MSS were long among the most famous in Europe; the library is still housed in the monastic building.

(1) SAINT. In addition to contemporary refs. in Jonas, 'Vita S. Columbani', three Lives are extant: the earliest dates from the late 7th cent., the second, by Wetti, *c.*820, and the third, by *Walafrid Strabo, *c.*833/4; modern edn. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 4 (1902), pp. 229–337, incl. comm. Eng. tr. of Walafrid Strabo's Life by M. Joynt (Translations of Christian Literature, 5th ser., 1927). Frags. of metrical Life by *Notker in MGH, Poetae Latinae, 4. 2 (1923), pp. 1093–1108. F. Blanke, Columban und Gallus: Urgeschichte des schweizerischen Christentums (Zurich, 1940). B. and H. Helbling, 'Der heilige Gallus in der Geschichte', Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Geschichte, 12 (1962), pp. 1–62. K.-U. Jäschke, 'Kolumbanus von Luxeuil und sein Wirken im alemannischen Raum', in A. Borst (ed.), Mönchtum, Episkopat und Adel zur Gründungszeit des Klosters Reichenau (Vorträge und Forschungen, 20; Sigmaringen, 1974), pp. 77–130. A. Borst, Mönche am Bodensee 610 1525 (Sigmaringen, 1978), pp. 19–32, with notes pp. 539 f. ('Gallus, Eremit an der Steinach').

(2) ABBEY. H. Wartmann [contd. by P. Bütler, T. Schiess, and others], Urkundenbuch der Abtei St Gallen (6 vols., 1863–1955). W. Horn and E. Born, The Plan of St Gall: A Study of the Architecture and Economy of, and Life in a Paradigmatic Carolingian Monastery (3 vols., Berkeley, Calif., 1979); W. Jacobsen, Der Klosterplan von St Gallen und die karolingische Architektur [1992]. J. Dunft and others in E. Gilomen-Schenkel (ed.), Helvetia Sacra, Abteilung 3, Band 1, Teil 2 (Berne, 1986), pp. 1180–369, with bibl. J. M. Clark, The Abbey of St Gall as a Centre of Literature and Art (1925), with bibl.; W. Vogler (ed.), Die Kultur der Abtei Sankt Gallen (1990; Eng. tr. by J. C. King, Stuttgart and Zurich [1991]). E. Ehrenzeller, Geschichte der Stadt St Gallen (St Gall, 1988), esp. pp. 3–124 passim. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 7 (Oxford, 1956), pp. 18–44 [nos. 893 997]. R. Sprandel, Das Kloster St Gallen in der Verfassung des Karolingischen Reiches (Forschungen zur Oberrheinischen Landesgeschichte, 7; Freiburg i.B., 1958). R. McKitterick, The Carolingians and the Written Word (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 77–126.

Galla Placidia (*c.*390–450), Roman Empress. The daughter of *Theodosius I, she was carried off by *Alaric the Goth, when he captured *Rome in 410, and in 414 married his successor, King Ataulf. After his murder in 415, she rejoined Honorius, her brother, and on the accession of her son, Valentinian III, in 425 she acted as regent. An important influence in the religious struggles of the time, she was an uncompromising Catholic and gave her support to Pope *Leo I in the *Eutychian controversy. She built several famous churches at *Ravenna, among them her own mausoleum, which is adorned with splendid mosaics.

V. A. Sirago, Galla Placidia e la trasformazione politica dell'Occidente (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 4th ser. 25; 1961); S. I. Oost, Galla Placidia Augusta: A Biographical Essay (Chicago and London, 1968), with bibl. T. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, 1. 2 (1892), pp. 817–88. C. Ricci, Il mausoleo di Galla Placidia in Ravenna (1914). Also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 248–75; V. A. Sirago in DHGE 19 (1981), cols. 807–11, s.v. For works on her churches, see also bibl. s.v. RAVENNA.

Gallandi, Andrea (1709–79), *patristic scholar. An *Oratorian priest who lived at Venice, he is best known for his Bibliotheca veterum patrum antiquorumque scriptorum ecclesiasticorum Graecorum (14 vols., 1765–81), a collection of treatises drawn from 380 writers of the first seven cents. of the Christian era, in which special attention was paid to the less-known authors. It is still a work of great service to students of the Fathers. He also published De vetustis canonum collectionibus sylloge (1778), an important collection of writings on the history of canon law.

P. Godet in DTC 6 (1914), col. 1095, with bibl.

Gallia Christiana*. A documentary account of the bishoprics, bishops, abbeys, and abbots of France. It derives from a work under this title first published by Claude Robert in 1626. A later edition issued in 1656 was approved by the *Assembly of the French Clergy, but only after a passage suspected of *Jansenism had been removed. Since the beginning of the 18th cent., when a thorough revision was undertaken by the *Maurist, Denys de Sainte-Marthe (1650–1725), the work has been continued chiefly by Benedictine scholars, among them, Félix Hodin, Étienne Brice, and Jacques Taschereau. For students of the detailed history of France, it remains indispensable.

Work partly repr., with some minor changes, by P. Piolin, OSB (Paris, 1870–77). A not very satisfactory revision was begun as Gallia Christiana Novissima by U. Chevalier (Montbéliard, 7 vols., 1899–1920). V. Fouqué, Du Gallia Christiana et de ses auteurs: Étude bibliographique (1857). A. Degert, 'Pour refaire la Gallia Christiana', Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, 8 (1922), pp. 281–301. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (1924), cols. 277–310.

Gallican Articles, the Four (1682). The rights and privileges claimed by the French clergy at an assembly of 36 bishops and 34 deputies held at Paris on 19 March 1682. The demands arose from the dispute between Louis XIV and *Innocent XI over the appointment of bishops and the revenues of vacant sees. The document was drawn up by J. B. *Bossuet (q.v.).

The first denied that the Pope had dominion (puissance) over things temporal, and affirmed that kings are not subject to the authority of the Church in temporal and civil matters or to deposition by the ecclesiastical power, and that their subjects could not be dispensed by the Pope from their allegiance. The second upheld the decrees of the Council of *Constance (1414–18), and thus reaffirmed the authority of General Councils over the Pope. The third insisted that the ancient liberties of the Gallican Church were inviolable. The fourth asserted that pending the consent of the Church (i.e. until a General Council was convened), the judgement of the Pope is not irreformable. The Articles were quashed by the constitution 'Inter multiplices' of *Alexander VIII of 4 Aug. 1690, and by Louis XIV in a letter to the Pope on 14 Sept. 1693, but for over a decade they were taught in the French theological schools and made a test for admission to academic degrees and public office. See also GALLICANISM.

C. Gérin, Recherches historiques sur l'assemblée du clergé de 1682 (1869; 2nd edn., rev., 1870), with text of Articles, pp. 317 f. of 2nd edn.; J.-T. Loyson, L'Assemblée du clergé de France de 1682 (1870), with text of Articles, pp. 349–51, and of Louis's letter, pp. 520 f. The constitution 'Inter Multiplices' is pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 20 (Naples, 1883), pp. 67–70, with refs. to earlier Papal declarations. The main clause of the constitution, together with the text of the Articles, is repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 656–8 (nos. 2281–5). Eng. tr. of the Articles in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall, Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 207 f. P. Blet, SJ, Les Assemblées du clergé et Louis XIV de 1670 à 1693 (Analecta Gregoriana, 189; 1972), pp. 312–580. See also bibl. to GALLICANISM.

Gallican chant. The music of the early *Gallican rite has not survived; there are neither notated chants nor even chant books without music. A few non-Roman pieces from MSS of the 10th cent. and later have been identified as 'Gallican' (such as the chants for the *Reproaches on Good Friday); and in some cases they may indeed go back to the period before the general adoption of the Roman rite in Gaul; but they are mere straws in the wind. More recently it has been argued that certain Gregorian *Offertories may enshrine Gallican music. However, the rite and its music may well have varied considerably from one locality to another; it was suppressed before the chant had become the exclusive property of trained singers, and nothing certain of its nature is known. The neo-Gallican liturgy in the 17th and 18th cents. gave rise to a musical repertory which differed from the Roman, but it can have no link with the early Gallican chant; it has been little studied.

A. Gastoué, Le Chant Gallican (Grenoble, 1939; orig. pub. in the Revue du chant grégorien, 41–3; 1937–9). K. Levy, 'Toledo, Rome and the Legacy of Gaul', Early Music History, 4 (1984), pp. 49–99. M. Huglo in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 7 (1980), pp. 113–25, s.v. 'Gallican rite, music for the'.

Gallican Confession. The Confession de foi or Confessio Gallicana, adopted in the First National Synod of Protestants at Paris in 1559. The first draft was the work of J. *Calvin, but it was revised, chiefly by his pupil Antoine de la Roche Chandieu (1534–91), before its formal acceptance. It was written in French and contained 35 articles, and in substance was an epitome of Calvin's central doctrines. A modified form of it, with 40 articles, was ratified at the Synod of La Rochelle in 1571. The Confession has often been attached to editions of the French Bible.

P. *Schaff, Creeds of Christendom (1877), 1, pp. 490–8; 3, pp. 356–82 (text). Eng. tr., with introd., also in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 137–58, with bibl. p. 140. J. Pannier, Les Origines de la Confession de Foi et la discipline des Églises réformées de France (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses publiées par la faculté de théologie protestante de l'Université de Strasbourg, 32; 1936).

Gallican Psalter. St *Jerome's revision of the Latin Psalter made *c.*392 on the basis of the *Hexaplaric Greek text of the LXX. Possibly under the influence of *Gregory of Tours, this version became very popular in Gaul (hence the name 'Gallican'), where it was adopted for use in the liturgy. Under the influence of *Alcuin it came to displace the Hebrew Psalter in almost all subsequent biblical MSS of the Vulgate and is the version normally found in printed editions of the Latin Bible. Its use for public recitation spread throughout the W. Church, though in Italy it did not displace the *Roman Psalter until the time of Pope *Pius V (1566–72). See also PSALTER.

Gallican rite. This term is used with three meanings: (1) for the liturgical forms in use in Gaul before the adoption of the Roman rite under *Charlemagne; (2) loosely, for all the non-Roman rites of the early W. Church; (3) for the 'Neo-Gallican' liturgies of the 17th and 18th cents. What follows relates only to (1).

It is not known why in early times the rites of N. Italy, Gaul, Spain and the *Celtic Churches differed from that of Rome, nor are scholars agreed as to their provenance. The two problems are closely linked. Several explanations are offered. (1) The older theory was that the non-Roman rites could be traced back to Apostolic origin in *Ephesus, whence they spread to the W. via Lyons (see IRENAEUS). The insuperable objection to this theory, as L. *Duchesne pointed out, is that no rite of the 2nd cent. could be so elaborate and so dependent upon the calendar as the Gallican rite was. (2) Others, e.g. Dom P. Cagin, have held that this 'non-Roman' type of rite represents the primitive Roman rite; but this theory assumes, without evidence, that the Roman rite was revised into its present form under Pope *Damasus (*c.*384). (3) Another widely accepted view, e.g. that of Duchesne, was that the liturgies came from Milan, which at the turn of the 4th and 5th cents. was very influential. This view can no longer be maintained since R. H. Connolly's vindication of the Ambrosian authorship of the De Sacramentis, which includes the Roman Canon. (4) Perhaps the least unsatisfactory view is that it was indigenous to Gaul and that it developed with the introduction of variable prayers controlled by the Church calendar. The earliest evidence for this theory comes from Marseilles, *c.*450, when the priest Musaeus is said by *Gennadius to have first chosen lections and responsories appropriate to feast days, and a little later to have composed a large and excellent volume of Masses (sacramentorum) containing in separate sections the 'proper' of 'offices and seasons'. The composition of Masses came to be a literary activity in Gaul and Spain; *Sidonius Apollinaris is known to have composed many. The extant Mass books are not earlier than the 8th cent. and are already partly 'Romanized', except for the eleven *Mone Masses of the 7th cent. The letters once believed to be by *Germanus of Paris have been shown by A. *Wilmart to be dependent in some passages on *Isidore of Seville and can no longer be used as evidence for the Gallican rite of the 6th cent. They do, however, provide the only full description of a 7th–8th cent. rite used in Gaul.

Many of the surviving Gallican Masses are more prolix and oratorical than the austere forms of the Roman sacramentaries, while others are concise. The structure of the services, however, is in certain respects remarkably different. Some of the characteristics are shared by the *Mozarabic, Celtic, and even *Ambrosian rites. The main differences of the Gallican rite, as we have it, are (1) THE *MASS. (a) The *Trisagion was regularly sung in Greek and Latin before the *Kyries (which were in threefold form) and before and after the *Gospel. (b) The *Benedictus Dominus followed the Kyries, and the *Benedicite was sung after the OT Lesson. (c) The *diptychs and the *Kiss of Peace occurred before the *Canon. (d) The Canon, with the exception of the *Institution, varied with the season. (e) The Institution, in many extant Masses, was followed by a prayer post pridie, which was sometimes a form of *epiclesis. (f) The Fraction took place, accompanied by its own *antiphon, before the *Pater Noster. (g) A Trinitarian hymn (the *Trecanum) was sung during the *Communion. (2) *BAPTISM. The most notable points of contrast with the Roman rite are the placing of the profession of faith before the actual baptism and the addition of the rite of '*Pedilavium'. (3) *ORDINATION. The Gallican rite seems to have included a public ceremony for the minor orders which has been borrowed by Rome. And in many ways the Gallican Ordination services have influenced the Roman. See STATUTA ECCLESIAE ANTIQUA.

In the reign of *Pepin III the Gallican rite was already conflated with the Roman in some places, and Charlemagne actively sought to achieve uniformity with Roman usage (see GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY). He was not, however, entirely successful and the present Roman rite still bears marks of its conflation with that of Gaul.

For the Mass the chief texts are the Bobbio Missal, the Missale Francorum, the Missale Gothicum*, the Missale Gallicanum Vetus*, and the Mone Masses. K. Gamber (ed.), Ordo antiquus Gallicanus: Der gallikanische Messritus des 6. Jahrhunderts (Textus patristici et liturgici, 3 [1965]). Editions of the letters attributed to Germanus, and bibl. on these texts, cited s.v. See also J. *Mabillon, OSB, De Liturgia Gallicana (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 101–448); J. M. *Neale and G. H. *Forbes, The Ancient Liturgies of the Gallican Church (3 parts, Burntisland, 1855–67); L. Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (2nd edn., 1893; Eng. tr., 1903), esp. ch. 7; P. Cagin, OSB, 'Avant-propos à l'antiphonaire ambrosien', Paléographie Musicale, 5 (1896), pp. 70–97. J.-B. Thibaut, L'Ancienne Liturgie Gallicane: Son origine et sa formation en Provence aux v^e et vi^e siècles [1929]; E. Griffe, 'Aux origines de la Liturgie Gallicane', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 52 (1951), pp. 17–43; H. Ashworth, OSB, 'Gregorian Elements in Some Early Gallican Service Books', Traditio, 13 (1957), pp. 431–43; W. S. Porter, The Gallican Rite (1958), with bibl. [by F. L. Cross], pp. 57–61; A. A. King, Liturgies of the Past (1959), pp. 77–185; J. Pinell, OSB, 'Anámnesis y Epíclesis en el antiguo rito galicano', Didaskalia, 4 (1974), pp. 3–130. J. Quasten in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 258–62, s.v. 'Gallican Rites'; J. Pinell in DPAC 1 (1984), cols. 1425–31, s.v. 'Gallicana (liturgia)'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 334–6.

Gallicanism. The collective name for the body of doctrine which asserted the more or less complete freedom of the RC Church, esp. in France, from the ecclesiastical authority of the Papacy. During the *Great Schism, such theologians as J. *Gerson and P. *d'Ailly had ably represented a primitive form of Gallican doctrine which had been taught in the *Sorbonne almost from the time of its foundation (1257). At this period the chief question at issue was the claim of the French Church to a privileged position in relation to the Papacy, these libertés de l'Église gallicane (whence the name Gallicanism) being based upon supposed prerogatives of the French Crown (prerogatives which a sober view of history scarcely warranted). In 1516 the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438) was superseded by the Concord of *Bologna in which the French king's right of nomination to bishoprics and other high ecclesiasical offices was conceded. The constitutional decisions of the Council of *Trent (1545–63) were not received in France, and such writers as P. *Pithou, Edmond Richer (1559–1631), and P. de *Marca popularized a theory of Church government which minimized in various ways the authority claimed by the Papacy over the national Churches ('royal Gallicanism') and over the individual bishops ('episcopal Gallicanism'). In 1663 the Sorbonne published a declaration, the substance of which was reaffirmed by the *Assembly of the French clergy in 1682 in the formula known as the Four *Gallican Articles (q.v.). This declaration, though solemnly withdrawn by king and clergy in 1693, remained the typical Gallican manifesto. Gallican principles were preached throughout the 18th cent. by the opponents of the bull '*Unigenitus', and once more officially codified and proclaimed for the use of other national Churches at the synod of *Pistoia in 1786. The *Organic Articles added to Napoleon's concordat of 1801 included Gallican provisions, and Napoleon himself favoured the Gallican party among his clergy. After the Restoration, however, the work of the *Jesuits, and of such writers as J. *de Maistre and F. R. de *Lamennais, bore fruit in a renascence of *Ultramontanism in France, so that F. *Dupanloup, H. Maret (1805–84), and A. J. A. *Gratry found little support for their moderate Gallican positions at the time of the First Vatican Council (1869–70). The definition of Papal *Infallibility at the Council had the effect of making Gallican principles, at least in the field of dogma, incompatible with the profession of *Roman Catholicism. Although the main aims of Gallicanism in the 19th cent. concerned matters of administration (the freedom of bishops from undue interference by the Curia) and liturgy (the preservation of local rites, such as that of *Lyons) rather than belief, after the Council Gallicanism had only a historical importance. See also FEBRONIANISM.

L. Mention (ed.), Documents relatifs aux rapports du clergé avec le royauté de 1682 à 1705 (Collection de Textes pour servir à l'Étude et à l'Enseignement de l'Histoire, 1893). N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme en occident (4 vols., 1896–1902), passim. V. Martin, Les Origines du gallicanisme (2 vols., 1939); id., Le Gallicanisme et la réforme catholique: Essai historique sur l'introduction en France des décrets du concile de Trente (1563–1615) (1919); id., Le Gallicanisme politique et le clergé de France (Université de Strasbourg, Bibliothèque de l'Institut de Droit Canonique, 3; 1929). A.-G. Martimort, Le Gallicanisme de Bossuet (Unam Sanctam, 24; 1953). A. Gough, Paris and Rome: The Gallican Church and the Ultramontane Campaign 1848–1853 (Oxford, 1986). M. O'Gara, Triumph in Defeat: Infallibility, Vatican I, and the French Minority Bishops (Washington, DC [1988]). J. Lecler, 'Qu'est-ce que les libertés de l'Église Gallicane?', Rech. S.R. 23 (1933), pp. 385–410, 542–68; 24 (1934), pp. 47–85; G. Mollat, 'Les Origines du gallicanisme parlementaire aux XIV[e] et XV[e] siècles', RHE 43 (1948), pp. 90–147; R. Thysman, 'Le Gallicanisme de Mgr Maret et l'influence de Bossuet', ibid. 52 (1957), pp. 401–65. H. Dubruel and H. X. Arquillière in A. d'Alès, SJ (ed.), Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique, 2 (1911), cols. 193–273, with full bibl. refs.; M. Dubruel in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1096–137, s.v.; R. Laprat in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 426–525, s.v. 'Libertés de l'Église gallicane (Gallicanisme)'. J. Turmel in HERE 6 (1913), pp. 156–63, s.v.; C. Berthelot du Chesnay in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 262–7, s.v.

Gallio, Lucius Junius. The brother of *Seneca, he was the Proconsul of Achaia before whom St *Paul was accused at *Corinth (Acts 18: 12). That he held office in AD 52 is established by an inscription found at Delphi in 1905; this is an important fixed date in NT chronology.

Prosopographia Imperii Romani (2nd edn.), 4, ed. A. Stein and L. Petersen (Berlin, 1966), pp. 335 f. (no. 757), s.v. 'L. Iunius Gallio Annaeanus', which cites the literary and epigraphic evidence of his career. Convenient summary in M. Black and H. H. Rowley (eds.), Peake's Commentary on the Bible (1962), p. 914. K. Haacker in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 901–3.

Gallus, Thomas. See THOMAS GALLUS.

Gamaliel. The great Jewish rabbi, 'had in reputation among all the people' (Acts 5: 34), who was the teacher of St *Paul in his pre-Christian days (Acts 22: 3). He was a grandson of the liberal *Hillel, and his broad, tolerant views were well exemplified in his attitude to St *Peter and his companions (Acts 5: 34–40). It has been doubted, but on insufficient grounds, whether so fiery and intolerant a character as St Paul could have sat at the feet of such a tolerant master. Acc. to a late and prob. worthless tradition in the *Clementine Recognitions (1. 65), Gamaliel afterwards became a Christian.

E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 367 f., with refs. H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 2 (1924), pp. 636–9; H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud and Midrasch, 7th edn., rev. by G. Stemberger [1982], p. 74 f.; Eng. tr. (Edinburgh, 1991), p. 73. See also comm. to ACTS.

gambling. See BETTING AND GAMBLING.

Gams, Pius Bonifatius (1816–92), Church historian. A native of Württemberg, he became a professor at Hildesheim in 1847, and in 1855 a *Benedictine at St Boniface's monastery at Munich. His two chief works are a history of the Church of Spain (Kirchengeschichte von Spanien, 3 vols., 1862–79), a massive compilation, but somewhat uncritical in its treatment of sources; and an invaluable Series Episcoporum (Ratisbon, 1873; supplement, 1886; the whole photographically repr., Graz, 1957), which contains, arranged acc. to their sees, the names of all the known bishops in communion with Rome down to that date.

F. Lauchert, 'Die kirchengeschichtlichen und zeitgeschichtlichen Arbeiten von P. B. Gams in Zusammenhang gewürdigt', Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benediktiner- und dem Cistercienser-Orden, 27 (1906), pp. 634–49; 28 (1907), pp. 53–71, 299–305, with list of his works, pp. 305–15.

Gandolphy, Peter (1779–1821), *Jesuit preacher. Born in London and educated abroad, he attained fame as a preacher at the Spanish Chapel in Manchester Square, London, where he made many converts. In 1812 he issued A Liturgy, or Book of Common Prayers and Administration of Sacraments . . . for the Use of all Christians in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, which was modelled upon the Anglican Prayer Book. This publication, together with his sermons, caused him to be accused by his ordinary, Bp. W. Poynter (d. 1827), of heresy. Although vindicated by the Congregation of *Propaganda in Rome (1817), he gave up his work in London (1818) and retired to his family home at East Sheen.

Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 1181 f., s.v.; T. Cooper in DNB 20 (1889), pp. 400 f., s.v., with further refs.

Gang-Days. An obsolete title of the three *Rogation Days (the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before *Ascension Day) from the ancient practice of perambulating the parish bounds on those days. The forms 'Gang-Monday' 'Gang-Week', are also met with.

Gangra, Council of. A Council held at Gangra in Paphlagonia *c.*341. It passed 20 canons, directed against a false asceticism (led by *Eustathius, Bp. of Sebaste) which condemned marriage and avoided the ordinary services of the Church. To these canons are added an epilogue, often called 'canon 21', explaining the true nature of asceticism. The canons are not in themselves important; but, as they were included in the first Greek corpus translated into Latin, they attained a very wide circulation.

Hardouin, 1, cols. 529–40; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 1095–122; crit. edn. of Lat. texts in EOMIA 2. 2 (1913), pp. 145–214; Lat. and Gk. texts also pr., with Fr. tr., in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 83–99. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 1029–45. J. Gribomont, OSB, 'Le Monachisme au IV^e s. en Asie Mineure: de Gangres au Messalianisme', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 2 (TU 64; 1957), pp. 400–15, esp. pp. 400–7. T. D. Barnes, 'The Date of the Council of Gangra', JTS NS 40 (1989), pp. 121–4 [argues for c.355]. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 13 f. (nos. 8553 f.). G. Bardy in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 935–8, s.v. 'Gangres (Concile de)'.

Gansfort, Wessel. See WESSEL.

Garden of Eden. See EDEN, GARDEN OF.

Garden of Gethsemane. See GETHSEMANE, GARDEN OF.

Garden of the Soul, The. The 'Manual of Spiritual Exercises and Instructions for Christians who, living in the world, aspire to Devotion' compiled by R. *Challoner and first published in 1740. It at once became a favourite with English RCs and has remained in continuous use until recent years, though in the course of 200 years parts of it have been modified almost out of recognition. The influence exercised by the earlier editions in moulding the deep but sober piety of English RCs, before more Italian forms of devotion became popular, led the older school sometimes to be called 'Garden-of-the-Soul Catholics'.

See bibl. to CHALLONER, R.

Gardiner, Stephen (c.1497–1555), Bp. of *Winchester. From 1525 to 1549 he was master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and took an active interest in promoting Greek studies in the university. He was employed by *Henry VIII and T. *Wolsey on diplomatic business, notably in the negotiations with Rome for annulling the marriage with Catherine of Aragon, and in 1533 acted as an assessor in the court which finally declared the marriage null and void. In 1531 he had been given the see of Winchester. He accepted, at least for a time, the royal supremacy over the Church, arguing in his De Vera Obedientia (1535) that the Pope had no legitimate power over national Churches. He was strongly opposed to the Reformist influences of T. *Cromwell, but prob. was not personally responsible for the *Six Articles. By the end of Henry's reign he was regarded as the chief opponent in England of the Reformation doctrines. In *Edward VI's reign he was imprisoned in the Tower (1548) and deprived of his bishopric (1551), but was restored to his see by *Mary, and became Lord High Chancellor. He approved of the submission of England to Rome, but was instrumental in securing the retention of the property of the dissolved monasteries by their lay owners. The mediating course which he followed in the reign of Henry VIII has led his character to be variously judged.

H. Chitty and H. E. Malden (eds.), Registra Stephani Gardiner et Johannis Poynet, Episcoporum Wintoniensium (*Canterbury and York Society, 37; 1930), pp. 1–91; J. A. Muller (ed.), Letters of Stephen Gardiner (1933). P. Janelle (ed.), Obedience in Church and State: Three Political Tracts by Stephen Gardiner (1930). Second (1553) edn. of Eng. tr. of De Vera Obedientia, repr. Leeds, 1966. J. S. Brewer (ed.), State Papers, 7–11 (1849–52), passim. J. A. Muller, Stephen Gardiner and the Tudor Reaction (1926). G. Redworth, In Defence of the Church Catholic: A Life of Stephen Gardiner (Oxford, 1990).

Garnet or Garnett, Henry (1555–1606), English *Jesuit. He became a RC while a boy, went to Rome, and studied under R. *Bellarmine. In 1586 he set out to work on the English Mission, of which he became Superior in 1587. He was arrested and executed, some months after the *Gunpowder Plot, for complicity in it. Though he certainly had some knowledge of it beforehand, it is disputed whether his information was entirely gained through a confessional case, referred to him under the *seal, or whether he had independent evidence. In support of the latter view is the fact that, although English law gave no protection to the confessional, the prosecution apparently preferred not to use evidence based upon it. In any case, it was not suggested that Garnet personally took part in the plot; he was condemned and executed for not having revealed his knowledge of it.

Life in H. Foley, SJ, Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 4 (1878), pp. 35–192. P. Caraman, Henry Garnet 1555–1606 and the Gunpowder Plot (1964). A. F. Allison, 'The Writings of Fr. Henry Garnet, SJ', Biographical Studies, 1 (1951), pp. 7–21. See also works cited s.v. GUNPOWDER PLOT.

Garnier, Jean (1612–81), *Jesuit patristic scholar. A native of *Paris, he entered the Society of Jesus at Rouen in 1628 and taught theology at the Collège de *Clermont at Paris from 1653 to 1679. In 1673 he published his edition of *Marius Mercator (in J. P. *Migne, PL 48) with valuable treatises on *Pelagianism and *Nestorianism which were the basis of all subsequent research on both subjects. In 1680 he edited the 'Liber Diurnus' of the Roman pontiffs, adding historical, doctrinal, and critical notes esp. on the ordinations and professions of faith of the Popes, and a treatise on the orthodoxy of Pope *Honorius I (also reproduced in Migne, PL 105, but without the treatise on Honorius). He also completed J. *Sirmond's edition of *Theodoret (1684; posthumous), with critical essays on his works and doctrine. He published, besides, several works on Scholastic philosophy and on moral and doctrinal theology.

He is not to be confounded with Julien Garnier, OSB (1670–1725), the *Maurist editor of St *Basil.

Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 1228–32; 9 (1900), col. 398. H. Foerster (ed.), Liber Diurnus Romanorum Pontificum (Berne, 1958), pp. 15–20. P. Bernard in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1160–3.

Gascoigne, Thomas (1403–58), English scholar and theologian. He was born at Hunslet, nr. Leeds, and educated at *Oxford, probably at Oriel, where he continued to live for the rest of his life. He was frequently either chancellor or vice-chancellor of the university. Ordained priest in 1427, he held the rectory of Kirk Deighton for a short time; but with the exception of a prebendal stall in *Wells Cathedral, he declined nearly all other ecclesiastical offices, including the chancellorship of *York Minster, to devote himself to scholarly pursuits. He was also very active as a preacher and, though hostile to *Wycliffite influences, severe in his denunciations of pluralities, appropriations, and other ecclesiastical and monastic abuses. His principal work was the 'Liber Veritatum' or 'Dictionarium Theologicum' (written between 1431 and 1457), a theological dictionary which is both an important guide to the political and religious history of the time and an interesting revelation of Gascoigne's own views.

'Collectanea Historica' from Gascoigne's Dictionarium Theologicum pr. in T. *Hearne's edn. of Walter Hemingford (fl. 1300), Historia de Rebus Gestis Edwardi I, Edwardi II et Edwardi III, 2 (1731), pp. 509–50, with Life, pp. 504–8; J. E. T. Rogers (ed.), Loci e Libro Veritatum: Passages Selected from Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary Illustrating the Condition of the Church and State, 1403–1453 (1881). W. A. Pronger, 'Thomas Gascoigne', EHR 53 (1938), pp. 606–26; 54 (1939), pp. 20–37. R. L. Poole in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 41–4; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 745–8.

Gasquet, Francis Aidan (1846–1929), cardinal and historian. Born in London of an old Provençal family, he was educated at *Downside and entered the *Benedictine Order in 1866. Elected Prior of Downside in 1878, he raised the standard of both priory and school and considerably enlarged their scope. From 1885 he carried on research at the British Library and Public Record Office. In 1896 he went to Rome, where he played an important part as a member of the Commission on *Anglican Ordinations. On his return he became chairman of the commission for the reform of the English Benedictine Congregation, whose abbot-president he was from 1900 to 1914. In 1907 *Pius X made him president of the International Commission for the Revision of the *Vulgate. In 1914 he was created cardinal, and henceforward resided in Rome. On the death of Pius X he took part in the conclave, countering anti-British propaganda, and negotiated for the appointment of a British minister to the Vatican. He became Prefect of the Archives of the Holy See in 1917, and two years later *Vatican Librarian. In most of his historical work Gasquet was closely associated with Edmund *Bishop. His writings increased knowledge of medieval English monasticism, though in his later years his inaccuracy was exposed by G. G. Coulton and others. His works include Henry VIII and the English Monasteries (2 vols., 1888–9), which caused a great stir, Religio Religiosi (1918), and Monastic Life in the Middle Ages (1922).

Notes by J. C. Fowler, OSB, B. Kuypers, OSB, and C. Butler, OSB, in The Downside Review, 47 (1929), pp. 123–56, incl. bibl. of his works, pp. 147–9. S. Leslie, Cardinal Gasquet: A Memoir (1953). M. D. *Knowles, Cardinal Gasquet as an Historian (Creighton Lecture; 1957); repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 240–63. E. C. Butler, OSB, in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 330–2.

Gauden, John (1605–62), Bp. of *Worcester. He was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, studied later also at Wadham College, Oxford, and in 1640 became Vicar of Chippenham, Cambs. In the early days of the Civil War his sympathies were with Parliament, and for a short time in 1643 he was a member of the *Westminster Assembly. Later he changed his opinions, but was able none the less to retain his living throughout the Commonwealth period. At the Restoration in 1660 he was made Bp. of *Exeter, and in 1662 was translated, not, as he had hoped, to *Winchester, but to Worcester. He published several controversial works against the *Puritans, including his monumental Ecclesiae Anglicanae Suspiria (1659), and defences of the Anglican ministry and liturgy. He was probably the author of the Eikon Basilike* (q.v.), alleged to have been written by *Charles I in prison.

See bibl. s.v. EIKON BASILIKE. R. Hooper in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 69–72.

Gaudentius, St (4th–5th cent.), Bp. of Brescia. A friend of St *Ambrose, he succeeded *Philaster in the see of Brescia before 397. In 404–5 he journeyed to Constantinople to plead with the Emperor on behalf of St *Chrysostom, but without avail. Twenty-one of his sermons survive, including a set of 10 delivered in Easter week which have many references to the Eucharist. Feast day, 25 Oct.

Sermons pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 827–1002; crit. edn. by A. Glueck (CSEL 68; 1936). J. Wittig, Filaster, Gaudentius und Ambrosiaster (Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen, no. 8; Breslau, 1909), pp. 1–56. C. R. Norcock, 'St Gaudentius of Brescia and the Tome of St Leo', JTS 15 (1913–14), pp. 593–6; Y. M. Duval, 'Saint Léon le Grand et saint Gaudence de Brescia', ibid. NS 11 (1960), pp. 82–4. F. Trisoglio, San Gaudenzio da Brescia scrittore (Turin, 1960); id., 'Appunti per una ricerca delle Fonti di S. Gaudenzio da Brescia', Rivista di Studi Classici, 24 (1976), pp. 50–125. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 133–5. P. Viard in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 139–43, s.v., with bibl.

Gaudete Sunday. The Third in *Advent, from the opening word of the *Introit. As on Mid-Lent Sunday (*Laetare) rose-coloured vestments may be worn.

Gaume, Jean Joseph (1802–79), theological writer. Ordained priest in 1825, he spent his earlier years in teaching and pastoral work at Nevers. Later he was Vicar General successively of *Reims and Montauban. He came to notice through his advocacy of excluding the pagan classics from all Christian schools and substituting patristic texts; he was supported by L. *Veuillot but controverted by F. *Dupanloup among others. His extensive writings (of unequal value) include Le Manuel des confesseurs (1837; 11th edn., 1880), Catéchisme de persévérance (8 vols., 1838), L'Europe en 1848 (1848), Lettres à Monseigneur Dupanloup, évêque d'Orléans, sur le paganisme dans l'éducation (1852), Bibliothèque des classiques chrétiens (30 vols., 1852–5), La Révolution (12 vols., 1856–9), and Pie IX et les études classiques (1875). The first named, pub. in an adapted Eng. tr. for the use of Anglican confessors by E. B. *Pusey (1877), was also widely used in England.

A. Ricard, Étude sur Mgr Gaume: Ses œuvres, son influence, ses polémiques (1872). H. P. *Liddon, Life of E. B. Pusey, 4 (1897), pp. 303–6. E. Mangenot in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1168–71; J. Guerber, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 147 f.; supplementary material (unsigned) in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 65 f., s.v.

Gaunilo, Count. The 11th-cent. Benedictine monk of Marmoutier, near Tours, who, in the guise of the 'fool' (cf. Ps. 14: 1), criticized in his Liber pro insipiente the validity of the *Ontological Argument for the existence of God which St *Anselm had formulated in his Proslogion. Anselm replied with his Liber apologeticus adversus respondentem pro insipiente.

Gavanti, Bartolommeo (1569–1638), *Barnabite liturgical scholar. He took an important part in the reform of the *Breviary and *Missal under Popes *Clement VIII and *Urban VIII. In his Thesaurus sacrorum rituum, seu Commentaria in rubricas Missalis et Breviarii Romani (Rome, 1628), his most considerable work, he brings together much historical information on the origin and mystical significance of W. liturgical practice.

Opera Theologico-Canonica (2 vols., bound in 1, Venice, 1760). O. Premoli, Barnabite, Storia dei Barnabiti nel seicento (1922), pp. 178–82; G. Boffito, Barnabite, Scrittori barnabiti, 2 (1933), pp. 132–48. P. Rippa, Barnabite, in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 130–4, s.v.

Geddes, Jenny. Acc. to tradition, the name of a vegetable-seller who, on Sunday, 23 July 1637, threw her folding stool at the head of David Lindsay, Bp. of Edinburgh, in St Giles' Cathedral when the new and hated Scottish Prayer Book was used for the first time.

The occurrence of a tumult on the introduction of the Scottish BCP is recorded in the contemporary annals. The name of 'Jane or Janot Gaddis (yet living at the time of this relation)' is apparently first mentioned in Richard Baker, A Chronicle of the Kings of England from the Time of the Romans Government unto the Death of King James. Continuation [by E. Phillips], 5th impression (1670), p. 478.

Gehenna (Gk. γέεννα). Lit. 'the Valley of Hinnom' (Heb. גֵּי הִנֹּם); the meaning of Hinnom is unknown. It was orig. used purely topographically, prob. for the Wady er-Rabâbi to the SW and S. of Jerusalem, which joined at the SE of the city with the valley of the *Cedron, though it has sometimes (e.g. by Sir Charles Warren) been identified with the Cedron. In this sense the 'Valley of Hinnom' is mentioned at Jos. 15: 8 and 18: 16. From early times it was a place of human sacrifice, esp. to Moloch at Topheth (cf. 2 Kgs. 16: 3, 21: 6), and as such was polluted by Josiah (2 Kgs. 23: 10–12); *Jeremiah warned that a time would come when it would be renamed the 'Valley of Slaughter' (Jer. 7: 32, 19: 6). In later Jewish thought it was increasingly looked upon as a Divinely appointed place of punishment for apostates and other great sinners (e.g. 1 *Enoch 27: 2 f.; 90: 26 f.; 2 *Esdras 7: 36–8). Hence in the NT the word is used for the final place of torment for the wicked after the Last Judgement (Mt. 5: 29, 10: 28, 18: 9; Jas. 3: 6; EVV 'hell'). The statement of Kimchi (c. AD 1200) that fires were continually kept burning in the Valley of Hinnom has commonly been accepted by modern commentators; but it seems to be without earlier authority.

H. Vincent, OP, Jérusalem, 1 (1912), pp. 123–34. H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum NT aus Talmud und Midrasch, 4 (1928), pp. 1029–1118. J. Jeremias in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 655 f.; Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 657 f., s.v. γέεννα, with bibl. refs.; J. Chaine in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 3 (1938), cols. 563–79, s.v.; D. F. Watson in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 926–8, s.v.

Geiler von Kaisersberg, Johann (1445–1510), 'the German *Savonarola', preacher. Born at Schaffhausen on the Rhine, Geiler (also 'Geyler') was educated at Ammersweiher, nr. Kaisersberg (also 'Kaysersberg') in Alsace, and Freiburg University. He was ordained priest in 1470. From 1465 to 1471 he lectured on *Aristotle at Freiburg and from 1471 to 1476 on theology at Basle, where he also preached in the cathedral. In 1476 he returned to Freiburg as professor, becoming rector of the university in the same year. But his reforming interests soon led him to abandon academic work; and after declining an invitation to a pulpit at Würzburg on grounds of patriotism he accepted a special office of preacher created for him in the cathedral of the neighbouring Strasbourg in 1478. Except for a short interval he remained here for the rest of his life.

Geiler was an uncommonly forceful and impressive preacher. In spite of his austere moral ideals and his denunciation of the vices of all classes, his freshness, vivacity, apt illustration, and knowledge of the human heart won and held his hearers. Although he demanded reform, he never seems to have contemplated abandoning the Church. Personally something of a mystic, he is said to have enjoyed preaching but been haunted by fears arising from his work in the confessional.

He did not publish his own sermons, which survive in texts taken down by his hearers or elaborated by others from his notes. Among the most interesting is the series based on Sebastian Brant's Narrenschiff ('Ship of Fools'). His other works include an edition of the works of J. *Gerson (4 vols., 1488–1502).

Ausgewählte Schriften, ed. P. de Lorenzi (4 vols., Trier, 1881–3); Älteste Schriften, ed. L. Dacheux (Freiburg i.B., 1882); Sämtliche Werke, ed. G. Bauer (Ausgaben deutscher Literatur des XV. bis XVIII. Jahrhunderts, 129, 139, 149, etc.; 1989 ff.). C. Schmidt, Histoire littéraire de l'Alsace à la fin du XV^e et au commencement du XVI^e siècle, 2 (1879), pp. 373–90, for details of the early edns. of his works. His Life by Beatus *Rhenanus was pub. at Strasbourg, 1510; modern edn., with extensive notes on Geiler by Jacob Wimpfeling, ed. O. Herding, Jacobi Wimpfeling Opera Selecta, 2. 1 (Munich, 1970). L. Dacheux, Un Réformateur catholique à la fin du XV^e siècle (1876). C. Schmidt, op. cit., 1 (1879), pp. 337–461. E. Breitenstein, OMI, 'Die Quellen der Geiler von Kaysersberg zugeschriebenen Emeis', Archiv für Elsässische Kirchengeschichte, 13 (1938), pp. 149–202. E. J. D. Douglass, Justification in late medieval preaching: A Study of John Geiler von Keisersberg (Leiden, 1966). H. Kraume, Die Gerson-Übersetzungen Geilers von Kaysersberg: Studien zur deutschsprachigen Gerson-Rezeption (Münchener Texte und Untersuchungen zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 71; 1980), with extensive bibl. F. Rapp in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 174–9; id. in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 159–62, both s.v.

Geisshäussler, Oswald. See MYCONIUS.

Gelasian Decree, the. See DECRETUM GELASIANUM.

Gelasian Sacramentary. Considerable confusion arises from the fact that the term is applied both to a particular MS (Vat. Reg. Lat. 316) and to the class of Sacramentaries to which it belongs. The Vatican MS, which dates from the mid-8th cent., is the oldest known Roman Sacramentary in which the Feasts are arranged acc. to the ecclesiastical year. Acc. to B. Bischoff, it was written by the nuns of Chelles in the neighbourhood of Paris. It contains certain Gallican elements, e.g. mention of Francorum imperium in the *Good Friday prayers.

Vat. Reg. Lat. 316 and other like MSS (Gelasians in the broader sense, sometimes known as 'Gelasians of the 8th century') contain the Roman *Canon of the Mass in nearly its traditional form. This Frankish Gelasianum, which embodied other Roman material as well as Gallican elements, circulated widely in Gaul later in the 8th cent. The ascription of the text in any of these forms to Pope *Gelasius (492–6) has been shown by B. *Capelle to be mistaken.

Vat. Reg. Lat. 316 was first pr. by G. M. *Tommasi, Codices Sacramentorum Nongentis Annis Vetustiores (Rome, 1680), pp. 13–262. Modern edns., incl. collations with other MSS, by H. A. Wilson (Oxford, 1894) and L. C. Mohlberg, OSB (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 4; Rome, 1960). Photographic edn. of Vat. Reg. Lat. 316, with essays by L. M. Tocci and B. Neunheuser, OSB (2 vols., Vatican City, 1975). E. Bourque, Études sur les sacramentaires romains, pt. 2, vol. 1: Le Gélasien du VIIIᵉ siècle (Bibliothèque théologique de Laval; Quebec, 1952). A. Chavasse, Le Sacramentaire Gélasien (Vaticanus Reginensis 316): Sacramentaire presbytéral en usage dans les titres romains au VIIᵉ siècle (Bibliothèque de Théologie, 4th ser. 1; 1958). B. Capelle, OSB, 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Gélase', JTS NS 2 (1951), pp. 129–44, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 146–60; B. Bischoff, 'Die Kölner Nonnenhandschriften und das Skriptorium von Chelles', in Karolingische und Ottonische Kunst, ed. F. Gerke and others (Forschungen zur Kunstgeschichte und christlichen Archäologie, 3; Wiesbaden, 1957), pp. 395–411, repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 1 (Stuttgart, 1966), pp. 16–34. [M.] B. Moreton, The Eighth-Century Gelasian Sacramentary (Oxford, 1976). Vogel, Sources, pp. 64–78. H. Ashworth, OSB, in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 794 f., s.v. 'Sacramentaries', with bibl. pp. 799 f. See also following entry.

Gelasius, St (d. 496), Pope from 492. Acc. to his own account he was 'Romanus natus', but the Liber Pontificalis* asserts that he was 'natione Afer'. On his accession to the Papacy he continued the policy of his predecessor, Felix III, in tenaciously upholding the primacy of the Roman see against *Constantinople during the *Acacian schism. His genuine writings include a treatise on the Two Natures in Christ (Adversus Eutychen et Nestorium), other works on the Acacian conflict, and a large collection of Letters on practical matters arising out of *Arianism, *Pelagianism, and *Manichaeism, and various disciplinary subjects. To rebut the Manichaean abhorrence of wine, he insisted on the Eucharist being received in both kinds. He also laid down (Ep. 15) the long established rule that ordinations should be at what were later called the *Ember Seasons. A famous passage on the superiority of the ecclesiastical to the civil power in Ep. 12 (ad Imp. Anastasium) influenced much medieval political doctrine. Although it is now agreed that the Gelasian Sacramentary, as well as the Decretum Gelasianum are wrongly attributed to him, some scholars have traced his work in the *Leonine Sacramentary (q.v.). The famous letter to the senator Andromachus concerning the *Lupercalia, and two Masses in the Gelasian Sacramentary related to it, may be the work of his predecessor. Feast day, 21 Nov.

His Epp. (many, esp. in relation to his brief pontificate) are listed in Jaffé, pp. 83–95. Text of his letters, and other docs., in J. P. Migne, PL 59. 13–190; further material in Supplementum, ed. A. Hamman, OFM, 3 (1963), cols. 739–87. Crit. edn. of 'Adversus Andromachum contra Lupercalia' and the Masses in the Leonine Sacramentary attributed to Gelasius by G. Pomarès (SC 65; 1959). LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 255–7. W. Ullmann, Gelasius I. (492–496): Das Papsttum an der Wende der Spätantike zum Mittelalter (Päpste und Papsttum, 18; 1981), with bibl. H. Koch, Gelasius im kirchenpolitischen Dienste seiner Vorgänger, der Päpste Simplicius, 468–483, und Felix III, 483–492 (Sb. (Bayr.), 1935, Heft 6). A. K. Ziegler, 'Pope Gelasius I and his Teaching on the Relation of Church and State', Catholic Historical Review, 27 (1942), pp. 412–37. On his liturgical work, see B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Messes du pape S. Gélase dans le sacramentaire léonien', R. Bén. 56 (1945–6), pp. 12–41; id., 'Retouches gélasiennes dans le sacramentaire léonien', ibid. 61 (1951), pp. 3–14; id., 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Gélase', JTS NS 2 (1951), pp. 129–44; all repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 79–115 and 146–60; C. Coebergh, OSB, 'Le Pape Saint Gélase Iᵉʳ auteur de plusieurs messes et préfaces du soi-disant Sacramentaire léonien', Sacris Erudiri, 4 (1952), pp. 46–102. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 462 f., and 649. J. Chapin in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 315 f.

Gelasius (d. 395), Bp. of *Caesarea in Palestine from *c.*367. He was the son of St *Cyril of Jerusalem's sister. A convinced *Nicene, Gelasius was ousted from his see during the reign of Valens (when Euzoïus was intruded), returning on the accession of *Theodosius in 379. He wrote: (1) a continuation of *Eusebius' 'Ecclesiastical History'. Possibly (so A. Glas, P. Heseler) this was the basis of *Rufinus' last two books, but more probably (P. van den Veen, P. Peeters, SJ) the latter was an original work; (2) A treatise against the *Anomoeans; (3) An 'Expositio Symboli', a work prob. akin to Cyril's 'Catechetical Lectures', of which fragments survive.

He is praised by *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 130, and *Theodoret, HE 5. 8. Coll. of frags., with introd., by F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 117; 1938), pp. 16–49 (frags., pp. 44–9). A. Glas, Die Kirchengeschichte des Gelasios von Kaisareia (Byzantinisches Archiv, 6; 1914); F. Winkelmann, Untersuchungen zur Kirchengeschichte des Gelasios von Kaisareia (Sb. (Berl.), Klasse für Sprachen, Literatur und Kunst, Jahrgang 1965, no. 3; 1966). CPG 2 (1974), p. 276 (nos. 3520 f.). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 225 f. and 593, with full bibl.

Gelasius of Cyzicus (fl. 475), ecclesiastical historian. He wrote a 'Syntagma', or collection of the Acta of the *Nicene Council (325), to refute the *Monophysite claim that their faith was identical with that professed by the Nicene Fathers. It has been shown that Gelasius made use of good sources such as *Eusebius, *Rufinus, *Socrates, and *Theodoret, but his book has little, if any, independent historical value. Its existence has sometimes been supposed (prob. wrongly) to lend support to the view that an official record of the Acta of Nicaea was current in the early Church.

J. P. Migne, PG 85. 1191–1360. Crit. edn. by G. Loeschcke and M. Heinemann (GCS, 1918). G. Loeschcke, 'Das Syntagma des Gelasius Cyzicenus', Rheinisches Museum, 60 (1905), pp. 594–613, and 61 (1906), pp. 34–77. C. H. *Turner, 'On Gelasius of Cyzicus', JTS 1 (1899), pp. 125 f. F. Winkelmann, 'Die Quellen der Historia Ecclesiastica des Gelasius von Cyzicus (nach 475)', Byzantinoslavica, 27 (1966), pp. 104–30.

Gellert, Christian Fürchtegott (1715–69), German poet. He spent most of his life at Leipzig, where he became a teacher at the university. He wrote, besides fables on the model of La Fontaine, many Church hymns which became very popular among both *Lutherans and Catholics. They include the familiar Easter hymn, 'Jesus lives! thy terrors now'. Some of them were set to music by L. van Beethoven.

Sämtliche Schriften, ed. J. A. Schlegel and G. L. Heyer (10 vols., Leipzig, 1769–74), with Life by J. A. Cramer as vol. 10. Gesammelte Schriften also ed. B. Witte and others (Berlin and New York, 1988 ff.); Briefwechsel ed. J. F. Reynolds (ibid., 1983 ff.). B. Witte (ed.), 'Ein Lehrer der ganzen Nation': Leben und Werk Christian Fürchtegott Gellerts (Munich, 1990). Eng. Life in Mrs Douglas's tr. of Gellert's Moral Lessons delivered . . . in the University of Leipzig (3 vols., 1805), vol. 1. R. Mohr in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 298–300, s.v., with bibl.

Gellone, Sacramentary of. An early Sacramentary of the *Gelasian ('of the 8th cent.') type, written not earlier than 790, and a primary authority for the history of the early Roman liturgy. It formerly belonged to the *Benedictine abbey of Gellone, near Aniane, whence it passed in the 17th cent. to *St-Germain-des-Prés and in 1795 to the Bibliothèque Nationale, where it is now Par. lat. 12048.

Text ed. A. Dumas, OSB, with introd. by J. Deshusses, OSB (CCSL 159–159A; 1981). E. Bourque, Études sur les sacramentaires romains, pt. 2, vol. 1 (Bibliothèque Théologique de Laval; Quebec, 1952), pp. 3–6, 47–80.

Gemara. A name used of the Rabbinic commentary on the *Mishnah to be found in the *Talmud. The Gemara of the Babylonian Talmud is written in E. Aramaic (a language closely allied to *Syriac), that of the Palestinian Talmud in W. Aramaic.

Gematria. A method of interpretation employed by the Rabbis to extract hidden meanings from words. The name 'Gematria', which is Hebrew, is perhaps a corruption of the Greek word γεωμετρία ('geometry'). As in Hebrew every letter possessed a numerical value, it was possible, by counting up the values of the letters in a Hebrew word, to assign to it a numerical value; and on this basis the method operated. Thus the Rabbis argued that Eliezer, the steward of *Abraham (Gen. 15: 2), must be worth all the servants of Abraham put together, on the ground that Abraham had 318 servants (Gen. 14: 14), and 318 is the numerical equivalent of the word Eliezer.

This strange method of interpretation was also occasionally used by Babylonians and by Greeks in the Hellenistic period, and by early Christians. In Rev. 13: 18 the number of the Beast is given as 666, and this is the numerical equivalent of the two Hebrew words for 'Nero Caesar'. In the Ep. of Barnabas (c. 9) gematria is applied on the basis of the corresponding number of the Greek numerals, to give a mystical significance to the number of Abraham's servants. 300 = τ = the Cross, and 18 = ιη the first two letters of the name Jesus. Therefore the number of servants typifies Jesus and the Cross.

S. Waldberg, Darkhe ha-shinnuyim [in Heb.] (Lwów, 1870). F. Dornseiff, Das Alphabet in Mystik und Magie (Στοιχεῖα, 7; 1922), pp. 91–118. G. Scholem in Encyclopedia Judaica, 7 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 369–74, s.v. See also bibl. to KABBALA.

Gemistus Plethon, Georgius (*c.*1355–1452), Renaissance scholar. A native of *Constantinople, from the beginning of the 15th cent. he lived in Mistra in the Peloponnese, involving himself in matters of state and enjoying a reputation for wisdom. He conceived a great veneration for the doctrines of *Plato, and exchanged his original name for that of 'Plethon', apparently through its similar sound with that of his master. In 1438–9, when, as one of the E. spokesmen, he attended the Council of *Florence, he was welcomed with enthusiasm by some of the Italian humanists, notably Cosimo de' Medici, though it is difficult to assess the extent of his influence in the W. He set forth his philosophical doctrines in his 'Laws' (Νόμοι), a work (of which only fragments survive) written on the model of the 'Laws' of Plato. He was less interested in theology than in philosophical speculation; but he wrote in defence of the E. doctrine of the *Procession of the Holy Spirit.

Although much of his work survives in autograph, until recently little had been ed. in accordance with modern standards; cf. A. Diller, 'The Autographs of Georgius Gemistus Pletho', Scriptorium, 10 (1956), pp. 27–41. Works collected in J. P. Migne, PG 160. 805–1020. Frags. of the 'Laws', ed. C. Alexandre, with Fr. tr. by A. Pellissier (Paris, 1858). B. Lagarde, 'Le "De Differentiis" de Pléthon d'après l'autographe de la Marcienne', Byzantion, 43 (1973), pp. 312–43 (incl. text); L. G. Benakis, 'Πλήθωνος, Πρὸς Ἠρωτημένα ἄττα Ἀπόκρισις', Φιλοσοφία, 4 (1974), pp. 330–76 (incl. text). Crit. ed., with Fr. tr., of his treatise 'On the Virtues' (Περὶ ἀρετῶν) by B. Tambrun-Krasker (Corpus Philosophorum Medii Aevi, 3; Leiden, etc., 1987). Contra Scholarii pro Aristotele Objectiones, ed. E. V. Maltese (Teub., 1988); Opuscula de Historia Graeca, ed. id. (ibid., 1989). I. P. Mamalakis, Γεώργιος Γεμιστὸς-Πλήθων (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, 32; Athens, 1939). M. V. Anastos, 'Pletho's Calendar and Liturgy', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 4 (Cambridge, Mass., 1948), pp. 183–305. F. Masai, Pléthon et le platonisme de Mistra (1956). T. S. Nikolaou, Αἱ περὶ πολιτείας καὶ δικαίου ἰδέαι τοῦ Γ. Πλήθωνος Γεμιστοῦ (Byzantine Texts and Studies, 13; Thessalonica, 1974). C. M. Woodhouse, George Gemistos Plethon: The Last of the Hellenes (Oxford, 1986), incl. Eng. tr. of De Differentiis. E. Stéphanou in DTC 12 (1933), cols. 2393–404, s.v. 'Pléthon', with further bibl.

Gemma Galgani, St. See GALGANI, ST GEMMA.

genealogies of Christ. The gospels of Mt. and Lk. both contain a genealogy of Christ, the former (1: 2–17) tracing His descent from *Abraham and the latter (3: 23–38) carrying it back to '*Adam, the son of God'. The genealogies are intended in both cases to emphasize that Christ belonged to the house of *David. The differences between them are probably to be explained by the 'Jewish' and 'Gentile' interests of the respective Evangelists.

M. D. Johnson, The Purpose of the Biblical Genealogies with special reference to the Setting of the Genealogies of Jesus (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 8; Cambridge, 1969; 2nd edn., 1988); R. E. Brown, SS, The Birth of the Messiah [1977], pp. 57–95, with bibl. See also comm. to MATTHEW, ST, and LUKE, ST, GOSPEL OF.

General. The usual name for the head of a religious order or congregation, now officially known as *institutes of consecrated life. The necessity for the office arose out of the centralized government required by the *Mendicant orders and the later congregations. The term is usually combined with a noun. Thus, the *Franciscans and *Capuchins have a 'Minister General', the *Carmelites a 'Prior General', and the *Jesuits, *Redemptorists, and others a 'Superior General'. The head of the *Dominicans was formerly known as the 'Master General', but is now the 'Master'. Since 1893 the *Benedictine congregations, too, have a General in the 'Abbot Primate', whose rights, however, are restricted by the independence of the individual monasteries prescribed by the rule. The General is normally elected by the 'General Chapter' for a set period, but in the case of the Jesuits for life. Heads of international religious institutes tend to reside in Rome.

General Assembly. The highest court of a Church in *Presbyterianism. It consists of ministers and elders elected to represent the whole Church, over which it exercises supreme jurisdiction.

General Baptists. As contrasted with the *Particular Baptists (q.v.), those *Baptists whose theology was *Arminian and whose polity allied with that of the *Presbyterians. To this group belonged the earliest English Baptists, led by T. *Helwys. After many General Baptist Churches had moved towards *Unitarianism, a New Connexion was formed in 1770 under the influence of the Evangelical revival. This group united with the Particular Baptists in 1891.

General Chapter. A canonical meeting of the heads and representatives of a religious order or congregation esp. for the purpose of electing new superiors and dealing with business concerning the whole order. They were introduced in the *Cistercian Order in 1119 and made compulsory for all orders by the Fourth *Lateran Council in 1215. Their frequency varies, but today they are normally held every three or four years. The *Jesuits, however, hold a General Chapter (known as a 'General Congregation') only as need arises, e.g. when their General dies. Apart from the Pope, General Chapters constitute the highest authority for their respective religious.

General Confession. (1) In the BCP the Confession at the beginning of *Mattins and *Evensong 'to be said of the whole congregation after the minister, all kneeling'. It is in three parts—a confession of sin, a supplication for forgiveness of past misdeeds, and a prayer for grace to live righteously in the future. It was first added to the BCP in 1552 and has remained virtually unchanged.

(2) The term is also applied to a private confession where the penitent (exceptionally) resolves to confess, so far as he is able, all his past sins and not only those since his last confession. General confessions are sometimes recommended when the penitent is entering on a new state of life, e.g. marriage, Holy Orders, or the religious life, or leaving for a foreign land.

General Councils. See OECUMENICAL COUNCILS.

General Judgement, the. Also the Last Judgement. In Christian theology, the final judgement on mankind after the Resurrection of the Dead. In contrast with the so-called *Particular Judgement (q.v.) on souls only immediately after death, the General Judgement is held to be the occasion of God's final sentence on humanity as a whole, as well as His verdict on both the soul and body of each individual.

General Superintendent. Formerly the highest ecclesiastical office in many of the German Protestant Churches. The General Superintendent exercised his authority in conjunction with the provincial consistory and synod. The number varied in the different provinces, e.g. there were four in Brandenburg, three in Saxony, two in Pomerania. In recent times the title has been replaced, often after much controversy, in the W. provinces by that of Präses; and in the E. provinces there has now been set up a Bishop of Berlin over the General Superintendents. The appointment is purely ecclesiastical and does not receive confirmation from the State.

General Thanksgiving. In the BCP the first of the Thanksgivings 'to be used before the two final prayers of the Litany or of Morning and Evening Prayer', so named to distinguish it from the particular thanksgivings ('for rain', etc.) which follow. It was composed in 1661 by Bp. E. *Reynolds and revised by Bp. R. *Sanderson.

W. W. S. March, Ground of the Heart (1963). G. [J.] Cuming, The Godly Order (Alcuin Club Collections, 65; 1983), pp. 161–5.

General Theological Seminary, New York City. The largest training centre for clergy of the *Episcopal Church of USA. It was founded in 1817 in answer to a demand within the Church for a more thorough, systematic, and disciplined training for the ministry, and it seeks to cater for the needs of the Church in all parts of the country. Assisted by bequests, the seminary has been able to erect several fine buildings. Training is now given to over a hundred students in both academic and practical subjects by a large and scholarly faculty. The 'Paddock Lectures' are delivered regularly by noted visitors.

P. M. Dawley, The Story of the General Theological Seminary: A Sesquicentennial History 1817–1967 (New York, 1969).

Genesis, Book of. The opening Book of the OT, and the first of the five Books of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows that of the *Septuagint (Greek) version, the Hebrew title (בְּרֵאשִׁית, 'Bereshith', i.e. 'in the beginning') being the first word of the text. The Book contains the story of the beginnings of the universe and of the early history of the human race. Chs. 1–11 contain the so-called 'primeval history', including accounts of the *Creation (1–2), the *Fall (3), Cain and *Abel (4), the *Flood (6–9), and the Tower of *Babel (11). With the call of Abram (*Abraham), the ancestor of the people of *Israel, in 12: 1–3, the so-called 'salvation history' begins. Chs. 12–35 recount the stories of the *Patriarchs, Abraham (12–25: 18), *Isaac (25: 19–26: 35), and *Jacob (27–35) (chs. 5, 10, and 36 contain genealogies). The final section of the Book (chs. 37–50) tells the story of Joseph's captivity in Egypt and the eventual prosperity of his family there.

Both in Jewish and Christian tradition the Book has long been held to be the work of *Moses. However, most modern scholars believe either that it is a composite structure made up of material from various sources which can also be traced in other Books of the *Pentateuch (q.v.) or that, together with the rest of the Pentateuch, it forms in essence a unified composition from a period considerably later than that of Moses. For the Christian theologian it is of value as containing the biblical basis of much Christian doctrine, e.g. of the Creation and the Fall. Upon the promise made to Abraham and his seed (17: 7, etc.) depends the covenant relationship between God and the chosen nation of Israel, a conception prominent within the OT as a whole.

Comm. by H. *Gunkel (KHAT 1; 1901; Eng. tr. of introd. as The Legends of Genesis, Chicago, 1901; repr., New York, 1964), S. R. *Driver (West. Comm., 1904; 12th edn., with appendix by G. R. *Driver, 1926), J. Skinner (ICC 1910; 2nd edn., 1930), O.

Procksch (KAT 1; 1913; 2nd edn., 1924), U. Cassuto (2 vols. (Heb.), Jerusalem, 1944–9, on Gen. 1: 1–11: 32; with appendix in 2nd edn., 1953, on 12: 1–13: 5; Eng. tr., 2 vols., ibid., 1961–4), G. von *Rad (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 2–4, 1949–53; 9th edn., 1972; Eng. tr., 1972), E. A. Speiser (Anchor Bible, New York [1964]), R. Davidson (Camb. Bib., NEB, 2 vols., 1973–9), C. Westermann (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 1; 3 vols., 1974–82; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1984–6; London, 1984–7), and G. J. Wenham (Word Biblical Comm., 1; Waco, Tex. [1987]; 2, Dallas [1994]). J. Chaine, Le Livre de la Genèse (1949). O. Eissfeldt, Die Genesis der Genesis: Vom Werdegang des ersten Buches der Bibel (Tübingen, 1958; 2nd edn., 1961). B. Vawter, On Genesis: A New Reading (Garden City, NY, 1977). P. D. Miller, Genesis 1–11: Studies in Structure & Theme (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 8; Sheffield, 1978). W. Eichrodt, 'In the Beginning: A Contribution to the Interpretation of the First Word of the Bible', in B. W. Anderson and W. Harrelson (eds.), Israel's Prophetic Heritage: Essays in Honor of James Muilenburg (New York and London, 1962), pp. 1–10, repr. in B. W. Anderson (ed.), Creation in the Old Testament (Issues in Religion and Theology, 6; 1984), pp. 65–73. See also works cited under PATRIARCH and PENTATEUCH.

Geneva. The foundation of a Christian community in Geneva dates from c. AD 350. By the end of the 4th cent. it was the centre of a diocese which extended into the neighbouring territory of Savoy (now part of France). The cathedral was built about this time. In 1162 the Emp. *Frederick I conferred secular authority on Ardutius de Faucigny, Bp. of Geneva, and from then the Genevan bishops bore the title of 'prince-bishop'. Increasing prosperity in the 13th and 14th cents. led to pressure from the merchants for Geneva to be constituted a city-state, and in 1387 Bp. Adhémar Fabri granted the city its franchise, while retaining the basic powers of the prince-bishop. In 1444 a Papal privilege declared that all bishops of Geneva must be drawn from the ducal house of Savoy. The annexation of the city by Savoy was, however, avoided by a 'combourgeoisie' concluded in 1477 between Geneva and the Swiss cantons of Berne and Fribourg.

The beginnings of the Genevan Reformation are linked with a purely political rebellion against the remaining powers of the prince-bishop from 1513 onwards; the last bishop, Pierre de la Baume, left the city in 1533. It was the preaching of G. *Farel, P. *Viret, and Antoine Froment (1510–84) which gave a confessional basis to the movement and led to the abolition of the Mass on 10 Aug. 1535. The Reformation was officially adopted by an edict of 21 May 1536; the city-state was separated from the RC diocese which continued to bear its name until 1819. J. *Calvin did not arrive in Geneva until July 1536 and effected most of his reforms in 1541/2. He was responsible for introducing the *Presbyterian system of Church government. The Genevan Church was ruled by the Company of Pastors, headed by Calvin. The Consistory, a mixed body of clergy and laymen, shared with the civil magistrates in the policing of morals and was charged with settling questions of Church discipline. In 1559 Calvin founded the *Genevan Academy, whose chief object was to train clergy of all nationalities. His successor, T. *Beza, made few changes.

In the late 16th cent. threat of invasion by the RC Duchy of Savoy was the main concern in Geneva; in 1602 the city was attacked, but the Savoy troops were repelled. By the early 17th cent. there was a degree of theological stagnation. The Genevan Academy was facing competition from other Protestant seminaries, and the theology of Calvin and Beza became frozen into a rigid pattern. Theologians from Geneva defended F. *Gomar's teaching on *predestination at the Synod of *Dort (1618) and in 1647 candidates for the ministry were required to accept the articles of Dort, Calvin's original teaching being considered too vague. Between 1678 and 1706 all ministers had to sign the conservative Consensus helveticus, a confession of faith drawn up by all the Swiss Protestant Churches in 1675. In the 18th cent. however, more liberal tendencies were manifest in the teaching at the Genevan Academy, and Jean-Alphonse Turrettini, Professor of History from 1697 to 1707, engaged in ecumenical discussions with *Lutherans and *Anglicans. In 1707 Lutherans were granted freedom of worship in Geneva.

The revolutions of 1791 and 1794, which followed in the wake of the French Revolution, had little effect on the religious life of the city, but its annexation by Napoleon in 1799 led to the official recognition of RC worship for the first time since 1535. After the withdrawal of French troops in 1815 Geneva's frontiers were modified and the city with its dependencies became a canton of the Swiss Confederation. In 1819 the RC parishes were incorporated into the diocese of Lausanne and have so remained.

The years 1815–31 were marked by a series of Protestant *revivalist movements which were probably a reaction to 18th-cent. rationalism. In 1831 the 'Société évangélique', modelled on British Evangelical Societies (see EVANGELICALISM), was founded. All these movements were critical of the established Calvinist Church which was made more directly dependent on the State as a result of new constitutions in 1842 and 1847. In 1907, however, after a referendum, the Church was separated from the State and became known as the 'Église nationale protestante' (ENP). Its basic structure has altered little since Calvin's time. The Consistory, on which laymen (elders) form a majority, nowadays fulfils the same role as a *Presbytery. There are no other Church courts, but the Company of Pastors survives and can influence the Consistory's decisions.

Geneva is the seat of several international ecclesiastical organizations such as the *World Council of Churches, the *World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and the Lutheran World Federation. In a historical context, Geneva is regarded as the centre of Presbyterianism and is used to denote the system in the same way as Rome is used to designate the RC Church or Constantinople the Orthodox.

P. Guichonnet (ed.), Histoire de Genève (Toulouse and Lausanne [1974]). L. Binz, Vie religieuse et réforme ecclésiastique dans le diocèse de Genève . . . (1378–1408), 1 (Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société d'Histoire et d'Archéologie de Genève, 46; 1973). H. Heyer, L'Église de Genève 1535–1909 (Geneva, 1909). H. Naef, Les Origines de la Réforme à Genève (1936; repr., with additional vol. 2, Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 100 (1 and 2); Geneva, 1968); E. W. Monter, Calvin's Geneva (New York and London [1967]). M.-C. Pitassi, De l'Orthodoxie aux Lumières: Genève 1670–1737 (Histoire et Société, 24; Geneva, 1992). R. Stauffenegger, Église et Société: Genève au XVII^e siècle (Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société d'Histoire et d'Archéologie de Genève, 49; 2 vols., 1983–4). O. Fatio (ed.), Genève Protestante en 1831 (Publication de la Faculté de Théologie de l'Université de Genève, 6 [1983]). L. Binz, J. Emery, and C. Santschi, 'Le Diocèse de Genève', Helvetia Sacra, 1. 3 (Berne [1980]), pp. 5–329.

Registres de la Compagnie des Pasteurs de Genève, ed. R. M. Kingdon, J.-F. Bergier, and others (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 55, 107, 137, 153, 180, 198, 215, 236, 252, 274, 291, etc.; 1962 ff.). The Register of the Company of Pastors of Geneva in the Time of Calvin, ed. and tr. P. E. Hughes (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1966]). P.-F. Geisendorf, Bibliographie raisonnée de l'histoire de Genève des origines à 1798 (Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société d'Histoire et d'Archéologie de Genève, 43; 1966); later bibl. listed annually in the Bulletin d'histoire et d'archéologie de Genève (1966 ff.). L. Binz in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 422–53, s.v.; R. M. Kingdon in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 368–75, s.v. 'Genf'.

Geneva Bible. This translation of the Bible, popularly known as the 'Breeches Bible' from its rendering of Gen. 3: 7 ('they . . . made themselves breeches'; AV 'aprons'), was first published as a whole at Geneva in 1560. It was the first English edition to introduce verse numeration. Issued in a handy form, instead of in folio, with compendious notes of a *Calvinist flavour, it was the Bible most widely read in private use in England for about a century. For further details, see BIBLE, ENGLISH VERSIONS.

Facsimile of the 1560 edn., with introd. by L. E. Berry and full bibl. (Madison, Wis., and London, 1969). C. Eason, The Geneva Bible: Notes on its Production and Distribution (1937). A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 24–8, 43–5, with docs., pp. 279–86. L. Lupton, A History of the Geneva Bible (25 vols., *c.*1966–94). D. G. Danner, 'The Contribution of the Geneva Bible of 1560 to the English Protestant Tradition', Sixteenth Century Journal, 12, no. 3 (1981), pp. 5–18; M. S. Betteridge, 'The Bitter Notes: The Geneva Bible and its Annotations', ibid. 14 (1983), pp. 41–62. Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), pp. 61–3; for further edns. of Geneva Bible, see pp. 65 f., 74 f., and passim.

Geneva gown. The black preaching-gown worn by the early *Reformed ministers, loose fitting, with full sleeves. It was almost universally replaced by a surplice for Anglican preachers in the 19th cent. after some controversy, and is now worn by *Presbyterians and other Calvinists. Its use was held to emphasize the ministry of the Word, over against belief in a sacrificing priesthood.

Genevan Academy. This celebrated school was founded in 1559 by J. *Calvin with the support of the City Council and under the guidance of the Compagnie des Pasteurs, primarily for the education of theologians. Students were attracted in large numbers from all over Europe, and Geneva soon became the centre of international Protestantism. The first Rector was T. *Beza, and among early members were T. *Cartwright, who lectured in theology in 1571, J. *Arminius, and J. Uytenbogaert (1557–1644), the leader of the Dutch Arminians. The scope of studies, at first purely theological, was gradually widened. In 1872 a Faculty of Medicine was created and the Academy transformed into the modern university. See also GENEVA.

Le Livre du Recteur de l'Académie de Genève (1559–1878), ed. S. Stelling-Michaud (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 33; 6 vols., 1959–80). C. Borgeaud and P. E. Martin, Histoire de l'Université de Genève (5 vols. in 6; Geneva, 1900–59). M. Marcacci, Histoire de l'Université de Genève 1559 1986 (ibid., 1987).

Genevan Catechism. A name applied to two quite distinct formulae of J. *Calvin:

(1) Catechismus Genevensis Prior. A compendium of doctrine (Instruction et confession de foi dont on use en l'Église de Genève), based on the Institutes*. Issued early in 1537, it is associated with the Articles concernant l'Organisation de l'Église (dated 16 Jan. 1537), which were compiled by Calvin and G. *Farel, and with the formal Confession written by Farel, but the precise relationship of the documents is not clear. The Latin version of the Catechism appeared in 1538. The Confession was imposed on the inhabitants of *Geneva. As yet the Trinity was not made a doctrine of faith.

(2) Catechismus Genevensis. A catechism in the form of question and answer, first published in French in 1542 and formally reissued with a Latin translation in 1545. It became one of the basic documents of the Genevan ecclesiastical state. Its five sections are on Faith, the Law, Prayer, the Word of God, and the Sacraments.

(1) The text of the first Catechism and the Confession are pr. among Calvin's works, ed. W. Baum and others, 22 (Corpus Reformatorum, 50; Brunswick, 1880), cols. 25–96; Lat. tr. of the Catechism, ibid. 5 (Corpus Reformatorum, 33; 1866), cols. 313–62; the Articles, ibid. 10, pt. 1 (Corpus Reformatorum, 38, pt. 1; 1871), cols. 5–14; all three docs. are also in Calvin's Opera Selecta, ed. P. Barth and W. Niesel, 1 (Munich, 1926), pp. 369–426. Fr. text of the Catechism repr., with notes by R. Rilliet and T. Dufour (Geneva, 1878). The Confession is repr., with introd. by C. Chimelli in I. Backus and C. Chimelli (eds.), 'La Vraie Piété': Divers traités de Jean Calvin et Confession de foi de Guillaume Farel (Histoire et Société, 12; Geneva [1986]), pp. 41–53. Eng. tr. of the Confession in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 117–26.

(2) No copies of the 1542 edn. are known. From the 1545 edn. the Lat. and Fr. texts are pr. among Calvin's works, edn. cit., 6 (Corpus Reformatorum, 34; 1867), cols. 1–160. Lat. also in Calvin's Opera Selecta, edn. cit., 2 (1942), pp. 59–151; Fr. text (modernized), with historical introd., in O. Fatio and others (eds.), Confessions et Catéchismes de l'Église reformée (Publications de la Faculté de Théologie de l'Université de Genève, 11; 1986), pp. 26–89. An Eng. tr. was pub. at Geneva, 1556; also in T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith: The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 3–65. See also works cited under CALVIN.

Geneviève, St, or Genovefa (*c.*422–*c.*500), Virgin and chief Patroness of the city of *Paris. Acc. to the ancient Life, she consecrated herself to God at the age of 7, and was specially blessed by St *Germanus of Auxerre. At 15 she took the veil, and from then onwards devoted herself to a life of mortification. The great power attributed to her intercession was seen in her influence with the Frankish conquerors of Paris, and in the diversion from the city in 451 of the hordes of Huns under *Attila II. After her death, her intercession continued to be invoked, and to it was attributed the cessation of a fierce pestilence in 1129. The historicity of her Life, at one time fiercely contested, has recently been defended by competent scholars. Feast day, 3 Jan.

Of the five recensions of her Life: 'Text A' (prob. the earliest), ed. B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 204–38; 'Text B' ed. C. Kohler, Étude critique sur le texte de la vie latine de Sainte Geneviève (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 48; 1881), pp. 1–47, with variants from 'Text D' (not otherwise edited) in the second apparatus under the heading 'III^{me} Famille'; 'Text C' ed. C. Künstle, Vita Sanctae Genovefae (Teub., 1910); 'Text E' ed. C. Kohler, op. cit., pp. 48–72. Eng. tr. of Text A in Sainted Women of the Dark Ages, ed. and tr. by J. A. McNamara and others (Durham, NC, and London, 1992), pp. 17–37. M. Heinzelmann and J.-C. Poulin, Les Vies anciennes de sainte Geneviève de Paris (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 4ᵉ section, 329; 1986), with refs. Modern Lives by C. H. Lesêtre ('Les Saints', 1900) and by J. Dubois, OSB, and L. Beaumont-Maillet (Paris, 1982). R. Amiet, Le Culte liturgique de sainte Geneviève (1984). J. Dubois, OSB, in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 455–64, s.v. 'Geneviève (2)'.

geniza (from Heb. גנז, 'to hide'). The chamber attached to a *synagogue used to house MS books unfit for use in worship, e.g. worn-out copies of the Scriptures and also heretical books. Valuable fragments of biblical and other Jewish MSS were discovered in the 19th cent. in the geniza of an ancient synagogue at Cairo, which dates from AD 882, among them portions of the Hebrew text of *Ecclesiasticus and the text published as Fragments of a Zadokite Work. The majority of these fragments now constitute the Taylor–Schechter Collection in Cambridge University Library. See also DEAD SEA SCROLLS.

P. [E.] Kahle, The Cairo Geniza (1947; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1959); S. D. [F.] Goitein, A Mediterranean Society: The Jewish Communities of the Arab World as Portrayed in the Documents of the Cairo Geniza, 1 (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1967), pp. 1–28. S. C. Reif (ed.), Published Material from the Cambridge Genizah Collections: A Bibliography, 1896 1980 (Cambridge, 1988).

Gennadius I (d. 471), Patr. of *Constantinople. In his earlier years he vigorously opposed the Christological teaching of St *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444). In 458 he succeeded Anatolius (449–58) as Patriarch and in 460 he received a letter from St *Leo (Ep. 170), warning him against *Timothy Aelurus. Gennadius was the author of many Commentaries, notably on Gen., Dan., and the Pauline Epp.; considerable sections of these have survived, mainly in catenae. A few fragments of his dogmatic writings have also been preserved, among them extracts from a work against Cyril's 'Twelve Anathemas' and of a treatise 'Ad Parthenium'. He also wrote an encomium on the *Tome of St Leo and an encyclical against *simony (from a Synod at Constantinople, prob. 459). Feast day in the E., 17 Nov.; commemorated in the Roman Martyrology on 25 Aug.

Frags. collected in J. P. Migne, PG 85 (2). 1613–1734; others in K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 352–418. F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 117; 1938), sect. 6, 'Gennadius von Konstantinopel', pp. 54–108. R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (ST 201; 1959), pp. 183–5. V. Grumel, AA, Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 103–9 (nos. 143–7). A. Grillmeier, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 1; 1986), pp. 189–96; Eng. tr. (1987), pp. 166–72. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 158–61 (nos. 5970–86). C. H. *Turner in HDB 5 (extra vol., 1904), pp. 517–19, s.v. 'Patristic Commentaries'.

Gennadius II. See GEORGE SCHOLARIUS.

Gennadius of Marseilles (fl. 470), presbyter and ecclesiastical historian. His chief surviving work, the 'De Viris Illustribus', is a continuation of St *Jerome's book of the same name. Completed about 480, it contains 101 notices (10 of them apparently added by a later hand) of ecclesiastical writers, E. and W., mostly of the 5th cent. While biographical detail is slight, the bibliographical information is invaluable. The account of Gennadius himself (no. 100 [101]) mentions several other works of which only fragments remain. He is almost certainly the author of an early recension of the Liber ecclesiasticorum dogmatum, a theological compendium which circulated widely in the Middle Ages. C. Munier attributed to him the 'Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua' (q.v.). He is usually regarded as a *Semipelagian.

J. P. Migne, PL 58. 1059–1120; Suppl. ed. A. Hamman, OFM, 3 (1963), cols. 722–5. Modern edns. of De Vir. Illust. by E. C. Richardson (TU 14 (1); 1896) and W. Herding (Teub., 1924). Text of Liber Ecclesiasticorum Dogmatum, ed. C. H. *Turner in JTS 7 (1905–6), pp. 78–99; 8 (1906–7), pp. 103–14. B. Czapla, Gennadius als Litterarhistoriker (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, 4, Heft 1; Münster, 1898). Studies by A. Feder, SJ, in Scholastik, 2 (1927), pp. 481–514; 3 (1928), pp. 238–43; and 8 (1933), pp. 217–32 and 380–99. G. *Morin, OSB, 'Le Liber Dogmatum de Gennade de Marseille et problèmes qui s'y rattachent', R. Bén. 24 (1907), pp. 445–55. S. Pricoco, 'Storia ecclesiastica e storia letteraria; il De viris inlustribus di Gennadio di Marsiglia', in La storiografia ecclesiastica nella tarda antichità: Atti del convegno tenuto in Erice (3 8 XII 1978), ed. S. Calderone (Centro di Studi Umanistici, Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, Università de Messina, 1980), pp. 241–73. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 595–9; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 8, 474, and 651, for further bibl. C. Munier in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 205–8, s.v.; C. Pietri in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 376–8, s.v.

Gennesaret. A district on the W. shore of the Sea of *Galilee, which is hence called also the Lake of Gennesaret (Lk. 5: 1). Christ landed there after the Feeding of the Five Thousand (Mk. 6: 53).

Gentile, Giovanni (1875–1944), Italian philosopher and educationist. A native of Castelvetrano, he studied at Palermo. He then taught at Naples (1898–1906), and was professor of the history of philosophy at Palermo (1906–14), Pisa (1914–17), and Rome from 1917. Shortly after this last appointment he was made a senator. He was one of the earliest supporters of Fascism, which he regarded as the incarnation of Idealism, and on B. Mussolini's accession to power became Minister of Education (1922–4). As such, he carried out important paedagogic reforms and reintroduced the teaching of the Catholic religion into the schools. He was assassinated by anti-Fascists at Florence in 1944.

Gentile developed his idealist philosophy in conjunction with B. *Croce (from whom he later parted on political grounds) under the influence of G. B. *Vico, I. *Kant, and G. W. F. *Hegel. Reality, which was fundamentally historical, was the idea as realized in the human mind, so that philosophy was the supreme form of self-consciousness, in which the process of self-formation culminated. God was the 'transcendent pure thinking', which overcomes all mental differences and antagonisms. The significance of religion was that it promoted the awareness of objective ideas, and in particular of the reality to which all others were subordinate. It was a complete intuition of life, and the Catholic form of it was esp. suited to the needs of the Italian people.

Gentile was a prolific writer. His most important philosophical work was Teoria generale dello spirito (1916; Eng. trans., 1922).

The standard edn. of his Opere complete is that a cura della Fondazione Giovanni Gentile per gli Studi Filosofici (55 vols., Florence, 1942 ff. + Letters, 1969 ff.). Eng. tr. of Genesi e struttura della società (1946) by H. S. Harris (Urbana, Ill., 1960), with introd. pp. 1–52 and bibl. of works in Eng., pp. 53–63; and of Filosofia d'Arte (1931) by G. Gullace (1972), with introd., pp. xi–c. Giovanni Gentile: La vita e il pensiero, a cura della Fondazione Giovanni Gentile per gli Studi Filosofici (1948 ff.), incl. bibl. of his writings, vol. 3. Istituto della Enciclopedia Italiana, Il Pensiero di Giovanni Gentile, ed. S. Betti and F. Rovigatti (2 vols., 1977), with bibl., 2, pp. 913–1000. Life by M. di Lalla (Florence, 1975). E. Chiocchetti, La filosofia di G. Gentile (1922); V. La Via, L'idealismo attuale di G. Gentile (1925); R. W. Holmes, The Idealism of G. Gentile (1937); B. Bianchi, Il problema religioso in Giovanni Gentile (Problemi filosofici, 5; 1940); S. Romano, Giovanni Gentile: La Filosofia al Potere (1984). S. Natoli, Giovanni Gentile filosofo europeo (Turin, 1989 [slight]).

Gentiles. A biblical term (Heb. גּוֹיִם, 'nations'; Gk. ἔθνη, 'nations', or Ἕλληνες, 'Greeks') usually applied to non-Jews. The meaning of the corresponding Lat. word, gentiles, used in the *Vulgate to translate the Heb. and Greek, has changed during the centuries. In post-Augustan Latin it meant 'fellow-countrymen' and in still later Latin more generally 'foreigners'.

genuflectentes (Lat., 'those who kneel'). In the ancient Church a class of *penitents who were permitted to be present at the first part of the liturgy, kneeling at the west end of the nave. They were dismissed, together with the *catechumens and *energumens, before the Mass of the *Faithful.

genuflexion. A momentary kneeling on the right knee, with the body erect, used in the W. Church as a ceremonial reverence when passing before the Blessed Sacrament, or before the unveiled cross on *Good Friday, and formerly invariably at the incarnatus in the *Nicene Creed (now only on *Christmas Day and the feast of the *Annunciation), and on certain other occasions. Until 1967, a double genuflexion, made by kneeling on both knees and bowing the head, was used before the Blessed Sacrament exposed.

L. Gougaud, OSB, 'Some Liturgical and Ascetic Traditions of the Celtic Church. I. Genuflexion', JTS 9 (1908), pp. 556–61. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1017–21; E. Bertaud, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 213–26, s.v. 'Génuflexions et Métanies', with refs.

Geoffrey of Monmouth (d. 1154), Bp. of *St Asaph and pseudo-historian. He presumably came from Monmouth; he was for a time a canon of the collegiate church of St George in the Castle at Oxford; he died as Bp. of St Asaph. His fame rests on the Historia Regum Britanniae, a work of historical fiction, claiming to trace the history of Britain from Brutus, great-grandson of Aeneas, to Cadwaladr, in the 7th cent. AD. It enshrines the Prophecies of Merlin and a substantial (and imaginary) account of the reign of King Arthur. Whether his aims were primarily literary, or whether there were deeper political motives, his achievement was to establish Arthur as a subject of 'serious history', and so he played a role in the history of romance. It is a mainly secular narrative, but his fabulous account of ecclesiastical affairs in the court of Arthur, and of the archbishoprics of London, York, and Caerleon, had some influence on 12th-cent. ecclesiastical politics, esp. in encouraging at least one Bp. of London to claim independence of Canterbury. He also wrote a Life of Merlin in verse.

The best edn. of the Historia Regum Britanniae is that by N. Wright and others (Cambridge, 1985 ff); other modern edns. by A. Griscom (London, 1929) and E. Faral (see below). Eng. trs. by S. Evans (London, 1904; rev. by C. W. Dunn, 1963) and L. Thorpe (Penguin Classics, 1966). Modern edn., with Eng. tr., of Life of Merlin by J. J. Parry (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, 10, no. 3; 1925); also, with new Eng. tr., by B. Clarke (Cardiff, 1973). E. Faral, La Légende arthurienne, pt. 1 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 255–7; 1929, with text of both works in last vol.). V. I. J. Flint, 'The Historia Regum Britanniae of Geoffrey of Monmouth: Parody and its Purpose. A Suggestion', Speculum, 54 (1979), pp. 447–68; C. N. L. Brooke, The Church and the Welsh Border in the Central Middle Ages (Studies in Celtic History, 8; Woodbridge, 1986), pp. 95–106, 'Geoffrey of Monmouth as a Historian'.

George, St, patron saint of England and martyr. Very little is known of his life, or even of his martyrdom; but his historical existence, though still sometimes disputed, is now generally accepted. Despite E. *Reynolds' and E. *Gibbon's identification of the two, he seems to have nothing to do with *George of Cappadocia. A not improbable view is that he suffered at or near Lydda before the time of *Constantine (d. 337). He is perhaps referred to (though not by name) in *Eusebius (HE 8. 5); but not until the 6th cent. did his cultus become popular and the legends of his exploits receive elaboration. The slaying of the dragon is first credited to him in the latter part of the 12th cent. and the belief became popular from its appearance in the 13th-cent. '*Golden Legend'. It may have derived from the myth of Perseus' slaying of the sea monster at Arsuf or Joppa, both cities in the neighbourhood of Lydda. In the E. he is distinguished as a great martyr (μεγαλόμαρτυς). Feast day, 23 Apr. He is reckoned one of the *Auxiliary Saints.

The circumstances in which St George became the patron saint of England, where he appears to have been known at least from the 8th cent., are obscure. His acta were translated into Anglo-Saxon, and pre-Conquest churches (e.g. one at Doncaster, 1061) are dedicated to him. In 1222 St George's Day was made a lesser holy day at the Synod of Oxford. From the 14th cent. the red cross on a white background ('St George's arms') became a kind of uniform for soldiers and sailors. His rank as patron of England (in place of St *Edward the Confessor) prob. dates from the reign of Edward III, who founded the Order of the Garter under St George's patronage (*c.*1347). In 1415 the Constitution of Abp. H. *Chichele made his feast one of the chief holy days of the year. W. *Caxton's translation and printing of the 'Golden Legend' did much to popularize the story.

AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 100–63. Widely variant Acts of St George exist in many recensions (Gk., Lat., Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, etc.). Gk. Acts ed., with discussion, by K. Krumbacher and A. Ehrhard (Abh. (Bayr.), 25, Heft 3; 1911); crit. edn. of Ethiopic Acts by V. Arras, OFM (CSCO 138, 1953; Lat. tr. CSCO 139, 1953). Ethiopic text also reproduced from MSS in the British Library with Eng. tr. and useful introd. by E. A. W. Budge (London, 1930); Syriac Acts, also with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in Muséon, 38 (1925), pp. 67–115. M. Huber, OSB, 'Zur Georgslegende', in Festschrift zum XII. Allgemeinen Deutschen Neuphilologentage in München, Pfingsten 1906 (Erlangen, 1906), pp. 175–235 (with Lat. texts, pp. 194–235). H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Légendes grecques des saints militaires (1909), pp. 45–76. J. B. Aufhauser, Das Drachenwunder des heiligen Georg in der griechischen und lateinischen Überlieferung (Byzantinisches Archiv, 5; 1911). F. Cumont, 'La Plus Ancienne Légende de saint Georges', Revue d'Histoire des Religions, 114 (1936), pp. 5–41, with further Lat. text, pp. 42–51. Popular account in G. J. Marcus, Saint George of England (1939); also I. H. Elder, George of Lydda (1949). D. Balboni and M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (1965), cols. 512–531, s.v. 'Georgio, santo, martire'.

George (*c.*640–724), 'Bp. of the Arabians'. He was born in the neighbourhood of *Antioch and in 686 became bishop of the Arabian nomads in Mesopotamia, with his see at Akula. His writings are one of the principal authorities for the history of *Syriac Christianity and literature. They include a translation of, and commentaries on, a number of *Aristotle's works, additions to the 'Hexaemeron' of *Jacob of Edessa, and a long series of letters on matters of doctrine, liturgy, and ascetic practice.

His verse treatises on the consecration of *chrism and the Lives of the hermits ed. V. Ryssel in Atti della Reale Accademia dei Lincei, Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, 9 (1892), pp. 45–93. Selected works tr. into Ger. by id., Georgs des Araberbischofs Gedichte und Briefe (1891). 'An Exposition on the Rites of Baptism, the Eucharist and the Consecration of the Chrism' ed. R. H. *Connolly and H. W. Codrington, Two Commentaries on the Jacobite Liturgy (Text and Translation Society, 1913), pp. 3–15 (of the Syriac), with Eng. tr. pp. 11–23. Syriac texts of his trs. of Aristotle ed. G. Furlani in Atti della Reale Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, Memorie della Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, 6th ser., vol. 5 (1933–6), pp. 3–68 [Categories and De Interpretatione]; pp. 143–230 [Prior Analytics, bk. 1]; 6th ser., vol. 6 (1937–40), pp. 231–87 [Prior Analytics, bk. 2]. W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894), pp. 156–9; I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (Rome, 2nd edn., 1965), pp. 183 f., with further bibl. C. D. G. Müller in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 378–80, s.v. 'Georg der Araberbischof'.

George of Cappadocia (4th cent.), *Arian bishop who was intruded into the see of *Alexandria. Our knowledge of him, though derived almost exclusively from hostile sources, leaves little doubt of his grasping and violent character. He took possession of the see of Alexandria in the Lent of 357, i.e. about a year after Athanasius' retirement in Feb. 356, and held it till he was murdered by the rabble on 24 Dec. 361. As a member of the extreme Arian party, he was opposed by the *Semiarians no less than the orthodox. Some features of his martyrdom passed into the legends about St *George; it was this fact which formed the basis of the mistaken view of E. *Gibbon that he was the historical character around whom the legends of the saint originated.

W. *Bright in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 638–40, s.v. 'Georgius (4)'.

George Hamartolos (9th cent.), 'George the Sinner', also 'George the Monk', Byzantine chronicler. He flourished under Michael III (842–67). He wrote a 'Chronicon Syntomon' in four Books, extending from the Creation down to AD 842. Though coloured by its bitter hatred of *Iconoclasm, it is an important source for the period immediately preceding *Photius. Its main interests are those of the more educated members of a Byzantine monastery. In the MSS it is carried on to 948 by 'The Logothete' (perhaps *Simeon Metaphrastes, q.v.), and to the 12th cent. by other writers. It was translated at an early date into Old Church Slavonic and Georgian.

Editio princeps of complete chronicle by E. de Muralt (St Petersburg, 1857, unsatisfactory; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 110). Crit. edn. by C. de Boor (2 vols., Teub., 1904; repr., with corrections by P. Wirth, 1978). [The 'Vitae Recentiorum Imperatorum' in PG 109. 823–984, is only an extract from the Chronicon, repeated from 110. 979–1194.] Slavonic text ed. V. M. Istrin (3 vols., St Petersburg, 1920–30); Georgian text ed. S. Kauchtschischwili (Tiflis, 1910–16). Krumbacher, pp. 352–8; G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, 1 (2nd edn., Berlin, 1958), pp. 277–80, with extensive bibl. J. Mossay and C. Gérard in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 642 f, s.v. 'Georges (54) le Moine'.

George of Laodicea (4th cent.), *Semiarian bishop. A native of Alexandria, he became a strong supporter of the Arian party which followed *Eusebius of Nicomedia, and *c.*335 was appointed Bp. of Laodicea in Syria. Later, however, he opposed the *Anomoeanism of *Eudoxius, and became one of the chief exponents of the *Homoiousian theology. In defence of his position he composed in 359, in conjunction with *Basil of Ancyra and others, a statement of his faith which is preserved by *Epiphanius (Haer. 73. 12–22). He appears to have died shortly after 360.

CPG 2 (1974), pp. 283 f. (nos. 3555–8). P. Nautin in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 629 f., s.v. 'Georges (46), évêque de Laodicée'.

George Scholarius (*c.*1405–*c.*1472), Patr. of *Constantinople. In early life he became a teacher of philosophy and then a civil court judge in Constantinople. He attended the Council of *Florence (1439), where he supported the scheme for reunion in opposition to his fellow-Greek, *Gemistus Plethon. On returning to the E., however, he gradually became the enemy of all projects of union. Around 1450 he entered a monastery and took the name of 'Gennadius'. After the capture of the city he was made Patriarch as 'Gennadius II' in 1454 by the Sultan Muhammad II, who himself invested him with his crozier and mantle, and established with him the *concordat which in effect governed the relations between the Orthodox Church and the Muslim power until 1923. After one (or possibly two) years in office he resigned, spending the rest of his life in a monastery, apart from two more short reigns as Patriarch (not of his choice, but by order of the Sultan). He was a prolific writer. In philosophy he was an enthusiastic admirer of *Aristotle. He learnt Latin in youth, and translated works by St *Thomas Aquinas into Greek; despite his later opposition to the Union of Florence, he retained his interest in Thomism to the end of his life.

Crit. edn. of his Works by L. Petit, AA, X. A. Siderides, and M. Jugie, AA (8 vols., Paris and Athens, 1928–36), with full introd. Older edns. repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 160. 319–774. Speeches at the Council of Florence ed. J. Gill, SJ (Concilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, 8, fasc. 1; Rome, 1964). The first satisfactory study of George Scholarius is by M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1521–70, with bibl. M. Pharantos, Ἡ Θεολογία Γενναδίου τοῦ Σχολαρίου (1969). T. N. Zissis, Γεννάδιος Β' Σχολάριος (Analecta Vlatadon, 30; Thessalonica, 1980). J. Gill, Personalities of the Council of Florence and other Essays (Oxford, 1964), pp. 79–94; C. J. G. Turner, 'George-Gennadius Scholarius and the Union of Florence', JTS NS 18 (1967), pp. 83–103. Beck, pp. 760–3. J. Gill in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 333 f., s.v. 'Gennadius II Scholarius', with further refs.

George Syncellus (*fl. c.*800), Byzantine historian. Little is known of him beyond the facts that he lived for some time in Palestine and was later the '*syncellus' of Tarasius, Patr. of *Constantinople (784–806). He wrote an important 'Chronicle' from the Creation to the time of *Diocletian, which after his death was brought down by his friend, Theophanes the Confessor, to AD 813. The treatment of biblical times is much fuller than that of the later period. His sources included (either directly or indirectly) *Eusebius, *Julius Africanus, Anianus of Alexandria (5th cent.), Panodorus (c.400), and other writers. He possessed some critical insight into the value of his material and preserves some important fragments, but his use of his sources is dull and unimaginative.

Crit. edn. of his Chronicle by A. A. Mosshammer (Teub., 1984). G. L. Huxley, 'On the Erudition of George the Synkellos', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, Section C, 81 (1981), pp. 207–17. W. Adler, Time Immemorial: Archaic History and its Sources in Christian Chronography from Julius Africanus to George Syncellus (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, 26; 1989), pp. 132–234. Krumbacher, pp. 339–42.

Georgia, Church of. The origins of Christianity in Georgia (also known as Iberia; in the S. Caucasus) extend back to the 4th cent., if not earlier. The preaching of a Christian slave woman from Cappadocia, St Nino, led to the conversion of the Iberian royal house c.350, and so to the adoption of the Christian faith as the religion of the country. At first dependent upon the Patriarchate of *Antioch, the Georgian Church became *autocephalous in the 8th cent., its independence being reaffirmed at a Council of Antioch c.1057. The Georgians developed a rich Christian literature in their own tongue, above all during the 11th–13th cents. In 1811 the Georgian Church was absorbed by the Church of *Russia; it regained its autocephalous status in 1917, but was not recognized by the Soviet authorities or the Russian Church until 1943. The Georgian Church was a focus of nationalist opposition and suffered severe persecution; sees were left vacant and parishes without pastoral oversight. After the accession of the *Catholicos Patriarch Ilya II in 1977 there was a revival, and links were established with the Papacy and the Abp. of *Canterbury. Eduard Shevardnadze, former foreign minister of the USSR, who became chairman of the State Council of Georgia in 1992, was baptized in the same year.

M. Tamarati, L'Église géorgienne des origines jusqu'à nos jours (Rome, 1910). S. C. Malan (ed.), A Short History of the Georgian Church, tr. from the Russian of P. Ioselian (1866). C. Toumanoff, Studies in Christian Caucasian History (Washington, DC, 1963). F. Thélamon, 'Histoire et structure mythique: la conversion des Ibères', Revue historique, 247 (1972), pp. 5–28. W. E. D. Allen, A History of the Georgian People from the beginning down to the Russian Conquest in the Nineteenth Century (1932). M. Tarchnišvili, Geschichte der kirchlichen georgischen Literatur (ST 185; 1955). D. M. Lang, Lives and Legends of the Georgian Saints (1956). R. Janin, AA, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1239–89; G. Garitte in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 244–56, s.v. 'Géorgienne (Littérature spirituelle)'; C. Toumanoff in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 361–9, s.v. 'Georgia, Church in Ancient'; J. Assfalg and D. M. Lang in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 389–96, s.v. 'Georgien'.

Georgian Version. The earliest version of the New Testament in the Georgian language, which like *Armenian traditionally owes its alphabet to St *Mesrob (5th cent.), dates from the 6th cent. The translation was apparently made from the Armenian, though from better texts than any now surviving Armenian MS. R. P. Blake has observed that certain MSS of the Georgian Gospels represent a type of the *Caesarean text, which in the Adysh MS of the Gospels (897) has been preserved in relative purity, though in most MSS it has been more or less completely 'corrected' to the *Lucianic type. The Gospels and the Pauline Epp. were always written until modern times in distinct MSS, so that their textual traditions are independent.

Ed. princeps of OT by Prince Vakhusht, Moscow, 1742–3. Modern edns. of Mt. and Mk. by B. V. Beneševič (St Petersburg, 1909–11), of Mk. and Mt. by R. P. Blake in PO 20, fasc. 3 [pp. 437–574] (1928), and 24, fasc. 1 [pp. 1–168] (1933), of Jn. by id. and M. Brière, ibid. 26, fasc. 4 [pp. 453–599] (1950), and of Lk. by M. Brière, ibid. 27, fasc. 3 [pp. 275–457] (1955), incl. corrections to the edns. of Mt., Mk., and Jn. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 182–98. K. *Lake and R. P. Blake, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospel of Mark', HTR 21 (1928), pp. 207–404, esp. pp. 286–307. J. N. Birdsall in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 810–13, s.v. 'Versions, Ancient (Georgian)'.

Gerald de Barri. See GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS.

Gerald of Wales. See GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS.

Gerbert of Aurillac. See SYLVESTER II.

Gerhard, Johann (1582–1637), *Lutheran theologian. Born in Quedlingburg, where J. *Arndt was pastor, he studied medicine at *Wittenberg and theology at Jena, and taught theology at Jena from 1616 until his death. A prolific writer, Gerhard's great dogmatic work is his massive Loci Theologici (9 vols. in 10, 1610–22), which became a standard compendium of Lutheran orthodoxy. It reintroduced scholastic methodology and terminology into Reformation dogmatics, while at the same time exhibiting a lively practical interest in ethics and culture. An ardent controversialist, Gerhard's principal polemical work is his Confessio Catholica (1634–7), which, with M. *Chemnitz's Examen concilii Tridentini (1565–73) and Gerhard's own Bellarminus ὀρθοδοξίας testis (1631–3), became a popular anti-Catholic Lutheran apology. Gerhard also demonstrated a keen interest in biblical and patristic study. He completed a harmony of the Gospels begun earlier by Chemnitz and P. Leyser, the Harmonia Evangelistarum Chemnitio-Lyseriana (1626–7), and after his death his son published a Patrologia (1653) assembled from material in his writings. His devotional masterpiece, Meditationes Sacrae (1606) went through many editions in several languages, incl. an English translation in 1631. J. B. *Bossuet considered him the third most important Protestant theologian after Luther and Chemnitz.

The standard edn. of his Loci Theologici by I. F. Cotta (20 vols. + index in 2 parts, Tübingen, 1762–89). [F.] A. [G.] *Tholuck (ed.), Spicilegium ex Commercio Epistolico Johannis Gerhardi (Halle, 1864). Life (in Latin) by E. R. Fischer (Leipzig, 1723). J. Wallmann, Der Theologiebegriff bei Johann Gerhard und Georg Calixt (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 30; 1961), pp. 5–84; R. Schröder, Johann Gerhards lutherische Christologie und die aristotelische Metaphysik (ibid. 67; 1983). R. P. Scharlemann, Thomas Aquinas and John Gerhard (Yale Publications in Religion, 7; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1964). M. Honecker, 'Die Kirchengliedschaft bei Johann Gerhard und Robert Bellarmin', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, NF 62 (1965), pp. 21–45. R. Kirste, Das Zeugnis des Geistes und das Zeugnis der Schrift: Das testimonium spiritus sancti internum als hermeneutisch-polemischer Zentralbegriff bei Johann Gerhard in der Auseinandersetzung mit Robert Bellarmins Schriftverständnis (Göttinger theologische Arbeiten, 6; 1976). W.

Elert, Morphologie des Luthertums, 1 (1931; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1962); R. D. Preus, The Theology of Post-Reformation Lutheranism (2 vols., St Louis [1970–2]), passim. J. Baur, 'Johann Gerhard', in M. Greschat (ed.), Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 99–119. M. Honecker in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 448–53, s.v.

Gerhard Zerbolt of Zutphen (1367–98), member of the *Brethren of the Common Life. After studying at various places he became a priest and librarian of the Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer. He became a close friend of *Florentius Radewijns. He was remarkable for his learning, esp. in moral theology and canon law as well as in ascetic and mystical theology, and an excellent director of souls. Of his writings the best known are 'De reformatione virium animae' and 'De spiritualibus ascensionibus', which influenced the '*Spiritual Exercises' of St *Ignatius Loyola. His authorship of two treatises on prayer and the reading of Scripture in the vernacular is uncertain.

His 'Scriptum pro quodam Inordinate Gradus Ecclesiasticos et Praedicationis Officium Affectante', ed. A. Hyma, Nederlandsch Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, NS 20 (1927), pp. 179–232. Life by *Thomas à Kempis in Opera et Libri Vite Fratris Thomae de Kempis [Nuremberg, 1494], fols. xxix–xxxviii. J. van Rooij, O. Carm., Gerard Zerbolt van Zutphen, 1. Leven en Geschriften (1936). G. H. Gerrits, Inter Timorem et Spem: A Study of the Theological Thought of Gerard Zerbolt of Zutphen (1367–1398) (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 37; Leiden, 1986), with bibl. S. D. van Veen in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 735–7, s.v. 'Zutphen, Gerhard Zerbolt van'; W. Lourdaux in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 284–9, s.v. 'Gérard (19) Zerbolt de Zutphen'.

Gerhardt, Paul (1607–76), German *Lutheran hymn-writer. After studying theology at *Wittenberg and spending some years as a private tutor at Berlin he became provost at Mittelwalde in 1651 and pastor at the St Nikolaikirche at Berlin in 1657. He resigned this post in 1666 through unwillingness to sign a declaration submitting to the *syncretist edicts of the Elector of Brandenburg. In 1668 he was appointed archdeacon at Lübben, where he remained to his death. Though in his theology he was an uncompromising Lutheran, he was susceptible to the influence of Catholic mysticism, esp. that of St *Bernard, and one of his most beautiful hymns, 'O sacred head, sore wounded', is based on the 'Salve caput cruentatum' attributed to the saint. Combining a deep personal piety and filial trust in God with the love of nature of the true poet, as expressed, e.g., in the fine verses of 'The duteous day now closeth' (Eng. tr., R. *Bridges), his hymns have become widely known, esp. in Germany. He ranks as one of the greatest hymn-writers of German Protestantism.

P. Wackernagel (anon. ed.), Paulus Gerhardts geistliche Lieder [1843]; modern edn. of his Dichtungen und Schriften by E. von Cranach-Sichart (Munich [1957]). H. Petrich, Paul Gerhardt (1914). R. Eckart, Paul Gerhardt: Urkunden und Aktenstücke zu seinem Leben und Kämpfen (1919). T. B. Hewitt, Paul Gerhardt as a Hymnwriter and his Influence on English Hymnology (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1919), with bibl. H. Hoffmann (ed.), Paul Gerhardt: Dichter, Theologe, Seelsorger, 1607–1676. Beiträge der Wittenberger Paul-Gerhardt-Tage 1976 (1978). R. Eckart, Paul Gerhardt-Bibliographie (1909). E.-H. Pältz in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 453–7, s.v.

Gerhoh of Reichersberg (1092/3–1169), *Augustinian Canon, theologian, and exegete. Born at Polling, in Bavaria, he studied at Freising, Moosburg, and Hildesheim. He became 'magister scholarum' of the cathedral school at Augsburg *c.*1118, but he had to leave this post some three years later owing to his opposition to his simoniacal bishop, Hermann of Augsburg, and found refuge in the house of Augustinian Canons at Rottenbuch (in the diocese of Freising), where he was converted to the ideal of a vita apostolica of poverty, prayer, and service. After their reconciliation in 1123, Gerhoh accompanied Hermann to the First *Lateran Council. Upon his return to Augsburg Gerhoh's zeal for reform found no favour among his fellow cathedral clergy; therefore in 1124 he entered Rottenbuch as an Augustinian Canon and as such lived an exemplary life. But he soon differed from the community about the duty of propagating reform outside the cloister and, after a brief period as a parish priest at Cham, from 1128 to 1132 he resided in Regensburg. His ideas on clerical life and Church discipline were set out in his 'Liber de aedificio Dei' (1128–9). In 1132 he was appointed provost of the house of Augustinian Canons at Reichersberg (in the diocese of Passau), to the great spiritual and material advantage of the community. He was often sent on embassies to Rome, where he came into contact with St *Bernard of Clairvaux; but his zeal for reform gained him much hostility. He was even accused of heresy, though he had always defended the orthodox teaching, esp. against the *Christological errors of *Abelard and *Gilbert de la Porrée. In 1166 he was banned by the Emp. *Frederick I and forced to flee from his monastery because he refused to support the Imperialist antipope. His ideas on the schism were laid down in his famous work 'De Investigatione Antichristi' (1160/2), in which he advocates a clearer definition of the spheres of Papal and Imperial power. In addition to his controversial writings, Gerhoh wrote a discursive commentary on the Psalms, in which he draws extensively on contemporary sources, esp. *Anselm of Laon, *Rupert of Deutz, *Hugh of St-Victor, and Gilbert de la Porrée.

Opera Omnia in J. P. Migne, PL 193. 461–1814, and 194. 9–1490; F. Scheibelberger (ed.), Gerhohi . . . Opera Hactenus Inedita (Linz a.d. Donau, 1875); much of his work also ed. E. Sackur in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI. et XII., 3 (1897), pp. 131–525; Opera Inedita, ed. D. Van den Eynde, OFM, and others (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 8–10; 1955–6). Crit. edn. of his Liber de novitatibus huius temporis, addressed in 1156 to Pope *Hadrian IV, by N. M. Häring, SAC (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 24; 1974). J. Günster, Die Christologie des Gerhoh von Reichersberg: Eine dogmengeschichtliche Studie zu seiner Auffassung von der hypostatischen Union (1940). D. Van den Eynde, OFM, L'Œuvre littéraire de Géroch de Reichersberg (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 11; 1957). E. Meuthen, Kirche und Heilsgeschichte bei Gerhoh von Reichersberg (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 6; Leiden, 1959). P. Classen, Gerhoch von Reichersberg (Wiesbaden, 1960). W. Beinert, Die Kirche-Gottes Heil in der Welt: Die Lehre von der Kirche nach den Schriften des Rupert von Deutz, Honorius Augustodunensis und Gerhoch von Reichersberg (BGPM NF 13; 1973), incl. introd. on his life and work, pp. 50–68. A. M. Lazzarino del Grosso, Armut und Reichtum im Denken Gerhohs von Reichersberg (Zeitschrift für Bayerische Landesgeschichte, Beiheft (Reihe B) 4; 1973); id., Società e Potere nella Germania del XII Secolo: Gerhoch di Reichersberg ('Il Pensiero Politico' Biblioteca, 6; 1974). J. Mois, Das Stift Rottenbuch in der Kirchenreform des XI.–XII. Jahrhunderts (Beiträge zur Altbayerischen Kirchengeschichte, 3rd ser. 19; 1953), pp. 114–43. R. W. and A. J. Carlyle, A History of Mediaeval Political Thought in the West, 4 (1922), pp. 342–83. P. Classen in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 303–8, s.v.

Germain, St. See GERMANUS, ST.

Germain-des-Prés, St-. See ST-GERMAIN-DES-PRÉS.

German Baptists. See TUNKERS.

German-Christians (Deutsche Christen). A Protestant group which, during the Hitler régime, tried to bring about a synthesis between Nazism and Christianity. Its more extreme adherents wished to eliminate the OT, St *Paul ('the Rabbi'), and the doctrines of St *Augustine (with their 'Jewish' sense of sin), and to eradicate from the Gospels everything Jewish or 'servile'. Finding their Holy Land not in Palestine, but in Germany, they held that the law of God was embodied in Hitler. It was their professed purpose to 'complete' M. *Luther's Reformation. Concealment of their more extreme aims, coupled with a broadcast by Hitler urging all Nazis to vote, gained them a large majority at the Church elections in July 1933; and L. *Müller (q.v.), the most influential figure in the group, was elected *Reichsbischof of the German Evangelical Church. Müller's extreme measures, notably his attempt to introduce an 'Aryan paragraph' (excluding Jews from being clergymen or Church officials, on the model of the state legislation) into Reich Church law and his incorporation of the Evangelical Youth into the 'Hitler Jugend', wholly alienated the embryonic '*Confessing Church' and he was virtually superseded by the appointment of Hanns Kerrl as Minister for Church affairs in 1935. None the less, the 'German-Christians' retained the official leadership of more than half the German Landeskirchen during the Second World War. After it the more extreme members disappeared from public view, while others seceded from the official Landeskirchen to join in a free Church.

K. Meier, Die Deutschen Christen: Das Bild einer Bewegung in Kirchenkampf des Dritten Reiches (Göttingen, 1964). R. Gutteridge, Open thy mouth for the dumb! The German Evangelical Church and the Jews 1879–1950 (Oxford, 1976), esp. pp. 69–313.

Germanus, St (d. 437/48), Bp. of Auxerre, in the 420s and 430s (perhaps 407–37, 412–42, or 418–48). *Prosper of Aquitaine (Chron. s.a. 429) records Pope *Celestine I's sending of Germanus to quell *Pelagianism in Britain at the instigation of *Palladius. Otherwise, we depend heavily upon the Life written by Constantius of Lyons between *c.*460 and 490. This tells of Germanus' training as a lawyer, promotion to provincial rule, popular acclamation as bishop of Auxerre, two visits to Britain to combat Pelagianism, and final journey to Ravenna, where he died. His body was brought back to Auxerre for burial. Constantius' portrayal of an ascetic bishop of considerable standing, who intervened with secular authorities, is convincing; but he knows little about Germanus' visits to Britain apart from reports of miracle stories. It is possible that the second visit to Britain is simply a hagiographical doublet of the first. Germanus may have had links with Palladius' mission to Ireland. Muirchú's later association of St *Patrick with Germanus is of very dubious authenticity. Feast day, 31 July. See also GENEVIÈVE, ST.

For edns. of Prosper's Chronicle, see under PROSPER. Constantius' Vita Germani was first pr., in a corrupt text, by B. Mombritius, Sanctuarium seu Vitae Sanctorum, 1 (Milan, 1480), fols. 318–25. Crit. edns. by W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 7 (pt. 1; 1919), pp. 225–83, and, with Fr. tr., by R. Borius (SC 112; 1965). Eng. tr. by F. R. Hoare, The Western Fathers (1954), pp. 281–320. Metrical and prose Lives were also written in the 9th cent. by *Heiric of Auxerre (q.v). W. Levison, 'Bischof Germanus von Auxerre und die Quellen zu seiner Geschichte', Neues Archiv, 29 (1904), pp. 95–175. Saint Germain d'Auxerre et son temps: Communications présentées à l'occasion du XIX^e Congrès de l'Association Bourguignonne des Sociétés Savantes réuni à Auxerre . . . pour commémorer le XV^e centenaire de la mort de saint Germain d'Auxerre, with introd. by G. Le Bras (Auxerre, 1950). N. K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 240–74 and 285–8. I. Wood, 'The End of Roman Britain: Continental Evidence and Parallels', in Gildas: New Approaches, ed. M. Lapidge and D. Dumville (Studies in Celtic History, 5; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1984), pp. 1–25, esp. pp. 6–17. E. A. Thompson, Saint Germanus of Auxerre and the End of Roman Britain (ibid. 6; 1984); cf. review by C. E. Stancliffe in JTS NS 37 (1986), pp. 603–8.

Germanus, St (*c.*496–576), Bp. of *Paris. A native of Autun (Augustodunum), he was ordained priest in 530 and rose to become abbot of the monastery of St Symphorian in his own city, where he exercised great generosity to the poor. In 555 he became Bp. of Paris. Here he sought to check the licence of the Frankish kings and stop the perpetual civil wars; and he won considerable influence over Childebert, son of *Clovis. He took part in several Councils, among them Paris III (561/2?), Tours II (567), and Paris IV (573). His prophecy that death would overtake Sigebert if he did not desist from invoking the trans-Rhenish barbarians against his brother, Chilperic, was fulfilled when Sigebert was murdered by assassins. The church of *St-Germain-des-Prés stands on the site of an elaborate 7th-cent. tomb over his remains (destroyed, 1793). His Life, written by *Venantius Fortunatus, abounds in miraculous legends. Feast day, 28 May; of his translation, 25 July.

Two letters attributed to him are of great importance for the history of the *Gallican liturgy. Older scholars, accepting their genuineness, used them in the reconstruction of the Gallican rite; but A. *Wilmart, following up doubts expressed by H. Koch and E. *Bishop, made out a strong case against their authenticity. He maintained that they were written in the S. of France *c.*700, and represent a rite as much Spanish as French, which had already absorbed a number of foreign elements. This view is now widely accepted.

Crit. edn., with introd., of the 'Vita' by Venantius Fortunatus, by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 7 (1919) pp. 337–418; another brief Life, together with the account of the translation of his relics, ibid., pp. 419–28. These three items also pr. in AASS, Mai. 6 (1688), pp. 774–806; the Life by Venantius Fortunatus, also in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 55–78. O. Holder-Egger, 'Zur Translatio S. Germani', NA 18 (1893), pp. 274–81. R. Aubert in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 927–9, 'Germain (22)', with bibl.

The two letters mentioned above are preserved in an 8th-cent. MS at Autun. They were first pr. by E. *Martène, OSB, in his Thesaurus Novus Anecdotorum, 5 (Paris, 1717), pp. 91–100; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 89–98; crit. edn. by E. C. Ratcliff (posthumously pub., HBS, 98; 1971). On their authenticity, see A. Wilmart, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1049–102, s.v.

'Germain de Paris (Lettres attribuées saint)'; Wilmart's conclusions have been challenged by A. van der Mensbrugghe, 'L'Expositio Missæ Gallicanæ est-elle de saint Germain de Paris (†576)?', Messager de l'Exarchat du Patriarche Russe en Europe Occidentale, 8 (1959), pp. 217–49 (partly repeated by id., 'Pseudo-Germanus Reconsidered' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 5 (TU 80; 1962), pp. 172–84) but reasserted by R. Cabié, 'Les lettres attribuées à saint Germain de Paris et les origines de la liturgie gallicane', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 73 (1972), pp. 183–92.

Germanus, St (*c.*640–*c.*733), Patriarch of *Constantinople. Descended from a noble Byzantine family, Germanus received a careful education. After the fall and execution of his father, he was made a eunuch (prob. in 669) and became one of the clergy of *Sancta Sophia, of which he was later the head. He prob. played some part in the Sixth Oecumenical Council (the Third Council of *Constantinople, 680) and in the *Trullan Synod (692), but there is no certain evidence as to his role. It seems that at the synod convoked by the Emp. Philippicus in 712 to restore the *Monothelite heresy, Germanus, by then Metropolitan of Cyzicus, yielded to the threats of the Emperor and signed the declaration against the Sixth Oecumenical Council. If he actually did so, a fact which has been contested, he soon returned to orthodoxy. He was elected Patriarch in 715 and at a synod called shortly afterwards officially proclaimed the Catholic faith and anathematized the Monothelites. In 725 the Emp. *Leo III, the Isaurian, issued his first edict against the veneration of icons (see *ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY), and during the four subsequent years of his patriarchate Germanus was the soul of resistance against Iconoclasm. He was forced to resign in 730 and retired to Platonium. He is known to have written three treatises: 'De haeresibus et synodis', his only extant historical work, 'De vitae termino', a work of philosophical theology, and 'De vera et legitima retributione' (the Antapodotikos), which has not survived. Among his other writings, many of which perished at the hands of the Iconoclastic Emperors, there remain four dogmatic letters, three of them bearing on the Iconoclastic Controversy, and seven homilies on the BVM, of whose cult he was one of the most ardent promoters. Mary's incomparable purity, foreshadowing the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception, and her universal mediation in the distribution of supernatural blessings, are his two frequently recurring themes. He is very probably also the author of the 'Historia mystica ecclesiae catholicae', an interpretation of the contemporary Byzantine Liturgy, as well as of several fine liturgical poems. Feast day, 12 May.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 98. 9–454. Crit. edn., with Eng. tr., of De vitae termino by C. Garton and L. G. Westerink (Arethusa Monographs, 7; Buffalo, NY, 1979). For the Historia Mystica, see F. E. *Brightman, 'The Historia Mystagogica and other Greek Commentaries on the Byzantine Liturgy', JTS 9 (1907–8), pp. 248–67 and 387–97, incl. text, and N. Borgia, 'La "Ἐξήγησις" di S. Germano e la versione latina di Anastasio Bibliotecario', Roma e l'oriente, 2 (1911), pp. 144–56, 219–28, 286–96, and 346–54, incl. reconstructed text. This text is repr. in St Germanus of Constantinople, On the Divine Liturgy, with Eng. tr. and comm. by P. Meyendorff (Crestwood, NY, 1984). Lat. version by *Anastasius Bibliothecarius ed. S. Pétridès, AA, in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 10 (1905), pp. 309–13 and 350–63. V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fascs. 2–3 (2nd edn., rev. by J. Darrouzès, AA, 1989), pp. 1–10 (nos. 325–42). L. Lamza, Patriarch Germanos I. von Konstantinopel (715–730) (Das östliche Christentum, NF 27; Würzburg, 1975; incl. ed. and Ger. tr. of Gk. Vita, dating from the 9th, or perhaps the 11th, cent.). J. List, Studien zur Homiletik Germanos I. von Konstantinopel und seine Zeit (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, 29; 1939: philological). R. Bornert, OSB, Les Commentaires Byzantins de la Divine Liturgie du VII^e au XV^e Siècle (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, 9; 1966), pp. 125–80. W. Lackner, 'Ein hagiographisches Zeugnis für den Antapodotikos des Patriarchen Germanos I. von Konstantinopel', Byzantion, 38 (1968), pp. 42–104. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 503–10 (nos. 8001–33). Beck, pp. 473–6; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 525 and 661. F. Cayré in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1300–9, s.v., with full bibl.; J. Darrouzès, AA, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 309–11, s.v. 'Germain (2) I de Constantinople', also with bibl.

Germany, Christianity in. See CONFESSING CHURCH; EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN GERMANY; GERMAN-CHRISTIANS; HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE; LUTHERANISM; REFORMATION; and THIRTY YEARS WAR.

Gerontius, The Dream of. This celebrated poem by J. H. *Newman was first published in the periodical, The Month, for April and May 1865, and in book form in 1866. It is a vision of a just soul leaving a body at death and of its subsequent intercourse with the angels. It has been set to music by E. *Elgar, and two of the poems in it are well known as hymns—'Firmly I believe and truly' and 'Praise to the Holiest in the height'.

Gerson, Jean le Charlier de (1363–1429), French Churchman and spiritual writer, the 'doctor christianissimus'. He was born nr. Rethel in the Ardennes. In 1377 he entered the College of Navarre at *Paris, then the centre of *Nominalism, where he studied under Pierre *d'Ailly, who remained his lifelong friend. He was made doctor of theology *c.*1394, and in 1395 succeeded d'Ailly as Chancellor of Notre-Dame and of the University. From the beginning of his career he worked for the reform of the Church from within, which he endeavoured to bring about chiefly by a renewal of the spirit of prayer and sacrifice, and for the abolition of the *Great (Western) Schism. In 1397 he fled from the strain of the life in Paris to Bruges, where he held the benefice of Dean of the Church of St Donatian. While there he wrote his famous treatise 'On the Manner of Conducting oneself in a Time of Schism', exhorting clergy and laity of both obediences to recognize each other's Sacraments and urging charity in their judgements. In 1398 he did not vote for the refusal of obedience to the *Avignon Pope, and the later return of France to the obedience of *Benedict XIII was largely his work, due esp. to his treatise 'De Restitutione Obedientiae'. After his return to Paris (1401) he resumed his office as Chancellor and was instrumental in bringing back the *Dominicans (1403), who had been expelled from the University for their teaching on the *Immaculate Conception. He approved the decisions of the Councils of *Pisa (1409) and Rome (1412–13), though not taking part in them himself. In 1415 he attended the Council of *Constance, which he encouraged to continue its sessions after the flight of *John XXIII. He asserted the superiority of a General Council over the Pope and demanded that the doctors of theology should have a deliberative and definitive voice in it together with the bishops. He also took an important part in the drawing-up of the famous Four Articles of Constance, the future charter of *Gallicanism. He had a share in the condemnation of J. *Huss, and denounced the propositions advanced by Jean Petit in favour of tyrannicide. This earned him the hostility of the Duke of Burgundy, Jean sans Peur, who had had the Duke of Orléans assassinated, and in whose defence Jean Petit had drawn up his theses. The hatred of Burgundy prevented Gerson from returning to Paris after the conclusion of the Council, and he went to the Benedictine abbey of Melk, nr. Vienna, where he wrote his treatise 'De Consolatione Theologiae', modelled on *Boethius. After the death of Jean sans Peur he returned to France (1419), where he spent the last ten years of his life in seclusion at Lyons, devoting himself entirely to the practice of the spiritual life and pastoral work.

Among his writings dealing with the position of the Church are 'De Unitate Ecclesiae', 'De Auferibilitate Papae ab Ecclesia', and 'De Potestate Ecclesiae' (1417), in which he developed the *Conciliar theory but without rejecting the primacy of the Pope. In moral theology he accepted the extreme Nominalist doctrine, then generally taught in the schools, acc. to which nothing was sinful in itself but the sinfulness or goodness of an act depended solely on the Will of God. Among the large number of his treatises devoted to the spiritual life are 'The Mountain of Contemplation' (1397, his principal work), 'Mystical Theology', 'Perfection of the Heart', and Commentaries on the *Magnificat and on the Song of *Solomon. His mystical teaching, which has marked *Augustinian tendencies, is a synthesis of much that is best in Catholic mysticism from *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite to J. *Ruysbroeck, his particular sympathies being with St *Bernard, the *Victorines, and St *Bonaventure. He consciously opposed this spiritual teaching of the 'antiqui' to the dry intellectualist activities of the Nominalist 'moderni', who threatened to convert theology into mere dialectics. Gerson was also a zealous advocate of frequent *Communion and was deeply concerned over the religious education of children.

Gerson's influence has been deep and lasting mainly in two directions: his Conciliar views found an echo in Gallicanism, of which he is sometimes called the father, and his mystical teaching was admired by *Nicholas of Cusa and by the *Brethren of the Common Life, as well as by St *Ignatius Loyola, St Robert *Bellarmine, and St *Francis de Sales. His writings were also greatly valued by M. *Luther in his early years. The '*Imitation of Christ' has sometimes been ascribed to him, esp. by French scholars, but it is now generally admitted that both internal and external evidence are against this attribution.

Editio princeps of his collected works, 4 vols., Cologne, 1483–4; the best complete edn. is that of L. E. *Dupin (5 vols., Antwerp, 1706, with Life); modern edn. by [P.] Glorieux (10 vols., Paris, 1960–73), with useful introd. in vol. 1. Notulae super quaedam verba Dionysii de Caelesti Hierarchia, ed. A. Combes (Études de philosophie médiévale, 30; 1940); six sermons in the vernacular, ed. L. Mourin (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, 8; 1946). J. B. Schwab, Johannes Gerson (Würzburg, 1858); J. L. Connolly, John Gerson, Reformer and Mystic (Louvain, 1928). A. Combes, Jean de Montreuil et le Chancelier Gerson (Études de philosophie médiévale, 32; 1942); id., Essai sur la critique de Ruysbroeck par Gerson (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, 4 and 5 (1); 1945–8); id., La Théologie mystique de Gerson: Profil de son évolution (2 vols., 1963–5), with refs. to other studies by this author. L. Mourin, Jean Gerson, prédicateur français (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent, Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren, 113; 1952). L. B. Pascoe, SJ, Jean Gerson: Principles of Church Reform (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 7; Leiden, 1973). G. H. M. Posthumus Meyjes, Jean Gerson et l'assemblée de Vincennes (1392): Ses conceptions de la juridiction temporelle de l'Église (ibid. 26; 1978), with text of 'De jurisdictione spirituali et temporali', pp. 121–31. C. Burger, Aedificatio, Fructus, Utilitas: Johannes Gerson als Professor der Theologie und Kanzler der Universität Paris (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 70; Tübingen, 1986). D. C. Brown, Pastor and Laity in the Theology of Jean Gerson (Cambridge, 1987). M. S. Burrows, Jean Gerson and De Consolatione Theologiae (1418) (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 78; Tübingen, 1991). L. Salembier in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1312–30; A. Combes, L. Mourin, and F. Simone in EC 6 (1952), cols. 185–91; P. Glorieux in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 314–31; additional bibl. in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 1056 f.; C. Burger in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 532–8; in English, P. Glorieux in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 449 f.; all s.v.

Gertrude, St (1) (626–59), abbess. She was the daughter of Pepin the Elder (d. 640). On her father's death, her mother, Blessed Ida, founded a convent at Nivelles in Belgium, and on Ida's death Gertrude became its first abbess. She ruled the convent well, but her personal austerities so weakened her that *c.*656 she resigned her office and gave herself wholly up to devotion until her death three years later. She is widely venerated in the Netherlands and Belgium, and is invoked as patroness of travellers; also against plagues of mice and rats, with which creatures she is often depicted. Feast day, 17 Mar.

A contemporary Vita is printed in AASS, Mar. 2 (1668), pp. 592–99; critical edn. of two recensions by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 2 (1888), pp. 447–74. Eng. tr. in Sainted Women of the Dark Ages, ed. and tr. J. A. McNamara and others (Durham, NC, and London, 1992), pp. 220–34. BHL (1898–1901), nos. 3490–504, pp. 520–2. J. J. Hoebanx, L'Abbaye de Nivelles des Origines au XIV^{e} siècle (Mémoires de l'Académie Royale de Belgique, Collection in-8°, 46, pt. 4; 1952), pp. 22–61. M. van Uytfanghe in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4, (1989), cols. 1356 f., s.v. 'Gertrud v. Nivelles', with bibl.

Gertrude, St (2), 'the Great' (1256–*c.*1302), German mystic. She is to be distinguished from the Abbess Gertrude of Hackeborn (1232–92), with whom she was long confused in older works and in the Breviary. At the age of 5 she was entrusted to the *Cistercian-inspired convent of Helfta in Thuringia, where she received a sound education. She experienced a conversion at the age of 25, and from that time led a life of contemplation. She was closely associated with other visionary women, notably *Mechthild of Magdeburg and St Mechthild of Hackenborn. Her 'Legatus Divinae Pietatis', of which only the Second Book was written by herself (the other four being based on her notes), is one of the major literary products of Christian mysticism. Most of her mystical experiences took place during the liturgical offices of the Church which were the mainspring of her spirituality. St Gertrude was one of the first exponents of devotion to the *Sacred Heart, which she believed was revealed to her in several visions, described in her book with great beauty and simplicity. She also wrote a collection of prayers, 'Exercitia Spiritualia', some of which have become very popular in RC piety. She was never formally canonized, but her cult was first authorized in 1606 and extended to the entire RC Church by *Clement XIII in 1738, and since 1677 she has been included in the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day (since 1932), 16 Nov. She is the patroness of the West Indies.

Her Revelations were first pub., in a partial Ger. tr., along with those of Mechthild of Hackeborn, by M. von Weida, OP [Leipzig, 1505]. The Lat. text was ed. J. Lansperger, O. Cart. (Cologne, 1536). Good edns. of her works by the monks of *Solesmes, Revelationes Gertrudianae ac Mechtildianae, 1 (Poitiers and Paris, 1875) and her Œuvres Spirituelles, ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Hourlier, OSB, and others (SC 127, 139, 143, 255, and 331; 1967–86), with valuable introd. by P. Doyère, OSB, in vol. 2, pp. 9–91, and bibl. pp. 93–8. There are numerous Eng. tr. of her Revelations; that under the title 'Herald of Divine Love' by M. Winkworth (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, etc. [1993]) translates bks. 1 and 2 and most of bk. 3. K. Ruh, 'Gertrud von Helfta: Ein neues Gertrud-Bild', Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Literatur, 121 (1992), pp. 1–20. G. J. Lewis, Bibliographie zur deutschen Frauenmystik des Mittelalters (Bibliographien zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 10; 1989), pp. 196–218 (nos. 1616–808). P. Doyère, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 331–9, s.v., with detailed bibl.; id. in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 450 f.; K. Grubmüller in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 3 (1981), cols. 7–10, s.v., with bibl.

Gervasius and Protasius, Sts, the proto-martyrs of Milan. When, in 386, St *Ambrose was about to dedicate his new church at Milan, the predecessor of the present S. Ambrogio, he obeyed 'a presentiment' (cuiusdam ardor praesagii) and dug in the church of Sts Felix and Nabor in search of relics. Two large skeletons were discovered, perfect except that the heads had been severed. These were recognized as the remains of two early martyrs, Gervasius and Protasius, and were transferred to the new church, whereat, it is recorded, miraculous healings took place, to the discomfiture of the *Arians and the edification of the orthodox. Of Gervasius and Protasius nothing certain is known, though later tradition declared that they had been martyred in the latter half of the 2nd cent. Feast day, 19 June.

Ambrose, Ep. 22 (PL 16. 1019–26) [Ep. 77 in ed. M. Zelzer, CSEL 82, pt. 3 (1982)]. AASS, Jun. 3 (1701), pp. 817–46. H. *Delehaye, 'Quelques dates du martyrologe hiéronymien', Anal. Boll. 49 (1931), pp. 22–50, esp. pp. 30–4. J. Doignon, 'Perspectives ambrosiennes: SS. Gervais et Protais, génies de Milan', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 2 (1956), pp. 313–34. M. C. de Azevedo, 'Appunti sulla relazione di S. Ambrogio circa lo scavo del Sepolcro dei SS. Gervasio e Protasio', Notizie dal Chiostro del Monastero Maggiore: Rassegna di Studi del Civico Museo Archeologico e del Civico Gabinetto Numismatico di Milano, Anno 1968, pp. 1–9. E. Dassmann, 'Ambrosius und die Märtyrer', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 18 (1975), pp. 49–68, esp. pp. 52–7. U. Zanetti, SJ, 'Les passions des SS. Nazaire, Gervais, Protais et Celse', Anal. Boll. 97 (1979), pp. 69–88. V. Zangara, 'L'inventio dei corpi dei martiri Gervasio e Protasio. Testimonianze d'Agostino su un fenomeno di religiosità popolare', Augustinianum, 21 (1981), pp. 119–33. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1232–9; A. Rimoldi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (Rome, 1965), cols. 298–302, s.v.

Gesenius, Heinrich Friedrich Wilhelm (1786–1842), orientalist and biblical scholar. From 1811 till his death he was professor of theology at Halle, where he concentrated his attention on problems of Semitic philology and became the most outstanding Hebraist of his generation. In 1810–12 he issued the earliest edition of his celebrated Hebräisches und chaldäisches Handwörterbuch, which went through many revisions, and formed the basis of the Hebrew Lexicon (1906) of C. A. *Briggs, S. R. *Driver, and F. Brown. This was followed in 1813 by the first edition of his 'Hebrew Grammar' (standard Eng. tr., 1910), and in 1820–1 by his commentary on Isaiah.

T. K. *Cheyne, Founders of Old Testament Criticism (1893), pp. 53–65. E. F. Miller, The Influence of Gesenius on Hebrew Lexicography (Contributions to Oriental History and Philology, no. 11; New York, 1927). J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 50–7. J. Hahn in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 39 f., s.v.

Gess, Wolfgang Friedrich (1819–91), German theologian. From his earliest years he possessed a deep faith, built upon an intensive study of the Bible. In 1850 he became professor at the Protestant 'Missionshaus' at Basle, in 1864 ordinary professor of systematic theology at Göttingen, and in 1871 professor at Breslau. From 1880 to 1885 he was *General Superintendent of the province of Posen. He was among the earliest defenders of a *kenotic doctrine of the Incarnation, which he expounded in Die Lehre von der Person Christi (1856), his most important work. He claimed to base this teaching (as, indeed, all his theology) on the Bible alone, without reference to the Creeds or other post-biblical authority.

Gess elaborated his views on the Person of Christ further in Christi Selbstzeugnis (Basle, 1870) and several later works. W. Schmidt in PRE (3rd edn.), 6 (1899), pp. 642–6.

Gestas. See DISMAS.

Gesuati (or, officially, Clerici apostolici S. Hieronymi). A congregation of laymen, founded *c.*1360 by Bl John *Colombini (1304–67). They devoted themselves esp. to prayer, mortification, and works of charity, and followed at first the *Benedictine, later the *Augustinian Rule. Their popular name derived from their frequent use of the ejaculations 'Praised be Jesus', or 'Hail Jesus', esp. at the beginning and end of their sermons. Originally a very loosely knit group, they received Papal approbation from *Urban V in 1367 on condition that they established proper monasteries. At the same time they adopted a uniform habit, consisting of a white tunic with a square hood and a greyish-brown cloak. They took only *Minor Orders till 1606, when they were allowed to have one or two priests in each of their convents. After Colombini's death (1367) they spread throughout Italy, and in 1425 founded houses also in Toulouse. They were dissolved by Clement IX in 1668 because they had lost the spirit of their order.

They also had a female institute of contemplative nuns, the 'Jesuatesses' or 'Sisters of the Visitation of Mary', founded *c.*1367 by Colombini's cousin, Catherine Colombini (d. 1367). They led a very austere life and existed as a congregation till 1872.

G. Dufner [OSB], Geschichte der Jesuaten (Uomini e Dottrine, 21; Rome, 1975). Id. in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 392–404, s.v. 'Jean (65) Colombini de Sienne'.

Gethsemane, Garden of. The garden to which the Lord retired with His disciples after the Last Supper and which was the scene of His agony and betrayal (Mt. 26:

36, etc.). It is in the valley between *Jerusalem and the Mount of *Olives, just across the brook *Cedron. The traditional site is now in *Franciscan hands.

G. Orfali, OFM, Gethsémani, ou Notice sur l'Église de l'Agonie de la Prière, d'après les fouilles récentes accomplies par la custodie franciscaine de Terre Sainte, 1909 et 1920 (1924); [L.] H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1914–26), pp. 301–27, with appendix on 'L'Église primitive de Gethsémani', pp. 1007–13. C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 387–99; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 335–50. E. Power, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., 3 (1938), cols. 632–59, s.v.

Geulincx, Arnold (1624–69), Belgian philosopher. A native of Antwerp, he studied philosophy and theology at Louvain (1641–6), where he became professor of philosophy in 1646. In 1658 he was deprived of his chair on account of his attacks on Scholasticism and monasticism. In the same year he went to *Leiden, where he became a *Calvinist. In 1662 he was made a lecturer on logic, and professor of philosophy in 1665. Among the works that appeared during his lifetime are Quaestiones Quodlibeticae (1653), Logica (1662 and 1668), Methodus (1663), and Ethica (1666). His more important works, however, namely the Γνῶθι σεαυτόν, sive Ethica (1675), and the Metaphysica Vera (1691), were posthumous.

Starting from R. *Descartes's distinction between body and thought, Geulincx was led to develop the theory known as '*Occasionalism', denying any action of bodies on bodies or bodies on spirits or spirits on bodies, and consequently all movements produced by our will. God is the sole cause of all movement and of all thought, all secondary causes, acc. to Geulincx, being illusory. As man is incapable of exercising any activity whatever on the outside world or on his own body, on each 'occasion' of a bodily event God causes the corresponding feeling in the soul and vice versa, and thereby everything is immediately subjected to God. The human will, which is capable of making a voluntary effort towards the good, has only an appearance of freedom, for the resulting activity, whether it be success or failure, depends on God alone. Man can thus in fact achieve nothing of himself. He is a spectator of what God works in him, the greatest virtue being a resigned and humble submission to all that happens. God himself, however, is wholly inaccessible to man, and in order to lead the moral life man must turn to the Divine in himself, i.e. the human reason by which he participates in the Divine nature. This combination of a rigorous determinism with an almost pantheistic exaltation of reason, which was one of the main features of Geulincx's thought, was later developed by N. *Malebranche and B. *Spinoza.

Complete Works, ed. J. P. N. Land (3 vols., The Hague, 1891–3). V. van der Haeghen, Geulincx: Études sur sa vie, sa philosophie et ses œuvres (Ghent, 1886); J. P. N. Land, 'Arnold Geulincx and his Works', Mind, 16 (1891), pp. 223–42; id., Arnold Geulincx und seine Philosophie (1895). E. Pfleiderer, Arnold Geulinx als Hauptvertreter der okkasionalistischen Metaphysik und Ethik (1882); E. Terraillon, La Morale de Geulincx dans ses rapports avec la philosophie de Descartes (1912). G. Schmitz, 'Geulincx und die Bewegung des Pur Amour', Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 3 (1951), pp. 209–19. W. Doney in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 3 (1967), pp. 323–5, s.v.

Geyler von Kaisersberg. See GEILER VON KAISERSBERG.

Ghana, Christianity in. The name 'Ghana' was taken on independence in 1957 by the former British colonial territory of Gold Coast in W. Africa. This had been constituted by successive 19th-cent. annexations: the coastal Fante states, the inland confederation of states known as Ashante, and various territories northward, augmented in 1918 by part of the German colony of Togo.

Christian activity dates from the arrival of the Portuguese on the coast in 1471. Despite periodic conversions, RCs were still a small community when the Dutch took over Portuguese interests in 1642. For the next two centuries several European powers had coastal trading sectors. Among chaplains appointed to these were two Fante ministers: J. E. J. Capitein (1717–47) of the Dutch Reformed Church and the Anglican Philip Quaque (1741–1816). Following transient *Pietist and *Moravian missions, sustained missionary work began when the Swiss-based Basel Mission entered the Danish sector in 1828. In 1835 a Bible-reading group formed by a pupil of Quaque invited the *Wesleyan Methodists. The North German (Bremen) Mission followed in 1847. Missions, favoured by the increasingly dominant British, prospered in the Fante south. Ashante was more resistant, and British conquest in 1896 prob. stiffened opposition to Christianity. The Basel Mission, which introduced West Indian missionaries, stimulated agricultural and commercial development and did excellent linguistic work. Western education, provided by all missions, produced active Church leadership and, increasingly, articulate criticism of colonial rule. RC missions returned: the Society of *African Missions in 1880 and the *White Fathers (esp. interested in the Northern territories) in 1913. During the First World War the missionaries from continental Europe were expelled, and the *United Free Church of Scotland provided a partial substitute. Education and other institutions suffered, but Church membership increased under local leadership. In addition, preachers without missionary tutelage, emulating Prophet W. W. *Harris, caused large movements towards Christianity; Sampson Oppong (1890?–1965) deeply affected parts of Ashante and John Swatson (fl. 1914–24) much enlarged the small Anglican mission. Where Christianity was longer established, Churches stressing prophecy and healing (e.g. the Musama Disco Cristo Church and the Church of the Twelve Apostles) developed, incorporating elements of traditional culture.

The pioneers of Ghanaian independence were mostly influenced by Christianity, and the Churches have been able to resist several acts of state power. Contemporary Ghanaian Christianity (strong in the South, very limited in the North) is diversified, with new denominations and *charismatic and para-church movements in addition to the historic Churches deriving from the older missions.

W. H. Debrunner, A History of Christianity in Ghana (Accra, 1967). R. M. Wiltgen, SVD, Gold Coast Mission History 1471–1880 (Techny, Ill., 1956). W. Schlatter, Geschichte der Basler Mission, 1815–1915 (3 vols., Basle, 1916; vol. 4, Geschichte der Basler Mission, 1914–1919, posthumously ed. H. W. Witschi [1965]), vol. 1 passim; vol. 3, pp. 19–195; vol. 4, esp. pp. 40–6 and 162–95. F. L. Bartels, The Roots of Ghana Methodism (Cambridge, 1965). N. Smith, The Presbyterian Church of Ghana, 1835–1900 (Accra, 1966). C. G. Baëta, Prophetism in Ghana: A Study of some 'Spiritual' Churches (London, 1962); D. M. Beckmann, Eden Revival: Spiritual Churches in Ghana (St Louis and London [1975]). S. G. Williamson, Akan Religion and the Christian Faith, ed. K. A.

Dickson (Accra, 1965), esp. pp. 3–82. W. H. Mobley, The Ghanaian's Image of the Missionary: An analysis of the published critiques of Christian missionaries by Ghanaians 1897–1965 (Studies on Religion in Africa, 1; Leiden, 1970).

Ghéon, Henri, pseudonym of Henri Léon Vangeon (1875–1944), French Catholic writer. The son of a chemist, he became a doctor by profession. He was brought up as a Catholic by his mother, but at the age of *c.*15 appears to have lost all faith, until the death of his niece and other friends precipitated his reconciliation (1914). He published his first collection of verse in 1897 and in 1909 he was among the founders of the Nouvelle Revue Française. Le Pain, his first play to be publicly performed (8 Nov. 1911), was a popular tragedy written in verse. His first two specifically Christian dramas, however, Trois Miracles de sainte Cécile and Le Pauvre sous l'escalier, both 1921, were failures, a fact which convinced him of the need to appeal to a wider Catholic public. He devoted himself to the task of building up a Christian theatre, producing his own plays and working with a company of young Catholics founded by himself in 1924 under the title 'Les Compagnons de Notre-Dame' and from 1931 with their successors 'Les Compagnons de Jeux'. Many of his works had kinship with the 15th-cent. *Mystery Plays. Their subject was the Lives of the Saints and other sacred themes and their deliberate naïveté of tone was an attempt to reproduce the atmosphere of medieval hagiography. They include La Vie profonde de S. François d'Assise (written 1925), Le Mystère du Roi S. Louis (1931), Le Mystère de l'invention de la Croix (1932; Eng. tr., 1956), Mystère des prodiges de Notre-Dame de Verdun (1937), and Le Jeu de S. Laurent de Fleuve (1938). Henri Ghéon's biographies, which combined the freshness of his plays with a higher standard of authenticity, appealed to a wide public; they included Lives of the *Curé d'Ars (1928; Eng. tr., 1929), of St *Teresa of Lisieux (1934; Eng. tr., 1935), of St John *Bosco (1935; Eng. tr., 1935), of St *Vincent Ferrer (1939; Eng. tr., 1939), and of St *Martin of Tours (1941; Eng. tr., 1946). He also wrote the script for a film on John Bosco (1936), novels and literary criticism.

H. Ghéon and A. Gide, Correspondance 1897–1944, ed. J. Tipsy (2 vols., Paris, 1976). M. Deléglise, Le Théâtre d'Henri Ghéon: Contribution à l'étude du renouveau théâtral (Sion, 1947).

ghetto. In former times the street or quarter of a city in which the Jewish population customarily lived. The word is perhaps a shortened form of the Ital. diminutive borghetto, 'small borough'. The earliest ghettos were found in the Italian cities of the 11th cent., but they became common in the later Middle Ages, and in 1556 *Paul IV established a ghetto in Rome which was not finally abolished until 1870. As a general rule the Jews were not allowed to leave the ghetto, which was commonly surrounded by walls and gates, at night or on Christian holy days. The ghettos were often self-governing. Ghettos of great importance existed at *Venice, Frankfurt, Prague, and Trieste. In modern times the word has often been used loosely of any close settlement of a minority group.

Gibbon, Edward (1737–94), historian of the later Roman Empire. He was born at Putney. His weak constitution prevented normal schooling, but he was an omnivorous reader. He was educated at Westminster and in 1752, at the early age of 15, sent to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he was converted to the RC Church (1753). To detach him from Catholicism, his father placed him with M. Pavilliard, a *Calvinist minister at Lausanne, where by wide and systematic reading of the Latin classics and French literature Gibbon laid the foundations of his vast erudition. He reverted to Protestantism in 1754 and returned to England in 1758. In 1761 he published his Essai sur l'étude de la littérature, defending the study of classical literature. From 1763 to 1765 he travelled on the Continent, visiting France, Switzerland, and Italy. On 15 Oct. 1764, at Rome, as he 'sat musing amidst the ruins of the Capitol', he conceived the plan of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, which was to occupy him for almost all the rest of his life. Vol. 1, which was published in 1776, had an immediate success. Vols. 2 and 3 followed in 1781. Gibbon was MP for Liskeard (1774–80) and Lymington (1781–3). In 1783 he returned to Lausanne, where by 1787 he had completed the last three volumes (pub. 1788). In 1788–9 he began his Memoirs (posthumously pub. 1796). Returning to England in 1793, he died on 16 Jan. 1794.

The Decline and Fall remains unchallenged as a history of the later Roman Empire on the grand scale. It is based on a wide study of original sources, supplemented by the researches of such French and Italian historians as L. S. Le N. de *Tillemont, J. *Mabillon, B. *Montfaucon, and L. A. *Muratori. Its breadth of treatment, large perspectives, meticulous accuracy, and its author's mastery of style are among its principal merits. In chs. 15 and 16 of vol. 1, the rapid growth of early Christianity is ascribed to five causes, namely the intolerant zeal of its adherents, the doctrine of an afterlife, the miraculous powers ascribed to the early Church, the pure morals of its members, and the discipline it enforced; and the violent controversy provoked by Gibbon's hostile attitude echoes still. The history of the Byzantine Empire is a medley of superstition and crime, while the Middle Ages are the 'triumph of barbarism and religion'. All supernatural considerations are treated with bitter irony and ridicule; but Gibbon's indirect method avoided the prosecution to which an open attack on Christianity would have exposed him.

The best edn. of the Decline and Fall is that of J. B. Bury (7 vols., 1896–1900). Miscellaneous Works of Edward Gibbon with Memoirs of his Life and Writings (3 vols., 1796–1815). Crit. edns. of his Memoirs by G. A. Bonnard (1966) and of his Letters by J. E. Norton (3 vols., 1956). Studies by H. H. *Milman (London, 1839), G. M. Young (ibid., 1932), and J. W. Swain (ibid., 1966); also introd. by J. W. Burrow, Gibbon (Past Masters, Oxford, 1985). P. B. Craddock, Young Edward Gibbon (Baltimore and London [1982]); id., Edward Gibbon, Luminous Historian 1772–1794 (ibid. [1989]). S. T. McCloy, Gibbon's Antagonism to Christianity (1933). H. L. Bond, The Literary Art of Edward Gibbon (Oxford, 1960). P. Ducrey (ed.), Gibbon et Rome à la lumière de l'historiographie moderne (Université de Lausanne, Publications de la Faculté des Lettres, 22; Geneva, 1977); G. W. Bowersock and others (eds.), Edward Gibbon and the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1977); [J.] L. Gossman, The Empire Unpossess'd: An Essay on Gibbon's Decline and Fall (Cambridge, 1981); R. Porter, Edward Gibbon: Making History (1988). D. Womersley, The Transformation of The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (Cambridge Studies in Eighteenth-Century English Literature and Thought, 1; 1988). J. E. Norton, A Bibliography of the Works of Edward Gibbon (Oxford, 1940); G. [L.] Keynes, The Library of Edward Gibbon: A Catalogue of his Books (1940), with introd., pp. 11–36. P. B. Craddock, Edward Gibbon, A Reference Guide (Boston [1987]). L. Stephen in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 250–6.

Giberti, Gian Matteo (1495–1543), Bp. of *Verona. He was one of the leading advocates in Italy of ecclesiastical reform who prepared the way for the Council of *Trent. Patronized by Cardinal Giulio de' Medici (the future *Clement VII), whose secretary he became, in 1521 he was sent as envoy to *Charles V and in 1524 became Bp. of Verona. He was a trusted counsellor of Clement VII and *Paul III, and in 1536 was appointed to sit on the reforming commission known as the 'consilium de emendanda ecclesia'. He also produced some good editions of various patristic writings (e.g. of *Chrysostom and *John of Damascus).

Works (Constitutiones Gibertinae, Costituzioni per le monache, Monitiones generales, Edita selecta, Lettere scelte, etc.), ed. P. and H. *Ballerini (Verona, 1733). Life by G. B. Pighi (ibid., 1900; 2nd edn., 1924). A. Grazioli, Gian Matteo Giberti, vescovo di Verona, precursore della riforma del Concilio di Trento (ibid., 1955). A. Prosperi, Tra Evangelismo e Controriforma: G. M. Giberti (1495–1543) (Uomini e Dottrine, 16; 1969).

Gibraltar in Europe, Diocese of. See EUROPE, DIOCESE IN.

Gibson, Edmund (1669–1748), Bp. of London. A native of Bampton, Cumbria, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he was elected a taberdar in 1690. His early publications included editions of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (1692), of Quintilian's De Institutione Oratoria (1693), and of W. Camden's Britannia (1695). In 1696 he was appointed by T. *Tenison *Lambeth Librarian, and in 1697 ordained priest. In 1698 he edited the posthumous works of Sir Henry Spelman (Reliquiae Spelmannianae) on the laws and antiquities of England. He entered the lists against F. *Atterbury in the *Convocation controversy, upholding the archbishop's prerogatives over both Houses. A fruit of the controversy was his standard manual Synodus Anglicana; or the Constitution and Proceedings of an English Convocation (1702; new edn. by E. *Cardwell, 1854). In 1703 he became Canon of *Chichester and rector of Lambeth. After prolonged studies he issued in 1713 his magnum opus, the Codex Iuris Ecclesiastici Anglicani (2nd edn., 1761), still the most complete collection of English ecclesiastical documents. On W. *Wake's translation to *Canterbury, Gibson succeeded him as Bp. of *Lincoln (1716), himself being translated to London in 1723. A *High Church Whig, he laboured to reconcile the clergy, nearly all Tories, to the house of Hanover, and he was the driving force behind the foundation of the Regius Professorships in Modern History at Oxford and Cambridge. Until 1736 he was constantly consulted over ecclesiastical appointments by Robert Walpole, but his opposition to the Quakers' Relief Bill (designed to reform the method of collecting tithe and Church rate from *Quakers) lost him Walpole's sympathy and any chance of the primacy on Wake's death in 1737. Theologically Gibson upheld orthodoxy, writing against the *Latitudinarians and the *Deists. At first he was relatively tolerant of the *Methodists, but later he became bitterly antipathetic and denounced them. He ruled his two dioceses energetically and efficiently, and actively promoted the religious welfare of the American colonists, then under the jurisdiction of the see of London. His later publications include A Preservative against Popery (3 vols., 1738), a collection of controversial treatises, mainly from the time of *James II.

N. Sykes, Edmund Gibson: A Study in Politics and Religion in the Eighteenth Century (1926). Id., From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 192–210.

Gichtel, Johann Georg (1638–1710), German sectarian. A native of Ratisbon in Bavaria and of Protestant upbringing, he came under the influence of Dutch visionaries and, exiled from Ratisbon, spent most of his life in Amsterdam. Here he read the writings of J. *Boehme, which he esteemed as highly as the Bible and of which he made the first complete edition in 1682. He himself became the founder of a small sect which condemned marriage and Church services, and which had followers in the Netherlands and Germany until modern times.

The 1779 edn. of Gichtel's Theosophia Practica (orig. pub. as Eine kurze Eröffnung und Anweisung der drei Prinzipien und Welten im Menschen, 1696) was repr., with introd. by G. Wehr (Freiburg i.B., 1979). B. Gorceix, Johann Georg Gichtel: Théosophe d'Amsterdam [Lausanne, 1975]. A. W. Hegler in PRE (3rd edn.), 6 (1899), pp. 657–60, s.v.

Gidding, Little. See LITTLE GIDDING.

Gideon Bibles. Bibles placed in hotel bedrooms and other places by an organization of Christian business and professional men and their wives. The Gideons were founded by a small group of commercial travellers in Janesville, Wisconsin, in 1899; they took their name from Gideon, whose victory against overwhelming odds is recorded in Jgs. 6: 11–7: 25, and adopted as their badge a gold circle with a white pitcher on a blue background, with a red flame coming out of the top of the pitcher. This badge enabled the Gideons to recognize each other and was later incorporated on to the Bibles they distributed. The idea of distributing Bibles came from a Christian Association for Commercial Travellers in Britain which had been placing wholesome literature, including Bibles, in the hotels frequented by its members for some 30 years. In 1908 the Gideons pledged themselves to the task of placing Bibles in every hotel in the USA. The Bibles they distributed contained a page of notes on suggested reading as well as the address in Chicago (later Nashville) of the headquarters of the Gideons who were willing to follow up inquiries through their local members. In 1947 the Gideons International Extension Committee was formed. The British Gideons were launched in 1949 (with headquarters at Lutterworth since 1974) and Gideons have been established throughout the English-speaking world. Until 1974 the AV was used exclusively, but now the New International Version and the New King James Version are also available. Bibles are now widely distributed in prison cells, schools, hospitals, and the Armed Forces, as well as to hotels.

P. Thompson, The Gideons: The story of The Gideons International in the British Isles (1984).

Gifford Lectures. The series of lectures delivered in the Scottish universities under the foundation of Adam Gifford, Lord Gifford (1820–87), 'for promoting, advancing, teaching, and diffusing the study of natural theology, in the widest sense of that term, in other words, the knowledge of God' and 'of the foundation of ethics'. The first course was delivered in 1888. Notable Gifford Lecturers (with their years of tenure) include J. Ward (1896–8), R. B. Haldane (1902–4), B. *Bosanquet (1911–12), A. S. Pringle-*Pattison (1912–13), A. J. *Balfour (1914 and 1922–3), S. Alexander (1916–18), W. R. *Inge (1917–18), C. C. J. *Webb (1918–20), F. *von Hügel (1924–6), É. *Gilson (1931–2), E. R. Bevan (1932–4), W. *Temple (1932–4), K. *Barth (1937–8), R. *Niebuhr (1939), C. Dawson (1947–8), G. Marcel (1949–50), V. A. Demant (1956–8), H. D. Lewis (1966–8), E. L. Mascall (1968–70), and R. W. Southern (1970–2).

S. L. Jaki, Lord Gifford and his Lectures: A Centenary Retrospect (Edinburgh and Macon, Ga., 1986).

Gilbert Foliot. See FOLIOT, GILBERT.

Gilbert de la Porrée (Porreta) (d. 1154), biblical commentator and early scholastic theologian. Born *c.*1080 or slightly later, he was a pupil of *Bernard of Chartres and of *Anselm of Laon. He became chancellor of *Chartres and an influential master in Paris, before becoming Bp. of Poitiers in 1142. His earliest works were his commentaries on the Psalter, undertaken in the school of Laon, and on the Pauline Epistles. These commentaries were sometimes cited as the middle gloss (media glosatura), i.e. between those of Anselm of Laon and *Peter Lombard. The work for which he is chiefly remembered is his commentary on the theological opuscula of *Boethius. The language used in this work on the question of reconciling the statements 'God is one' and 'God is three' aroused violent opposition, and Gilbert was summoned to appear before the Council of Reims in 1148. Despite strong pressure from St *Bernard of Clairvaux, there was no formal condemnation. Gilbert, like many of his contemporaries, was deeply interested in language and logic. He was attempting to make his distinctions clear, and was not so much concerned to show that they were verified in reality. In some fields of theology this had fruitful results, e.g. in the development of methods of theological inquiry, and in clarifying concepts, such as the power of the sacraments, but for the consideration of the doctrine of the Trinity it led to serious misunderstandings. Gilbert was clearly a very inspiring teacher, and the views of his followers, the Porretani, are often cited by 12th cent. theologians. As late as the third quarter of the 12th cent. a small group of writers, of whom the chief was Adhémar, canon of St Ruf, was obstinately searching for materials to justify Gilbert's statements on the Trinity. The second canon of the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), in which the formulation of Peter Lombard was promulgated, put an end to these attempts. Gilbert has in the past been credited with the authorship of the 'Liber sex Principiorum', which is found in MSS of the 13th cent. onwards incorporated in *Aristotle's 'Organon'; it is now clear that it is not his work.

Gilbert's comm. on four of Boethius' Opuscula Sacra first pr. among Boethius' works, Basle, 1570, pp. 1119–273; repr. J. P. Migne, PL 64. 1255–412; crit. edn. by N. M. Häring, SAC (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 13; Toronto, 1966). Comm. on 1 Cor. ed. A. M. Landgraf (ST 117; 1945). A set of Sententie ed. N. M. Häring in AHDLMA 45, for 1978 (1979), pp. 83–180, and 46 for 1979 (1980), pp. 45–105. The 'Liber Sex Principiorum' is pr. by L. Minio-Paluello (Aristoteles Latinus, Ser. 1, 6–7, Bruges and Paris, 1966, pp. 33–59, with index pp. 123–32). *John of Salisbury, Historia Pontificalis, 8–14 (ed., with Eng. tr., by M. Chibnall, Nelson's Medieval Texts, 1956, pp. 15–41). A. Hayen, SJ, 'Le Concile de Reims et l'erreur théologique de Gilbert de la Porrée' in AHDLMA 10 (1936), pp. 29–102; M. E. Williams, The Teaching of Gilbert Porreta on the Trinity, as found in his commentaries on Boethius (Analecta Gregoriana, 56; 1951); H. C. van Elswijk, OP, Gilbert Porreta: Sa vie, son œuvre, sa pensée (SSL 33; 1966), with bibl. L. O. Nielsen, Theology and Philosophy in the Twelfth Century: A Study of Gilbert Porreta's Thinking and the Theological Expositions of the Doctrine of the Incarnation during the Period 1130–1180 (Acta Theologica Danica, 15; Leiden, 1982). J. Marenbon in [E.] P. [M.] Dronke (ed.), A History of Twelfth-Century Western Philosophy (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 328–57. A. Dondaine, OP, Écrits de la 'Petite École' Porrétaine (Conférence Albert le Grand, 1962; Montreal and Paris, 1962). N. M. Häring in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 478 f., s.v.

Gilbert of Sempringham, St (*c.*1083–1189), founder of the Gilbertine Order. While parish priest of his native *Sempringham, he encouraged seven women of his flock to adopt a rule of life on a *Cistercian model, and about a year later, with the support of Alexander, Bp. of *Lincoln, received their profession. He soon associated with them companies of lay sisters and lay brothers to assist with the manual work of the community. Their numbers grew; in 1139 a second foundation was established; and further foundations followed. In 1147 Gilbert journeyed to Cîteaux, seeking the incorporation of his nuns in the Cistercian Order; but when the chapter declined to govern communities of women, Gilbert returned and arranged for the spiritual direction of his communities by *Canons Regular who followed the *Augustinian Rule. Henceforward his communities took the form of a double order. In 1148 Gilbert had received Papal approbation of his work. The only purely English order, it rapidly grew, and at the time of Gilbert's death numbered nine double monasteries and four of canons only. King Henry II was a friend and supporter of Gilbert, and English kings continued to favour the Order throughout the Middle Ages. At the Dissolution they possessed some 25 houses, which were surrendered to the Crown without resistance. Feast day, 4 Feb.

The Life, miracles, and canonization dossier compiled by an unknown canon of the Order in the early 13th cent. was known as the 'Book of St Gilbert'; ed., with modern Eng. tr. and full introd., by R. Foreville and G. Keir (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1987). Gilbertine Rule in W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6 (pt. 2; ed. 1830), pp. *xxix–*xcix (between pp. 946 and 947). R. Graham, S. Gilbert of Sempringham and the Gilbertines (1901), esp. pp. 1–28; B. Golding, Gilbert of Sempringham and the Gilbertine Order c.1130–c.1300 (Oxford, 1995), esp. pp. 1–70. G. Constable, 'Aelred of Rievaulx and the Nun of Watton: an episode in the early history of the Gilbertine Order', in D. Baker (ed.), Medieval Women (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 1; Oxford, 1978), pp. 205–26. B. Golding, 'The Distortion of a Dream: Transformations and Mutations of the Rule of St Gilbert', Word and Spirit, 11 (1989), pp. 60–78. R. Foreville in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 374–6, s.v. 'Gilbert (4) de Sempringham'.

Gildas, St (6th cent.), British monk and historian. Little is known of his life and background; recent research has sought such information in the text of his own work rather than in the much later, and unreliable, Lives (though one of these plausibly indicates that he came from Strathclyde). It appears that he received his education in late-Roman schools, and he was expert in the literary fashions of his time; his complex and often convoluted word order and a correct but frequently tortuous late-Latin style sometimes make his meaning difficult to discern.

His famous history, De Excidio et Conquestu Britanniae ac flebili Castigatione in Reges, Principes et Sacerdotes was written (apparently in S. Wales) primarily as a denunciation of the evils (notably British treachery and the destruction of towns and killing of clergy) which accompanied the subversion of sub-Roman Britain by the invading pagan English between *c.*450 and *c.*550, but it has been used in efforts to discover the sequence and manner in which that subversion took place. He was the only contemporary writer who attempted, within the confines of the hortatory genre, a general survey of British history from the latter days of Roman rule until *c.*550, and he is a valuable, though difficult, witness for the background of society in Britain (mainly in the west) in the century following the third consulship of Aetius (446–53); faith in his reliability for contemporary events has been undermined by his obvious ignorance and errors about past events of which he had no direct knowledge. He may have had access to official documents, but he preserves a partial account of only one, gives only one, muddled, indication of the chronology of his own life, and names (with insufficient detail) only five of the 'tyranni' under whom sub-Roman Britain and whatever ecclesiastical institutions it possessed collapsed. It is not now thought that he wrote the Penitential attributed to him, but fragments of letters by him survive. Feast day, 29 Jan.

Crit. edn. of Gildas's 'De Excidio' by T. *Mommsen in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 13 (= Chronica Minora, 3] (1896), pp. 25–85; other works, pp. 86–90. The 'De Excidio' and fragments of letters are repr. from this edn., with variants and Eng. tr. by M. Winterbottom (London and Chichester, 1978), which also repr. the edn. and Eng. tr. of the so-called Penitential of Gildas from the edn. of the Irish Penitentials by L. Bieler (see PENITENTIAL BOOKS). The 11th-cent. Life of Gildas by a monk of Ruys in Brittany, ed. T. Mommsen, loc. cit., pp. 91–106; 12th cent. Life by Caradoc of Llancarvan ibid., pp. 107–10; introd., pp. 3–24. C. E. Stevens, 'Gildas Sapiens', EHR 56 (1941), pp. 353–73; T. D. O'Sullivan, The De Excidio of Gildas: Its Authenticity and Date (Columbia Studies in the Classical Tradition, 7; Leiden, 1978). M. Lapidge and D. Dumville (eds.), Gildas: New Approaches (Studies in Celtic History, Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1984). F. Kerlouégan, Le De Excidio Britanniae de Gildas (1987). A. Gransden, Historical Writing in England c.550 to c.1307 (1974), pp. 1–5. J. N. L. Myres, The English Settlements (Oxford History of England, 1986), pp. 8–20. T. F. Tout in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 344–6, s.v.

Giles, St (? 8th cent.), Lat. Aegidius. One of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints. Acc. to a 10th-cent. biography, St Giles was an Athenian who fled to France from the admiration of his countrymen and made himself a hermitage in a forest near the mouth of the Rhône, where he lived on herbs and the milk of a hind. Once when Flavius Wamba, King of the Visigoths, was hunting in the forest, the monarch chased the hind to the abode of the hermit and was so impressed by Giles's holiness that he built him a monastery. Though the medieval account, which makes him an Athenian and connects him with persons as far apart in time as St *Caesarius of Arles (d. 542) and *Charlemagne (d. 814), is clearly unhistorical, it may contain a basis of real fact. A 9th-cent. Papal bull mentions Wamba as having founded an abbey for him, to which a charter was given by Benedict II (684–5). Later on, the town of St Gilles, which grew up near his grave, became a famous place of pilgrimage. He was one of the most popular medieval saints, and in England alone 160 churches were dedicated to him. He was invoked as their patron by cripples, beggars, and blacksmiths. Feast day, 1 Sept.

The principal authority is an anonymous Lat. Life pr. in AASS, Sept. 1 (1746), pp. 299–304, with introd. and brief extracts of his miracles (see below), pp. 284–99; another recension of the Life is pr., with introd., in Anal. Boll. 8 (1889), pp. 102–20. The Liber Miraculorum Sancti Aegidii, written before 1124, ed. in full by P. Jaffé in MGH, Scriptores, 12 (1861), pp. 316–23; also pr. in Anal. Boll. 9 (1890), pp. 393–422. BHL 1, pp. 17 f. (nos. 93–8); novum suppl. (1986), pp. 13 f. E. Rembry, Saint Gilles: Sa vie, ses reliques, son culte en Belgique et dans le nord de la France (2 vols., bound in 1, Bruges, 1881–2); E. C. Jones, Saint Gilles: Essai d'histoire littéraire (Paris thesis, 1914). F. Brittain, Saint Giles (Cambridge, 1928). J. Pycke in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 1352–6, s.v. 'Gilles (2)', with extensive bibl.

Giles of Rome (d. 1316; born *c.*1243–7), otherwise 'Aegidius Romanus', medieval philosopher. He was born at Rome, perhaps descended from the *Colonna family. At an early age he became an *Augustinian Hermit at *Paris and attracted attention by his intellectual gifts, which later won him the surname of 'doctor fundatissimus'. From 1269 to 1271 he had as his teacher St *Thomas Aquinas. In 1292 he was elected *General of his order, which he strove to extend by the foundation of many convents. In 1295 *Boniface VIII made him Abp. of Bourges.

Giles was a very fertile author whose writings include commentaries on *Aristotle's 'Physics', the 'De Anima', and the '*Liber de Causis', and on *Peter Lombard's 'Sentences'; treatises against the *Averroists, on *angels, and on *Original Sin; and exegetical writings on several Pauline Epp. and on St John's Gospel. His most popular work, which was translated into many languages, was the 'De Regimine Principum' written for his pupil, the future King Philip the Fair. His treatise 'De Summi Pontificis Potestate' may have been the foundation of Boniface VIII's famous bull '*Unam Sanctam' (q.v.). In his teaching Giles of Rome followed St Thomas on such points as the unity of the substantial form and the real distinction between essence and existence in creatures, but against him he maintained the primacy of will over reason and denied that before the Fall *Adam possessed sanctifying grace. His teaching, both past and future (sententias scriptas et scribendas), was prescribed to be followed in the schools of the Augustinian Order in 1287.

His writings were widely pr. in the 15th and 16th cents. For bibl. details, see G. Boffito, Saggio di bibliografia egidiana (Florence, 1911), G. Bruni, Le opere di Egidio Romano (1936), and id., 'Saggio bibliografico sulle opere stampate di Egidio Romano', Analecta Augustiniana, 24 (1961), pp. 331–55. Crit. edn. of his Opera Omnia by F. del Punta and others (Unione Accademica Nazionale, Corpus Philosophorum Medii Aevi, Testi e Studi, 4–8, 10–11, etc.; Florence, 1985 ff.). Separate modern edns. of 'De Ecclesiastica Potestate' by R. Scholz (Weimar, 1929); 'Theoremata de Esse et Essentia', with introd., by E. Hocedez, SJ (Museum Lessianum, Section Philosophique, 12; 1930); and 'De Erroribus Philosophorum' by J. Koch, with Eng. tr. (Milwaukee, 1944).

Eng. tr. of 'De Ecclesiastica Potestate', with introd. and notes, by R. W. Dyson (Woodbridge, Suffolk, and Dover, NH, 1986). E. Hocedez, SJ, 'La Condamnation de Gilles de Rome', RTAM 4 (1932), pp. 34–58; P. W. Nash, SJ, 'Giles of Rome on Boethius' "Diversum est esse et id quod est" ', Mediaeval Studies, 12 (1950), pp. 57–91, with full notes; id., 'The Accidentality of Esse according to Giles of Rome', Gregorianum, 38 (1957), pp. 103–15. M. A. Hewson, Giles of Rome and the Medieval Theory of Conception: A Study of the De formatione corporis humani in utero (1975). J. F. Wippel, 'The Relationship between Essence and Existence in Late-Thirteenth-Century Thought: Giles of Rome, Henry of Ghent, Godfrey of Fontaines, and James of Viterbo', in P. Morewedge (ed.), Philosophies of Existence, Ancient and Medieval (New York, 1982), pp. 131–64, esp. pp. 134–41 and 152–8. N. Merlin in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1358–65, s.v. 'Gilles de Rome'; A. Trape in EC 5 (1951), cols. 138–41, s.v. 'Egidio Romano', with good bibl.; D. Gutiérrez in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 385–90, s.v. 'Gilles (3) de Rome'; P. W. Nash in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 484 f.

Gilgamesh, Epics of. The Babylonian Gilgamesh Epic is a long, composite narrative poem known from tablets and fragments dating from *c.*1800 to *c.*300 BC. These come from several editions, none of them surviving complete. A single edition circulated in the first millennium BC. This is divided into twelve tablets, though the final one does not belong with the others, but is the second half of a Sumerian Gilgamesh Epic in Babylonian translation. The Babylonian versions were preceded by five Sumerian Gilgamesh Epics, each devoted to a single episode. Two of these form the basis of the Babylonian text, preceded and followed by other material (incl. the *flood story) and elaborated with considerable literary skill. The story centres on Gilgamesh's fear of death, which he first counters by performing a heroic deed (to achieve the immortality of fame). Then the death of his close friend Enkidu intensifies his fear and he resolves to achieve personal immortality. In this he fails and has to be content that his fame will survive him. Two scenes from the stories are depicted in ancient art. Gilgamesh was certainly a historical figure who ruled the Sumerian city of Uruk (Erech/Warka) in the first half of the third millennium BC. He was deified shortly after his death and continued in tradition as a netherworld god. Apart from the flood story, no other parts of this tradition are related to the Bible, though the opening episode, the civilizing of Enkidu, deals with questions which are also taken up in the story of the Garden of *Eden. However, the name 'Gilgamesh' occurs in the *Dead Sea Scrolls in a context of giants.

Best edn. of the Babylonian text, with transliteration and notes, by R. Campbell Thompson (Oxford, 1930). Crit. edn. of all the texts by A. R. George is in preparation. Eng. trs. by A. Heidel, The Gilgamesh Epic and Old Testament Parallels (Chicago, 1946), pp. 16–101, and by M. G. Kovacs (Stanford, Calif., 1989). P. Garelli (ed.), Gilgameš et sa légende: Études recueillies . . . à l'occasion de la VII^e Rencontre Assyriologique Internationale (Cahiers du Groupe François-Thureau-Dangin, 1; 1960), with bibl. pp. 1–27; J. H. Tigay, The Evolution of the Gilgamesh Epic (Philadelphia, 1982), with bibl. pp. 304–33. On the reference to Gilgamesh in the Dead Sea Scrolls, see J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch (Oxford, 1976), p. 313.

Gill, Arthur Eric Rowton (1882–1940), sculptor, letterist, and wood-engraver. The son of a minister in the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion who became an Anglican priest, he joined the RC Church in 1913 and became a *Dominican tertiary. After training in an architect's office, he studied lettering under Edward Johnston. His best-known works are the *Stations of the Cross in *Westminster Cathedral (finished 1918), ten panels in the New Museum, Jerusalem (1934–7), and the bas-reliefs of 'The Re-creation of Man' with the words of G. M. *Hopkins, 'Thou mastering me God', inscribed above it (1935–8) in the League of Nations Council Hall at Geneva. In his art he sought to express a Christian vision of the created order (his appreciation of which included an unembarrassed celebration of erotic love); he was also a social philosopher, a pacifist, and a writer. As a stone-carver who revived the art of working directly upon the stone, he excelled as a carver of inscriptions and a maker of small stone objects such as crucifixes and holy-water stoups.

Eric Gill, Autobiography (1940); W. Shewring (ed.), Letters of Eric Gill (1947). R. Speaight, The Life of Eric Gill (1966); D. Attwater, A Cell of Good Living: The Life, Works and Opinions of Eric Gill (1969); M. Yorke, Eric Gill: Man of Flesh and Spirit (1981); F. MacCarthy, Eric Gill (1989). E. R. Gill, Bibliography of Eric Gill (1953); id., The Inscriptional Work of Eric Gill: An Inventory (1964). W. Shewring in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 339–41, s.v.

Gilpin, Bernard (1517–84), 'Apostle of the North'. He was a great-nephew of C. *Tunstall, Bp. of *Durham. Born at Kentmere in Cumbria, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he came under the spell of *Erasmus' writings. After *Henry VIII's refoundation of Cardinal College as *Christ Church, Gilpin was elected one of its first Students. Disapproving of the Edwardian doctrinal changes, he had serious scruples about abandoning Catholicism. When he preached at Court on 8 Jan. 1553, he expressed his final rejection of Papal supremacy, as well as his disgust at lay plundering of Church lands. Leaving England later in 1553 to arrange for the printing of Tunstall's work on the Eucharist, he returned only when Tunstall made him Archdeacon of Durham, almost certainly in 1556. The following year Tunstall also granted him the rich living of Houghton-le-Spring. However, his continuing attacks on clerical corruption led to trouble with the Marian Church authorities. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he was offered, but declined, both the bishopric of *Carlisle (1559) and the provostship of Queen's (1560). His scruples about the doctrinal changes soon revived and, horrified by E. *Sandys's views on the Eucharist, he accepted the new order with some reluctance. In the next years he made many long and successful missionary journeys in the N. of England, during which his unbounded liberality and unsparing denunciation of abuses brought him a very large following, including some of the *Puritans.

Gilpin's sermon at Court [dated '1552' old style, i.e. 1553] is pr. in 4th edn. of Carleton's Life, 1636 (see below), and in 1752 with W. Gilpin's Life. The primary authority is the Life by G. Carleton, Bp. of *Chichester (London, 1628, in Lat.; Eng. version, ibid., 1629); more substantial Life by William Gilpin, a collateral descendant (London, 1752). D. Marcombe, 'Bernard Gilpin: Anatomy of an Elizabethan Legend', Northern History, 16 (1980), pp. 20–39. BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 232 f.

Gilson, Étienne (1884–1978), French *Thomist philosopher. He was educated at the *Sorbonne, where he came under the influence of H. *Bergson and L. Lévy-Bruhl.

At the latter's suggestion he embarked on a study of the Scholastic influence on R. *Descartes and thus became conversant with medieval thought. In 1913 he was appointed professor at Lille and subsequently held chairs at Strasbourg (1919–20), the Sorbonne (1921–32), and the Collège de France (1932–51). After his retirement he became a full-time professor at the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies at Toronto, of which he had been one of the founders in 1929 and had remained director of studies ever since. From 1959 he lived mainly in France.

The first-fruits of the studies suggested by Lévy-Bruhl were the Index scolastico-cartésien (1912) and La Liberté chez Descartes et la théologie (1913). These were followed by La Philosophie au moyen âge (2 vols., 1922; revised 1944), a popular manual which showed the systems of the Middle Ages as achievements in their own right. He published an English version, which was not a straight translation, as History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955). His other important works on medieval philosophy include Le Thomisme (1919; Eng. tr. 1924), an outline of St Thomas's metaphysics; La Philosophie de saint Bonaventure (1924; Eng. tr. 1938), on St *Bonaventure's conception of philosophical and mystical experience; Introduction à l'étude de saint Augustin (1929; Eng. tr. 1960); L'Esprit de la philosophie médiévale (*Gifford Lectures, 1932; Eng. tr. 1936); La Théologie mystique de saint Bernard (1934; Eng. tr. 1940) on the special characteristics of *Cistercian mysticism; Héloïse et Abélard (1938; Eng. tr. 1953); L'Être et l'Essence (1948; Eng. version, Being and some Philosophers, 1949); and Jean Duns Scot, introduction à ses positions fondamentales (1952). He was one of the founders of the Archives d'histoire doctrinale et littéraire du moyen âge, to which he contributed some of his most significant work, including articles on St Thomas Aquinas's criticism of Augustine and *Avicenna's influence on Duns Scotus in the first two volumes. In his later years he wrote on art.

Gilson's letters to H. de *Lubac, SJ, were ed. by the latter (Paris, 1986); his correspondence with J. *Maritain was ed. G. Prouvost (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1991). J. Maritain and others, Étienne Gilson: Philosophie de la chrétienté (Rencontres, 30; 1949). L. K. Shook, Etienne Gilson (Etienne Gilson Series, 6; Toronto, 1984). M. McGrath, Etienne Gilson: A Bibliography (ibid. 3; 1982). A. Maurer in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 137 f., s.v. 'Thomism', with further bibl.

Gioberti, Vincenzo (1801–52), Italian politician and religious philosopher. He was born and educated at Turin and ordained priest in 1825. Under the influence of Giuseppe Mazzini (1805–72), he made it his chief ambition to free Italy from foreign political and intellectual domination. On resigning a chaplaincy which he held at court (1833), he was arrested on suspicion of political intrigue and banished from Italy (1834). For the next eleven years he taught at Brussels, where he published most of his philosophical works. Returning to Italy in 1847, he became President of the Chamber of Deputies and in 1849 a member of the Cabinet of Victor Emmanuel II (1820–78). After unsuccessful negotiations in Paris, he relinquished his political position shortly afterwards and lived in France for the rest of his life.

Gioberti's philosophical ideas were in substance *Ontologistic. He held that there was an exact correspondence between the orders of being and knowing and that the human mind directly perceived the absolute necessary Being, God, the creative cause of all existence and the source of human knowledge. The pantheistic character of some of his later teaching, in which he came to regard creation as the essential function of thought, caused some of his treatises to be put on the *Index. Despite the affinities of his doctrines with those of A. *Rosmini, the two philosophers wrote against each other. His principal writings include Teoria del sovrannaturale (Brussels, 1838), Introduzione allo studio della filosofia (ibid., 1840), Degli errori filosofici di Antonio Rosmini (3 vols., ibid., 1841–4), and Del primato morale e civile degli Italiani (2 vols., ibid., 1843).

Among Gioberti's posthumous writings were Meditazioni filosofiche inedite di Vincenzo Gioberti (ed. E. Solmi, Florence, 1909), Epistolario (ed. G. *Gentile and G. Balsamo-Crivelli, 11 vols., Turin, 1927–37), and Cours de philosophie, 1841–42 (ed. G. Calò and M. Battistini, Milan, 1947). Anthology by G. Gentile entitled Nuova protologia (Bari, 1912). 'National Edition' of his complete works (Milan, 1938–47; Rome, 1969; Padua, 1970 ff.). Modern studies by L. Stefanini (Milan, 1947), G. Bonafede (Palermo, 1950), G. de Crescenzo (Brescia, 1964), and G. Derossi (Milan, 1971). B. M. G. Reardon, Religion in the Age of Romanticism (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 147–56. L. Stefanini in EC 6 (1951), cols. 414–22.

Giotto (*c.*1267–1337), the usual name of Ambrogiotto di Bondone, Florentine painter. Acc. to G. Vasari, the 16th-cent. historian of Italian art, he was a pupil of *Cimabue; *Dante (Purg. 11. 94–6) linked them as the most important painters in Italy to date. Little is known of his life: in Rome he was patronized by Card. Stefaneschi; from *c.*1329–33 he was in the employ of King Robert of Naples; and in 1334 he was appointed surveyor of the cathedral at Florence, where he initiated the building of the campanile. His work is important in the development of modern painting; he broke away from the rigid formality and stereotyped formulas characteristic of late Byzantine art in Italy and introduced a new sense of dramatic realism. Though it is a matter of dispute whether he designed the cycle of frescoes in the Upper Church at *Assisi—which include some of the most familiar images in the life of St *Francis—he was certainly responsible for those in the Arena Chapel at Padua and the Peruzzi and Bardi Chapels of Santa Croce in Florence; all demonstrate his concern for naturalism and his genius for narrative and characterization. In Rome his most spectacular work was the huge mosaic of the Navicella (the Ship of the Church, with Christ walking on the waters) in the old *St Peter's, which was reworked in the 17th cent. Other works include the Ognissanti Madonna in the Uffizi in Florence.

Reproductions of his paintings, largely in colour, with notes by E. Baccheschi (Classici dell'Arte, 3; Milan, 1966; with Eng. tr. of notes and new introd. by A. Martindale, Classics of World Art [1969]). C. Gnudi, Giotto (Milan [1958]; Eng. tr. [1959]); G. Previtali, Giotto e la sua bottega (Milan [1967]); Giotto e il suo tempo: Atti del Congresso Internazionale per la celebrazione del VII Centenario della nascita di Giotto, 24 settembre–1 ottobre 1967 [1971]. J. H. Stubblebine, Giotto: The Arena Chapel Frescoes (1969); A. Smart, The Assisi Problem and the Art of Giotto (Oxford, 1971). S. Y. Edgerton, The Heritage of Giotto's Geometry: Art and Science on the Eve of the Scientific Revolution (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1991). J. [E.] C. T. White, Art and Architecture in Italy 1250 to 1400 (Pelican History of Art, 1966), pp. 203–32; 2nd edn. (1987), pp. 309–48. Bibl. by R. Salvini (R. Istituto d'Archeologia e Storia dell'Arte, Bibliografie e Cataloghi, 4; Rome, 1938), with further vol. covering the period 1937–70, by C. de Benedictis (1973).

Giovanni Capistrano, St (1386–1456), *Franciscan friar. He was born at Capistrano in the Abruzzi and studied law at Perugia, where in 1412 he was made governor by King Ladislaus of Naples and married. Taken prisoner in a war with the family of the Malatestas, he experienced a vision of St *Francis while in captivity, which fired him with a desire to enter the religious life. On his release he obtained a dispensation from the impediment of matrimony and in 1416 sought admission to the novitiate of the Friars Minor. He was professed in 1417, priested in 1420, and immediately undertook a series of missions throughout Italy. In 1429, with other *Observant Friars, he was charged at Rome with heretical teaching on the poverty of Christ but acquitted. He took part in the General Chapter of the order which met at *Assisi in 1430 to secure the union of the Conventuals and the Observants, and assisted his old master, St *Bernardino of Siena (d. 1444), in the reform of the order. On several occasions he was vicar-general of the order. In 1451 he was sent by Pope *Nicholas V to Austria in response to an appeal by the Emp. Frederick III for help against the *Hussites. His successful labours all over E. Europe were ended by the advance of the Turks after the capture of *Constantinople (1453). After failing to arouse Bavaria and Austria to the danger, he went to Hungary, where early in 1456 the Turks were preparing to attack Belgrade. Together with Hunyady he raised an army which completely defeated the Turks on 22 July, but he died of plague on 23 Oct. of the same year. He was beatified in 1694, canonized in 1724; the feast was made of general observance in 1890, when it was transferred to 28 Mar.; in 1969 it was restored to 23 Oct.

The primary authorities, besides his own writings, are the contemporary Lives by his companions in the order (arranged chronologically): Jerome of Utino, pr. in AASS, Oct. 10 (1861), pp. 483–91; Nicholas of Fara, pr. ibid., pp. 439–83, with variant MS of the preface ed. E. Hocedez, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 23 (1904), pp. 320–4; Christopher of Varese, pr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 491–545; the Hungarian, Peter of Oedenburg (completed by 1489), pub. Vienna, 1523. Seven of his letters are pr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 546–52, with important introd. by J. van Hecke, SJ, pp. 269–439. Considerable material also in the works of L. *Wadding (q.v.). A. Hermann, Capistranus Triumphans (Cologne, 1700). D. van Andrichem, OFM, 'Explicatio Primae Regulae S. Clarae auctore S. Joanne Capistranensi (1445)', AFH 22 (1929), pp. 336–57, 515–28, incl. text. J. Luszczki, OFM, De Sermonibus S. Ioannis a Capistrano: Studium Historico-Criticum (Studia Antoniana, 16; Rome, 1961). J. Hofer, CSSR, Johannes von Capistrano (Innsbruck [1936]; rev. edn. by O. Bonmann, OFM, 2 vols., Heidelberg, 1964–5; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1943; the best modern work). H. Lippens, OFM, 'S. Jean de Capistrano en mission aux états bourguignons, 1442–1443', AFH 35 (1942), pp. 113–32 and 254–95, with docs. O. Bonmann, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 316–23, s.v. 'Jean de Capestrano'; id. in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 1212–23, s.v.

Giraldus Cambrensis (*c.*1146–1223), Gerald de Barri, historian. A native of Pembrokeshire, he studied at Paris, and from *c.*1175 to 1203 was Archdeacon of Brecon. He was elected Bp. of *St Davids in 1176 and again in 1199, but on each occasion failed to obtain consecration to the see, as the English feared that a Welshman would seek to make his Church independent again of *Canterbury. After protracted negotiations at Rome, his election was cancelled by Pope *Innocent III in 1203. He filled, however, several other important offices, and in 1188 preached the Third *Crusade in Wales, on which he would have gone himself had not Henry II dissuaded him. Among his more important writings are 'Topographia Hibernica', 'Expugnatio Hibernica', 'Itinerarium Kambriae', and 'De iure et statu Menevensis Ecclesiae'. They are amusing and vivid, though at times much influenced by personal and party feeling and their facts exaggerated.

Works ed. J. S. Brewer and others (RS, 8 vols., 1861–91). Crit. edn. of De Invectionibus by W. S. Davies (Y Cymmrodor, 30; 1920); of Speculum Duorum by Y. Lefèvre and others (Cardiff, 1974, incl. Eng. tr.); and of Expugnatio Hibernica by A. B. Scott and F. X. Martin (New History of Ireland, Ancillary Publications, Irish Medieval Texts, 1; Dublin, 1978, with Eng. tr.). Eng. tr. of Historical Works by T. Forester, R. C. Hoare, and T. Wright (Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 1863); of his Autobiography by H. E. Butler (London, 1937), with introd. by C. H. Williams, pp. 9–21; of the first version of 'Topographia Hibernica' by J. J. O'Meara (Dundalk, 1951; rev. edn., Penguin Classics, 1982); and of 'Itinerarium Kambriae' by L. Thorpe (ibid., 1978). M. Richter, Giraldus Cambrensis: The Growth of the Welsh Nation (Aberystwyth, 1972; 2nd edn., 1976). R. [J.] Bartlett, Gerald of Wales 1146–1223 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1982). B. F. Roberts, Gerald of Wales (Cardiff, 1982). F. M. Powicke, 'Gerald of Wales', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 12 (1928), pp. 389–410, repr. in his Christian Life in the Middle Ages and other Essays (1935), pp. 107–29. M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 22–8 (nos. 52–75). Y. Lefèvre in DHGE 20 (1984), cols. 1484 f., s.v. 'Giraud de Barri'.

girdle (Lat. cingulum, Gk. ζώνη). As an article of liturgical attire, a normal accompaniment of the *alb, and hence one of the six Eucharistic vestments. It is held to typify sacerdotal chastity and, in ref. to Lk. 12: 35–8, spiritual watchfulness. In the E. Church, where it takes the form of a broad band of material rather than a simple cord, its use is confined to bishops and priests, the deacon's alb being worn ungirdled.

Braun, LG, pp. 101–17.

Glabrio, Manius Acilius, consul in AD 91. Ordered by the Emp. *Domitian to fight with the wild beasts in the amphitheatre at Albano, he was banished after a successful contest, and finally executed about the same time as the husband of *Domitilla in 95. The nature of the charges against him is unclear; it is likely that he was a victim of Domitian's suspicions of the high aristocracy. The idea that he was himself a Christian is prob. mistaken, though the family grave shows that some servants of the household were, if not necessarily in his generation.

The main authorities are Dio Cassius, Hist. 67. 13 f., and *Suetonius, Domitianus, 10. Prosopographia Imperii Romani, 1 (2nd edn.), ed. E. Groag and A. Stein (Berlin and Leipzig, 1933), pp. 9 f. (no. 67), s.v. 'M'. Acilius Glabrio'. E. M. Smallwood, 'Domitian's Attitude toward the Jews and Judaism', Classical Philology, 51 (1956), pp. 1–13, esp. pp. 6 f. and 9. G. B. *de Rossi, 'L'ipogeo degli Acilii Glabrioni nel cimitero di Priscilla', Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, 4th ser. 6 (1888–9), pp. 15–66 and 103–33. See also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (1924), cols. 1259–74, s.v.

Gladstone, William Ewart (1809–98), British statesman. Under the influence of his ardently *Evangelical mother he early showed religious inclinations. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. As an undergraduate he considered taking holy orders but, mainly on his father's advice, opted for 'public service' and entered Parliament in 1832. Though he left Oxford before the beginning of the *Oxford Movement, he was brought into contact with it by his friends James Robert Hope[-Scott] (1812–73) and H. E. *Manning. His study of Richard *Hooker and other 16th- and 17th-cent. English divines and of the 'Occasional Offices' of the BCP convinced him of the soundness of the *High Church doctrines, which he succeeded in combining with the tenets of his Evangelical education, and for the defence of which he frequently used his political position. In 1838 he published The State in its Relations with the Church, written from the point of view of the politician and in favour of the establishment of the Church, not without pungent criticisms of the RC position. In Church Principles considered in their Results (1840) he upheld the visibility of the Church, the certainty of the apostolic succession, and the efficacy of the Sacraments as well as the Divine institution of the C of E. In 1845 he resigned from Peel's Cabinet over the proposed grant to the RC college of *Maynooth, though he later defended the grant in the House of Commons. His High Church views led him to address an Open Letter to the Bp. of London (C. J. *Blomfield) after the *Gorham case, in which he maintained the compatibility of the royal supremacy with the intrinsic jurisdiction of the Church. In 1854 he supported Archdeacon G. A. *Denison, who was prosecuted for teaching the *Real Presence, a doctrine to which Gladstone was deeply attached. Owing to these convictions he was sometimes suspected of sympathy with the RC Church, which, however, he strongly repudiated, mainly on the ground that it was a regime of tyranny. He was much involved in the controversies of the Scottish Episcopal Church.

After having been several times Chancellor of the Exchequer he became in 1865 for the first time leader of the House of Commons, and in 1867 leader of the Liberal Party, which, though predominantly Anglican in leadership, drew strong support from Nonconformist votes. He was responsible for the law abolishing compulsory Church rates and fought the next election on the issue whether the Irish Church was to be disestablished. Having abandoned his earlier view, he defended disestablishment in his Chapter of Autobiography (1868) and carried it through as Prime Minister in 1869. In 1871 his government passed the *Universities Tests Act. In 1873 he brought in a bill proposing a combined Catholic and Protestant university for Ireland, which was defeated. In the next year he opposed Abp. A. C. *Tait's *Public Worship Bill in the interests of the liberty of the C of E, and in the same year published several bitter attacks on the Church of Rome, esp. on recent *Vatican decrees, which were answered by J. H. *Newman and H. E. Manning. In 1896 he pleaded in a letter to Card. M. Rampolla for the recognition of *Anglican Ordinations. Though he kept close to Tractarian principles throughout his life, he defended the doctrine of *conditional immortality in his Studies Subsidiary to the Works of Bishop Butler (1896). Gladstone in his private life lived up to the tenets of his religion: he was a weekly communicant, lavish in almsgiving and frugal in his habits, esp. in matters of sleep and food. He was responsible for the founding of many new sees in the growing British Empire, and maintained his keen and sympathetic interest in all theological and ecclesiastical questions until his death. Much of his legislation was controversial, not least to Churchmen, but he was widely recognized as an outstanding example of a Victorian Christian statesman.

Diaries ed. M. R. D. Foot and others (14 vols., Oxford, 1968–94). Correspondence on Church and Religion of W. E. Gladstone, ed. D. C. Lathbury (2 vols., 1910). Some of Gladstone's political correspondence has also been pub. There is an important collection of Gladstone's theological articles in his Later Gleanings (1897). The extensive lit. incl. J. Morley, The Life of W. E. Gladstone (3 vols., 1903); G. W. E. Russell, W. E. Gladstone (1891); H. C. G. Matthew, Gladstone 1809–1874 (Oxford, 1986); id., Gladstone 1875–1898 (ibid., 1995). J. [D.] Bastable (ed.), Newman and Gladstone: Centennial Essays (Dublin, 1978). A. R. Vidler, The Orb and the Cross: A Normative Study in the Relations of Church and State with Reference to Gladstone's Early Writings (1945); P. Butler, Gladstone: Church, State, and Tractarianism. A Study of his Religious Ideas and Attitudes, 1809–1859 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1982). P. J. Jagger, Gladstone: The Making of a Christian Politician (Princeton Theological Monograph Series, 28; Allison Park, Pa. [1991]). H. C. G. Matthew, 'Gladstone, Vaticanism, and the Question of the East', in D. Baker (ed.), Religious Motivation: Biographical and Sociological Problems for the Church Historian (Studies in Church History, 15; 1978), pp. 417–42; A. Ramm, 'Gladstone's Religion', Historical Journal, 28 (1985), pp. 327–40.

Glagolitic. The medieval Slavonic alphabet, still used in the liturgical books of the *Uniats in Dalmatia, etc. It is generally thought that it was devised by St *Cyril, the Apostle of the Slavs, in the 9th cent. Other surviving literature in the alphabet includes translations of the Gospels and collections of Homilies. In modern Glagolitic *Missals (since 1927), only the *Canon is printed in Glagolitic letters, the rest being in Latin type. See also CYRILLIC.

L. Jelic (ed.), Fontes Historici Liturgiae Glagolito-Romanae a XIII ad XIX saeculum (Krk, 1906). S. Smržik, SJ, The Glagolitic or Roman-Slavonic Liturgy (Series Cyrillomethodiana, 2; Cleveland, Oh., and Rome, 1959). A. P. Vlasto, The Entry of the Slavs into Christendom (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 38–44.

Glanvill, Joseph (1636–80), religious writer. Educated at Exeter and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford, he became rector of the Abbey Church, Bath, in 1666. Throughout his life he took a keen interest in natural phenomena, esp. in their bearing on religion, and he was an early member of the Royal Society (elected in 1664). In several of his many treatises he endeavoured to prove that the evidence derived from the most varied physical phenomena lent support to religious belief. Like most of his scientific contemporaries, he was an ardent believer in the *Cartesian philosophy. In his Saducismus Triumphatus (1681) he defended belief in witchcraft. A passage in his Vanity of Dogmatizing (1661) suggested to Matthew *Arnold his poem 'The Scholar-Gipsy'.

Facsimile repr. of the 1689 edn. of Saducismus Triumphatus with introd. by C. O. Parsons (Gainesville, Fla., 1966), of Glanvill's Plus Ultra or The Progress and Advancement of Knowledge since the Days of Aristotle (1668) with introd. by J. I. Cope (ibid., 1958), and of The Vanity of Dogmatizing, with introd. by S. Medcalf (Hove, Sussex, 1970). Life prefixed to Saducismus Triumphatus, 4th edn., 1726. J. I. Cope, Joseph Glanvill, Anglican Apologist (St Louis, 1956), with bibl.; S. Talmor, Glanvill: The Uses and Abuses of Scepticism (Oxford, etc., 1981). N. H. Steneck, '"The Ballad of Robert Crosse and Joseph Glanvill" and the Background to Plus Ultra', British Journal for the History of Science, 14 (1981), pp. 59–74. B. Willey, The Seventeenth Century Background (1934; repr. 1986), ch. 9, pp. 170–204. H. S. and I. M. L. Redgrove, Joseph Glanvill and Psychical Research in the Seventeenth Century (1921). L. Stephen in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 408 f.; W. H. Austin in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 5 (1981 edn.), pp. 414–17, s.v.

Glasites (also Sandemanians), a small Scottish sect named after John Glas (1695–1773) and his son-in-law, Robert Sandeman (1718–71). Their founder, John Glas, the son of the (*Presbyterian) minister at Auchtermuchty, Fife, was ordained in 1719 as minister of Tealing, near Dundee. By the mid-1720s he had come to the conclusion that the existence of a State Church was unscriptural and he challenged the whole basis of the Presbyterian establishment. He gave public expression to his views in The Testimony of the King of Martyrs concerning His Kingdom (1727); he was accordingly suspended from his ministerial duties in 1728 and deposed in 1730. He established independent congregations among his (mainly poor) followers, for whom non-ordained elders conducted communion services, and Glasite meeting houses were set up in Dundee, Perth, Edinburgh, and other urban centres in Scotland. Their unusual custom of celebrating the *agape with broth attracted attention.

Gradually leadership of the movement passed to Robert Sandeman, who had abandoned plans to pursue a professional career and became a weaver; in 1744 he was elected a Glasite elder. In his Letters on Theron and Aspasio (1757) Sandeman attacked the *Calvinist teaching that God imputes the righteous acts of Christ to individual Christians, holding rather that a reasoned faith was the only basis for a proper relationship with God and the attainment of salvation. The publication of this book provided links which resulted in the formation of meeting houses in the NW Pennines, in London, and in New England, where Sandeman died. The Sandemanians, never more than *c.*1,000 in number, included the scientist Michael Faraday from 1821 until his death in 1867.

The Works of Glas, who was a man of considerable erudition, were pub. at Edinburgh (4 vols., 1761) and again at Perth (5 vols., 1782–3). Full treatment of the Glasites in G. [N.] Cantor, Michael Faraday: Sandemanian and Scientist (1991), esp. pp. 11–85, with bibl. refs. pp. 305–6. A. Gordon in DNB 21 (1890), pp. 417 f. and 50 (1897), pp. 255 f.

Glastonbury Abbey. Probably the oldest and one of the most influential of English monasteries. Orig. a *Celtic foundation believed to date from the 7th cent., it was refounded by King Ine of Wessex *c.*705. It was destroyed in the 9th cent. by the Danes. Later it seems to have been served by a small group of clerks until, *c.*940, King *Edmund made St *Dunstan its abbot. From his time dates the great revival of the monastery, which was organized acc. to the *Benedictine Rule, and which became one of the main educational and religious centres in the country. About 970 it adopted the '*Regularis Concordia', designed to unify English monastic life. It continued to flourish under the Normans, and became a famous place of pilgrimage, owing to the tombs of King Arthur and St Dunstan, which it was believed to contain. Between 1129 and 1139 *William of Malmesbury wrote its history, 'De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesie': in a version of this revised in the mid-13th cent. are recorded the legends which associate it with *Joseph of Arimathaea (q.v.), King Arthur, and St *Patrick. Under Richard I a long drawn-out dispute arose between the abbey and the Bp. of *Bath and Wells, who claimed its revenues. It was eventually settled by the Pope in favour of the monks. The monastery was suppressed in 1539 and its last abbot, Bl Richard Whiting, executed. Since 1908 the ruins have been the property of Diocesan Trustees; adjoining is an Anglican Retreat House.

Around the 'Glastonbury Thorn', a kind of Levantine hawthorn which flowered twice a year, about Christmas and in May, several legends collected. It was cut down by one of O. *Cromwell's soldiers, but descendants of it remain to the present day.

A. Watkin, OSB (ed.), The Great Cartulary of Glastonbury (Somersetshire Record Society, 59, 63, and 64; 1947–56). Modern edns. of William of Malmesbury, De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesie, with Eng. tr., by J. Scott (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1981), and of John of Glastonbury (14th cent.), Cronica sive Antiquitates Glastoniensis Ecclesie, by J. P. Carley (British Archaeological Report 47. 1–2; 1978; rev. edn., with Eng. tr. by D. Townsend, Woodbridge, 1985). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (ed. 1817), pp. 1–79. R. Willis, The Architectural History of Glastonbury Abbey (Cambridge, 1866). J. Parker, 'Glastonbury: The Abbey Ruins', Somersetshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, 26 (1881), pp. 25–106; the excavations under the direction of C. R. Peers, A. W. Clapham, and E. Horne, OSB, begun in 1929, are reported ibid. 75 (1930), and foll. vols. W. Newell, 'William of Malmesbury and the Antiquities of Glastonbury', Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, 18 (1903), pp. 459–512. J. A. *Robinson, Two Glastonbury Legends: King Arthur and St Joseph of Arimathea (1926); G. Ashe, King Arthur's Avalon: The Story of Glastonbury (1957); R. F. Treharne, The Glastonbury Legends: Joseph of Arimathea, The Holy Grail and King Arthur (1967). A. Gransden, 'The Growth of the Glastonbury Traditions and Legends in the Twelfth Century', JEH 27 (1976), pp. 337–58.

glebe. In English and Scots ecclesiastical law, the land devoted to the maintenance of the incumbent of the parish. Since Norman times, every church has been required to have a house and glebe (together included in the *manse) before it can be consecrated by the bishop. The glebe now excludes the parsonage house and the land occupied with it. Glebe can be either cultivated by the incumbent himself or leased to tenants. Since the Ecclesiastical Leasing Act 1858 it can also be sold outright, with the consent of the *Church Commissioners (until 1948 the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners), after three months' prior notice to the bishop. On 1 April 1978 the ownership of all glebe land was transferred, under the Endowments and Glebe Measure 1976, s. 15, from the incumbent to the Diocesan Board of Finance, which now manages it for the benefit of the diocesan stipends fund. In Scotland, all glebe was vested in the General Trustees of the Church by the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowments) Act 1925.

Gloria in Excelsis. The initial words in Latin, and hence the common designation, of the hymn 'Glory be to God on high', etc. It is also known as the 'Greater *Doxology' and the 'Angelic Hymn'. A Greek Christian 'private psalm', i.e. a hymn composed upon the model of the canonical Psalms, its authorship and age are alike unknown. In the 4th cent. it formed part of morning prayers, and is still recited in the Byzantine *Orthros. In the Roman Mass it is sung after the *Kyries on Sundays (except those of *Advent and *Lent) and on certain feast days, a usage the beginning of which appears in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. In the English BCP of 1549 the hymn followed the Kyries as in the Roman Mass. In later editions of the BCP it was moved to the conclusion of the service, where it immediately precedes the Blessing. The ASB provides for it to be used in either position. The American Prayer Book of 1928 allowed its use at the end of the Psalms for the day in Evening Prayer.

C. Blume, 'Der Engelhymnus Gloria in Excelsis Deo', Stimmen aus Maria Laach, 73 (1907), pp. 43–62; A. *Baumstark, 'Die Textüberlieferung des Hymnus Angelicus', in Hundert Jahre Marcus-und-Weber Verlag (Bonn, 1909), pp. 83–7; J. Brinktrine, 'Zur Entstehung und Erklärung des Gloria in Excelsis', RQ 35 (1927), pp. 303–15; B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Texte du Gloria in excelsis', RHE 44 (1949), pp. 439–57; repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 176–91. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 446–61; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 346–59. J. Gaillard, OSB, Catholicisme, 5 [1963], cols. 56–8, s.v.

Gloria Patri. The first words of the Lesser *Doxology ('Glory be to the Father', etc.), an ascription of praise to the Holy Trinity. It probably originated as an adaptation of the Jewish 'blessings' addressed to God, early Christian examples being Rom. 16: 27, Phil. 4: 20, Rev. 5: 13, but its form was no doubt influenced by the Trinitarian Baptismal formula of Mt. 28: 19. Variations are found, esp. in connection with the *Arian controversy. The use of the Gloria Patri at the end of Psalms dates from the 4th cent., and it is found quite early in metrical form at the end of hymns in the Offices. Until recent times it was omitted in *Requiem Masses and in the Office for the Dead, at Mass during the last two weeks of Lent and in the Psalms of the Office on the last three days of Holy Week, but it is now retained on all these occasions. The English Puritans forbade its use as unscriptural, but it was restored with the BCP at the Restoration.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'Notes on Familiar Prayers: 9, The "Gloria Patri"', The Month, 131 (1918), pp. 406–17; repr. in Thurston's Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), pp. 178–92. J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Die Stellung Christi im liturgischen Gebet (Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, 7/8; 1925), pp. 151–77. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 423 f.; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 328 f. J. Gaillard, OSB, in Catholicisme, 5 [1963], cols. 59–61, s.v.

Glorious Mysteries, the Five. The third *chaplet of the *Rosary (q.v.), consisting of (1) the Resurrection; (2) the Ascension; (3) the Descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost; (4) the *Assumption of the BVM; and (5) the *Coronation of the BVM.

Glos(s)a Ordinaria, the standard medieval commentary on the Bible, also known as the Glos(s)a Communis or simply the Glos(s)a. It was drawn up chiefly from extracts from the Fathers, and was arranged in the form of marginal and interlinear glosses. Its history has until recently been obscured because it was believed that the marginal gloss was the work of *Walafrid Strabo, and the interlinear gloss the work of *Anselm of Laon. In fact one is never found without the other, and the same compiler was responsible for both. Its composition was begun in the school of Anselm of Laon. Anselm was responsible for the Gloss on the Psalter, the Pauline Epistles, and on the Gospel of St John, his brother Ralph for the Gloss on the Gospel of St Matthew. Gilbert the Universal, who taught at Auxerre before becoming Bp. of London (1128–34), was responsible for the Pentateuch and prob. Joshua, Judges and the four Books of Kings, and also the Great Prophets and Lamentations. The compilers of the Gloss on the other Books are either uncertain or unknown, but the whole Bible was covered by c. the middle of the 12th cent. The history of the Gloss varies from Book to Book. For example, the Gloss on the Pauline Epistles has a long and complicated pre-history. The Gloss on Acts is almost entirely compiled from *Rabanus Maurus and *Bede.

The term is also used of the standard commentaries on the *canon law texts.

The editio princeps, pub. at Strasbourg, 1480/1, is repr. in facsimile, with introd. by K. Froehlich and M. T. Gibson (4 vols., Turnhout, 1992). The edn. in J. P. Migne, PL 113–114 incl. only the marginal gloss. The text pr. with the works of *Nicholas of Lyre is complete, but is to some extent interpolated with later additions. S. Berger, Histoire de la Vulgate pendant les premiers siècles du moyen-âge (1893), pp. 132–6; B. Smalley, 'Gilbertus Universalis, Bishop of London (1128–34) and the Problem of the "Glossa Ordinaria"', RTAM 7 (1935), pp. 235–62; 8 (1936), pp. 24–60; id., 'La Glossa Ordinaria. Quelques prédécesseurs d'Anselme de Laon', ibid. 9 (1937), pp. 365–400; J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Le Mouvement théologique du XII^e siècle (2nd edn., Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 10; 1948), pp. 104–12; R. Wasselynck, 'L'Influence de l'exégèse de S. Grégoire le Grand sur les commentaries bibliques médiévaux (VII^e–XII^e s.)', RTAM 32 (1965), pp. 157–204, esp. pp. 183–92; E. Bertola, 'La "Glossa ordinaria" biblica ed i suoi problemi', ibid. 45 (1978), pp. 34–78; R. Wielockx, 'Autour de la "Glossa Ordinaria"', ibid. 49 (1982), pp. 222–8. B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (3rd edn., Oxford, 1983), pp. x f., and 46–66. M. T. Gibson, 'The Place of the Glossa ordinaria in Medieval Exegesis', in M. D. Jordan and K. Emery (eds.), Ad Litteram: Authoritative Texts and their Medieval Readers (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1992]), pp. 5–27, repr. in Gibson, 'Artes' and Bible in the Medieval West (Aldershot, 1993), no. 15. B. Smalley in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 452–7, s.v.

On the canon law gloss, H. Kantorowicz in B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (2nd edn., Oxford, 1952), pp. 55 f., with refs.

glossolalia. Speaking in tongues, a form of ecstatic speech. The term was coined in the 19th cent. from the Gk. γλῶσσα, 'tongue', + λαλιά, 'talking', to denote the phenomena reported in 1 Cor. 14: 6, 23, etc. In psychological terms it can be understood as an abandoning of conscious control of the speech organs to the subconscious. For long some people have believed the resulting speech to be supernaturally initiated. Glossolalia was a common phenomenon in NT times (cf. Acts 10: 46; 1 Cor. 14), but St *Paul did not regard it as one of the greatest gifts (cf. 1 Cor. 13: 8; 14: 9). What most authorities believe to be a similar or identical experience has been encountered in many religious revivals and plays a prominent part in modern *Pentecostalism and in the *Charismatic Renewal Movement. Christians differ about the spiritual value or significance of praying 'in tongues', but scientific opinion does not now hold that it is necessarily harmful or evidence of psychological disturbance.

W. J. Samarin, Tongues of Men and Angels: The Religious Language of Pentecostalism (New York and London, 1972); C. G. Williams, Tongues of the Spirit: A Study of Pentecostal Glossolalia and related Phenomena (Cardiff, 1981). H. N. Malony and A. A. Lovekin, Glossolalia: Behavioral Science Perspectives on Speaking in Tongues (New York and Oxford, 1985). W. E. Mills (ed.), Speaking in Tongues: A Guide to Research on Glossolalia (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1986). L. T. Johnson in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 596–600, s.v. 'Tongues, Gift of', with further refs.

Gloucester. Until 1541 Gloucester was in the diocese of *Worcester. The abbey-church of St *Peter, the present cathedral, is on the site of an earlier religious house, established in 681 by Osric, under-king of the Hwicce, and converted into a college of secular priests in 823. This college was refounded as a *Benedictine monastery by *Wulfstan, Abp. of York, in 1017. In 1088 a fire destroyed the old monastic buildings, and in 1089 Serlo, the first Norman Abbot (1072–1104), began the present church. This Norman structure was constantly added to and embellished in the Middle Ages. Specially notable are the early Perpendicular panelling superimposed on the Norman pillars in the choir (begun after 1337); the great E. window, a war memorial to Gloucester knights slain at Crécy (1346) and the siege of Calais (1347); the magnificent cloisters with the earliest example of fan tracery (before 1377); and the remarkably fine central tower (mid-15th cent.). In the N. ambulatory is the tomb of Edward II, whose body was brought here after his murder at Berkeley Castle, 21 Sept. 1327; it became an important place of pilgrimage for a time and the wealth of the abbey greatly increased. The most notable person connected with the abbey was Gilbert *Foliot (Abbot 1139–48).

In 1540 the monastery was suppressed and in 1541 John Wakeman, the last Abbot of *Tewkesbury became the first Bishop of the newly founded see of Gloucester. The diocese covered most of Gloucestershire, with parts of Herefordshire and Worcestershire. In 1836 it was united with the see of Bristol, but separated again in 1897. From 1713 to 1937 one of the canonries was attached to the Mastership of Pembroke College, Oxford. Notable Bps. of Gloucester have been J. *Hooper (1551–5), burnt in St Mary's Square outside the Abbey gates; R. Frampton (1681–91), *Nonjuror, who just missed joining the *Seven Bishops; W. *Warburton (1760–79); C. J. *Ellicott (1863–1905); and E. C. S. Gibson (1905–22), who published notable works on the *Thirty-Nine Articles and the *Creeds. Deans have included W. *Laud (1616–21) and the economist Josiah Tucker (1758–99). Every third year the Three Choirs Festival is held at Gloucester.

W. H. Hart (ed.), Historia et Cartularium Monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestriae (3 vols., RS, 1863–7). H. P. R. Finberg, The Early Charters of the West Midlands (Leicester, 1961), pp. 153–66. H. G[ee] (ed.), The Statues of Gloucester Cathedral (1918). 'The Records of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester' are described by W. H. Stevenson in the Twelfth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix, pt. 9 (1891), pp. 397–9. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 531–66. D. Verey and D. Welander, Gloucester Cathedral (Gloucester, 1979); D. Welander, The History, Art and Architecture of Gloucester Cathedral (Stroud, 1991). S. Eward, No Fine but a Glass of Wine: Cathedral Life at Gloucester in Stuart Times ([Wilton] 1985). N. M. Herbert, 'Gloucester Cathedral and the close', VCH, Gloucester, 4, ed. id. (1988), pp. 275–88.

gloves, liturgical (Lat. chirothecae). In the W. Church, the privilege of wearing liturgical gloves ordinarily belonged to the Pope, the cardinals, and the bishops, though it has sometimes been conferred on abbots and others by the Holy See. They may be worn during a *Pontifical Mass, though since 1968 they have ceased to be obligatory. They used to follow the liturgical colour of the day, and may still do so, or may be white. Apparently first used in France at about the end of the 9th cent., they made their way thence to Rome a little later.

X. Barbier de Montault, Les Gants pontificaux (Tours, 1877). Braun, LG, pp. 359–84; Braun, LP, pp. 154–7.

Gnesio-Lutherans. A modern name for the party of strict *Lutherans who opposed the Leipzig Interim (a temporizing form of the *Augsburg Interim) put forward by Duke Maurice of Saxony. Their first campaign was against P. *Melanchthon and his followers, the *Philippists, who accepted the Interim on the grounds that its concessions towards Catholicism involved only 'adiaphora' (see ADIAPHORISTS). But the antagonisms thus aroused outlived the Interim. The Gnesio-Lutherans, led by N. von *Amsdorf and M. *Flacius, harried the Philippists in a series of controversies from their base in Jena, where the Ernestine Dukes of Saxony founded a university in the 1550s to make up for the loss of *Wittenberg (and their electoral status) to Duke Maurice of the Albertine branch of the family. They interpreted the Philippists' concessions towards Catholics or Calvinists as a betrayal of M. *Luther's legacy, accusing them of crypto-catholic soteriology in the *Majoristic, *synergist, and *Osiandrist controversies, and of *crypto-Calvinism in their eucharistic doctrine. These controversies reverberated through the 1550s and 1560s, despite several attempts to restore unity at religious colloquies, notably at Worms in 1557 and Naumburg in 1561. In the 1570s, as many of the leaders on both sides died, peace moves met with greater success, culminating in the Formula of *Concord (1577).

R. Kolb, 'Dynamics of Party Conflict in the Saxon Late Reformation. Genesiolutherans vs Philippists', Journal of Modern History, 49 (1977), on-demand suppl., pp. D1289–D1305. R. Keller in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 512–19, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under AMSDORF, N. VON, and FLACIUS, M.

Gnosticism. The name, derived from the Greek word γνῶσις ('knowledge'), given to a complex religious movement which in its Christian form comes into clear prominence in the 2nd cent. Whether Gnosticism was an erratic development of Christian teaching (as the Fathers thought) or whether Christian Gnosticism had its origins in trends of thought already present in pagan religious circles, is still a matter of dispute among scholars. In Christianity, the movement appeared at first as a school (or schools) of thought within the Church, but by the end of the 2nd cent. the Gnostics had mostly become separate sects. In some of the later books of the NT, e.g. 1 John and the *Pastoral Epistles, forms of false teaching are denounced which appear to be similar to, though less developed than, the Gnostic systems of teaching referred to by 2nd-cent. writers.

Gnosticism took many different forms, commonly associated with the names of particular teachers, e.g. *Valentinus, *Basilides, and *Marcion (qq.v.). But though Marcion and his community stand somewhat apart, certain features are common to the movement as a whole. A central importance was attached to 'gnosis', the supposedly revealed knowledge of God and of the origin and destiny of mankind, by means of which the spiritual element in man could receive redemption. The source of this special 'gnosis' was held to be either the Apostles, from whom it was derived by a secret tradition, or a direct revelation given to the founder of the sect. The systems of teaching range from those which embody much genuine philosophical speculation to those which are wild amalgams of mythology and magical rites drawn from all quarters, with the most slender admixture of Christian elements. The OT Books and many of the NT Books were used and expounded by the greater sects, and a central place was assigned to the figure of Jesus, but on a number of fundamental points the interpretation of these Christian features differed widely from that of orthodox Christianity.

Characteristic of Gnostic teaching was the distinction between the *Demiurge or 'creator god' and the supreme remote and unknowable Divine Being. From the latter the Demiurge was derived by a longer or shorter series of emanations or 'aeons'. He it was who, through some mischance or fall among the higher aeons, was the immediate source of creation and ruled the world, which was therefore imperfect and antagonistic to what was truly spiritual. But into the constitution of some men there had entered a seed or spark of Divine spiritual substance, and through 'gnosis' and the rites associated with it this spiritual element might be rescued from its evil material environment and assured of a return to its home in the Divine Being. Such men were designated the 'spiritual' (πνευματικοί), while others were merely 'fleshly' or 'material' (σαρκικοί or ὑλικοί), though some Gnostics added a third intermediate class, the 'psychic' (ψυχικοί). The function of Christ was to come as the emissary of the supreme God, bringing 'gnosis'. As a Divine Being He neither assumed a properly human body nor died, but either temporarily inhabited a human being, Jesus, or assumed a merely phantasmal human appearance.

The principal anti-Gnostic writers, such as *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, and *Hippolytus, emphasized the pagan features of Gnosticism. They appealed to the plain sense of Scripture as interpreted by the tradition of the Church and insisted on the identity of the Creator and the supreme God, on the goodness of the material creation, and on the reality of the earthly life of Jesus, esp. of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. Man needed redemption from an evil will rather than an evil environment. These writers' excerpts and descriptions of the Gnostic systems were until recently our main source of information. The study of Gnosticism entered a new phase, however, with the discovery of a large collection of Coptic texts at *Nag Hammadi (q.v.) in 1945–6. It comprised over 40 separate treatises, of which very few were previously known. The writings vary widely in date and style; some are thought to date from the 2nd cent. or even earlier, though the actual copies are not earlier than the 4th cent. Most of the writings are at least superficially Christian and display Gnostic tendencies in varying degrees.

The discovery of the Nag Hammadi texts promises to throw fresh light on the origins of Gnosticism, though many details are still unclear. It has generally been thought that while some of the important ideas used by the Gnostics, e.g. the light-symbolism and the religious use of the word 'gnosis' itself, are pre-Christian, the sects themselves and their elaborate mythologies are not; though some German scholars, such as R. *Reitzenstein, W. *Bousset and R. *Bultmann, have strongly supported the conception of pre-Christian Gnosticism. It is at least clear that pre-Christian Jewish sects provided a fertile soil for Gnostic ideas. The Jews had developed a tradition of speculative interpretation of the OT (see MIDRASH) which gave rise to a large extra-canonical literature which was influenced by Iranian religious thought (see ZOROASTRIANISM). On the other hand Greek-speaking Jews such as *Philo attempted to explain their faith in terms of Greek philosophy; Egyptian religious writers of the Hermetic school borrowed both from the Greeks and from the Book of Genesis (e.g. in the Poimandres), and cultivated Greeks such as Plutarch discussed philosophical adaptations of the Egyptian myth of Isis. Finally, specifically Christian themes were introduced into this amalgam of ideas, whether as a dominant force or as a mere superficial decoration. The Nag Hammadi texts probably show all these influences, though that of philosophy is less evident than in already known Valentinian texts.

Gnosticism in various forms persisted for several centuries. The sect of the *Manichees, founded by Mani the Persian in the 3rd cent., spread as far as Turkestan and survived there until the 13th cent.; meanwhile the possibly related sects of the *Albigenses and *Cathari had appeared in France, Germany, and Italy. One sect of Gnostics, the *Mandaeans, has survived in Mesopotamia until the present day. See also DOCETISM.

The main anti-Gnostic texts of the Christian Fathers are Irenaeus, Adversus Haereses, *Clement of Alexandria, Excerpta ex Theodoto, Tertullian, Adversus Marcionem, etc., Hippolytus, Refutatio Omnium Haeresium, and *Epiphanius, Panarion. See also the criticisms of *Plotinus, Enneads, 2. 9. A useful selection of Gk. texts, incl. many frags. of Gnostic writings, is W. Völker, Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (Tübingen, 1932). The Ep. of Ptolemy to Flora was re-edited by G. Quispel (SC 24; 1949; 2nd edn., 1966). Coptic Gnostic texts known before 1946 are contained in the Askew Codex (see PISTIS SOPHIA), the Bruce Codex (ed. C. Schmidt, TU 8, Hefte 1–2, 1892; repr., with Eng. tr. and notes by V. MacDermot, The Books of Jeu and the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex, Nag Hammadi Studies, 13; Leiden, 1978), and the Berlin Codex 8502 (ed. W. C. Till, TU 60, 1955, 2nd edn. by H.-M. Schenke, 1972; partial Eng. tr. in R. M. Grant, Gnosticism: An Anthology (1961), pp. 65–85). Larger collection of texts in English, Gnosis, ed. W. Foerster, Eng. tr. ed. R. McL. Wilson (2 vols., Oxford, 1972–4; tr. from Die Gnosis, 2 vols., Zurich, 1969–71) and B. Layton, The Gnostic Scriptures (1987). For texts found at Nag Hammadi, see s.v.

Some older studies of Gnosticism are still valuable, including F. C. *Baur, Die christliche Gnosis oder die christliche Religionsphilosophie in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Tübingen, 1835); R. A. *Lipsius, Die Quellen der ältesten Ketzergeschichte neu untersucht (Leipzig, 1875; on the literary relations between the early anti-Gnostic writers); A. *Hilgenfeld, Die Ketzergeschichte des Urchristenthums, urkundlich dargestellt (ibid., 1884; with text of chief frags.); W. Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis (Göttingen, 1907); E. de Faye, Gnostiques et gnosticisme (1913; 2nd edn., 1925). The best and most comprehensive recent survey is K. Rudolph, Die Gnosis: Wesen und Geschichte einer spätantiken Religion (Leipzig, 1977; Eng. tr., 1983). See also H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist, 1 (Göttingen, 1934; rev. edn., with suppl., 1964); 2. 1 (1954; rev. edn., 1966); id., The Gnostic Religion (Boston, 1958; 2nd edn., 1963); G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (Jerusalem, 1941; 3rd edn., London, 1955); H. J. Schoeps, Theologie und Geschichte des Judenchristentums (Tübingen, 1949); id., Urgemeinde—Judenchristentum—Gnosis (ibid., 1956); G. Quispel, Gnosis als Weltreligion (Zurich, 1951); J. Doresse, Les Livres secrets des gnostiques d'Égypte, 1 (1958; Eng. tr., 1960); R. McL. Wilson, The Gnostic Problem (1958); id., Gnosis and the New Testament (Oxford, 1968); R. M. Grant, Gnosticism and Early Christianity (New York, 1959; 2nd edn., 1966); E. Peterson, Frühkirche, Judentum und Gnosis (1959); U. Bianchi (ed.), Le origini dello gnosticismo (Studies in the History of Religions, 12; Leiden, 1967); W. Eltester (ed.), Christentum und Gnosis (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 37; 1969); E. M. Yamauchi, Pre-Christian Gnosticism: A Survey of the Proposed Evidence (1973; 2nd edn., Grand Rapids, Mich. [1983]); K.-W. Tröger (ed.), Gnosis und Neues Testament: Studien aus Religionswissenschaft und Theologie (Gütersloh [1973]); id. (ed.), Altes Testament Frühjudentum -Gnosis (ibid. [1980]); S. Pétrement, Le Dieu séparé: Les origines du gnosticisme (1984; Eng. tr., 1991); A. H. B. Logan, Gnostic Truth and Christian Heresy: A Study in the History of Gnosticism (Edinburgh, 1996). R. McL. Wilson in A. Richardson and J. Bowden (eds.), A New Dictionary of Christian Theology (1983), pp. 226–30, s.v.; K. Berger and R. McL. Wilson in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 519–50, s.v. 'Gnosis/Gnostizismus', with extensive bibl.; K. Rudolph in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 1033–40, s.v.

Goar, Jacques (1601–54), French liturgiologist. He was a native of Paris, and after studying Greek and Latin entered the *Dominican Order in 1619. Having been lecturer at the convent at Toul, he went to Greece in 1631 as prior of the convent of St Sebastian in Chios in order to perfect himself in the language and to study the rites of the Greek Church. In 1637 he went to Rome as prior of San Sisto, and in 1644 settled at Paris, where he brought out a series of works, the most important being his celebrated Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; 2nd edn., much improved, Venice, 1730). It contains the rites of the Greek Liturgy, Offices, Sacramentaries, etc., based on MSS as well as on printed sources, and gives Latin translations and valuable notes. It is still the classic work for Greek liturgical studies, and has served as a basis for all subsequent research on the subject. Among his other works are editions of the Compendium Historiarum of George Cedrenus (1647), the De Officiis Magnae Ecclesiae of the so-called Codinus Curopalata (1648), and of the Chronographia of George Monachus and the Patr. Tarasius (1652).

Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 574 f. A. Strittmatter, OSB, 'The "Barberinum S. Marci" of Jacques Goar', EL 47 (1933), pp. 329–67. R. Coulon, OP, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1467–9.

God. The Greek word for God (θεός) is used both as a common noun, as in polytheism, where a number of supposed existences claim belief, worship, and service, and as a proper name, e.g. in *monotheism, where there is and can be but one such existence. *Judaism, *Islam, and Christianity all proclaim belief in one God. Christianity alone affirms that God is a trinity in unity, a 'Tri-unity', consisting of 'three persons in one substance', the Father being the Source of all existence, the Son the Eternal Object of the Father's love and the Mediator of that love in creation and redemption, and the Holy Spirit the Bond of Union between the Father and the Son.

In the OT account of the Divine revelation to *Moses on *Sinai (Ex. 3: 2–15 and 6: 2–8) God makes Himself known in the name '*Yahweh' ('I am who I am') as the unique God (Ex. 20: 3, 5), who tolerates no rival and is alone Lord of the earth (Ex. 9: 29), omnipotent and holy (Ex. 15: 3–18), merciful and faithful to His word (Ex. 34: 6 f.) and demanding obedience to His commandments (Ex. 20: 1–17). This exalted conception of the Creator-God was affirmed by all the greatest religious leaders of Israel. The prophets esp. developed the different aspects of God acc. to their character and special mission. *Amos preached the righteousness of God, limited by no national barriers, while *Hosea stressed God's love and mercy towards Israel, using as analogies the human relationships of husband and wife, father and child. *Isaiah, and later *Ezekiel, exalt His incomparable holiness and transcendence. Particularly during the Exile, there emerged the conviction that God would grant His people the ability to do His will (Jer. 31: 31–4; Ezek. 36: 26 f.). Whilst for many in Israel Yahweh remained pre-eminently a national God, the idea of God as saviour of the Gentiles as well as the Jews had an important place, esp. during and after the Exile (e.g. Is. 49: 6; Jonah). This universality is reflected in some of the Psalms, in which Book all the strands of Jewish monotheistic piety are gathered.

It was to make patent the fullness of truth about God that (acc. to Christian belief) a new revelation was given. This was made through the Incarnate Son, who revealed God as the Father of all men, whose infinite goodness has no need to manifest itself in material recompenses. It was in the light of this new knowledge that the author of the Fourth Gospel conceived God as light, life, and love; but no epitome can convey the richness and extent of the several aspects of the revelation contained in the NT. Above all, it was a revelation of God through the facts of history. Certain events of an historic order were perceived to possess a unique status and significance for those to whom the truth was committed. There resulted a conception of God which, while safeguarding the legitimacy of natural theology (cf. Rom. 1: 18 ff.) within certain limits, recognized His character as sui generis.

In the patristic age three principal factors determined the development of the doctrine of God: (1) the data of Scripture, (2) the controversies with pagans, Jews, and heretics; and (3) the Greek philosophy which was the foundation of the education of most of the Fathers. In seeking to make their case for Christianity in the cultured world around them, the *Apologists of the 2nd and 3rd cents. made extensive use of reason and philosophy. Thus *Justin Martyr, who was much influenced by *Platonist teaching, stressed the ineffability, omnipotence, and impassibility of God. This attitude was shared by *Tatian and many others, whereas *Athenagoras and *Theophilus elaborated His simplicity, indivisibility, and universal providence. St *Irenaeus developed his doctrine esp. against the *Gnostics, to whose dualism and emanationism he opposed the absolute self-sufficiency and perfection of God. The theology of the early Alexandrian Fathers, *Clement and *Origen, is characterized by their vigorous affirmation of the Divine transcendence, incomprehensibility, and ineffability. Despite this emphasis, however, they upheld the natural knowability of God through creation. This is also stressed by *Tertullian, who adds to it the testimony of the human soul and deduces from the conception of God as the First Cause His possession of all perfections. Thus by the time of *Nicaea (325) the great lines of Christian thought were fixed, and such Divine attributes as eternity, immutability, omniscience, and omnipotence had become the undisputed belief of all Christians.

The doctrine of the pre-Nicene age was deepened by the great speculative theologians of Alexandria, esp. St

*Athanasius, St *Didymus, and St *Cyril. They insist that God, though incomprehensible in His inner Being, can be known through the human soul, made in His image, and through the visible creation. St *Cyril of Jerusalem deals with the subject implicitly in his 'Catecheses', esp. with the unity, sovereign dominion, and creative action of God. The *Cappadocians were led to an explicit examination of the Divine nature and our knowledge of it in their call to reply to *Eunomius, who had asserted that the full Being of God is adequately expressed by the word 'Unoriginate' (ἀγέννητος), to which all other designations can be reduced. Against him St *Gregory of Nazianzus maintained that negative attributes are not enough, and that such positive names as love, wisdom, justice, etc., should be added, though the most suitable name for God is Being.

The speculations of the Fathers were gathered up into a powerful synthesis in the various works of St *Augustine. He gives several proofs for the existence of God, e.g. from contingency, from the order and beauty of the world, from the eternal principles of human reason, and the moral argument from conscience. These proofs, however, were not yet elaborated with the systematic methods of the Middle Ages. The influence of Plato shows itself in Augustine's idea of God as the First Principle, cause of all truth and of all goodness. Though God is above all human thought and language, He is not abstract and indeterminate being, but concrete and actual, 'above whom, outside whom, and without whom nothing exists' (Soliliquia 1.1.4). Using *Neoplatonic categories, *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite developed an elaborate understanding of our knowledge of God. Through concepts and images we gain some understanding of God and communion with Him as the cause of all beings, but Dionysius stresses the Divine transcendence perhaps more than any other of the Fathers; he sees God as beyond Being and more surely reached by *apophatic theology, where one denies concepts and images and knows God by unknowing. This negation is by way of transcendence, and Dionysius signalled this by a fondness for Divine epithets prefixed by ὑπερ- ('hyper-'): ὑπερούσιος ('beyond being'), ὑπεράγαθος ('more than good'), and even ὑπέρθεος ('more than Divine') (see esp. Ep. 2).

The ideas of Dionysius were taken over, with some modifications, by his translator, John Scottus *Erigena. Acc. to Erigena, God is known by reason as the cause of things, but not as what He is. A higher knowledge of Him is possible by contemplation, but even here and in the *Beatific Vision He is not seen Himself, but only through theophanies which He grants to angels and believers. This fundamental agnosticism led to reiterated condemnations of his doctrine; but the stress he laid on philosophy constitutes a link between the patristic age and the Scholasticism that was to follow.

One of the principal concerns of the Schoolmen was to investigate the Divine Nature by the method of rational proof, without direct appeal to revelation. St *Anselm of Canterbury was the author of the *Ontological Argument (q.v.) for His Being. Under the influence of the newly discovered *Aristotle, St *Thomas Aquinas introduced some radical changes and developments. He rejected the Ontological Argument; but on the principle that only something itself in the state of 'act' can move anything from the state of 'potentiality' to the state of 'act', he elaborated his famous fivefold proof for the existence of God (Quinque Viae). Starting with creation, he argued from its visible effects to the conception of God as the First Immovable Mover, the First Efficient Cause, the necessary Being, the most perfect Being, and the Ordainer of the universe. He endeavoured to hold the balance between an anthropomorphic conception of God and an exaggerated transcendence. In God, as self-subsistent Being, essence was identical with existence, and as 'Actus purus' without any admixture of potentiality He was Himself all perfections. In this way Thomas develops the idea that there are three ways of conceiving God—by affirmation, negation, and eminence. Thus while His goodness (way of affirmation) is asserted, He may also be called 'not good', i.e. not good in the way that man is good (way of negation; see APOPHATIC THEOLOGY), and 'super-good', i.e. above all ideas of goodness (way of eminence). Though Thomas was not immediately followed in his rejection of the Ontological Argument, which continued to be upheld by theologians of the *Franciscan school, e.g. St *Bonaventure and *Duns Scotus, his doctrine of God became the officially accepted basis of the teaching of post-*Tridentine Catholic theology.

The shattering personal experiences of the Reformers were reflected in their intensely personal conceptions of God. M. *Luther directed a fierce tirade against the speculative theology of the Schools. J. *Calvin esp. emphasized the Divine Majesty and transcendence. And even in Catholic quarters the *Nominalism of the late Middle Ages had contributed to the disintegration of the Thomistic synthesis. *Nicholas of Cusa (d. 1464) believed that God, as the coincidentia oppositorum, lies beyond all rational categories, but because He is in all things and all things are in Him, the universe mirrors on the finite level something of the Divine nature. The fundamental unity of God and the world was stated even more forcibly in the next century by G. *Bruno, for whom God was the world-soul. In contrast to these pantheistic conceptions, R. *Descartes endeavoured to uphold the transcendence of the Divine Being. In his former argument in his Meditations for the existence of God, he urged that the human mind can conceive an infinite and perfect Being only because the idea of the Other exists in our minds and this idea has a proportionate cause. His other argument was essentially a reformulation of the Ontological Argument. The pantheistic trend of modern philosophy was resumed by B. *Spinoza, who elaborated the threefold notion of God as thought, as substance, and nature. There are no two separate terms of Creator and creature, but a complex series of stages from God to the universe, so that the exact transition from the Divine to the finite is incapable of definition. Descartes's Ontological Argument for the existence of God was reasserted, with an attempt at greater stringency, by G. W. *Leibniz. If a perfect and necessary Being is not a contradictory and fictitious object, such a Being must exist, because existence is one of its attributes.

A decisive attack on natural theology was made in the 18th cent. by I. *Kant, who, in his Critique of Pure Reason (1781), attempted to prove the impossibility of any rational proof of the existence of God. This was a consequence of his attack on speculative metaphysics in all its forms. He also urged that in any case the arguments from causality and teleology would be insufficient to prove what Christian Theism means by God without the assistance of the Ontological Argument. The only valid proof of the existence of God is that from morality. 'I had to remove knowledge (Wissen) to make way for faith (Glauben).' The reality of moral obligation required the postulate of a wise, holy, and omnipotent Being, who would ensure the future harmony between the accomplishment of duty and happiness. The step from the refusal of any metaphysical basis for the belief in God to resting the belief on feeling (Gefühl), which was supposed to include intuition (Anschauung), was made by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. All religious statements must be derived not from deductive logic but from personal experience, and the origin of belief in God be sought in the feeling of dependence, common to human beings. Among British thinkers of the 19th cent. Sir W. Hamilton and H. L. *Mansel sought to uphold the traditional conception of God on a basis of agnosticism which had affinities with the teaching of Kant.

But the 19th cent. also witnessed under the stimulus of G. W. F. *Hegel a powerful movement in speculative theology. In a grandiose system, Hegel fused evolutionary conceptions with the pantheism of Spinoza and thereby, while doing violence to the Christian doctrine of creation, put philosophical theology into relationship with modern physical, biological, and historic conceptions. His work exercised great influence in England through its presentation, in a much modified form, by T. H. *Green, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet, as well as subsequently, with much greater reserve, by A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, C. C. J. *Webb, and W. *Temple.

The main trend in the early part of the 20th century was against immanentism, with a reaffirmation of the Divine transcendence. The beginnings of the movement are probably to be sought in the reaction against the anti-intellectualism of such movements as *Pragmatism (W. *James, H. *Bergson, F. C. S. Schiller's 'Humanism') and also RC *Modernism (M. *Blondel, A. *Loisy). After 1914 the movement was esp. associated in Protestant theology with the names of K. *Barth and, in a less extreme form, E. *Brunner. In Catholic theology this movement had its counterpart in a revival of the Scholastic teaching about a Divine Being at once rigidly traditional in its fundamental principles and yet anxious to take full account of the changed position of secular thought. This Scholastic movement, which may be said to take its origin with the constitution 'Dei Filius' of the First *Vatican Council (1870), was fostered by *Leo XIII and the Louvain School (D. J. *Mercier). Among its later exponents were É. *Gilson, R. Garrigou-Lagrange, J. *Maritain, M. C. *D'Arcy, and E. L. Mascall. Also keen to develop Thomist insights in the contexts of modern philosophical trends were the 'transcendental Thomists', of whom the most prominent were K. *Rahner and E. Coreth. Their thought was a development of that of J. Maréchal, who, back in the 1920s, produced a massive version of the transcendental critique of knowledge which claimed to be free from the 'agnosticism' characterizing the critique of Kant; their philosophical idiom was influenced by the *Existentialism of M. *Heidegger. Of the same outlook, but uninfluenced by Heidegger, was the Canadian B. J. F. Lonergan (d. 1984).

The so-called '*death of God' theology (q.v.) had a considerable vogue in the 1960s, esp. in the United States of America. Although it seems to have been no more than a passing fashion, it reflected widespread dissatisfaction with traditional philosophical Theism, some of which was inspired by reflection on the 'silence of God' during the Nazi attempt in the Second World War to exterminate the Jewish people (the *Holocaust). This dissatisfaction has been enduring, and for some led to the embracing of some form of *panentheism. Schubert Ogden, arguing that theology without God is a contradiction, sought to reconstruct the concept of God on the basis of the philosophies of A. N. Whitehead and C. Hartshorne (*Process Theology). This view revives the notion of a coincidentia oppositorum and presents God as both transcendent and immanent, eternal and temporal, impassible and passible. It has attracted a large following in the United States of America. Reflection on the silence of God during the Holocaust lies behind the doctrine of a God who suffers in the theology of J. *Moltmann (who also uses the term 'panentheism') and in that of E. Jüngel, who both ground this teaching directly on the doctrines of the Trinity and the Incarnation rather than on philosophical notions.

See also TRINITY, DOCTRINE OF THE.

On the OT, W. Eichrodt, Theologie des Alten Testaments, esp. 1 (Leipzig, 1933), pp. 86–150; 2 (ibid., 1935), pp. 1–45; Eng. tr., 1 (1967), pp. 178–288; 2 (1967), pp. 15–92; G. von *Rad, Theologie des Alten Testaments (2 vols., Munich, 1957–60; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1962–5), passim. More popular: A. [C. J.] Phillips, God B.C. (Oxford, 1977); C. Westermann, What Does the Old Testament Say About God?, ed. F. W. Golka (Atlanta and London, 1979). Also S. E. Balentine, The Hidden God: The Hiding of the Face of God in the Old Testament (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1983).

On the NT, R. *Bultmann, Theologie des Neuen Testaments (3 parts, Tübingen, 1948–53; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1952–5); J. Jeremias, Neutestamentliche Theologie (vol. 1 only pub., Gütersloh [1971]; Eng. tr., 1971), both passim; H. Moxnes, Theology in Conflict: Studies in Paul's Understanding of God in Romans (Novum Testamentum, Supplement 53; Leiden, 1980).

On the Fathers, G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936); R. M. Grant, The Early Christian Doctrine of God (Charlottesville, Va., 1966); [G.] C. Stead, Divine Substance (1977).

The vast modern lit. includes C. C. J. Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915); id., God and Personality (Gifford Lectures, 1918; 1918); R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, Dieu, son existence et sa nature (1914; 5th edn., 1928; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1934–6); A. S. Pringle-Pattison, The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy (Gifford Lectures, 1912–13; Oxford, 1917); F. *von Hügel, Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion (2 series, 1921–6); id., The Reality of God and Religion and Agnosticism, ed. E. G. Gardner (1931); J. Maréchal, SJ, Le Point de départ de la métaphysique (5 vols., 1922–47); J. Maritain, Distinguer pour unir, ou Les degrés du savoir (1932; Eng. tr., The Degrees of Knowledge, 1959); W. Temple, Nature, Man and God (Gifford Lectures, 1932–4; 1934); K. Barth, The Knowledge of God and the Service of God according to the Teaching of the Reformation (Gifford Lectures, 1937–8; 1938); J. *Baillie, Our Knowledge of God (1939); K. Rahner, SJ, Geist in Welt: Zur Metaphysik der endlichen Erkenntnis bei Thomas von Aquin (Innsbruck [1939]; 2nd edn., Munich [1957]; Eng. tr., Spirit in the World, 1968); A. E. Taylor, Does God Exist? (1945; see also his art. 'Theism' in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 261–87); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is (1943); B. J. F. Lonergan, SJ, Insight: A Study of Human Understanding (1957); E. Coreth, SJ, Metaphysik (Innsbruck [1961]; abridged Eng. tr., with critique by B. J. F. Lonergan, New York, 1968); H. Zahrnt, Die Sache mit Gott: Die protestantische Theologie im 20. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1968; Eng. tr., The Question of God, 1969); J. Moltmann, Der gekreuzigte Gott (Munich [1972]; Eng. tr., The Crucified God, 1974); J. Macquarrie, Thinking about God (1975); id., In Search of Deity (Gifford Lectures, 1983–4, 1984); E. Jüngel, Gott als Geheimnis der Welt (Tübingen, 1977; Eng. tr., God as the Mystery of the World, Edinburgh, 1983); H. *Küng, Existiert Gott? (Munich and Zurich [1978]; Eng. tr., Does God Exist?, 1980); [J. S.] K. Ward, Rational Theology and the Creativity of God (Oxford, 1982); W. Kasper, Der Gott Jesu Christi (Mainz, 1982; Eng. tr., 1984); B. [E. A.] Davis, OP, Thinking about God (1985); H. McCabe, OP, God Matters (1987), esp. pp. 2–51; P. Helm, Eternal God (1988); R. [G.] Swinburne, The Christian God (Oxford, 1994). See also bibl. to PROCESS THEOLOGY and 'DEATH OF GOD' THEOLOGY.

God Save the King/Queen, British National Anthem. The origins of both words and tune are obscure; and as regards the words it is also uncertain whether the Eng. or Lat. version is the older. The opening words of the Lat. are 'O Deus optime, salvum nunc facito, Regem nostrum'.

The phrase 'God save the King' occurs in the Eng. Bible at 1 Sam. 10: 24, 2 Sam. 16: 16, and 2 Kgs. 11: 12, both in the *Coverdale version (1535) and in the AV of 1611, while as early as 1545 'God save the King' was a watchword in the Navy, with 'Long to reign over us' as a counter-sign. It seems probable that the anthem arose from a series of common loyal phrases being gradually combined into one national hymn; and there is some evidence that the words were put into substantially their present form for use in the RC chapel of *James II. Among individuals of later date to whom the authorship of the Anthem has sometimes (prob. wrongly) been attributed are Henry Carey (*c.*1685–1743), author of 'Sally in our Alley', and James Oswald (*c.*1710–69), a Scotsman who had settled in London. It was certainly much used in its present form in London theatres in 1745 (the year of the landing of the Young Pretender); the three stanzas were printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for Oct. of the same year; and its general popularity dates from that time.

In a similar way the tune seems to be a 17th-cent. recasting of earlier phrases. We find the earliest elements in the medieval plainsong notation to the antiphon to the *Magnificat for the Saturday before the Seventh Sunday after Pentecost ('Unxerunt Salamonem'). The same rhythm occurs in a 16th-cent. Genevan folk-song. In the tune of a Christmas carol, dated 1611, and attributed to John Bull (*c.*1562–1628), it begins to take the familiar form. In the USA, where the tune goes by the name of 'America', it is sung to the words 'My country, 'tis of thee'.

W. H. Cummings, God Save the King: The Origin and History of the Music and Words of the National Anthem (1902); P. A. Scholes, 'God Save the King!' Its History and its Romance (1942). Id., God Save the Queen! The History and Romance of the World's First National Anthem (1954; the most substantial work on the subject).

godchildren. See GODPARENTS.

Godescalc. See GOTTSCHALK.

Godfrey of Bouillon (d. 1100), *Crusader. A member of the family of the counts of Boulogne and duke of Lower Lorraine, he departed on the First Crusade in August 1096 and led the assault which captured *Jerusalem on 15 July 1099. He was elected first Christian ruler of the city as prince and began the process of extending the conquests of the Crusade into a viable political unit. He died on 18 July 1100 and was succeeded by his brother Baldwin I as king. Although Godfrey was only one of several important princes on the Crusade, the chronicler Albert of Aix represented him as its hero, and later epics depicted him as a type of the ideal Christian knight.

The account of Albert of Aix is pr. in Recueil des Historiens des Croisades: Historiens occidentaux, 4 (1879), pp. 265–713. Modern works incl. M. Lobet, Godefroid de Bouillon: Essai de biographie antilégendaire (Brussels [1943]); H. Glaesener, 'Godefroid de Bouillon, était-il "un médiocre"?', RHE 39 (1943), pp. 309–41; J. C. Andressohn, The Ancestry and Life of Godfrey of Bouillon (Indiana University Publications, Social Science Series, 5; Bloomington, 1947); H. Dorchy, 'Godefroid de Bouillon, Duc de Bas-Lotharingie', Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 26 (1948), pp. 961–99; G. Waeger, Gottfied von Bouillon in der Historiographie (Geist und Werk der Zeiten, 18; Zurich, 1969), and G. H. Hagspiel, Die Führerpersönlichkeit im Kreuzzug (ibid. 10; 1963). On his status as ruler of Jerusalem, see J. Riley-Smith, 'The Title of Godfrey of Bouillon', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 52 (1979), pp. 83–6. E. Barker in EB (11th edn.), 12 (1910), p. 172, s.v. For main bibl. see works cited under CRUSADES.

godparents, also sponsors. Witnesses, in person or by proxy, to a Christian baptism, who take on themselves special responsibilities for the Christian upbringing of the newly baptized. These responsibilities are most serious in the case of infant baptism, at which the godparents also make the promises of renunciation, faith, and obedience in the child's name. The number of godparents required varies. In the RC Church one is sufficient, though there may be one of each sex. Traditionally the Anglican formularies have stated that each child should have three godparents, of whom two are to be of the same sex as the child, but modern rites tend to be less specific. In most Anglican Churches parents may stand, usually provided there is one other sponsor. Parents are barred in the RC Church and in some Protestant communions.

D. S. Bailey, Sponsors at Baptism and Confirmation: An Historical Introduction to Anglican Practice (1952). J. H. Lynch, Godparents and Kinship in Early Medieval Europe (Princeton, NJ, 1986).

Goerres, J. J. von. See GÖRRES, J. J. VON.

Gog and Magog. In Rev. 20: 8 Gog and Magog are two powers under the dominion of Satan. In the OT they appear together in Ezek., chs. 38–9. There Gog is described as the chief prince of various national groups which invade the land of Israel but are eventually to be vanquished by *Yahweh. Gog is said to be 'of the land of Magog' (38: 2). The identity of Gog and Magog in these chapters is obscure; some scholars have found reference to Scythians or other northern invaders, while others have seen in the word 'Magog' a cryptic allusion to Babylon. In the later *apocalyptic and *rabbinic literature Gog and Magog are conventional figures for those opposed to the people of God. Acc. to a medieval legend, formerly embodied in statues of Gog and Magog at the Guildhall, London (destroyed by fire in 1940), they were two giants who were made porters at 'Troynovant' (London) by 'Brutus the Trojan'.

J. G. Aalders, Gog en Magog in Ezechiël (Kampen, 1951), with Eng. summary. A. van den Born, 'Étude sur quelques toponymes bibliques, I. Le Pays du Magog', Oudtestamentische Studiën, 10 (1954), pp. 197–201. See also comm. on Ezekiel cited s.v., esp.

that of W. Zimmerli (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 13; 2nd edn., vol. 2, 1979, pp. 940–75; Eng. tr., 2, Philadelphia, 1983, pp. 281–324, with extensive bibl.).

Gogarten, Friedrich (1887–1967), Protestant theologian. A native of Dortmund, he became pastor at Stelzendorf in Thuringia in 1917 and at Dorndorf in 1925. From 1931 to 1935 he was Professor of Systematic Theology at Breslau and from 1935 to 1953 at Göttingen. In reaction from E. *Troeltsch's historicism, Gogarten formulated a fresh interpretation of culture and civilization in the spirit of K. *Barth's *Dialectical Theology and much influenced by the thought of M. *Buber. Real historical happenings take place only in the obedience of faith when the Ego accepts the unconditional claims of a concrete 'Thou'. His writings include Fichte als religiöser Denker (1914), Religion und Volkstum (1915), Von Glauben und Offenbarung (1923), Ich glaube an den dreieinigen Gott (1926), and Entmythologisierung und die Kirche (1953; Eng. tr., 1955). He also contributed extensively to the Barthian periodical Zwischen den Zeiten (1923 onwards).

H. Fischer, Christlicher Glaube und Geschichte: Voraussetzungen und Folgen der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (Gütersloh, 1967); A. V. Bauer, Freiheit zur Welt: Zum Weltverständnis und Weltverhältnis des Christen nach der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, 25; Paderborn, 1967); J. Vohn, Sittliche Erkenntnis zwischen Rationalität und Glauben: Ein Aspekt der Säkularisierung im Licht der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (ibid. 37; 1977); R. Weth, Gott in Jesus: Der Ansatz der Christologie Friedrich Gogartens (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Reihe 2, Band 36; 1968), with list of his works, pp. 312–21; C. Naveillan, Strukturen der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (Beiträge zur Ökumenischen Theologie, 7; 1972). P. Henke in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 563–7, s.v.

Golden Calf (עֵגֶל, the Heb. word translated 'calf', would be more properly rendered 'young bull'). An object of worship set up (a) by the Israelites in the wilderness (Ex. 32); (b) by King Jeroboam I (c.930–910 BC) at Bethel and Dan for the worship of the *Ten Tribes (1 Kgs. 12: 28).

Golden Legend. A collection of saints' lives and short treatises on the Christian festivals, compiled by *James of Voragine (q.v.). It was completed by 1265. Intended as a source-book for preachers, it had a mixed reception in James's own order, the *Dominicans, but it became enormously popular with a wider audience and was translated into many languages; some 1,000 medieval MSS of the Latin text survive. In the course of the 16th cent. its popularity declined sharply and it was attacked by some Catholics, such as J. L. Vives and M. *Cano, as well as by Protestant writers, on the grounds that its accumulation of historically implausible tales would endanger true religion. In modern times it has been the subject of renewed interest.

Editio princeps, Cologne, 1470; crit. edn. by T. Graesse (Dresden and Leipzig, 1846; 3rd edn., 1890). Caxton's tr. was repr. by W. *Morris and F. S. Ellis (3 vols., London, 1892). Modern Eng. trs. by [W.] G. Ryan and H. Ripperger (2 vols., New York and London, 1941), and by W. G. Ryan (2 vols, Princeton, NJ, 1993). M. von Nagy and N. C. de Nagy, Die Legenda aurea und ihr Verfasser Jacobus de Voragine (Berne and Munich, 1971); A. Boureau, La Légende Dorée: Le système narratif de Jacques de Voragine (†1298) (1984); S. L. Reames, The Legenda Aurea (Madison, Wis., 1985). B. Fleith, Studien zur Überlieferungsgeschichte der lateinischen Legenda Aurea (Subsidia Hagiographica, 72; 1991). R. Rhein, Die Legenda Aurea des Jacobus de Voragine (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 40; 1995). Sister Mary Jeremy, 'Caxton's Golden Legend and Voragine's Legenda Aurea', Speculum, 21 (1946), pp. 212–21; R. E. Seybolt, 'Fifteenth Century Editions of the Legenda Aurea', ibid., pp. 327–38. See also bibl. to JAMES OF VORAGINE.

Golden Number. The number of any year in the Metonic cycle (devised in 432 BC by the Athenian astronomer Meton) and adopted in the ecclesiastical calendar since the time of St *Hippolytus. The calculation rests on the assumption (very nearly correct) that 235 lunations ('lunar months') correspond with 19 solar years. As stated in the tables at the beginning of the BCP, the Golden Number of any given year is found by adding 1 to the number of the year of our Lord, and then dividing by 19; the remainder is the Golden Number of the year in question (or, if there is no remainder, it is 19). It was the value of the number for computing the date of *Easter that led it to be termed in the Middle Ages the Golden Number (aureus numerus). The view sometimes found that it was so named because it was printed in calendars in letters of gold is without authority.

Golden Rose. An ornament of wrought gold and gems in the form of a rose which is blessed by the Pope on the Fourth Sunday in *Lent ('Rose Sunday') and afterwards presented as a mark of special favour to some distinguished individual or community. In recent times it has often been sent to the queens of Catholic countries. If there is no worthy recipient, the rose is laid up in the *Vatican, where it is blessed every year until distribution is made. The origin of the custom is obscure; but as early as 1049 *Leo IX speaks of it as an ancient institution. That sent by *Clement V to the city of Basle is preserved in the Musée de Cluny at Paris.

C. Cartari, La rosa d'oro pontificia (Rome, 1681). E. Cornides, Rose und Schwert im päpstlichen Zeremoniell von den Anfängen bis zum Pontifikat Gregors XIII. (Wiener Dissertationen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 9; 1967), with bibl. C. Burns, Golden Rose and Blessed Sword: Papal Gifts to Scottish Monarchs (Glasgow, 1970), incl. general introd. J. Kreps, OSB, 'La Rose d'or', Les Questions liturgiques et paroissiales, 11 (1926), pp. 71–104 and 149–78. P. M. J. Rock in CE 6 (1909), pp. 629 f., s.v.

Golden Rule. A (modern) name for the precept in the Sermon on the Mount: 'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them' (Mt. 7: 12; cf. Lk. 6: 31). In a negative form it is found in the *Western text of Acts 15: 29, and in a saying attributed to *Hillel in the Talmud (b. Shabbath, 31a).

A. Dihle, Die Goldene Regel: Eine Einführung in die Geschichte der antiken und frühchristlichen Vulgärethik (1962).

Golden Sequence. The *Sequence for *Whitsunday, '*Veni, Sancte Spiritus' (q.v.).

Golgotha. See CALVARY, MOUNT.

Gomar, Francis (1563–1641), Dutch *Calvinist leader. A native of Bruges, he studied at Strasbourg, Neustadt, *Oxford, *Cambridge, and Heidelberg. In 1586 he became pastor of the Dutch community at Frankfurt and in 1594 was appointed professor of theology at *Leiden. Here he became an upholder of strict Calvinist principles, and engaged in a prolonged controversy with J. *Arminius, esp. after the latter became his fellow-professor in 1603. After Arminius' death (1609) the bitterness of the controversy was increased by the appointment of the liberal C. *Vorstius as Arminius' successor. Accordingly in 1611 Gomar resigned and became minister of the Reformed congregation at Middleburg and lecturer at the theological school there. From 1615 to 1618 he taught at Saumur and from 1618 till his death held a professorship at Groningen. At the Synod of *Dort (1618–19) he was among the principal opponents of Arminianism but failed to win majority support for his *Supralapsarian view of Predestination. A keen student of the Semitic languages, he was one of the official revisers of the Dutch OT. The bulk of his theological work was devoted to scriptural exegesis where, despite his convinced Calvinism, he had the highest regard for the scholarship of *Erasmus.

Works pub. in 3 vols., fol., Amsterdam, 1644. G. P. van Itterzon, Franciscus Gomar [in Dutch] (The Hague, 1929). J. Forget in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1477–86, s.v.; G. P. van Itterzon in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 2 (1983), pp. 220–5. See also works cited under DORT, SYNOD OF.

Gonzales, St Peter. See ELMO, ST.

Good Friday ('Feria sexta in Parasceve'). The Friday before Easter on which the anniversary of the Crucifixion is kept. It is a day of fast, abstinence, and penance, and in the RC Church Good Friday, together with (after 1955) *Holy Saturday, are the only days in the year on which no Celebration of the Mass takes place.

The present Latin Rite goes back to the early days of Christianity. It consists of three parts: (1) the lessons and prayers, which are virtually the old 'Mass of the *Catechumens', with the singing of the Passion acc. to St John; (2) the ceremonial *Veneration of the Cross, described already in the 'Peregrinatio *Egeriae', with the chanting of the *Reproaches and the *Trisagion; and (3) the Communion with Hosts reserved on Maundy Thursday (see Mass of the *Presanctified). Since 1955 this has included a General Communion of the people. The liturgical colour of the day, which was formerly black, is now red. The hour of the service, which since the 16th cent. had customarily taken place in the morning, was moved in 1955 to the afternoon (about 3 p.m., the traditional hour of Christ's death) or later. *Tenebrae of Holy Saturday, which until the 1955 reform was sung on Good Friday evening, has now been restored to the morning of Holy Saturday.

Most of the medieval practices were abolished by the Churches of the Reformation. The C of E provides for the normal celebration of the Eucharist, but until recently this very rarely happened, and in modern Anglicanism a form of service akin to that of the current RC rite has been fairly widely adopted. (Lent, Holy Week, Easter: Services and Prayers commended by the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England (1986) provides for both.) In some Nonconformist Churches the day is kept as a feast rather than a fast; in Continental Protestantism it is customary to have the usual services with sermons, and often Good Friday is a special day for the administration of the Lord's Supper. In the RC Church popular devotions developed beside the liturgical services. The best known is the *Three Hours Service from noon to 3 p.m., a post-Reformation devotion propagated by the *Jesuits and widely taken over in the C of E.

In the *Orthodox Church the day is known as the 'Great Friday' (ἡ μεγάλη παρασκευή). The liturgical celebrations consist of the Divine *Office, each office being extended. Mattins (anticipated on the evening of Maundy Thursday) includes the chanting of the 'Twelve Gospels' (i.e. 12 passages drawn from the Passion narratives of all four Gospels). On the Good Friday morning the Little Hours (known as the 'Royal Hours' from the customary attendance of the Emperor or Tsar) follow one immediately after another; each includes a lesson from the Prophets, an Epistle and a Gospel. Vespers ends with the solemn veneration of the *epitaphion. Compline includes a lamentation placed on the lips of the BVM. Mattins of Holy Saturday, on Good Friday night, finishes with a symbolic burial service of Christ.

H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ (ed.), Hebdomada Sancta, 1 (Rome, 1956), pp. 92–116; 2, part 1 (1957), passim; 2, part 2 (1957), pp. 778–808. H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 326–403; J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week: Its Services and Ceremonial (Alcuin Club Collections, 29; 1932), esp. pp. 116–42. G. G. Willis, Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (ibid. 46; 1964), pp. 1–48 ('The Solemn Prayers of Good Friday'). S. Janeras, Le Vendredi-Saint dans la tradition liturgique byzantine (Studia Anselmiana, 99; 1988). T. P. Gilmartin in CE 6 (1909), pp. 643–5, s.v.; W. J. O'Shea in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 621–4, s.v.

Good Samaritan. The Samaritan of the parable in Lk. 10: 30–7 who, in contrast to the priest and Levite who 'passed by on the other side', tended the traveller who had fallen among thieves on his way from *Jerusalem to *Jericho and provided hospitality for him at an inn. His action illustrates the Christian response to the question: 'Who is my neighbour?' (Lk. 10: 29).

W. Monselewski, Der barmherzige Samariter: Eine auslegungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zu Lukas 10, 25–37 (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 5; Tübingen, 1967). See also comm. on LUKE, GOSPEL OF ST.

Good Shepherd. The title of Christ based esp. on His discourse in Jn. 10: 7–18 and the parable of the Good Shepherd in Lk. 15: 3–7 (cf. Mt. 18: 12–14). The theme, which rests partly upon OT imagery (esp. Is. 40: 11 and Ezek. 34), is taken up later in the NT, e.g. in Heb. 13: 20 and 1 Pet. 2: 25 and 5: 4. In early Christian art Christ was frequently represented (e.g. in the *catacombs) as the Good Shepherd with a lamb upon His shoulders. The Second Sunday after *Easter has sometimes been known as 'Good Shepherd Sunday', on account of the traditional Gospel for the day, which in the RC Church is now used in only one year out of three.

Gorcum Martyrs. A group of 19 religious and secular priests who were put to death by *Calvinists at Briel on 9 July 1572, after the capture of Gorcum (or Gorinchem, S. Holland) by the *Gueux (26 June 1572). Eleven of the martyrs were friars of the *Franciscan convent at Gorcum. They were beatified by Clement X in 1675 and canonized by *Pius IX on 29 June 1867. Feast day, 9 July.

W. *Estius, Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium (Douai, 1603), repr. in AASS, Jul. 2 (1721), pp. 736–847. J. Meerbergen, Die HH. Martelaren van Gorcum (Tongerloo, 1928); D. de Lange, De Martelaren van Gorcum (Utrecht [1954]). G. Hesse, 'De oudere Historiografie der HH. Martelaren van Gorcum', Collectanea Franciscana Neerlandica, 2 (1931), pp. 447–98; W. Lampen, OFM, 'Notae de SS. Nicolao et Sociis O.F.M. Martyribus Gorcomiensibus', Collectanea Franciscana, 28 (1958), pp. 404–11. J.-F. Gilmont in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 731–3, s.v. 'Gorcum (Martyrs de)'.

Gordon Riots (also No Popery Riots). The riots that broke out on 2 June 1780 when a mob, headed by Lord George Gordon, an eccentric and fanatic, marched to Parliament with a petition for the repeal of the *Catholic Relief Act of 1778. The huge procession of demonstrators carried flags with the legend 'No Popery', and, after pillaging the houses of Catholics, the rioters became completely out of hand and held the City of London until, at the personal command of George III, they were dispersed by the military. 210 persons were killed in the streets and another 75 died of wounds. Lord George Gordon, after being acquitted on a charge of high treason (1781), became a Jew and finally (1793) died insane in Newgate prison.

J. P. de Castro, The Gordon Riots (1928), with bibl. G. F. E. Rudé, 'The Gordon Riots: A Study of the Rioters and their Victims', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 6 (1956), pp. 93–114. C. Hibbert, King Mob: The Story of Lord George Gordon and the Riots of 1780 (1958). The proceedings of the trial of Gordon for high treason on 5 and 6 Feb. 1781, taken in shorthand by S. Gurney, are repr. in A Complete Collection of State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Misdemeanours, ed. T. R. Howell, 21 (1814), cols. 485–652; the trial of H. J. Maskell, also connected with the riot, is pr. ibid., cols. 653–88. The Life of Lord George Gordon by his friend and admirer, Robert Watson (1795). Modern Life by P. Colson, The Strange History of Lord George Gordon (1937). L. Stephen in DNB 22 (1890), pp. 197 f., s.v. 'Gordon, Lord George'.

Gordon's Calvary. The site outside the Damascus Gate in the north wall of *Jerusalem which is held by some modern archaeologists to be the place of Christ's Crucifixion. As against the traditional site of the *Holy Sepulchre, this place was first proposed by O. Thenius in 1849. It derives its usual name from General C. G. Gordon, a strong advocate of it. It is a cliff with weathermarks which have a certain likeness to the features of a human countenance (cf. Jn. 19: 17: 'the place of a skull'), but the shape of the rock in this area is largely due to later quarrying. Since there is now archaeological evidence that the traditional site was outside the walls of Jerusalem at the time of the Crucifixion, Gordon's Calvary cannot claim credence on the ground that it alone was 'without the gate' (Heb. 13: 12). Nearby is a tomb, known as the 'Garden Tomb', which advocates of Gordon's Calvary hold to have been the site of Christ's burial.

C. G. Gordon, Reflections in Palestine 1883 (1884), pp. 1–3. See further general works, s.v. CALVARY and JERUSALEM.

Gore, Charles (1853–1932), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1875. From his schooldays he had been a *High Churchman, and in 1884, on H. P. Liddon's recommendation, was appointed first principal of Pusey House, Oxford. His independent mind, combined with an almost prophetic strength of character, brought a new strand into the Anglo-Catholic Movement. In his concern to bring Catholic principles to bear on social problems and to come to terms with OT criticism, he exercised great influence on the younger generation at Oxford. When in 1889 Lux Mundi (q.v.) appeared under Gore's editorship, his own essay on 'The Holy Spirit and Inspiration' caused disquiet among many of the older and more conservative school of High Church theologians. In The Ministry of the Christian Church (1888; new edn., 1919, by C. H. *Turner) he upheld Catholic teaching about episcopacy, largely in criticism of E. *Hatch's *Bampton Lectures. His own Bampton Lectures (1891) on 'The Incarnation of the Son of God' were a popular exposition of the *kenotic theory of the Incarnation. They were supplemented by his Dissertations on allied subjects in 1895.

Meanwhile Gore had been actively concerned with the foundation of the *Community of the Resurrection (now at Mirfield), and in 1893 he became vicar of Radley, Oxon, settling the community in the vicarage. From 1894 to 1902 he was a Canon of *Westminster. Here he became widely known as a preacher and exegete, and several series of his NT expositions were afterwards issued as books. In his Body of Christ (1901), a work on the Eucharist, he set out the place of the Sacrament in the Christian life and also sought to reformulate the doctrine of the Real Presence without *transubstantiation.

In 1902 he was consecrated Bp. of Worcester and when, largely through his initiative, the diocese of Birmingham was established in 1905 he became its first bishop. Here in the civic life of Birmingham he was highly successful. In 1911 he was translated to Oxford. He was far less happy in this large rural diocese and became increasingly conscious of isolation through the trend of various theological controversies (Foundations, *Reservation, etc.) and the absence of Catholic support in the Convocations. In 1919 he resigned his see. In his later years he continued to write in defence of the Christian faith. His trilogy, Belief in God (1921), Belief in Christ (1922), and The Holy Spirit and the Church (1924)—the three works being subsequently reissued in a single volume as The Reconstruction of Belief—was very widely read and appreciated. After 1920 his attitude towards certain developments in Anglo-Catholicism became increasingly critical, and in 1925 he summarized his position in The Anglo-Catholic Movement To-day; but he remained a fervent apologist for High Church principles until his death. His other writings include The Question of Divorce (1911), The Religion of the Church (1916), and Jesus of Nazareth (Home University Library, 1929).

G. L. Prestige, The Life of Charles Gore: A Great Englishman (1935). J. Carpenter, Gore: A Study in Liberal Catholic Thought (1960). J. [F.] Gore [nephew], Charles Gore, Father and Son: A Background to the Early Years and Family Life of Bishop Gore (1932). G. Crosse, Charles Gore (1932); A. Mansbridge, Edward Stuart Talbot and Charles Gore (1935). R. Ekström, The Theology of Charles Gore (Lund, 1944). P. [D. L.] Avis, Gore: Construction and Conflict (Worthing, 1988). A. Wilkinson, The Community of the Resurrection (1992), passim. W. R. *Inge, 'Bishop Gore and the Church of England' (anon.), Edinburgh Review, 207 (1908), pp. 79–104; repr. in Inge's Outspoken Essays, 1 (1919), pp. 106–36. A. T. P. Williams in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 349–53.

Gorgonia, St (d. *c.*370), sister of St *Gregory of Nazianzus (q.v.) and St *Caesarius. She is known almost exclusively through St Gregory's panegyric (Orat. 8), which represents her as of a pious and generous disposition. An incident in her life has sometimes (but probably wrongly) been taken as an early instance of devotion to the Reserved Sacrament. In acc. with contemporary custom she was not baptized until the end of her life. Feast day in E., 23 Feb.; in W., 9 Dec.

Gregory's Oratio is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 35. 787–818. H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Early Cultus of the Reserved Eucharist', JTS 11 (1909–10), pp. 275–9. D. Gorce in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 762–5, s.v.

Gorham Case. In 1847 the Revd G. C. Gorham was presented by the Lord Chancellor to the vicarage of Brampford Speke in the diocese of *Exeter. The Bp. of Exeter, H. *Phillpotts, who suspected his orthodoxy, examined him, found him unsound on the doctrine of *baptismal regeneration, and refused to institute him to the living. After a complicated lawsuit, Gorham appealed to the recently formed *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, attributing to him a view which he did not hold, declared it to be not contrary to the doctrine of the C of E. The decision gave great offence to High Churchmen and aroused a storm of controversy. Over 60 books and pamphlets were published, and many seceded to the RC Church, including H. E. *Manning and R. I. *Wilberforce. As the Bp. of Exeter still refused to institute, Gorham was eventually instituted by Abp. J. B. *Sumner. The case had the result of drawing attention to the limitations of the Privy Council as an ecclesiastical court of appeal.

J. C. S. Nias, Gorham and the Bishop of Exeter (1951), with full bibl. details of pamphlets and other contemporary literature.

Görres, Johann Joseph von (1776–1848), German Catholic author. A native of Coblenz, he was educated under the deep influence of the rationalism of the 18th cent. As a youth he was an enthusiastic supporter of the French Revolution, but a stay at Paris in 1799–1800 disillusioned him. In 1800–6 he taught natural science at Coblenz. The study of J. G. *Herder and F. W. J. von *Schelling awakened his religious interests, which found expression in his Glaube und Wissen (1805), a work of largely pantheistic character. In 1806–8 he lectured at Heidelberg University, mainly on historical and literary subjects. Here he came into contact with the leaders of German Romanticism, whose love of the religious history of the past inspired his Mythengeschichte der asiatischen Welt (2 vols., 1810). During the Napoleonic wars he took up the cause of German independence and was for a time an immensely popular figure. In 1814 he started the first great German newspaper, the Rheinischer Merkur. After the Peace of Paris (1815) he met with increasing hostility from the reactionary Prussian government and his paper was suppressed in 1816. In Teutschland und die Revolution (1819) he demanded liberty and a fuller place for the Catholic Church in public life. An order of arrest followed, but Görres escaped by flight to Strasbourg. In 1824 he formally returned to the faith of the RC Church. In 1827 Ludwig I of Bavaria offered him a professorship at Munich University, where he became the centre of a circle of famous Catholic scholars, among whom were J. J. I. von *Döllinger and J. A. *Möhler. From 1828 to 1832 they published the influential periodical Eos, which opposed Catholic ideals to the contemporary rationalism. There followed his Christliche Mystik (4 vols., 1836–42), which, though uncritical in the use of sources and sometimes fanciful, gave a strong impulse to the study of the mystics. When, in 1837, the Abp. of Cologne, Clemens August von *Droste-Vischering, was deposed and imprisoned by the Prussian government, Görres took up his cause in his tract Athanasius (1838), which brought all Catholic Germany to the defence of the Church. Another treatise, Die Triarier (1838), directed against the defenders of the government, received special Papal approval. His last years were darkened by the scandal round Lola Montez which resulted in the deposition of several professors belonging to his circle. A brilliant writer, he devoted himself unstintingly to the cause he had at heart. His work contributed considerably to the spread of Catholic ideas in modern Germany.

The 'Görres-Gesellschaft zur Pflege der Wissenschaft im katholischen Deutschland' was founded at Coblenz on the centenary of Görres's birth (25 Jan. 1876) to promote scientific and historical studies on Catholic principles. Suppressed by the Nazis in 1941, when its property was confiscated, it was reconstituted in 1948. It publishes, inter alia, two important periodicals, the Historisches Jahrbuch and Oriens Christianus*. Collected edn. of Görres's writings, Munich, 9 vols., 1854–74; crit. edn. by W. Schellberg and others under the auspices of the Görres-Gesellschaft (Cologne, 1926 ff., with suppl. vol. containing biog. information, ed. H. Raab, 1985). Selected Works ed. W. Frühwald (2 vols., Freiburg, etc., 1978). Lives by J. Galland (Freiburg i.B., 1876), J. N. Sepp (Nördlingen, 1877; 2nd edn., Dresden, 1896), W. Schellberg (Cologne, 1926), R. Saitschick (Olten and Freiburg i.B., 1953), and H. Raab (Paderborn, 1978). The Historisches Jahrbuch, 96 (1976), Heft 1, was devoted to studies of his thought, marking the 200th anniversary of his birth. L. Just in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 1058–60, with selection from the large Ger. lit. on Görres; H. Jaeger, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 572–8, s.v.

Gorton, Samuel (*c.*1592–1677), founder of the 'Gortonites'. Born in Lancashire, he worked as a clothier in London for some time before he sailed *c.*1636 for Boston, Mass., in the hope of enjoying complete religious freedom. Of a fiery and difficult temperament, he found himself engaged in continual conflict with the civil authorities in America. He gradually came to hold many unorthodox doctrines, e.g. he denied that of the Trinity and professed faith in *conditional immortality. Further difficulties with the civil powers led him to return to England in 1644, where he published an attack on what he held to be the repressive policy of the Massachusetts government, Simplicitie's Defence against Seven-Headed Policy (1646). He died in America. His followers survived as a sect till the middle of the 18th cent.

His Simplicitie's Defence and a letter to Nathaniel Morton are repr. in P. Force (ed.), Tracts and Other Papers Relating Principally to the Origin, Settlement and Progress of the Colonies in North America, 4 (1846); further letters in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society, 4th ser. 7 (1865), pp. 601–31. Lives by J. M. Mackie in J. Sparks (ed.), Library of American Biography, 2nd ser. 5 (Boston, 1845), pp. 317–411, and by A. Gorton (Philadelphia, 1907). P. F. Gura, 'The Radical Ideology of Samuel Gorton: New Light on the Relation of English to American Puritanism', William and Mary Quarterly, 3rd ser. 36 (Williamsburg, 1979), pp.

78–100. C. Goodwin in DNB 22 (1890), pp. 251–3; J. T. Adams in Dict. Amer. Biog. 7 (1931), pp. 438 f.

Gorze, *Benedictine monastery in the diocese of Metz, not far from the city. It was founded in 748 by St *Chrodegang, who acquired the relics of the Roman martyr St Gorgonius for the house. Like other Lotharingian communities, it went through a difficult period with lay abbots in the 9th cent. After 933, however, it was revived and built up by Adalbero I, Bp. of Metz (929–62), and became one of the chief seats of monastic reform; it acquired great influence and many adherents, esp. in the Empire. Not only was the abbey itself a centre of monastic revival based on rigorous conventual discipline, common life and efficient estate management, in the area E. of the Rhine, but it has become customary to describe a variety of observances and their propagation as 'Gorzian' in contrast with those of *Cluny. The Gorzian reform worked within the traditions of St *Benedict of Aniane. One of its salient features was that its leaders, such as Abbots Arnold (d. c.968), John (d. 974) and Immo (d. c.1015) put themselves at the disposal of patrons, both lay and episcopal, who invited them to take charge of and reform monasteries in their domains. *Reichenau and St *Gall were among the houses reformed in this way. Ecclesiastical and secular control remained with the bishops, lordship and advocacy with the lay rulers who had called in the abbots of Gorze or their disciples. They did not form a network of institutions permanently subject to a mother house and their association found expression chiefly in the bonds of confraternity and mutual prayer.

Historians of monasticism have distinguished between the original currents of reforming enterprise from Gorze and St Maximin, Trier, and a new impulse, the so-called neo-Gorzian (Junggorze) movement of the 11th cent. In this the influence of Cluny on the internal life of the communities was more marked, but the constitutional arrangements were left unchanged. The chief agents of this observance were St William of Dijon (Abbot of Gorze c.1016–31) and two monks of the house, Ekkebert, later Abbot of Schwarzach (in the diocese of Würzburg), and Herrand of Ilsenburg, nr. Halberstadt, who became bishop in 1090. In distant abbeys such as Tegernsee, traces of the Gorzian customs, introduced in the 10th cent., remained until well into the 12th.

The importance of Gorze declined after the 11th cent., but the monastery continued in existence until its secularization in 1572. In 1580 canons took the place of monks until the chapter was suppressed in 1790.

The Cartulary of Gorze was ed. A. d'Herbomez (Mettensia, 2; Mémoires et documents publiés par la Société Nationale des Antiquaires de France, Paris, 1898); the Necrology of Gorze was ed. M. Parisse (Annales de l'Est publiées par l'Université de Nancy II, Mémoire, 40; 1971). The principal narrative sources are the Life of Abbot John written by John of St Arnulf between 974 and 984, ed. H. G. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 335–77, and the 'Miracula S. Gorgonii' of c.964, ibid., pp. 238–47. K. Hallinger, OSB, Gorze-Kluny: Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter (Studia Anselmiana, 22–5; Rome, 1950–1). N. Reimann, 'Beitrag zur Geschichte des Klosters Gorze im Spätmittelalter (1270–1387)', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 81 (1970), pp. 337–89. N. Bulst, Untersuchungen zu den Klosterreformen Wilhelms von Dijon (962–1031) (Pariser historische Studien, 11; Bonn, 1973). J. Schneider in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 811–17; M. Parisse in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 1565–7, both s.v.

Goscelin (d. after 1107), English hagiographer. He is believed to have been born at or near Thérouanne, in France, and entered the *Benedictine monastery of St Bertin at St Omer. Herman, then Bp. of Ramsbury (later Bp. of Sherborne and then *Salisbury), came there in exile, and on his return to England in 1058 took Goscelin into his service. Goscelin was also, for a time, one of the chaplains to the nuns of Wilton, and c.1080 wrote the Life of St Edith. At Wilton he was the director of Eve, one of the nuns, who became a recluse at Angers. To her he wrote his 'Liber Confortatorius' (1082–3), a work of spiritual direction. Before it was written Goscelin had fallen into disfavour with Herman's successor, *Osmund, and he seems to have stayed in a succession of monastic houses (among them *Peterborough, *Ely, Ramsey, and the nunnery of Barking), writing the Lives of local saints, usually based on earlier material. About 1090 he came to St Augustine's, *Canterbury, where he remained for the rest of his life. He wrote Lives of many Canterbury saints, the chief being a longer and shorter Life of St *Augustine and an account of the translation of his relics. The date of Goscelin's death is unknown, but he was still alive in 1107. He was a skilful writer, but his rhymed prose and high-flown vocabulary are an obstacle to the modern reader's enjoyment. His Lives were the means by which the memory of many Anglo-Saxon saints survived the Norman Conquest.

The longer of his Lives of St Augustine (the Historia Major) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 80. 43–94; the shorter (the Historia Minor) is repr. ibid. 150. 743–64, with the account of the translation of his relics, 155. 13–46. Of the other Lives collected in Migne, PL 155. 47–116, that of St *Swithun (47–80) is spurious; those of St *Ives, St *Werburg, St Edith, and St Laurence, Abp. of Canterbury, are genuine. The Life of St Edith is pr. in full by A. *Wilmart, OSB, in Anal. Boll. 56 (1938), pp. 5–101, 265–307; Life of St Wulfhild of Barking ed. M. Esposito, ibid. 32 (1913), pp. 10–26; that of St Wulsin (or Wulfsige), Bp. of Sherborne, ed. C. H. Talbot in R. Bén. 69 (1959), pp. 68–85; that of St *Mildred, ed. D. W. Rollason, The Mildrith Legend (Leicester, 1982), pp. 105–43, and her translation ed. id. in Mediaeval Studies, 48 (1986), pp. 139–210; M. L. Colker, 'Texts of Joscelyn of Canterbury which relate to the History of Barking Abbey', Studia Monastica, 7 (1965), pp. 383–460, with introd.; the Life of St *Justus is pr. in AASS, Nov. 4 (1925), pp. 535–7. For the Life of St Milburg, H. P. R. Finberg, The Early Charters of the West Midlands (Leicester, 1961), pp. 197–216. It is possible that Goscelin was the author of the anonymous Life of *Edward the Confessor, ed., with Eng. tr., by F. Barlow, The Life of King Edward . . . attributed to a Monk of St Bertin (1962), who gives the best account of his works, pp. 91–111, with further refs. The 'Liber Confortatorius' was ed. C. H. Talbot in Studia Anselmiana, 37 (Rome, 1955), pp. 1–117. A. Wilmart, OSB, 'Ève et Goscelin', R. Bén. 46 (1934), pp. 414–38; 50 (1938), pp. 42–83.

Gospel (Gk. εὐαγγέλιον, Old Eng. godspel, 'good news'). (1) The central content of the Christian revelation, the glad tidings of redemption. It is St *Paul's epistles that have given to this Greek noun such an important position in Christian vocabulary, but the way he uses it without explanation in writing to believers in *Rome whom he did not know suggests that the Christian sense was already current. St *Mark follows Paul's usage but can also on occasion extend it to refer to the contents of Christ's own preaching (1: 14 f.). The cognate verb εὐαγγελίζομαι, to bring glad tidings, is found in religious contexts in the *Septuagint. Is. 52: 7 is quoted at Rom. 10: 15, with reference to the Christian message, and Is. 61: 1 at Mt. 11: 5 (par. Lk. 7: 22) on the lips of Christ, with reference to His own preaching. The centrality of the noun in Paul and Mk. probably derives from the Septuagintal verb which Paul and later St *Luke use frequently. But the noun also has a pagan background and usage evidenced in an inscription from Priene (9 BC), where Augustus' birthday is said to have been 'for the world the beginning of things which owing to him are glad tidings'.

(2) During the 2nd cent. the word came to be used as a title for the written books in which the Christian Gospel was set forth. This usage may have been drawn from the ambiguous title line of Mk. (1: 1). As there can properly be only one Gospel (cf. Gal. 1: 7), 2nd-cent. superscriptions called the Church's books 'The Gospel according to Matthew' (τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κατὰ Μαθθαῖον), etc. The unique authority belonging to the four Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John was becoming established in the second half of the century. It is asserted by St *Irenaeus, but already in effect presupposed by *Tatian's *Diatessaron.

(3) The word is also used to refer to the so-called *apocryphal Gospels written in the 2nd cent. and later outside the emerging Church, even though some of them lack the narrative framework normally considered characteristic of the genre. The Gospel of *Thomas provides parallels to a few Synoptic sayings and parables and some scholars have argued that these may derive from the oral tradition rather than being dependent on the Synoptic Gospels. But in general these writings, including Thomas, are clearly later and historically inferior to the canonical Gospels whose authority they never seriously challenged in the Church. They are of interest rather to the general historian of religion.

There is a general introd. by G. N. Stanton, The Gospels and Jesus (Oxford, 1989); see also R. A. Burridge, What are the Gospels? A Comparison with Graeco-Roman Biography (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 70; 1992) and arts. on separate Gospels. A number of the apocryphal Gospels are listed, with lit. on them, s.v. APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT; Eng. tr. of main texts in Schneemelcher (5th edn.), 1 (Eng. tr., 1991), and in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 1–225; Eng. tr. of the *Nag Hammadi material also in J. M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library in English (Leiden, 1977; 3rd edn., 1988). The non-canonical material is given prominence in E. Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels (New York, 1979; London, 1980); J. D. Crossan, Four Other Gospels: Shadows on the Contours of Canon (Minneapolis [1985]); and H. Koester, Ancient Christian Gospels: Their History and Development (1990); judicious evaluation by C. M. Tuckett, Nag Hammadi and The Gospel Tradition (Edinburgh, 1986).

Gospel (in the Liturgy). In the Eucharistic rite, the lection from the Gospels proper to each Mass. It varies greatly in length, from one or two verses to a whole chapter or more. It always occupies the last place (i.e. after the *Epistle and other lections, if any) as the position of honour. Traditionally it is the privilege of the deacon to read it, though at one time it was read at *Constantinople on Easter Day by the bishop and at *Alexandria by the archdeacon (*Sozomen, HE 7. 19). In early times it was prob. read from the *ambo by the deacon facing south; nowadays in the W., wherever the Gospel is read, the reader always faces the people, though in the E., a deacon (if not in the pulpit) faces east, and bishops (and usually priests) face west. In the Byzantine rite Gospels are solemnly chanted at various other services, notably at Mattins on Sundays and major feast days.

In the current W. rite, the deacon, bearing the book, goes in procession to the appointed place, accompanied by *thurifer and *acolytes, and before beginning to read says 'Dominus vobiscum', announces the place, makes the *sign of the cross on the book and on himself and censes the book. He then reads the Gospel in its proper tone. The use of lights at the Gospel is already mentioned by St *Jerome (*Bethlehem, AD 378). The early custom of the congregation standing was retained for the reading of the Gospel even when different postures became usual for other parts of the service; cf. the rubric in the BCP (inserted by J. *Cosin in 1661). See also LAST GOSPEL.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 565–83; Eng. tr., pp. 442–55, with refs. See also bibl. to EVANGELIARY and LECTIONARY.

Gospel Music. Religious music of a *revivalist nature, originating in the *United States of America in the second half of the 19th cent. Its texts, involving much use of the first person, tend to emphasize the themes of personal salvation and the anticipation of heavenly joys, while the music is largely derived stylistically from popular secular music. Developing from the *spirituals and *Sunday School hymnody, it fully manifested itself in the hymn-singing and other music associated with the crusades of D. L. *Moody and I. D. Sankey, and was disseminated in such publications as Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos (1873; much altered in numerous later editions). The music, unsophisticated in both melody and harmony, owed much to the parlour and theatre songs of the time, and was often coupled to words of a sentimental nature. Its most characteristic feature is the use of a refrain at the end of each verse. 'Blessed assurance' and 'The old rugged Cross' are typical examples. The music of the *Salvation Army and other *Evangelical groups was strongly influenced by the style. In the *Black Churches from the early 20th cent. Gospel Music took a more radical form, incorporating elements of ragtime, jazz, blues, and similar styles, with considerable florid embellishment of simple melodies and much 'call and response' interaction between those leading the singing and the congregation. Its performance may involve anything from a solo singer with guitar or instrumental group (electronic *organ, drums, and tambourine are esp. favoured) to full-scale 'gospel choirs', with or without congregational participation. Hand-clapping, dancing, and other physical movements are a common accompaniment, and in its more extreme forms it can induce trance-like states and be associated with 'speaking in tongues' (*glossolalia). This Black style of Gospel Music has spread throughout the *Pentecostal and other charismatically inspired Churches world-wide. It has also had considerable commercial appeal, often independent of its religious context; with professional performers, it enjoys a significant place in the popular music recording market, where it is usually known simply as 'Gospel'.

T. Heilbut, The Gospel Sound: Good News and Bad Times (New York [1971]); S. S. Sizer, Gospel Hymns and Social Religion: The Rhetoric of Nineteenth-Century Revivalism (Philadelphia, 1978); D. Cusic, The Sound of Light: A History of Gospel Music (Bowling Green, Oh. [1990]). J. H. Hall, Biography of Gospel Song and Hymn Writers (New York [1914]); J. R. Baxter, Gospel Song Writers Biography (Dallas, 1971); R. Anderson and G. North, Gospel Music Encyclopedia (New York and London [1979]). I. V. Jackson, Afro-American Religious Music: A Bibliography and a Catalogue of Gospel Music (Westport, Conn., and London, 1979). H. Eskew and P. Oliver in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 7 (1980), pp. 549–59, s.v.; rev. and expanded version by H. Eskew and others in H. W. Hitchcock and S. Sadie (eds.), The New Grove Dictionary of American Music, 2 (1986), pp. 248–61, s.v.

Gospel of Truth. See EVANGELIUM VERITATIS.

Gospeller. The person who reads or sings the Gospel at the *Eucharist. The word is used esp. of the deacon who is selected by the bishop from among the newly ordained to perform this function at an Ordination Mass.

Gother (more correctly Goter), John (d. 1704), RC controversialist. A native of Southampton, he came from a *Presbyterian family and was converted to the RC faith at an early age. In 1668 he entered the English College at Lisbon, where he was ordained priest and later became prefect and supervisor of studies. Being sent to England in 1682, he defended the RC cause during the controversies under *James II. In 1685 he published the first part of his famous work, A Papist Misrepresented and Represented, the second and third parts following in 1687. It evoked a long line of answers from E. *Stillingfleet and other Anglican divines. After the Revolution of 1689 Gother became chaplain at Warkworth Castle, where he taught the future Bishop, R. *Challoner. He wrote several treatises on doctrinal subjects such as *transubstantiation and the use of *images, as well as devotional books on hearing Mass, Confession, and other religious duties. His translation of the Roman Missal (posthumously pub. in 1718) was apparently the first English version of the complete Latin text; from 1737 it was entitled The Roman Missal for the Use of the Laity.

His writings ed. by W. Crathorne, Spiritual Works (16 vols., 1718–36). G. Every, 'John Goter with Laborious Christians 1680–1704', Heythrop Journal, 23 (1982), pp. 30–45.

Gothic Version. Acc. to *Philostorgius (HE 2. 5), *Socrates (HE 4. 33), and *Sozomen (HE 6. 37), the Greek Bible was translated into the Gothic language by the *Arian bishop *Ulphilas (d. 383). Of the NT only 2 Cor. and considerable portions of the four Gospels and the other Pauline Epp. survive. Of the OT only three short fragments of Ezra and Neh. exist. Among the NT MSS is the celebrated 'Codex Argenteus', written in gold and silver letters upon purple vellum, and now at Uppsala; it contains more than half of the text of the Gospels.

All the surviving MSS derive from the period of the Gothic settlement in N. Italy and of contact with the Latin-speaking Church. This provides the most likely explanation for the W. readings of Old-Latin type which are found in the text, as also for the Gospels being in the *Western order—Matthew, John, Luke, Mark. Bilingual Latin–Gothic MSS have played a part in this, each side influencing the other. The version on the whole is extremely literal, especially in Matthew and John.

Text ed. W. Streitberg, Die Gotische Bibel (2 pts., Heidelberg, 1908–10). The Gospels were pub. from the 'Codex Argenteus' by A. Uppström (Uppsala, 1854); photographic facsimile edn. of this codex issued by order of the Senate of the University of Uppsala, with introd. by O. van Friesen, Uppsala [1928]. G. W. [S.] Friedrichsen, The Gothic Version of the Gospels: A Study of its Style and Textual History (1926); id., The Gothic Version of the Epistles: A Study of its Style and Textual History (Oxford, 1939); id., Gothic Studies (ibid., 1961). M. J. Hunter in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (1969), pp. 338–62. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 375–93. J. N. Birdsall in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 803–5, s.v. 'Versions, Ancient (Gothic)'. See also bibl. to ULPHILAS.

Gothic vestments. The name popularly given to Eucharistic *vestments of medieval shape and pattern, the *stole and *maniple being long and narrow, and the *chasuble circular, or nearly so, when laid out flat. The name is applied by contrast with the (esp. post-*Tridentine) Roman pattern, in which the stole and maniple are broad and short, and the chasuble approximately rectangular. The older shape was that generally used, at any rate at first, when vestments were revived in the C of E in the 19th cent. In recent years Gothic vestments, which never became entirely obsolete, have become increasingly common in the RC Church, esp. in churches and religious communities influenced by the *Liturgical Movement.

Gottesfreunde (Ger. 'God's friends'). The adherents of an informal movement of mystical piety, centring upon the Rhineland and Switzerland in the 14th cent. The name reflects such passages as Jas. 2: 23 and Jn. 15: 14. They stressed inner transformation rather than the external forms of religion. Contemporary spiritual writers such as J. van *Ruysbroeck, J. *Tauler, *Eckhart, and the author of the '*Theologia Germanica' oppose the true friend of God to both those who pursue *antinomian ways and those who make a public show of religion.

Works by R. Merswin and others ed. P. Strauch, Schriften aus der Gottesfreund-Literatur (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek, 22, 23, and 27; 1927–9). Id. in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 203–27, s.v. 'Rulman Merswin und die Gottesfreunde', with bibl. to date. K. Rieder, Der Gottesfreund vom Oberland: Eine Erfindung des Strassburger Johanniter Bruders Nikolaus von Löwen (1905); important critique by P. Strauch in Zeitschrift für deutsche Philologie, 39 (1907), pp. 101–36. J. B. Schoemann, SJ, Die Rede von den 15 Graden: Rheinische Gottesfreunde-Mystik (Germanische Studien, Heft 80; 1930). R. M. Jones, The Flowering of Mysticism: The Friends of God in the Fourteenth Century (New York, 1939). On the name, E. Peterson, 'Der Gottesfreund. Beiträge zur Geschichte eines religiösen Terminus', ZKG 42 (1923), pp. 161–202. G. Steer in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 6 (1987), cols. 420–42, s.v. 'Merswin, Rulman', with extensive bibl.

Gotthard, St (960/61–1038), also Godehard, Bp. of Hildesheim. A native of Reichersdorf in Bavaria, he was educated mainly at Neideraltaich, where he made his monastic profession in 991, shortly after the house had adopted the Rule of St *Benedict. He was soon prior and in 996 made abbot. His success as a ruler attracted the attention of the Emp. Henry I (who when Duke of Bavaria had been present at Gotthard's installation), who later commissioned him to reform many of the monasteries in Upper Germany. In 1022 he became Bp. of Hildesheim, where he was a great builder and continued to promote reform. He was canonized in 1131. It is said that the famous St Gotthard Pass in the Alps takes its name from a former chapel dedicated to him on the summit. Feast day, 4 May.

Two Lives by his disciple, Wolfher, the one written shortly after his death, the other c.30 years later, ed. G. Pertz, in MGH, Scriptores, 11 (1854), pp. 167–218, with introd., pp. 162–5. Some letters addressed to him are ed. K. Strecker, ibid., Epistolae Selectae, 3 (1925), pp. 59–71 and 108–110. H. Goetting in Germania Sacra, NF 20 (Berlin and New York, 1984), pp. 230–56, and on his canonization, pp. 344–6. J. Fellenberg, Die Verehrung der Heiligen Gotthard von Hildesheim in Kirche und Volk (Rheinisches Archiv, 74; 1970 [mainly on the cult]). J. Fleckenstein in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 1531 f., s.v. 'Godehard'.

Gottschalk (c.804–c.869), heterodox monk and theologian. A son of the Saxon count Bern, he was entered by his parents as an *oblate in the Benedictine abbey of *Fulda. For part of his education he was sent to *Reichenau, where he became friendly with *Walafrid Strabo. When it was time for him to be ordained deacon, he sought to leave the monastic life; his abbot, *Rabanus Maurus, strongly opposed his wishes, and his case was discussed at the Synod of Mainz (829). The outcome is not clear. We next hear of him in France, first apparently at *Corbie, where he studied under *Ratramnus, and then at *Reims under the protection of Abp. Ebbo. Finally he moved to Orbais in the diocese of Soissons. Here he devoted himself to the study of theology and elaborated an extreme doctrine of Divine *predestination. Basing himself on the anti-Pelagian treatises of St *Augustine, he advocated a double predestination (the phrase came from *Isidore of Seville), acc. to which the chosen are predestined to blessedness and others to eternal fire, though not to sin; as a consequence of this view he restricted the universal saving will of God and the universality of Redemption. He obtained ordination at the hands of a *chorepiscopus, and after some years he set out with some companions to visit Rome. He propagated his views in Italy and the Balkans, where he preached to the Bulgars. Rabanus Maurus tried to stop his activities. In 848 Gottschalk returned to Germany to face his opponents, but at the Synod of Mainz his teaching was condemned. Rabanus sent him to *Hincmar, Abp. of Reims. In 849 at the Synod of *Quiercy he was again condemned, deprived of the orders he had received uncanonically, beaten, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Hincmar sent him to the monastery of Hautvillers. Nevertheless, Gottschalk was able to continue his theological studies and to engage in controversy. Hincmar wrote a pastoral letter in which he warned the simple folk of his diocese against the errors of Gottschalk, who replied with a statement of his views known as the 'Confessio prolixior'. Hincmar consulted *Prudentius of Troyes; and Rabanus, Johannes Scottus *Erigena, and the Church of Lyons (in effect *Florus), Ratramnus, and Servatus *Lupus of Ferrières were drawn in, but these consultations only complicated the issue, and it was not until 860 at the Synod of Douzy that Hincmar was able to find a formula that satisfied those whom he had consulted. Gottschalk remained obdurate, and hoped that Pope *Nicholas I would reopen the case, but Nicholas died (867) before it was heard, and Gottschalk himself died unreconciled about two years later. He also defended the use of the phrase 'trina deitas' against Hincmar and took part in the Eucharistic controversy raised by *Paschasius Radbertus. He was a religious poet of a high order. Apart from some of his poems, his works had little circulation, and it was not until 1631 that Abp. *Ussher printed his two 'Confessions', at a time when the doctrine of predestination was once more a live issue. They attracted the sympathetic notice of the *Jansenists. In 1930 G. *Morin discovered a collection of his theological writings, to which C. Lambot was able to add grammatical writings. These writings give a strong impression of unusual independence of mind, for example in criticizing not only classical authors like Priscian, but also Fathers, such as *Jerome and *Gregory the Great.

Gotteschalci et praedestinatianae controversiae ab eo motae historia, ed. J. Ussher (Dublin, 1631). G. Morin, OSB, 'Gottschalk retrouvé', R. Bén. 43 (1931), pp. 303–12. Crit. edn., with new texts, by C. Lambot, OSB (ed.), Œuvres théologiques et grammaticales de Godescalc d'Orbais (SSL 20; 1945). The projected vol. 2 on his life, writings, and doctrine did not appear, but see K. Vielhaber, Gottschalk der Sachse (Bonner historische Forschungen, 5; 1956). C. Lambot, OSB, 'Lettre inédite de Godescalc d'Orbais', R. Bén. 68 (1958), pp. 41–51. J. Jolivet, Godescalc d'Orbais et la Trinité: La Méthode de la théologie à l'époque carolingienne (Études de philosophie médiévale, 47; 1958). D. E. Nineham, 'Gottschalk of Orbais: Reactionary or Precursor of the Reformation?', JEH 40 (1989), pp. 1–18. Poems ed. L. Traube in MGH, Poetae, 3 (1896), pp. 707–38; K. Strecker, ibid. 4 (1923), pp. 934–6; and N. Fickermann, ibid. 6 (fasc. 1, 1951), pp. 86–106. Three of the poems are repr., with Eng. tr., in P. Godman, Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (1985), pp. 228–46. M.-L. Weber, Die Gedichte des Gottschalk von Orbais (Lateinische Sprache und Literatur des Mittelalters, 27; Frankfurt am Main, etc. [1992]). B. Bischoff, 'Gottschalks Lied für den Reichenauer Freund', in H. R. Jauss and D. Schaller (eds.), Medium Aevum Vivum: Festschrift für Walter Bulst (Heidelberg, 1960), pp. 61–8; repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 2 (Stuttgart, 1967), pp. 26–34. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 235–44, with bibl. refs. K. Schäferdiek in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 108–10, s.v. 'Gottschalk der Sachse'.

Grabe, Johannes Ernst (1666–1711), Anglican divine of German birth. Born and educated at Königsberg, where he was appointed Privatdozent in 1685, he was led to question the validity of Lutheran orders and contemplated becoming a RC. On the recommendation of P. J. *Spener, however, he made his way to England in 1697 in the belief that here he would find a Church possessing the *apostolic succession. He was ordained to the priesthood and entered into close relations with the *Nonjurors, but without losing his esteem for the Establishment. A royal pension having been soon settled on him, Grabe gave himself up to research into the texts of the Bible and the early Fathers. His published writings included Spicilegium SS. Patrum, ut et haereticorum, seculi post Christum natum I, II, et III (2 vols., 1698–9), editions of the First Apology of St *Justin (1700) and of St *Irenaeus (1702), and an edition of a considerable portion of the *Septuagint based on the *Codex Alexandrinus (1707–9).

G. Thomann, 'John Ernest Grabe (1666–1711): Lutheran Syncretist and Anglican Patristic Scholar', JEH 43 (1992), pp. 414–

27. R. Hooper in DNB 20 (1890), pp. 306 f., s.v. On his edn. of the Septuagint, H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 182–4.

Grabmann, Martin (1875–1949), historian of medieval philosophy and theology. He was born at Winterzhofen, ordained priest in 1898, and appointed professor of theology and philosophy at Eichstätt in 1906. In 1913 he became professor of Christian philosophy at Vienna University and in 1918 professor of theology at Munich. Inspired and encouraged by H. *Denifle and F. *Ehrle, by tireless research among manuscripts throughout Europe, he became the first to give a clear account of the development and ramifications of scholastic thought, and to seek in the works of *Thomas Aquinas the evolution and changes of thought rather than the outline of a fixed system. Through his own disciples, such as K. Baeumker and B. Geyer, and others such as É. *Gilson who used his work, his influence lies behind almost all the advances made in this field of studies. His works include Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode (1909–11), Mittelalterliches Geistesleben (3 vols., 1926–56), Der lateinische Averroismus (1931), Die Werke des hl. Thomas von Aquin (1931), Die Geschichte der katholischen Theologie (1933), and Methoden und Hilfsmittel des Aristoteles-Studiums im Mittelalter (1939). Accessible in English is Thomas Aquinas (1928), a brief compendious exposition.

Festschrift for Grabmann's 60th birthday, entitled Aus der Geisteswelt des Mittelalters (BGPM, Supplementband 3; 2 Hefte, 1935), with bibl. to date [1, pp. xxiii–xxxv]. Autobiog. introd. appended to Grabmann's Mittelalterliches Geistesleben, 3 (1956), pp. 1–9, and bibl. by L. Ott, pp. 10–35.

grace. In Christian theology, the supernatural assistance of God bestowed upon a rational being with a view to his sanctification. While the necessity of this aid is generally admitted, the manner of it has been a subject of discussion among Christians since the 4th cent.

In the Bible the word 'grace' is most common in the writings of St *Paul, but the idea is widespread. It is found in the OT, where the Prophets of the Exile taught that God would grant His people the ability to do His will (e.g. Jer. 31: 31–4; Ezek. 36: 26 f.). In the NT the sovereign divine favour is shown towards undeserving and ungrateful human beings simply on account of their need (Mt. 5: 45; Lk. 18: 9–14). Hence grace is not a matter of any legal claim on God but precedes faith in Him (Rom. 4, vv. 4 and 16; Eph. 2: 5–8). It is effectively displayed in particular divine activities—supremely in the redemptive death of Christ (Rom. 3: 21–5, 5: 6–8; Heb. 2: 9), then in the calling of believers (Gal. 1: 6; 2 Cor. 4: 15; 2 Tim. 1: 9) and in the gifts of ministry (Rom. 1: 5; 12: 6–8; Gal. 2: 9). Indeed the whole range of Christian life within the Church is derived from grace (as when the generous support of needy fellow-Christians is prompted by recalling 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich', 2 Cor. 8: 9), and the most comprehensive blessing that can be invoked always includes 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ'.

The first attempt at formulating a doctrine of grace is found in *Tertullian, whose original contribution was the idea of grace as the Divine energy working in the soul. Although at times he represented it as coercive, he elsewhere emphasized strongly man's responsibility (e.g. Adv. Marc. 2. 9). But the theology of grace first emerged clearly in the controversy between St *Augustine and *Pelagius, the complete divergence between whose doctrines was caused by their opposing views of human nature. To the former fallen man was 'one mass of sin' (De div. quaest. ad Simplicianum, 1. 2, 16); to the latter sin was only the following of an evil example. Logically, therefore, Augustine held that all deserved damnation (De nat. et grat. 5), from which, however, God's mercy reserved a fixed number of souls (De corrept. et grat. 39). A logical inference from this, though Augustine never taught it, was predestination to damnation. Grace was at all times necessary, since man by himself, in consequence of the Fall, could only sin (De spir. et litt. 5). In Baptism was received remission of sins and the grace of justification (De pecc. mer. et remiss. 3. 6, 9). Such grace was essential to the Christian for the performance of good works, and existed in an attenuated form in Jews and heretics. The apparent virtues of the heathen were only vices (C. duas Epist. Pelag. 3. 14). Against this teaching *Pelagianism held that grace was not needed for the performance of good actions, but was given in order that the commands of God might be more easily fulfilled (De grat. Christi et de pecc. orig. 1. 26). Augustine at times called such Divine grace the gift of the Spirit. At other times he equated it with the Spirit Himself. It was not indefectible since for salvation the gift of perseverance was needed (De corrept. et grat. 10), but it is not unfair to say it was irresistible; for he stated that it unfailingly attained its object (ibid. 38, 45).

Augustine endeavoured to preserve man's free will by distinguishing between prevenient grace (i.e. grace antecedent to conversion), which is the free gift of God, and subsequent grace, in which the Divine energy co-operates with man after his conversion, and also by distinguishing sufficient from efficacious grace. The former, though adequate, is not in fact followed by its proper result, while the latter is so followed. The effect depends on the congruity or appropriateness of the grace, and that is of God's choice. In practice, though controversy led him to emphasize the influence of God's grace at the expense of man's free will, he strongly emphasized man's responsibility (e.g. De grat. et lib. arb. 2, 5).

No such systematic development took place in the E. Church which continued to emphasize both the necessity of grace and the reality of human free will, and resisted the notion of predestination. Such ideas are reflected in the teaching of John *Cassian, whose doctrine of grace was seen in the W. as an attempt to mediate between Augustine and Pelagius, and hence has been dubbed '*Semipelagianism'. Cassian, while accepting Augustine's teaching on *original sin, rejected total depravity, irresistible grace, and unconditional predestination. Though grace was universally necessary, the will remained free at all stages.

The Second Council of *Orange (529) attempted to settle the question on an Augustinian basis, but with important modifications. Prevenient grace was taught, being rendered necessary by the Fall, but emphasis was laid on human co-operation after conversion. Reprobation (i.e. predestination to damnation) was anathematized. When in the 9th cent. *Gottschalk attempted to teach a sharpened Augustinianism, embodying double predestination and denying that Christ died for all, he was condemned by the Council of Mainz in 848.

Controversy revived in the 13th cent. St *Thomas Aquinas in general followed the teaching of St Augustine, though he differentiated more clearly between predestination to grace and that to glory and laid more stress on free will. He was the first to distinguish accurately between 'habitual' and 'actual' grace (v. inf.). The teaching of *Duns Scotus, *Alexander of Hales, and St *Bonaventure is of considerable interest. In general they are in sympathy with the teaching of Cassian, himself largely dependent on St John *Chrysostom. Original sin was reduced to a 'loss of original righteousness', owing to the 'deprivation of supernatural gifts' that Adam suffered at the Fall, so that even the unbaptized could, by initiating some movement towards virtue, merit '*congruous grace'. Other striking medieval doctrines are Alexander's identification of prevenient grace with the 'general assistance' (assistentia generalis) of God, and Scotus' teaching on the timelessness of God in relation to the theology of grace.

Later controversies are in essence contained in the above. The Reformers returned to Augustinianism. M. *Luther, at any rate in his earlier period, and the followers of J. *Calvin taught absolute predestination, to which the latter added the indefectibility of grace. In the Netherlands the followers of Jacobus Arminius (d. 1604) taught a doctrine (see ARMINIANISM) closely resembling that of Cassian, which had affinities with Caroline thought on the subject in England.

The Church of England in the *Thirty-Nine Articles and the Church of Rome at the Council of *Trent substantially followed the Council of Orange. An attempt to introduce Calvinist teaching in the *Lambeth Articles of 1595 was unsuccessful. In the RC Church there have been two serious controversies. The teaching of the later scholastics reappeared in the doctrines upheld by L. de *Molina, SJ, and the resultant controversy dragged on until 1607, when it was shelved by *Paul V. The *Jansenist controversy arose from the posthumous publication in 1640 of the Augustinus by C. O. *Jansen, Bp. of Ypres (d. 1638). Two propositions allegedly contained in it, and embodying an exaggerated Augustinianism, were condemned by *Innocent X in 1653. It is disputed how far they accurately represent Jansen's position.

The relation between grace and the Sacraments has produced similar difficulties. There are four main lines of approach. (1) The Sacraments are symbols, which produce feelings in the recipients which enable them to receive grace. This denies a unique status to the Sacraments. (2) They are God's instruments for the direct causation of grace. This needs to account for the difficulties that arise in the reception of, e.g., Baptism in bad faith. (3) The theory of moral causation, i.e. the Church impetrates for the recipient the particular grace implied. The Sacrament becomes an acted prayer of the Church, and therefore of Christ. (4) The Sacraments convey a title exigent of grace. The title can only be appropriated if a right disposition is attained.

In the 20th cent. various theologians have sought to cut through the complexities of the W. doctrine of grace. Among RCs there has been an attempt to assert the primacy of the notion of uncreated grace (the Holy Spirit Himself) over the various classifications of created grace (the effects of the Spirit's operation). This insight is used, e.g. by K. *Rahner, to emphasize the centrality of a personal encounter with God. A somewhat similar point is made more simply, though with less respect for tradition, by John *Oman.

In the theology of grace, the following distinctions have commonly been drawn:

(1) Habitual or sanctifying grace. The gift of God inhering in the soul, by which men are enabled to perform righteous acts. It is held to be normally conveyed in the Sacraments.

(2) Actual grace. A certain motion of the soul, bestowed by God ad hoc for the production of some good act. It may exist in the unbaptized.

(3) Prevenient grace. That form of actual grace which leads men to sanctification before the reception of the Sacraments. It is the free gift of God ('gratuitous'), and entirely unmerited.

See also EFFICACIOUS GRACE, SUFFICIENT GRACE.

The subject is treated at length in the standard textbooks of dogmatic theology. The Tridentine teaching is stated in full in D. *Soto, OP, Ad Sanctum Concilium Tridentinum de Natura et Gratia (Venice, 1547). The Jesuit doctrine had its classical exponent in various works of F. *Suárez, SJ (q.v.). Cf. also D. *Petavius, SJ, 'De Lege et Gratia', pr. in his Opus de Doctrina Temporum, 3 (new edn., Antwerp, 1703), pp. 212–55. J. [W.] Oman, Grace and Personality (Cambridge, 1917); N. P. *Williams, The Grace of God (1930); L. Hodgson, The Grace of God in Faith and Philosophy (Paddock Lectures, 1936; 1936); A. G. Hebert, SSM, Grace and Nature (1937); H. Rondet, SJ, Gratia Christi: Essai d'histoire du dogme et de théologie dogmatique (1948; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., 1967); id., Essai sur la théologie de la grâce (1964); P. [F.] Fransen, SJ, De Genade: Werkelijkheid en Leven (Antwerp, 1969; Eng. tr., The New Life of Grace, 1969); H. Gross and others in J. Feiner and M. Löhrer (eds.), Mysterium Salutis, 4 (pt. 2, Einsiedeln [1973]), pp. 595–984; E. J. Yarnold, SJ, The Second Gift: A Study of Grace (Sarum Lectures, 1973; Slough, 1974); C. Ernst, OP, The Theology of Grace (Theology Today, 17; Notre Dame, Ind., and Cork [1974]). J. Moffatt, Grace in the New Testament (1931); T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers (1948). K. Rahner, SJ, 'Zur scholastischen Begrifflichkeit der ungeschaffenen Gnade', in his Schriften zur Theologie, 1 (1954), pp. 347–75 (Eng. tr., 1961, pp. 319–46). B. J. F. Lonergan, SJ, Grace and Freedom: Operative Grace in the Thought of St Thomas Aquinas, ed. J. P. Burns, SJ (1971). H. de *Lubac, SJ, Augustinianisme et théologie moderne (Théologie, 63; 1965; Eng. tr., 1969). W. T. Whitley (ed.), The Doctrine of Grace (1932) [Essays prepared for the Theological Committee appointed by the Continuation Committee of the *Faith and Order Movement]; C. Mœller and G. Philips, The Theology of Grace and the Oecumenical Movement (Eng. tr., 1961). On the word, C. Moussy, Gratia et sa famille (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de l'Université de Clermont-Ferrand, 2nd ser. 25; 1966). H. R. *Mackintosh in HERE 6 (1913), pp. 364–7, s.v.; E. L. van Becelaere, ibid., pp. 367–72, s.v. 'Grace, Doctrine of (Roman Catholic)', with valuable bibl.; J. Van der Meersch in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1554–687, s.v.; G. Baumgartner and P. Tihon in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 701–50, s.v., with bibl.; H. G. Reventlow and others in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 459–511, s.v. 'Gnade', with extensive bibl.

Grace, Pilgrimage of. See PILGRIMAGE OF GRACE.

Grace at Meals (in earlier English, Graces). The custom of giving thanks before and after food is natural and not exclusively Christian. It was followed by Christ

(Jn. 6: 11) and the Apostles (e.g. Acts 27: 35). In religious houses, and later in schools and colleges, fixed forms were provided, and are recited audibly at the principal meals. The section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Benedictionibus (1984) provides four forms of Grace to be used before and after meals. These range from simple prayers to longer forms which include phrases from the Psalms, prayers of blessing and thanksgiving, and short biblical readings which vary according to the liturgical season. Many other forms of grace are traditional among both RCs and other Christians.

H. L. Dixon, 'Saying Grace' Historically Considered, and Numerous Forms of Grace, Taken from Ancient and Modern Sources (1903). R. H. Adams, The College Graces of Oxford and Cambridge (Oxford, 1992 [Lat. texts with Eng. tr. and brief introd.]). E. von der Goltz, Tischgebete und Abendmahlsgebete in der altchristlichen und in der griechischen Kirche (TU 29 (2b); 1905). L. Gougaud, OSB, 'Notes sur les prières chrétiennes de la table', Rassegna Gregoriana, 8 (1909), cols. 524–7. W. E. Scudamore in DAC 1 (1875), pp. 745 f., s.v.; J. Baudot in DACL 1 (1910), cols. 713–16, s.v. 'Bénédiction de la table ou des aliments'; T. Barnes in HERE 6 (1913), pp. 372–4 (with many examples of liturgical graces).

gradine (a word of French origin). A ledge above and behind the altar upon which the cross, candlesticks, and other ornaments are sometimes placed. Such ledges became common from the 16th cent. Since the altar is properly a table, gradines are now very generally held to be the mark of a debased use, on the ground that the correct place for the ornaments is on the altar itself. See also RETABLE.

Gradual (Lat. gradus, 'step'). In the W. Church, the *responsory, usually from the Psalms, sung immediately after the first scriptural lesson. The name, which is found as far back as *Rabanus Maurus, derives from the practice of singing it either on the altar steps or while the deacon was ascending the steps of the *ambo. Originally it was chanted only by the cantors or choir, and not until later in the Middle Ages did the practice of its recitation also by the priest become established. The Gradual used to be omitted from the Sunday immediately after *Easter to the Saturday before *Whitsun. Since 1969 its place has usually been taken by a responsorial Psalm sung by the cantor or choir and the people, but the gradual texts may still be used. The word 'gradual' is also applied to the book containing the music for the *proper (and later also the *ordinary) of the Mass. The older English form of the word is 'Grail'.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 543–57; Eng. tr. (New York, 1951), pp. 421–35, with refs. M. Huglo in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 685–7, s.v.

Gradual Psalms. The group of Psalms, Pss. 120–34, each of which bears a title in Hebrew rendered by St *Jerome 'canticum graduum', and in the AV 'A Song of Degrees' (RV, 'Ascents'). Various explanations of the title have been offered, referring it: (1) to the supposed literary character of the Psalms, as containing instances of a step-like progression; (2) to the 'lifting-up' of the heart in praise; (3) to the 'going up' of the Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem after the Exile; (4) to the 15 'ascents' or steps which led from the Women's Court to that of the men in the Temple area; or, most probably (5) to the 'going up' of pilgrims to Jerusalem for annual festivals.

In addition to comm. on Psalms (q.v.), see also C. C. Keet, A Study of the Psalms of Ascents: A Critical and Exegetical Commentary upon Psalms CXX to CXXXIV (1969). M. Mannati, 'Les Psaumes graduels constituent-ils un genre littéraire distinct à l'intérieur du Psautier biblique?', Semitica, 29 (1979), pp. 85–100.

graffiti (Ital.). The name given to ancient inscriptions which are merely roughly or casually scratched and not properly carved. Christian graffiti are numerous, esp. in the *catacombs of Rome and at other ancient holy places. They generally take the form of memorials of the dead and prayers to God or the saints commemorated there, scratched by mourners, worshippers, or visitors. Of particular interest are those under *St Peter's, Rome, and those under San Sebastiano by the Via Appia, which show a remarkable mixture of Latin and Greek and are in some cases quite illiterate.

G. B. *de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, 2 (1867), pp. 13–20. G. F. Snyder, Ante Pacem: Archaeological Evidence of Church Life Before Constantine (Macon, Ga. [1985]), pp. 141–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1453–542, s.v. 'Graffites', with refs. J. [M. C.] Toynbee and J. [B.] Ward-Perkins, The Shrine of St Peter (1956), passim (see index); M. Guarducci, I graffiti sotto la Confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano (3 vols., 1958). See also works cited s.v. ST PETER'S, ROME.

Grafton, Richard (*c.*1507–73), printer of *Matthew's Bible and English Prayer Books. A London merchant, who had become an ardent supporter of the Reformation, he arranged *c.*1536 with a fellow-merchant, Edward *Whitchurch, for the printing at Antwerp of the modified form of M. *Coverdale's translation known as Matthew's Bible. A copy was dispatched to T. *Cranmer in July 1537 and six more to T. *Cromwell on 28 Aug. Their enthusiastic reception led Grafton to arrange for a large edition at Paris, then noted for its paper and founts, from the press of François Regnault, and in Nov. 1538 copies of the NT, with the Latin text against the English, were put on sale in London. The printing of the whole Bible (the '*Great Bible') was completed in 1539; but shortly afterwards it was suspended by the *Sorbonne. Grafton escaped to England and later the types were also rescued and brought over. Other works bearing his imprint (mostly in conjunction with Whitchurch) were The Prymer (1540; see PRIMER), the proclamation directing the Great Bible to be read in churches (6 May 1541), the English Gospels and Epistles (8 May 1546), the *First Book of Homilies (1547), and the First (1549) and Second (1552) Books of Common Prayer. Under *Mary he lost his position as King's Printer, and for a time he suffered imprisonment. In 1554 and again in 1558 he was elected MP for London and in 1563 for Coventry.

His Chronicle (2 vols., 1568) was repr. in 2 vols., London, 1809. J. A. Kingdon, Incidents in the Lives of Thomas Poyntz and Richard Grafton (privately pr., London, 1895); id., Richard Grafton, Citizen and Grocer of London ... (privately pr., ibid., 1901). E. G. Hamann, 'The Clarification of Some Obscurities Surrounding the Imprisonment of Richard Grafton in 1541 and in 1543', The Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, 52 (1958), pp. 262–82. E. J. Devereux, 'Empty Tuns and Unfruitful Grafts: Richard Grafton's Historical Publications', Sixteenth Century Journal, 21 (1990), pp. 33–56. H. Miller in S. T. Bindoff (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1509–1558, 2 (1982), pp. 240 f., s.v.; W. J. Jones in P. W. Hasler (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1558–1603, 2 (1981), pp. 210 f., s.v.

Graham, 'Billy' (William Franklin Graham, 1918–), American Evangelist. Born in Charlotte, North Carolina, he experienced conversion at the age of 16. He graduated from Wheaton College, Illinois, in 1943 and entered the Southern *Baptist ministry. When the American based 'Youth for Christ International' was founded in 1945, Graham became their first official field representative. In 1949 he began his first major evangelistic campaign in Los Angeles and in 1950 the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association was formed. Thereafter, he toured the world and became known for his 'stadium campaigns'; he visited Britain in 1954, 1966, 1984–5, and 1989. His friendships with various of the American Presidents, most notably Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon, received much publicity and he has been welcomed by leaders of denominations around the world, including Pope *John Paul II in 1978. In recent years his campaigns have made full use of modern technology, including *broadcasting. His 'Mission World' campaigns in 1989–90 were linked live by satellite to 33 countries in Africa and 26 countries in Asia.

The many studies include an 'authorised biography' by J. Pollock (London, 1966) and a substantial study by W. Martin, The Billy Graham Story (1992).

grail. An older form of the word '*Gradual' (q.v.), derived through the Old French grael from the same root.

Grail, the Holy. In medieval romances, a vessel possessing spiritual powers and qualities, and affording, under certain conditions, mystical benefits to its beholders. The legend first appears in the Perceval of Chrestien de Troyes (?1180–90) and, in a Christianized version, in the Estoire dou Graal (or Joseph d'Arimatie) of Robert de Boron (*c.*1190). In the religiously inspired (possibly *Cistercian) Queste del Saint Graal and in the Parzival of Wolfram von Eschenbach (*c.*1200) the legend of the Grail is more fully integrated with the stories of Arthur and the Round Table, and made to bear an exalted moral interpretation. The origins of the legend, which appears to contain elements of the most diverse provenance, are obscure. In the extant versions, the Grail itself is sometimes identified with the cup used by Christ in the *Last Supper, which later belonged to *Joseph of Arimathaea, and its effects upon those who see it are made to correspond closely with the effects of Holy Communion upon communicants. The whole legend, however, remained within the field of secular literature, and was never recognized by any ecclesiastical authority.

Modern crit. edns. of Perceval, by F. Lecoy (Classiques Français du Moyen Age, 100, 103; 1972–5), of the Estoire dou Graal, by W. A. Nitze (ibid. 57; 1927), of Queste del Saint Graal, by A. Pauphilet (ibid. 33; 1923), and of Parzival, by G. Weber (Darmstadt, 1963; 4th edn., 1981). Eng. trs. of Perceval, by D. D. R. Owen (London, 1987), of Queste, by P. M. Matarasso (Harmondsworth, 1969), and of Parzival, by A. T. Hatto (ibid., 1980). There is a very wide lit. on the subject. Studies incl. D. Kempe, The Legend of the Holy Grail, its Sources, Character and Development (EETS, Extra Series, 95; 1905); R. S. Loomis, Celtic Myth and Arthurian Legend (New York, 1927), pp. 139–270; id., Arthurian Tradition and Chrétien de Troyes (ibid., 1949), pp. 335–459; id. in id. (ed.), Arthurian Literature in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1959), pp. 274–94 ('The Origin of the Grail Legends'); J. Marx, La Légende arthurienne et le Graal (1952); id., Nouvelles Recherches sur la littérature arthurienne (Bibliothèque Française et Romane, Série C: Études Littéraires, 9 [1965]); D. D. R. Owen, The Evolution of the Grail Legend (St Andrews University Publications, 58; 1968); H. Bayer, Gral: Die hochmittelalterliche Glaubenskrise im Spiegel der Literatur (Monographien zur Geschichte des Mittelalters, 28; 2 vols., Stuttgart, 1983). M. Cocheril, OCR, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 672–700, s.v. 'Graal (Le saint)'; E. Baumgartner and others in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 1616–21, s.v. 'Gra(a)l, -sdichtung', both with bibl.

Grande Chartreuse, La. The mother house of the *Carthusian Order, situated in the Dauphiné Alps, some 15 miles N. of Grenoble. A primitive monastery on the site was built by St *Bruno in 1084. It was many times destroyed by fire and rebuilt before the present monastery was begun in 1676. In 1904 the monks were forcibly ejected under the '*Associations Law' of 1901, and the building secularized. The famous liqueur was thereafter made by the expelled monks at Tarragona in Spain. In 1940 Carthusians were permitted to return to La Grande Chartreuse.

B. Bligny, Recueil des plus anciens actes de la Grande-Chartreuse (1086–1196) (Grenoble, 1958). [C. M. Boutrais, OSB,] La Grande Chartreuse (Grenoble, 1881, and numerous subsequent edns.; abridged Eng. tr., 1893). L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1322–4, s.v., for full refs. M. Laporte, OSB, in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1088–107, s.v.

Grandmont, Order of. French religious order, now extinct. It was founded by St Stephen of Muret (*c.*1054–1124/5). Its early history is uncertain, and its rule was drawn up only in the time of the fourth prior, Stephen of Liciac (1139–63). The order established its mother house, under a prior, at Grandmont, N. of Limoges. The discipline was severe and strict poverty was observed, although the rule was lenient about silence. Because of their generosity the Grandmontines were popularly known as 'Bonshommes'. From *c.*1184 disputes arose between monks and lay brothers, and though these were temporarily allayed, discipline began to relax more and more. In 1643 a Strict Observance branch was formed, but it was shortlived. The order came to an end before the French Revolution, Grandmont itself being suppressed in 1772. There had been three houses in England (*c.*1222–1464): Alderbury, Creswell, and Grosmont.

C. A. Hutchison, The Hermit Monks of Grandmont (Cistercian Studies Series, 118; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1989). Scriptores Ordinis Grandimontensis, ed. J. Becquet, OSB (CCCM 8; 1968). R. Graham and A. W. Clapham, 'The Order of Grandmont and its Houses in England', Archaeologia, 75 (1926), pp. 159–210. J. Becquet, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1504–14, s.v. 'Étienne (15) de Muret'; G.-M. Oury in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 1389–91, s.v.; J. Becquet, OSB, in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1129–40, s.v. 'Grandmont (Ordre et Abbaye de), all with further bibl.

Gratian (12th cent.: d. by *c.*1160), author of the 'Decretum Gratiani' and virtually the father of canon law. Practically nothing is known of his life. He prob. became a monk at some stage, but where is unknown, and he may have been a consultant to a Papal judge in 1143.

His 'Concordantia Discordantium Canonum', which later came to be known as the 'Decreta' or 'Decretum Gratiani', is a collection of nearly 4,000 patristic texts, conciliar decrees, and Papal pronouncements touching on all fields of Church discipline, which he presented in a framework of a treatise designed to resolve into harmony all the contradictions and inconsistencies of his sources. The date of the 'Decretum' is much disputed, but since it incorporates decisions of the Second Lateran Council of 1139, it cannot have been completed earlier than that year. It quickly became the basic text on which masters of canon law lectured, first at Bologna, and before the end of the 12th cent. also at Oxford, Paris, and elsewhere. Although it never received formal approbation, it was used as an authority in the practice of the Papal curia and came to form the first part of the Corpus Iuris Canonici. 'It has always been held one of Gratian's fundamental merits that he gave to Canon Law the shape of a legal system, approached it with juridical categories of thinking and separated it as an autonomous practical subject matter distinct from dogmatic theology' (S. Kuttner). *Dante (Paradiso, 10. 103–5) assigns to Gratian a place in paradise.

The standard edn. is that of A. Friedberg in his edn. of the Corpus Iuris Canonici, 1 (Leipzig, 1879). A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, 1, tomus 1 (2nd edn., Mechlin and Rome, 1945), pp. 338–48, with refs. S. Kuttner, 'The Father of the Science of Canon Law', The Jurist, 1 (1948), pp. 2–19; various of Kuttner's other arts. on Gratian are repr. in his Gratian and the Schools of Law 1140–1234 (1983). P. Landau, 'Quellen und Bedeutung des Gratianischen Dekrets', Studia et Documenta Historiae et Iuris, 52 (Rome, 1986), pp. 218–35. S. Kuttner, 'Research on Gratian: Acta and Agenda', in P. Linehan (ed.), Proceedings of the Seventh International Congress of Medieval Canon Law (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series C: Subsidia, 8; Vatican, 1988), pp. 3–26. G. Le Bras, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, 7: L'Âge classique, by G. Le Bras, C. Lefebvre, and J. Rambaud (1965), pp. 47–129. A. Villien, SJ, and J. de Ghellinck, SJ, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1727–51, s.v.; J. Rambaud-Buhot in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 706–9, s.v. 'Gratian, Decretum of'; P. Landau in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 124–30, s.v., with full bibl. Studia Gratiana post Octava Decreti Saecularia (14 vols., Bonn, 1953–67; vol. 15 etc., Rome, 1972 ff.). See also bibl. to CANON LAW and CORPUS IURIS CANONICI.

Gratry, Auguste Joseph Alphonse (1805–72), French Catholic apologist. After a severe mental conflict, described in Souvenirs de ma jeunesse (published 1874 by A. Perraud), he was ordained priest in 1832. He was successively professor of the Petit Séminaire of Strasbourg (1828), director of the Collège Stanislas (1840), and chaplain of the École Normale Supérieure (1846). In 1861 he became Vicar General of Orléans and in 1867 was elected a member of the French Academy. He was deeply concerned for the revival of Church life in France and took a principal part in the restoration of the *Oratory (under the title of the Immaculate Conception). He was among the *Inopportunists in opposing the definition of Papal Infallibility, but, after the First *Vatican Council, submitted to the decrees. His many books, which sought to present the Christian faith to educated opinion and had a large circulation, include De la connaissance de Dieu (2 vols., 1853), La Logique (1855), Les Sources, conseils pour la direction de l'esprit (1861–2), La Morale et la loi de l'histoire (1868), and Lettres sur la religion (1869). His somewhat independent approach to theology, which included a proof of the existence of God by induction with the aid of the infinitesimal calculus, brought him into conflict with some of the authorities during his lifetime. His teaching had some affinities with *Ontologism; but Gratry certainly rejected ontological doctrines in the form given them by N. *Malebranche.

A. Perraud, Le Père Gratry: Ses derniers jours, son testament spirituel (1872; Eng. tr., 1872); id., Le Père Gratry, sa vie et ses œuvres (1900); A. Chauvin, Le Père Gratry d'après des documents inédits (1901); J. Vaudon, Une L'Âme de lumière, le Père Gratry (1914). L. Foucher, La Philosophie catholique en France au XIX^e siècle (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France, 1955), pp. 197–236. A. Largent in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1754–63, s.v.; M. Join-Lambert in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 781–5, s.v., with bibl.

gravamen (med. Lat., a 'grievance'). A memorial sent from the Lower to the Upper House of *Convocation with a view to securing the remedy of disorders or grievances in the Church.

grave-diggers. See FOSSORS.

Gray, George Buchanan (1865–1922), OT and Semitic scholar. In 1893 he was ordained to the *Congregational ministry, and from 1900 until his death was professor of Hebrew and OT exegesis at Mansfield College, Oxford. He combined original and sound judgement with great knowledge of detail, and became one of the most respected OT scholars and teachers of his generation. Of outstanding merit were his volumes in the 'International Critical Commentary'—Numbers (1903), Isaiah I–XXVII (1912), and Job (with S. R. *Driver, 1921). In his Sacrifice in the Old Testament (1925, posthumous) he made a notable contribution to OT theology.

List of G. B. Gray's pub. writings in the last-named work, pp. ix–xi. G. R. *Driver in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 356–8.

Gray, Robert (1809–72), Bp. of Cape Town and Metropolitan of the Anglican Province of *South Africa. He was the son of Robert Gray, Bp. of Bristol (1762–1834), who ordained him deacon in 1833. He was priested in 1834 and in 1845 became Vicar of Stockton-on-Tees. He soon afterwards reluctantly accepted the bishopric of Cape Town and was consecrated in 1847. He promoted the division of his diocese by establishing new bishoprics at Grahamstown and Natal, and resigned his see in 1853 in order to facilitate this division and the reconstitution of Cape Town as a metropolitan see. He was reappointed Bp. and Metropolitan by Letters Patent in the same year.

In 1861 he suspended from cure of souls, and in 1862 withdrew the licence of, Mr Long, a clergyman who had refused to attend synods on the grounds that Gray's Letters Patent gave him no authority to summon them. The colonial courts agreed that the Letters Patent of 1853, being issued after the establishment of constitutional rule in the colony, gave Gray no coercive jurisdiction, but held that Mr Long was bound by his oath of canonical obedience to submit to the decisions of the Bp. On appeal, however, the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1863 agreed that the Letters Patent were ineffectual to create any jurisdiction and held that the dispute must be treated as a suit between members of a religious body not established by law. It restored Mr Long to his property and income but admitted that it could give him no cure of souls. The judgement was of constitutional importance in that it demonstrated beyond doubt that the C of E was not automatically established by law in all the overseas dominions of the Crown.

Also in 1863, J. W. *Colenso, Bp. of Natal, was presented on a charge of heresy to Gray, who deposed and later excommunicated him. On appeal, Gray's decision was reversed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council who again in 1865 held that his Letters Patent could grant him no coercive authority over Colenso, whose appointment antedated them. Gray gained some support from the *Convocation of Canterbury in 1866 and from the (Pan-Anglican) *Lambeth Conference in 1867 for his project of appointing another bishop for Natal with a different title. When W. K. Macrorie (1831–1905) accepted the post of Bp. of Maritzburg, there were legal difficulties about the consecration, which finally took place at Cape Town in 1869. By this time Gray's health was failing and he died in 1872. During his episcopate he added five new sees to the South African Church, namely, besides Grahamstown and Natal, St Helena (1859) and the missionary sees of Zambesi (1861) and the Orange Free State Territory (1863).

[H. L. Farrer,] Life of Robert Gray, Bishop of Cape Town and Metropolitan of Africa, ed. C. N. Gray (son; 2 vols., 1876). A. E. M. Anderson-Morshead, A Pioneer and Founder: Reminiscences of some who knew Robert Gray (1905). A. Brooke, Robert Gray, First Bishop of Cape Town (Cape Town, 1947). N. Pocock in DNB 33 (1890), pp. 17–19, s.v. See also works cited under COLENSO, J. W.

Great Awakening, the. A name applied to a widespread religious revival in USA. Beginnings of the movement may be traced among the Dutch Reformed Churches of New Jersey *c.*1726; it spread to the *Presbyterians and *Congregationalists in the following decade and reached its zenith in New England in the early 1740s. It was closely associated with the preaching of Jonathan *Edwards and George *Whitefield, though both preachers discouraged the excessive emotionalism which marked the revival. Stress was laid on the visible evidences of conversion and those who did not manifest such tokens of inward grace were openly denounced as unregenerate. Both the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists became deeply divided over the theological implications of the revival, esp. the relative importance of experiential faith and correct doctrine. J. Edwards's Treatise concerning Religious Affections (1746) was designed to discriminate between the healthy and the morbid elements in the revival. During the later 1740s and in the following decade the revival spread into Virginia and even further south. The movement may be regarded as parallel to Continental *Pietism and English *Evangelicalism.

A similar revival at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th cent. is sometimes known as the 'Second Great Awakening'. This began among the Congregational Churches of New England, but came to affect the Presbyterians, *Methodists, and *Baptists, and spread throughout the USA. The early leaders of this revival determined to restrain excessive emotionalism and laid stress on the need for active works of Christian benevolence. By analogy, a further revival in the period *c.*1875–1914 is sometimes called the 'Third Great Awakening'. Recent study tends to emphasize the social and political, as well as the religious, significance of these movements. See also REVIVALISM.

A. Heimert and P. Miller (eds.), The Great Awakening: Documents Illustrating the Crisis and its Consequences (Indianapolis and New York [1967]); R. L. Bushman (ed.), The Great Awakening: Documents in the Revival of Religion, 1740–1745 (New York, 1970). J. Tracy, The Great Awakening (Boston, 1842); C. H. Maxson, The Great Awakening in the Middle Colonies (Chicago, 1920); W. M. Gewehr, The Great Awakening in Virginia, 1740–90 (Durham, NC, 1930); M. W. Armstrong, The Great Awakening in Nova Scotia, 1776–1809 (Studies in Church History, 7; Chicago, 1948); E. S. Gaustad, The Great Awakening in New England (New York, 1957); A. Heimert, Religion and the American Mind from the Great Awakening to the Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1966), pp. 1–236; D. R. Rutman (ed.), The Great Awakening: Event and Exegesis (New York and London, 1970); W. G. McLoughlin, Revivals, Awakening, and Reform: An Essay on Religion and Social Change in America, 1607–1977 (Chicago History of American Religion, Chicago and London [1978]), with bibl.; S. A. Marini, Radical Sects of Revolutionary New England (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1982).

Great Bible. The edition of the English Bible which Thomas *Cromwell ordered in Sept. 1538 to be set up in every parish church. It was not issued till the early summer of 1539 and was the work of M. *Coverdale, who had used as his basis *Matthew's Bible. The printing was begun in Paris, but owing to the hostility of the *Sorbonne, Coverdale was forced to transfer the type and such of the sheets as he could rescue to London. Its handsome title-page, which represents God blessing the King, who is handing out copies of the Bible to T. *Cranmer and T. Cromwell, is usually held to be the work of Hans Holbein. In Apr. 1540, after extensive revision by Coverdale, the 'Great Bible' was reissued with an important preface by Cranmer; in this version it is sometimes known as 'Cranmer's Bible'. From its rendering of Jer. 8: 22 the Great Bible was also popularly known as the *Treacle Bible. The 1539 edition was printed by R. *Grafton and E. *Whitchurch (qq.v.).

Darlow and Moule, 1 (ed. A. S. Herbert, 1968), pp. 25 f., later edns. pp. 28–35 and passim. A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 17–24, with docs., pp. 223–74, passim. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 175–81. A. J. Slavin, 'The Rochepot Affair', Sixteenth Century Journal, 10 (1979), pp. 3–19. See also bibl. to BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS) and GRAFTON, R.

Great Entrance (Gk. μεγάλη εἴσοδος). In the E. Church, the solemn procession in which the Eucharistic bread and wine are carried from the *prothesis to the *altar. See also LITTLE ENTRANCE.

Great Schism. The term is used in two senses:

(1) The breach between the East and West, traditionally dated 1054. Political and ecclesiastical differences, together with theological disputes, had long embittered relations before Pope *Leo IX and *Michael Cerularius inflamed matters by suppressing Greek and Latin usages in their respective domains. Leo sent *legates to Constantinople to refuse the title of *Oecumenical Patriarch to Cerularius and to demand acceptance to the Roman claim to be 'caput et mater ecclesiarum'. On the Greek refusal, the Latin leader, Cardinal *Humbert, excommunicated Cerularius, while the latter excommunicated the Western legates. This event of 1054 is commonly taken as the beginning of the schism, but the Western act was of doubtful validity, since Leo was dead, and the Eastern was personal to the legates. Negotiations continued over a long period, but the cruelties inflicted during the *Crusades, the capture of *Constantinople in 1204 and the imposition of Latin Patriarchs rendered nugatory the work of the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439) in endeavouring to restore unity. The formal repudiation of the Union of Florence by a Synod of Constantinople in 1484 marks the final breach. Though the division remains, in 1965 Pope *Paul VI and the Oecumenical Patriarch *Athenagoras simultaneously nullified the anathemas of 1054.

(2) The period 1378–1417, during which W. Christendom was divided by the creation of anti-popes. On the death of *Gregory XI, the last *Avignonese Pope, in 1378, the Abp. of Bari was elected as *Urban VI, the cardinals being subjected to considerable pressure by the local Roman populace. When, in attempting reforms, he showed signs of insanity, the cardinals withdrew to Anagni, where they elected Cardinal Robert of Geneva as Clement VII, on the ground that their previous action had been taken under duress. Clement VII set up court at Avignon, and the two leaders attracted support along strongly nationalist lines. The *Conciliar movement offered a means of resolving the schism, but the Council of *Pisa (1409) only produced another candidate for the papacy, *Alexander V. The Council of *Constance (1414–18) finally ended the schism by the election of *Martin V in 1417.

Popes and Antipopes:

Roman obedience: Urban VI (1378–89); Boniface IX (1389–1417); Innocent VII (1404–6); Gregory XII (1406–15).

Avignonese: Clement VII (1378–94); *Benedict XIII (1394–1417).

Pisan: Alexander V (1409–10); *John XXIII (1410–15).

(1) A. Michel, Humbert und Kerullarios (2 vols., Paderborn, 1924–30); id., Die Kaisermacht in der Ostkirche (843–1204) (Darmstadt, 1959). M. Jugie, AA, Le Schisme byzantin, aperçu historique et doctrinal (1941). [J. C.] S. Runciman, The Eastern Schism (Oxford, 1955). J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 129–36, with further refs. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1312–468, s.v. 'Schisme byzantin', with older bibl.

(2) G. J. Jordan, The Inner History of the Great Schism in the West (1930); W. Ullmann, The Origins of the Great Schism (1948); J. H. Smith, The Great Schism, 1378 (1970); R. N. Swanson, Universities, Academics and the Great Schism (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 12; 1979). J. Favier and others, Genèse et débuts du Grand Schisme d'Occident: Avignon 25–28 septembre 1978 (Colloques internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, no. 586; 1980). M. Harvey, Solutions to the Schism: A Study of some English Attitudes, 1378–1409 (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 12; St Ottilien, 1983). E. Vansteenberghe in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1468–92, s.v. 'Schisme d'Occident', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to CONCILIAR THEORY.

Greater Antiphons. See O-ANTIPHONS.

Greece, Christianity in. Christianity was first preached in Greece in the 1st cent., principally by St *Paul, whose main centre was *Corinth. Under the Christian Empire the Greek clergy won favour with their people by their general support of the popular cause, often against the Byzantine court and patriarchate. In the *Iconoclastic Controversy the Greeks always stood firm in the cause of the images against the iconoclastic emperors. Meanwhile, during the 8th to 10th cents., Slavonic invaders from the north were Hellenized and converted, chiefly by the exertions of the Greek clergy. During the Frankish occupation, from 1204 onwards, the Church, though subject to a RC archbishop, retained its E. character and its hold upon the affections of its people. When the Turks became masters of Greece during the 15th cent., the Greek clergy were somewhat favoured; they were given positions as minor officials and also acted as the representatives of their own nation in dealing with the Turks. In the War of Independence it was Abp. Germanos of Patras who raised the standard of revolt in Morea (Peloponnese) in 1821.

The Greek Church asserted its independence from *Constantinople in 1833, and was formally recognized as *autocephalous by the Oecumenical Patriarchate in 1850. It is governed by the 'Synod of the Hierarchy', which in principle meets once a year and is attended by all diocesan bishops; in the intervals between its meetings executive power is vested in the 12-member 'Permanent Holy Synod', on which the bishops serve annually in rotation. The Abp. of *Athens is president of both synods. The clergy are paid by the State, but Church–State links have been weakened since 1974. There are *c.*100,000–200,000 Orthodox following the 'Old' or Julian *Calendar, known as Palaioimerologitai or 'Old Calendarists', who have their own bishops, monasteries, and parishes. There is also an even smaller community (*c.*42,000) of RCs (mainly of the Latin Rite), with Abps. of Athens, Corfu, and Naxos, and there are a very few Protestants. See also ORTHODOX CHURCH.

Maximilian, Prince of Saxony, Das christliche Hellas (Leipzig, 1918). C. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος (Athens, 1920 [19th cent.]). G. J. Konidaris, Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Ἱστορία τῆς Ἑλλάδος (2 vols., ibid., 1960–70). B. Atesis, Ἐπίτομος Ἐπισκοπικὴ Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἀπὸ τοῦ 1833 μέχρι σήμερον (3 vols., ibid., 1948–69). P. Hammond, The Waters of Marah: The Present State of the Greek Church (1956). M. Rinvolucri, Anatomy of a Church: Greek Orthodoxy Today (1966). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, 2 (1960), pp. 479–84; 4 (1962), pp. 522–6. A. Fortescue in CE 6 (1909), pp. 737–44, s.v.; A. A. Angelopoulos in TRE 14 (1985), cols. 213–28, s.v. 'Griechenland'.

Greek (biblical and patristic). The basis of the Greek of both the *Septuagint and the NT is the Hellenistic Greek (known as the Κοινή or 'Common' dialect) which spread over the Near East as the result of the conquests of Alexander the Great (d. 323 BC). This was a simplified form of Attic Greek, with some contributions from other dialects, the more delicate refinements in the use of particles, prepositions, participial constructions, and use of moods being smoothed away. Hellenistic Greek in its literary form appears in such writers as Polybius (d. 122 BC), *Philo, and *Josephus. Until recently it was generally supposed that the differences between the common Hellenistic and biblical Greek were due to the influence on the latter of Hebrew and Aramaic; but the papyrus documents discovered in thousands in Egypt in the last hundred years or so have shown that very many of the usages and phrases supposed to be biblical are in fact part of the vernacular language of the time. Some Hebrew influence remains, esp. in the Septuagint (which in turn influenced the NT), but often this means no more than that, of two forms of phrase employed in the vernacular, that one is chosen which comes nearest to the Hebrew phraseology.

Subject to these general considerations, there are differences between different writers. In the Septuagint, the *Pentateuch and Is. are in literary Hellenistic Greek; the other Prophets, the Pss., Chron. and most of Sam. and Kgs. are nearer to the vernacular. On the other hand, some of the later books (Dan., 1 Esd., Est., Job, Prov., Wisd.) are deliberately artistic in style. In the NT, Luke is the most literary writer, then come St *Paul and the author of Heb. Paul's style is educated Hellenistic Greek, but without deliberate literary refinements, while Heb. shows some conscious rhetoric. At the other end of the scale, Rev. is in an uneducated vernacular Greek, being frequently quite ungrammatical, though not more so than some of the papyri (the want of grammar, of course, usually disappears in English translations).

Apart from the general loss of the finer shades of Attic idiom, Hellenistic Greek is marked by such changes as the disappearance of the dual, a diminished use of the dative, interchange of the prepositions ἐν and εἰς, a tendency to amalgamate the perfect and aorist (leading in patristic Greek to the gradual disuse of the perfect), an almost complete disuse of the optative, and many other modifications in the use of words. Just as in pronunciation the differentiation of vowels, and esp. of diphthongs, tends to become obliterated, so the whole system becomes that of a simple language for general utility, in place of the delicate sensitiveness of Attic Greek.

For the first three cents. Christian writers remained generally free from the influence of pagan literature. But when Christianity had become the religion of the Empire, Christians shared the education of the Greek world, and were moulded by the prevailing literary tendencies. These tendencies were pre-eminently a deliberate cultivation of Attic models, and a conscious elaboration of style fostered by the schools of rhetoric. *Patristic Greek is coloured by both these influences, found in varying degree in all the principal writers. Of the two most celebrated for their style, *Chrysostom, with his unselfconscious zeal for moral instruction, comes nearest to true Attic, while *Gregory of Nazianzus shows the elaborate rhetoric of the schools in all its intentional artistry. The Fathers in general—*Basil the Great, the *Cyrils, *Athanasius, and others of less note—show the current manner of Byzantine Greek on a lower plane of achievement. In all, however, the language is progressively affected by modifications in the meanings of words necessitated by the requirements of Christian theology and philosophy. These can be followed only in a detailed patristic lexicon. In general it may be said that biblical Greek is the common Hellenistic Greek of the people, somewhat modified by Hebrew or Aramaic influence, while patristic Greek is the Byzantine Greek of the rhetoricians and literary artists, somewhat modified to suit the needs of Christian thought and terminology.

The standard Greek-English Dictionary is that of H. G. *Liddell and *R. Scott (1st edn., Oxford, 1843), constantly revised and extended by the orig. editors until the last edn. of 1897 (often reissued); it was completely revised under the editorship of H. S. Jones and R. Mackenzie and issued in 10 parts [2 vols., 1925–40] as the 'New Edition'. From this 'New Edition', however, words and usages found only in patristic and Byzantine authors were excluded, in view of work then in progress on A Patristic Greek Lexicon, pub. under the editorship of G. W. H. Lampe (5 fascs., Oxford, 1961–8). Of older lexicons, the most ambitious was that of H. *Stephanus (4 vols., Paris, 1572; new edn. in 10 vols., London, 1816–28; rev. in 8 vols., Paris, 1831–65). Of lexicons for the vocabulary of the NT only, the best of the older dictionaries was C. L. W. Grimm and J. H. Thayer (Edinburgh, 1886). More recent are the successive edns. of E. Preuschen (Giessen, 1910; 2nd edn. by W. Bauer, ibid., 1928; since 3rd edn., 1936, with Bauer's name only; 4th edn., 1952; 5th edn., 1958; 6th edn., by K. and B. Aland, 1988; adapted Eng. tr. of 4th edn. by W. F. Arndt and F. W. Gingrich, Cambridge, 1957; 2nd edn., taking account of 5th edn. of the Ger., by F. W. Gingrich and F. W. Danker, Chicago and London, 1979); this admirable work takes full account of the new knowledge of Hellenistic Greek and has full bibls. For words found in papyri, see also F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyruskunden (2 vols., 1925–7; suppl., 1931; with continuation by E. Kiessling, 1944 ff.). On the theological aspects of NT vocabulary, there is the important Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, ed. G. *Kittel and G. Friedrich (10 vols. in 11; 1933–79; Eng. tr. by G. W. Bromiley, 10 vols., Grand Rapids, Mich., and London [1964–76]), and the more recent Exegetisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, ed. H. Balz and G. Schneider (3 vols., 1980–3). Good concise dictionary by A. *Souter, A Pocket Lexicon to the Greek New Testament (1916; often repr.).

Of NT Greek grammars, the most elaborate is F. [W.] *Blass, Grammatik des Neutestamentlichen Griechisch (1896; 4th edn. by A. Debrunner, 1913; 14th edn. by A. Debrunner and F. Rekhopf [1975]; Eng. tr. of 10th edn. (1959), with revisions by F. W. Funk, Cambridge, 1961). Different in approach is the illuminating work of J. H. *Moulton, A Grammar of New Testament Greek (1, Prolegomena, 1906; 2, Accidence and Word-Formation, ed. W. F. Howard, 1919–29; 3, Syntax, by N. Turner, 1963; 4, Style, by N. Turner, 1976; esp. notable is Moulton's introd. in vol. 1). C. F. D. Moule, An Idiom Book of New Testament Greek (1953).

For Patristic Greek, in addition to the above, E. A. Sophocles, Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods, B.C. 146–A.D. 1100 (Boston, 1870). Much useful material of a lexical and factual kind also in J. C. *Suicer (q.v.), Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus e Patribus Graecis (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1682). For OT Greek, H. St J. Thackeray, A Grammar of the Old Testament in Greek, vol. 1 (all pub., 1909) and R. Helbing, Grammatik der Septuaginta (2 vols., 1907–28). Cf. also F. M. Abel, OP, Grammaire du grec biblique (1927). E. Mayser, Grammatik der griechischen Papyri aus der Ptolemäerzeit (2 vols. in 4, 1906–1934).

Further important works incl. E. Hatch, Essays in Biblical Greek (1889); A. Thumb, Die griechische Sprache im Zeitalter des Hellenismus (1901); A. *Deissmann, Licht vom Osten (1908; 4th edn., 1923; Eng. tr. as Light from the Ancient East, 1910; rev. from the 4th Ger. edn., 1927); C. H. *Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935); R. Devreesse, Introduction à l'étude des manuscrits grecs (1954); R. Browning, Medieval and Modern Greek (1969), pp. 11–58 (2nd edn., Cambridge, 1983, pp. 1–52).

J. Vergote in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., 3 (1938), cols. 1320–69, s.v. 'Grec biblique', with good bibl. See also bibl. to PAPYROLOGY.

Green, Thomas Hill (1836–82), philosopher. Educated at Rugby under E. M. Goulburn and at Balliol College, Oxford, under B. *Jowett, he was elected a Fellow of Balliol in 1860 and, after a period of unsettlement, eventually (1866) became a tutor at Balliol, where his unaffected sincerity exercised a deep and permanent influence over many of his pupils. From 1878 until his early death he was Whyte's Professor of moral philosophy at Oxford. In his later years he took an active part in projects for educational and social reform.

Green's main endeavour was to rethink and propagate in the English world the idealistic philosophical doctrines of I. *Kant and G. W. F. *Hegel. His position was largely worked out in polemic against the empirical views of D. *Hume and the then influential J. S. Mill. Theologically he owed much to F. D. *Maurice. He held that the analysis of consciousness proved that reality was an organic whole, a 'world of thought relations' and not a mere aggregate; that the evidence of art, morality, and religion all pointed to the spiritual nature of reality; that God, the eternal consciousness, was realized in each individual person; and that, since personality alone gave meaning to the evolutionary process, the permanence and immortality of the individual were assured. The basis of the State was not an externally imposed coercive authority, but a desire for the common good (a 'general will').

Green's teaching exercised a great influence on the Lux Mundi* school, which rejected, however, its extreme immanentism. His chief published works were his Introduction to an edition of Hume's Treatise of Human Nature (1875), Prolegomena to Ethics (ed. A. C. Bradley, 1883), and his Lectures on the Principles of Political Obligation (1895; ed. B. *Bosanquet).

Most of Green's writings were collected by R. L. Nettleship (3 vols., 1885–8). The 'Introduction to Hume' is in vol. 1; and a Memoir is prefaced to vol. 3. Selection of his writings on political philosophy, ed. P. Harris and J. Morrow (Cambridge, 1986). W. H. Fairbrother, The Philosophy of T. H. Green (1896); M. Richter, The Politics of Conscience: T. H. Green and his Age (1964); J. Pucelle, La Nature et l'esprit dans la philosophie de T. H. Green (2 vols. [1961]–1965); G. Thomas, The Moral Philosophy of T. H. Green (Oxford, 1987). L. Stephen in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 55 f.

Green Thursday (Lat. dies viridium; Ger. Gründonnerstag). The usual name in Germany, also occasionally found elsewhere, for *Maundy Thursday. Its origin is perhaps connected with a custom of providing penitents, who had made their confession on *Ash Wednesday, with green branches on that day as tokens that their *penance was completed and that they were thereby received back into full ecclesiastical communion.

Greenwood, John (*c.*1560–93), a leader among the early English *separatists. As a young man he was chaplain to Lord Rich, a *Puritan, and conducted unauthorized services in his house. When these were suppressed he moved to London, where he either found or created the 'Ancient Church' in a house in St Paul's Churchyard. For this he was imprisoned in 1587; and he remained in prison for seven years with a short interval in 1592. He was constantly examined before the *High Commission and other courts, but stood firm, and along with his fellow prisoner, H. *Barrow, wrote many pamphlets defending the separatist cause. Both Barrow and Greenwood were hanged in 1593.

The Writings of John Greenwood 1587–1590, together with the joint writings of Henry Barrow and John Greenwood 1587–1590, ed. L. H. Carlson (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, 4; 1962); The Writings of John Greenwood and Henry Barrow 1591–1593, ed. id. (ibid. 6; 1970). ('A Pastoral Letter from Prison', formerly ascribed to Greenwood, is now attributed to Barrow.) F. J. Powicke, Henry Barrow, Separatist (1550?–1593), and the Exiled Church of Amsterdam (1593–1622) (1900), esp. pp. 31–79 passim; B. R. White, The English Separatist Tradition from the Marian Martyrs to the Pilgrim Fathers (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971), esp. pp. 67–90.

Gregorian Calendar. The calendar as reformed in 1582 by *Gregory XIII, and now in use throughout most of the Christian world. As the Julian Calendar, devised by Julius Caesar (46 BC), did not correspond with sufficient accuracy to the period taken by the earth to go round the sun (just under $365\frac{1}{4}$ days), an error of ten days had accumulated by the 16th cent. Gregory in his bull 'Inter gravissimas' of 24 Feb. 1582 ordered that matters should be remedied by reckoning the day after 4 Oct. of that year as 15 Oct. To prevent a recurrence of the situation it was decided that the century years were only to be leap years when divisible by 400 (e.g. 1600, 2000). Protestant countries were reluctant to introduce it, and it was not adopted in England until 1752. In a few RC Churches of E. rites it had been accepted before the beginning of the 19th cent., but even now most of their individual members follow the Julian Calendar. The Orthodox Churches only began to accept it in 1924. In the Julian Calendar fixed feasts now fall thirteen days later than in the Gregorian. For differences in the date of observing Easter and the feasts dependent thereon, see PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

The classical early work on the subject is C. Clavius, SJ, Romani Calendarii a Gregorio XIII P. M. Restituti Explicatio (Rome, 1603). F. Kaltenbrunner, 'Die Vorgeschichte der gregorianischen Kalenderreform', Sb. (Wien), 82 (1876), pp. 289–414; id., 'Die Polemik über die gregorianische Kalenderreform', ibid. 87 (1877), pp. 485–586; id., 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der gregorianischen Kalenderreform', ibid. 97 (1881), pp. 7–54. G. V. Coyne, SJ, and others (eds.), Gregorian Reform of the Calendar: Proceedings of the Vatican Conference to commemorate its 400th anniversary, 1582–1982 (Rome, 1983), pp. 137–297. C. Trasselli in EC 3 (1950), cols. 357 f., s.v. 'Calendario', with bibl., col. 364. See also works cited under CALENDAR.

Gregorian chant. See PLAINSONG.

Gregorian Sacramentary. The name given to a family of Sacramentaries traditionally ascribed to Pope *Gregory I (590–604). The most important of these is the book known to scholars as the 'Hadrianum'. In response to a request of *Charlemagne for the standard Roman Mass book, *c.*790 Pope *Hadrian I sent him a Sacramentary described both in the covering letter and in the earliest copy of the book itself as the work of Gregory. The original has not survived, but a copy made from it, dated 811 or 812, is preserved at Cambrai (MS 164). The ascription to St Gregory cannot be taken literally, since it contains a Mass for his feast, but it has been shown to include material composed by him. Charlemagne's purpose in sending for the book was to promote uniformity in liturgy as in creed and in canon law, but it is probable that the standard Mass book for which he asked did not exist. Certainly the book which Hadrian sent him was defective in that it made no provision for considerable parts of the year and was lacking in other respects. The deficiencies were made good from *Gelasian service books current in Gaul. From the fusion of these two sources, 'Gregorian' and 'Gelasian', the later Roman Missal is derived. The process by which this fusion came about is not completely documented. One important step was the formation of a supplement of 'Gelasian' material, known from the opening word of its preface as the '*Hucusque'. Originally it was kept distinct but later it was integrated with the 'Gregorian' text. An examination of the textual tradition of 9th-cent. Sacramentaries shows that there were other sources as well as this supplement, but they have not yet been clearly delimited. There is some evidence to show that *Alcuin played a part in this process.

The other important representative of the Gregorian family of Sacramentaries is a MS preserved in the Chapter Library of Padua (Cod. D. 47), which was written in the area of Lorraine. Although it dates from the 9th cent., it is thought to contain elements from the late 7th cent.

The text was first pub. by G. Pamelius (Cologne, 1571). Crit. edn. by H. A. Wilson (HBS, 1915). Das Sacramentarium Gregorianum nach dem Aachener Urexemplar ed. H. *Lietzmann (on the basis of Cambrai 164; Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen, 3; 1921); Cod. Padua D. 47, ed. K. Mohlberg and A. *Baumstark (ibid. 11–12; 1927). J. Deshusses, OSB, Le Sacramentaire grégorien: Ses principales formes d'après les plus anciens manuscrits (Spicilegium Friburgense, 16, 24, 28; 1971–82). B. *Capelle, OSB, 'La Main de S. Grégoire dans le Sacramentaire grégorien', R. Bén. 49 (1937), pp. 13–28, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 161–75; H. Ashworth, OSB, 'The Influence of the Lombard Invasions on the Gregorian Sacramentary', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 36 (1954), pp. 305–27; id., 'The Liturgical Prayers of St. Gregory the Great', Traditio, 15 (1959), pp. 107–61. R. Amiet, 'Le Prologue Hucusque et la table de Capitula du Supplément d'Alcuin au Sacramentaire grégorien', Scriptorium, 7 (1953), pp. 177–209. E. Bourque, Étude sur les sacramentaires romains, 1 (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 20; 1949), pp. 299–391, and 2. 2 (ibid. 25; 1958). K. Gamber, Wege zum Urgregorianum: Erörterung der Grundfragen und Rekonstruktionsversuch des Sakramentars Gregors d. Gr. vom Jahre 592 (Texte und Arbeiten, 46; 1956). Vogel, Sources, pp. 79–102. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2, 1925), s.v. 'Grégorien (le Sacramentaire)', cols. 1766–96, with bibl.; H. Ashworth in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 795–8, s.v. 'Sacramentaries'.

Gregorian Water. In W. usage, solemnly blessed water formerly used in the consecration of churches and altars with which not only salt (as in ordinary *Holy Water), but also ashes and wine, had been mixed. The beginnings of its ceremonial use go back to the *Gelasian Sacramentary, and it has an established place in the 9th-cent. *Pontificals. It is so named from the formula used in blessing it being attributed to *Gregory the Great.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 2 (1933), pp. 455–68 passim. M. Kunzler in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 4 (1995), col. 1038, s.v. 'Gregoriuswasser', for further refs.

Gregorianum. The *Jesuit university (Pontificia Università Gregoriana) at Rome. It was founded in 1551 as the 'Collegium Romanum' by St *Ignatius Loyola, and in 1582–4 provided by Pope *Gregory XIII with adequate buildings and resources and constituted a university. Since 1920 it has published a quarterly periodical entitled Gregorianum.

R. G. Villoslada, SJ, Storia del Collegio Romano dal suo inizio (1551) alla soppressione della Compagnia di Gesù (1773) (Analecta Gregoriana, 66; 1954). P. [G.] Caraman, SJ, University of the Nations: The Story of the Gregorian University ... 1551–1962 (New York and Ramsey, NJ [1981]).

Gregorovius, Ferdinand (1821–91), German historian. After studying at Königsberg and some time spent as a schoolmaster, he went to Italy in 1852, where he stayed for more than 20 years. He afterwards took up residence at Munich. During his sojourn in Rome he wrote his Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter (1859–1872; Eng. trs. as History of Rome in the Middle Ages, 13 vols., 1894–1900), covering the period from AD 400 to 1534. It was a monumental work and brilliantly written, though often somewhat subjective in its judgements. An English translation of his 'Roman Journals' (1892) was published in 1907.

J. Hönig, Ferdinand Gregorovius als Dichter (Breslauer Beiträge zur Literaturgeschichte, 39; 1914); id., Ferdinand Gregorovius der Geschichtschreiber der Stadt Rom (1921; with correspondence, pp. 183–528); enlarged edn., without the letters, as Ferdinand Gregorovius: Eine Biographie (1944). A. Forni, La Questione di Roma Medievale: Una Polemica tra Gregorovius e Reumont (Istituto Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, 150–51; 1985).

Gregory I, St (*c.*540–604) (Gregory the Great), Pope from 590. He was the fourth and last of the traditional Latin '*Doctors of the Church'. The son of a senator, he became prefect of the city (Praefectus Urbi) in 573, but, like many of the finer men of the age, he sold his vast property and devoted the proceeds to the relief of the poor and monastic foundations. He founded seven monasteries, six in Sicily and one in *Rome, which last he himself entered as a monk *c.*574. After a few years of a very austere life, the Pope compelled him to leave the cloister, creating him 'regionarius', i.e. one of the seven deacons of Rome. Soon afterwards (*c.*578) he was made '*apocrisarius' at the Imperial court of *Constantinople. About 585 he returned to Rome and became abbot of his former monastery (St Andrew's). To this period may belong the famous story, related by *Bede, of his encounters with the fair Saxon slaves in the market ('Non Angli, sed angeli').

On his accession to the Papacy, accepted only after a severe interior struggle, Gregory found Italy in an alarming state. The land was devastated by inundations, famine, pestilence, and the invasion of the Lombards, and the position of the Church threatened by the claims of the Imperial power at Constantinople. It was owing to Gregory, in whom firmness and strength of character were tempered by gentleness and charity, that many of these evils were conquered. Of particular significance were his relations with the Lombards, with whom he concluded, in 592–3, what amounted to a separate peace. By this unprecedented step he set aside the authority of the exarch of *Ravenna, the Emperor's representative. Throughout this period of unrest, aggravated by financial and military weakness, Gregory took a number of initiatives in matters affecting the civil administration and the military defence of Italy. In his administration of the vast estates of the Church, in which he spent great sums on works of charity, he showed conspicuous ability. In his frequently strained relations with the E. he upheld the supremacy of the Roman see and refused to recognize the title of '*Oecumenical Patriarch', adopted by the Patr. of Constantinople. One of the greatest successes of his pontificate was the mission to England, for which task he selected St *Augustine, later of *Canterbury, with about 40 companions from his own monastery. He also intervened with some success to strengthen the Church in Spain, Gaul, and N. Italy.

Gregory was a very fertile author, of a practical rather than speculative bent of mind. His 'Liber Regulae Pastoralis' (*c.*591) sets out the directives for the pastoral life of a bishop, whom he regards first as a shepherd of souls. The book, which was translated by King *Alfred, was very widely read and influential in establishing a model for those exercising authority. The 'Dialogues' (*c.*593; traditionally and almost certainly correctly attributed to him) relate the lives and miracles of Italian saints, incl. St *Benedict; they provided models of holiness for Gregory's contemporaries taken from saints close to them in time and space. His 'Expositio in Librum Iob, sive Moralium Libri XXXV' is an exegesis of the Book of Job in the threefold literal, mystical, and moral sense, with special emphasis on the last. The 'Homilies on the Gospels' were sermons preached on texts from the Gospels; they were much drawn on as lessons for the third *Nocturn in the *Breviary of 1570. There is also a collection of 854 of Gregory's letters, which are of extreme interest for the information they supply on the Pope's character and multifarious activities.

Gregory was an ardent promoter of monasticism. By granting the monks 'privilegia', which partly restricted episcopal jurisdiction, he laid the foundations of the later *exemption of religious orders that brought them under direct Papal control. His theology was dominated by the ideal of the contemplative life. It did not aim at originality and owed much to the work of earlier writers, incl. St *Augustine and John *Cassian, whose writings helped him to formulate answers to the problems of his contemporaries. Some of his stories about the fate of souls after death played a part in the later development of the doctrine of *purgatory. He encouraged the veneration of relics if authentic. He made important changes in the liturgy, and some of the prayers in the *Gregorian Sacramentary (q.v.) are his, though the Sacramentary as a whole is a later compilation. He fostered the development of liturgical music, and his name has been so closely linked with *plainsong that it is commonly known as the 'Gregorian Chant' even though it continued to evolve long after his pontificate; he gave to the Roman '*Schola Cantorum' its definite form. His pontificate and personality did much to establish the idea in men's minds that the Papacy was the supreme authority in the Church, and his achievement was the more impressive in that (as is reflected in the title 'servus servorum Dei', which he applied to himself) he had great personal humility. He was canonized by popular acclamation immediately after his death. Feast day in the W., 3 Sept. (formerly 12 Mar., still observed in the E.).

The best edn. of his collected Works is that of the *Maurist, D. de Sainte-Marthe (4 vols., Paris, 1704), supplemented by J. B. Gallicioli (16 vols., Venice, 1768–76), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 75–8. Crit. edns. of his 'Registrum Epistolarum' by D. Norberg (CCSL 140 and 140A; 1982), of his comm. on the Song of Songs and 1 Sam. by P. Verbraken, OSB (ibid. 144; 1963), of his comm. on Ezek. by M. Adriaen (ibid. 142; 1971), of his comm. on Job by id. (ibid. 143, 143A, and 143B; 1979–85), of his 'Dialogues' by A. de Vogüé, OSB (SC 251, 260, and 265; 1978–80), and of the Regula Pastoralis by F. Rommel, OSB (ibid. 381–2; 1992). The earliest Life is the brief one in LP (Duchesne), 1, p. 312, with notes, pp. 312–14. Other early Lives by an unnamed monk of Whitby (*c.*713), first edn. by F. A. *Gasquet (London, 1904), crit. edn., with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave (Lawrence, Kan., 1968); by *Paul the Deacon, a late 8th-cent. *Cassinese monk, ed. in its original form by H. Grisar, SJ, in ZKT 11 (1887), pp. 158–73, and in an expanded form in the older edns. of Gregory's Works (PL 75. 41–60); and by John the Deacon (9th cent.; PL 75. 59–242). There are important modern Lives by F. H. Dudden (2 vols., London, 1905), P. *Batiffol (Paris, 1928; Eng. tr., 1929), and J. Richards, Consul of God (1980). C. Dagens, Saint Grégoire le Grand: Culture et expérience chrétiennes (1977). J. Fontaine and others (eds.), Grégoire le Grand (Colloques internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique [101]; 1986). Gregory's life and work are also discussed in all histories of the Papacy and of the Middle Ages. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 2 (1933), pp. 306–514. [E.] C. Butler, OSB, Western Mysticism (1922), pp. 89–133 and 211–41. E. H. Fischer, 'Gregor der Grosse und Byzanz', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 67, Kanonisrische Abteilung, 36 (1950), pp. 15–144. K. Hallinger, OSB, 'Papst Gregor der Grosse und der hl. Benedikt', in B. Steidle, OSB (ed.), Commentationes in Regulam S. Benedicti (Studia Anselmiana, 42; 1957), pp. 231–319. R. A. Markus, 'The Chronology of the Gregorian Mission to England: Bede's Narrative and Gregory's Correspondence', JEH 14 (1963), pp. 16–30; id., 'Gregory the Great and a Papal Missionary Strategy', Studies in Church History, 6 (1970), pp. 29–38; both repr. in id., From Augustine to Gregory the Great (1983), nos. 10 and 11. P. Meyvaert, OSB, 'Diversity within Unity, a Gregorian Theme', Heythrop Journal, 4 (1963), pp. 141–62, repr. in id., Benedict, Gregory, Bede and Others (1977), no. 6; see also nos. 5 and 7. P. Boglioni, 'Miracle et nature chez Grégoire le Grand', Cahiers d'Études médiévales, 1 (1974), pp. 11–102. C. Straw, Gregory the Great: Perfection in Imperfection (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1988]). F. Clark, The Pseudo-Gregorian Dialogues (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 37–8; Leiden, 1987 [challenging Gregory's authorship]; cf. P. Meyvaert in JEH 39 (1988), pp. 335–81). R. Godding, Bibliografia di Gregorio Magno, 1890–1990 (Opere di Gregorio Magno, Complementi, 1 [1990]). Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 284–302; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 466–72 and 649–51. R. Manselli in RAC 12 (1983), cols. 930–51, s.v. 'Gregor I (Gregor der Grosse)'; R. A. Markus in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 135–45, s.v. 'Gregor I', with bibl.; R. Gillet, OSB, in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1387–420, s.v. 'Grégoire (3)'.

Gregory II, St (669–731), Pope from 715. As a deacon in 710 he accompanied Pope Constantine I to *Constantinople, where he distinguished himself by his lucid answers in the discussions on the canons of the Council 'in *Trullo'. Having succeeded to the Papacy in 715, he was at once confronted with the Saracen danger, against which he had the walls of Rome repaired, and the paganism of the German tribes, esp. in Bavaria, Thuringia, and Hesse. In 719 he sent there St *Boniface, aided by British monks and nuns. In his instructions to the missionaries he advocated a lenient view in the question of marriage among the newly converted, authorizing separation in certain cases and exceptions in the matter of forbidden degrees. In 726 *Leo III, the Isaurian, inaugurated the *Iconoclastic Controversy, in the course of which Gregory severely rebuked the Emperor at the synod of Rome in 727 without, however, countenancing the planned revolt of Italy against Byzantium and the election of another Emperor. His relations with the Lombards who tried to conquer Italy under Liutprand were for the most part friendly, owing to his personal influence with their king. The *Benedictine Order enjoyed Gregory's special protection and during his reign King Ine of Wessex entered a Roman monastery. Feast day, 13 Feb.

The chief authorities are LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 396–414 (Eng. tr. by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1992, pp. 1–16), *Bede, *Paul the Deacon, and Theophanes Confessor. A. Schäfer, Die Bedeutung der Päpste Gregor II (715 731) und Gregor III (731–741) für die Gründung des Kirchenstaates (Diss., Münster i.W., 1913), esp. pp. 14–33. E. Caspar, 'Papst Gregor II. und der Bilderstreit', ZKG, Dritte Folge, 52 (1933), pp. 29–89. H. Grotz, 'Beobachtungen zu den zwei Briefen Papst Gregors II an Kaiser Leo III', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 18 (1980), pp. 9–40. J. T. Hallenbeck, 'The Roman-Byzantine reconciliation of 728: genesis and significance', Byzantinische Zeitschrift, 74 (1981), pp. 29–41. Mann, 1 (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 141–202. P. Moncelle in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1781–5, s.v. 'Grégoire II', with suppl. by R. Aubert in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1420 f.

Gregory VII (d. 1085), Pope from 1073. Born prob. at Sovana in Tuscany, he was given the name of Hildebrand. He is traditionally thought to have come from a poor family, but medical evidence has cast doubt on this view. The date of his birth is unknown; it cannot have been later than 1034 and was prob. *c.*1015. He went to Rome at an early age, was educated in the monastery of St Mary on the Aventine, and took monastic vows either then or in 1047/9. He was chosen by Pope Gregory VI as his chaplain, and went into exile with him to Germany in 1046. After the Pope's death in 1047, he remained there in reforming circles, and he was confirmed in his austere views of the obligations of clerical life. He returned to Rome in 1049 with the newly elected Pope *Leo IX, who appointed him administrator of the patrimony of St Peter. Under him and his successors, in whose elections he exercised great influence, Hildebrand was the virtual guide of the Papacy. Under Nicholas II he had a share in the decree which assigned the election of the Popes to the cardinals; in 1059 he became Archdeacon of the Roman Church.

After his election to the Papacy (1073), Gregory extended his work for the reform and moral revival of the Church by issuing decrees against the *simony and incontinence of the clergy in the Lenten synod of 1074. These measures, which were enforced by Papal legates who deposed simoniacal and immoral clerics, were violently opposed, esp. in Germany and France. In England *William I refused Gregory's request for fealty, but agreed to the payment of *Peter's Pence and was acknowledged by Gregory to be in many respects a worthy and reforming ruler. In France, too, Gregory's reforms made some progress, despite Philip I's opposition. In Germany *Henry IV, threatened with ban and deposition, held two synods at Worms and Piacenza (1076) which declared the Pope deposed. Gregory replied by deposing and banning Henry, and freeing his subjects from their oath of allegiance at the Lenten synod of 1076. Henry, whose situation soon became desperate, submitted to the Pope at *Canossa in 1077, did penance, and was absolved from his censures. In spite of this the German princes elected Rudolf of Rheinfelden as German king at Forchheim in the same year. The Pope did not recognize him until 1080, when he once more excommunicated Henry, who had not fulfilled the promises given at Canossa. The latter now planned to set up Wibert, the excommunicated Abp. of *Ravenna, as antipope and marched against Rome, which he took in 1084. Gregory was freed by Robert Guiscard, whose Norman troops, however, exasperated the Roman population, so that they turned against Gregory, who had called them in. The Pope had to flee first to *Monte Cassino and later to Salerno, where he died. His alleged last words, 'I have loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore I died in exile', are now interpreted as an expression of confidence and hope, not of disillusion and bitterness.

Though Gregory was once regarded as an ambitious tyrant, most modern historians have revised this judgement and are agreed on his purity of intention and his desire for iustitia (righteousness). In his own lifetime the Church suffered division, and he himself incurred much criticism; but Gregory's example and the activities of his successors (esp. *Urban II) did much to regenerate the Church. He ultimately condemned the eucharistic theology of *Berengar of Tours, who had denied the real change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ in the Mass. His efforts at reconciling the E. Church to the W. failed, and in 1074 he was not able to put into effect his plans for a campaign against the Turks. He was canonized in 1606. Feast day, 25 May.

His Registrum, ed. E. Caspar in MGH, Epistolae Selectae, 2 (pts. 1 and 2; 1920–3); Eng. tr. of selections by E. Emerton (Records of Civilisation, Sources and Studies, 14; New York, 1932); for letters not in Registrum see Epistolae Vagantes ed., with Eng. tr., by H. E. J. Cowdrey (Oxford, 1972); 'Privileges' ed. L. Santifaller (ST 190; 1957). A. Murray, 'Pope Gregory VII and his Letters', Traditio, 22 (1966), pp. 149–201. Life by Paul of Bernried, completed 1128, ed. J. M. Watterich, Pontificum Romanorum . . . vitae, 1 (Leipzig, 1862), pp. 474–546. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne (SSL 6, 9, and 16; 1924–37), with full bibl. H. X. Arquillière, Saint Grégoire VII: Essai sur sa conception du pouvoir pontifical (1934). G. B. Borino and others (eds.), Studi gregoriani per la storia di Gregorio VII e della riforma gregoriana (1947 ff.), incl. H. E. J. Cowdrey, 'Pope Gregory VII and the Anglo-Norman Church and Kingdom', in vol. 9 (1972), pp. 79–114, repr. in id., Popes, Monks and Crusades (1984), no. 9; cf. also no. 10. A. Fliche, Saint Grégoire VII ('Les Saints'; 1920); A. J. Macdonald, Hildebrand (1932); J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (1932), 1 and 2, pp. 1–94. L. F. J. Meulenberg, Der Primat der römischen Kirche im Denken und Handeln Gregors VII (The Hague, 1965). P. E. Hübinger, Die letzten Worte Papst Gregor VII. (Rheinisch-Westfälische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Vorträge G 185; 1973). W. Ullmann, The Growth of Papal Power in the Middle Ages (1955; 2nd edn., 1962), esp. pp. 262–309. C. Schneider, Prophetisches Sacerdotium und heilsgeschichtliches Regnum im Dialog 1073–1077: Zur Geschichte Gregors VII. und Heinrich IV. (Münsterische Mittelalter-Schriften, 9; 1972). J. Vogel, Gregor VII. und Heinrich IV. nach Canossa: Zeugnisse ihres Selbstverständnisses (Arbeiten zur Frühmittelalterforschung, 9; 1983). C. Morris, The Papal Monarchy: The Western Church from 1050 to 1250 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1989), esp. pp. 109–21. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1944), pp. 55–198, with bibl. Mann, 7 (1910), pp. 1–217. G. Miccoli in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (Rome, 1966), cols. 294–379, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Gregory IX (*c.*1148–1241), Pope from 1227. Count Ugolino of Segni, a near relation of *Innocent III, studied at *Paris and *Bologna. He was created Cardinal Deacon on the accession of Innocent in 1198, Cardinal Bp. of Ostia in 1206, and was employed as Papal legate on a series of diplomatic missions to Germany. In 1217 he was commissioned to preach a *Crusade in northern, and later in central, Italy; from him the Emp. *Frederick II took the Cross at his coronation (1220). Insisting on the immediate fulfilment of the vow as soon as he became Pope, he forced the Emperor to embark in 1227, excommunicated him (29 Sept.) when he returned a few days later, and refused his overtures for peace. When Frederick II sailed unreconciled (1228) he proclaimed an interdict over his lands and wherever he should go. After conducting an unsuccessful campaign against Sicily, he agreed in 1230 to the Treaty of San Germano with the Emperor, loosing him from the ban. In 1239, however, he again excommunicated Frederick for invading Lombardy and usurping the rights of the Church in Sicily, tried to secure the election of an anti-king and in 1241 summoned a General Council to Rome which Frederick II, however, prevented from meeting. He died while the Emperor was besieging Rome (22 Aug. 1241).

A personal friend of St *Francis of Assisi, he was appointed Protector of the *Franciscan Order as early as 1220 and assisted in the development of the *Third Order. It was largely from the *Dominicans and Franciscans that he drew the full-time *Inquisitors appointed from *c.*1233. He canonized St Francis in 1228, St *Antony of Padua in 1232 and St *Dominic in 1234. In 1230 he commissioned *Raymond of Peñafort to collect the Papal decretals of the past hundred years in the so-called 'Liber Extra' (published in 1234) and in 1231 instructed William of Beauvais to examine the works of *Aristotle and prepare an orthodox edition to supersede the old Latin translation, the use of which had been forbidden in 1210 ('Physics') and 1215 ('Metaphysics'). Throughout his pontificate he laboured unsuccessfully to effect a union with the E. Church.

L. Auvray (ed.), Les Registres de Grégoire IX (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 9; 4 vols., 1896–1955). G. Levi (ed.), Registri dei Cardinali Ugolino d'Ostia e Ottaviano degli Ubaldini (Fonti per la storia d'Italia, 8; 1890), pp. 3–154. A contemporary Life, prob. by John of Ferentino, ed. P. Fabre and L. *Duchesne, Liber Censuum, 2 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 6; 1910), pp. 18–36. P. Balan, Storia di Gregorio IX e dei suoi tempi (3 vols., Modena, 1872–3); J. Felten, Papst Gregor IX (1886); S. Sibilia, Gregorio IX, 1227–1241 (Milan, 1961). C. Thouzellier, 'La Légation en Lombardie du Cardinal Hugolin (1221). Un épisode de la cinquième croisade', RHE 45 (1950), pp. 508–42, with refs. to earlier lit.; K. Esser, OFM, 'Die Briefe Gregor IX. an die hl. Klara von Assisi', Franziskanische Studien, 35 (1953), pp. 274–95. Mann, 13 (1925), pp. 165–441, with bibl. details. Fliche and Martin, 10 [1950], pp. 225–38. O. Bonmann, OFM, in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1134–40, s.v. 'Gregorio IX', with further bibl.; G. Mollat in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 775–7, s.v. See also bibl. to the Emperor FREDERICK II.

Gregory X (1210–76), Pope from 1271. Teobaldo Visconti was elected Pope at Viterbo after the Holy See had been vacant for three years, though he was neither cardinal nor even priest. He was forthwith summoned to Italy from Acre, whither he had accompanied Prince Edward of England on his pilgrimage to the Holy Land. The deliverance of *Jerusalem, the reform of the Church, reunion with the Greeks, and the pacification of the German Empire, were the leading ideas of his short pontificate. He solved the German question by recognizing Rudolf of Habsburg as Emperor and inducing Alfonso of Castile to resign his claims to the German throne. At the Council of *Lyons (1274–5), which Gregory had summoned immediately on his accession, the Greek Emp. Michael Paleologus made his submission to the Pope for purely political reasons, but the reunion was short-lived. The plan of a Crusade was discussed at the Council, but, though financial preparations were made, it came to nothing. One of the most important ecclesiastical innovations of Gregory's reign was the introduction of the *conclave at the election of the Pope by the Constitution 'Ubi periculum' of 1274. After his death, which took place on his way back from the Council, he received a local cult in several dioceses, e.g. Arezzo and Piacenza; *Benedict XIV added his name to the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day, 10 Jan.; since 1963, 9 Jan.

Les Registres de Grégoire X, 1272–1276, ed. J. Guiraud, L. Cadier, and others (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 12; 1892–1960). For legislation at the Council of Lyons, see bibl. s.v. O. Joelson, Die Papstwahlen des 13. Jahrhunderts bis zur Einführung der Conclaveordnung Gregors X (Historische Studien, Heft 178; 1928). L. Gatto, Il pontificato di Gregorio X (1271–1276) (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, 28–30; 1959). B. Roberg, Das Zweite Konzil von Lyon [1274] (Konziliengeschichte, Reihe A: Darstellungen, Paderborn, etc., 1990), pp. 17–31 ('Zur Biographie Gregors X.'). Mann, 15 (1929), pp. 347–501, with discussion of sources. A. Clerval in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1806 f., s.v. 'Grégoire X', with further bibl.; F. Molinari in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (Rome, 1966), cols. 379–87, s.v. 'Gregorio X', with bibl.

Gregory XI (1329–78), Pope from 1370. Pierre Roger de Beaufort was the last French Pope. After being created cardinal-deacon by his uncle, *Clement VI, at the age of 18, he studied at Perugia. A skilled canonist, he was elected Pope at *Avignon in 1370. His chief efforts were directed towards pacifying the Papal states, which were then revolting against the foreign officials under the leadership of Florence. Gregory finally excommunicated the city and sent against it the ruthless cardinal, Robert of Geneva (Antipope Clement VII). The Florentines having thereupon persuaded St *Catherine of Siena to negotiate for them, the Pope yielded to the entreaties of the saint, and decided to return to Italy to restore order, despite the protests of the King of France and most of the cardinals. He solemnly entered Rome on 17 Jan. 1377. Unable to put an end to the disturbances, he contemplated returning to Avignon, but the plan was prevented by his death in the following year. While in Rome, Gregory condemned the teachings of J. *Wycliffe (May 1377). After his death began the '*Great Schism'.

Lettres secrètes et curiales du pape Grégoire XI (1370 1378) relatives à la France ed. L. Mirot, H. Jassemin, and others (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3rd ser. 7; 1935–57); Lettres secrètes . . . intéressant les pays autres que la France ed. G. Mollat (ibid., 1962–5); Lettres communes ed. A.-M. Hayez (ibid., 3rd ser., 6bis; 1992 ff.); acta concerning Bohemia ed. C. Stloukal (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas Illustrantia, 4; Prague, 1949–53); letters concerning Belgium ed. C. Tihon (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, 11, 20, 25; Brussels and Rome, 1958–64); those on the E. Church ed. A. L. Tăutu (Pontificia Commissio ad redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, 3rd ser. 12; Rome, 1966). Five Lives in S. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. Mollat, 1, 1914, pp. 415–67; other material in vol. 4, 1922, passim). J. P. Kirsch, Die Rückkehr der Päpste Urban V und Gregor XI von Avignon nach Rom (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 4; 1898), pp. 169–262. Pastor, 1 (1891), pp. 100–16, with refs.; G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (10th edn. [1965]), pp. 130–42 and passim; Eng. tr. of earlier edn. (1963), pp. 59–63 and passim. Id., 'Grégoire XI et sa légende', RHE 49 (1954), pp. 873–7. A. Pélissier, Grégoire XI ramène la papauté à Rome [*c.*1962]. A. Clerval in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1807 f., s.v. 'Grégoire XI'.

Gregory XIII (1502–85), Pope from 1572. Ugo Buoncompagni was born in *Bologna, where he studied and later taught law. In 1539 he was summoned to Rome by *Paul III, where his appointment as judge of the Capitol opened a curial career. This included service as a Papal jurist at the Council of *Trent (in 1546–7 and again in 1561–3) and culminated in his appointment as Cardinal-Priest of San Sisto (1565) in order that he might become Papal legate to Spain. He was elected Pope in 1572 with the support of *Philip II, and his pontificate was notable for its pro-Spanish temporal policy and its vigorous promotion of the *Counter-Reformation. He was committed to implementing the decrees of the Council of Trent, esp. in the foundation of seminaries. At Rome he founded the German College in 1573, the Greek in 1577, the *English College and the Hungarian in 1579, and the Maronite in 1584. He entrusted several of them to the *Jesuits, who enjoyed his special favour, and who also received from him a monopoly over Catholic missions to *China and *Japan. He also favoured other orders, approving the Congregation of the *Oratory (1575) and the Discalced *Carmelites (1580). The vast sums he spent on rebuilding Rome contributed to the successful *Jubilee of 1575, but left the Papal finances badly depleted. He introduced some administrative reforms in the Curia and issued an improved edition of the Corpus Iuris Canonici in 1582. The same year also saw perhaps his most influential achievement, the promulgation of the *Gregorian Calendar.

M. A. Ciappi, Compendio delle heroiche et gloriose attioni et santa vita di Papa Gregorio XIII (1591); G. P. Maffei, SJ, Degli annali di Gregorio XIII, pub. by C. Cocquelines (2 vols., 1742). I. Bompiano, Historia Pontificatus Gregorii XIII (Rome, 1655). L. Karttunen, Grégoire XIII comme politicien et souverain (Annales Academiae Scientiae Fennicae, Ser. B, vol. 2; Helsinki, 1911). G. Levi della Vida, Documenti intorno alle relazioni delle chiese orientali con la S. Sede durante il pontificato di Gregorio XIII (ST 143; 1948). A. Fernández Collado, Gregorio XIII y Felipe II en la nunciatura de Felipe Sega (1577 1581): Aspectos político, jurisdiccional y de reforma (Toledo, 1991). Pastor, 19 and 20 (1930), with full bibl. P. Moncelle in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1809–15, s.v. 'Grégoire XIII'; B. Roberg in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 155–8, s.v. 'Gregor XIII.', with bibl. See also bibl. to GREGORIAN CALENDAR.

Gregory XVI (1765–1846), Pope from 1831. Bartolomeo Cappellari entered the *Camaldolese monastery of San Michele di Murano in 1783. In 1799 he published Il trionfo della Santa Sede, in which he treated of the sovereignty of the Pope and developed the doctrine of Papal Infallibility. He was made Abbot of San Gregorio in 1805 and Procurator-General of his order in 1807, but had to leave Rome in the following year, owing to the Napoleonic suppression of the religious orders. He returned in 1814, was created Cardinal and Prefect of the *Propaganda in 1826, and elected Pope in 1831 by the party of the Zelanti after a conclave lasting over 50 days. Soon after, revolution broke out in the Papal states and was quelled only by the intervention of Austria, a fact which caused the five great powers—Austria, Russia, England, France, and Prussia—to demand reforms in their administration. As these were only partly carried out, the revolt began again, and in 1832 Austrian troops were recalled, whereupon the French occupied Ancona and did not withdraw till 1838. But the troubles continued, and on Gregory's death, in 1846, dissatisfaction was rife and the finances of the Holy See in disorder, owing to the heavy expenditure involved by the upkeep of a strong military force. Gregory's relations with the foreign powers remained strained during the greater part of his reign. He condemned Liberalism in the person of F. R. de *Lamennais (encyclical Singulari nos, 1834) and also the semi-rationalist theology of G. *Hermes (brief Dum acerbissimas, 1835). Despite the political difficulties in which he was involved, Gregory XVI did much for the missions, erecting many new bishoprics and vicariates and encouraging the formation of a native clergy. His apostolic constitution In supremo (1839) denounced slavery and the slave-trade. He also founded the Etruscan and Egyptian museums at the Vatican and the Christian museum at the *Lateran.

Acta Gregorii Papae XVI, ed. A. M. Bernasconi (Rome, 1901–4) (defective); for the first five years of his pontificate, cf. A. Barberi (ed.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, 19–20 (Rome, 1857–8). A. Bartoli and others, Gregorio XVI: Miscellanea Commemorativa (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 13–14; Rome, 1948). [N. P. S.] *Wiseman, Recollections of the Last Four Popes and of Rome in their Times (1858), pt. 4 (pp. 415–532). D. Demarco, Il tramonto dello Stato pontificio: Il papato di Gregorio XVI (Turin, 1949; repr. Naples [1992]). J. Leflon, 'La Crise révolutionnaire 1789–1846', in Fliche and Martin, 20 (1949), pp. 426–71. A. Simon in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 783–8; R. Aubert in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1445–52, s.v. 'Grégoire XVI', both with bibl.

Gregory, St (late 6th cent.), Bp. of Agrigentum (Girgenti) in Sicily. Born near Agrigentum, he made a pilgrimage to Palestine, where he was ordained deacon by the Patriarch of *Jerusalem. In Rome he was consecrated Bp. of Agrigentum and appears to have been the victim of a plot against his character. *Gregory the Great addressed several letters to him. He had either died or been deposed by 594. There is a long Greek Life of him by Leontius, apparently prior of the monastery of St Sabas in Rome (d. 688), which was revised by *Simeon Metaphrastes. A Greek commentary on Ecclesiastes was long attributed to him, but recently some scholars have maintained that this was the work of a different Gregory of Agrigentum, a contemporary of the Emp. Justinian II (reigned 685–711), who is venerated in the E. Church, where his feast is observed on 23 or 24 Nov.; it was prob. this Gregory of Agrigentum whose commemoration C. *Baronius introduced into the *Roman Martyrology on 23 Nov. It is possible that the Commentary may be considerably later still.

The Commentary on Eccles. was first pub. by S. A. Morcelli (Venice, 1791), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 98. 741–1182. The Life by Leontius ibid. 549–716. Simeon Metaphrastes' Life ibid. 116. 189–270. Crit. edn. of the Life by Leontius, with Germ. tr. and comm., by A. Berger (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, 60 [1995]). C. Mercurelli, Agrigento paleocristiana: Memorie storiche e monumentali (Atti della Pont. Accad. Romana di Archeologia. Serie III. Memorie, 8. 1; 1948), passim. I. Croce, 'Per la cronologia della vita di S. Gregorio Agrigentino', Bollettino della Badia Greca di Grottaferrata, NS 4 (1950), pp. 189–207; 5 (1951), pp. 77–91. S. Gennaro, 'Influssi di scrittori greci nel "Commento all'Ecclesiaste" di Gregorio di Agrigento', Miscellanea di Studi di Letteratura Cristiana Antica, 3 (1951), pp. 162–84; further art. by G. Mannelli, ibid., pp. 185–94. G. H. Ettlinger, SJ, 'The Form and Method of the Commentary on Ecclesiastes by Gregory of Agrigentum', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 18 (pt. 1; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1985), pp. 317–20. CPG 3 (1979), p. 493 (no. 7950). A. Amore in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (Rome, 1966), cols. 169–73; R. Aubert in DHGE 21 (1986), cols. 1464–7, s.v. 'Grégoire (27)', both s.v., with extensive bibl.

Gregory Dialogos, St. The title commonly given to St *Gregory the Great in the MSS and editions of the Greek 'Liturgy of the *Presanctified' which baselessly presuppose that he was its author.

Gregory of Elvira, St (d. after 392), Bp. of Elvira ('Illiberis'), near Granada. One of the most intransigent opponents of *Arianism, he supported the refusal of *Lucifer of Cagliari to pardon those who 'Arianized' at the Council of Ariminum (359), and after Lucifer's death became the leader of the 'Luciferians'. Acc. to St *Jerome (De vir. ill. 105), Gregory was the author of various writings, but these remained unknown until the 20th cent. Attributions by G. *Morin and A. *Wilmart have been confirmed by the discovery of MSS in Spanish libraries due to A. C. Vega; Gregory is revealed as an important theologian whose works are generally agreed to include the Tractatus de libris sanctarum scripturarum (published in 1900 as the '*Tractatus Origenis'), De Arca Noe, In Cantica Canticorum (Homilies on the Song of Songs), which all display a lively use of *allegory, and De Fide, a doctrinal work refuting Arianism.

Modern edns. of his works by A. C. Vega, OSA, De la Santa Iglesia Apostólica de Eliberri (Granada) (España Sagrada, 55–56; 1957), 1 and 2, pp. 1–116, and by V. Bulhart and J. Fraipont (CCLS 69, 1967, pp. 1–247, with 'Dubia et Spuria', pp. 251–83). De Fide also ed., with Ital. tr. and comm., by M. Simonetti (Corona Patrum, 3; Turin, 1975), and Epithalamium sive Explanatio in Canticis Canticorum, ed., with comm., by E. Schulz-Flügel (Vetus Latina. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 26; 1994). A. Marazuela, 'El Salterio de Gregorio de Elvira y la Vetus Latina Hispana', Biblica, 40 (1959), pp. 135–59. F. J. Buckley, SJ, Christ and the Church according to Gregory of Elvira (Rome, 1964). M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 84–9.

Gregory the Illuminator, St (*c.*240–332), the 'Apostle of *Armenia'. He appears to have been of royal descent and to have been brought up as a Christian while an exile in Cappadocia. After returning to Armenia, he eventually (*c.*280) succeeded in converting the King, Tiridates (*c.*238–314), to the Christian faith, which forthwith became the official religion of the country. He was consecrated Bishop (*Catholicos) by the Metropolitan of Caesarea in Cappadocia and the episcopate remained for some generations in his family. His son, Aristakes, whom Gregory had consecrated to succeed him, attended the Council of *Nicaea (325). The homilies and epistles ascribed to him are probably not genuine. The principal sources are a 'Life', which survives only in Greek and Arabic translations, and *Agathangelos' 'History of the Armenians', covering much the same material; the precise relationship between these is not clear. Feast day, 30 Sept.; in the American BCP (1979), 23 Mar.

G. Garitte, Documents pour l'étude du livre d'Agathange (ST 127; 1946), esp. ch. 10; id., 'La Vie grecque inédite de saint Grégoire d'Arménie (MS 4 d'Ochrida)', Anal. Boll. 83 (1965), pp. 233–90. H. Gelzer, 'Die Anfänge der armenischen Kirche', Ber. (Sächs.), 47 (1895), pp. 109–74. P. Ananian, 'La data e le circostanze della consacrazione di S. Gregorio Illuminatore', Le Muséon, 74 (1961), pp. 43–73, 317–60. P. Peeters, SJ, 'S. Grégoire l'Illuminateur dans le calendrier lapidaire de Naples', Anal. Boll. 60 (1942), pp. 91–130. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 182–5. P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (Rome, 1966), cols. 180–90, s.v. 'Gregorio Illuminatore', with bibl. See also bibl. to ARMENIA and AGATHANGELOS.

Gregory of Nazianzus, St (329/30–389/90), 'the Theologian', one of the '*Cappadocian Fathers'. He was the son of the Bp. of Nazianzus in Cappadocia (also 'Gregory') and studied at the university of Athens, where he was a contemporary of St *Basil. Soon afterwards he adopted the monastic life. Under pressure and against his will he was ordained priest (?*c.*362), and *c.*372 was consecrated to the see of Sasima, a small village in Cappadocia (where, however, he never resided). Until his father's death in 374 he remained at Nazianzus to help his father as suffragan, and soon afterwards retired for some years to Seleucia in Isauria. In 379 he was summoned to Constantinople, where his eloquent preaching in the Church of the Anastasis was a great influence in restoring the *Nicene faith and leading to its final establishment at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. During the Council he was appointed Bp. of Constantinople, but he resigned the see before the end of the year, retiring first to Nazianzus and later to his own estate, where he died.

His more important writings include his 'Five Theological Orations', which date from his Constantinopolitan period and contain an elaborate treatment of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit; the '*Philocalia', a selection from the writings of *Origen which he compiled in conjunction with St Basil; several important letters against *Apollinarianism; and many poems. Feast day in the E., 25 Jan.; in the W., 2 Jan. (with St Basil) (formerly 9 May, as in the American BCP, 1979).

Early edns. of his Works were pub. at Basle (1550) and Paris (1609 and 1630). Much improved *Maurist edn. by C. Clémencet, OSB, and A. B. Caillau (Paris, vol. 1, 1778; vol. 2, 1840); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 35–8. Crit. edns. of Five Theological Orations by A. J. Mason (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1899), of his letters by P. Gallay (with Fr. tr., 2 vols., Collection des Universités de France, 1964–7, and text alone, GCS, 1969), of his theological letters (101–2 and 202) not incl. in the above, with Fr. tr., by id. (SC 208; 1974); and of Orations, with Fr. tr.: 1–3 by J. Bernardi (SC 247; 1978); 4–5 by id. (ibid. 309; 1983); 6–12 by M.-A. Calvet-Sebasti (ibid. 405; 1995); 20–3 by J. Mossay and G. Lafontaine (ibid. 270; 1980); 24–6 by idd. (ibid. 284; 1981); 27–31 by P. Gallay and M. Jourjon (ibid. 250; 1978); 32–7 by C. Moreschini and P. Gallay (ibid. 318; 1985); 38–41 by idd. (ibid. 358; 1990); 42–3 by J. Bernardi (ibid. 384; 1992). The nine Orations hastily tr. by *Rufinus into Lat. (nos. 2, 6, 16, 17, 26, 27, 38, 39, 41), ed. by A. Engelbrecht (CSEL 46; 1910). Eng. tr. of Select Orations and Letters, with introd., by C. G. Browne and J. E. Swallow in NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 7 (1894), pp. 185–498. Eng. tr. of the Five Theological Orations in F. W. Norris, cited below. The main sources for his Life are his own writings, esp. his poem 'De vita sua' (PG 37. 1029–1166; also ed., with Ger. tr., by C. Jungck, Heidelberg, 1974). Eng. tr. (with two other carmina de se ipso) by D. M. Meehan, OSB (Fathers of the Church, 75; Washington, DC, 1987). Biog. of ample dimensions by a 7th-cent. presbyter named Gregory (PG 35. 243–304). Modern Lives by C. Clémencet (PG 35. 147–242), C. Ullmann (Darmstadt, 1825; 2nd edn., Gotha, 1867; Eng. tr., 1851), and P. Gallay (Lyons, 1943). M. Pellegrino, La poesia di S. Gregorio Nazianzeno (1932). P. Gallay, Langue et style de S. Grégoire de Nazianze dans sa correspondance (1943). J. Plagnieux, Saint Grégoire de Nazianze théologien (Strasbourg thesis; Paris, 1952). M.-M. Hauser-Meury, Prosopographie zu den Schriften Gregors von Nazianz (Theophaneia, 13; 1960). J. Mossay, La Mort et l'au-delà dans saint Grégoire de Nazianze (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 4th ser. 34; 1966). R. R. Ruether, Gregory of Nazianzus: Rhetor and Philosopher (Oxford, 1969). T. Špidlík, SJ, Grégoire de Nazianze: Introduction à l'étude de sa doc- trine spirituelle (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 189; 1971). D. F. Winslow, The Dynamics of Salvation: A Study in Gregory of Nazianzus (Patristic Monograph Series, 7; Philadelphia, 1979). Forschungen zu Gregor von Nazianz, ed. J. Mossay and others (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, NF, 2. Reihe, 1981 ff.). B. Coulie, Les Richesses dans l'Œuvre de Saint Grégoire de Nazianze (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, 32; 1985). F. W. Norris, Faith Gives Fullness to Reasoning (Supplements to VC, 13; Leiden, 1991), with Eng. tr. of the Five Theological Orations by L. Wickham and F. Williams. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 179–209 (nos. 3010–125). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 162–88; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 298–303 and 609 f. J. Rousse, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 932–71, s.v. 'Grégoire (14) de Nazianze'; J. T. Cummings in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 791–4; B. Wyss in RAC 12 (1983), cols. 793–863, s.v. 'Gregor II (Gregor von Nazianz)'.

Gregory of Nyssa, St (*c.*330–*c.*395), Bp. of Nyssa, *Cappadocian Father. He was a younger brother of St *Basil. Though early destined for an ecclesiastical career he temporarily became a rhetorician, but returned to his first vocation and entered a monastery founded by his brother. He was consecrated Bp. of Nyssa, *c.*371. A supporter of the faith of *Nicaea, he was deposed by the *Arians in 376 and remained in exile until the death of the Emp. Valens in 378, when he regained his see. In 379 he attended the Council of Antioch, and in the next year he was elected Bp. of Sebaste, but protested and was soon replaced by his brother Peter. After the Council of *Constantinople in 381, the Emp. *Theodosius I charged him to promote orthodoxy in the civil diocese of Pontus. In his later life he was much in demand as a preacher. In 394 he took part in the Council of Constantinople convoked by the Patr. *Nectarius; he seems to have died soon afterwards.

St Gregory of Nyssa was a thinker and theologian of originality and learning, acquainted esp. with *Platonist speculation, as well as an outstanding exegete, orator, and ascetical author. His principal theological works are polemical treatises against *Eunomius, *Apollinarius, and the *Tritheistic teaching ascribed to a certain Ablabius. In his 'Catechetical Oration' he expounded the doctrines of the Trinity, Incarnation, and Redemption, and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Eucharist for those whose duty it was to instruct the catechumens. His exegetical works, which are influenced by *Origen and deal esp. with the mystical sense of Scripture, include a 'Life of Moses', 'Of the Pythonissa', and homilies on Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Beatitudes. Among his ascetical works, his treatise 'On Virginity' links a Platonizing account of the Christian vocation to an Origenist understanding of the soul as the bride of Christ. De Instituto Christiano was almost certainly influenced by the Great Letter of *Macarius/Simeon, with its *Messalian undertones. He also wrote an attractive Life of his sister Macrina. Many of his sermons, funeral orations, and letters have also survived.

He was an ardent defender of the Nicene dogma of the Trinity, and distinguished carefully between the generation of the Son and the procession of the Holy Spirit. The Second Person of the Trinity was incarnate in the womb of Mary, who therefore is truly θεοτόκος, for Christ is one Person in two natures. In his eschatology he is influenced by Origen, with whom he holds that ultimately both the souls in hell and the devils will return to God. In his account of the Atonement he employs, prob. for the first time, the simile of the fish-hook by which the devil was baited. Feast day in the E., 10 Jan.; in the W., 9 Mar.

Works, ed. F. *Ducaeus, SJ, and J. Gretser, SJ (2 vols., Paris, 1615; rev. edn., 3 vols., ibid., 1638), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 44–6. The text of this edn. remains unsatisfactory. Crit. text begun by W. Jaeger (Berlin, 1921–5) and cont. by W. Jaeger and H. Langerbeck (Leiden, 1960 ff.): vols. 1–2: Contra Eunomium, ed. W. Jaeger (1921; 2nd edn., 1960); 3: Opera Dogmatica Minora, part 1, ed. F. Mueller (1958); part 2, ed. J. K. Downing and others (1987); part 4, ed. E. Mühlenberg (1996); 5: In Inscriptiones Psalmorum, In Sextum Psalmum, In Ecclesiasten Homiliae, ed. J. McDonough, SJ, and P. Alexander (1962); 6: In Canticum Canticorum, ed. H. Langerbeck (1960); 7, part 1: De Vita Moysis, ed. H. Musurillo (1964); part 2: De Oratione Dominica, De Beatitudinibus, ed. J. F. Callahan (1992); 8, part 1: Opera Ascetica, ed. W. Jaeger and others (1952); 8, part 2: Epistulae, ed. G. Pasquali (1925; 2nd edn., 1959); 9, part 1, and 10, part 2: Sermones, ed. G. Heil and others (1967–90). Separate crit. edns. of De Anima et Resurrectione by J. G. Krabinger (Leipzig, 1837), De Oratione Dominica by id. (Landshut, 1840); Apologia in Hexaemeron, etc., by G. H. *Forbes (2 pts., Burntisland, 1855–61), Catechetical Oration by J. H. Srawley (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1903), De Pauperibus Amandis Orationes duo by A. van Heck (Leiden, 1964), De Virginitate by M. Aubineau (SC 119; 1966), Encomium in Sanctum Stephanum Protomartyrem by O. Lendle (Leiden, 1968), Vita Macrinae by P. Maraval (SC 178; 1971) and Letters by id. (ibid. 363; 1990). W. Jaeger, Two Rediscovered Works of Ancient Christian Literature: Gregory of Nyssa and Macarius (Leiden, 1954); on the relationship of the two works, cf. R. Staats, Gregor von Nyssa und die Messalianer (Patristische Texte und Studien, 8; 1968). Syr. version of Gregory's Commentary on Song of Songs ed. C. van den Eynde, OP (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 10; Louvain, 1939). Eng. tr. of 'Select Writings' in NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 5 (1890); of 'Life of St Macrina' ed. W. K. L. Clarke (London, 1916); of 'The Lord's Prayer' and 'The Beatitudes' by H. C. Graef (ACW 18; 1954), and of 'The Life of Moses' by A. J. Malherbe and E. Ferguson (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1978).

F. Diekamp, Die Gotteslehre des hl. Gregor von Nyssa (1896). H. F. Cherniss, 'The Platonism of Gregory of Nyssa', University of California Publications in Classical Philology, 11, for 1930–3 (1934), pp. 1–92. M. Pellegrino, 'Il platonismo di San Gregorio Nisseno nel dialogo "Intorno all'Anima e alla Risurrezione"', Rivista di Filosofia Neo-Scolastica, 30 (1938), pp. 437–74. G. González, La fórmula μία οὐσία τρεῖς ὑποστάσεις en S. Gregorio de Nisa (Analecta Gregoriana, 21; 1939). H. U. von *Balthasar, SJ, Présence et pensée: Essai sur la philosophie religieuse de Grégoire de Nysse (1942). J. *Daniélou, SJ, Platonisme et théologie mystique: Essai sur la doctrine spirituelle de St Grégoire de Nysse (1944); id., L'Être et le temps chez Grégoire de Nysse (Leiden, 1970). R. Leys, SJ, L'Image de Dieu chez Saint Grégoire de Nysse (Museum Lessianum, 49; 1951). W. Völker, Gregor von Nyssa als Mystiker (Wiesbaden, 1955). W. Jaeger, Gregor von Nyssa's Lehre vom heiligen Geist, ed. H. Dörries (Leiden, 1966). E. Mühlenberg, Die Unendlichkeit Gottes bei Gregor von Nyssa (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 16; 1966). M. Harl (ed.), Écriture et culture philosophique dans la pensée de Grégoire de Nysse: Actes du Colloque de Chevetogne (22–26 septembre 1969) (Leiden, 1971); Acts of subsequent Colloquia pub. ibid., 1976, and then in various places, 1981 ff. R. M. Hübner, Die Einheit des Leibes Christi bei Gregor von Nyssa: Untersuchungen zum Ursprung der 'physischen' Erlösungslehre (Philosophia Patrum, 2; Leiden, 1974). H. R. Drobner and C. Klock (eds.), Studien zu Gregor von Nyssa und der christlichen Spätantike (Supplements to VC, 12; Leiden, 1990). M. Altenburger and F. Mann, Bibliographie zu Gregor von Nyssa (Leiden, 1988). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 209–30 (nos. 3135–226). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 188–220; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 303–8 and 610–12. M. Canévet in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 971–1011, s.v. 'Grégoire (16) de Nysse'; H. Dörrie in RAC 12 (1983), cols. 863–95, s.v. 'Gregor III (Gregor von Nyssa)'.

Gregory Palamas, St (*c.*1296–1359), Greek theologian and chief exponent of *Hesychasm. He was born probably at *Constantinople of a noble Anatolian family. Attracted from his youth to the monastic ideal, he persuaded his brothers and sisters, as well as his widowed mother, to embrace the religious life. Around 1318 he went, with his two brothers, to Mt. *Athos, where he became familiar at first hand with the Hesychast tradition of mystical prayer. The advance of the Turks forced him to flee to *Thessalonica, where he was ordained priest in 1326; subsequently he retired as a hermit to a mountain near Beroea, whence he returned to Athos in 1331. In 1337 he became involved in controversy with Barlaam, a Greek monk from Calabria. Influenced by a one-sided interpretation of the writings of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, Barlaam stated the doctrine of God's unknowability in an extreme form. When criticized by Gregory, he replied with a vigorous attack on the contemplative practices of the Hesychasts, and in answer Gregory composed his most important work, the Triads in defence of the Holy Hesychasts (*c.*1338). Gregory's teaching was approved by his fellow monks, who met in synod on Mt. Athos during 1340–1 and put out a statement known as the 'Hagioritic Tome' (Ἁγιορειτικὸς Τόμος), supporting his views. A Council held at Constantinople in 1341 likewise took Palamas' side in the dispute and condemned Barlaam. Although in 1344 Palamas' opponents secured his conviction for heresy and his excommunication, the orthodoxy of his doctrines was reaffirmed by two further Councils at Constantinople in 1347 and 1351. Between these two Councils, Palamas produced a succinct exposition of his theology, the One Hundred and Fifty Chapters. In 1347 he was consecrated Abp. of Thessalonica, but political conditions made it impossible for him to take possession of his see until 1350. During a journey to Constantinople in 1354, he was captured by the Turks and remained in captivity for more than a year. He was canonized in 1368.

In his theological teaching Palamas stressed the biblical notion of man as a single and united whole, body and soul together; and in virtue of this he argued that the physical exercises used by the Hesychasts in prayer, as well as their claim to see the Divine Light with their bodily eyes, could be defended as legitimate. He distinguished between the essence and the energies of God: God's essence remains unknowable, but His uncreated energies—which are God Himself—permeate all things and can be directly experienced by man in the form of deifying grace. Like St *Simeon the New Theologian, Palamas laid great stress in his spiritual teaching upon the vision of Divine Light. Feast day in E., 14 Nov., and also the second Sunday in Lent.

The bulk of his work is still in MS. Various writings, in an inferior text, are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 150. 771–1372, and 151. 9–678. Crit. edn. of his collected works by P. C. Chrestou (Thessalonica, 1962 ff.). The Triads (Περὶ τῶν ἱερῶς ἡσυχαζόντων) ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Meyendorff, Défense des saints hésychastes (SSL 30–1; 1959); partial Eng. tr. by [D. J.] N. Gendle (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1983). The One Hundred and Fifty Chapters, ed., with Eng. tr., by R. E. Sinkewicz, CSB (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 83; Toronto [1988]). Substantial passages of his works were included in the Philocalia* (q.v.); Eng. tr. by G. E. H. Palmer and others, 4 (1955), pp. 287–425. J. Meyendorff, Introduction à l'étude de Grégoire Palamas (Patristica Sorbonensia, 3 [1959]; abbreviated Eng. tr., 1964); id., St Grégoire Palamas et la mystique orthodoxe (Maîtres Spirituels [1959]; Eng. tr., New York, 1974); J. Lison, L'Esprit répandu: La pneumatologie de Grégoire Palamas (1994). G. Podskalsky, Theologie und Philosophie in Byzanz (Byzantinisches Archiv, 15; 1977), esp. pp. 150–7. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1735–76; J. Meyendorff in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 81–107, s.v. 'Palamas Grégoire'.

Gregory of Rimini (d. 1358), 'Doctor authenticus', medieval philosopher. He joined the *Augustinian Hermits, studied in *Paris from 1323 to 1329, and subsequently taught at *Bologna, Padua, and Perugia. In 1341 he returned to Paris, where he lectured on the Sentences and in 1345 was made doctor of the *Sorbonne by *Clement VI. Elected *General of his order in 1357, he began at once to introduce reforms, but his work was cut short by his death in the following year. His philosophical doctrines carried further the *Nominalist teaching of *William of Ockham. His theology was thoroughly Augustinian. He taught that works done without grace are sinful and that unbaptized infants incur eternal damnation, an opinion which, though also held by St Augustine, earned him the title 'tortor infantium'. He also wrote a treatise on usury. Persistent attempts have been made to trace his influence on M. *Luther, perhaps not entirely convincingly.

His work on the Sentences was pub. Paris, 1482, and Venice, 1522; crit. edn. by A. D. Trapp, OSA, and others (Spätmittelalter und Reformation, Texte und Untersuchungen, 6–12; 1979–87); his De usuris was pub. Milan, 1508, and Rimini, 1622. J. Würsdörfer, Erkennen und Wissen nach Gregor von Rimini: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Erkenntnistheorie des Nominalismus (BGPM 20, Heft 1; 1917); M. Schüler, Prädestination, Sünde und Freiheit bei Gregor von Rimini (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, 3; 1934); G. [A.] Leff, Gregory of Rimini (Manchester, 1961); W. Eckermann, OSA, Wort und Wirklichkeit: Das Sprachverständnis in der Theologie Gregors von Rimini und sein Weiterwirken in der Augustinerschule (Cassiciacum, 33; Würzburg, 1978); H. A. Oberman (ed.), Gregor von Rimini: Werk und Wirkung bis zur Reformation (Spätmittelalter und Reformation, Texte und Untersuchungen, 20; 1981). [A.] D. Trapp, OSA, in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 181–4, s.v.; R. Aubert in DHGE 22 (1988), cols. 28–31, s.v. 'Grégoire (107) de Rimini'.

Gregory Thaumaturgus, St (*c.*213–*c.*270), Greek Church Father. He came from a prosperous pagan family of Neocaesarea in Pontus, and studied law and rhetoric. About 233 he went to *Caesarea in Palestine, where he became a disciple of *Origen, who converted him to the Christian faith and with whom he remained for five, or perhaps eight, years. Soon after his return to his native city he was made its bishop, and during his episcopate converted its pagan population. The wealth of legends and miracles which were attributed to him in later times and to which he owes his surname of Thaumaturgus or wonder-worker, testify to his uncommon strength of character as well as to his popularity. In 253–4 he witnessed the Goths devastating Pontus, as described in his so-called 'Canonical Letter'. In 264–5 he took part in the first Synod of *Antioch against *Paul of Samosata; he also fought *Sabellianism and *Tritheism. Acc. to *Suidas he died in the reign of the Emp. Aurelian (270–5).

St Gregory was a practical Churchman rather than a speculative theologian. He based his teaching on Origen, but his terminology is still undeveloped and often equivocal. His name has been affixed to a number of treatises, only a few of which are authentic. His first extant work is his panegyric on Origen, Εἰς Ὠριγένην . . . Προσφωνητικός, delivered when he took leave of his master. It contains much autobiographical material as well as an account of Origen's teaching methods. His Ἔκθεσις τῆς Πίστεως is a Trinitarian exposition of belief, the basis of his instructions to catechumens. Acc. to St *Gregory of Nyssa, whose grandmother St *Macrina had been instructed by Gregory Thaumaturgus, it was given to him in a vision by St *John the Apostle, at the command of the BVM, the first known instance of a record of a Marian apparition. His Ἐπιστολὴ Κανονική contains much information on the penitential discipline of the early Church. His Μετάφρασις εἰς τὸν Ἐκκλησιαστήν is a paraphrase of Ecclesiastes, and his letter to Theopompus, extant only in a Syriac translation, is a philosophical colloquy on the impassibility of God. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Life, by Gregory of Nyssa, in J. P. Migne, PG 46. 893–958. There also exist Syr., Armen., and Lat. Lives, all of little value. Works (incl. several dubia and spuria) pub. by G. Voss (Mainz, 1604) and others; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 963–1232. Crit. text of Gregory's address to Origen ed. P. Koetschau (Sammlung ausgewählter Quellenschriften, 9; 1894), repr., with Fr. tr., introd. and notes by H. Crouzel, SJ (SC 148; 1969). Eng. tr. of his 'Canonical Letter' in P. [J.] Heather and J. [F.] Matthews, The Goths in the Fourth Century (Translated Texts for Historians, 11; Liverpool, 1991), pp. 5–11. V. Ryssel, Gregorius Thaumaturgus: Sein Leben und seine Schriften (1880). M. Jugie, AA, 'Les Homélies mariales attribuées à S. Grégoire le Thaumaturge', Anal. Boll. 43 (1925), pp. 86–95. On his Creed, cf. L. Froidevaux, 'Le Symbole de Saint Grégoire le Thaumaturge', Rech. S.R. 19 (1929), pp. 193–247. A. Poncelet, SJ, 'La Vie latine de Saint Grégoire le Thaumaturge', ibid. 1 (1910), pp. 132–60. W. Telfer, 'The Cultus of St Gregory Thaumaturgus', HTR 29 (1936), pp. 225–344. R. van Dam, 'Hagiography and History: The Life of Gregory Thaumaturgus', Classical Antiquity, 1 (1982), pp. 272–308. R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 516–42. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 238–47 (nos. 1763–94). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 315–32; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 211 f. and 591. H. Crouzel in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1014–20, s.v. 'Grégoire (19), le Thaumaturge'; id. in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 797 f., s.v.; id. and H. Brakmann in RAC 12 (1983), cols. 779–93, s.v. 'Gregor I (Gregor der Wundertäter)'.

Gregory of Tours, St (538/9–94), Bp. of Tours and historian of the Franks. He came of a Gallo-Roman senatorial family which had already produced several bishops, and was elected Bp. of Tours in 573. Though he had at first to oppose King Chilperic, he readily supported the 'good king', Guntram, against the turbulent aristocracy, thus gaining royal favour for the Church. About 576 he began his Historia Francorum. Book 1 runs quickly from the Creation to 397; Books 2–4, based on valuable sources, relate early Frankish history to 575; and Books 5–9 cover the years 575 to 591 in detail. The important position Gregory filled in Church and State and the access he thus obtained to original documents made him a well-informed historian, without whose work the early history of France could hardly be written. But his History, though honest and vivid, was untidy and unreflective, and his knowledge of events outside France was slight. His chief hagiographical work is his eight Miraculorum Libri: (1) In Gloriam Martyrum, on the miracles of the Lord, the Apostles, and esp. Gallic martyrs; (2) De Virtutibus S. Juliani, on miracles at the tomb of St Julian, put to death at Clermont-Ferrand in 304; (3–6) De Virtutibus S. Martini, on miracles at the tomb of St *Martin; (7) De Vita Patrum, lives of 23 Gallic saints; (8) In Gloriam Confessorum, miracles of (esp. Gallic) saints not martyrs. Here he often displays extreme credulity, so that the work is of altogether less historical value than his Historia Francorum. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Editio princeps of the Historia Francorum, with a few other works (Paris, 1522). Improved edn. of his works by T. *Ruinart, OSB (Paris, 1699), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 71. Crit. edn. by W. Arndt and B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 1 (2 pts., 1884–5), which prints the author's orig. text with all its asperities before its 'revision' to conform it with the Carolingian standards of elegance; the Historia Francorum from this edn. was rev. by Krusch and W. Levison (ibid., 1951); Gregory's Lat. tr. of the 'Passio Septem Dormientium apud Ephesum' was ed. B. Krusch in MGH, loc. cit., 7 (pt. 2; 1920), pp. 757–69. Eng. trs. of Historia Francorum, with introd. and notes, by O. M. Dalton (2 vols., Oxford, 1927; vol. 1, introduction, vol. 2, tr.) and by L. Thorpe (Penguin Classics, 1974); of the De Vita Patrum by E. James (Translated Texts for Historians, Latin Series, 1; Liverpool, 1985); of In Gloriam Martyrum by R. van Dam (ibid. 3; 1988) and of In Gloriam Confessorum by id. (ibid. 4; 1988). Gregorio di Tours, 10 13 Ottobre 1971 (Convegni del Centro di Studi sulla Spiritualità Medievale, 12; Todi, 1977). M. Weidemann, Kulturgeschichte der Merowingerzeit nach den Werken Gregors von Tours (Römisch-Germanisches Zentralmuseum, Forschungsinstitut für Vor- und Frühgeschichte, Monographien 3; 2 vols., Mainz, 1982), esp. 1, pp. 107–264; 2, pp. 157–237. L. Pietri, La Ville de Tours du IV^e au VI^e siècle: naissance d'une cité chrétienne (Collection de l'École française de Rome, 69; 1983), pp. 247–334. J. Verdon, Grégoire de Tours, 'le père de l'Histoire de France' (Le Coteau [1989]). J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, 'The Work of Gregory of Tours in the Light of Modern Research', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 1 (1951), pp. 25–45; rev. in The Long Haired Kings and other Studies in Frankish History (1962), pp. 49–70. W. Goffart, The Narrators of Barbarian History (A.D. 500 800) (Princeton, NJ, 1988), pp. 112–234. L. Pietri in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1020–5, s.v. 'Grégoire (20) de Tours'; B. K. Vollmann in RAC 12 (1983), cols. 895–930, s.v. 'Gregor IV (Gregor von Tours)'; L. Pietri in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 184–8, s.v. 'Gregor von Tours', all with bibl.

Gregory, Robert (1819–1911), Dean of *St Paul's. He came from a Nottingham *Methodist family. Influenced by the *Tractarian Movement, he studied at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and was ordained priest in the C of E in 1844. He was vicar of St Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, from 1853 to 1873, interesting himself esp. in elementary education. In 1868 he was appointed Canon of St Paul's, where he collaborated with H. P. *Liddon and R. W. *Church in making the cathedral a centre of active religious life in London. The introduction of more elaborate ritual and decorations led to considerable hostility against him, esp. after he had been appointed Dean in 1890. He was succeeded as Dean by W. R. *Inge.

W. H. *Hutton (ed.), Robert Gregory, 1819 1911, being the Autobiography of Robert Gregory, D.D., Dean of St Paul's (1912). A. R. Buckland in DNB, 1901–1911, 2 (1912), pp. 163 f.

gremial. Acc. to W. liturgical usage, a cloth spread by the bishop upon his lap when he is seated during the singing of the *Kyries, *Gloria in Excelsis, and *Creed in the Mass, and on certain other occasions, to prevent the soiling of his vestments by his hands. Its use, originally not confined to bishops, first appears in the late 13th cent., though the name is not found until the 15th cent. In 1968 the Congregation of Sacred *Rites decreed that the use of silk gremials should cease; when required for practical purposes, e.g. at *anointings, they should be made of linen.

Braun, LP, pp. 231 f. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 7 (1910), p. 26.

Grey Friars. Friars of the *Franciscan Order (q.v.), so named from the colour of their habit (now generally brown), to distinguish them from the Black Friars (*Dominicans) and White Friars (*Carmelites). By analogy, some Franciscan nuns are called 'Grey Sisters'.

Grey Nuns. A name given to Sisters of Charity in various countries. The best known are the Grey Nuns of Charity in N. America. They were founded by Madame d'Youville (Ven. Marie-Marguerite Dufrost de Lajemmerais) at Montreal in 1737 as a small community of ladies who devoted themselves to the care of the sick. Eight years later they adopted a Rule which was sanctioned by episcopal authority in 1754 and approved by *Leo XIII in 1880. Besides the three religious vows, the Sisters promise to devote their lives to the relief of human suffering. From Montreal the Sisters spread to other parts of N. America, and separate congregations were formed in different cities, one of the most notable being the Grey Nuns of the Cross founded at Ottawa in 1845. Apart from the American Grey Nuns, the name is given to Sisters of Charity in France and in Germany ('Grey Sisters of St Elisabeth').

On the Grey Nuns of Charity in N. America, Sister Thomas Aquinas Keefe, The Congregation of the Grey Nuns, 1737–1910 (Washington, DC, 1942); also Life of Mère d'Youville by A. Ferland-Angers (Montreal, 1945); M. E. Ward in CE 7 (1910), p. 31, s.v.; G. Pettinati, SSP, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 348–52, s.v. 'Carità dell'Ospedale Generale'. On the Grey Nuns of the Cross, V. O'Leary in CE, loc. cit., pp. 31 f., and G. Pettinati, loc. cit., cols. 322 f., s.v. 'Carità, di Ottawa'. On the Grey Sisters of St Elisabeth, J. Schweter, Geschichte der Kongregation der Grauen Schwestern von der heiligen Elisabeth (2 vols., Breslau, 1937); Heimbucher, 2, pp. 481–3, and G. Rocca, SSP, in DIP, loc. cit., cols. 381 f., s.v. 'Carità di Santa Elisabetta'.

Griesbach, Johann Jakob (1745–1812), NT scholar. A pupil of J. S. *Semler, he was professor of the NT at Jena from 1775 until his death. The first critic to make a systematic application of literary analysis to the Gospels, he maintained that St *Mark was the latest of the three Synoptists and based his work on Mt. and Lk. (the 'dependence theory'). This view has been revived in the 20th cent. by W. R. Farmer and others, but it is accepted by only a minority of scholars (see SYNOPTIC PROBLEM). His most valuable work was in the field of *textual criticism. After travels in England and France to work at MSS, he published an edition of the Greek NT in which, for the first time in Germany, the '*Textus Receptus' was abandoned (2 vols., 1775–7), and thereby laid the foundations of all subsequent work on the Greek text. His other works include Symbolae Criticae ad supplendas et corrigendas Variarum NT Lectionum Collectiones (Halle, 2 vols., 1785–93) and Commentarius Criticus in Textum Graecum Novi Testamenti (Jena, 1793–1811).

A collection of his Opuscula Academica was issued by his pupil, J. P. Gabler (Jena, 2 vols., 1824–5). B. Orchard, OSB, and T. R. W. Longstaff (eds.), J. J. Griesbach: Synoptic and Text-Critical Studies 1776–1976 (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 34; 1978), incl. Eng. tr. of an essay in which he defended the 'dependence theory'. C. M. Tuckett, The Revival of the Griesbach Hypothesis (ibid. 44; 1983); S. E. Johnson, The Griesbach Hypothesis and Redaction Criticism (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 41; Atlanta [1991]).

Grignion de Montfort, Louis Marie, St (1673–1716), popular missioner. Educated at the *Jesuit College at Rennes, he devoted himself early to a life of poverty and prayer, and was ordained priest in 1700. From 1701 to 1703 he was chaplain at a hospital at Poitiers, where he founded the 'Daughters of Wisdom', a congregation for nursing the sick and educating poor children. In 1704 he began to realize his true vocation, the giving of missions throughout W. France, where he suffered from persecutions from the *Jansenists, who grudged his influence. About 1712 he founded the 'Company of Mary', a congregation of missionaries. Both his foundations were almost extinct at his death, but they have subsequently revived. His Traité de la vraie dévotion à la Sainte Vierge, after having long been lost, was recovered in 1842 and has exercised a powerful influence on Catholic devotion. He was beatified in 1888, and canonized by *Pius XII on 20 July 1947. Feast day, 28 Apr.

Œuvres complètes, ed. M. Gendrot and others (Paris, 1966). There is an Eng. tr. of his Traité de la vraie dévotion à la Sainte Vierge by F. W. *Faber (London, 1863). There is much documentary material in the report of the inquiries leading up to his canonization, pub. by the Sacra Rituum Congregatio, Sectio Historica, nos. 66 and 67; Rome, 1947. Lives and studies incl. those of P. Grandet (Nantes, 1724), P. Picot de Clorivière, SJ (Paris, Saint-Malo, and Rennes, 1785), J. M. Quérard (4 vols., Rennes, 1887), 'A Secular Priest' ([Dr Cruikshank], Blessed Louis Marie Grignon de Montfort and his Devotion, 2 vols., London, 1892), A. Laveille, Cong. Orat. (Paris, 1907), E. Tisserant (Rome, 1943; incl. text of his Testament), G. Bernoville (Paris, 1946), P. Eyckeler (Maastricht, etc., 1947), and L. Pérouas, SMM (Paris, 1966, and Tours, 1973). P. Eyckeler, Le Testament de S. Louis-Marie Grignion de Montfort: Étude historique (Maastricht, etc., 1953). S. de Fiores, SMM, Itinerario spirituale di S. Luigi Maria di Montfort (1673–1713) nel periodo fino al sacerdozio (5 giugno 1700) (Marian Library Studies, NS 6; Dayton, Oh., 1974). L. Pérouas in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 1073–81, s.v. 'Louis-Marie Grignion de Montfort'.

Grimshaw, William (1708–63), *perpetual curate of Haworth. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1731 and for some years was chaplain at Todmorden, where he emerged from a long spiritual crisis a fervent missionary. Becoming perpetual curate of Haworth, W. Yorks, in 1742, by his devoted zeal and consistency he gained a remarkable influence in his own and the surrounding parishes. He welcomed to his pulpit *Methodists and *Evangelicals, among them J. *Wesley, G. *Whitefield, and H. *Venn, and later himself engaged in itinerant preaching, as well as assisting Wesley in supervising Methodist societies in the N. of England. When troubles arose from incumbents in the parishes where Grimshaw preached uninvited, his evident sincerity led his diocesan, the Abp. of *York (Matthew Hutton, 1747–57), to tolerate his behaviour. Grimshaw was himself a strong *Calvinist, though not intolerant of *Arminians and others with whom he disagreed.

F. Baker, William Grimshaw 1708–1763 (1963). Older Lives by W. Myles (privately pr., Newcastle-upon-Tyne [1806]; 2nd edn., London, 1813), R. Spence Hardy (London, 1860), and G. C. Cragg (ibid., 1947). J. H. Overton in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 254 f.

Grindal, Edmund (?1519–83), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of a Cumberland farmer, he was educated at Cambridge and became a fellow of Pembroke Hall in 1538, and later chaplain to *Edward VI and prebendary of *Westminster. He went into exile under *Mary to Frankfurt, where he sought to reconcile the party of J. *Knox and the defenders of the 1552 BCP. In 1559 he was made Bp. of London and one of the revisers of the BCP, in 1570 Abp. of *York, and in 1575 Abp. of Canterbury. On his refusal to suppress the Puritan 'prophesyings' he was suspended in 1577 from his jurisdictional, but not from his spiritual, functions; his resignation was under negotiation when he died. In theology he sympathized with moderate *Calvinism and even with some Puritan criticism of contemporary episcopacy. See also ELIZABETH I.

J. *Strype, History of the Life and Acts of Edmund Grindal (1710; new edn., 1821). W. Nicholson (ed.), The Remains of Archbishop Grindal (*Parker Society, 1843), with preface by the editor. H. Robinson (ed.), The Zürich Letters (2 vols., Parker Society, 1842–5), passim. P. Collinson, Archbishop Grindal 1519–1583 (1979). M. *Creighton in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 261–4.

Grinfield, Edward William (1785–1864), biblical scholar. Educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1808, and wrote a large number of pamphlets and articles in defence of a rigid theological orthodoxy. He is remembered esp. by the lectureship at Oxford which he founded in 1859 to promote the study of the *Septuagint.

N. D. F. Pearce in DNB 23 (1890), p. 265.

Grocyn, William (?1449–1519), English Renaissance scholar. He was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, and was reader in theology at Magdalen College, 1483–8. He studied Greek and Latin in Florence from 1488 to 1490/1, when he returned to Oxford to give the first public lectures in Greek. His Greek learning was admired by such of his contemporaries as T. *Linacre, W. Latimer, J. *Colet, T. *More, and *Erasmus, the last of whom considered him first among classical scholars in England. For information about his opinions we depend upon a single letter published by Aldus, and upon Erasmus. He supported strongly the Aldine enterprise in publishing a humanistic edition of *Aristotle and of the Scriptures, while contrasting Aristotle and *Plato as dealing respectively with science and with myth. According to Erasmus, in the course of giving public lectures in London on the 'Ecclesiastical Hierarchy' Grocyn came to reject the traditional attribution to *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite. His remarkable library of Greek manuscripts, the best evidence of his interests, became the foundation of that at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. While an earlier tradition held that Grocyn's religious views were more conservative than those of others who had come under similar influences, this inference was based on the slender evidence of his expressed preference for Aristotle over Plato and continued interest in the scholastics, which modern scholars regard as inconclusive.

Memoir by M. Burrows appended to his edn. of Linacre's catalogue of Grocyn's books, pr. in OHS Collectanea, 2 (OHS 16; 1890), pp. 332–80. N. R. Ker in The History of the University of Oxford, 3, ed. J. [K.] McConica (Oxford, 1986), pp. 458 f. BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 827–30.

Groote (or Grote), Geert (1340–84), Gerardus Magnus, founder of the '*Brethren of the Common Life'. A native of Deventer, he was educated at *Paris, where he had a brilliantly successful career. For a time he taught at *Cologne and elsewhere, living (as his means easily allowed) in great luxury and self-indulgence. In 1374 he was converted and began to live a devout and simple life. After three years spent in the monastery of Munnikhuizen, he followed the advice of Jan van *Ruysbroeck and became (1379) missionary preacher in the diocese of Utrecht, though he was never ordained priest. Here his outspoken condemnation of the abuses of the time led his licence to be withdrawn in 1383; but his appeal against the sentence was never answered, as he died soon after. Groote gathered round him a few friends who lived a quasi-monastic life at Deventer and became the nucleus of the Brethren of the Common Life. Some years earlier he had started a community for women on similar lines in the town. His Life was written by *Thomas à Kempis.

Epistolae ed. W. Mulders, SJ (Tekstuitgaven van Ons Geestelijk Erf, 3; Antwerp, 1933). Contra Turrim Traiectensem ed. R. R. Post (The Hague, 1967). Life by Thomas à Kempis pr. among the latter's works (Nuremberg, 1494, fols. xxix–xxxviii); Eng. tr. by J. P. Arthur, The Founders of the New Devotion (1905), pp. 1–78. R. R. Post, De Moderne Devotie: Geert Groote en zijn Stichtingen (Amsterdam, 1940), esp. pp. 9–44; id., The Modern Devotion: Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 51–196. T. P. van Zijl, Gerard Groote Ascetic and Reformer 1340–1384 (Catholic University of America Studies in Mediaeval History, 18; 1963). G. Epiney-Burgard, Gérard Grote (1360 1384) et les débuts de la dévotion moderne (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 54; Wiesbaden, 1970), with bibl.; J. Andriessen and others (eds.), 'Geert Grote & Moderne Devotie', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 59 (1985), pp. 112–505; also issued separately, Nijmegen, 1985. J. Tiecke, OCOS, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 265–74, s.v. 'Gérard (9) Groote'; C. C. de Bruin in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 3 (1981), cols. 263–72, s.v. See also bibl. to BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE, DEVOTIO MODERNA, IMITATION OF CHRIST, and WINDESHEIM.

Gropper, Johann (1503–59), theologian. He studied jurisprudence and theology at *Cologne University, where he became known as 'Os cleri Coloniensis', and in 1532 he was appointed a Canon of Xanten. After attending a synod at Cologne (1536), called by the Abp. *Hermann to combat the teaching of the Reformers, he drew up an Enchiridion in which he included an exposition of the *Creed, the *Seven Sacraments, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Decalogue, and put forward an early form of the doctrine of '*double justice'. This, though later (1596) placed on the *Index, was well received by the theologians of Cologne, and by Cardinals G. *Contarini, R. *Pole, and G. *Morone, who regarded it as a suitable basis for a reconciliation between the Protestants and Rome. In the cause of reunion Gropper negotiated with M. *Bucer in 1540, but, though some agreement was reached on grace and justification, none was attempted on authority and the Eucharist. He was one of the Catholic participants also at the Conference of *Ratisbon in 1541. When the Abp. of Cologne himself became a Protestant, Gropper secured his deposition, and restored the Catholic religion, for which services he was made Provost of Bonn in 1547, and in 1556 *Paul IV offered him a cardinal's hat.

Briefwechsel, ed. R. Braunisch (Corpus Catholicorum, 32 etc.; 1977 ff.). Lives by W. van Gulik (Freiburg i.B., 1906) and W. Lipgens (Münster i.W., 1951; with portrait and bibl.). H. Lutz, 'Reformatio Germaniae. Drei Denkschriften Johannes Groppers (1546, 1558)', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 37 (1957), pp. 222–310, incl. text. R. Braunisch, Die Theologie der Rechtfertigung im 'Enchiridion' (1538) des Johannes Gropper (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 109; Münster, 1974); J. Meier, Der priesterliche Dienst nach Johannes Gropper (ibid. 113; 1977), with bibl. F. Zoepff in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1054–6; R. Braunisch in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 266–70, both with bibl.

Grosseteste, Robert (*c.*1170–1253), Bp. of *Lincoln. The child of a poor family in Suffolk, he seems to have been educated in Lincoln, perhaps by the charity of its leading citizen, Adam of Wigford. It has been generally said that he went to the schools of *Oxford and *Paris, but there is no early evidence for this. He was briefly a member of the household of St *Hugh, Bp. of Lincoln, in about 1191–2, and of that of William de Vere, Bp. of *Hereford, from *c.*1195 to 1198, but little else is certainly known of his early life. On 25 Apr. 1225 he received the benefice of Abbotsley. At about this date he is known to have been lecturing on theology in Oxford, and notes of his lectures and sermons of the period 1225–30 have survived. They are among the earliest theological records of the Oxford schools, and they brought him widespread recognition. At some point during these years the Masters of the University seem to have elected him as their Chancellor without the necessary approval of the Bp. of Lincoln; the whole incident is shrouded in obscurity. In 1229 he became archdeacon of Leicester, but he resigned in 1231, having already (*c.*1230) given up his position as university lecturer to become the first lector to the recently established community of *Franciscans outside the city walls of Oxford. These changes, together with his resignation of other emoluments, may have been the result of a spiritual conversion following the visit of Jordan of Saxony, the *Dominican Master General, to Oxford in 1229–30. Certainly after this date he and Jordan were close friends, and Grosseteste began his association with the work of both Orders of friars, which became even more important after his election as Bp. of Lincoln in 1235. Throughout his life he showed unbounding physical and intellectual energy.

Very broadly his intellectual interests can be traced chronologically as follows. Until 1225, he was mainly occupied with scientific studies. His writings during this period included a treatise on Computus (perhaps in three recensions which show increasing knowledge of recent translations from Arabic), as well as an outline of general astronomy, and short but pregnant works on Comets and Rainbows. But his most important and influential scientific work was a Commentary (the first that is known in the W.) on *Aristotle's Posterior Analytics.

After these early scientific works, he produced in Oxford from *c.*1225 to 1235 the main series of his theological works, notably the Hexaemeron, De Decem Mandatis, De Cessatione Legalium, and his commentaries on the Psalms and on Galatians, as well as several of his surviving sermons. During this period he also began to learn Greek, and he acquired a competence scarcely paralleled by any W. scholar before his time. As bishop after 1235, his increased resources made it possible for him to plan and carry through some very large enterprises of translation from Greek into Latin. These included the works of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and the commentaries on them; also the Ethics of Aristotle with commentaries. In addition, he translated several parts of the works of St *John of Damascus, St *Basil, the newly discovered *Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Greek lexicon ascribed to '*Suidas'. He was able to carry out this vast programme of work by employing a group of scholars, supporting several of them by giving them benefices. In addition to these works, the problem of Light continued to exercise his mind for many years, and finally found expression in his De Luce.

Besides being responsible for this scholarly work, Grosseteste showed conspicuous energy and dedication in his work as a bishop. He was indefatigable in carrying out visitations of his diocese, organizing preaching by members of the Franciscan and Dominican Orders, drawing up regulations for both clergy and laity, and actively promoting political action against the intrusions of royal and finally—and most notoriously—of Papal officials into parochial benefices. In pursuit of this policy of episcopal independence he made his famous appeal to Pope *Innocent IV at Lyons in 1250. He went to the Papal court with a carefully prepared denunciation of the abuses of power in pursuit of family and personal gain by Papal officials, by the curia, and by the Pope himself. While giving an account of these abuses, their causes and development, he also made proposals for reform. These were ignored, and Grosseteste was perhaps lucky to escape the excommunication which Innocent was said to have been persuaded with difficulty to forgo. Whether he was officially suspended during his last years is not clear, but he died with a deep sense of failure and foreboding for the future, prob. on 8 Oct. 1253.

His death was followed by accounts of miracles at his tomb and elsewhere, and there were various unsuccessful attempts to secure his canonization in the century after his death. He left his books and literary remains to the Oxford Franciscans; this ensured their survival and growing influence in the 14th cent., culminating in the discovery by J. *Wycliffe that on several points (e.g. on the importance of pastoral work and of preaching, his sympathy with the Greek Church, and his criticism of the Papal curia), he had been anticipated by Grosseteste. He became a cherished name among the *Lollards and figures in J. *Foxe's Book of Martyrs. After the 16th cent. his reputation was eclipsed until it was revived by constitutional historians (esp. W. *Stubbs) in the 19th cent., and more recently by historians of science and theology who have brought to light the wide extent of Grosseteste's writings and the originality of his ideas in both fields. Feast day in the American BCP (1979), 9 Oct.

The principal edns. of his scientific and philosophical works are: L. Baur, Die philosophischen Werke des Robert Grosseteste (BCPM 9; 1912), which is valuable for the smaller treatises, but is largely occupied by a Summa falsely attributed to Grosseteste; Commentarius in Posteriorum Analyticorum Libros, ed. P. Rossi (Florence, 1981); Commentarius in VIII Libros Physicorum Aristotelis, ed. R. C. Dales (Boulder, Colo., 1963); and Computus, in R.

Steele (ed.), Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi, 6 (Oxford, 1926), pp. 212–67; of his theological works: Hexaemeron, ed. R. C. Dales and S. Gieben, OFM Cap. (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevii, 6; London, 1982); De Cessatione Legalium, ed. R. C. Dales and E. B. King (ibid. 7; 1986); De Decem Mandatis, ed. idd. (ibid. 10; 1987); Comm. on Gal., frags. of Glosses on Pauline Epp., and Tabula, ed. J. McEvoy and others (CCCM 130; 1995); selected sermons and dicta, ed. E. Brown, Appendix ad Fasciculum rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum ab Orthuino Gratio, 2 (London, 1690), pp. 244–307; Le Chateau d'Amour, ed. J. Murray (Paris, 1918); and S. Gieben, OFM Cap., 'Robert Grosseteste on Preaching, Collectanea Franciscana, 37 (1967), pp. 100–41, incl. text of sermon. His trs. of the works of Dionysius are contained in Dionysiaca, ed. P. Chevallier, OSB (2 vols., Paris and Bruges, 1937). Other trs. are incl. in Aristoteles Latinus, cited s.v. ARISTOTLE. The primary sources for his episcopal activity are his Epistolae, ed. H. R. Luard (RS, 1861); Rotuli, ed. F. N. Davis (*Canterbury and York Society, 10; 1913; Lincoln Record Society, 11; 1914); F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney (eds.), Councils & Synods . . ., 2, 1205–1313, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 201–7, 261–78, and 467–72; and S. Gieben, OFM Cap., 'Robert Grosseteste at the Papal Curia, Lyons 1250. Edition of the documents', Collectanea Franciscana, 41 (1971), pp. 340–93. Studies by S. Harrison Thomson, The Writings of Robert Grosseteste (Cambridge, 1940); A. C. Crombie, Robert Grosseteste and the Origins of Experimental Science (Oxford, 1953); D. A. Callus, OP (ed.), Robert Grossesteste, Scholar and Bishop (ibid., 1955); J. [J.] McEvoy, The Philosophy of Robert Grosseteste (ibid., 1982); R. W. Southern, Robert Grosseteste: The Growth of an English Mind in Medieval Europe (ibid., 1986). J. [J.] McEvoy in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 722–34, s.v. 'Robert (7) Grosseteste'.

Grote, Geert. See GROOTE, G.

Grotius, Hugo (1583–1645), Huig de Groot, Dutch jurist and theologian. He was the descendant of an influential family of Delft. A very precocious boy, at the age of 12 he went to *Leiden university, where he was deeply influenced by humanism (J. J. *Scaliger). At the age of 15 he accompanied J. van Oldenbarnevelt on a visit to France, and at 18 he was appointed Historian of the States General and in 1607 Advocate Fiscal of Holland, Zeeland, and W. Friesland. He now began to take a keen interest in theological questions, siding with the *Arminians. In 1613 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to England, where he acquainted *James I with the religious situation in the Netherlands, but without being able to gain him to his opinions. On his return (1613) he was made Pensionary of Rotterdam. By his support of moderation in his Ordinum Pietas (1613) he incurred the hostility of Prince Maurice of Nassau, the leader of the Calvinists. In 1614 he drafted a Resolution for Peace in the Church. His *Remonstrant sympathies, combined with his friendship for Oldenbarnevelt, led to a sentence of lifelong imprisonment in 1619. His wife having contrived to arrange his escape in a box of books, he settled at *Paris in 1621, where Louis XIII awarded him a pension. But though in sympathy with many Catholic doctrines, Grotius refused the advantages which conversion would have brought him and remained outside the RC Church. In 1622 he published in Dutch verse the earlier version of De Veritate Religionis Christianae, the first Latin edition of which was to appear in 1627 and to be subsequently further expanded. In 1623 he began the work that established his permanent fame as a jurist, De Jure Belli ac Pacis (Paris, 1625). Having returned to Holland in 1631, he was banished and went a little later to Germany. In 1635 he returned to Paris as ambassador of Queen *Christina of Sweden. Moved by his ecumenical ideal, which he judged could be achieved only by interpreting the NT in terms of its original meaning in the early Church, Grotius discarded the current dogmatically based method of Scriptural commentary for that of philological criticism. His Annotationes on the NT (originally pub. in 3 parts, 1641–50) thus marked a new departure in the science of exegesis. Grotius' dedication to the cause of *reunion was also evident in his publication of Via ad Pacem Ecclesiasticam and Votum pro Pace Ecclesiastica (both 1642). He died at Rostock on his way back from Sweden to France from the consequences of a shipwreck and was buried in his native Delft.

As a poet, classicist, historian, jurist, and theologian, Grotius was prodigiously learned and accomplished, publishing extensively in all these spheres. His principal religious work was the De Veritate Religionis Christianae. Designed as a practical handbook for missionaries, it sought to uphold the evidences of natural theology and to establish the superiority of the Christian faith to all other creeds. It found the essentials of the Gospel in a perfect trust in Divine Providence and in the ordering of human life acc. to the principles laid down by Christ. The book contained much that was valued by Christians of all denominations and became a standard work. Appearing in numerous editions and translations until well into the 19th cent., it was especially popular in England. In his teaching on the *Atonement, Grotius anticipated some of the more liberal doctrines of the 19th and 20th cents.

His great work, De Jure Belli ac Pacis, also rests its theses to a large extent on tradition. Though it finally severed law from theology, fixing the principle of justice in the unalterable Law of Nature which has its source in man as a social being, it utilized medieval and modern theologians, and, by its comprehensive systematization, earned him the title of 'Father of International Law'.

Opera Omnia Theologica, 3 vols. in 4, fol., Amsterdam and London, 1679; also ed., with Eng. tr., by E. Rabbie, Assen, 1990 ff. Letters first ed. Leiden, 1648; fuller edn., Amsterdam, 1687. Modern crit. edn. by P. C. Molhuysen and others (Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatiën, 64, 82, 105, 113, 119, 124, 130, 136, 142, 154, 179, 197, 213, 222, etc.; The Hague, 1928 ff.). Eng. tr. of De Iure Belli (abridged) by W. Whewell (3 vols., Cambridge, 1853). J. ter Meulen and P. J. J. Diermanse, Bibliographie des écrits imprimés de Hugo Grotius (The Hague, 1950); idd., Bibliographie des écrits sur Hugo Grotius imprimés au XVII^{e} siècle (ibid., 1961). Lives by C. Brandt and A. van Cattenburgh (3 pts., Dordrecht and Amsterdam, 1727) and W. S. M. Knight (Grotius Society Publications, 4; London, 1925). J. Schlüter, Die Theologie des Hugo Grotius (Göttingen, 1919). F. [Pintacuda] de Michelis, Le Origini Storiche e Culturali del Pensiero di Ugo Grozio (Pubblicazione della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia dell'Università di Milano, 45; Florence, 1967); A. Droetto, Studi Groziani (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Scienze Politiche dell'Università di Torino, 18; 1968); D. Wolf, Die Irenik des Hugo Grotius (Studia Irenica, 9; Marburg, 1969; 2nd edn., Hildesheim, 1972); The World of Hugo Grotius (1583 1645): Proceedings of the International Colloquium . . . Rotterdam 6 9 April 1983 (Amsterdam, 1984); J. P. Heering, Hugo de Groot als apologeet van de Christelijke Godsdienst (The Hague, 1992), with Eng. summary. Introd. study by C. Gellinek, Hugo Grotius (Boston [1983]). R. S. Franks, A History of the Doctrine of the Work of Christ in its Ecclesiastical Development, 2 [1918], pp. 48–73. H. R. Guggisberg in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 277–80, s.v.

Grottaferrata (Lat. Crypta ferrata). The site of a *Basilian monastery on the lower slopes of the Alban hills, near Rome, founded in 1004 by St Nilus the Younger. It has remained a centre of Greek learning in Italy, though in the Middle Ages it came largely under Latinizing influences. In the Renaissance period its (*commendatory) abbots included many distinguished scholars, notably Cardinals *Bessarion, Giulio della Rovere (afterwards Pope *Julius II), and E. *Consalvi. In 1881 *Leo XIII re-established here a purely Byzantine Rite. The monastery contains a fine collection of Greek MSS.

A. Rocchi, Codices Cryptenses (Rome, 1884); id., La badia di S. Maria di Grottaferrata (ibid., 1884); id., De Coenobio Cryptoferratensi eiusque Bibliotheca et Codicibus praesertim Graecis Commentarii (Tusculum, 1893). P. *Batiffol, L'Abbaye de Rossano (Paris, 1891). G. M. Croce, La Badia Greca di Grottaferrata e la Rivista 'Roma e l'Oriente': Cattolicesimo e Ortodossià fra Unionismo ed Ecumenismo (1799–1923) (2 vols., Vatican City, 1990). O. Marucchi, 'Grottaferrata. Scoperta di un antico cimitero cristiano', Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, 19 (1913), pp. 230–7. M. Petta in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 813 f.; P. Giannini in DHGE 22 (1988), cols. 388–96, both s.v.

Grou, Jean-Nicolas (1731–1803), French *Jesuit. From 1751 to 1755 he taught at the Jesuit college of La Flèche. When the Society was expelled from France, he moved to Lorraine; he taught for two years at the University of Pont-à-Mousson and published various works on *Plato. After Lorraine became part of France in 1766, Grou was recalled by the Abp. of Paris and as a secular priest served as chaplain to a convent of nuns. Here he began the spiritual writing for which he is chiefly remembered; he published the Caractères de la vraie dévotion (1788; Eng. tr., 1791) and Maximes spirituelles (1789; Eng. tr. by J. M. *Neale, 1874). In 1792 he came to England, spending the rest of his life in the household of Thomas Weld at Lulworth Castle, near Weymouth. He continued his writings, which include Méditations en forme de retraite sur l'amour de Dieu (London, 1796; Eng. tr., 1928), and the posthumously published Manuel des âmes intérieures (1833; Eng. tr., 1889) and L'École de Jésus-Christ (2 vols., 1885; Eng. tr., 1932). A few months before his death he was able to renew his vows when Papal approval was given to the restitution of the Jesuits in England.

A. Cadrès, SJ, Notice sur la vie et les œuvres du Père Jean-Nicolas Grou (1862; repr. in J. N. Grou, L'Intérieur de Jésus et de Marie, posthumous, 1862, pp. xiii–cii). F. *von Hügel, 'The Spiritual Writings of Father Grou, SJ', The Tablet, 74 (1889), pp. 990 f., 1029–31, repr. in modern Eng. tr. of Grou's Spiritual Maxims (1961), pp. 265–93. Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 1868–82, and 9 (1900), 442 f.; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 103 f. P. Bernard in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1888–90; A. Rayez, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1059–83; H. Beylard in Dictionnaire de Biographie Française, 16 (1985), cols. 1345 f., all s.v.

group ministry. In the C of E, under the Pastoral Measure 1968, a number of neighbouring parishes may be grouped together and the incumbent of each benefice, in addition to attending to his own benefice, has the legal authority to assist the incumbents of the other benefices in the group. The incumbents meet as a chapter and it is their duty to assist each other so as to make the best possible provision for the cure of souls throughout the area of the group. After some amendments, the provisions for group ministries were consolidated in the Pastoral Measure 1983.

Group Movement. See OXFORD GROUP.

Grundtvig, Nikolai Fredrik Severin (1783–1872), Danish religious teacher. From 1839 till his death he was preacher at the Vartov Hospital at Copenhagen, and in 1861 was given the title and rank of a 'Bishop'. In 1824, after some deep religious experiences, he started a reforming movement in Danish Lutheranism, attacking the rationalism and state domination of religion, and seeking to restore dogmatic orthodoxy with the *Apostles' Creed as the standard. With the movement thus begun ('Grundtvigianism') came a renewed understanding of the Church and the Sacraments in Danish theology. He was also active in founding the Folk High Schools in Denmark. He was an authority on Anglo-Saxon and Norse literature. He and S. *Kierkegaard together are the most notable figures in Danish theology in the 19th cent.

Grundtvig's extensive MSS are housed in the Royal Library at Copenhagen. No complete edn. of his writings exists. The fullest is that ed. H. Begtrup (10 vols., Copenhagen, 1904–9); selection ed. G. Christensen and H. Koch, Værker i Udvalg (10 vols., ibid., 1940–9). His poetry was ed. by Svend Grundtvig, C. J. Brandt, and G. Christensen (9 vols., ibid., 1880–1930); correspondence, ed. G. Christensen and Stener Grundtvig (2 vols., ibid., 1924–6); hymns (Sang-værk) [ed. T. Balslev and others] (6 vols., ibid., 1944–64); sermons dating from 1822–6 and 1832–9, ed. C. Thodberg (12 vols., ibid., 1983–6). Danish Life, setting Grundtvig in relation to the history of Denmark in the 19th cent., by F. Rønning (8 vols., ibid., 1907–14). Shorter Lives in Danish by H. Brun (2 vols., Kolding, 1879–82) and H. Koch (Copenhagen, 1944; Eng. tr., Yellow Springs, Oh., 1952). J. P. Bang, Grundtvig og England (1932). H. Begtrup, N. F. S. Grundtvigs danske Kristendom: Historisk Fremstillet (2 vols., 1936); also several other writings by the same author. P. G. Lindhardt, Grundtvig: An Introduction (1951); C. Thodberg and A. P. Thyssen (eds.), N. F. S. Grundtvig: Tradition and Renewal (Eng. tr., Copenhagen, 1983). A. M. Allchin and others (eds.), Heritage and Prophecy: Grundtvig and the English-Speaking World (Norwich [1994]). S. Johansen, Bibliografi over N. F. S. Grundtvigs Skrifter (4 pts., 1948–54). K. E. Bugge in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1085–8, s.v.; C. Thodberg in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 284–9, s.v.

Grünewald, Matthias (*c.*1475–1528), German painter, known in his lifetime as Mathis Gothart Nithart. Very little is known of his life. The most famous work attributed to him is the altar-piece of Isenheim, near Colmar, a polyptych of 11 panels completed before 1516, and now in the Colmar Museum. The Crucifixion is portrayed with cruel realism, with St *John the Baptist directing an exceptionally long index finger to the Cross, with the inscription: 'He must increase and I must decrease' (Jn. 3: 30). K. *Barth saw in the Baptist the true type of the Christian witness, pointing away from himself and his experience to the objective Word of God.

Paintings and drawings ed. H. A. Schmid (2 parts and suppl., Strasbourg, 1908–11), also reproduced, with introd. by N. Pevsner and M. Meier (London, etc., 1958). Collections of drawings also ed. M. I. Friedländer (Berlin, 1927) and E. Ruhmer (London [1970]). L. Behling, Die Handzeichnungen des Mathis Gothart Nithart genannt Grünewald (Weimar, 1955). A. Burckhard, Matthias Grünewald: Personality and Accomplishment (Cambridge, Mass., 1936), with detailed bibl. W. K. Zülch, Der historische Grünewald (Munich, 1938). W. Fraenger, Matthias Grünewald (Munich [1983]). R. Mellinkoff, The Devil at Isenheim: Reflections of Popular Belief in Grünewald's Altarpiece (California Studies in the History of Art, Discovery Series, 1; Berkeley, Calif., etc. [1988]).

Gualbert, St John. See JOHN GUALBERT, ST.

Guarantees, the Law of. The law passed on 13 May 1871 to regulate the relations between the first government of the new Kingdom of Italy and the Papacy. The Pope's person was declared sacred and inviolable; he was to receive an annual sum of 3,225,000 lire, free of taxation, for certain specified expenses; the *Vatican, the *Lateran Palace, and the Papal villa at *Castel Gandolfo were to remain in the Pope's possession; the freedom of *conclaves and of *General Councils was guaranteed; the diplomatic immunity of foreign envoys to the Holy See was recognized; and the seminaries in Rome and in the six *suburbicarian sees were to be under the sole authority of the Pope. Though the law was never recognized by the Vatican, in practice relations with the Italian government were regulated by it until the *Lateran Treaty of 1929.

Text conveniently pr. in A. C. Jemolo, La Questione Romana (Milan [1939]), pp. 108–14. Eng. tr., with introd., in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall, Church and State through the Centuries (1954), pp. 285–91. F. Olgiati, La questione romana e la sua soluzione (1929), pp. 75–91, with operative clauses of the text, pp. 77–81. A. C. Jemolo, Chiesa e Stato in Italia negli ultimi cento anni (1948), pp. 241–367 (2nd edn., Turin [1963], pp. 173–263), passim; Eng. tr. of abridged edn., Church and State in Italy 1850–1950 (Oxford, 1960), pp. 28–52 passim, esp. pp. 48–52. G. Amabile, La legge delle guarentigie: Studi giuridico-politico (Cantania, 1897).

Guardia Nobile. See NOBLE GUARD.

Guardia Palatina d'Onore. See PALATINE GUARD.

Guardian, The. A weekly Anglican religious newspaper, founded in 1846 by R. W. *Church, Frederic Rogers, and others, to uphold *Tractarian principles, and to show their relevance to the best secular thought of the day. The Guardian always claimed to be the offspring of the Tractarian movement, and to provide independent comment upon theological, political and social issues. It ceased publication in 1951.

guardian. The superior of a *Franciscan friary. He normally holds office for three years.

guardian angels. The belief that God assigns to every man an angel to guard him in body and soul was common to the pagan (e.g. *Plato, Phaedo, 108 B) and the Jewish world, though it is not clearly formulated in the OT. It is expressed in 1 *Enoch (100: 5), where the author states that the just have protecting spirits. In the NT the popular belief is reflected in Acts 12: 15 and confirmed, in the case of children, by the Lord (Mt. 18: 10). Though the Shepherd of *Hermas (*c.*140–55) says that every man has an angel to guide him (Mand. 6. 2. 1–3), there is much variety of opinion among the Fathers in general. St *Ambrose (In Ps. 37. 43) believed that the righteous were deprived of guardian spirits in order that, having a harder struggle against evil, they might attain to greater glory, while St *Jerome (In Jerem. 30. 12) and St *Basil (Hom. in Ps. 33. 5) state that sin drives them away. *Honorius 'of Autun' (early 12th cent.), who was followed by subsequent teachers, first defined the belief clearly. He held that each soul, at the moment that it was introduced into the body, was entrusted to an angel (Unaquaeque etiam anima, dum in corpus mittitur, angelo committitur, Elucidarium, 2. 31). St *Thomas Aquinas (S. Theol. 1, q. 113, a. 4) held that only angels of the lowest order fulfilled this function, whereas *Duns Scotus and others maintained that the mission might be committed to any member of the angelic host.

The function of the guardian angels is the protection of body and soul and the presentation of prayers to God (Rev. 8: 3 f.). They were originally commemorated with St *Michael, but an independent feast, first found in *Portugal in 1513, was extended to the whole RC Church by Clement X in 1670, and assigned to 2 Oct. See also ANGEL.

A. Wilmart, OSB, Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), ch. 14, 'Prières à l'ange gardien', pp. 537–58. J. Duhr in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 586–98, s.v. 'Anges gardiens', with refs.; further bibl., cols. 624 f. H. Pope in CE 7 (1910), pp. 49 f., s.v.

guardian of the spiritualities. In the C of E, when a diocesan bishopric is vacant, the archbishop of the province provides for the ecclesiastical administration of the diocese, usually by authorizing a *suffragan bishop in the diocese to act on his behalf. In this capacity the archbishop is described as 'the guardian of the spiritualities'. There are a few dioceses in which the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral claim, or have claimed, to be the guardians during the vacancy in the see. When an archbishopric becomes vacant, the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral of the metropolitan diocese are the guardians.

Gudule, St (d. *c.*710), patroness of Brussels. She is said to have belonged to a noble family of Brabant and to have devoted herself to prayer and charitable deeds. Acc. to the earliest Life (12th cent.), her remains were translated to the church of St Michael at Brussels in 1047; her cult is attested in the city from the late 11th cent. She is often depicted with a lantern, in reference to the legend that, when the devil had one morning blown out the taper by which she regularly discovered her way to church, it was miraculously rekindled. Feast day, 8 Jan.

AASS, Jan. 1 (1643), pp. 513–30, incl. (pp. 514–24) the Life by a certain Hubert (12th cent.; mainly apocryphal). J. *Bollandus and C. Smetius, 'De S. Gudila Virgine Commentarius Praevius', Acta Sanctorum Belgii, 5 (1789), pp. 667–89. R. Podevyn, OSB, 'Étude critique sur la Vita Gudulae', Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 2 (1923), pp. 619–41. M. de Waha in DHGE 22 (1988), cols. 639–41, s.v.

Guéranger, Prosper Louis Pascal (1805–75), French *Benedictine monk. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1827. With a view to the re-establishment of the Benedictine Order in France, he bought the priory of *Solesmes in 1832, opened it in 1833, and in 1837 made his profession at Rome and was appointed by *Gregory XVI the first Abbot of Solesmes, where he spent the rest of his life. He was keenly interested in liturgical matters, and as a zealous *Ultramontane led the movement in France for replacing the existing local diocesan uses by the one rite of Rome.

He was a voluminous writer, whose popular style led some of his books to circulate very widely. Among the best known were his Institutions liturgiques (3 vols., 1840–51) and L'Année liturgique (a devotional commentary on the ecclesiastical year; 9 vols., 1841–66; Eng. tr., 1867–71).

For his writings (126 items) see F. *Cabrol, Bibliographie des bénédictins de la congrégation de France (Solesmes, 1889), pp. 3–33. [P. Delatte, OSB], Dom Guéranger, abbé de Solesmes (2 vols., 1909; repr., with additional material, no longer anonymous, Solesmes, 1984). E. Sevrin, Dom Guéranger et Lamennais (1933); L. Soltner, OSB, Solesmes & Dom Guéranger (1805 1875) (Solesmes, 1974). C. Johnson, OSB, Prosper Guéranger (1805–1875): A Liturgical Theologian. An Introduction to his liturgical writings and work (Studia Anselmiana, 89; 1984). J. Hourlier, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1097–106, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Guest, Edmund (1518–77), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow and vice-provost. In 1548 he published A Treatise against the Privy Mass in which he repudiated the Eucharistic Sacrifice and the adoration of the consecrated elements. In 1549 he spoke against the dogma of *transubstantiation in discussions held at Cambridge before the Commissioners. During the reign of *Mary he remained in hiding. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he became a domestic chaplain to M. *Parker (1559) and in the same year Archdeacon of *Canterbury. In 1560 he was appointed Bp. of *Rochester. He played a prominent part in the 1563 debate on the revision of the *Forty-Two Articles, and it was he who devised the statement (incorporated in Art. 28 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles) that the 'Body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the Supper, only after an heavenly and spiritual manner'. In 1571 he signed the Thirty-Nine Articles, despite some difficulties about Article 29 (that the wicked, in receiving communion, are not partakers of Christ). In the same year the Queen, one of whose favourites he was, appointed him to the see of Salisbury.

H. G. Dugdale, The Life and Character of Edmund Geste (1840). For his Eucharistic teaching, see also G. F. Hodges, Bishop Guest: Articles Twenty-eight and Twenty-nine (1894). W. P. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1968), esp. pp. 250–55. E. T. Bradley in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 316–18.

Gueux (Fr., 'ragamuffins'). A title given (originally in contempt) to those who in 1566 petitioned Margaret of Parma, the regent of the Netherlands, against the *Inquisition. It was later adopted by other bodies of Protestants who opposed the Spaniards in the Low Countries.

Gui, Bernard (*c.*1261–1331), *Dominican historian. Born at Royère, Haute-Vienne, he joined the Dominican Order at Limoges in 1279. After being lecturer and prior in various places, he was appointed *inquisitor of Toulouse in 1307. He undertook several, not very successful, diplomatic missions for Pope *John XXII; in 1323 he became Bp. of Tuy (Galicia), and was translated in 1324 to Lodève. He was a hard-working, cheerful man, but lacking in brilliance. He is remembered chiefly for his contributions to Church history, esp. the history of his own Order, for which his massive compilations are a major source. He was commissioned by Berengar of Landorra (Master of the Order 1312–17) to write a collection of saints' lives to replace the *Golden Legend, which Berengar regarded as suspect and unbalanced. In 1323–4 he wrote an important manual for inquisitors.

Selections from his manual for inquisitors conveniently ed., with Fr. tr., by G. Mollat and G. Drioux (Les Classiques de l'Histoire de France au moyen âge, 8–9; 1926–7). For details of other works, see Kaeppeli, 1 (1970), pp. 205–26. Bernard Gui et son monde, with introd. by M.-H. Vicaire [OP] (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, 16; Toulouse, 1981). W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, The History of the Dominican Order, 2 (Staten Island, NY, 1973), pp. 411–16. G. Mollat in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 677–81, s.v. 'Bernard (145)'.

Guibert of Nogent (*c.*1053/65–*c.*1125), Abbot of Nogent, near Laon, from 1104. The youngest son of a noble Clermont family, he was dedicated to God by his widowed mother, and educated and later professed at the monastery of Saint-Germer-de-Fly (in the diocese of Beauvais). Visits there by *Anselm, then prior of Bec, encouraged him in his study both of the Latin classics (*Virgil and Ovid) and of St *Augustine and St *Gregory the Great. Gregory provided a model for Guibert's Moralia on Genesis, which is prefaced by an essay on biblical interpretation and preaching. Guibert opposed *Berengar's eucharistic doctrines. He wrote on the veneration of the BVM; a tract 'On the Incarnation against the Jews'; a history of the first *Crusade, touched with pride in the Franks' role; an astonishing onslaught on the abuse of *relics, De pignoribus sanctorum, criticizing the monks of Saint-Médard who claimed to have a tooth of the Lord; and an autobiography, partly modelled on Augustine, which is both a self-portrait of a complex character and a rich source for contemporary social history.

Works, ed. L. *d'Achery (Paris, 1651), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 156. Crit. edns. of his autobiog. by G. Bourgin (Collection des Textes pour servir à l'étude et à l'enseignement de l'histoire, 40; 1907) and, with Fr. tr., by E.-R. Labande (Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au moyen âge, 34; 1981). Eng. tr., with notes and introd., by J. F. Benton, Self and Society in Medieval France (New York and Evanston, Ill. [1970]). K. Guth, Guibert von Nogent und die hochmittelalterliche Kritik an der Reliquienverehrung (Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte der Benediktiner-Ordens und seiner Zweige, Ergänzungsband 21; Ottobeuren, 1970). F. Dolbeau, 'Deux nouveaux manuscrits des "Mémoires" de Guibert de Nogent', Sacris Erudiri, 26 (1983), pp. 155–76. C. D. Ferguson, 'Autobiography as Therapy: Guibert de Nogent, Peter Abelard, and the Making of Medieval Autobiography', Journal of Medieval and Renaissance Studies, 13 (1983), pp. 187–212; M. D. Coupe, 'The Personality of Guibert de Nogent Reconsidered', Journal of Medieval History, 9 (1983), pp. 317–29.

Guigo I (1083–1136), fifth prior of the *Grande Chartreuse. Born at the chateau of Saint-Romain-du-Val-Mordane, then in the diocese of Valence, he entered the Grande Chartreuse in 1106 and was prior from 1109 until he died. Soon after 1109, he began a collection of 'thoughts' (Meditationes) which has been compared to the Pensées of B. *Pascal. Under him the Grande Chartreuse began to have daughter-foundations, the first being Portes (1115); partly to meet their needs he compiled the *Carthusian *Customary between 1121 and 1128. Nine of his letters survive, as well as an edition he made of the letters of St *Jerome. He was friend of St *Bernard of Clairvaux and of *Peter the Venerable, both of whom held him in high esteem.

Crit. edns., with Fr. trs., of his Meditationes by A. *Wilmart, OSB (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 22; 1936), and by Un Chartreux (SC 308; 1983); of the Carthusian Customary by id. (ibid. 313; 1984); and of his letters by id., Lettres des premiers Chartreux, 1 (ibid. 88; 1962; 2nd edn., 1988), pp. 95–225. Eng. tr. of the Meditations by J. J. Jolin, SJ (Milwaukee, Wis., 1951). A. Wilmart, OSB, 'Les écrits spirituels des deux Guigues', Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, 5 (1954), pp. 59–79 and 127–58, repr. in his Auteurs Spirituels et Textes Dévots du Moyen Âge latin (1932), pp. 217–60. G. Mursell, The Theology of the Carthusian Life in the Writings of St Bruno and Guigo I (Analecta Cartusiana, 127; Salzburg, 1988). M. Laporte, Ord. Cart., in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1169–75, s.v. See also bibl. to HUGH, ST, BP. OF GRENOBLE.

Guigo II (d. prob. 1188), ninth prior of the *Grande Chartreuse from some time after 1173 until 1180. His Scala Claustralium ('Ladder of Monks') influenced late medieval and early modern piety, though it was often ascribed to other writers, esp. St *Bernard. Guigo's fourfold 'spiritual exercise', consisting of reading, meditation, prayer, contemplation, was widely adopted, and it contributed to the development of later, more systematic, notions of the spiritual life. There is a lively and original adaptation of the Scala in Middle English.

Crit. edn. of the Scala Claustralium and Twelve Meditations, with introd., by E. Colledge, OSA, and J. Walsh, SJ, and Fr. tr. by Un Chartreux (SC 163; 1970). Modern Eng. tr. by E. Colledge, OSA, and J. Walsh, SJ (London and Oxford, 1978). Middle English version of the Scala ed. P. Hodgson, Deonise Hid Diuinite and Other Treatises on Contemplative Prayer (EETS [Original Series], 231; 1955), pp. 100–17, with refs. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Les écrits spirituels des deux Guigues', Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, 5 (1924), pp. 59–79 and 127–58, repr. in his Auteurs Spirituels et Textes Dévots du Moyen Âge latin (1932), pp. 217–60. S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Ways of Imperfection (1984), pp. 93–124. M. Laporte, Ord. Cart., in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1175 f.

Gunkel, Hermann (1862–1932), Protestant theologian. After holding teaching appointments at Göttingen (1888), Halle (1889), and Berlin (1894), he became Prof. of OT Theology at Giessen in 1907 and at Halle (succeeding C. H. *Cornill) in 1920. He was a leading member of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule and a pioneer of *Form Criticism. He worked out the method in his comm. on Genesis (1901) and then extended it to the Psalms. He concluded that Hebrew religious poetry had a long history and that its forms had taken shape in oral tradition at a comparatively early date and become fully developed before the Exile. His writings include Die Wirkungen des heiligen Geistes nach der populären Anschauung der apostolischen Zeit (1888), Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit (1895), Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständnis des Neuen Testaments (1903), his comm. on Psalms (1925–6) and Einleitung in die Psalmen (posthumously pub. 1933). He also contributed several important articles to RGG.

Eng. tr. of various short works by A. K. Dallas as What Remains of the Old Testament and other Essays (1928); also of the introd. to his comm. on Genesis as The Legends of Genesis (Chicago, 1901; repr., New York [1964]), of his art. on the Psalms in RGG (2nd edn.) as The Psalms (Facet Books, Biblical Series, 19; Philadelphia [1967], of extracts from Schöpfung und Chaos in B. W. Anderson (ed.), Creation in the Old Testament (Issues in Religion and Theology, 6; 1984), pp. 25–52, and of Das Märchen im Alten Testament (1917) as The Folktale in the Old Testament (Sheffield, 1987). On Gunkel's work on the Psalms, see A. R. Johnson in H. H. Rowley (ed.), The Old Testament and Modern Study (1951), pp. 162–81. W. Klatt, Hermann Gunkel: Zu seiner Theologie der Religionsgeschichte und zur Entstehung der formgeschichtlichen Methode (Göttingen, 1969); P. Gibert, Une théorie de la légende: Hermann Gunkel (1862–1932) et les légendes de la Bible [1979]. J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 230–47. R. Wonneberger in TRE 14 (1985), cols. 297–300, s.v.

Gunning, Peter (1614–84), Bp. of *Ely. He was a fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge, from 1633 to 1644, when he migrated to Oxford. A staunch royalist and *High Churchman, opposed to both Romanism and Puritanism, he continued during the Commonwealth to minister to Anglican congregations and held the C of E service at Exeter House in the Strand. At the *Restoration he was rewarded with rapid promotion. In 1660 he became Lady Margaret professor, and in 1661 Regius professor, of divinity at Cambridge, in 1669 Bp. of *Chichester, and in 1675 Bp. of Ely. He took a leading part at the *Savoy Conference, where as 'the incomparable hammer of the schismatics' he argued against R. *Baxter.

Modern edn. of his treatise The Paschal or Lent Fast (1662) by C. P. Eden in LACT (1845). J. H. Overton in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 345–8.

Gunpowder Plot (1605). The attempt to blow up the Houses of Parliament and destroy the King, Lords, and Commons together, in the hope that the RCs would then be enabled to seize the government. A small band headed by R. *Catesby hired a cellar under the Houses of Parliament in 1604, stored it with gunpowder, and arranged for Guy *Fawkes to start the explosion. The plot was revealed to Lord Salisbury by Lord Monteagle, and the leading conspirators were executed. It resulted in the greater unpopularity of Popery and an increased severity in the Penal Code. A form of service in commemoration of the frustration of the Plot was added by Royal Proclamation to the BCP in 1605, and appointed to be used annually on 5 Nov. Its use was revoked in 1859.

The Trial of Guy Fawkes and Others (The Gunpowder Plot), ed. D. Carswell (London, 1934). D. Jardine (ed.), Criminal Trials, 2, The Gunpowder Plot (1835), with full introd. Id., A Narrative of the Gunpowder Plot (1857). J. Gerard, SJ, What was the Gunpowder Plot? The Traditional Story Tested by the Original Evidence (1897); S. R. Gardiner, What the Gunpowder Plot was (1897). P. Caraman, Henry Garnet 1555–1606 and the Gunpowder Plot (1964). A. J. Loomie, SJ, Guy Fawkes in Spain: The 'Spanish Treason' in Spanish Documents (Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, Special Supplement, 9; 1971); J. Wormald, 'Gunpowder, Treason, and Scots', Journal of British Studies, 24 (1985), pp. 141–68; M. Nicholls, Investigating Gunpowder Plot (Manchester and New York [1991]).

Günther, Anton (1783–1863), religious philosopher. He was ordained priest in 1820, spent two years in a *Jesuit novitiate, and settled down for the rest of his life at Vienna without official position; there he actively propagated in lectures and books a system of philosophy and speculative theology. He made it his aim to interpret Catholic sacramentalism in terms of modern pantheistic idealism, esp. that of F. W. J. von *Schelling and G. W. F. *Hegel. He held that the human reason could prove scientifically the mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, and that there was no real cleavage between natural and supernatural truth. By a form of the *ontological argument, he maintained that the existence of God could be deduced from the analysis of self-consciousness. All the dogmas of the Church, he held, were liable to revision and improvement in the light of fuller knowledge. In spite of influential friends, all his works were condemned by the *Index in 1857, and Günther submitted to the decision. After the First *Vatican Council, most of those who still adhered to his philosophy joined the *Old Catholics.

Günther's writings include (titles abbreviated): Vorschule zur spekulativen Theologie (1828–9), Peregrins Gastmahl (1830), Süd- und Nordlichter (1832), Der letzte Symboliker (1834; on the controversy between J. A. *Möhler and F. C. *Baur), Thomas a Scrupulis (1835; against Hegelianism), Die Juste-Milieus in der deutschen Philosophie gegenwärtiger Zeit (1838; against Baur), Eurystheus und Herakles (1843), and Antisavarese (posthumous, 1883). Collected works ed. in 9 vols., Vienna, 1882. P. Knoodt, Anton Günther (2 vols., Vienna, 1881). E. Winter, Die geistige Entwicklung Anton Günthers und seiner Schule (Geschichtliche Forschungen zur Philosophie der Neuzeit, 1; Paderborn, 1931). L. Orbán, Theologia Güntheriana et Concilium Vaticanum: Inquisitio historico-dogmatica de re Güntheriana iuxta vota inedita consultoris J. Schwetz actaque Concilii Vaticani exarata (Analecta Gregoriana, 28 and 50; 1942–9). P. Wenzel, Das wissenschaftliche Anliegen des Güntherianismus (Essen, 1961); id., Der Freundeskreis um Anton Günther und die Gründung Beurons (ibid., 1965). E. and M. Winter, Domprediger Johann Emanuel Veith und Kardinal Friedrich Schwarzenberg: Der Güntherprozess in unveröffentlichen Briefen und Akten (Sb. (Wien), 282, Abhandlungen 2; 1972). Other modern studies by J. Pritz (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, 4; 1963) and K. Beck (ibid. 17; 1967). H. Klinger, 'Sündenfall und Erbsünde bei A. Günther', in E. Mann (ed.), Erbe als Auftrage . . . Joseph Pritz zum 60. Geburtstag (ibid. 40; 1973), pp. 119–67. J. Pritz, 'Anthon Günther (1783–1863)', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 1 [1975], pp. 348–75, with bibl. A. Bunnell, Before Infallability: Liberal Catholicism in Biedermeier Vienna (Rutherford, Madison, London, and Toronto [1990]), esp. pp. 51–94.F. Lauchert in CE 7 (1910), pp. 85–8; H. Thurston, SJ, in HERE 6 (1913), pp. 455 f., s.v. 'Güntherianism'; H. H. Schwedt in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 4 (1995), cols. 1105–7, s.v.

Gustav-Adolf-Verein, since 1946 called the 'Gustav-Adolf-Werk'. A German Protestant society to aid the weaker sister Churches in the '*diaspora'. It was founded in 1832 by the Leipzig professor C. G. L. Grossmann, to commemorate the bicentenary of the death of King *Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, but did not gain importance until, in 1842, the court preacher, Karl Zimmermann of Darmstadt, amalgamated it with a similar society of his own. Its activities extend to all Protestant Churches irrespective of denomination, and though mainly devoted to the needs of German Protestants, do not exclude members of other nations. The help it gives takes various forms, esp. the building of churches and schools and provision for pastors and teachers. As a consequence of the Second World War its contacts with E. Europe were sharply reduced and the demand for German literature gave way to requests, in the first instance from Latin America, for support of Protestant communities using the language of their own countries. In 1966, in addition to the Leipzig headquarters in the German Democratic Republic, a separate base was established at Kassel in the German Federal Republic. Since the 1970s, as a result of détente, relations with SE Europe have been renewed, and after the reunification of Germany in 1990 it was decided to revert to a single central headquarters in Leipzig from 1995.

K. Zimmermann, Der Gustav-Adolf-Verein nach seiner Geschichte, seiner Verfassung und seiner Werken, ed. W. Zimmermann (son; Darmstadt, 1878), and other works of K. Zimmermann. H. W. Beyer, Die Geschichte des Gustav Adolf-Vereins in ihren kirchen- und geistesgeschichtlichen Zusammenhängen (Göttingen, 1932). P. W. Gennrich, 'Das Gustav-Adolf-Werk der evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland', Kirchliches Jahrbuch für die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland, 82 (1955), pp. 310–56; K. Scholder, Das Gustav-Adolf-Werk und die evangelische Kirche: Festvortrag zum 150jährigen Jubiläum (Kassel, 1983). W. Zimmermann in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 252–7; P. Schellenberg in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 719–26, s.v. 'Diasporawerke'; H. Riess in EKL (2nd edn.), 2 (1988), cols. 360 f., s.v. all with bibl.

Gustavus II Adolphus (1594–1632), King of *Sweden. He was the son of Charles IX, received a careful Protestant upbringing, and succeeded his father in 1611, making Axel Oxenstjerna his chancellor. In 1613 he brought the war with Denmark to an end, and in 1617 successfully concluded that with Russia by the Peace of Stolbova. In 1621 he began a war against the Catholic Vasas in Poland, to uphold the Protestant cause and make Sweden the principal power in the Baltic. In 1626 he transferred the war to the Prussian provinces, occupying Pillau, Ermland, and the delta of the Vistula. After repeated defeats by the Poles in 1627 and 1628, he concluded the six years' truce of Altmark in 1629. In 1630 his fear of the increasing Imperial power in the Baltic led him to intervene in the *Thirty Years War. He landed a large army in Pomerania, and by the Treaty of Bärwalde obtained help from France for the promise of maintaining Catholic worship in the Catholic places he should conquer. The German Protestant princes at first opposed him, but the majority of them finally joined him after his victory over Tilly at Breitenfeld (1631). Acclaimed everywhere as the hero of Protestantism, he penetrated deeply into W. and S. Germany, wintered at Mainz, and in the spring of 1632 took the field against Tilly, whom he defeated in the battle of Rain on the Lech. After devastating Bavaria he turned against Wallenstein, whom he confronted for two months near Nuremberg. At last he offered battle at Lützen, where he was killed.

Though Gustavus Adolphus saved German Protestantism by his intervention, his premature death probably alone secured the survival of Germany. His powerful personality and his strategic gifts are generally praised; but the traditional notion that he took up arms in defence of the Gospel rather than for political reasons has been widely challenged in modern times.

Skrifter [ed. C. G. Styffe] (Stockholm, 1861). Studies by F. F. von Soden (3 vols., Erlangen, 1865–9), G. Droysen (2 vols., Leipzig, 1869–70), N. Ahnlund (Stockholm, 1918; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ, 1940), G. Wittrock (Stockholm, 1927), G. MacMunn (London [1930]), J. Paul (3 vols., Leipzig, 1927–32), M. Roberts (2 vols., London, 1953–8), G. Barudio (Frankfurt am Main, 1982), and F. Berner (Stuttgart, 1982). Gustaf II Adolf: Minnesskrift på 300-Årsdagen av Slaget vid Lützen utarbetad inom Generalstabens Krigshistoriska Avdelning (Stockholm, 1932). Introductory account by M. Roberts, Gustavus Adolphus and the Rise of Sweden (1973; 2nd edn., 1992), with useful bibl. See also bibl. to THIRTY YEARS WAR.

Gutenberg, Johann (*c.*1396–1468), inventor of printing. Born at Mainz and trained as a goldsmith, Gutenberg went to Strasbourg *c.*1430. By *c.*1449, when he returned to Mainz, he seems already to have possessed movable metal type cast in separate letters and had invented a typecasting machine. At Mainz he received two loans from Johann Fust, a banker, to finance the printing of the 42-line (*Mazarin) Bible during the years 1453–55. But in 1455 the partners went to law and the partnership was dissolved. Peter Schoeffer, a scribe, who prob. designed the firm's types, became Fust's partner and the firm produced in 1457 the first dated book, a beautiful Psalter. Before 1461 a 36-line Bible was produced in a type previously used for smaller works. This Bible was prob. printed by Gutenberg, possibly in co-operation with others. It is also possible that he was involved with the production of Joannes Balbus de Janua's Catholicon (1460). From 1465 he was pensioned by the Abp. of Mainz. Schoeffer continued to print until 1502.

The best general study is the Life by A. Ruppel (Berlin, 1939; rev. edn., 1947; with bibl.). D. C. McMurtrie (ed.), The Gutenberg Documents, with Translations of the Texts into English (New York, 1941). H. Widmann (ed.), Der gegenwärtige Stand der Gutenberg-Forschung (Bibliothek des Buchwesens, 1; Stuttgart, 1972). Popular account of his work by J. Ing, Johann Gutenberg and his Bible (New York, 1988). Full bibl. in S. Corsten and F. W. Fuchs (eds.), Der Buchdruck im 15. Jahrhundert: Eine Bibliographie, 1 (Stuttgart, 1988), pp. 282–308.

Guthlac, St (?673–714), early English hermit. He was related by blood to the royal house of Mercia. Originally a monk at the *double monastery at Repton, he later migrated to an island in the marshes around the site of the present *Crowland Abbey, where for 15 to 20 years he lived a life of severe asceticism. Feast day, 11 Apr. (in some calendars, 12 Apr.).

The Guthlac Roll, now in the the British Library (Harley Roll Y 6), is a vellum roll consisting of $17\frac{1}{2}$ drawings depicting the life of St Guthlac. It was probably executed in the later half of the 12th cent. for the Abbot of Crowland.

The primary authority is the Life (not later than 749) by one Felix, pr. in AASS, Apr. 2 (1675), pp. 38–50; crit. edn., with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1956). An Anglo-Saxon prose version of this Life ed., with Eng. tr., by C. W. Goodwin (London, 1848); also ed., with discussion by P. Gonser, Das angelsächsiche Prosa-Leben des hl. Guthlac (Anglistische Forschungen, 27; 1909); and see B. P. Kurtz, 'From St. Antony to St. Guthlac. A Study in Biography', University of California Publications in Modern Philology, 12 (1925–6), pp. 133–46, with refs. The early English poem derived from the same source in the Codex Exoniensis (10th cent.) is ed. J. Roberts, The Guthlac Poems of the Exeter Book (Oxford, 1979). On the early Lives see Hardy, 1, pp. 404–10 (nos. 920–32), and BHL 1, pp. 555 f. (nos. 3723–32), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 408 f. J. Roberts, 'An Inventory of Early Guthlac Materials', Mediaeval Studies, 32 (1970), pp. 193–233. Facsimile edn. of the Guthlac Roll, with useful introd. by G. F. Warner (Roxburghe Club, Oxford, 1928). C. Hole in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 823–6, s.v.

Guthrie, James (*c.*1612–61), Scottish *Presbyterian. He was educated at St Leonard's College, St Andrews. At first an Episcopalian, he became a Presbyterian under the influence of S. *Rutherford and was ordained a minister in 1642. From 1644 to 1651 he was a member of the *General Assembly. In 1650 he excommunicated General J. Middleton as an enemy of the *National Covenant and made him do public penance. In 1651 he became one of the 'Protesters' (or 'Remonstrants') against the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the King and was deposed by the Assembly, which favoured a less rigid policy. In 1654 the English Council of State appointed him one of the *Triers and a visitor for the universities. After the Restoration he attempted to prove his loyalty to the King, but his efforts were unsuccessful. In 1661 he was arraigned for high treason and tried by a commission presided over by Middleton, who had never forgiven the insult of compelling him to do public penance. He was hanged at the cross of Edinburgh after making a long speech from the scaffold.

T. McCrie and T. Thomson, Lives of Alexander Henderson and James Guthrie (1846), pp. 141–284 (by T. Thomson). J. D. Douglas, Light in the North: The Story of the Scottish Covenanters (Exeter, 1964), esp. pp. 70–5 and 86 f. A. Gordon in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 377–9.

Guthrie, Thomas (1803–73), Scottish divine and social reformer. He studied at Edinburgh University and the Sorbonne, was licensed as a preacher by the presbytery of Brechin in 1825, and inducted to the charge of Arbirlot in Angus in 1830. Revealing outstanding gifts as a preacher, he moved in 1837 to Edinburgh, where he became one of the ministers of Old Greyfriars. In 1840 he transferred to the newly created St John's nearby. A strong supporter of the Evangelical party during the *Ten Years' Conflict, he 'came out' at the *Disruption (1843), and soon gained recognition for his remarkable success in raising funds for manses for ministers of the Free Church. From 1847 he engaged in establishing his celebrated 'Ragged Schools', where poor children could be given a sound education on a Protestant basis. At the same time he was strongly opposed to educational segregation on denominational lines within Protestantism. He also identified himself with the cause of total abstinence and in his later years emerged as a strong advocate, with Hugh Miller, of a national rather than a denominational scheme of education for Scotland, realized in the Education (Scotland) Act 1872. He was the author of many popular tracts, his most substantial work being The Gospel in Ezekiel (1856).

Autobiog. [to 1843] ed. with a Memoir by D. K. and C. J. Guthrie, sons (2 vols., London, 1874–5). Shorter studies by T. Muller (Geneva, 1890) and O. Smeaton (Edinburgh and London, 1900); also by A. L. Drummond in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 167–81. C. J. Guthrie in DNB 23 (1890), pp. 380–2; I. Donnachie and G. Hewitt, A Companion to Scottish History (1989), pp. 84 f., s.v.

Guyard (or Guyart), Marie (1599–1672), Bl Marie de l'Incarnation, first Superior of the *Ursulines at Quebec. A native of Tours, she was early drawn to the religious life, but in 1617, in obedience to her parents, married Claude Joseph Martin (d. 1620), by whom she had a son, later Dom Claude *Martin. In 1631, parting from her young son, she entered the Ursuline convent at Tours, where she was appointed novice-mistress in 1633. Inspired by visions which she had received since her childhood, with the blessing of the Abp. of Tours, she joined Mme de la Peltrie (1603–71) and two other sisters in accepting an invitation of the *Jesuit mission to form a convent in Quebec in 1639. The community, of which she was appointed superior, settled first in Lower Quebec and in 1641 moved to its present site. It engaged in educational work among French and Indians, and despite hardships of climate, fire, and attacks by the natives, prospered, largely owing to her leadership. She was the recipient of religious experiences which she recorded in obedience to her directors (1633 and 1654). Her works, published posthumously, include her letters (1681), Retraites (1682), and L'École sainte, ou Explication familière des mystères de la foi (1684). She was beatified in 1980.

Letters ed. C. Martin, OSB (Paris, 1681); fuller, more accurate edn. by G.[-M.] Oury, OSB (Solesmes, 1971). Eng. tr. of selected letters entitled Word from New France by J. Marshall (Toronto, 1967). Écrits spirituels et historiques, ed. A. Jamet, OSB (4 vols. only pub., Paris and Quebec, 1929–39), incl. her 'relations biographiques' of 1633 and 1654; the latter was repr. at Solesmes, 1976. C. Martin, OSB, La Vie de la vénérable Mère de l'Incarnation (Paris, 1677; repr., Solesmes, 1982). Other Lives by F. X. Charlevoix (Paris, 1724), H. R. Casgrain (Quebec, 1864), P. F. Richaudeau (Paris, 1874), and G.-M. Oury, OSB (Mémoires de la Société Archéologique de Touraine, 58–9; 1973), and other works of this author. P. Renaudin, Une Grande Mystique française au XVII^e siècle: Marie de l'Incarnation. . . . Essai de psychologie religieuse (1935). Bremond, 6 (1922), pp. 3–176. G.-M. Oury, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 487–507, s.v. 'Marie de l'Incarnation'.

Guyon, Madame (1648–1717), French *Quietist writer. Jeanne Marie Bouvier de la Mothe was born at Montargis. After a disturbed childhood, in 1664 she married Jacques Guyon, an invalid and 22 years her senior. The unhappiness of her life with her husband and mother-in-law turned her increasingly to a life of intensive prayer and she began to have mystical experiences; she found encouragement and lifelong friendship in the Duchesse de Béthune. After her husband's death (1676), she met a *Barnabite priest, François Lacombe (1643–1715), who became her spiritual director. In his company she undertook a five years' journey through France, endeavouring to propagate her methods of prayer. Soon after their return to Paris (1686), and the condemnation of M. de *Molinos (1687), they were suspected of a similar heresy and of immorality and both imprisoned. Mme Guyon was released through the efforts of Mme de Maintenon, who invited her to lecture at her girls' school at St Cyr. F. *Fénelon, whom she met in 1688 and with whom she corresponded from that time, found her mystical experiences authentic; J. B. *Bossuet, however, distrusted her illuminism, though he judged her sincere and wrote her a doctrinal letter in 1694. In the following year she requested a theological commission to clear her of the suspicion of heresy. The Conference of *Issy (1695), in which Fénelon took part and defended her, condemned her writings and she was imprisoned in various convents and finally in the Bastille (1698). She was released in 1703 on making her submission and spent the rest of her life in Blois under the close supervision of her son. Her chief mystical writings include Moyen court et très facile de faire oraison (1685) and Le Cantique des cantiques (1688). She taught complete detachment from the world, indifference to suffering and misfortune, self-abasement, and submission to God's will in pure love. She also developed a devotion to the Child Jesus. Her prayer of quietude and simplicity found an echo among *Quakers, in J. *Wesley, and among German *Pietists.

Works ed. by her disciple, P. *Poiret (39 vols., 'Cologne', 1712–22 [completed by friends after his death]). Modern edns. by B. Sahler of her correspondence with Fénelon (Paris, 1982) and of her autobiog. (ibid., 1983). Part 4 of her autobiog., Récits de captivité, first ed. M.-L. Gondal (Grenoble [1992]). Eng. tr. of her autobiog. by T. T. Allen (2 vols., London, 1897); of her Poems by W. *Cowper (Newport Pagnell, 1801). M.-L. Gondal, Madame Guyon (1648–1717): Un nouveau visage (Textes, Dossiers, Documents, 12 [1989]). M. Masson, Fénelon & Mme Guyon: Documents nouveaux et inédits (1907). M. de la Bedoyere, The Archbishop and the Lady: The Story of Fénelon and Madame Guyon (1956). F. Mallet-Joris, Jeanne Guyon [1978]. H. *Bremond, Apologie pour Fénelon (1910), pp. 3–150. R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), pp. 319–52. Pourrat, 4, pp. 231–66. L. Cognet in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1306–36, s.v. See also bibl. to FÉNELON and QUIETISM.

H

Habakkuk, Book of. The eighth of the *Minor Prophets. It opens with Habakkuk's complaint at the reign of oppression and lawlessness and God's answer that punishment is imminent in the invasion by the Chaldeans. The Prophet, terrified lest God should abandon His people, is instructed that the Chaldeans, too, will eventually fall through pride and idolatry. Ch. 3, a poem (or psalm), describes a vision of the Holy God coming from Mount Paran to work the deliverance of His people and expresses the writer's unshakeable confidence in Him.

The date of the Book has been variously fixed between the last years of the reign of Manasseh (698–643) and the second cent. BC, but a date in the late 7th or early 6th cent. seems most probable. Scholars favouring an earlier date argue that the 'Chaldeans' mentioned in the Book in its present form have replaced an earlier 'Assyrians'; those who place it later maintain that the 'Chaldeans' (Chasdim) have either replaced or stand for an earlier 'Kittim', i.e. Cypriots or Greeks, a suggestion to some extent supported by a commentary on Habakkuk found among the *Dead Sea Scrolls which explains that Chaldeans 'refers to the Kittim'.

Most scholars are agreed that ch. 3 is an independent addition, and this hypothesis finds support in the fact that the Dead Sea commentary covers only chs. 1–2. It has long been recognized that this last chapter is a liturgical piece, but many now regard the first two chapters as the work of a cult prophet attached to the Jerusalem Temple, whether or not he was also the author of ch. 3.

Chs. 1–2 are written in the form of a dialogue of great power and beauty between Yahweh and His prophet. Their central message is that, while the Chaldean is filled with pride, 'the just shall live by his faith' (2: 4), which will sustain the innocent who is involved in the sufferings of the guilty. This passage has played an important part in Christian thought through its use in Rom. 1: 17 and in Gal. 3: 11, and also in Heb. 10: 38, as the starting-point of the theological concept of faith.

Comm. by W. H. Ward (ICC on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., Joel, 1912; sep. pagination), J. H. Eaton (Torch Bib. Comm., on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1961, pp. 81–118), and J. D. Watts (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Joel, Obad., Jon., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1975, pp. 121–52). P. Humbert, Problèmes du livre d'Habaccuc (Neuchâtel, 1944). W. H. Brownlee, The Text of Habakkuk in the Ancient Commentary from Qumran (Journal of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 11; 1959). P. Jöcken, Das Buch Habakuk: Darstellung der Geschichte seiner kritischen Erforschung (Bonner biblische Beiträge, 48 [1977]). R. D. Haak, Habakkuk (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 44; '1992' [1991]). W. F. Albright, 'The Psalm of Habakkuk', in Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to . . . Theodore H. Robinson, ed. H. H. Rowley (1950), pp. 1–18; E. Nielsen, 'The Righteous and the Wicked in Habaqquq', Studia Theologica, 6 (1953), pp. 54–78; J. H. Eaton, 'The Origin and Meaning of Habakkuk 3', ZATW 76 (1964), pp. 144–71. E. Cothenet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 8 (1972), cols. 791–811, s.v. 'Prophètes'; M. A. Sweeney in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1–6, s.v.

habit (religious dress). The distinctive outward sign of the religious state. A habit is worn by all members of the old orders (monks, friars, and nuns), and normally consists of a tunic, belt or girdle, scapular, hood for men and veil for women, and a cloak for use in choir and out of doors. The colours are, as a rule, white, brown, or black. Some modern orders and congregations dispense with a habit in the case of men (e.g. the *Jesuits). In recent years drastic modifications have been made in the habits of some of the women's orders, esp. those engaged in teaching.

habitual grace. See GRACE.

haburah. See CHABURAH.

Hackney Phalanx. A rather loosely defined group of Anglican High Churchmen associated with Joshua Watson (1771–1855), his brother John James Watson (1767–1839), Rector of Hackney and later Archdeacon of St Albans, and Henry Handley Norris (1771–1850), Rector of South Hackney and one of the founders of the *National Society. They were sometimes referred to as the 'Clapton Sect' (from the nearby home of Joshua Watson), paralleling the Evangelical '*Clapham Sect'.

E. Churton (ed.), Memoir of Joshua Watson (2 vols., 1861), passim; A. B. Webster, Joshua Watson (1954), pp. 18–32. F. W. Cornish, The English Church in the Nineteenth Century, 1 (1910), pp. 62–76. C. Dewey, The Passing of Barchester (1991), pp. 125–41 and 149–68.

Hades (Gk. ᾅδης). The place or state of departed spirits. The word is used in the *Septuagint as a translation for the Hebrew '*Sheol' (e.g. Is. 38: 18). In later Judaism the term took on a more definite meaning, of a place of reward for the pious dead, or alternatively, and later, of a place of waiting before judgement. In English usage it first appears *c.*1600, as a term used to explain the article in the Creed, 'He descended into hell', where the place of waiting (the place of 'the souls in prison', 1 Pet. 3: 19) into which the Lord is there affirmed to have gone after the Crucifixion needed to be distinguished from that more usually called 'hell', i.e. the place or state of those finally damned. See also HELL and DESCENT OF CHRIST INTO HELL.

G. Beer, 'Der biblische Hades', in Theologische Abhandlungen: Festgabe zum 17. Mai 1902 für H. J. Holtzmann, ed. W. Nowack and others (1902), pp. 2–29. J. Jeremias in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 146–50 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 146–9), s.v. ᾅδης, with suppl. bibl. in 10 (pt. 2; 1979), p. 959; W. Bauer, Griechisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch zum den Schriften des Neuen Testaments (5th edn., 1958), cols. 32 f. (Eng. tr., 1979, pp. 16 f.), s.v. ᾅδης. See also bibl. to DESCENT INTO HELL.

Hadewijch (the Dutch equivalent of 'Hedwig'), 13th-cent. contemplative writer. She spoke the dialect of Brabant and a number of passages from her Visions and letters suggest that she belonged to a community of *Beguines. Nothing is known of her life except what can be deduced from her works, which show that she was well versed in the Latin Bible, in theology, and in secular French romantic literature. Her Visions, letter-treatises, Poems in Stanzas, and Poems in Couplets all treat of the union of the soul with a God who transcends all union. She reflected deeply on the poetic process. In Letter 17 she explains how she had been moved to compose seemingly artless couplets, alluding to the Trinitarian mysteries and to their reflection in human nature and in her love of the divine and of the human; she concludes that her work surpasses her own expository powers: 'The kingdom of this earth cannot understand heavenly things, for people can reason about everything on earth and find words enough for it, but I can find neither words nor reason for this'. Though her 'love-mysticism' (an unhappy rendering of Brautmystik) was in the tradition of St *Bernard, she was pre-eminent in assimilating this and adapting the concepts and terminology of courtly love for Christian ends. This begs the still-unanswered question whether the language and ideals of mystical theology are derived from earthly models or the other way round. In the 14th cent. her letters are quoted by J. van *Ruysbroeck and were translated into High German, but in modern times direct knowledge of her works was recovered only in 1838 when two 14th-cent. manuscripts in Brussels were studied and in 1857 positively identified as hers. A number of the Poems in Couplets (25–9), however, are now attributed to a follower, 'Hadewijch II', herself greatly gifted, and the authorship of others (17–24) is disputed.

Crit. edn. of Flemish texts by J. van Mierlo, SJ: De Visioenen, 2 vols., Louvain, 1924–5; Strophische Gedichten [Poems in Stanzas], 2 vols., Antwerp, 1942; Brieven [Letters], 2 vols., ibid., 1947; and Mengeldichten [Poems in Couplets] (incl. texts of Hadewijch II), ibid., 1952, and by R. Guarnieri: Cinque lettere con testo brabantino, Brescia, 1950. Eng. tr. of Complete Works [excl. works of Hadewijch II] by C. Hart, OSB (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1981). Letters 1–20 also tr. by E. Colledge, Mediaeval Netherlands Religious Literature (Leiden, etc., 1965), pp. 31–87. N. de Paepe, Hadewijch, Strofische Gedichten: Een studie van de minne in het kader der 12ᵉ en 13ᵉ eeuwse mystiek en profane minnelyriek (Koninklijke Vlaamse Academie voor Taal- en Letterkunde, 11.2; 1967) and other works of this author. J. van Mierlo, SJ, 'Hadewijch, une mystique flamande du treizième siècle', Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, 5 (1924), pp. 269–89 and 380–404. J. Reynaert, De Beeldspraak van Hadewijch (Amsterdam, 1981); P. Mommaers, Hadewijch [in Dutch] (Averbode and Kempen, 1989); S. M. M. Jansen, The Measure of Mystic Thought: A Study of Hadewijch's Mengeldichten (Göppinger Arbeiten zur Germanistik, 536; 1991); J. Reynaert, 'Hadewijch: mystic poetry and courtly love', in E. Kooper (ed.), Medieval Dutch Literature in its European Context (Cambridge, 1994), pp. 208–25. J.-B. M. Porion, O. Cart., in Dict. Sp. 7 (1969), cols. 13–23, s.v.

Hadrian I (d. 795), Pope from 772. He was a Roman of noble birth. During his long pontificate he continued the policy of *Stephen III of maintaining close relations with *Charlemagne. By persuading Charlemagne to conquer Lombardy (774) and depose its king, Desiderius, he freed the Papacy from a long-standing menace. But Charlemagne's increased power meant a corresponding limitation of the Church's freedom, though Hadrian's personal relations with Charlemagne continued for the most part amicable. Charlemagne occasionally intervened in purely ecclesiastical matters, e.g. in defending the claims of the Abp. of *Ravenna against the Pope. The Pope also enlisted the King's help in suppressing *Adoptianism and supported him in his efforts for uniformity in liturgy and canon law. In the *Iconoclastic controversy, however, Hadrian and Charlemagne differed, and the latter, refusing to sanction the decisions of the Synod of *Nicaea of 787, formally condemned them at Frankfurt in 794. Hadrian was a notable administrator, restoring aqueducts, walls, and towers, and fortifying the city of Rome. See also GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY.

His epp. are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 1203–44, and 98. 261–438. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 486–523 (Eng. tr., with introd., by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1992, pp. 107–72). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (1911), pp. 134–48. E. Caspar, 'Das Papsttum unter fränkischer Herrschaft', ZKG 54 (1935), pp. 132–264, esp. pp. 150–214. M. Jugie, AA, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 614–19; O. Bertolini in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 1 (1960), pp. 312–23, s.v. 'Adriano I'. On the collection of canons which goes under his name (the so-called 'Hadriana'), cf. F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870), pp. 441–71.

Hadrian IV (c. 1100–59), Nicholas Breakspear, Pope from 1154. He is the only Englishman who has occupied the See of Peter. Prob. the son of a clerk attached to *St Albans, he studied in France, and having entered the *Augustinian monastery of St Rufus near *Avignon became Abbot in 1137. When on a mission to Rome he was retained by *Eugenius III (1145–53), who appointed him Cardinal Bp. of Albano at some date before 1150. Soon afterwards he was sent as Papal legate on a mission to Scandinavia, where he reorganized the Churches of *Sweden and *Norway, made Trondheim (Nidaros) an independent archbishopric (1152) and did much to reform abuses. In 1154 he was unanimously elected Pope. He forthwith forced the expulsion of *Arnold of Brescia (q.v.) and finally secured his execution (1155). In 1155 he exacted full homage from *Frederick I (Barbarossa) before consenting to crown him. He at first refused to recognize William I (d. 1166) as King of Sicily, but after a disastrous military campaign agreed to invest him with the territory he held in return for an oath of homage and annual tribute. His claim that the Emperor held his crown as a beneficium from the Pope precipitated a quarrel with Barbarossa which outlasted his pontificate and became acute under *Alexander III. Hadrian IV also intervened in France, where he confirmed a royal sentence against the Duke of Burgundy. Probably at the suggestion of *John of Salisbury, he granted to Henry II of England the overlordship of *Ireland; the authenticity of the bull 'Laudabiliter' by which he did so, was for long disputed, but is now generally accepted.

Surviving 'Epistolae et Privilegia' pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 188. 989–1088; further docs. calendared in P. Jaffé (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 2 (2nd edn. by G. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1888), pp. 102–45. Life by Boso, his English disciple (d. c. 1178), in LP (Duchesne), 2 (1892), pp. 388–97. H. K. Mann, Nicholas Breakspear (Hadrian IV), A.D. 1154–1159, the Only English Pope (1914); E. M. Almedingen, The English Pope: Adrian IV (1925). H. Schroers, Untersuchungen zu dem Streite Kaiser Friedrichs I mit Papst Hadrian IV, 1157–1158 (1916); M. Maccarrone, Papato e impero dalla elezione di Federico I alla morte di Adriano IV (1152–1159) (Lateranum, NS 25, 1–4; 1959). J. F. O'Doherty, 'Rome and the Anglo-Norman Invasion of Ireland', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 5th ser. 42 (1933), pp. 131–45; M. P. Sheehy, 'The Bull Laudabiliter: A Problem in Medieval Diplomatique and History', Journal of the Galway Archaeological and Historical Society, 29 (1961), pp. 45–70. W. Ullmann, 'The Pontificate of Adrian IV', Cambridge Historical Journal, 11 (1953–5), pp. 233–52. R. W. Southern, Medieval Humanism and Other Studies (Oxford, 1970), pp. 234–52. Mann, 9 (1914), pp. 231–340. M. *Creighton in DNB 1 (1885), pp. 143–6; P. Lamma in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 1 (1960), pp. 330–5, s.v. 'Adriano IV'; W. Ullmann in NCE 1 (1967), p. 146, s.v. 'Adrian IV'.

Hadrian VI (1459–1523), Pope from 1522. Adrian Dedel was a native of Utrecht. He studied under the *Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer or Zwolle, and later at Louvain, where he became a doctor of theology in 1492. In 1507 he was chosen as tutor to the future *Charles V, and from 1516 he was the virtual ruler of Spain. In the same year he became Bp. of Tortosa, and in 1517 he was made *Inquisitor of Aragon and Navarre and created cardinal. He was unanimously elected Pope in 1522 on the death of *Leo X. The principal aims of his pontificate were the reform of the Roman Curia, the reconciliation of the European princes, the check of the spread of Protestantism, and the deliverance of Europe from the menace of the Turks. But the times were against him, and Hadrian found himself compelled to struggle almost single-handed against the depravity, luxury, and restlessness of his age. His efforts after reform met with frustration on all sides. Nor was he more successful in arousing the princes of Christendom to defend Rhodes, which fell on 24 Oct. 1522. He died a premature death, worn out with the burdens of his office, after a pontificate of little over a year. He was the author of a number of theological writings, only two of which, the Commentarii in IV libros Sententiarum (1516) and the Quaestiones Quodlibeticae (1515), were published. Except Marcellus II, he is the only Pope of modern times who has retained his baptismal name.

M. Gachard (ed.), Correspondance de Charles-Quint et d'Adrien VI (1859). A. Mercati (ed.), Diarii di Concistori del pontificato di Adriano VI (ST 157, 1951, pp. 83–113). There are facsimile reprs. of parts of his two pub. works (listed above) from Italian edns. of 1522, Ridgewood, NJ, 1964. C. Burmann (ed.), Hadrianus VI, sive Analecta Historica de Hadriano VI (Utrecht, 1727). E. H. J. Reusens (ed.), Anecdota Adriani Sexti . . . partim ex codice ipsius Adriani autographo, partim ex autographis (Louvain, 1862). C. von Höfler, Papst Adrian VI, 1522–3 (1880); E. Hocks, Der letzte deutsche Papst (1939), with further bibl. E. H. J. Reusens, Syntagma Doctrinae Theologicae Adriani Sexti P.M. . . . una cum Apparatu de Vita et Scriptis Adriani (Louvain, 1862). E. Rodocanachi, Les Pontificats d'Adrien VI et de Clément VII (1933), pp. 7–86 and 273–9, with bibl. pp. 281–4. Arts. by R. R. Post and others in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 35 (1959), pp. 524–629 (issue commemorating the 5th centenary of his birth). K.-H. Ducke, Handeln zum Heil: Eine Untersuchung zur Morallehre Hadrians VI. (Erfurter Theologische Studien, 34; 1976). Pastor, 9 (1910), pp. 1–230. M. Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 1 (1960), pp. 337–42, s.v. 'Adriano VI'.

Hadrian the African, St (d. 709/10), monk. An African by birth, he became head of a monastery near Naples and a great friend of Pope *Vitalian. Having declined the Pope's offer of the see of *Canterbury for himself, he was instrumental in securing the appointment for *Theodore of Tarsus, and set out with him for England in 668. He was detained in France on the way, but arrived at Canterbury two years later, where he became abbot of the monastery of Sts Peter and Paul (later St Augustine's) and master of the school. For 40 years he furthered the movement for conforming the religious customs and practices of England to those of Rome. A man of great learning, he keenly furthered education, and established schools in different parts of England. Feast day, 9 Jan.

*Bede, HE 4. 1 f.; 5. 20, 23; notes to Baedae Opera Historica, ed. C. Plummer, 2 (1896), pp. 202–5, 233, and 329. The passages from Bede and the legend as given by J. Capgrave in AASS, Jan. 1 (1643), pp. 595–7. Hardy, 1, pt. 1 (1862), pp. 403 f. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 94–7. B. Bischoff and M. Lapidge (eds.), Biblical Commentaries from the Canterbury School of Theodore and Hadrian (Cambridge, 1994), with introd., pp. 82–189.

Hadrianum. The name given by modern scholars to the book sent c. 790 by Pope *Hadrian I in response to *Charlemagne's request for a copy of the standard Roman Mass book. See GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY.

Haeckel, Ernst Heinrich (1834–1919), German scientist. A native of Potsdam, he became director of the Zoological Institute of Jena in 1862 and professor of biology in 1865. He remained at Jena till his death. A keen naturalist, he popularized C. *Darwin's theory of evolution in a treatise on General Morphology (1866) and in Natürliche Schöpfungsgeschichte (1867; Eng. tr., 1892). In his most widely read book, Die Welträtsel (1899; Eng. tr., The Riddle of the Universe, 1901), he attempted to apply Darwin's theories to philosophical and religious questions. He upheld the essential unity of organic and inorganic nature and derived all the phenomena of life, physical, intellectual, and spiritual, from natural causes, denying all doctrines of a personal God, of human free will, and of the immortality of the soul. His theories are chiefly of historical interest.

Was wir Ernst Haeckel verdanken: Ein Buch der Verehrung und Dankbarkeit, ed. H. Schmidt (2 vols., 1914). Überweg, 4, pp. 321–5 (incl. list of Haeckel's writings) and 705–7 (long bibl.). D. Gasman, The Scientific Origins of National Socialism: Social Darwinism in Ernst Haeckel and the German Monist League (1971).

Haeretico Comburendo, De. See DE HAERETICO COMBURENDO.

Hagenau, Conference of. The gathering from 25 June to 28 July 1540 convened by the Emp. *Charles V to discuss the points of dispute between the Catholics and Protestants of Germany. Unable to agree on which points to discuss and how to proceed, the conference broke up without achieving any result. It was arranged that there should later be another gathering at Worms. See WORMS, CONFERENCE OF.

L. Cardauns, Zur Geschichte der kirchlichen Unions- und Reformsbestrebungen von 1538 bis 1542 (Bibliothek des kgl. Preussischen historischen Instituts in Rom, 5; 1910), pp. 33–7, with various relevant docs., pp. 131–57; C. Augustijn, De Godsdienstgesprekken tussen Rooms-Katholieken en Protestanten van 1538 to 1541 (Haarlem, 1967), pp. 36–45, with bibl., pp. 142–6. Pastor, 11 (1912), pp. 391–6, with refs. G. Kawerau in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 333–5, s.v. 'Hagenauer Religionsgespräch'. See also bibl. to CHARLES V and WORMS, CONFERENCE OF.

Haggadah (Heb. הַגָּדָה 'narrative'). In Judaism the term is used in two senses: (1) for the ritual of reading prayers that accompany the *Passover meal, consisting mainly of elaborations on the theme of the biblical narrative of the Exodus from Egypt; (2) (in this sense also 'Aggadah') for those parts of the traditional literature (*Midrash and *Talmud) not comprehended under the heading *Halachah, and in particular for tales and legends concerning biblical or rabbinic figures, prob. derived from ancient sources.

(1) C. Raphael, A Feast of History: The drama of Passover through the ages, with a new translation of the Haggadah for use at the Seder [1972]. (2) L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, tr. from Ger. by H. Szold and others (7 vols., Philadelphia, 1909–38). G. G. Porton in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 19 f., s.v.

Haggai, Book of. The tenth of the *Minor Prophets. The Book, dated in the second year of Darius, i.e. 520–519 BC, consists of four separate discourses concerned to promote the rebuilding of the *Temple. It is addressed esp. to the two leaders of the people, Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, and Joshua, the son of Jehozadak, the high priest. Though the foundations of the Temple had been laid, the work had been interrupted. The first discourse (1: 4–11) attributes the prevalent drought and famine to the people's neglect of rebuilding the Temple; in the second (2: 2–9) the prophet consoles the Jews for the inferiority of the present building and prophesies a glorious future in the Messianic age, when all the nations will come to Jerusalem; the third prophecy (2: 11–19) predicts a return of fertility to the land; and the fourth (2: 21–24) promises Zerubbabel victory over his enemies. This last prophecy has traditionally been regarded as referring to the *Messiah. The Book has perhaps been edited in the light of the account in Ezra 3–6.

Comm. by H. G. Mitchell (ICC on Hag., Zech., Mal., and Jonah, 1912, pp. 3–79), R. [A.] Mason (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Hag., Zech., and Mal., 1977, pp. 12–26), D. L. Petersen (London, on Hag. and Zech. 1–8, 1985, pp. 17–127), and C. L. and E. M. Meyers (Anchor Bible, on Hag. and Zech. 1–8, 1987, pp. 1–84). P. R. Ackroyd, 'Studies in the Book of Haggai', Journal of Jewish Studies, 2 (1951), pp. 163–76; 3 (1952), pp. 1–13; F. S. North, 'Critical Analysis of the Book of Haggai', ZATW 68 (1956), pp. 25–46; K. Koch, 'Haggais unreines Volk', ibid. 79 (1967), pp. 52–66. H. W. Wolff in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 355–60, s.v. 'Haggai/Haggaibuch', with extensive bibl.

Hagiographa (Gk. ἁγιόγραφα, 'sacred writings'; Heb. כְּתוּבִים, writings'). A title applied to the third division of the OT canonical Scriptures, i.e. all Books not belonging to the 'Law' or the 'Prophets'. The Books comprised are Pss., Prov., Job; the five *Megilloth, i.e. Ruth, Lam., Song of Songs, Eccles., and Esther; and Dan., 1 and 2 Chron., Ezra, Neh. They were the latest Books in the Hebrew OT to achieve canonicity.

hagiography. The writing of the lives of the saints. The lives vary widely in the importance their authors attach to historical accuracy, oral tradition (usually associated with the cult of a saint), and literary form. Recent scholarship has emphasized the influences possibly exerted by the ancient Greek novel, NT Apocrypha, collections of Lives of the philosophers and other literary works. The primary sources include *martyrologies, *passions, calendars, biographies, prose and verse compositions, and liturgical texts. The earliest collection of such material, now unhappily lost, was that compiled by *Eusebius (*c.*260–*c.*340). The critical examination of these writings, which dates from the 17th cent., has been esp. fostered by the *Bollandists. See also ACTA SANCTORUM.

The principal collections of sources, besides the Acta Sanctorum (q.v.), are listed under the various countries and religious orders (qq.v.); many also in EC (see below). Socii Bollandiani, Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca (Brussels, 1895; 3rd edn. by F. Halkin, 1957; Novum Auctarium, by id., 1984); idd., Bibliotheca Hagiographica Latina Antiquae et Mediae Aetatis (2 vols., ibid., 1898–1901; suppl. 1911; new suppl., by H. Fros, 1986); idd., Bibliotheca Hagiographica Orientalis (ibid., 1910). A. *Butler, The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs and other Principal Saints (homiletic; 4 vols., 1756–9; rev. by H. Thurston and by D. Attwater, 12 vols., 1926–38, with suppl. vol. by D. Attwater, 1949; improved edn. in 4 vols., 1956); Vies des saints et des bienheureux selon l'ordre du calendrier, by the Benedictines of Paris (13 vols., 1935–59). F. G. Holweck, A Biographical Dictionary of Saints (1924). F. von S. Doyé, Heilige und Selige der römischen Kirche (2 vols., 1929). D. H. Farmer, The Oxford Dictionary of Saints (1978; 2nd edn., 1987). P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche (ST, 8, 9, 22, 24, 27, 33, 49, 65, 176; 1902–53); id., Hagiographica (ibid. 19; 1908). H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905; Eng. tr., 1907) and other works cited, s.v. J. Minischthaler, Heiligenlegenden (2 vols., 1911–13). A. Ehrhard, Überlieferung und Bestand der hagiographischen und homiletischen Literatur der griechischen Kirche von den Anfängen bis zum Ende des 16. Jahrhunderts (TU 50 and 52; 1937–52). F. Grossi-Gondi, Principi e problemi di critica agiografica (1919). P. Peeters, SJ, Orient et Byzance: Le Tréfonds oriental de l'Hagiographie Byzantine (Subsidia Hagiographica, 26; 1950). R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie, ses sources, ses méthodes, son histoire (1953). B. de Gaiffier, SJ, 'Hagiographie et historiographie', in La Storiografia altomedievale (Settimane di Studi del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 17; Soleto, 1970), pp. 139–66. J. Gribomont, OSB, 'Panorama des influences orientales sur l'hagiographie latine', Augustinianum, 24 (1984), pp. 7–20; also other items in this number devoted to 'L'agiografia latina nei secoli IV–VII'. M. Van Uytfanghe, Stylisation biblique et condition humaine dans l'hagiographie mérovingienne [600–750] (Verhandelingen van de Koninklijke Academie voor Wetenschappen, Letteren en Schone Kunsten van België, Klasse der Letteren, Jaargang 49, nr. 120; 1987). R. Grégoire, Manuale di Agiologia: Introduzione alla Letterature agiografica (Bibliotheca Montisfani, 12; Fabriano, 1987). Analecta Bollandiana (Brussels, 1882 ff.); Hagiographica: Rivista di agiografia e biografia (Turnhout, 1994 ff.). L. Oliger, OFM, in EC 1 (1948), cols. 449–54, s.v. 'Agiografia', for further bibl.; F. Halkin, SJ, in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 894–7, s.v.; M. Van Uytfanghe in RAC 14 (1988), cols. 150–83, s.v. 'Heiligenverehrung II (Hagiographie)'.

hagiology (from Gk. ἅγιος, 'holy', and λογία, 'discourse', i.e. the science of holiness). The literature dealing with the lives and legends of the saints and their cultus. See HAGIOGRAPHY.

Hagios o Theos. See AGIOS O THEOS.

hagioscope, also 'squint'. An opening in the chancel walls of ancient churches, to permit worshippers in the transepts, side aisles, or other parts of the church from which the altar is not otherwise visible to see the elevation of the *Host at Mass.

Hail, Holy Queen. See SALVE REGINA.

Hail Mary (Lat. Ave Maria; also known as the Angelic Salutation). The form of prayer to the BVM, based on the greetings of *Gabriel (Lk. 1: 28) and *Elizabeth (Lk.

1: 42). In its modern form it is as follows: (1) 'Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee: Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus'. (2) 'Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners now and in the hour of our death'. In the W. the devotional use of (1) is first attested in the 11th cent. and became common in the 12th, whereas the complete Hail Mary, with (2) added, did not come into general use until the 16th cent. In this later form it received official recognition from its inclusion by Pope *Pius V in the Roman *Breviary of 1568. It was dropped from the Office in 1955. The Orthodox form (an expanded version of (1), prefaced by 'Virgin, Mother of God' and concluding with 'for thou hast given birth to the Saviour of our souls', with the name Jesus omitted) is first attested in the 9th cent., though a very similar form is found in the Liturgies of St *James and St *Mark and may therefore have been in use much earlier. In the public liturgy it is said most frequently during Lent.

T. Esser, OP, 'Geschichte des englischen Grusses', Hist. J. 5 (1884), pp. 88–116. S. Beissel, SJ, Geschichte der Verehrung Marias in Deutschland während des Mittelalters (1909), ch. 13, 'Das "Gegrüsset seist du, Maria" und der Rosenkranz bis zum 15. Jahrhundert', pp. 228–50; id., Geschichte der Verehrung Marias im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (1910), pp. 5–16 and passim; H. *Leclercq, OSB, 'Prière à la Vierge Marie sur un ostrakon de Louqsor', Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétiennes, 2 (1912), pp. 3–32, repr. Hefele and Leclercq, OSB, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), App. 4, pp. 1734–59; E. Vacandard, 'L'Histoire de l'"Ave Maria" ', Revue du Clergé français, 71 (1912), pp. 315–19; H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Origins of the Hail Mary', The Month, 121 (1913), pp. 162–76 and 379–84; repr. in Thurston's Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), pp. 90–114. E. Campana, Maria nel culto cattolico, 1 (1933), pp. 519–64; G. M. Roschini, OSM, 'L'Ave Maria. Note storiche', Marianum, 5 (1943), pp. 177–85. H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2043–62, s.v. 'Marie (Je vous salue)'; A. A. De Marco in NCE 6 (1967), p. 898, s.v.

hair-shirt. A shirt made of cloth woven from hair, and from an early period to the present day worn as a means of discipline by penitents and ascetics.

Halachah (Heb. הֲלָכָה, 'that by which one walks'). In rabbinic Judaism, the body of teachings having a direct practical application, in contrast to *Haggadah. The main source of Halachah are the Bible (OT), *Talmud, medieval codifications (the last and most authoritative being the Shulchan Aruch or 'Prepared Table' of Joseph Caro, first published in 1565), and the vast body of responsa. In modern Judaism the status of the Halachah constitutes one of the principal points of disagreement between Orthodox Judaism on the one hand and Liberal or Reform Judaism on the other.

M. Elon (ed.), The Principles of Jewish Law (Jerusalem [1975]). S. B. Freehof, The Responsa Literature (Philadelphia, 1955). L. Jabobs and B. De-Vries in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 7 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1156–66, s.v. 'Halakhah'.

Hales, Alexander of. See ALEXANDER OF HALES.

Hales, John (1584–1656), Anglican divine, known as the 'ever-memorable'. He was a native of Bath, and educated at Bath grammar school and at Corpus Christi College, *Oxford, where he took his degree in 1603. In 1605 he was elected Fellow of Merton, and in 1612 he became public lecturer in Greek at the university. He probably had a large share in H. *Savile's edition of St *Chrysostom (1610–13). In 1613 he pronounced the funeral oration on Sir Thomas Bodley, and in the same year became Fellow of Eton. In 1616 he went to the Netherlands as chaplain to the English ambassador, Sir Dudley Carleton, in which capacity he was present at the Synod of *Dort (1618). In 1619 he returned to Eton. In 1639 he became chaplain to Abp. W. *Laud and canon of *Windsor. He was dispossessed of his canonry by the parliamentary committee in 1642, and of his Fellowship at Eton in 1649. He then became tutor to a nephew of the Bp. of *Salisbury. He died in retirement at Eton. Perhaps the best known of his works is his tract Schism and Schismatics (written 1636, first pub. 1642), which reflects his broadminded and eirenical position. The Golden Remains was published posthumously.

Collected Works [ed. David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes] (3 vols., Glasgow, 1765). Life by J. H. Elson (New York, 1948, with detailed bibl.). R. Peters, 'John Hales and the Synod of Dort', Studies in Church History, 7 (1971), pp. 277–88. A. Gordon in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 30–2.

Half-Way Covenant, the. A doctrine current in American *Congregationalism in the 17th and 18th cents. expressive of the relationship in which those (esp. baptized) members of the community who were devoid of describable religious experience were held to be bound to God. Its purpose was by giving such persons a definite status to prevent the Church from being reduced to an assemblage of individuals and Baptism from losing all significance for those who professed no change of heart. Its scriptural basis was found in Yahweh's Covenant with *Abraham (Gen. 17: 7). The doctrine has now been generally rejected as incompatible with the principles of Congregationalism, acc. to which the only true basis of relationship of man to God must be personal faith.

R. G. Pope, The Half-Way Covenant: Church Membership in Puritan New England (Princeton, NJ, 1969). See also bibl. to UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Halifax, Charles Lindley Wood (1839–1934), second Viscount Halifax. He was the son of Sir Charles Wood, first Viscount Halifax (1800–1885), and Mary, daughter of Earl Grey, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where under the influence of E. B. *Pusey's sermons, J. M. *Neale's writings, H. P. *Liddon's friendship, and R. I. *Wilberforce's Doctrine of the Incarnation he became a strong and devoted High Churchman. In 1865 he was associated with the foundation of the *SSJE and himself had thoughts of joining the Society, but was dissuaded by R. M. *Benson. He continued, however, to take a keen interest in its work and made his annual retreat at Cowley until 1931. Acceptance in 1868 of the Presidency of the *English Church Union, vacant by Colin Lindsay's impending secession to Rome, brought him into most of the ecclesiastical controversies of his lifetime (*Athanasian Creed; *Public Worship Regulation Act; W. J. E. *Bennett and A. H. *Mackonochie cases; trial of Bp. E. *King; *Lambeth Opinions; *Deceased Wife's Sister bill; *Modernism; projects for revision of the BCP), in many of which he took a leading part. He held the office continuously until 1919 and again from 1927 until his death. A friendship with E. F. Portal which began at Madeira in 1890 led him to interest himself in promoting reunion between the C of E and the Holy See. With Portal he was responsible for initiating the conversations at Rome in 1894–6 and the publication of the Revue Anglo-Romaine; and their abortive termination by Apostolicae Curae* (13 Sept. 1896), largely, as he thought, through the influence of the English RC hierarchy under Cardinal H. *Vaughan, caused him profound disappointment. He later published a fully documented account of the negotiations in Leo XIII and Anglican Orders (1912). After the *Lambeth Appeal of 1920 he reopened the matter with Cardinal D. J. *Mercier, with whom he arranged the *Malines Conversations (q.v.); but soon after Mercier's death in Jan. 1926 they were terminated. In Jan. 1928, impatient with the caution and delay of the Anglican authorities, he issued the Report himself and, soon after, his Notes on the Conversations at Malines. This was followed in 1930 by The Conversations at Malines: Original Documents (printed in France). In 1930 he also published The Good Estate of the Catholic Church, summing up many of his ecclesiastical ideals and expressing his long-held high regard for the BCP of 1549.

His son, Edward Frederick Lindley Wood (1881–1959), Baron Irwin (1925), 1st Earl of Halifax (1944), President of the Board of Education (1922–4 and 1932–5), Viceroy of India (1926–1931), Chancellor of Oxford University (from 1933 to his death), Foreign Secretary (1938–40), and British Ambassador in Washington (1941–6), was also a devoted High Churchman. He was the author of a Life of John Keble (1909) as well as an autobiography entitled Fulness of Days (1957).

J. G. Lockhart, Charles Lindley Viscount Halifax. Part 1, 1839–85 (1935); Part 2, 1885–1934 (1936). Id. in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 919–21.

Life of Edward Frederick Lindley Wood by the Earl of Birkenhead (London, 1965). K. Rose in DNB, 1950–1960, pp. 1072–80.

Hall, Joseph (1574–1656), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and soon became keenly interested in the Roman controversy. He won favour with *James I, who in 1616 made him Dean of *Worcester and in 1618 sent him as one of his representatives to the Synod of *Dort. In 1627 he became Bp. of *Exeter, but he was held suspect by W. *Laud as being too favourable to *Calvinism and *Puritanism, though he maintained conformity in his diocese. When the bishops were attacked by the Parliament of 1640, Hall came forward to defend his order, and pleaded for an unprelatical episcopacy in his Episcopacy by Divine Right (1640). His Humble Remonstrance to the High Court of Parliament (1640–1) evoked the reply of '*Smectymnuus'. In 1641 he was translated to Norwich, but before he could reach his see was sent to the Tower with the rest of the bishops. After release, his income was impounded by Parliament, and in 1647 he was ejected from his palace and lived in poverty until his death. Hall represented the moderating influence among the bishops. Of his voluminous writings the earlier ones were verse satires, the later ones controversial and devotional. His Heaven upon Earth (1606) was reprinted by J. *Wesley in his '*Christian Library'. His Hard Measure is autobiographical and narrates the persecution of the bishops by Parliament.

Collected edns. of his works by J. Pratt (10 vols., London, 1808), P. Hall (12 vols., Oxford, 1837–9), and P. Wynter (10 vols., ibid., 1863). Modern edns. of his poetry by A. Davenport (Liverpool, 1949), of Heaven upon Earth and Characters of Virtues and Vices by R. Kirk (New Brunswick, NJ, 1948), and of Mundus Alter et Idem, by J. M. Wands, with Eng. tr. (Yale Studies in English, 190 [1981]). Lives by T. F. Kinloch (London and New York, 1951) and F. L. Huntley (Cambridge, 1979). Id., Bishop Joseph Hall and Protestant Meditation in Seventeenth-Century England: A Study with the texts of The Art of Divine Meditation (1606) and Occasional Meditations (1633) (Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies, 1; Binghamton, NY, 1981). R. A. McCabe, Joseph Hall: A Study in Satire and Meditation (Oxford, 1982). G. G. Perry in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 75–80.

Hall, Robert (1764–1831), *Baptist preacher. Born at Arnesby, Leicestershire, he was trained at the Baptist Academy at Bristol and King's College, Aberdeen. Later he became an influential preacher in Bristol (1785–90 and 1826–31), Cambridge (1791–1806) and Leicester (1807–25). He was of commanding presence and eloquence; and his discourse on Modern Infidelity (1800), his sermon on the death of Princess Charlotte (1817), and his championship of the Leicestershire laceworkers brought him a wide following. His writings include Christianity consistent with a Love of Freedom (1791; defending J. *Priestley), Reflections on War (1802), On Terms of Communion (1815) and Memoir of Thomas Toller (1821).

Works, with Memoir by O. G. Gregory (6 vols., London, 1832). Brief modern study by G. W. Hughes (ibid., 1943). A. Gordon in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 85–7.

Hallel (Heb. הַלֵּל, 'praise'). A name given by Jews to Pss. 113–18. They are recited at most of the principal Jewish festivals and during the *Passover meal, and may have been the hymn sung by Christ and the Apostles after the *Last Supper (Mt. 26: 30). Ps. 136 is called the 'Great Hallel'.

Hallelujah. See ALLELUIA.

Haller, Berchtold (1492–1536), Reformer of Berne. After studying at *Cologne, he became chaplain of the bakers' guild at Berne in 1513 and in 1520 was given the canonry formerly held by T. *Wyttenbach. From 1521 onwards he was in contact with U. *Zwingli, whose doctrine he adopted, though he was acquitted on a charge of heresy in 1523. Together with Wyttenbach and the painter, Nicholas Manuel, he was at the centre of the 'Reformation Party' in Berne. He took part in the Disputations of Baden (1526) and *Berne (1528), collaborating with F. Kolb in the composition of a Protestant liturgy and the reformatory edict of 1528. In 1532 he took part, with W. *Capito, in the Synod which confirmed the Reformation in Berne and secured Haller's recognition as the city's religious leader. His attempts to establish Protestantism in Solothurn (1530) failed and his last years were filled with controversies against the *Anabaptist movement. He left no writings and his letters have not, so far, been collected.

M. Kirchhofer, Bertold Haller oder die Reformation von Bern (1828); C. Pestalozzi, Bertold Haller (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche; Elberfeld, 1861). G. [W.] Locher, Der Berner Synodus von 1532

(2 vols., Neukirchen, 1984–8, incl. edn. of proceedings in vol. 1). I. Backus, The Disputations of Baden, 1526, and Berne, 1528 (Studies in Reformed Theology and History, 1, no. 1; Princeton, NJ, 1993), passim. F. Trechsel and E. Blösch in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 366–70, with bibl.

halo (or nimbus). A circle or disc of light round the head or, more rarely, round the whole body. It was used in the religious symbolism of the Hellenistic period as a distinguishing mark in the representation of gods and demigods, later also of the Roman Emperors. Christian art adopted it only gradually. In the 3rd and 4th cents. its use was restricted to Christ and the Lamb, from the 5th cent. it was extended to the BVM, the angels and the saints, and soon also to other important personages. In the Middle Ages the round halo was used only for angels and saints, in the case of Christ being usually distinguished by a cross or the monogram A and Ω (or, in the E., by the words ὁ ὤν [cf. Ex. 3: 14 LXX]), whereas at the same period a rectangular form was sometimes employed for the representation of living people, esp. Popes and bishops, as in the famous picture of St *Gregory the Great formerly in the monastery of Clivus Scauri at Rome. The colour of the halo seems originally to have been blue, but from the 5th and 6th cents. gold, yellow, or rainbow colours were preferred. In modern RC practice a halo is permitted only for persons canonized or beatified or whose cultus has been otherwise approved.

A. Krücke, Der Nimbus und verwandte Attribute in der frühchristlichen Kunst (Strasbourg, 1905); J. Wilpert, Die römischen Mosaiken und Malereien der kirchlichen Bauten vom 4. bis 13. Jahrhundert, 1 (2nd edn., 1917), pp. 97–113; 2 (2nd edn., 1917), pp. 1193–5; M. Collinet-Guérin, Histoire du Nimbe des origines aux temps modernes [1961]; K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, 1 (1928), pp. 25–9, with refs. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1953), cols. 1272–312, s.v. 'Nimbe', and J. H. Emminghaus in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 1004 f., s.v. 'Nimbus'.

Hamann, Johann Georg (1730–88), German religious thinker. He was born at Königsberg. After having followed a rather irregular course of studies at the university from 1746, he became a private tutor in 1752. In 1756 he entered the service of a merchant of Riga, who in the following year sent him to London on a business enterprise which proved a failure. This disappointment was accompanied by an interior crisis, resulting in a conversion experience in March 1758. Having returned to Königsberg in 1759, he nursed his ailing father until his death in 1766. He then accepted a subaltern post at an excise office, which left him sufficient time for his literary pursuits.

Hamann was one of the fathers of the German 'Storm and Stress' movement. A prophet of religious 'immediacy', he proclaimed the rights of the individual personality and attacked the rationalism of the *Enlightenment. His works are written in an aphoristic and somewhat obscure style, which earned him the title of 'The Magus in the North'. The best known are Sokratische Denkwürdigkeiten (1759), Aesthetica in nuce (1761), and Golgatha und Scheblimini! (1784). In the last of these, his most important contribution to religious thought, he upholds Christianity as the historical revelation of the Triune God, of Atonement and of Redemption, against the rationalistic popular philosophy of Moses Mendelssohn. Though a personal friend of I. *Kant, he opposed his philosophy and insisted on the importance of inner experience, esp. in matters of religion. He regarded himself as the rejuvenator of Lutheranism, and in this, as in other respects, was a precursor of S. A. *Kierkegaard.

Edns. of his Works by F. Roth and G. A. Wiener (8 Theile in 9 vols., Augsburg, 1821–43), C. H. Gildemeister (6 vols., Gotha, 1857–73), and J. Nadler (6 vols., Vienna, 1949–57); Correspondence ed. W. Ziesemer and A. Henkel (7 vols., Wiesbaden, 1955–79); Hauptschriften erklärt by F. Blanke and others (vols. 1, 2, 4, 5, and 7; Gütersloh, 1956–63), with bibl. in vol. 1; Kreuz und Kritik: Johann Georg Hammans Letztes Blatt. Text und Interpretation, ed. O. Bayr and C. Knudsen (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 66; Tübingen, 1983). Selections from his writings, in Eng. tr., in R. G. Smith, J. G. Hamann . . . A Study in Christian Existence (1960). Eng. tr. of his Sokratische Denkwürdigkeiten, with very full introd., by J. C. O'Flaherty (Baltimore, 1967). Studies by J. Nadler (Salzburg [1949]), H. A. Salmony (vol. 1 only; Zollikon, 1958), W. Koepp (Göttingen, 1965), W. M. Alexander (The Hague, 1966; in Eng.), T. J. German (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1981), and H. Corbin (Paris [1985]); also a collection of important arts. of various dates ed. R. Wild (Wege der Forschung, 511; Darmstadt, 1978). O. Bayer, Zeitgenosse im Widerspruch: Johann Georg Hamann als radikaler Aufklärer (Munich, 1988). I. Berlin, The Magus of the North: J. G. Hamann and the Origins of Modern Irrationalism, ed. H. Hardy (1993). O. Bayer in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 395–403, s.v.

Hamartolos, George. See GEORGE HAMARTOLOS.

Hamilton, John (1511–71), Abp. of St Andrews. The natural son of James Hamilton, first Earl of Arran, he entered the *Benedictine monastery of Kilwinning as a boy but probably never became a monk. In 1525 he was appointed Abbot of Paisley, and retained the office till his death. In 1540 he took a three-year course of studies at *Paris. On his return to Scotland he was appointed keeper of the privy seal and in 1544 Bp. of Dunkeld (consecrated 1546). After the assassination of D. *Beaton he was made Abp. of St Andrews and Primate of Scotland in 1547 (having effective tenure from 1549). From this time until his death he was one of the most influential opponents of Protestantism. He called a succession of synods (1548, 1549, 1552, and 1559) with the view to a reform of the morals of the clergy and the religious education of the laity, the chief result of which was the compilation of a valuable catechism in the vernacular, known as Archbishop Hamilton's Catechism (1552). In 1560 he protested against the acceptance by Parliament of J. *Knox's new confession of faith. Three years later he was imprisoned for saying Mass and hearing confessions, but was released at the intervention of Queen *Mary, whose son, later *James VI, he baptized in 1566. In her subsequent troubles he became her faithful supporter, advising her, though in vain, to remain in Scotland. After her flight he was pronounced a traitor and captured at Dumbarton Castle, where he had sought safety. Three days later he was hanged at Stirling in his pontifical vestments.

A man of political prudence and moderation and an intrepid defender of his religion, Hamilton was not blameless in his personal life. He had several illegitimate children, and his annulment of Bothwell's marriage which enabled him to marry the Queen was gravely irregular. On the other hand, his complicity in the assassinations of Darnley and Moray, of which he was accused, is doubtful.

His Catechism and The Two-Penny Faith, ed. together, with introd. by A. F. Mitchell (Edinburgh, 1882); the Catechism also ed. by T. G. Law (Oxford, 1884). J. Robertson, Concilia Scotiae (Bannatyne Club, 1866), 1, pp. 147–82. T. G. Law in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 190–2.

Hamilton, Patrick (c. 1504–28), Scottish Protestant proto-martyr. While still a boy, in 1517, he was made titular Abbot of Ferne. He studied at Paris, where M. *Luther's writings attracted his attention, and afterwards at St Andrews. From 1526 he began to show open sympathy with Lutheran ideas and in 1527 he visited both *Wittenberg, where he met Luther and P. *Melanchthon, and *Marburg with its newly founded Protestant university. Here he wrote his only work, a set of Loci Communes ('Patrick's Places'). Towards the end of 1527 he returned to Scotland. A. *Alesius, who was deputed to convince him of his errors, was himself converted to the Protestant creed. Early in the following year Hamilton was formally charged with heresy by Abp. James Beaton and burnt at the stake on 29 Feb.

A. Cameron (ed.), Patrick Hamilton, First Scottish Martyr of the Reformation (1929). W. A. Clebsch, England's Earliest Protestants 1520–1535 (Yale Publications in Religion, 11; 1964), pp. 81–5; J. E. McGoldrick, 'Patrick Hamilton, Luther's Scottish Disciple', Sixteenth Century Journal, 18 (1987), pp. 81–8; id., Luther's Scottish Connection [Cranbury, NJ, etc., 1989], pp. 35–54, with tr. by J. *Frith of 'Patrick's Places', pp. 74–100. Æ. Mackay in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 201–3.

Hamilton, Walter Kerr (1808–69), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was the first of the *Tractarians to become a diocesan bishop in England. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford, he was for a time a Fellow and tutor of Merton College and from 1837 to 1841 Vicar of St Peter's-in-the-East, Oxford; and from *c.*1838 he came under the influence of the *Oxford Movement. In 1841 he became a canon of Salisbury and in 1854 Bishop. Here he did much to stimulate the spiritual life of his diocese, e.g. by instituting diocesan *retreats; and in 1860 he founded Salisbury Theological College. In 1861–4 he prosecuted Rowland Williams (1817–70), one of the contributors to Essays and Reviews, whose benefice was in his diocese. In his Charge for 1867 he defended the Eucharistic Sacrifice, the Real Presence, and Sacramental Confession; and he was attacked by Lord Portman in the House of Lords. He was devoted to his work at Salisbury Cathedral and in 1853 issued Cathedral Reform.

H. P. *Liddon, W. K. Hamilton. A Sketch, repr. with Additions and Corrections, from the Guardian* (1869); id., Life in Death: A Sermon preached in Salisbury Cathedral on 8 Aug. 1869. W. A. Greenhill in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 216 f.

Hammond, Henry (1605–60), Anglican divine. Born at Chertsey, Surrey, he was educated at Eton and Magdalen College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1625. He was ordained in 1629. He belonged to the intellectual circle of Great Tew, Lord Falkland's house north of Oxford, along with Edward Hyde (the future Earl of Clarendon), G. *Sheldon, *W. Chillingworth, and others. In 1633 he was presented to the living of Penshurst, Kent, where he instituted daily services in church and monthly celebrations of the Holy Communion. In 1643 he was appointed Archdeacon of *Chichester and also nominated a member of the *Westminster Assembly, but never sat. Forced to leave Penshurst during the Civil War, he returned to Oxford and composed his Practical Catechism (pub. anon. 1645), which became very popular. As chaplain to the royal commissioners at the conference at Uxbridge in 1645, he defended *episcopacy. In the same year he was appointed a Canon of *Christ Church, Oxford, and Chaplain in Ordinary to *Charles I. He attended the King until his imprisonment at Carisbrooke in Dec. 1647. He was deprived of his canonry and confined first in Oxford and then under light restraint at Clapham, Bedfordshire. In 1649 or 1650 he moved to Westwood, Worcs. He suffered from the decree (1655) forbidding the clergy of the C of E to exercise their ministry and devoted himself to relieving the deprived clergy and to raising funds for the training of future ordinands. Throughout his life he maintained a discipline bordering on asceticism.

Besides publishing numerous pamphlets and pastoral treatises, Hammond compiled A Paraphrase and Annotations upon all the Books of the New Testament (1653), a pioneer work of English biblical criticism. He also assisted B. *Walton in the production of his *Polyglot Bible (1657) and wrote a prefatory letter for *The Whole Duty of Man.

Works ed. W. Fulman (4 vols., London, 1674–84); repr. by N. Pocock as The Miscellaneous Theological Works of Henry Hammond (LACT, 3 vols. in 4, 1847–50). Life by Bp. J. *Fell, orig. pub. London, 1661, is repr. among Hammond's works. Short Life by G. G. Perry (London [1862]). J. W. Packer, The Transformation of Anglicanism 1643 1660, with special reference to Henry Hammond (Manchester, 1969). P. Jansen, De Blaise Pascal à Henry Hammond: Les Provinciales en Angleterre (1954), esp. pp. 70–84. H. Trevor-Roper, Catholics, Anglicans and Puritans: Seventeenth Century Essays (1987), No. 4 ('The Great Tew Circle'), pp. 166–230, esp. pp. 215–27. R. Hooper in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 242–6.

Hampden, Renn Dickson (1793–1868), Bp. of *Hereford. After a brilliant university career he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1814, and made friends with T. *Arnold and R. *Whately, both *Broad Churchmen like himself. In 1832 he expounded in his *Bampton Lectures on The Scholastic Philosophy, considered in its relations to Christian Theology a view of Christianity in which its dogmatic elements were greatly reduced. In 1833 he was appointed Principal of St Mary's Hall, Oxford. His name came into much prominence in 1836 when the *Tractarians, suspicious of his theology, unsuccessfully attempted to prevent his becoming Regius professor of divinity. In 1837, however, his suspension from the board which nominated Select Preachers was achieved. In 1847 Lord John Russell offered him the see of Hereford, and, despite violent High Church opposition, he was consecrated bishop in the following March. He administered his see conscientiously till his death, displaying tolerance and charity. His Essay on the Philosophical Evidence of Christianity (1827) and other writings illustrate a phase in liberal thought, but have little permanent value.

H. Hampden (daughter), Some Memorials of Renn Dickson Hampden (1871). H. F. G. Swanston, Ideas of Order: Anglicans and the renewal of theological method in the middle years of the nineteenth century (Assen, 1974), pp. 17–53, with bibl. pp. 225–9. G. C. Boase in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 264–6.

Hampton Court Conference. The conference held at Hampton Court in January 1604, between the English bishops and the *Puritan leaders and presided over by *James I. Its purpose was to consider the Puritan demands for reform in the Church, set out in the *Millenary Petition. The Puritans were led by John *Rainolds, Dean of Lincoln, and the bishops by R. *Bancroft and T. Bilson. When Rainolds demanded the modification of episcopacy, James declared that he had learnt in Scotland 'No bishop, no king', and so gave the bishops his support. All the Puritans won was a series of minor concessions, notably slight changes in the BCP and royal promises to restrict pluralism and enlarge the preaching ministry. The most substantial result of the conference was a new translation of the Bible issued as the *Authorized Version in 1611.

E. *Cardwell, A History of the Conferences and other Proceedings Connected with the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer from 1558 to 1690 (1840), pp. 121–228. F. Shriver, 'Hampton Court Re-visited: James I and the Puritans', JEH 33 (1982) pp. 48–71. P. Collinson, 'The Jacobean Religious Settlement: The Hampton Court Conference', in H. Tomlinson (ed.), Before the English Civil War (1983), pp. 27–51. R. G. Usher in DECH, pp. 258 f., s.v.

Handel, George Frideric (1685–1759), musical composer. The original form of his name was Händel. He was born in Halle, Saxony, and spent the early years of his career in Hamburg and in Italy. In 1710 he visited London, which he made his home from 1712, becoming a naturalized British subject in 1727. He remained a *Lutheran, but worshipped regularly at his parish church, St George's, Hanover Square. He is rightly regarded as the originator of the English *oratorio, with its prominent role for the chorus. As Handel was essentially a man of the theatre, his oratorios are generally highly dramatic in style; they include Esther (1732), Saul (1738), Israel in Egypt (1738), Judas Maccabeus (1746), and Solomon (1748). For the most part they were originally performed in the theatre, but without scenery or theatrical dress. The most famous of all, Messiah (1741, first performed in 1742) is atypical in being non-dramatic. It has always enjoyed immense popularity. Handel himself inaugurated annual performances of it for the benefit of the Foundling Hospital, and over the years it has helped keep many an amateur choral society solvent. His other religious music includes 'Dixit Dominus' (1707), the set of extended anthems for the Duke of Chandos (1717–18), and four anthems for the coronation of George II (1727), of which 'Zadok the priest' has been sung at every subsequent coronation. Handel's genius may be said to lie in his ability to create the sublimest of effects with the simplest of means. He gave up composing after going blind in 1752, although he continued to play and direct performances of his works to the end of his life.

Collected Works ed. by [K. F. F. Chrysander for] the Händel-Gesellschaft (97 vols., pt. 49 never pub., Leipzig, 1858–1902); new edn. ('Hallische Händel-Ausgabe') by M. Schneider and others (Kassel, 1955 ff.). W. and M. Eisen (eds.), Handel-Handbuch (Gleichzeitig Supplement zu Hallische Händel-Ausgabe, 1978 ff.; incl. thematic catalogue and docs.). O. E. Deutsch, Handel: A Documentary Biography (1955). J. Mainwaring, Memoirs of the Life of the late George Frederic Handel (1760). P. H. Lange, George Frideric Handel (New York, 1966; London, 1967). C. Hogwood, Handel (London [1984]). H. Swanston, Handel (Outstanding Christian Thinkers, 1990). W. Dean, Handel's Dramatic Oratorios and Masques (1959). D. [J.] Burrows, Handel and the English Chapel Royal (lecture [1985]). K. Sasse, Händel Bibliographie (Leipzig [1963]; 2nd edn., 1967); M. A. Parker-Hale, G. F. Handel: A Guide to Research (New York and London, 1988). W. Dean and A. Hicks in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 8 (1980), pp. 83–140, s.v.

hands, imposition of. A ritual gesture which figures prominently in the Bible and in the life of the Church, and was also known in the classical world. Acc. to Num. 8, the Israelites were to lay their hands on the heads of the *Levites, and the Levites were to lay their hands on the heads of the bulls which were to be sacrificed. The predominant use of the gesture, however, is as a manner of blessing (e.g. Gen. 48), though in some cases an element of commission may be implied. The gesture was used by Christ in many of the healing miracles.

In the NT, and esp. in Acts, there are a number of references to the laying on of hands (χειροτονεῖν and its cognates) in the early Church; some of these have traditionally been taken as examples of *Confirmation (Acts 8 and 19) and *Ordination (Acts 13: 3). While the precise significance of these and other similar biblical texts is open to question, the placing of the bishop's hand on the head of each candidate has come to be the central action in both these sacraments. In the rite of *Unction the priest lays his hands upon the sick person, and a similar provision is made in various modern Anglican liturgies for the *Visitation of the Sick. Hands may be placed upon the head in the private blessing of individuals.

J. Behm, Die Handauflegung im Urchristentum (1911); J. Coppens, L'Imposition des mains et les rites connexes dans le N.T. et dans l'Église primitive (1925); id., 'L'Imposition des mains dans les Actes des Apôtres', in J. Kremer (ed.), Les Actes des Apôtres (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 48 [1979]), pp. 405–38; P. A. Elderenbosch, De Oplegging der Handen (1953). C. H. *Turner 'Χειροτονία, χειροθεσία, ἐπίθεσις χειρῶν (and the accompanying verbs)', JTS 24 (1922–3), pp. 496–504. J.-T. Maertens, 'Un rite du pouvoir: L'imposition des mains', Studies in Religion, 6 (1976–7), pp. 637–49; 7 (1978), pp. 25–39. J. K. Coyle, OSA, 'The Laying on of Hands as Conferral of the Spirit: Some Problems and a Possible Solution', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 18 (pt. 2; Louvain, 1989), pp. 339–53. H. B. *Swete in E.Bi. 2 (1901), col. 1956, s.v. 'Laying on of Hands'; P. Galtier, SJ, in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1302–425; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 391–413.

Hannington, James (1847–85), Bp. of Eastern Equatorial Africa. After offering himself to the *CMS, he landed in Zanzibar in June 1882 at the head of six missionaries, but fever and dysentery compelled him to return to England in the following May. On recovering, he again offered himself for the work, was consecrated the first Bp. of Eastern Equatorial Africa in June 1884, and was back in Mombasa in Jan. 1885. In Oct. 1885 he was murdered by the natives of *Uganda when leading a hazardous expedition to open up a shorter route to Lake Victoria Nyanza. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 29 Oct.

E. C. Dawson, James Hannington (1887); id., The Last Journals of Bishop Hannington (1888).

haplography. In the copying of manuscripts, the writing of any letter(s) or word(s) only once where it ought to be repeated. The opposite error is known as '*dittography'.

Hardenberg, Albert (c. 1510–74), Reformer. Educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life at Groningen, he entered the *Cistercian monastery of Aduard *c.*1527, and studied theology at the University of Louvain. In 1539 he took his doctor's degree at Mainz, where he came into contact with John *Laski. Under his influence he accepted Protestant teaching. Returning to Louvain, he was put on trial for heresy and left the city for Aduard. In 1542 he went to *Wittenberg, where he established close contact with P. *Melanchthon. At the Diet of *Speyer (1544) *Hermann of Wied asked him to help establish the Reformation in *Cologne. He travelled widely on Hermann's behalf, taking part in the Diet of *Worms (1545). After Hermann's resignation (1547), Hardenberg was appointed cathedral preacher at Bremen; but in 1561 he was expelled from this post for his denial of the *Lutheran doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and for the next four years he lived quietly under the protection of the Count of Oldenburg. In 1565 he became pastor at Sengwarden, and from 1567 to his death he was preacher at Emden.

Life by B. Spiegel (Bremen, 1869); lesser study by W. Schweckendieck (Emden, 1859). J. *Moltmann, Christoph Pezel (1539–1604) und der Calvinismus in Bremen (Hospitium Ecclesiae, Forschungen zur bremischen Kirchengeschichte, 2; Bremen, 1958), esp. pp. 16–29. Schottenloher, 1 (1933), p. 325 (nos. 7938–54). C. Bertheau in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 408–16; W. H. Neuser in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 442–4, both s.v., with bibl.

Hardenberg, Friedrich Leopold Freiherr von. See NOVALIS.

Harding, St Stephen. See STEPHEN HARDING, ST.

Hardouin, Jean (1646–1729), French scholar. A native of Brittany, he became a *Jesuit at about the age of 16 and for most of his life (from 1683) was Librarian of the Jesuit Collège de *Clermont at Paris. He published many excellent editions of the classics and other ancient writings. He took great delight in defending paradoxical and fantastic theories, maintaining, e.g. that the NT was originally written in Latin, that the great majority of the ancient classics were really the product of 13th-cent. monks, and that all the councils commonly supposed to have preceded that of *Trent (1546–63) were fabrications. The last of these theories did not prevent him from producing an edition of the texts of the ecclesiastical councils from NT times onwards (Conciliorum Collectio Regia Maxima, Paris, '1715', but for some years the French government withheld it from circulation owing to its *Ultramontane notes); it was largely drawn on by J. D. *Mansi and is still of some value. Hardouin was also a great authority on numismatics, his works in this field including Chronologia Veteris Testamenti ad vulgatam versionem exacta et nummis antiquis illustrata (1696).

H. *Quentin, OSB, J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 38–54; E. Galletier, 'Un Breton du XVII^e siècle à l'avant-garde de la critique. Le père Jean Hardouin de Quimper', Annales de Bretagne, 36 (1925), pp. 462–83, and 38 (1928), pp. 171–87. [W.] O. Chadwick, From Bossuet to Newman: The Idea of Doctrinal Development (Birkbeck Lectures, 1955–6; Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 49–51, 211–13. Sommervogel, 4 (1893), cols. 84–111; Polgár, 2 (1990), p. 123. P. Bernard in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2042–6, s.v.

Hardwicke, Act of Lord. The Clandestine Marriages Act 1753 was passed 'for the Better Prevention of Clandestine Marriages', and dealt with notorious abuses such as Fleet marriages and the prevalence of *bigamy. For the first time clandestine marriages, previously regulated by canon law, were made subject to statute. All marriages in England and Wales (except those of the Royal Family, Jews, and *Quakers) were required to be celebrated in the parish church of one of the parties and after banns, save that the Abp. of *Canterbury could grant a special licence for the marriage to be celebrated in some other church and without the delay entailed by *banns of marriage, and that the diocesan Bishop had the right to dispense from banns. All other unions, and the marriages of infants made without consent of parents or guardians, were declared invalid. The Act was the first step on the road to the transfer of jurisdiction in matrimonial causes from Church to State, completed by the introduction of judicial divorce on the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1857. See also MATRIMONY.

Hare, Julius Charles (1795–1855), Archdeacon of Lewes. Having entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1812, he was elected a Fellow in 1818, and intended at first to enter the legal profession. In 1826, however, he was ordained, and in 1832 appointed Rector of Hurstmonceux. Through travel in Germany, he came much under the influence of German theologians and men of letters and introduced many German ideas to English theology. He was a *Broad Churchman. His writings, some of which secured great popularity, included Guesses at Truth (1827; it was written in conjunction with his brother Augustus), a collection of observations on philosophy, religion, literature, and other subjects; The Victory of Faith (1840; 3rd edn., 1874); and Sermons preacht on Particular Occasions (1858). He also issued, in conjunction with C. *Thirlwall, a translation of B. G. Niebuhr's History of Rome (2 vols., 1828–32). In 1840 he was appointed Archdeacon of Lewes.

Anon. introd. (by F. D. *Maurice) to Charges to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Lewes, delivered at the Ordinary Visitations in the Years 1843, 1845, 1846 (1856), pp. i–lxiii, and anon. study (by A. P. *Stanley) in the Quarterly Review, 97 (1855), pp. 1–27, both repr. in Hare's The Victory of Faith (3rd edn., by E. H. Plumptre, 1874), pp. xvii–cxxxii. A. J. C. Hare (nephew), Memorials of a Quiet Life (2 vols., 1872). N. M. Distad, Guessing at Truth: The Life of Julius Charles Hare (1795–1855) (Shepherdstown, W. Va., 1979), with bibl. A. J. C. Hare in DNB 24 (1890), pp. 369–72.

Harklean Version. A revision of the *Philoxenian Syriac Version of the NT made by Thomas of Harkel ('Heraclea') in 616, on the basis of readings derived from Greek MSS in the library of the Enaton, near Alexandria. In the margin Thomas recorded many variants which are textually of great interest and value, mostly akin to those of *Codex Bezae. About 50 MSS of this version (mostly containing only the Gospels) have survived, the oldest dating from c. the 7th cent. It is this version of the text of Rev. which is printed in many current ('*Peshitta') Syriac New Testaments. The Harklean revision is the counterpart of the contemporary version of the OT made by Paul of Tella, known as the *Syro-Hexapla.

Only edn. is that of J. White with the inappropriate title 'Versio Philoxeniana': Gospels, Oxford, 1788; Acts and Epp., ibid., 1799–1803. Later (partial) edns. of Gospel of Jn. by G. H. Bernstein (Leipzig, 1853) and of Heb. 11: 28–13: 25 by R. L. Bensly (Cambridge, 1889). Facsimile of Rev. from MS Mardin Orth. 35

(prob. 13th cent.), with introd. by A. Vööbus, The Apocalypse in the Harklean Version (CSCO 400; Subsidia, 56; 1978). Peshitta and Harklean text of Jas., 1 Pet., and 1 Jn. ed. B. Aland, Das Neue Testament in Syrischer Überlieferung, 1 (Arbeiten zur neutestamentlichen Textforschungen, 7; 1986). List of MSS in J. D. Thomas, 'The Gospel Colophon of the Harclean Syriac Version', Near East School of Theology, 3, pt. 1 (Beirut, 1980), pp. 16–26. G. Zuntz, The Ancestry of the Harklean New Testament (British Academy Supplemental Papers, no. 7 [1945]). Id., 'Études harkléennes', R. Bibl. 57 (1950), pp. 550–82. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 68–75. J. Gwynn in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1014–21, s.v. 'Thomas (17) Harklensis'.

Harless, Gottlieb Christoph Adolph von (1806–79), German *Lutheran theologian. When a student at Halle University he was converted under the influence of F. A. G. *Tholuck to an ardent belief in the doctrine of justification by faith. From 1833 to 1845 he was Prof. of NT exegesis at Erlangen, where he considerably raised the standard of the theological faculty and founded the Zeitschrift für Protestantismus und Kirche (1838–76). From 1845 to 1850 he was professor at Leipzig. Appointed court preacher at Dresden in 1850, he was called to Munich two years later and made president of the supreme consistory of Bavaria. Here he reorganized the Lutheran State Church, to which he gave a new hymn-book and a new Order of Services. He was one of the most influential representatives of Lutheran orthodoxy of his generation.

W. Langsdorff, Adolf von Harless: Ein kirchliches Charakterbild (1898). T. Heckel, Adolf von Harless: Theologie und Kirchenpolitik eines lutherischen Bischofs in Bayern (Munich, 1933). A. von Stählin in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 421–32, s.v.; M. Hein in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 444–6, s.v.

Harmony, Pre-established. See PRE-ESTABLISHED HARMONY.

Harmony Society. A communist sect, also known as the 'Harmonists', founded by J. G. Rapp (1757–1847). Rapp first established his sect in Württemberg; but in 1803–4 he emigrated to the USA, and there settled his community on a site of some 5,000 acres in Butler County (Pa.), giving it the name of 'Harmony'. In 1814 his followers transferred themselves to a much larger estate in Posey County (Ind.), but in 1825 moved again to Economy (now called Ambridge), just north of Pittsburg. The Harmonists held many eccentric ideas. Rapp himself believed that Napoleon was God's ambassador, that attendance at school was wicked, and that Baptism and the Lord's Supper were the work of the devil. By the middle of the 19th cent. the Harmonists had largely died out; the Society was dissolved in 1905.

A. Williams, The Harmony Society at Economy, Penn'a (Pittsburgh, 1866); J. A. Bole, The Harmony Society: A Chapter in German American Culture History (Americana Germanica, NS, Philadelphia, 1904); C. F. Knoedler, The Harmony Society (New York [1954]); K. J. R. Arndt, George Rapp's Harmony Society 1785–1847 (Philadelphia, 1965). W. E. Wilson, The Angel and the Serpent: The Story of New Harmony (Bloomington, Ind. [1964]). R. B. Taylor in HERE 3 (1910), pp. 780 f., s.v. 'Communistic Societies of America: I, The Harmony Society'.

Harms, Claus (1778–1855), German *Lutheran theologian. A native of Holstein, after helping his father in his corn mill he went in 1799 to the University of Kiel, where the study of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher's writings made him a zealous Evangelical. In 1806 he was elected deacon at Lunden in Norder Ditmarschen (Holstein), where he became popular as a preacher. Ten years later he was appointed archdeacon at St Nicolai at Kiel, and in 1835 provost. In 1834 he had declined an offer to succeed Schleiermacher at the Dreifaltigkeitskirche in Berlin. He is chiefly remembered for his defence of *Lutheran theology at a time when its distinctive elements were threatened by the movement for reuniting the two Protestant confessions in Prussia. On the third centenary of the outbreak of the Reformation (1817) he published, together with M. *Luther's 95 theses, 95 theses of his own directed to the quickening of Lutheran piety. They stressed the necessity of the forgiveness of sins and the importance of the Sacraments, and won the approval of Schleiermacher. His other writings include a Pastoraltheologie (1830) and collections of sermons.

Lebensbeschreibung verfasset von ihm selber ('Zweite Auflage', Kiel, 1851). Ausgewählte Schriften und Predigten, ed. P. Meinhold (2 vols., Flensburg, 1955). F. Wintzer, Claus Harms: Predigt und Theologie (Schriften des Vereins für Schleswig-Holsteinische Kirchengeschichte, Reihe 1, 21; 1965), with extensive bibl. H.-F. Traulsen, Schleiermacher und Claus Harms: Von den Reden, 'Über die Religion' zur Nachfolge an der Dreifaltigkeitskirche (Schleiermacher-Archiv, 7; 1989). L. Hein in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 447–9, s.v., with bibl.

Harnack, Adolf (1851–1930), German Church historian and theologian. He was the son of Theodosius Harnack (1817–89), professor of pastoral theology at Dorpat and the author of Luthers Theologie (2 vols., 1862–86). He studied at Dorpat and then at Leipzig, where he became Privatdozent (1874) and Extraordinary Prof. (1876). He later held full professorships at Giessen (1879–86), Marburg (1886–8), and Berlin (1888–1921). From 1905 to 1921 he was also Director of the Prussian Staatsbibliothek and in 1910 he became President of the 'Kaiser Wilhelm Gesellschaft' for furthering learning and science. He was ennobled in 1914.

In the range of his achievements Harnack was prob. the most outstanding patristic scholar of his generation. He made himself complete master of the early Christian literature, esp. of the pre-Nicene period, and published innumerable contributions to its history. In conjunction with O. von Gebhardt, he founded the important series Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur (1882 ff.), very many of its papers being his own compositions or owing their inspiration to his enthusiasm. These extended historical studies formed the basis of his Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte (3 vols., 1886–9; Eng. tr. as History of Dogma, 7 vols., 1894–9), which traced the history of Christian doctrine down to the Reformation, with esp. attention to the earlier period. The work reflected throughout Harnack's theological standpoint (a form of *Ritschlianism); he regarded the metaphysics which came into Christian theology as an alien intrusion from Greek sources ('Hellenization'). This critical attitude to traditional Christian dogma evoked strong opposition from conservative theologians, who resisted, but without success, his call to Berlin. Here he became involved in a long controversy on the *Apostles' Creed, embodying his views in Das apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (1892). In the winter of 1899–1900 he delivered a celebrated course of lectures stressing the moral side of Christianity, esp. the claims of human brotherhood, to the exclusion of all that was doctrinal. They were subsequently published as Das Wesen des Christentums (1900; Eng. tr., What is Christianity?, 1901) and attracted very wide attention. Meanwhile, Harnack pursued his historical studies with sustained energy, issuing, inter alia, Die Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur bis Eusebius (3 vols., 1893–1904). Later he published a series of notable studies on the *Synoptic Problem, in which (to the surprise of friends and foes alike) he upheld very early dates for the Synoptic Gospels and *Acts, holding e.g. that Acts was written by St *Luke when St *Paul was still in his (first) Roman Captivity and assigning a very early date to '*Q'. These studies were embodied in Beiträge zur Einleitung in das Neue Testament (4 parts, 1906–11; Eng. tr. under separate titles, e.g. Luke the Physician, 1907; The Sayings of Jesus, 1908; The Acts of the Apostles, 1909). His other writings included Die Mission und Ausbreitung des Christentums in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (1902; 4th edn., much enlarged, 1924; Eng. tr. by J. *Moffatt, from 1st edn., 2 vols., 1904–5), Entstehung und Entwickelung der Kirchenverfassung (1910; Eng. tr., 1910), Marcion (1921; 2nd edn., 1924), and Briefsammlung des Apostels Paulus (1926). With E. *Schürer he also founded the Theologische Literaturzeitung (1876 ff.).

Correspondence with K. *Holl ed. H. Karpp (Tübingen, 1966). Eng. tr. of extracts from his works ed. M. Rumscheidt (Makers of Modern Theology, 1989). Life by A. von Zahn-Harnack (Berlin, 1936; 2nd edn., 1951). J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et moyen-âge, 3 (1948), Étude 3, pp. 1–102. G. W. Glick, The Reality of Christianity: A Study of Adolf von Harnack as Historian and Theologian (1967); W. Pauck, Harnack and Troeltsch (New York, 1968), pp. 3–42; K. H. Neufeld, Adolf von Harnack: Theologie als Suche nach der Kirche (Paderborn, 1977); id., Adolf Harnacks Konflikt mit der Kirche: Weg-Stationen zum 'Wesen des Christentums' (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 4; 1979); E. P. Meijering, Die Hellenisierung des Christentums im Urteil Adolf von Harnacks (Amsterdam, etc., 1985). J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 214–29. Bibl. by F. Schmend (Leipzig, 1927; 3rd edn. by J. Dummer, 1990).

Harris, Howel(l) (1714–73), one of the founders of Welsh *Calvinistic Methodism. Born at Trevecca, near Brecon, he was intended for ordination in the Anglican Church. In 1735 he was converted to a life of great religious seriousness, and later in the year went up to St Mary's Hall, Oxford. Unable to settle, he returned to Powys within a week to begin an itinerant lay ministry, organizing his converts into religious 'societies'. Owing to personal and doctrinal differences with others within the Welsh Methodist movement, most notably Daniel Rowland (1713–90), the curate of Llangeitho, Cards, he was driven to separation from it in 1750. Shortly afterwards he established a religious community at Trevecca, and during the 1760s was involved in the establishment of the Countess of *Huntingdon's college at a nearby farm. He remained an Anglican throughout his life.

A Brief Account of the Life of Howell Harris, Esq., Extracted from Papers written by himself, To which is added a concise Collection of his Letters from the Year 1738 to 1772 [ed. B. La Trobe and E. Moses] (Trevecca, 1791). Correspondence pub. as 'The Trevecka Letters' in suppls. to the Journal of the Calvinistic Methodist Historical Society; Calendar by M. H. Jones (Carnarvon, 1932); selections also ed. G. M. Roberts (ibid., 1956 and 1962). Lives in Eng. by H. J. Hughes (London, 1892), H. E. Lewis (ibid. [1912]), G. T. Roberts (Wesley Historical Lecture no. 17; London, 1951), G. F. Nuttall (Cardiff, 1965), and E. Evans (ibid., 1974). R. Bennett, The Dawn of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism ([in Welsh, 1909]; Eng. tr. The Early Life of Howell Harris, 1962; repub. with rev. bibl. as Howell Harris and the Dawn of Revival, Bridgend, 1987). R. J. Jones in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 6 f.

Harris, James Rendel (1852–1941), biblical scholar and orientalist. He was brought up as a *Congregationalist, but later became a *Quaker. Educated at Plymouth Grammar School and Clare College, Cambridge, he taught in the USA (1882–92), at Cambridge (1893–1903), and at Woodbrooke Settlement, Birmingham (1903–18), and from 1918 to 1925 was Curator of MSS at the John Rylands Library, Manchester. Harris was the author of many studies on biblical and early Christian texts and on the Mediterranean cults. In 1889 he discovered at the St Catherine's Monastery on Mount *Sinai the Syriac text of the 'Apology' of *Aristides (pub. 1891); and in 1909 he issued the editio princeps of the Syriac text of the 'Odes of *Solomon'. His numerous other works include Biblical Fragments from Mount Sinai (1890), *The Diatessaron (1890), Lectures on the Western Text of the NT (1894), *The Teaching of the Apostles and the Sibylline Books (1885), Testimonies (1917; 1920). In collaboration with R. L. Bensly and F. C. *Burkitt he edited The Four Gospels from the Syriac Palimpsest (1894), and, with A. Mingana, a definitive edition of the 'Odes of Solomon' (2 vols., 1916–20). His writings reflect his unconventional and speculative mind, and immense, if at times somewhat unbalanced, erudition.

C. A. Phillips, 'Rendel Harris', Expository Times, 52 (1941), pp. 349–52. H. G. Wood in DNB, 1941 1950, pp. 360–62.

Harris, William Wadé (c.1860–1929), West African evangelist known as 'Prophet Harris'; the best-known of the early 20th-cent. leaders of African mass movements towards the Christian faith. He belonged to the Glebo people of Liberia and had some knowledge of the outside world, partly acquired as a seaman. Coming from a *Methodist background, in which he underwent a conversion experience when he was about 20, he was confirmed in the (American) *Episcopal Church and trained as a *catechist and schoolmaster. In 1910, while in prison for anti-government, pro-British political activity, he became convinced of his calling as a prophet of the last times. In the course of 17 months in 1913–15 he preached across the Ivory Coast, through to Axim in the Gold Coast (now *Ghana), and back again, proclaiming the coming judgement of Christ, calling on all to abandon the traditional fetishes and worship God alone. In Ivory Coast, where Christianity had hitherto made little impact, he baptized not less than 100,000 people; perhaps twice that number were deeply affected as a result of his activity. The French colonial authorities, frightened at his success, imprisoned, mistreated, and expelled him. His ministry was thereafter restricted to Liberia, with visits to *Sierra Leone. He died paralysed and in poverty.

White-robed, bearing a cross and a Bible, and accompanied by women singers, engaging readily in trials of strength with traditional priests and diviners, Harris conveyed a sense of immense spiritual power. Independent of the missions, and often alarming them, he encouraged converts to attend churches where they existed and appointed local leaders where they did not. The Methodist Church and the indigenous 'Harrist' Church can claim to be his acknowledged heirs, but his preaching laid a foundation for all the Churches, RC and Protestant, of Ivory Coast, and for many beyond it. See also GHANA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

W. J. Platt, An African Prophet (1934); G. M. Haliburton, The Prophet Harris (1971); S. S. Walker, The Religious Revolution in the Ivory Coast: The Prophet Harris and the Harrist Church (Chapel Hill, NC, 1983). Study by D. A. Shank in preparation. D. A. Shank, 'The Prophet Harris: a Historiographical and Bibliographical Survey', Journal of Religion in Africa, 14 (1983), pp. 130–60; id., 'The Legacy of William Wadé Harris', International Bulletin of Missionary Research, 10 (1986), pp. 170–6.

Harrison, Frederic (1831–1923), English *Positivist. Educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1854, he began to practise as a barrister-at-law in 1858. In his earlier years he was a member of the C of E, influenced by the school of F. D. *Maurice and also by H. P. *Liddon, a school friend with whom he kept up a friendship till Liddon's death; but he came gradually under the influence of A. *Comte, and embraced Positivism in 1870. From 1880 to 1905 he was president of the 'English Positivist Committee', and the recognized leader in England of that school of thought. Among his writings were The Creed of a Layman (1907), The Philosophy of Common Sense (1907), and The Positive Evolution of Religion (1912).

Autobiographic Memoirs (2 vols., London, 1911); A. Harrison (son), Frederic Harrison: Thoughts and Memories (1926). M. S. Vogeler, Frederic Harrison: The Vocations of a Positivist (Oxford, 1984). A. Cochrane in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 406–8.

Harrowing of Hell. The medieval English term for the defeat of the powers of evil at the *Descent of Christ into Hell after His death. It was a favourite theme of art and drama in the Middle Ages.

Hartmann, Eduard von (1842–1906), German philosopher. Born at Berlin, in 1858 he became an artillery officer in the Prussian Guards, but owing to an affliction of the knee he was forced to resign in 1865, and resided at Berlin for the rest of his life.

The main outlines of his system, which owed much to the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel, A. *Schopenhauer, and F. W. J. *Schelling, were already contained in his early treatise on the 'Philosophy of the Unconscious' (Die Philosophie des Unbewussten, '1869', really Nov. 1868; Eng. tr. by W. C. Coupland, 1884). He saw in the 'Unconscious' an all-pervasive monistic principle which was at once will (Wille) and presentation (Vorstellung), and the ground of evolutionary development. Rejecting mechanism in favour of a teleological vitalism, he became a robust champion of progress, enlightenment, and practical activity, uniting his disciples in the service of 'Concrete Monism'. Christianity, which was only a stage along the way to the religion of Absolute Spirit, was now at length dead and its gravedigger was modern Protestantism. He found an enthusiastic disciple in A. *Drews (q.v.).

Among von Hartmann's other writings those of specially religious import were Die Selbstzersetzung des Christentums und die Religion der Zukunft (1874) and Die Krisis des Christentums und die moderne Theologie (1880).

There is a large lit., mainly in German. Überweg, 5, pp. 331–9, also pp. 707 f. with list of his writings and full bibl. to date. In Eng. D. N. K. Darnoi, The Unconscious and Eduard von Hartmann: A Historico-Critical Monograph (The Hague, 1967), with bibl. L. E. Loemker in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 3 (1967), pp. 419–21, with select bibl.

Harvest Thanksgiving. In Britain an unofficial religious festival of thanksgiving for the fruits of the earth, usually observed on a Sunday in Sept. or Oct. after the ingathering of the harvest. In the C of E and Free Churches, and of recent times in the RC Church also, it is customary to decorate the church with fruit, flowers, and vegetables which are later devoted to charity; special hymns are sung; and there is frequently a visiting preacher. In medieval England *Lammas Day (1 Aug.) was prob. recognized as a thanksgiving for the first fruits of the harvest, bread made with the new wheat being offered at Mass and solemnly blessed. This last custom was revived by R. S. Hawker (1804–75) at Morwenstow, Cornwall, in 1843. Although no provision is made for any such observance in the BCP, special forms of thanksgiving for abundant harvests were occasionally authorized from the end of the 18th cent. By the mid 19th cent. an annual festival was common and a parochial thanksgiving replaced the traditional Harvest Home. In 1862 the Convocation of Canterbury issued a form of service. The proposed Revised Prayer Book of 1927–8 provided a Collect, to follow that of the day, and an Epistle and Gospel, while the ASB has a complete set of Collect, Psalms, and biblical lections for use at all services. Various other modern Anglican liturgies make similar provision. The American Prayer Book of 1789 already contained a form of thanksgiving for the fruits of the earth which was used on 'Thanksgiving Day' (a general holiday, since 1941 observed on the fourth Thursday in November).

H. C. Batterbury in PBD (1912), pp. 377 f., s.v. 'Harvest Festival'.

Hase, Karl August von (1800–90), German Church historian. After teaching for a short time at Tübingen and Leipzig, he held a professorship at Jena from 1830 till 1883. In 1829 he published a Life of Christ in which the supernatural elements in the Gospels were rationalized. His Kirchengeschichte (1st edn., 1834) long remained a standard work.

Gesammelte Werke, ed. G. Krüger and others (12 vols., Leipzig, 1890–93). R. Bürkner, Karl von Hase (ibid., 1900). G. Krüger in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 453–61, s.v.

Hasidaeans. The Greek form ('Ἀσιδαῖοι) of the Heb. '*Chasidim' (q.v.), found e.g. in 1 Macc. 2: 42.

Hasmonaeans. The family name of the *Maccabees, apparently derived from one of their ancestors.

Hastings, James (1852–1922), *Presbyterian divine and editor of religious encyclopaedic works. Educated at the grammar school, the university, and the Free Church

Divinity College at Aberdeen, he was ordained a Presbyterian minister in 1884, and appointed pastor of Kinneff, Grampian, Free Church. From 1897 to 1901 he was pastor of Willison Church, Dundee, and from 1901 to 1911 of the United Free Church, St Cyrus, Grampian, after which he retired to Aberdeen. In 1889 he founded the monthly Expository Times, which he edited until his death. He is famous as the editor of the Dictionary of the Bible (5 vols., 1898–1904; 1-vol. edn., 1909; rev. by F. C. Grant and H. H. Rowley, 1963), the Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols., 1908–21; Index vol., 1926), the Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels (2 vols., 1906–8), and the Dictionary of the Apostolic Church (2 vols., 1915–18).

Arts. by H. E. *Ryle, W. A. Curtis, and H. R. *Mackintosh in Expository Times, 34 (1922–3), pp. 102–6. E. R. Micklem in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 409 f.

Hat, Cardinal's. See RED HAT.

Hatch, Edwin (1835–89), Anglican divine. Educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, he taught in Canada before becoming vice-principal of St Mary Hall, Oxford (1867), rector of Purleigh, Essex (1883), and reader in ecclesiastical history at Oxford (1884). In 1880 he preached a series of *Bampton Lectures on The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (1881) in which he maintained that the origin of the Christian episcopate lay in the ἐπίσκοποι or financial administrators of Greek religious associations. Of his other writings, the most important was his *Hibbert Lectures for 1888 on The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages on the Christian Church (1890). At the time of his death he was engaged on a *Concordance to the Septuagint (subsequently completed by H. A. Redpath, 1897, with supplement, 1906).

S. C. Hatch (ed.), Memorials of E. Hatch (1890). W. *Sanday, 'In Memoriam Dr. Edwin Hatch', The Expositor, 4th ser. 1 (1890), pp. 93–111. N. F. Josaitis, Edwin Hatch and Early Church Order (Recherches et Synthèses, Section d'Histoire, 3; Gembloux [1971]). W. Sanday in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 149 f.

Hatfield, Council of (679). The Council arose out of the wish of Pope *Agatho to sound the English Church on the subject of *Monothelitism. As his intermediary the Pope chose John, Precentor of St Peter's, whom St *Benedict Biscop had brought back with him from Rome to instruct his monks at *Wearmouth in singing. The Council, which met under the presidency of Abp. *Theodore at Hatfield (or ? Heathfield), repudiated Monothelitism, accepted the decrees of the first five General Councils, and affirmed its belief in the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit.

*Bede, HE 4. 17 f.; see comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 157–9, with useful refs. A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 141–60. C. Cubitt, Anglo-Saxon Church Councils c.650–c.850 (1995), esp. pp. 252–8. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 316–22. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 475–84.

Hauck, Albert (1845–1918), German *Lutheran historian. He held professorships at Erlangen from 1878 to 1889 and at Leipzig from 1889. Of his writings, the most considerable was his Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands (5 vols., 1887–1920). He was at first joint editor (1880), and from the death of J. J. *Herzog in 1882 sole editor, of the 2nd edition of the Herzog–Plitt Realencyklopädie (completed 1888); and he also edited the 3rd edition (1896–1913), cited as PRE in this dictionary.

Geschichtliche Studien A. Hauck zum 70. Geburtstage dargebracht (1916). List of his works by E. Hauck in ZKG 54 (1935), pp. 565–75, with further refs. K. Nowak in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 472–4, s.v., with bibl.

Hauranne, Jean Duvergier de. See SAINT-CYRAN.

Havergal, Frances Ridley (1836–79), hymn-writer. She was the daughter of William Henry Havergal (1793–1870), the writer of much sacred music. Endowed with remarkable ability for composing verse, she contributed many poems and hymns to Good Words and other religious periodicals. Some of these have found their way into most hymnals, e.g. 'Take my life and let it be'.

Memorials of F.R.H., by her sister M. V. G. Havergal (1880). Other studies by T. H. Darlow (London, 1927, with substantial extracts of her work) and J. Grierson (Bromsgrove, 1979).

Hawkins, Edward (1789–1882), Provost of Oriel College, Oxford. Elected a Fellow of Oriel in 1813, he became Vicar of St Mary's, Oxford, in 1823, and Provost of Oriel in 1828. From 1847 to 1861 he was also (the first) Dean *Ireland Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture. His sermon on Tradition (1818), urging that Scripture was intended to prove doctrine, not to teach it, had a profound influence on J. H. *Newman, then an undergraduate of Trinity. Later he developed the same subject in his *Bampton Lectures (1840). As a *High Churchman, he was influential in weaning Newman from his early *Evangelicalism and Newman supported Hawkins rather than J. *Keble for the Provostship of Oriel. Relations worsened, however, when Hawkins, suspicious of Newman's influence, in 1830 stopped him, R. H. *Froude, and R. I. *Wilberforce receiving tutorial pupils. In retrospect Newman saw this decision as paradoxically freeing him to give his energies to the *Tractarian cause. In 1841 Hawkins drew up the condemnation of Tract 90 by the Oxford Heads of Houses. In 1874 he withdrew to *Rochester, where he continued to hold the canonry until then attached to the provostship of Oriel.

J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, 1 (1888), 4, 'The Great Provost', pp. 374–465. W. A. Greenhill in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 208 f.

Haymo of Faversham (d. 1244), English *Franciscan friar. Born at Faversham in Kent, he became a Master of Divinity at Paris and, prob. in 1226, he entered the Order of Friars Minor. Soon afterwards he returned to England and lectured at *Oxford. In 1230 the General Chapter at *Assisi sent him as one of the deputies to *Gregory IX to seek an official explanation of the rule. In 1233 he was sent on a mission to *Constantinople to negotiate a reunion with the E. Church. He took a leading part in the deposition of Brother *Elias, which finally took place at the General Chapter of the Order at Rome in 1239. At that Chapter he became Provincial of the English Province; in 1240 he was elected General of the Order. At his request the 'Expositio Regulae Quatuor Magistorum' was written by the Four Masters of Paris (1241–2). He died at Anagni.

Among his surviving works are an order for private and conventual Mass on ferias ('Indutus planeta'), presented at the Chapter of *Bologna in 1243, and notes for a ceremonial ('Ordinationes Divini Officii'; 'Ad Omnes Horas'). At the behest of *Innocent IV, in 1243–4 he revised the *ordinals for the Roman Breviary, Missal, and *grace before and after meals.

Works ed. S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, The Sources of the Modern Roman Liturgy (Studia et Documenta Franciscana, 1–2; Leiden, 1963), 2, pp. 1–331, with introd. 1, pp. 1–109 and 156–206. Ordines [also ed. id.] (HBS 85; 1959). R. B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government: Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 195–209. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 25 (1891), p. 299. Antoine de Sérent, OFM, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 1192–4, s.v. 'Aimon (14) de Faversham', with bibl.

Headlam, Arthur Cayley (1862–1947), Bp. of *Gloucester. He was born at Whorlton, Durham, and educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford. Ordained priest in 1889, he was successively Fellow of All Souls (1885), Rector of Welwyn (1896), Professor of Dogmatic Theology at *King's College, London (1903), Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford (1918), and Bp. of Gloucester (1923–45). A Central Churchman who disliked all ecclesiastical parties (*Anglo-Catholics, *Evangelicals, and *Modernists), he was one of the most influential of English prelates in the inter-war period. In his early years he devoted his attention esp. to NT problems, collaborating with W. *Sanday in his fine commentary on *Romans (1895) and contributing extensively to J. *Hastings's Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., 1898–1902). His *Bampton Lectures, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920), written with the forthcoming *Lambeth Conference in view, endeavoured to provide an ecclesiological basis for reunion between the C of E and other religious bodies. His other writings include St Paul and Christianity (1913), The Life and Teaching of Jesus the Christ (1923), Christian Theology (1934), and The Fourth Gospel as History (1948, posthumous; with biographical essay by Agnes Headlam-Morley).

Life and Letters by R. C. D. Jasper (London, 1960). A. T. P. Williams in DNB, 1941–1950 (1959), pp. 369–71.

Hearne, Thomas (1678–1735), English antiquary. The son of a parish clerk, he was born at Littlefield Green, Berks, and educated in *Nonjuring principles by Francis Cherry and H. *Dodwell. In 1695 he entered St Edmund Hall, Oxford. Here his close scholarly habits attracted the attention of the principal, John *Mills (d. 1707), and for some years Hearne collated MSS and held appointments in the *Bodleian Library. Refusing to take the oath to George I in 1716, he was deprived of his post in the Bodleian, and, though denied access to libraries, continued his medieval studies in Oxford, intransigent politically until his death. He produced over 40 learned volumes, including several editions of classical writers (Pliny, Eutropius, Livy, etc.) and esp. medieval authors (Chronicles, works on *Glastonbury, etc.). He also left 140 MS notebooks, now preserved in the Bodleian. Though at times uncritical, his meticulous accuracy in transcribing authorities makes his works valuable for reference. His diaries, published posthumously, contain intimate and often malicious comment on contemporary life in Oxford.

The Life of Mr. Thomas Hearne . . . from his own MS. Copy (Oxford, 1772). P. Bliss (ed.), Reliquiae Hearnianae (2 vols., 1867; abridged edn. by J. Buchanan-Brown, 1966). Remains and Collections of Thomas Hearne, ed. C. E. Doble, D. W. Rannie, H. E. Salter, and others (Oxford Historical Society, 2, 7, 13, 34, 42, 43, 48, 50, 65, 67, and 72; 1885–1921). P. Ouvry (ed.), Letters Addressed to Thomas Hearne (1874). Impartial Memorials of the Life and Writings of Thomas Hearne . . . By Several Hands (1736). W. D. Macray, Annals of the Bodleian Library, Oxford (1868; 2nd edn., 1890), passim; D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), ch. 9, pp. 226–48; 2nd edn. (1951), pp. 178–94. H. R. Luard in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 335–8.

hearse. (1) Formerly herse (med. Lat. hercia). A triangular frame on a stand, holding 15 candles, formerly used at *Tenebrae in Holy Week, the candles being extinguished one by one during the service. There is also an obsolete use of the word for the triple candlestick formerly used in the *Holy Saturday rite.

(2) Various funeral furnishings. The current use of the word is for the carriage bearing the coffin, but it is also found for a *catafalque, or framework (permanent or temporary) bearing lighted tapers about a coffin.

heart (Heb. לֵבָב or לֵב, Gk. καρδία). In the Bible it usually designates the whole personality, though, in contrast to modern usage, the emphasis is on the activities of reason and will rather than the emotions. Both in the OT and NT it is the seat of wisdom (1 Kgs. 3: 12), and of thought and reflection (e.g. Jer. 24: 7, Lk. 2: 19), the instrument of belief (Rom. 10: 10) and of will, the principle of action (Ex. 35: 21) which may be hardened so that it resists God (Deut. 15: 7; Mk. 16: 14). It is the principle both of virtues and vices, of humility (Mt. 11: 29) and pride (Deut. 17: 20), of good thoughts (Lk. 6: 45) and of evil thoughts (Mt. 15: 19). Hence in Scripture the heart is the centre of the human person, in which the physical and the spiritual life are concentrated, and therefore in the NT the dwelling-place of Christ (Eph. 3: 17) in which reigns the peace of God (Col. 3: 15). In this sense it is used in the language of Christian spirituality, which regards the human heart as the special organ of the love of God; and it is here that is to be found the inspiration of the modern devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus (q.v.).

H. W. Wolff, Anthropologie des Alten Testaments (Munich [1973]), pp. 68–95; Eng. tr. (1974), pp. 40–58. J. Baumgärtel and J. Behm in TWNT 3 (1938), pp. 609–16 (Eng. tr., 3, 1966, pp. 605–14), s.v. καρδία.

Heart of Jesus. See SACRED HEART.

Heaven. In Christian theology the dwelling-place of God and the angels, and ultimately of all the redeemed, wherein they receive their eternal reward.

In OT language the word 'heaven' or 'heavens' denotes the visible sky and also the abode of God, conceived as in or beyond the physical heavens, where, for example, Jacob saw Him in a dream (Gen. 28: 12 f.) and whence He could 'come down' upon the top of Mt. Sinai (Exod. 19: 18–20, cf. 20: 22); but it was also acknowledged that 'the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain' God (1 Kgs. 8: 27), who is omnipresent (Ps. 139: 8–10). In the NT heaven as God's dwelling-place is still conceived as high above the earth: thus Christ raised His eyes 'to heaven' in prayer

(Mk. 6: 41, Jn. 17: 1), and at His *Ascension seemed to the disciples to pass away from them upwards to heaven. The early Christians accepted the contemporary Jewish and Hellenistic conceptions of a series of heavens (cf. 2 Cor. 12: 2–4), together with that of angelic and demonic powers existing in the heavens (e.g. Eph. 6: 12, RV; cf. Rom. 8: 38 f.), over whom Christ since His Resurrection and Ascension reigns supreme with the Father 'far above all heavens' (Eph. 4: 10).

Whereas in Hebrew thought only exceptional human beings (esp. *Enoch and *Elijah) were conceived as being raised to heaven after this life, for Christians it was the distinctive Christian hope and belief that the faithful disciple, through Christ's victory over death, would eventually reign with Him in glory. On the one hand, this might be thought of as attained in the *Kingdom of God at the end of history, when Christ would descend from heaven and the dead would either be raised and caught up to meet Him (1 Thess. 4: 15–17) or enjoy a new life on earth (see MILLENARIANISM). On the other hand, as St Paul implies when he says that for him to die is to be with Christ (Phil. 1: 23), it was also believed that even before the general resurrection some at least of the redeemed would be with Christ, i.e. in heaven. Acc. to Catholic doctrine, these are the souls who, having died in a state of grace and been purged of their stains in *purgatory, have passed to heaven, where they enjoy perfect bliss; but, except for the Bl Virgin *Mary (see ASSUMPTION), these souls still await reunion with their bodies at the general *resurrection of the dead, after which both body and soul together will enjoy the life of heaven eternally. Some modern RC theologians, however, have suggested that this teaching involves an invalid extrapolation of the notion of time; they hold that, while it is not until the general resurrection that bodies and souls are reunited, it does not follow that there is a 'period' of bodiless existence in heaven corresponding with the interval between death and resurrection on the earthly time-scale. Catholic theology regards heaven as 'a place' but claims no knowledge of its spatial characteristics or its relation to the physical universe, stressing rather the essential quality of the life of heaven which consists in the enjoyment of the *Beatific Vision (q.v.). Virtually all Christians, while making greater or lesser reservations in regard to details, would agree that heaven is essentially the fulfilment, to a degree impossible on earth, of what is, acc. to the Shorter Catechism of the *Westminster Assembly, the 'chief end of man', that is, 'to glorify God, and to enjoy Him for ever'.

H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testamentum, 2; 1951), U. Simon, Heaven in the Christian Tradition (1958); C. Rowland, The Open Heaven: A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity (1982); J. D. Tabor, Things Unutterable: Paul's Ascent to Paradise in its Greco-Roman, Judaic, and Early Christian Contexts (Lanham, Md., and London [1986]); C. McDannell and B. Lang, Heaven: A History (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1988).

hebdomadarian (Gk. ἑβδομάς, 'a period of seven days'). In cathedral churches and monasteries, the priest who presides at the Eucharist and Divine Office. He was so named because he held office for a week.

Heber, Reginald (1783–1826), Bp. of Calcutta. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and in 1805 elected a Fellow of All Souls. In 1807, on his return from a long tour in Europe, he was ordained and at once became vicar of Hodnet in Salop. In 1815 he delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures on The Personality and Office of the Christian Comforter. In 1823 he accepted the bishopric of Calcutta. In his short episcopate he laboured hard for the spread of Christianity in his large diocese and beyond. He is best remembered for his hymns, which include 'Brightest and best of the sons of the morning', 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty', and 'From Greenland's icy mountains', while his prose works include a Life and edition of the writings of Jeremy *Taylor (1822).

His Journal of 1824–6, ed. by his widow, A. Heber (2 vols., 1828); Selections, with introd., ed. M. A. Laird, Bishop Heber in Northern India (Cambridge, 1971). A. Heber (widow), The Life of Reginald Heber (2 vols., 1830), incl. selections of correspondence and unpub. works. Some of his letters are also incl. in R. H. Cholmondeley (ed.), The Heber Letters 1783 1832 (1950). Later Lives by G. Smith (London, 1895) and D. Hughes (Worthing, Sussex, 1986). J. H. Overton in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 355–7.

Hebrew (people). The Hebrews, the inhabitants of Palestine, who entered the land with the *Patriarchs and *Moses, generally spoke of themselves as the Israelites (בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, b'ne Yisrael, 'the Sons of Israel', Gen. 32: 28, 35: 10). The term 'Hebrew' was largely used of them by other peoples, often with a shade of contempt (cf. esp. Gen. 43: 32, 1 Sam. 13: 19 f.). It disappeared with the rise of the monarchy.

The word 'Hebrew' (עִבְרִי, 'ibhri) was derived by popular Hebrew etymology from the root עבר, 'br, 'to go over', 'to cross', with the meaning that *Abraham came from the other side of the Euphrates (cf. Josh. 24: 2 f.), but the real etymology of the word is uncertain. Similar words in the related languages seem to indicate at first an ethnic group and later a menial social class. It was only in Israel that the ethnic significance continued under the impulse of the new religious nationalism begun by Moses.

Hebrew (tongue). The language in which practically all the OT was written. It belongs to the NW division of the Semitic group of languages, so called by J. G. *Eichhorn because they were spoken by the races sprung from Noah's eldest son Shem (Gen. 9: 18, 26 f.; 10: 21–31). In the OT it is called the 'lip (i.e. speech) of Canaan' (Is. 19: 18) or the 'Jewish (language)' (2 Kgs. 18: 26); and in the NT 'Hebrew' may denote either classical Hebrew (e.g. Rev. 9: 11; 16: 16) or the colloquial Aramaic dialect of Palestine (e.g. Jn. 5: 2, 19: 13, 17).

The earliest attested forms of NW Semitic are preserved in cuneiform texts from Ebla (3rd millennium BC) and in Canaanite words which were incorporated in Egyptian texts (from the 2nd millennium BC onwards), while the Canaanite glosses in the letters from *Tell el-Amarna and the language of the *Ras Shamra tablets (both 14th cent. BC), are quite close to the archaic Hebrew in the early poems of the OT, such as Jgs. 5. Classical Hebrew first appears in a calendar engraved on a stone from Gezer (*c.*10th cent. BC). Hebrew continued to be used as a spoken and written language after the classical period, and is found in texts from *Qumran and in the *Mishnah; it survived as a written language to the present day, when it has also been revived as the official language of the state of Israel. In the NT period, spoken Hebrew had largely (but not entirely) been replaced by *Aramaic.

The surviving vocabulary of classical Hebrew is small, containing perhaps only some 7,000–8,000 words, many of them occurring only once or in set phrases of which the exact sense is not always clear. The absence of any surviving literature apart from the OT, except for a few brief inscriptions such as the Gezer calendar, often makes interpretation difficult. The student of the OT, therefore, unless the sense can be recovered from the ancient versions (themselves often incorrect or obscure) must often have recourse to the sister languages to discover the meaning of an otherwise unknown Hebrew word. Medieval Jewish commentators and European scholars from the 17th cent. onwards used Arabic for this purpose; modern scholars have also drawn on Aramaic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Assyrian, and Babylonian texts, and more recently on Ugaritic. Even so, the vocabulary of the classical language is preserved only in the OT, and countless words once in regular daily use have disappeared completely.

Hebrew style is simple and direct, and paratactic rather than syntactic—that is, dependent clauses are normally connected by 'and', as in 'keep my commandments and live', instead of 'if thou keepest my commandments, thou shalt live' (Prov. 7: 2). Poetry is distinguished from prose by the parallelism of ideas in the two halves of a verse, as was discovered by R. *Lowth, and by the number of units of sense (not of syllables) in each half of the verse, as was elucidated by K. *Budde. An illustration here is the so-called qînah or 'falling rhythm' characteristic of Lamentations, in which the verses consist of three beats followed by two.

The earliest Hebrew was written in a form of the ancient Phoenician script, running from right to left, which was also the ancestor of the Greek alphabet and ultimately of our own. During the *Babylonian captivity (*c.*586–*c.*538 BC), this gave way to an Aramaizing form of the same script, popularly ascribed to *Ezra, from which the modern so-called 'Assyrian' or 'square' script was developed. This is used in the Hebrew texts found near the *Dead Sea (prob. 3rd cent. BC–1st cent. AD), although the archaic script was revived as propaganda on *Maccabean coins and sporadically in the Scrolls. This alphabet consisted of 22 signs for the consonants, while the vowels were originally unrepresented. The absence of signs for vowels caused considerable confusion: e.g. the LXX misread peḥām 'coals of fire' (at Ps. 11: 6) as paḥîm 'snares'. In early Hebrew inscriptions, certain consonants began to be used for vowels—e.g. w (ו) was inserted for ū, and y (י) for ī (especially at the end of words), and this system was later extended to cover other vowels such as ō or ē. As knowledge of the classical language died out, however, elaborate systems indicating the vowels by strokes and/or dots above or within or below the consonantal signs were developed and reached their highest point in the Tiberian and Babylonian systems in the 5th–8th centuries AD. The former, the more elaborate, has survived in modern Hebrew Bibles, while the latter, in which the signs are exclusively superlinear, is found in MSS of the Aramaic *Targums and in Yemenite Bibles.

In the Calendar from Gezer one or two clauses are separated by vertical strokes, but otherwise both clauses and words run on undivided. In the inscription from Siloam (*c.*700 BC) all the words are separated by dots. Thereafter dots are common but not universal. In the Scrolls from Qumran words are separated by short spaces, while paragraphs and chapters (though not always the same as in the *Massoretic text) are clearly defined by spaces of varying length.

The standard Eng. dict. is that of F. Brown, S. R. *Driver, and C. A. *Briggs (Oxford, 1906; corrected repr., 1952); this was based on the classic work of W. *Gesenius (q.v.), esp. the 12th edn. by F. Buhl (Leipzig, 1895). A more recent (Ger.) dict. is that of L. Koehler and W. Baumgartner (Leiden, 1953; suppl., 1958; 3rd edn., 4 vols., 1967–90; Eng. tr., Leiden, etc., 1994 ff.). New dict., including material from the Dead Sea Scrolls, ed. D. J. A. Clines (Sheffield, 1993 ff.). The basic work on Hebrew grammar is that of W. Gesenius (Halle, 1813; 22nd edn. by E. Kautzsch, 1878; Eng. tr. of 28th edn. by A. E. Cowley, 1910). Other grammars by P. Joüon, SJ (Rome, 1923; repr. with corrections, 1965) and G. Beer (2 vols., Berlin, 1915–16; ed. R. Meyer, 1952–5; 3rd edn., under the name of R. Meyer only, 4 vols., 1966–72). Introductory grammars by J. Weingreen (Oxford, 1939; 2nd edn., 1959) and T. O. Lambdin, Introduction to Biblical Hebrew (New York [1971]; London, 1973). On syntax: A. B. *Davidson, Hebrew Syntax (Edinburgh, 1894; 4th edn. by J. C. L. Gibson, 1994); C. Brockelmann, Hebräische Syntax (Neukirchen, 1956); and R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax (Toronto [1967]; 2nd edn. [1976]). On spelling: F. M. Cross and D. N. Freedman, Early Hebrew Orthography (American Oriental Series, 36; New Haven, Conn., 1952), and J. Barr, The Variable Spellings of the Hebrew Bible (Schweich Lectures, 1986; Oxford, 1989). On the comparative grammar of Heb. and other Semitic languages: G. Bergsträsser, Einführung in die semitischen Sprachen (Munich, 1928; Eng. tr. with notes and bibl. by P. T. Daniels, Winona Lake, Ind. [1983]); S. Moscati and others, An Introduction to the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages (Porta Linguarum Orientalium, NS 6; Wiesbaden, 1964); and J. Barr, Comparative Philology and the Text of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1968). General surveys by C. Rabin, 'Hebrew', Current Trends in Linguistics, 6 (The Hague and Paris, 1970), pp. 304–46; J. Barr, 'Semitic Philology and the Interpretation of the Old Testament', in G. W. Anderson (ed.), Tradition and Interpretation (Oxford, 1979), pp. 31–64; E. Y. Kutscher, A History of the Hebrew Language (posthumous, ed. R. Kutscher, Jerusalem and Leiden, 1982); and A. Sáenz-Badillos, Historia de la Lengua Hebrea (Sadabell, 1988; Eng. tr., Cambridge, 1993).

Hebrews, Epistle to the. Traditionally included among the letters of St *Paul, this Ep., unlike most others in the NT, does not contain the name of the writer or that of those addressed. In content it resembles a homily, though it has an epistolary close (13: 18–25). The traditional title (πρὸς Ἑβραίους), though found in the earliest MSS, is prob. an inference from its contents.

The Ep. asserts with emphasis the finality of the Christian dispensation and its superiority to that of the Old Covenant, as a dissuasive, apparently from any return to Judaism, but possibly from apostasy in general. Christ is God's Son, the 'effulgence of his glory' (1: 3, RV), the unique and supreme messenger from God to mankind (chs. 1, 2), and hence the Gospel demands unhesitating acceptance (3: 1–4: 13). Christ, moreover, is our High Priest, whose priesthood, unlike that of the Levitical (Aaronic) priests, is eternal (4: 14–6: 20). It is a priesthood 'after the order of *Melchizedek' (6: 20, cf. Ps. 110: 4), who was greater than *Abraham (Gen. 14: 18 ff.) and was thus a fortiori greater than the Levitical priests. In contrast to the repeated sacrifices of the Old Covenant, the Atonement in Christ is eternal. This New Covenant, which, as foretold by Jer. 31: 31–4, was to supersede the temporary covenant of the Old Dispensation, was made, acc. to Ps. 40: 6–8, by the perfect obedience offered by Christ to God (7: 1–10: 18). With these facts before them, the readers are encouraged to steadfastness, perseverance, watchfulness for the Coming of Christ, and to greater faith, of which a long roll of historic examples is cited (10. 19–11. 40). The Ep. concludes with particular ethical instructions and messages (chs. 12 f.).

From an early date the Ep. was received at *Alexandria as Pauline, whether considered as a translation by St *Luke from St Paul's Hebrew (*Clement of Alexandria, ap. *Eusebius, HE 6. 14), or as St Paul's in substance, but committed to writing by someone else (*Origen ap. Eusebius, HE 6. 24); while in the E. generally, e.g. by the Council of *Antioch (264) and the later E. Fathers, it was regularly quoted as St Paul's own composition. In the W. it was known to *Clement of Rome (Ad Cor. 36. 1–5; cf. Heb. 1: 1–13), but it was not quoted as Pauline or as certainly canonical before the 4th–5th cent. The Council of *Trent (sess. 4, 1546) affirmed its canonicity but not its Pauline authorship; but the RC *Biblical Commission ruled (1914) that it was in substance St Paul's. Modern scholars, however, almost unanimously consider that the internal evidence marks it as non-Pauline, while its style shows that it is unlikely to be a translation. The author and his intended readers were apparently thoroughly familiar with Jewish worship and the latter were perhaps converts from Judaism. But there are indications that this familiarity came through the biblical ordinances (e.g. those concerning the *Tabernacle) rather than through direct knowledge of the *Temple itself (destroyed AD 70), and it has been argued (on the basis of 6: 1 f.) that the recipients of the Ep. were Gentiles. We learn that the author was a contemporary of *Timothy (13: 23), temporarily absent from those whom he was addressing, and expecting to return to them (13: 19). His identification with *Barnabas (*Tertullian and certain modern scholars), *Apollos (M. *Luther, C. Spicq, and H. W. Montefiore), or others (e.g. *Priscilla by A. *Harnack) cannot be more than conjectural. The use of the Ep. by Clement of Rome and the delay in the W. (as compared with the E.) in accepting it into the *Canon (supposedly because there was here a genuine tradition of its non-Pauline authorship; so A. *Loisy, followed by A. H. McNeile), together with the ref. to Italy in 13: 24, have suggested to some scholars that the Ep. was originally connected with Rome. In that case 10: 32–4 might allude to the *Neronian persecution. On general grounds and because there is no unequivocal reference to the destruction of the Temple in AD 70, a date earlier than that has been supported by several scholars, e.g. B. F. *Westcott and J. A. T. *Robinson; the majority, however, argue for a date under *Domitian. Its theological teaching, notably on the Person of Christ (1: 1–14, etc.), His real Humanity and sinlessness (4: 14 f.), His heavenly Priesthood and the Sacrifice of Calvary (7: 24 ff., etc.), as well as its literary capacity and expository power, reach a level unsurpassed in the NT. But the circumstances of its composition and its authorship remain obscure.

Modern comm. incl. those by B. F. Westcott (London, 1889), C. Spicq, OP (Études Bibliques, 1952–3), J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 12; 1954; Eng. tr., 1970), H. [W.] Montefiore (Black's NT Comm., 1964), F. F. Bruce (New London Comm. on the NT, 1964), J. H. Davies (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1967), G. Theissen (Studien zum Neuen Testaments, 2; Gütersloh [1969]), G. W. Buchanan (Anchor Bible, 1972), P. E. Hughes (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1977]), H. Braun (Hb. NT, 14; 1984), R. Mc. L. Wilson (New Cent. Bib., 1987), H. W. Attridge (Hermeneia; Philadelphia, [1989]), and H.-F. Weiss (KEK 13, 15th edn.; 1991). Studies on the theology of the Ep. by G. Milligan (Edinburgh, 1899), W. Manson (Baird Lecture for 1949; 1950), and M. Rissi (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 41; Tübingen [1987]). A. Nairne, The Epistle of Priesthood (1913). A. Harnack, 'Probabilia über die Adresse und den Verfasser des Hebräerbriefs', ZNTW 1 (1900), pp. 16–41. E. Käsemann, Das wandernde Gottesvolk: Eine Untersuchungen zum Hebräerbrief (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 55; 1939; 2nd edn., 1957; Eng. tr., Minneapolis [1984]). A. Vanhoye, SJ, La Structure littéraire de l'Épître aux Hébreux (1963). R. A. Greer, The Captain of our Salvation: A Study in the Patristic Exegesis of Hebrews (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 15; 1973). G. Hughes, Hebrews and Hermeneutics: The Epistle to the Hebrews as a New Testament Example of Biblical Interpretation (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 36; Cambridge, 1979); D. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (ibid. 47; 1982). Kümmel, pp. 388–403. C. Spicq, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 226–79, s.v. 'Paul (Épîtres attribuées à saint), 5. Hébreux (Épître aux)', with bibl.

Hebrews, Gospel according to the. An *apocryphal Gospel in use among Jewish Christians, also called the 'Gospel of the Hebrews' and the 'Hebrew Gospel'. It is mentioned by *Clement of Alexandria and cited by *Origen. *Epiphanius seems to identify it with the 'Gospel according to the *Ebionites', *Jerome with the Aramaic Gospel used by the *Nazarenes, while *Eusebius seems to regard it as an independent work. Jerome, who claims that he himself translated it into Latin and Greek, also reports that it was composed in *Aramaic speech written in Hebrew letters and that some regarded it as the original version of St *Matthew's Gospel. The surviving fragments contain an account of the appearance of the Risen Christ to St *James ('the Lord's brother') and Dominical sayings not recorded in the canonical Gospels (e.g. 'Never be glad, except when you look upon your brother in love', 'He that wonders shall reign, and he that has reigned shall rest'). There is no agreement among scholars as to the relationship between the various Jewish Christian Gospels, or about their relationship to the heretical 'Gospel of the Twelve' mentioned by Origen. The 'Gospel of the Hebrews' seems to be independent of the canonical Gospels and may preserve traditions of historical value.

Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 2. 9. 45; Origen, in Jn. 2. 12; Eusebius, HE 3. 25. 5; 3. 27. 4; 3. 39. 17; 4. 22. 8; Epiphanius, Haer. 30; Jerome, de vir. ill. 2 f.; Comm. in Eph. 3 (on 5: 4); in Mic. 2 (on 7: 6); in Isaiam, 18 prol.; Dial. adv. Pelag. 3. 2. Frags. collected in M. J. *Lagrange, OP, 'L'Évangile selon les Hébreux', R. Bibl. 31 (1922), pp. 161–81 and 321–49, with crit. discussion. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 1–10. Ger. tr., with introd., by P. Vielhauer and G. Strecker in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 142–7 (Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 172–8), with discussion of the whole question of Jewish Christian Gospels (with bibl.), 1, pp. 114–28 (Eng. tr., pp. 134–53). R. Handmann, Das Hebräer-Evangelium (TU 5, Heft 3; 1888). A Schmidtke, 'Zum Hebräerevangelium', ZNTW 35

(1936), pp. 24–44; H. Waitz, 'Neue Untersuchungen über die sogen. judenchristlichen Evangelien', ibid. 36 (1937), pp. 60–81; G. Bardy, 'Saint Jérôme et l'Évangile selon les Hébreux', Mélanges de Science religieuse, 3 (1946), pp. 5–36. A. F. J. Klijn, 'Das Hebräer- und das Nazoräerevangelium', in Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, Teil 2, Band 25. 5, ed. W. Haase (1988), pp. 3997–4033.

Hebron, the modern El-Hâlil, some 23 miles SSW of *Jerusalem. It is believed to be one of the oldest cities in the world. It was chosen by *Abraham as his nomadic home when he arrived in Palestine (Gen. 13: 18), and he acquired here the Cave of Machpelah as the burying place for his family (Gen. 23). *Joshua made it one of the *Cities of Refuge (Josh. 20: 7). After the death of Saul, *David made it his headquarters (2 Sam. 2: 1–4) and ruled the kingdom from Hebron for seven years and six months (2 Sam. 2: 11) until he had secured possession of Jerusalem. Absalom in turn, on his revolt from David, made it his capital (2 Sam. 15: 7–11). It has sometimes been identified by Christian writers with the scene of the Visitation of the BVM.

L. H. Vincent, OP, E. J. H. Mackay, and F. M. Abel, OP, Hébron: Le Haram el-Khalîl, sépulture des patriarches (1923, with sep. vol. of plates). F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 345–7, with further refs. S. Mowinckel, 'Die Gründung von Hebron', Orientalia Suecana, 4 (1955), pp. 67–76. Reports of excavations in R. Bibl. 72 (1965), pp. 267–70; 73 (1966), pp. 566–9; 75 (1968), pp. 253–8. P. W. Ferris in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 107 f., s.v.

Hecker, Isaac Thomas (1819–88), founder of the *Paulists. A native of New York, he was at first a keen *Methodist and as a youth took an active interest in the social conditions of the industrial classes. In 1844 he became a RC and, after spending some years in Europe, returned to New York in 1851. Meanwhile he had entered the novitiate of the *Redemptorists in Belgium in 1845 and been ordained priest by N. P. S. *Wiseman in 1849. In the early 1850s he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the many RC immigrants then entering the USA. Difficulties having arisen with his Redemptorist superiors in 1857 he was dispensed from his vows by *Pius IX, and founded a new congregation for missionary work in the States which was known as the 'Paulists'. After his death it was frequently suggested, but perhaps mistakenly, that the condemnation of *Americanism by *Leo XIII in his Testem benevolentiae (1899) had Hecker in mind.

The Correspondence between Hecker and O. A. Brownson (1803–76), a fellow convert to RCism, ed. J. F. Gower and R. M. Leliaert (Notre Dame Studies in American Catholicism, 1; Notre Dame and London, 1979). W. Elliott, The Life of Father Hecker (New York, 1891; Fr. tr., with preface by l'Abbé Félix Klein, 1897). C. Maignen, Étude sur l'américanisme: Le Père Hecker, est-il un saint? (1898). V. F. Holden, CSP, The Yankee Paul: Isaac Thomas Hecker (Milwaukee [1958]; deals with the period up to 1858). J. Farina (ed.), Hecker Studies: Essays on the Thought of Isaac Hecker (New York and Ramsey, NJ [1983]). V. F. Holden in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 126–31; id. in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 982 f., both s.v. See also bibl. to AMERICANISM.

hedonism. The ethical doctrine which maintains that the proper end of all moral action is pleasure (Gk. ἡδονή, 'pleasure'). It thus closely resembles *Utilitarianism (q.v.). It is also known, esp. by Continental moral philosophers, as 'Eudaemonism' (Gk. εὐδαιμονία, 'true well-being'). The title 'psychological hedonism' is applied to the doctrine which holds that man is so constituted psychologically that he cannot avoid making 'pleasure' the end of his actions, i.e. that even though he may persuade himself that he is doing acts of great sacrifice, it is really his own pleasure that he is seeking all the time. See also EUDEMONISM.

Hefele, Karl Joseph (1809–93), Church historian. Appointed Privatdozent in Church history at Tübingen in 1836 and professor in 1840, he soon won fame both as teacher and scholar. In 1869 he was elected Bp. of Rottenburg. He spent the winter of 1868–9 at Rome, where he took a prominent part as consultor in the preparations for the *Vatican Council of 1870, and was entrusted, owing to his unrivalled historical knowledge in the field, with drawing up the procedure. At the Council itself he was among the most influential of those opposed to the definition of Papal *Infallibility; but after some initial hesitations, he decided (10 Apr. 1871) to publish the Vatican Decrees in his diocese. His most important work was his history of the ecclesiastical Councils (9 vols., 1855–90, the last two by J. *Hergenröther; the earlier vols. exist in an Eng. tr., and the whole is in a French translation with important additions by H. *Leclercq and others, bringing the whole up to 1949; 11 vols. in 22 parts; 1907–52).

Obituary notice by F. X. Funk in Th.Q. 76 (1894), pp. 1–14. R. Reinhardt, 'Karl Joseph Hefele', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 2 [1975], pp. 163–211, with full bibl. V. Conzemius in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 985 f., s.v.; R. Reinhardt in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 526–9, s.v. See also works cited VATICAN COUNCIL, THE FIRST.

Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770–1831), German Idealist philosopher. Born at Stuttgart, in 1788 he entered the Protestant seminary at Tübingen (known as the Stift), ostensibly with a view to the *Lutheran ministry. As a student he was undistinguished, his chief interest being in the classics rather than theology or philosophy. He first became concerned with Christian origins during a three-year private tutorship in Switzerland (1793–6), during which time he wrote a 'Life of Jesus', expounding the Gospel in terms of *Kantian ethics, and an essay on 'The Positivity of the Christian Religion', in which he criticized historic Christianity as a legalistic system at odds with Christ's own moral spontaneity. From 1797 to 1800 he held a similar post at Frankfurt, but by then his understanding of Christianity had changed considerably, as a new essay on 'The Spirit of Christianity and its Fate' clearly shows. The principle he now finds embodied in it is that of God's love for men as proclaimed by Christ, a love which, rekindled in man himself, overcomes humanity's alienation from God. It is thus the principle of ultimate unity.

The legacy which Hegel received on the death of his father enabled him to give up tutoring, and in 1800 he moved to Jena, where in the following year he was appointed a Privatdozent. Here he had F. W. J. *von Schelling as a colleague, with whom he collaborated on the Kritisches Journal der Philosophie. To the same year belongs his treatise on the difference between the systems of J. G. *Fichte and Schelling. His lecture-schedule covered logic and metaphysics, but he had also begun to develop his own system, having then come to view the rational understanding rather than love, philosophy rather than religion, as the key to the unity of truth and reality. Although at first under the influence of Schelling, Hegel soon revealed differences in his own thought, and after Schelling's departure for Würzburg (1803) he was plainly intent on going his own way. His break with Schelling was manifest with the publication of his first major and prob. most abidingly interesting work, Die Phänomenologie des Geistes, in 1807. Meanwhile Napoleon's victory at the Battle of Jena (1806) had abruptly ended his career at the university (he had become professor extraordinarius in 1805), and for the next 18 months he was editor of a newspaper, the Bamberger Zeitung. Then from 1808 to 1815 he was director of the Nuremberg Gymnasium, carrying out the duties of headmaster with signal competence and conscientiousness. He continued his philosophical studies, however, and in his Wissenschaft der Logik (1812–16) he set out the conceptual basis of his system in its final form. On the strength of it he was appointed to a professorship at Heidelberg in 1816. The Logik was followed in 1817 by the Encyklopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse (2nd edn., much enlarged, 1827; 3rd edn., 1830). In 1818 he was nominated as J. G. Fichte's successor in the chair of philosophy at Berlin. He took up his appointment at a time of considerable political unrest—Kotzebue was assassinated in 1819—and he saw it as his immediate task to lay the theoretical foundations of a stable political order. His Naturrecht und Staatswissenschaft im Grundrisse, which came out in 1821 (a 2nd edn., ed. by E. Gans as Grundlinien des Philosophie des Rechts was published in 1833), although standing above contemporary issues and in points of detail diverging from official policy, endorsed the aims of the Prussian government.

Hegel's system is of a scope to outdistance even *Aristotle's, its distinctive character lying in its attempt to present all philosophical problems and concepts in an essentially evolutionary or historical perspective. For him no idea has an unchanging and eternal validity, but discloses its meaning in the continuous process of its development; a process in which contrasts and oppositions, acute though they may be, become intelligible through an identity within which they are related, even if only as opposites. Moreover the antitheses which thought apprehends are also constitutive of reality, thought and reality being one. 'The real is the rational and the rational is the real.' Development is the outcome of a dialectical 'movement' in which a thesis is succeeded by an antithesis, the ensuing conflict resulting in the two being brought together on a higher plane (aufgehoben, 'sublated') as a synthesis. The ultimate resolution and sublation of all differences, alike in thought and reality, is attained in the Absolute. This evolutionary view of the universe comprehends not only the natural sciences but also the humanities, including history, law, ethics, aesthetics, and religion, since truth lies not in the individual disciplines—except as a merely partial disclosure—but in the whole ('Die Wahrheit ist die Ganze').

Hegel regarded himself as a Christian and a Lutheran, but in his philosophy of religion he sees religious ideas as figurative representations (Vorstellungen) of truths which philosophy restates in conceptual and fully rational terms (Begriffe). Although the notion of Geist (Spirit, Mind) is the presiding concept of Hegel's thinking, he evidently did not understand by it a transcendent reality. In E. *Caird's words, it involves 'the complete rejection of ordinary supernaturalism'. Although some of Hegel's disciples, such as A. E. Biedermann (1819–85), found in his philosophy the true explanation and eventual justification of Christian doctrine, the general opinion has been to judge it pantheistic or even atheistic.

Although by the mid-19th cent. Hegel's system had passed under a cloud in his native Germany, it was to prove immensely influential on later thought in the realms of history, theology, politics, and sociology. After his death, his followers divided into two main camps, comprising on the one hand those who adhered more or less to Hegel's own system, and, on the other, those who developed his teaching along more 'naturalistic' or materialistic lines. The latter, often referred to as 'Young Hegelians', included B. *Bauer, L. *Feuerbach, and K. Marx, whose debt to Hegel is now fully recognized. Hegel's British disciples included T. H. *Green, E. Caird, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet, with whom may be associated Josiah Royce (1855–1916, from 1882 professor at Harvard) in America. Through Green especially, Idealism exercised a profound influence on English religious philosophy in the years between 1885 and 1920, but this was virtually eliminated by the subsequent vogue of empiricism and analysis. The last 30 years, however, have witnessed a widespread revival of interest in Hegel's own achievement as one of the highest points in the course of philosophical reflection.

The collected edn. of his Werke pub. in 19 vols., Berlin, 1832–87, was repr., with introd. by H. Glockner (26 vols., Stuttgart, 1927–40, incl. Hegel-Lexikon as vols. 23–6). The edn. begun by G. Lasson (Leipzig, 1905 ff.), rev. by id. and G. Hoffmeister (Hamburg, 1949 ff.), and ed. by various scholars, is incomplete. Crit. edn., sponsored by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (Hamburg, 1968 ff.). Eng. versions of Hegel's works incl. Phenomenology, tr. J. B. Baillie (2 vols., 1910; rev. edn., 1931), and tr. A. V. Miller, with Analysis of the Text by J. N. Findlay (Oxford, 1977); Hegel's Science of Logic, tr. W. H. Johnson and L. G. Struthers (2 vols., 1929), and tr. A. V. Miller (1969); from the Encyklopädie: The Logic of Hegel, tr. W. Wallace (Oxford, 1874; 2nd edn., 1894; repr. 1975); Hegel's Philosophy of Nature, tr. A. V. Miller (ibid., 1970), and Hegel's Philosophy of Mind, tr. W. Wallace (ibid., 1894; repr., with additional matter tr. A. V. Miller, ibid., 1971); Hegel's Philosophy of Right, tr. T. M. Knox (from Naturrecht, ibid., 1942); also Lectures on the Philosophy of History, tr. J. Sibree (1888) and tr. H. B. Nisbet, with introd. by D. Forbes (Cambridge, 1975); Lectures on the Philosophy of Religion, tr. E. B. Speirs and J. B. Sanderson (3 vols., 1895) and tr. R. F. Brown and others, ed. P. C. Hodgson (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1984] ff.); and Early Theological Writings, tr. T. M. Knox (Chicago, 1948).

Works on Hegel's philosophy incl. E. Caird, Hegel (1883); K. Fischer, Hegels Leben, Werken und Lehre (2 vols., Heidelberg, 1901); W. T. Stace, The Philosophy of Hegel (1924); N. Hartmann, Die Philosophie des deutschen Idealismus, 2: Hegel (1929); T. L. Haering, Hegel: Sein Wollen und sein Werk (2 vols., 1929–38); J. Hyppolite, Genèse et structure de la Phénoménologie de l'Esprit de Hegel ([1946]; Eng. tr., Evanston, Ill., 1974); F. Grégoire, Études hégéliennes: Les Points capitaux du système (Bibliothèque philosophique de Louvain, 19; 1958); J. N. Findlay, Hegel: A Re-examination (1958); G. R. G. Mure, The Philosophy of Hegel (HUL, 1965); W. Kaufmann, Hegel: Reinterpretation, Texts, and Commentary (Garden City, NY, 1965; London, 1966); R. Plant, Hegel (London, 1973; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1983); C. Taylor, Hegel (Cambridge, 1975); M. J. Inwood, Hegel (Arguments of the Philosophers, 1983); and H. Althaus, Hegel und die heroischen Jahre der Philosophie (Munich [1992]). On his religious philosophy, A. Chapelle, Hegel et la religion (3 vols. in 4 parts, 1964–71); E. L. Fackenheim, The Religious Dimension in Hegel's Thought (Bloomington, Ind., 1967; Chicago and London, 1982); B. M. G. Reardon, Hegel's Philosophy of Religion (1977); J. Yerkes, The Christology of Hegel (American Academy of Religion Dissertation Series, 23; Missoula, Mo. [1978]); Q. Lauer, SJ, Hegel's Concept of God (Albany, NY [1982]); R. K. Williamson, Introduction to Hegel's Philosophy of Religion (ibid. [1984]); L. Dickey, Hegel: Religion, Economics, and the Politics of Spirit 1770–1807 (Cambridge, 1987); and A. Shanks, Hegel's Political Theology (ibid., 1991). K. Steinhauer, Hegel Bibliography (1980).

Hegesippus, St (2nd cent.), Church historian. He was prob. a native of Palestine, and acc. to *Eusebius, a converted Jew. He wrote five Books of 'Memoirs' (ὑπομνήματα) against the *Gnostics. Though they now survive, as far as is known, only in fragments (nearly all preserved in Eusebius' HE), the work is said to have existed entire in some libraries as late as the 16th–17th cents. The surviving portions deal for the most part with the early history of the Church at *Jerusalem. It appears (Eusebius, HE 4. 22. 1–3) that he drew up a 'succession-list' (διαδοχή) of the early bishops of the Church at Rome; and it has been argued that the list in *Epiphanius (Haer. 27. 6) is a reproduction of it. If so, it is the earliest witness to the names of the first Roman bishops. Feast day, 7 Apr.

Frags. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., 1846), pp. 207–19 (notes, pp. 220–84), and T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, 6 (1900), pp. 228–73. N. Hyldahl, 'Hegesipps Hypomnemata', Studia Theologica, 14 (1960), pp. 70–113. W. Telfer, 'Was Hegesippus a Jew?', HTR 53 (1960), pp. 143–53. On his 'Papal List' see C. H. *Turner in H. B. *Swete, Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918), pp. 115–20 and 207; H. Kemler, 'Hegesipps römische Bischofsliste', VC 25 (1971), pp. 182–96, with refs. to earlier bibl. CPG 1 (1983), p. 109 (no. 1302). Further bibl. in Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 109 f. and 570.

Hegira. See HIJRA.

hegumenos (Gk. ἡγούμενος, lit. 'leader'). A title in the E. for the ruler of a monastery. He is usually elected by the monks of the monastery, though confirmation is required from the patriarch, the diocesan bishop, or the patron (acc. to the status of the monastery).

Heidegger, Martin (1889–1976), German *existentialist philosopher. A native of Messkirch, Baden, and coming from a peasant background, Heidegger studied for a time at a Jesuit seminary before he went to Freiburg University. He was much influenced by the writings of F. *Brentano and the teaching of E. Husserl. After submitting a thesis on Pseudo-*Duns Scotus' Grammatica Speculativa, Heidegger became Privatdozent at Freiburg in 1915. In 1923 he was appointed Professor at Marburg, where his colleagues included R. *Bultmann and P. *Tillich. In 1929 he returned to Freiburg as Husserl's successor. At first he supported the Nazi regime and was Rector of the University from 1933 to 1934. In later years he spent much of his time in the Black Forest, though he did not resign his Professorship until 1951.

In an obscure language, consciously opposed to the intellectual vocabulary of the scientific Greek tradition, Heidegger elaborated a metaphysic of the human person. Though trained in the neo-*Kantian school, he rejected Kant's 'self' as ignoring man's historical being in the world. He was indebted to Husserl's *Phenomenology for reflecting on the structure of consciousness, but felt that this was only a preliminary to philosophy's proper concern, that of the nature of being. Thus, his Sein und Zeit (1927; Eng. tr., 1962), with elaborate etymological excursuses, uncovers man's temporal being in order to focus on Being in its unity and totality. Man's personal existence (Dasein: literally 'there-ness') is a unique, transcendent possibility, which is rooted in immediate, temporal relationships. Authentic existence, facing nothingness, is lived out only in the full acceptance of death. The lectures which he gave in 1927, Die Grundprobleme der Phänomenologie (which he did not permit to be published until 1975), while intended as a continuation of Sein und Zeit, are in some ways an easier introduction to his early thought, since Heidegger is concerned to place himself in relation to the previous history of philosophy. In his later works (the extent of discontinuity with his earlier writings is much disputed) it seems that Being is intuitively grasped rather than philosophically explored. In Hölderlin und das Wesen der Dichtung (1936) he treats of language as the house of Being and of the poet as guardian of Being.

Heidegger's influence on theologians has been considerable. Bultmann, for instance, adopts his categories (of authentic and unauthentic existence), regarding them as a systematic and secularized version of NT anthropology; he maintains that Heidegger's analysis is correct, though it is only in Christian faith that the transition to authentic existence is realized. In Heidegger's later work some theologians have found suggestions for a 'non-objectifying' mode of theological discourse.

There is a massive Gesamtausgabe of his pub. and previously unpub. works (Frankfurt am Main, 1975 ff., incl., as vol. 24, Die Grundprobleme der Phänomenologie, ed. F.-W. von Herrmann, 1975; Eng. tr. by A. Hofstadter, Bloomington, Ind. [1982]). Several of his other works have been tr. into Eng., incl. 'Hölderlin und das Wesen der Dichtung', which is incl. in Existence and Being (1949), pp. 291–315, with useful introd. by W. Brock, pp. 20–248. Basic Writings, ed., in Eng. tr., by D. F. Krell (1978), with introd., pp. 3–35. J. M. Robinson and J. B. Cobb, Jun. (eds.), The Later Heidegger and Theology (1963); O. Pöggeler, Der Denkweg Martin Heideggers (1963; Eng. tr., Atlantic Highlands, NJ, 1987); id., Neue Wege mit Heidegger (Freiburg, etc. [1992]); M. King, Heidegger's Philosophy: A Guide to his Basic Thought (Oxford, 1964); G. Steiner, Heidegger (Modern Masters, 1978); M. Murray (ed.), Heidegger and Modern Philosophy (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1978); A. Jäger, Gott: Nochmals Martin Heidegger (Tübingen, 1978); T. Sheehan (ed.), Heidegger the Man and the Thinker (Chicago [1981]); H.-G. Gadamer, Heideggers Wege (Tübingen, 1983); M. Haar (ed.), Martin Heidegger (Cahiers de l'Herne, 45; 1983); F. A. Olafson, Heidegger and the Philosophy of Mind (New Haven, Conn., and London [1987]); H. Ott, Martin Heidegger: Unterwegs zu seiner Biographie (Frankfurt and New York [1988]); B. Martin (ed.), Martin Heidegger und das 'Dritte Reich': Ein Kompendium (Darmstadt, 1989); G. Kovacs, The Question of God in Heidegger's Phenomenology (Evanston, Ill. [1990]); D. Papenfuss and O. Pöggeler (eds.), Zur philosophischen Aktualität Heideggers: Symposium der Alexander von Humbolt-Stiftung vom 24.–28. April 1989 (3 vols., Frankfurt am Main [1991–2]). M. Wyschogrod, Kierkegaard and Heidegger: The Ontology of Existence (1954); J. Macquarrie, An Existentialist Theology: A Comparison of Heidegger and Bultmann (1955). H.-M. Sass, Martin Heidegger: Bibliography and Glossary (Bowling Green, Oh. [1982]).

Heidelberg Catechism. The Protestant confession of faith compiled in 1562 by Z. *Ursinus and K. Olevian, two Heidelberg theologians, and others, at the instance of the Elector, *Frederick III, and accepted in the following year as the standard of doctrine in the Palatinate. In fundamentals its theology is *Calvinist, though the specific doctrines of J. *Calvin have sometimes been modified under the influence of J. H. *Bullinger and others of even stronger Lutheran sympathies. Translated into Dutch in 1563, and into English in 1572, it exercised influence in the Netherlands and in England.

A. Wolters, Heidelberger Katechismus in seiner ursprünglichen Gestalt, herausgegeben nebst der Geschichte seines Textes im Jahre 1563 (1864). Text from 3rd edn. in H. A. Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 390–461, with introd. pp. lvii–lxiii. Convenient Eng. trs. in T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith: The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 67–96, and by A. O. Miller and M. E. Osterhaven (Philadelphia, 1962), repr. in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 305–31, and, with introd., in M. A. Noll (ed.), Confessions and Catechisms of the Reformation (Leicester, 1991), pp. 133–64. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, 1 (1877), pp. 529–54. K. *Barth, Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (1948); id., Einführung in den Heidelberger Katechismus (1960; Eng. tr. of both as The Heidelberg Catechism for Today, 1964). W. Hollweg, Neue Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Heidelberger Katechismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 13, 1961; 2nd ser., ibid. 28, 1968). D. Visser (ed.), Controversy and Conciliation: The Reformation and the Palatinate 1559–1583 (Pittsburg Theological Monographs, NS 18; Allison Park, Pa., 1986), pp. 73–100 and 197–225. W. Heijting, De Catechismi en Confessies in de Nederlandse Reformatie tot 1585, 1 (Bibliotheca Bibliographica Neerlandica, 27; Nieuwkoop, 1989), pp. 232–79, on the Dutch trs. W. Metz and J. Fangmeier in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 582–90, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to URSINUS, Z.

Heiler, Friedrich (1892–1967), German religious writer. As a RC, he studied Catholic theology, philosophy, and oriental languages at Munich, but he soon came under the influence of Protestantism, especially of the Swedish theologian, N. *Söderblom. In 1919 he became a member of the Lutheran Church at *Uppsala. In 1922 he was appointed professor of the comparative history of religions at *Marburg. Influenced by the writings of F. *von Hügel, his later development took a more Catholic line. He became the organizer of a German High Church movement, and even founded an Evangelical order of Franciscan *Tertiaries. In his latter years he played an active part in the *Ecumenical Movement. His first and most important work is Das Gebet (1918; abridged Eng. tr., Prayer, 1932), a comprehensive historical analysis of the subject from its most primitive forms in the inarticulate shouts of the savage to the heights of mystic contemplation, the description of the latter being largely based on F. von Hügel, W. R. *Inge, and E. *Underhill. He later developed this comprehensive approach into a general phenomenology of religion in his Erscheinungsformen und Wesen der Religion (1961). His work on Catholicism, Der Katholizismus (1923), is remarkable for its appreciative understanding of it in its earlier expressions, but almost entirely negative on post-Tridentine developments. His profound interest in the Eastern *Orthodox Church bore fruit in Die Ostkirchen (pub. posthumously, 1971; a much-expanded version of his Urkirche und Ostkirche, 1937).

In Deo Omnia Unum: Eine Sammlung von Aufsätzen F. Heiler zum 50. Geburstage dargebracht (ed. C. M. Schröder and others, Munich, 1942 [issue of periodical Eine Heilige Kirche]); Interconfessiones . . . Friedrich Heiler zum Gedächtnis aus Anlass seines 80. Geburtstages, ed. A. M. Heiler (widow) (Marburger Theologische Studien, 10; 1972), with bibl., pp. 154–96. G. Lanczkowski in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 638–41, s.v.

Heim, Karl (1874–1958), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Frauenzimmern in Württemberg, he studied at *Tübingen and was for some years a pastor and schoolmaster. In 1907 he became a Privatdozent at Halle, in 1914 Professor of Theology at Münster i.W., and in 1920 at Tübingen. For several years he was one of the leading opponents of the (pagan) German Faith Movement. His theology, which developed out of a *Pietistic background, stressed the *Ritschlian contrast of faith and reason and, while fully accepting the achievements of modern secular culture and science, emphasized the transcendence of faith. He was esp. concerned to analyse the conditions governing the valid apprehension of supernatural truth. In his personalism (the 'I–Thou' relationship; cf. M. *Buber) and his doctrine of 'perspectives', his teaching had affinities with certain *existentialist doctrines. Among his writings are Das Weltbild der Zukunft (1904), Glaubensgewissheit (1916; 2nd edn., 1923), Das Wesen des evangelischen Christentums (1926), Glauben und Denken (1931; 3rd edn., 1934; Eng. tr. as God Transcendent, 1935), Glaube und Leben, Gesammelte Aufsätze und Vorträge (1925; 3rd edn., 1928), and his autobiography, Ich gedenke der vorigen Zeiten (1957).

Many of Heim's works have been tr. into Eng. Theologie als Glaubenswagnis: Festschrift für Karl Heim zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht von der Evang.-theol. Fakultät in Tübingen (Hamburg, 1954). Brief studies on various aspects of his theology by W. Ruttenbeck (Leipzig, 1925), H. E. Eisenhuth (Göttingen, 1928), F. Spemann (Tübingen, 1932), and A. Köberle (Hamburg, 1973, with substantial extracts of Heim's writings). H. Schwarz, Das Verständnis des Wunders bei Heim und Bultmann (1966), with bibl. In Eng., popular introd. by E. L. Allen, Jesus Our Leader: A Guide to the Thought of Karl Heim [1950]. Z. Kučera in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 774–7, s.v.

Heiric of Auxerre (841–876/7), teacher and hagiographer. When only about 7 years old he entered the monastery of St *Germanus at Auxerre as an oblate. There his teacher was Haymo of Auxerre. From 859 to 860 he studied under Servatus *Lupus at Ferrières, and from 862 to 865 he was at the abbey of St Médard at Soissons, where he came into contact with Johannes Scottus *Erigena. He then returned to his monastery at Auxerre and taught there until his death. His chief work was a metrical Life of St Germanus, one of the best hagiographical poems of the times, which he dedicated *c.*876 to Charles the Bald. He also wrote 'Miracula S. Germani' in prose, and put together 'Collectanea', partly classical from Valerius Maximus, *Suetonius and other sources, and partly theological; these were based on the teaching of Lupus and Haymo. He is important as a link between the Carolingian schools and the later Middle Ages, esp. as the teacher of *Remigius.

The best text of his metrical Life of St Germanus is that of L. Traube, with important introd., in MGH, Poetae, 3 (1896), pp. 421–517; it is also pr. in AASS, Jul. 7 (1731), pp. 221–55.

Miracula S. Germani, ibid., pp. 255–83. Collectanea ed. R. Quadri, OFM (Spicilegium Friburgense, 11; Fribourg, 1966); Homiliae per circulum anni [pieces intended for private reading rather than sermons preached], ed. id. and R. Demeulenaere (CCCM 116, 116A, 116B; 1992–4). G. Billanovich, 'Dall'antica Ravenna alle biblioteche umanistiche', Aevum, 30 (1956), pp. 319–53, rev. in Annuario dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Anni Accademici 1955–7 (Milan, 1958), pp. 71–107. É. Jeauneau, 'Dans le sillage de l'Érigène: une homélie d'Héric d'Auxerre sur le prologue de Jean', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 11 (1970), pp. 937–55, incl. text. P. Janin, 'Heiric d'Auxerre et les Gesta pontificum Autissiodorensium', Francia, 4 (for 1976; 1977), pp. 89–105, with further refs. J. J. O'Meara, Eriugena (Oxford, 1988), ch. 11, esp. pp. 205–9. R. Quadri and others in D. Iogna-Prat and others (eds.), L'École Carolingienne d'Auxerre de Murethach à Remi 830–908: Entretiens d'Auxerre 1989 [1991], pp. 273–370. Manitius, 1, pp. 499–504. L. Barré in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 282–5, s.v.

heirmos (Gk. εἱρμός, 'chain'). The opening stanza in each ode of the *canon. All the remaining *troparia in the ode follow the same rhythm as the heirmos. In content it acts as a 'link' verse (hence its name), joining together: (1) the theme of the biblical canticle, which the ode of the canon was originally designed to accompany; and (2) the theme of the feast or commemoration of the day, which is developed in the troparia that follow.

Helena, St (*c.*255–*c.*330), also Helen, mother of the Emp. *Constantine. Born at Drepanum (later 'Helenopolis' after her) in Bithynia of humble parentage, she became the wife of the Emp. Constantius Chlorus, by whom she bore Constantine in 274. She was abandoned by her husband in 292 when political reasons led him to marry the stepdaughter of the Emp. Maximian. When Constantine became Emperor in 306, Helena was immediately raised to a position of great honour and zealously supported the Christian cause. In 326, at a great age, she made a visit to the Holy Land, where she founded the basilicas on the Mount of *Olives and at *Bethlehem, and (acc. to later tradition; *Sulpicius Severus, *Ambrose, *Rufinus, all *c.*395–400) discovered the Cross on which Christ was crucified.

The medieval belief that Helena was a native of England rests on confusion; its origins are complicated. A story in the Welsh Mabinogion, incorporating material from the late 7th cent., attributes the name of Helena to the wife of Magnus Maximus, Emp. in Britain, Gaul, and Spain from 383 to 388; in this story Constantine is given as the name of one of her sons, and Maximus is turned into the legendary figure of Macsen Wledig. *Geoffrey of Monmouth described Helena as the daughter of Coel ('Old King Cole') of Colchester. From the 9th cent. the abbey of Hautvillers, near *Reims, claimed to possess her body. Feast day in the W., formerly 18 Aug.; in the E., 21 May (with St Constantine, Emp.).

The chief early sources are *Eusebius, Vita Constantini, *Zosimus, Historia, 2. 8, and Eutropius, Breviarium, 10. 2. R. Couzard, Sainte Hélène d'après l'histoire et la tradition (1911). E. D. Hunt, Holy Land Pilgrimage in the Later Roman Empire AD 312–460 (Oxford, 1982), esp. pp. 28–49 ('Helena—History and Legend'); J. W. Drijvers, Helena Augusta: The Mother of Constantine the Great and the Legend of her Finding of the True Cross (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 27; Leiden, 1992). For her church on the Mount of Olives, see L.-H. Vincent, OP, 'L'Éléona, sanctuaire primitif de l'Ascension', R. Bibl. 64 (1957), pp. 48–71; for that at Bethlehem, see bibl. s.v. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2126–45, s.v. 'Hélène, Impératrice'; R. Klein in RAC 14 (1988), cols. 355–75, s.v. 'Helena II'.

For the legend, see BHL 1 (1899), nos. 3772–90. Life by Almannus of Hautvillers in AASS, Aug. 3 (1737), pp. 580–99. A. Linder, 'The Myth of Constantine in the West', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 16 (1975), pp. 43–95, esp. pp. 84–93; J. F. Matthews, 'Macsen, Maximus, and Constantine', Welsh History Review, 11 (1983), pp. 431–48, repr. in id., Political Life and Culture in Late Roman Society (1985), no. 12.

Heliand ('Saviour'; Old English hælend, Ger. Heiland). An Old Saxon biblical poem of the 9th cent. It owes its title to its first editor, A. Schmeller (1830), though the work had been discovered in the 17th cent. by F. Junius (d. 1671). It is based on *Tatian's harmony of the Gospels and is written in alliterative verse. The Latin 'Praefatio', now generally considered genuine, states that the Heliand was written by a well-known Saxon bard at the order of King *Louis I (the 'Pious') for the benefit of his Saxon subjects recently converted to Christianity; it is in any case a product of the 830s, possibly from *Fulda or, more probably, from Werden in Westphalia. The poem, which shows the influence of the contemporary Anglo-Saxon religious poetry, represents Christ as a liege-lord and the Apostles as His faithful vassals, and inculcates the virtues of humility and love of one's enemies.

The work survives complete in a 10th-cent. MS in the British Library (Cotton Caligula A. VII); a 9th-cent. MS at Munich has two lacunae; there are also 9th-cent. frags. at Prague and the Vatican, the latter also containing a fragment of a Genesis in the same style but by a later poet, and the 'Straubinger Fragment', of the mid-ninth cent., discovered in 1978. Editio princeps by J. A. Schmeller at Munich, 1830, with crit. apparatus as 'Lieferung 2', ibid., 1840. Other edns. by E. Sievers (Halle, 1878, with suppl. by E. Schröder, 1935) and O. Behaghel (ibid., 1882; 9th edn., rev. B. Taeger, Tübingen, 1984). Modern Eng. trr. of the text by M. Scott (University of North Carolina Studies in the Germanic Languages and Literatures, 52 [1966]) and, with comm., by G. R. Murphy, SJ (New York and Oxford, 1992). On MSS of the Heliand, see B. Bischoff, 'Die Schriftheimat der Münchener Heliand-Handschrift', Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Sprache und Literatur, 101 (1979), pp. 161–70, repr. id., Mittelalterliche Studien, 3 (Stuttgart, 1981), pp. 112–19, and part of an earlier art., repr. ibid., pp. 103–5. R. Drögereit, Werden und der Heliand (Essen, 1950); B. Taeger, Zahlensymbolik bei Hraban, bei Hincmar und im 'Heliand'? (Münchener Texte und Untersuchungen zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 30; 1970). J. Eichhoff and I. Rauch (eds.), Der Heliand (Wege der Forschung, 321; Darmstadt, 1973). G. R. Murphy, SJ, The Saxon Savior: The German Transformation of the Gospel in the Ninth-Century Heliand (New York and Oxford, 1989). J. K. Bostock, A Handbook on Old High German Literature (2nd edn., rev. K. C. King and D. R. McLintock, Oxford, 1976), pp. 168–83. J. Belkin and J. Meier, Bibliographie zu Otfrid von Weissenburg und zur altsächischen Bibeldichtung (Heliand und Genesis) (Bibliographien zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 7; 1975) pp. 63–131.

Helkesaites. See ELKESAITES.

Hell. The word 'hell' is used in English translations of the Bible to represent both the Hebrew '*Sheol' (q.v.), meaning the place of the departed, and the Greek '*Gehenna' (q.v.), which came to denote the divinely ordained place of punishment for the wicked after death. In Christian theology it normally signifies the place or state to which unrepentant sinners are held to pass after this life, whereas the redeemed go either to *Purgatory

(q.v.) or direct to *Heaven (q.v.). Its character is inferred from biblical teaching, esp. Christ's words in the Gospels about the fate of those who refuse the opportunity of entering the Kingdom of Heaven (cf. Matt. 13: 42; 25: 30 and 41). In Rev. the 'second death' (2: 11; 20: 14, etc.) is depicted symbolically as the fate of being cast into a 'lake which burneth with fire and brimstone' (21: 8; cf. 19: 20 and 20: 10). From such texts as this, often understood over-literally, the popular idea of hell was derived.

It is clear that in the NT hell in this sense is an ultimate state or destiny into which souls pass only by God's final and irrevocable judgement, whether that is conceived as the *Particular Judgement at death or the *General Judgement on the last day. Acc. to the traditional Scholastic theology, souls experience in hell both the poena damni, i.e. the exclusion from God's presence and loss of all contact with Him, and a certain poena sensus, denoted in the Bible by fire, which is usually interpreted as an external agent tormenting them. Modern theology tends rather to stress the fact that hell is but the logical consequence of ultimate adherence to the soul's own will and rejection of the will of God, which (since God cannot take away free will) necessarily separates the soul from God, and hence from all possibility of happiness. This exclusion from heaven (in which the unrepentant person would from his very character be both unable and unwilling to share) is held to be contrary neither to God's justice nor to His love, since He will not force response to the good from any creature against his will.

See also DESCENT OF CHRIST INTO HELL.

Helvetic Confessions, the. Two important Reformation Confessions of Faith.

(1) First Helvetic Confession (also known as the 'Second Confession of *Basle'). It was compiled at Basle in 1536 by H. *Bullinger of Zurich, *Myconius and Grynaeus of Basle, and others, after much dissension, esp. on the Eucharist, as a uniform confession of faith for the whole of German-speaking Switzerland. Its basis was *Zwinglian, but it contained a considerable *Lutheran element. It was accepted by all the Protestant Swiss cantons but rejected by Strasbourg and Constance.

(2) Second Helvetic Confession. This was the work of H. Bullinger, who made an early draft of it for himself in 1561. It was issued in 1566 in response to a request from the Elector-Palatine, *Frederick III ('the Pious'), who had announced his definite adhesion to *Calvinism. It is among the longest of the Reformation Confessions, in places taking on the character of a theological treatise. Its teaching is mainly Calvinist, with some Zwinglian elements. It soon won acceptance not only in all the Swiss Protestant Churches, but also among the 'Reformed' (i.e. Calvinists) outside Switzerland.

(1) Lat. and Ger. text in P. *Schaff, Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 211–31; Eng. tr. in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 97–111.

(2) Latin text in P. Schaff, Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 233–306; Eng. tr. in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 220–301. J. Staedtke (ed.), Glauben und Bekennen: 400 Jahre Confessio Helvetica Posterior. Beiträge zu ihrer Geschichte und Theologie (Zurich, 1966). E. Koch, Die Theologie der Confessio Helvetica Posterior (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 27; 1968). E. Zsindeley in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 169–73, s.v. 'Confessio Helvetica Posterior'.

Helvidius (4th cent.). A Latin theologian who was attacked by St *Jerome for his denial of the perpetual virginity of the BVM. His underlying motive seems to have been the defence of marriage against the prevalent exaltation of virginity. Helvidius declared that the *brethren of the Lord were the natural sons of Joseph and Mary. Jerome replied in his De perpetua virginitate B. Mariae adversus Helvidium that they were the sons of another Mary, the wife of Alphaeus and the sister of the Virgin. Acc. to St *Augustine (De haer. 84), he won disciples who were known as 'Helvidians'.

Helvidius' tract has not survived. Jerome's reply is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 23. 185–206. Bardenhewer, 3, p. 631. G. Jouassard, 'La Personnalité d'Helvidius', in Mélanges J. Saunier (Bibliothèque de la Faculté Catholique des Lettres de Lyon, 3; 1944), pp. 139–56. J. N. D. Kelly, Jerome (1975), pp. 104–7.

Helwys, Thomas (*c.*1550–*c.*1616), English *Baptist divine. Of a Nottinghamshire family, he studied at Gray's Inn. In 1608 he emigrated to Holland with J. *Smyth and became a member of the *Separatist Church at Amsterdam. Here, like Smyth, he became convinced that 'Infant Baptism' was not baptism at all, and accordingly received baptism at Smyth's hands. In consequence, when he and Smyth were excommunicated (1609), he joined Smyth's Separatist community at Amsterdam, the first Baptist Church to come into being. In 1612, feeling it his duty no longer to absent himself from the dangers of persecution, he returned to London, where he founded the first *General Baptist congregation in England at Pinners' Hall, London, and met with remarkable success as a preacher. Opposition was aroused, however, when he began to put into circulation his Declaration of the Mystery of Iniquity, which, written and printed in Holland (1611–12), contained the first sustained plea by an English divine for universal religious toleration and a denial of the right of the State to legislate on matters which concern a man's relation to God. There seems to be no record of the circumstances of Helwys's death.

A facsimile edn. of The Mystery of Iniquity was pub. for the Baptist Historical Society (London, 1935), with introd. by H. Wheeler *Robinson, pp. iii–xv. W. H. Burgess, John Smith, the Se-Baptist, Thomas Helwys and the First Baptist Church in England (1911), pp. 107–296 passim. E. A. Payne, Thomas Helwys and the First Baptist Church in England ([1962]; pamphlet). A. C. Bickley in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 375 f. See also works cited under BAPTISTS.

Hemerobaptists (Gk. ἡμέρα, 'day', and βαπτιστής 'baptist'), a Jewish sect for which daily ablution was an essential part of religion. Acc. to *Epiphanius (Haer. 1. 17) their doctrines were similar to those of the *Pharisees, except that they denied the resurrection. The sect is mentioned by *Hegesippus (Eus., HE 4. 22) and *Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Tryph. 80). The Clementine Recognitions* (2. 23) state that *John the Baptist was a Hemerobaptist. J. B. *Lightfoot (Col., p. 402) identified them with the Hebrew sect of Toble-shacharith ('morning bathers').

Hemmerlin, Felix, also 'Hemerli' (*c.*1388–*c.*1460), also 'Malleolus', reformer. A native of Zurich, he studied canon law at Erfurt (1406–8 and 1413–18) and *Bologna (1408–12 and 1423–4) and states that he was present at the Council of *Constance (1415). In 1421 he became provost at St Ursus at Solothurn, where he revised the statutes of his collegiate clergy and defended their rights against the municipality. From now on he loudly advocated reforms of all kinds, e.g. suppression of concubinage and simony and reduction of feast-days; and he also attacked the *Mendicant Orders and the *Lollards. In 1428 he was made Cantor of the Stift at Zurich, and from 1429 onwards he appears as a canon of St Moritz at Zofingen. In his later years he took a prominent part in politics, supporting the alliance of Zurich with Austria against the Swiss Confederation, which he attacked violently in Dialogus de Nobilitate et Rusticitate (*c.*1452). On the reconciliation of Zurich with the Swiss in 1456 he was condemned to the loss of his ecclesiastical offices and perpetual imprisonment. He spent his last years in mild captivity with the *Franciscans at Lucerne. He was the author of over 30 polemical works.

A collection of his writings was pub. by S. Brant at Basle *c.*1497. Studies by B. Reber (Zurich, 1846) and H. Walser (ibid., 1940). A. Schneider in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 656–9, s.v. 'Hemerli'.

Henderson, Alexander (*c.*1583–1646), Scottish Covenanting leader. As an Episcopalian he obtained a professorship at St Andrews, and in 1611 or 1612 was appointed to the parish of Leuchars in Fife. By 1618 he was sufficiently in sympathy with *Presbyterianism to oppose the Articles of *Perth, and later offered strong resistance to the Prayer Book of 1637. He was mainly responsible for drafting the *National Covenant of 1638, became Moderator of the Assembly which met at Glasgow in Nov. 1638, and in Jan. 1639 was inducted to Greyfriars, Edinburgh. During the *Bishops' Wars of 1639–40 he was the recognized leader of the Scottish Presbyterians, and even *Charles I, on his visit to Scotland in 1641, was forced to accept him as his chaplain and Dean of the Chapel Royal. In 1643 he went to Oxford in a vain attempt at mediation between King and Parliament, while in the following months he prepared the draft of the *Solemn League and Covenant for both Scotland and England (1643) and of the Directory for Public *Worship (1644). In 1646 he spent the last months of his life debating the presbyterian and episcopal systems of Church government with the King.

J. Aiton, The Life and Times of Alexander Henderson (1836); T. McCrie and T. Thomson, Lives of Alexander Henderson and James Guthrie (1846), pp. 1–140; G. W. Thomson, Alexander Henderson: A Biography (1883); R. L. Orr, Alexander Henderson, Churchman and Statesman (1919). There is also a short sketch by J. B. Salmond and G. H. Bushnell, Henderson's Benefaction (St Andrews, 1942), issued to mark the 3rd centenary of his donation of £1,000 to found the University Library at St Andrews.

Hengstenberg, Ernst Wilhelm (1802–69), biblical exegete. From 1828 till his death he was Professor of Biblical Exegesis at Berlin. He was brought up in a rationalist atmosphere, then fell under *Pietist influences in 1824–6, and from *c.*1840 accounted himself an orthodox Lutheran. As editor from 1827 to 1869 of the Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, which he had himself founded, he possessed an influential organ in which he attacked the theology of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and other unorthodox systems. His works include many commentaries on OT and NT books, some of which were translated into English.

J. Bachmann and T. Schmalenbach, Ernst Wilhelm Hengstenberg: Sein Leben und Wirken nach gedruckten und ungedruckten Quellen (3 vols., 1876–92). J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 79–90. J. Mehlhausen in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 39–42, s.v.

Henotheism (Gk. ἑνός, 'one', and θεός 'god'). A term first employed by F. *Max Müller in 1860 for a primitive form of faith which, as distinct from *Monotheism (belief in the existence of a single god) and monolatry (restriction of worship to a single god), recognizes the existence of several gods, but regards one particular god as the deity of the family or tribe; makes him the centre of its worship; and in its relations with him neglects for practical purposes the existence of others. It thus stands mid-way between polytheism and monotheism. Modern scholars commonly hold that the early Hebrew faith in *Yahweh (down to the 8th cent. BC or later) took this form.

Henoticon (Gk. ἑνωτικόν). The theological formula put forward in 482 to secure union between the *Monophysites and the Orthodox and sponsored by the Emp. *Zeno. It was apparently the work chiefly of Acacius, Patr. of *Constantinople, and *Peter Mongo, Patr. of *Alexandria. It reaffirmed the traditional faith of the Church epitomized in the *Nicene–Constantinopolitan Creed and accepted the Twelve Anathemas of St *Cyril of Alexandria, condemned both *Nestorius and *Eutyches, but it made no reference to the burning question of the number of 'natures' in Christ, issued an ambiguous disclaimer of the Council of *Chalcedon, and omitted all mention of the *Tome of Leo. Widely accepted in the E., but never countenanced at Rome, it provoked the *Acacian schism, the first division between E. and W. Christendom.

Text in *Evagrius, HE 3. 14 (PG 86. 2620–25). Crit. edn. by E. *Schwartz in Codex Vaticanus gr. 1431: Eine antichalkedonische Sammlung aus der Zeit Kaiser Zenos (Abh. (Bayr.), 32, Heft 6 [1927], pp. 52–4); Lat. tr. in Liberatus' Breviarium, pr. ibid., pp. 54–6. E. Schwartz, Publizistische Sammlungen zum acacianischen Schisma (Abh. (Bayr.), NF, Heft 10, 1934), esp. pp. 182–218. S. Salaville, AA, 'L'Affaire de l'hénotique ou le premier schisme byzantin au Vᵉ siècle', EO 18 (1918), pp. 255–66, 389–97; 19 (1920), pp. 49–68. A. Grillmeier, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche 2, pt. 1 [1986], pp. 279–358 (Eng. tr., 1987, pp. 247–317). '[L.] Salaville, AA, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2153–78, s.v. 'Hénotique', with bibl.

Henricians. A medieval heretical sect which arose at Tours in the 12th cent. under the inspiration of *Henry of Lausanne (q.v.). They seem to have been closely connected with the followers of *Peter de Bruys (q.v.)

Henrietta Maria (1609–66), the Queen of *Charles I and daughter of *Henry IV of France. She married Charles in 1625, on condition that the penal laws against RCs were suspended and that the Queen be allowed free exercise of her religion. After the assassination of Buckingham in 1628, the Queen acquired great influence over Charles. She never liked W. *Laud or the Earl of Strafford, and she formed a curious alliance with *Puritan courtiers in the 1630s to obstruct diplomatic rapprochement with Spain; however, her Catholicism fuelled public fears about RC manipulation of Charles and his court. She has often been accused of encouraging Charles in his more despotic acts, e.g. his attempt to arrest the Five Members in 1642. During the Civil War she increased her unpopularity by attempting to raise money and forces for the King from France. She finally left Charles for France in Apr. 1644, where she remained until after the Restoration, when Somerset House was given her for a residence.

M. A. E. Green (ed.), Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria (1857); le Comte [C.] de Baillon, Henriette-Marie de France, reine d'Angleterre: Étude historique ... suivie de ses lettres inédites (1877); H. Ferrero (ed.), Lettres de Henriette-Marie de France, reine d'Angleterre, à sa sœur Christine, duchesse de Savoie (Estratto dalla Miscellanea di Storia italiana, 2nd ser. 5; 1881). C. Cotolendi, La Vie de très-haute et très-puissante Princesse Henriette-Marie de France, reine de la Grand'Bretagne (1690). Modern Lives by I. A. Taylor (2 vols., London, 1905), Q. Bone (ibid., 1973), E. Hamilton (ibid., 1976), and R. K. Marshall (ibid., for the National Portrait Gallery, 1990). R. M. Smuts, 'The Puritan followers of Henrietta Maria in the 1630s', EHR 93 (1978), pp. 26–45. E. Veevers, Images of Love and Religion: Queen Henrietta Maria and Court Entertainments (Cambridge, 1989). S. R. Gardiner in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 429–36. See also bibl. to CHARLES I.

Henry II, St (972–1024), German King and Emperor. The son of Henry, Duke of Bavaria ('the Quarrelsome'), he succeeded his cousin Otto III as King in 1002, intent on consolidating the political unity of Germany. In his earlier years he was involved in constant warfare first against attacks from the East and then in Lombardy, where he defeated Arduin of Ivrea. In 1007 he created and richly endowed the new see of Bamberg, largely to effect the Germanization of the Wends. He was crowned Emperor by Benedict VIII on 14 Feb. 1014 during an expedition to Rome. His frequent and often high-handed interference in Church affairs issued in many disputes with the ecclesiastical leaders in his domains, though he commonly had the political support of Rome. In his later years he gave his encouragement to the monastic reform movement centred on the abbey of *Gorze. In 1021, on a last journey to Rome, he assisted in preparations for ending the Greek supremacy in Italy. Later legends saw in him a monarch of outstanding piety and asceticism. He was canonized in 1146. Feast day, 13 (formerly 15) July. (His wife, Cunegund, was canonized in 1200; feast day, 3 Mar.)

H. Bresslau, H. Bloch, M. Meyer, and R. Holtzmann (eds.), Die Urkunden Heinrichs II und Arduins (MGH, Diplomata Regum et Imperatorum Germaniae, 3 (1900–3), with 'Nachträgen zu den Urkunden Heinrichs II' in 4 (1909), pp. 419–32 and 552). AASS, Jul. 3 (1723), pp. 711–93; crit. text of Life by Adalbold, Bp. of Utrecht, 1010–27, ed. G. Waitz, MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 679–95, and of mid-12th cent. Life by Adalbert, deacon of Bamberg, ibid., pp. 789–816, with 'Additamentum', pp. 816–820, and of 'Vita Sanctae Cunegundis', with miracles, pp. 821–8. Life by Adalbold also ed. H. van Rijn in Nederlandse Historische Bronnen, 3 (1983), pp. 7–95, with further refs. S. Hirsch, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich II (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 3 vols. in 2, 1862–75). H. L. Mikoletzky, Kaiser Heinrich II und die Kirche (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 8; 1951). T. Schieffer, 'Heinrich II. and Konrad II. Die Umprägung des Geschichtsbildes durch die Kirchenreform des 11. Jahrhunderts', Deutsches Archiv, 8 (1951), pp. 384–437. S. Weinfurter, 'Die Zentralisierung der Herrschaftsgewalt im Reich durch Kaiser Heinrich II.', Historisches Jahrbuch, 106 (1986), pp. 241–97. H. Bloch, 'Die Urkunden Kaiser Heinrichs II für Kloster Michelsberg zu Bamberg', NA 19 (1894), pp. 603–49. R. Klauser, Der Heinrichs- und Kunigundenkult im mittelalterlichen Bistum Bamberg (Bamberg, 1957). Further study of the development of his cult in Basle by C. Pfaff (Basle, 1963). R. Folz, Les Saints Rois du moyen âge en occident (Subsidia Hagiographica, 68; 1984), esp. pp. 84–91. Id. in DHGE 23 (1990), cols. 1047–50, s.v. 'Henri II'.

Henry IV (1050–1106), German King and Emperor. The son of the Emp. Henry III (1039–56), he succeeded to the throne in 1056 and was declared of age in 1065. His reign was beset with difficulties owing to the rebellious Saxon princes on the one hand and the reforms of Pope *Gregory VII on the other. Gregory prohibited *simony and clerical marriage, and his energetic pursuit of reform provoked bitter resentment in some German Church circles. Henry, having conquered the Saxons in 1075, refused obedience to the Pope and answered the threat of excommunication by declaring Gregory deposed. Thereupon Gregory carried out his threat and released Henry's subjects from their oath of allegiance. The King's position having become desperate when the Saxons rose again and the princes refused obedience unless he was reconciled to the Pope, Henry submitted at *Canossa in 1077 and, having done penance, was freed from excommunication and returned to Germany. The peace between Pope and King was, however, short-lived. Three years later Henry was again excommunicated, but at the Council of Brixen selected an *antipope who in 1084 was enthroned at Rome as Clement III and crowned Henry Emperor. Gregory died the next year, but his successors Victor II and *Urban II carried on the struggle. The last years of Henry's reign were filled with revolts, two of his sons became rebels, and only his premature death saved Germany from civil war. Under his successor, Henry V (1106–25), the investiture conflict ended in the compromise of the Concordat of *Worms (1122).

Constitutiones ed. G. H. Pertz in MHG, Leges, 2 (1837), pp. 44–62; mostly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 151. 1125–66; D. v. Gladiss and A. Gawlik (eds.), Die Urkunden Heinrichs IV (MGH, Diplomata Regum et Imperatorum Germaniae, 6; 3 parts, 1952–78). Briefe, ed. C. Erdmann (MGH, Deutsches Mittelalter, 1; 1937) and, with Germ. tr., by F.-J. Schmale, Quellen zur Geschichte Kaiser Heinrich IV. (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 12; 1973), pp. 51–141. 'Vita Henrici IV. Imperatoris', ed. I. Schmale-Ott, ibid., pp. 407–67, with further docs., pp. 470–83. S. Hellmann, 'Die Vita Henrici IV. und die kaiserliche Kanzlei', Historische Vierteljahrschrift, 28 (1934), pp. 273–334. G. Meyer von Knonau, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. und Heinrich V., vols. 1–5 (1890–1904). E. Boshof, Heinrich IV.: Herrscher an einer Zeitenwende (Göttingen, 1979). B. Schmeidler, Kaiser Heinrich IV. und seine Helfer im Investiturstreit (1927). H. F. Haefele, Fortuna Heinrich IV. Imperatoris: Untersuchungen zur Lebenschreibung des dritten Saliers (Graz and Cologne, 1954). K. Leyser, 'The crisis of medieval Germany', Proceedings of the British Academy, 69 for 1983 (1984), pp. 409–43. G. Tellenbach in DHGE 23 (1990), cols. 1050–5, s.v. 'Henri IV', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to CANOSSA and GREGORY VII.

Henry IV (1553–1610), King of France. Brought up as a Protestant, he became King of Navarre in 1572. He took part in the wars of religion on the Protestant side, and, on the assassination of Henry III in 1589, inherited the Crown of France. But his Protestantism made him unacceptable to the Catholic League, which was supported by *Philip II of Spain and the Pope; and though he defeated the Guise party in the field he was not recognized as King until his conversion to Catholicism in 1593. Opinion is now against the popular legend that this was a merely political move ('Paris vaut bien une messe'). His lengthy discussions with theologians before his submission, together with his protestations that 'Religion is not changed as easily as a shirt', are considered sufficient proof of his sincerity. It was not until 1595, however, after many difficulties, esp. from Philip II, that the Pope solemnly absolved Henry from the crime of heresy. In 1598 the King promulgated the Edict of *Nantes, which gave freedom of worship to the Protestants in recognized places and permitted them to garrison certain towns as a security for its maintenance. By extending the powers of the Crown, and with the economic reforms undertaken by his minister, the Duc de Sully, Henry did much to restore prosperity to his country. The lines of his domestic and foreign policy were later continued by A. J. du P. *Richelieu. He was assassinated by the fanatic Ravaillac on 14 May 1610.

M. Berger de Xivrey and J. Guadet (eds.), Recueil des lettres missives de Henri IV (Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France, publiés par ordre du Roi et par les soins du Ministre de l'Instruction Publique, 9 vols., 1843–76). Modern selection of Les plus belles lettres de Henri IV, ed. P. Erlanger (1962). B. Barbiche (ed.), Lettres de Henri IV concernant les relations du Saint-Siège et de la France 1595–1609 (ST 250; 1968). N. Valois (ed.), Inventaire des arrêts du Conseil d'Etat (règne de Henri IV) (2 vols., 1886–93). Contemporary account of events in Pierre de L'Estoile's Memoires-Journaux; his Journal pour le règne de Henri IV, ed. L.-R. Lefèvre and A. Martin (3 vols. [1948–60]); Eng. tr. of selections by N. L. Roelker, The Paris of Henry of Navarre as seen by Pierre de l'Estoile (Cambridge, Mass., 1958). There is a vast lit. on Henry IV. J. H. Mariéjol in E. Lavisse, Histoire de France, 6 (pt. 1; 1904), pp. 303–423 and (pt. 2; 1904), pp. 1–140, with full bibl. refs.; J.-P. Babelon, Henri IV (Paris [1982]), with full bibl.; D. [J.] Buisseret, Henry IV (London, 1984). Other modern studies include those of P. de Vaissière (Paris, 1925), M. Reinhard (ibid., 1943), R. Ritter (ibid., 1944), D. [E. C.] Seward, The Last Bourbon (London, 1971), and J. Garrison (Paris, 1984). R. Mousnier, L'Assassinat d'Henri IV (1964; Eng. tr., 1973). M. Greengrass, France in the Age of Henri IV: The Struggle for Stability (1984). See also bibl. to FRANCE, CHRISTIANITY IN, and NANTES, EDICT OF.

Henry VI (1421–71), King of England. He succeeded his father, Henry V, in 1422. During his minority England was ruled by a Council, the King's protector being John, Duke of Bedford, and his first spiritual guide the *Carmelite theologian, Thomas *Netter. He was crowned King of England in 1429 and King of France in 1431. Throughout his reign the difficulties in France increased, and the situation in England was unsettled, chiefly through differences between the Duke of Gloucester and Card. H. *Beaufort and popular opposition to the Duke of Suffolk's peace policy. After Suffolk's death (1450), Richard of York led opposition to the court and when Henry fell into a depressive stupor in August 1453 York became Protector. The birth of a son to Henry in 1453 had excluded York from the succession, and his rivalry with Edmund Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, led to a battle at St Albans in 1455 in which Somerset died. Relations between Henry and Richard of York deteriorated into civil war in 1459, and in 1460 Henry was taken prisoner and compelled to declare York his heir. After Richard's death (1460) he was freed, but Edward of York made himself King and Henry lived as an exile in Scotland. In 1465 he was captured and imprisoned in the Tower, until in 1470 Warwick restored him to the throne. After six months, however, he was once more confined to the Tower, where he was murdered.

Henry VI was a deeply religious man, but too generous and trusting to be a successful ruler in his troubled age. He often sought refreshment in religious houses and gave much time to prayer and pious works. He was passionately devoted to the encouragement of learning, and was the founder of Eton and of King's College, Cambridge (1440 and 1441). The report of many miracles at his tomb at the *Benedictine monastery of Chertsey in Surrey soon made it a place of pilgrimage; and though Richard III had his body removed to St George's Chapel, *Windsor, he was unable to put a stop to the popular devotion. Henry VII petitioned Innocent VIII and *Alexander VI for his canonization, and in modern times renewed efforts have been made to this end.

J. Stevenson (ed.), Letters and Papers Illustrative of the Wars of the English in France during the Reign of Henry the Sixth (Rolls Series, 2 vols. bound in 3; 1861–4). Memoir of Henry VI by John Blacman, his confessor, orig. pub. London, 1510, repr. mainly from text of T. *Hearne, 1732, by M. R. James (Cambridge, 1919). The Lat. account of his miracles in Brit. Lib. Royal MS 13. C. VIII, written c.1500, ed. R. [A.] *Knox and S. Leslie, with introd. and Eng. tr. (Cambridge, 1923); crit. edn. by P. Grosjean, SJ (Subsidia Hagiographica, 22; 1935). R. A. Griffiths, The Reign of King Henry VI (1981); B. P. Wolffe, Henry VI (1981). R. Lovatt, 'John Blacman: Biographer of Henry VI', in R. H. C. Davis and J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (eds.), The Writing of History in the Middle Ages: Essays Presented to Richard William Southern (Oxford, 1981), pp. 415–44; id., 'A Collector of Apocryphal Anecdotes: Blacman Revisited', in T. Pollard (ed.), Property and Politics: Essays in Later Medieval History (Gloucester and New York), pp. 172–97. T. F. Tout in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 56–69.

Henry VIII (1491–1547), King of England from 1509. The second son of Henry VII and Elizabeth of York, Henry became heir apparent on the death of his brother Arthur in 1502. Although he learned Latin, French, Spanish, mathematics, and music, he was not given early responsibility or trained for kingship. He nevertheless became the symbol of an expected new age of military and cultural achievement, and there was great enthusiasm at his accession. While Henry planned war, the bishops, led by W. *Warham, attempted to recover the 'liberties' undermined by Henry VII and sought to stifle criticism and *Lollard heresy.

Henry disliked work and was willing to allow T. *Wolsey much freedom of action as chancellor and legate, but in 1515 the clergy's claim to exemption from trial in the royal courts drove Henry to defend his temporal jurisdiction. By 1521 M. *Luther's ideas had begun to influence the English universities, and Henry agreed to a demonstration of official orthodoxy. Although the drafting was assisted by theologians and T. *More, Henry took the responsibility—and credit—for the Assertio Septem Sacramentorum (1521). He was rewarded by *Leo X with the title '*Defender of the Faith' for his attack on heresy and defence of Papal authority.

By 1526 Henry was tired of his wife, Catherine of Aragon, restricted by the Spanish alliance which she represented, worried by the absence of a male heir—and in love with *Anne Boleyn. Anne was determined to be Queen, not another mistress; she insisted on marriage, and in 1527 Henry began his six-year quest for annulment of his marriage with Catherine. He argued that her brief marriage with his late brother Arthur invalidated his own union with her, despite the dispensation given by *Julius II. He tried many strategems: a collusive prosecution by Warham and Wolsey; a plan to have Papal authority delegated to Wolsey; a plea for dispensation for *bigamy; a demand for a *decretal commission which declared the law in Henry's favour; and threats that Papal authority and ecclesiastical jurisdiction were at risk if Rome was uncooperative.

Henry's conscience often followed where his wishes led. He became convinced that his marriage to Catherine contravened the law of God (as declared in Lev. 18: 16 and 20: 21), and that their failure to have a son proved as much. Annulment became an issue of principle as well as passion. But dominant canonical opinion held that the Levitical prohibition was not an immutable divine law, and *Clement VII was unlikely to agree that Julius II had infringed God's law. In June and July 1529 pleadings on the marriage were heard in London before the legates Wolsey and L. *Campeggio, but Clement revoked the suit to Rome. Henry's schemes and desires were frustrated by Clement's refusal to alienate the Emp. *Charles V, who was Catherine's nephew.

Henry summoned a Parliament for Nov. 1529, when criticism of Wolsey extended to criticism of ecclesiastical abuses associated with him, esp. pluralism and fees. Such attacks might frighten the Pope and prompt English churchmen to greater zeal in the royal cause. His team of divorce advisers organized the collection of opinions in support of his case from canon law and theology faculties in the universities of Europe and of evidence which might justify a unilateral solution in England. By Aug. 1530 the advisers had a dossier of precedents and texts which were said to prove that England had provincial independence and its King had sovereign authority; Henry now advanced these arguments with vigour. But a meeting of clergy and lawyers in Oct. 1530 refused to accept that the Pope's jurisdiction could be flouted.

After this rejection (and Clement's threat to excommunicate Henry if he remarried) the King adopted haphazard intimidatory measures designed to scare the Pope into recognizing England's jurisdictional independence and the English clergy into recognizing royal authority. In 1530–1 a charge of praemunire* against the whole clergy (for illegal exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction) was used to extract from *Convocation a heavy fine and a limited recognition of Henry's claims. In 1532 the Payment of *Annates Act 1531, which was conditional, threatened to cut off Papal revenues from England. A House of Commons petition against Church law and courts was used (prob. by T. *Cromwell rather than Henry) to secure the '*Submission of the Clergy' from a rump Convocation. In practice, however, these gains did little to advance the cause of Henry's marriage to Anne Boleyn.

The death of Warham in Aug. 1532 allowed Henry to appoint a more compliant Abp. of Canterbury: T. *Cranmer. In Dec. 1532 Anne became pregnant; in Jan. 1533 Henry secretly married her; in Apr. Parliament forbade appeals to Rome in temporal cases such as marriage; in May the Convocations declared marriage to a brother's widow contrary to God's law; Cranmer annulled Henry's marriage to Catherine and pronounced that to Anne valid; and on 1 June Anne was crowned Queen. So far Henry had attempted to grasp just enough jurisdiction to gain a divorce, rather than to assert a true supremacy, but he was soon forced to go further. When the Pope threatened to excommunicate him unless he returned to Catherine, Henry sought to protect himself and the succession, even though Anne had disappointingly given birth to a daughter. In 1534 a Succession Act imposed a national oath recognizing his marriage to Anne and entailing the Crown on its children, a *Supremacy Act declared Henry 'supreme head' of the English Church, and a Treasons Act forbade denial of the supremacy.

Henry was now faced with the political consequences of the schism into which he had blundered. The most eminent of those who denied the royal supremacy (J. *Fisher, More, and some leading monks) were executed. The threat of a Catholic crusade against England forced Henry into defensive preparations; he paid for these by taking annates and tenths from ecclesiastical benefices, and began the *dissolution of the monasteries in 1536. His need for allies led to negotiations with Lutheran princes and the *Ten Articles and Royal *Injunctions of 1536. But in Oct. 1536 the *Pilgrimage of Grace showed that there was much hostility to change, at least in the northern counties. This outburst seems to have frightened Henry; he refused to give full official sanction in 1537 to the *Bishops' Book, and he began to draft his own more conservative revision, which eventually became the 1543 *King's Book.

Though further dealings with the Lutherans were necessary, and the 1538 Injunctions ordered the placing of an English Bible in every church, Henry would make no more concessions on crucial matters, esp. *transubstantiation, *celibacy of the clergy, and *Communion in one kind. These and other orthodox matters were prescribed by the 1539 Act of *Six Articles; H. *Latimer and N. *Shaxton felt obliged to resign their sees. In 1540 Cromwell tried to advance a Lutheran alliance by pressing Henry (now a widower) into marriage with Anne of Cleves, but as soon as it was diplomatically safe to do so Henry divorced her and Cromwell was executed. Henry now tried to maintain a balance in religion; it was symbolized in July 1540 by the simultaneous execution of three alleged Papalists and three Lutherans. In 1543 the reading of the English Bible was restricted by law, but in 1544 the English *Litany was issued. In 1545 a statute was passed permitting the King to seize the property of the *chantries, but little use had been made of this by the time of his death.

Though Henry allowed lesser fry to suffer, he protected Cranmer from attack by conservatives in 1543, and the conservative S. *Gardiner from attack by the reformers in 1544. In 1546, however, a reformist coup drove Gardiner and the Howard family into disfavour, and when Henry died in Jan. 1547, the reformers were left in effective control of the boy king *Edward VI. Henry was pious in his outward religious observances, his various drafts and revisions show that he had biblical and theological learning, and he formulated his own distinctive views, esp. on the position of priests. But his will was thoroughly Catholic in its emphases, and (despite the Dissolution of Colleges Act 1545) it endowed prayers for his soul.

Modern edn. of Henry's Assertio septem sacramentorum adversus Martinum Lutherum by P. Fraenkel (Corpus Catholicorum, 43; Münster [1992]). Documentary evidence of his reign in Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII, vols. 1–4 ed. J. S. Brewer (1862–75); vols. 5–21 ed. J. *Gairdner and R. H. Brodie (1880–1907). Relevant section of Edward Hall's Chronicle (1548), ed. C. Whibley (2 vols., 1904). J. S. Brewer (ed. J. Gairdner), The Reign of Henry VIII from his Accession to the Death of Wolsey (2 vols., 1884). A. F. Pollard, Henry VIII (London, 1902); J. J. Scarisbrick, Henry VIII (ibid., 1968); L. B. Smith, Henry VIII: The Mask of Royalty (1971). N. S. Tjernagel, Henry VIII and the Lutherans: A Study in Anglo-Lutheran Relations from 1521 to 1547 (St Louis, 1965). H. A. Kelly, The Matrimonial Trials of Henry VIII (Stanford, Calif., 1976); G. Bedouelle and P. Le Gal (eds.), Le 'divorce' du roi Henry VIII: Études et documents (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 221; Geneva, 1987). S. E. Lehmberg, The Reformation Parliament 1529 1536 (Cambridge, 1970); id., The Later Parliaments of Henry VIII 1536–1547 (ibid., 1977). G. R. Elton, Reform and Reformation: England 1509 1558 (1977), pp. 1 332. D. Starkey, The Reign of Henry VIII: Personalities and Politics [1985]. J. Guy, Tudor England (Oxford, 1988), pp. 80–199. Introductory essays on various aspects of the reign, ed. D. Starkey, Henry VIII: A European Court in England (1991). R. Rex, Henry VIII and the English Reformation (1993). Life of Catherine of Aragon by G. Mattingly (London, 1942). See also bibl. to REFORMATION.

Henry Beaufort. See BEAUFORT, HENRY.

Henry Bradshaw Society. The Society founded in 1890 in memory of Henry Bradshaw (1831–86), librarian of the University of Cambridge, 'for the purpose of printing liturgical MSS and rare editions of service books and illustrative documents, on an historical and scientific basis, preference being given to those which bear upon the history of the Book of Common Prayer or of the Church of England'. It has published a number of important texts, by no means all Anglican.

G. W. Prothero, A Memoir of Henry Bradshaw (1888). J. S. Crone, Henry Bradshaw: His Life and Work (Lecture; Dublin [1931]).

Henry of Blois (d. 1171), Bp. of *Winchester. The grandson of *William I ('the Conqueror') and brother of King Stephen, he was brought up at *Cluny, which imbued him with high ideals of religious discipline and of the rights of the Church. In 1126 Henry I made him Abbot of *Glastonbury, which he ruled impeccably for 45 years, and in 1129 Bp. of Winchester; by a Papal dispensation, he held both offices together. In 1135 he helped to make Stephen King. After the death of Abp. William of Corbeil (1136), he hoped for the see of *Canterbury; but it was granted to *Theobald (1139). In the same year, however, Innocent II granted Henry of Blois a legatine commission which made him in some matters the Archbishop's superior. In the Chronicles he is termed 'lord of England'. After Stephen's capture at the Battle of Lincoln (1141), Henry deserted Stephen's cause and declared for Matilda, accompanying her to London for the coronation (which never took place); but finding his assistance unwanted, he returned to Stephen's side and made formal profession of loyalty at a Council in London (Dec. 1141). Until his legatine powers terminated on Innocent's death (1143) he continued to oppose Abp. Theobald, one of his chief endeavours being the elevation of Winchester to an archiepiscopal see (with the seven suffragan sees of *Salisbury, *Exeter, *Wells, *Chichester, *Hereford, and *Worcester and a newly created see of Hyde Abbey). After Stephen's death (Oct. 1154) his position under Henry II was insecure and in the *Becket controversy he did what he could for the Archbishop.

Henry was a great patron of the arts and builder. He much extended the fabric at Glastonbury; built several castles, including Farnham and Wolvesey; and founded the monastery of St Cross at Winchester (enlarged by Card. Henry *Beaufort). He was also a munificent benefactor to Cluny. His high character won the esteem of such men as *Peter the Venerable, Becket, and *John of Salisbury.

L. Voss, Heinrich von Blois, Bischof von Winchester, 1129 71 (Historische Studien, Heft 210; 1932), with bibl. M. D. *Knowles, The Episcopal Colleagues of Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures for 1949; 1951), pp. 34–7 and passim. H. W. C. Davis in DECH (1912), pp. 264 f., s.v.

Henry of Ghent (d. 1293), 'De Gandavo', 'doctor solemnis', theologian. Archdeacon (1277) of Bruges and subsequently (1278 or 1279) of Tournai, he combined these offices with an active teaching career in the Theology Faculty of *Paris University, of which he was a master by 1276. In 1277 he was on the commission of theologians who enquired into the errors of the Arts Faculty. In 1282 he was one of several theologians who deliberated on the Papal privileges relating to confession granted to the Mendicant Orders; for the rest of his career he remained an outspoken opponent of these privileges, an attitude which earned him in 1290 a stiff rebuke from Bernard Gaetani, the future Pope Boniface VIII. During the years 1276–92, he produced his extensive Quodlibeta, his Summa, Quaestiones ordinariae, at least two sermons, and probably also the questions on *Aristotle's Physics and the commentary on the Hexaemeron attributed to him. There is also a large body of work of which the attribution is more doubtful.

A critic of Greek and Arab necessitarianism, Henry was the chief representative among the secular clergy of neo-Augustinianism; he stressed God's omnipotence, God's free will in the act of creation, the existence of exemplar ideas or possible essences, man's need for divine illumination to attain true cognition, and the primacy of will over reason in human action. He denied that primary matter was pure potentiality; and on the question of essence and existence, he developed an 'intentional' distinction as a middle way between the real distinction favoured by *Giles of Rome and a distinction only of reason. His fusion of Aristotle, *Avicenna, and the *Neoplatonic tradition was much criticized both by his contemporaries and by the next generation of theologians, but it was destined to be influential, particularly on *Duns Scotus.

Opera Omnia, ed. R. Macken, OFM, and others (Ancient and Medieval Philosophy, 2nd ser.; Louvain and Leiden, 1979 ff.), with useful introd. on his life and works in vol. 5, pp. vii–xxiv. The Quaestiones in Librum de Causis, very doubtfully attributed to Henry, ed. J. P. Zwaenepoel, CICM (Philosophes médiévaux, 15; Louvain, 1974). J. Paulus, Henri de Gand: Essai sur les tendances de sa métaphysique (Études de Philosophie médiévale, 25; 1938); cf. A. Maurer, OSB, 'Henry of Ghent and the Unity of Man', Mediaeval Studies, 10 (1948), pp. 1–20. G. de Lagarde, 'La philosophie sociale d'Henri de Gand et Godefroid de Fontaines', AHDLMA 14 (1943), pp. 73–142; B. Smalley, 'A Commentary on the Hexaemeron by Henry of Ghent', RTAM 20 (1953), pp. 60–101; A. C. Pegis, 'Toward a New Way to God: Henry of Ghent', Mediaeval Studies, 30 (1968), pp. 226–47, and 31 (1969), pp. 93–116; R. Macken, 'La temporalité radicale de la créature selon Henri de Gand', RTAM, 38 (1971), pp. 211–72; id., 'La théorie d'illumination divine dans la philosophie d'Henri de Gand', ibid. 39 (1972), pp. 82–112; id, 'La volonté humaine, faculté plus élevée que l'intelligence selon Henri de Gand', ibid. 42 (1975), pp. 5–51; J. V. Brown, 'Divine illumination in Henry of Ghent', ibid. 41 (1974), pp. 177–99; S. P. Marrone, Truth and Scientific Knowledge in the Thought of Henry of Ghent (Speculum Anniversary Monographs, 11; Cambridge, Mass., 1985); A. J. Minnis, 'The Accessus Extended: Henry of Ghent on the Transmission and Reception of Theology', in M. D. Jordan and K. Emery (eds.), Ad litteram: Authoritative Texts and Their Medieval Writers (Notre Dame Conferences in Medieval Sudies, 3; Notre Dame and London [1992]), pp. 275–326. Bibl. by M. Laarmann in Franziskanische Studien, 73 (1991), pp. 324–68. J. Paulus in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 1035–7, s.v.; J. Ribaillier in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 197–210, s.v. 'Henri (18) de Gand', with extensive bibl. See also art. by J. P. Wippel, cited under GILES OF ROME.

Henry of Lausanne (d. after 1145), medieval sectarian. Little is known of his life. He was probably a French monk who had left his monastery and may have been connected with *Cluny. He became an itinerant preacher and gave the Lenten sermons at Le Mans c. 1116 by permission of the bishop, *Hildebert of Lavardin. His invectives against the worldliness of the clergy and his insistence on the ideal of absolute poverty made him very popular. But he was expelled from the diocese because he carried anticlericalism to the point of heresy; he continued his activities in the S. of France. Acc. to St *Bernard, he denied the objective efficacy of the Sacraments and made it dependent on the worthy character of the priest. In 1135 he was arrested and forced to recant at the Synod of Pisa, but soon resumed his anticlerical preaching, strongly opposed by St Bernard. He was arrested a second time *c.*1145 and probably died soon after. He was in some respects a precursor of the *Waldensians.

St Bernard, Ep. 241 (Opera, 8, Rome, 1977, pp. 125–7). Eng. tr. of primary material, with introd., in W. L. Wakefield and A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 81; 1969), pp. 107–17, with notes pp. 675 f. M. Esposito, 'Sur quelques écrits concernant les hérésies et les hérétiques aux XII^e et XIII^e siècles', 1, 'Traité contre Henri l'Hérésiarque', RHE 36 (1940), pp. 143 f. R. Manselli, 'Il monaco Enrico e la sua eresia', Bullettino dell'Istituto storico italiano per il medio evo e Archivio Muratoriano, 65 (1953), pp. 1–63. J. B. Russell, Dissent and Reform in the Early Middle Ages (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1965), esp. pp. 68–78; see index. F. Vernet in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2178–83, s.v. 'Henri, hérésiarque', with bibl.; R. Manselli in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 220 f., s.v. 'Henri (30) dit de Lausanne'.

Henry of Susa. See HOSTIENSIS.

Henry Suso, Bl (*c.*1295–1366), German spiritual writer. Prob. a native of Constance, he entered the *Dominican convent there at the age of 13. After five years of routine religious life, he experienced a conversion and adopted rigid standards focused on devotion to Holy Wisdom. About 1322 he was sent to study theology at Cologne, where he was profoundly influenced by *Eckhart. He returned to Constance as a lector *c.*1326 and shortly afterwards wrote Das Büchlein der Wahrheit ('The Little Book of Truth'), a speculative elucidation of Eckhartian doctrines misunderstood by the *Brethren of the Free Spirit. In 1330 he fell victim to hostility to Eckhart's teaching and to the tension between the German Provincial and the Dominican reformers and was deprived of his teaching position. In the following years he preached widely, esp. in Switzerland and the Upper Rhine area; although he suffered persecution, his spiritual teaching was much valued, esp. in women's convents such as that of the Dominicans at Töss. He was prior of Constance *c.*1344–6, though at the time the community was dispersed and in exile. He was moved to Ulm *c.*1348, and spent the rest of his life there.

The chronology and extent of his writings is disputed. Two collections of letters survive, revealing the intimacy and tact of his spiritual direction. His main, undisputed, work, 'The Little Book of Eternal Wisdom' or 'Clock of Wisdom', was written in two versions, German (Das Büchlein der ewigen Weisheit), and Latin (Horologium Sapientiae). It is a practical, warmly devotional, though sometimes wryly humorous, book of meditation, and it was widely read in the 14th and 15th cents.; it was translated or adapted into several other European languages, incl. English.

His veneration began shortly after his death; his cult was approved by Pope *Gregory XVI in 1831. Feast day 23 Jan. (formerly 2 Mar., then 15 Feb.).

Collected edn. of orig. Ger. Works pub. Augsburg, 1482; crit. edn. by K. Bihlmeyer (Stuttgart, 1907; repr. Frankfurt, 1961). Crit. edn. of Horologium Sapientiae by P. Künzle, OP (Spicilegium Friburgense, 23; 1977). Modern Fr. tr. of his Works from the orig. Ger., by J. Ancelet-Hustache (Paris, 1943; 2nd edn., 1977). Eng. tr. made from modern Ger. version of N. Heller (Regensburg, 1926) by M. A. Edward, OP, The Exemplar: Life and Writings of Blessed Henry Suso (2 vols., Dubuque, Iowa, 1962). Separate Eng. trs. of his autobiog. by J. M. Clark (London, 1952), of the Little Book of Eternal Wisdom and Little Book of Truth by id. (ibid., 1953), and of the smaller collection of Letters by K. Goldman (ibid., 1955). C. Gröber, Der Mystiker Heinrich Seuse: Die Geschichte seines Lebens. Die Entstehung und Echtheit seiner Werke (1941). J. A. Bizet, Henri Suso et le déclin de la scolastique [1946]. E. M. Filthaut, OP (ed.), Heinrich Seuse: Studien zum 600. Todestag 1366–1966 (Cologne, 1966). A.-M. Holenstein-Hasler, 'Studien zur Vita Heinrich Seuses', Zeitschrift für Schweizerische Kirchengeschichte, 62 (1968), pp. 185–332. E. Colledge, OSA, and J. C. Marler, '"Mystical" Pictures in the Suso "Exemplar" MS Strasbourg 2929', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 44 (1984), pp. 293–354. J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (1949), pp. 54–74, with bibl. pp. 114–17. W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, The History of the Dominican Order, 2 (New York [1973]), pp. 312–23. A. Walz, OP, 'Bibliographiae susonianae conatus', Angelicum, 46 (1969), pp. 430–91. J. A. Bizet in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 234–57, s.v. 'Henri (43) Suso', with extensive bibl.

Henry, Matthew (1662–1714), Nonconformist biblical exegete. The son of Philip Henry, who was ejected in 1662 by the Act of *Uniformity, he began to study for the legal profession, but soon decided to devote himself to theology and resided at the Islington Academy under Thomas Doolittle from 1680 to 1682. From 1687 to 1712 he was Presbyterian Minister at *Chester, where a meeting-house was opened for him in Crook Lane (now Crook St.) in 1700. His Exposition of the Old and New Testaments (1708–10), a devotional commentary on the whole of the OT and the Gospels and Acts, is notable esp. for its good sense, pregnant thought, and felicitous expression. He was also the author of many devotional works and sermons.

Works, with a sermon preached at his funeral and Life by W. Tong (see below), pub. London, fol., 1726; additional matter incl. in The Miscellaneous Works of Matthew Henry, ed. S. Palmer (ibid., 1809); re-ed. with further additions, with preface by J. B. Williams (ibid., 1830). His Comm. on the Bible was ed. L. F. Church (Edinburgh, 1960), and a Topical Index compiled by W. T. Summers (Welwyn, 1982). Lives by W. Tong (London, 1716), J. B. Williams (ibid., 1828), and C. Chapman (ibid., 1859). A. Gordon in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 123 f.

Henson, Herbert Hensley (1863–1947), Bp. of *Durham. Educated at Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1884. He was successively vicar of Barking (1888), Chaplain of St Mary's Hospital, Ilford (1895), rector of St Margaret's, Westminster (1900), Dean of Durham (1912), Bp. of *Hereford (1918), and Bp. of Durham (1920–39). Not long after ordination he abandoned his earlier *High Church sympathies for a *latitudinarian conception of the C of E, which he defended in several published collections of sermons and other writings, among them Cross Bench Views of Current Church Questions (1902), Sincerity and Subscription (1903), The National Church (1908), The Liberty of Prophesying (1909), The Creed in the Pulpit (1912), Anglicanism (1921), and Quo Tendimus? (1924). His doctrinal position, esp. his attitude to the Virgin Birth and the Gospel miracles, provoked strong protests when D. Lloyd George nominated him to Hereford late in 1917, and a serious crisis was averted only when the Abp. of Canterbury (R. T. *Davidson), who had had grave misgivings about consecrating him, and Henson issued a joint statement in which Henson appeared to retract his earlier views. Until his later years Henson was a strong advocate of the *Establishment, in which he saw the ideal of a nation-wide Church, which should ultimately include all Nonconformists, and a safeguard of theological freedom. But the rejection of the revised Prayer Books in Parliament (1927–8) convinced him that the Establishment was incompatible with the Church's freedom, and in his Disestablishment (1929) he pleaded for liberty for the Church from State control. His other writings include Notes on Spiritual Healing (1925); The Oxford Groups (1933), a pungent criticism; Christian Morality (1936), based on his *Gifford Lectures; and The Church of England (1939).

Henson pub. his autobiog., Retrospect of an Unimportant Life (3 vols., 1942–50); also a collection of papers repr. from The Bishoprick under the title Bishoprick Papers (1946). Collections of his Letters ed. E. F. Braley (1950); More Letters (1954). [W.] O. Chadwick, Hensley Henson: A Study in the Friction between Church and State (Oxford, 1983). A. T. P. Williams in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 378 f.

heortology (Gk. ἑορτή, 'festival'). The study of the origin, history, and meaning of the festivals and seasons of the ecclesiastical *year, and thus a branch of *liturgiology.

Heptateuch (Gk. ἑπτά, 'seven' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A name sometimes used of the first seven books of the OT, i.e. the five Books of Moses together with Joshua and Judges, on account of their supposed unity. The word is formed on the analogy of '*Pentateuch'.

Heraclean Version. See HARKLEAN VERSION.

Heracleon (*fl. c.*145–80), *Gnostic teacher. He was a disciple of *Valentinus. He wrote a highly allegorizing commentary (Ὑπομνήματα) on St John's Gospel; but only fragments have survived, mainly in quotations in *Origen's commentary on that Gospel. He is sometimes credited with the authorship of the 'Tractate on the Three Natures' found at *Nag Hammadi (q.v.).

A. E. Brooke, The Fragments of Heracleon (Texts and Studies, 1, no. 4; Cambridge, 1891). Eng. tr. of frags. in W. Foerster (ed.), Gnosis, 1 (Eng. tr., Oxford, 1972), pp. 162–83. Y. Janssens, 'Héracléon. Commentaire sur l'Évangile selon saint Jean', Muséon, 72 (1959), pp. 101–51, 277–99. E. H. Pagels, The Johannine Gospel in Gnostic Exegesis: Heracleon's Commentary on John (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 17 [1973]). H. C. Puech and G. Quispel, 'Le Quatrième Écrit gnostique du Codex Jung', VC 9 (1955), pp. 65–102. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 63 f. (no. 1138), with bibl. C. Gianotto in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1184 f., s.v. 'Eracleone'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 374, s.v., with additional bibl.

Heraclius (575–641), Byzantine Emperor. A native of Cappadocia, he secured the throne in 610–11 in place of the usurper Phocas, and then founded a new dynasty which continued until 717. During his reign the Empire was repeatedly attacked. The Visigoths gained complete possession of Spain, and the Persians and later the Arabs invaded the E. On 21 Mar. 629 Heraclius solemnly brought back to *Golgotha the Cross which the Persians had removed from *Jerusalem in 614. In an attempt to secure doctrinal unity in his dominions he issued the *Ecthesis (q.v.) in 638. See also EXALTATION OF THE CROSS.

A. Pernice, L'imperatore Eraclio (1905). A. N. Stratos, Τὸ Βυζάντιον στὸν ζ' αἰῶνα, vol. 1 (1965), p. 226–vol. 3 (1969), p. 186 (Eng. tr., Byzantium in the Seventh Century, vol. 1 (Amsterdam, 1968), p. 92–vol. 2 (ibid., 1972), p. 174). P. Speck, Das geteilte Dossier: Beobachtungen zu den Nachrichten über die Regierung des Kaisers Herakleios und die seiner Söhne bei Theophanes und Nikephorus (Ποικίλα Βυζαντινά, 9; Bonn, 1988). A. Frolow, 'La Vraie Croix et les expéditions d'Héraclius en Perse', Revue des Études Byzantines, 11 (1953), pp. 88–105. J. B. Bury, The Later Roman Empire, 2 (1889), pp. 197–398; N. H. Baynes in C. Med. H. 2 (1913), ch. 9, pp. 263–301 passim; Fliche and Martin, 5 (1947), pp. 79–150.

Herbert, Edward (1582–1648), first Lord Herbert of Cherbury; philosopher, deist, and poet. He was appointed ambassador at Paris in 1619, after a youth spent in study, much travel, and many duels. In 1624 he published at Paris his famous philosophical treatise, De Veritate prout distinguitur a revelatione, a verisimili, a possibili, et a falso, an original attack on empiricism. The first work of its kind to be written by an Englishman, it greatly influenced J. *Locke. His more specifically religious writings included De Religione Laici (1645) and De Religione Gentilium (1663). He maintained that common to all religions were five innate ideas: (1) that there is a God; (2) that He ought to be worshipped; (3) that virtue is the chief element in this worship; (4) that repentance for sin is a duty; and (5) that there is another life of rewards and punishments. His conviction that in these five innate ideas lay the essence of religion, combined with his denial of revelation, made him a forerunner of English *Deism.

His Autobiography, extending to 1624, survives in two forms: a contemporary MS, which is incomplete, and a prob. early 18th-cent. copy; the latter was ed. by H. Walpole (Strawberry Hill, 1764); text based on Walpole, ed. S. Lee (London, 1886; still valuable for its notes); crit. edn., based on the earlier text, supplemented by the later, ed. J. M. Shuttleworth (London, etc., 1976). Poems, English and Latin, ed. G. C. W. Smith (1923). Modern edn. of his De Religione Laici, with Eng. tr. and crit. discussion of his life and philosophy, by H. R. Hutcheson (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1944). Eng. tr. of De Veritate, with introd., by M. H. Carré (Bristol, 1937). M. M. Rossi, La vita, le opere, i tempi di Edoardo Herbert di Chirbury (Biblioteca Storica Sansoni, NS 14; 3 vols., 1947). R. D. Bedford, The Defence of Truth: Herbert of Cherbury and the Seventeenth Century (Manchester, 1979). S. Lee in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 173–81.

Herbert, George (1593–1633), poet and divine. A younger brother of Edward, Lord *Herbert of Cherbury, he was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where his classical scholarship and musical ability (he played the lute and viol, and sang) secured him a Fellowship in 1614. He became Public Orator of the university in 1620, and his success seemed to mark him out for the career of a courtier. The death of *James I, however, and the influence of his friend, N. *Ferrar, led him to study divinity, and in 1626 he was presented to a prebend in Huntingdonshire. In 1630 he was ordained priest, and persuaded by W. *Laud to accept the rectory of Fugglestone with Bemerton, near *Salisbury, where in piety and humble devotion to duty he spent his last years.

Herbert's most famous prose work, A Priest to the Temple; or the Country Parson (1652), outlines a sober and well-balanced ideal of the English clergyman. In simple and homely language Herbert shows him as a well-read divine, temperate in all things, a man of duty and prayer, devoted to his flock, who has come to be the model of future generations. His collection of poems entitled The Temple was entrusted to N. Ferrar on his deathbed and first published in 1633. Herbert was a man of deep religious conviction and remarkable poetic gifts, masterly in handling both metre and metaphor. The 'conceits' in his verse are, with very few exceptions, still acceptable thanks to their genuine aptness and wit. The good sense of his didactic poems, and esp. the poignancy of the more personal lyrics, continue to ring true and have proved irresistible to many outside as well as within the Christian faith. His influence is acknowledged in the life and work of Henry *Vaughan, in the hymns of C. *Wesley, in the criticism of S. T. *Coleridge, and in G. M. *Hopkins's poetry. Among his compositions in current use as hymns are 'The God of love my Shepherd is' (Ps. 23), 'Teach me, my God and King' and 'Let all the world in every corner sing'. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 27 Feb.

Crit. edn. of his Works by F. E. Hutchinson (Oxford, 1941, repr., with corrections, 1945). I. *Walton, The Life of Mr. George Herbert (1670); A. M. Charles, A Life of George Herbert (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1977). R. Tuve, A Reading of George Herbert (1952); J. H. Summers, George Herbert: His Religion and Art (1954); C. Freer, Music for a King: George Herbert's Style and the Metrical Psalms (Baltimore and London [1972]); S. [E.] Fish, The Living Temple: George Herbert and Catechizing (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1978]); H. A. R. Asals, Equivocal Predication: George Herbert's Way to God (Toronto and London [1981]); R. M. Van Wengen-Shute, George Herbert and the Liturgy of the Church of England (Leiden thesis, Oegstgeest, 1981); R. Steier, Love Unknown: Theology and Experience in George Herbert's Poetry (Chicago and London [1983]); C. [F.] Bloch, Spelling the Word: George Herbert and the Bible (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1985]); G. E. Veith, Reformation Spirituality: The Religion of George Herbert (Lewisburg, Pa., etc., 1985); T. G. Sherwood, Herbert's Prayerful Art (Toronto and London [1989]); J. Lull, The Poem in Time: Reading George Herbert's Revisions of The Church (Newark, Del., etc. [1990]); M. C. Schoenfeldt, Prayer and Power: George Herbert and Renaissance Courtship (Chicago and London, 1991). C. A. Patrides (ed.), George Herbert: The Critical Heritage (1983). J. R. Roberts, George Herbert: An Annotated Bibliography of Modern Criticism 1905–1974 (University of Missouri Studies, 68; 1978); R. D. Dunn and J. Horden in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1201–6. See also METAPHYSICAL POETS.

Herder, Johann Gottfried (1744–1803), German critic. With G. E. *Lessing he was a leader of the poetical movement which saved the *Enlightenment from a dry intellectualism. After various temporary posts, he became *General Superintendent and court preacher at Weimar (1776), where he spent the rest of his life. An early disciple of I. *Kant, he influenced J. W. Goethe in turn, and has been regarded as anticipating C. Darwin in treating human history as a natural science. His interests were as wide as the culture of his age, and his researches and writings dealt with poetry, art, language, and religion; but his most important contribution to the ideas of his time was in the philosophy of history. In his Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit (1784–91; Eng. tr., 1800) he discerned in the developments of the different nations the stages of an ascending process in the course of which the essence of 'Humanity' comes to progressively fuller expression. Of more exclusively religious interest was his book Vom Geist der hebräischen Poesie (1782–3), in which he urged the study of the Bible in a 'human' way. His mediating position in theology, in which he advocated critical principles and conservative findings, brought him the enmity of the orthodox and the suspicions of the rationalists.

Crit. edn. of Herder's Works by B. Suphan (33 vols., Berlin, 1877–99; 1913). Letters, ed. W. Dobbek and G. Arnold (9 vols., Weimar, 1977–88). Memoirs compiled by his widow, M. C. von Herder, ed. J. G. Müller (2 vols., Tübingen, 1820). Lives and general studies by R. Haym (2 vols., Leipzig, 1880–5), F. MacEachran (Oxford Studies in Modern Language and Literature, Oxford, 1939), A. Gillies (Oxford, 1945), R. T. Clark, Jun. (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1955), and W. Koepke (Boston, [1987]); also collections of essays ed. id. (Bonn, 1982, and Columbia, SC [1990]) and ed. G. Sauder (Studien zum achtzehnten Jahrhundert, 9; Hamburg, 1987). F. M. Barnard, Herder's Social and Political Thought (Oxford, 1965); W. Dobbek, J. G. Herders Weltbild (Cologne and Vienna, 1969); R. E. Norton, Herder's Aesthetics and the European Enlightenment (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1991). W. L. Federlin, Vom Nutzen des geistlichen Amtes: Ein Beitrag zur Interpretation und Rezeption Johann Gottfried Herders (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 33; 1982). I. Berlin, Vico and Herder (1976), pp. 143–216. P. Gardiner in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 3 (1967), pp. 486–9, s.v.

Hereford. The see was founded in 676 by Putta, Bp. of *Rochester from 669, who had fled from the heathen invaders of his diocese. St *Ethelbert, King of the East Angles (killed in 794), was buried in the cathedral, and with the BVM designated its joint patron soon afterwards. The original cathedral was damaged by the Welsh in 1055.

The main part of the present edifice dates from 1079–1110, though there are considerable later additions. The 'Use of Hereford', a variant of the Roman rite, with less individuality than that of *Sarum, was displaced by the latter only in the reign of *Henry VIII. The most famous medieval bishop was St Thomas of Hereford (Thomas de *Cantilupe), 1275–82, whose shrine, after his canonization in 1320, was a centre of pilgrimage from all over England. In 1786 the west end of the cathedral suddenly collapsed, carrying some of the nave with it, and the later restoration was poorly done, though the west front (early 20th cent.) is well in harmony with the building as a whole. The Cathedral has the largest surviving chained library in the world, the cases dating (now in the new Chained Library Mappa Mundi Building) from 1611. The Hereford Mappa Mundi, a late-13th cent. map of the world drawn on a single sheet of vellum, is the only complete survival of its kind. It shows the world as a circle with Jerusalem at its centre, the whole lying under a portrayal of the Last Judgement. The buildings of the College of Vicars-Choral remain intact, and the cathedral school, though its buildings are mostly of the 19th cent., has a continuous history from the 14th cent. The diocese includes Herefordshire, S. Salop, and a few parishes in other counties.

The Episcopal Registers are, exceptionally, nearly complete; the following have been pub. concurrently in the series of the Cantilupe Society [pub. dates in this series are added here] and of the *Canterbury and York Society: that of Thomas de Cantilupe (1275–82), ed. R. G. Griffiths and W. W. Capes (1906); of Richard de Swinfield (1283–1317), ed. W. W. Capes (1909); of Adam de Orleton (1317–27), ed. A. T. Bannister (1907); of Thomas de Charlton (1327–44), ed. W. W. Capes (1912); of John de Trillek (1344–61), ed. J. H. Parry (1910); of Lewis de Charlton (1361–9), ed. id. (1913); of William de Courtenay (1370–5), ed. W. W. Capes (1913); of John Gilbert (1375–89), ed. J. H. Parry (1913); of John Trefnant (1389–1404), ed. W. W. Capes (1914); Robert Mascall (1404–16), ed. J. H. Parry (1916); Edmund Lacy (1417–20), ed. id. and A. T. Bannister (1917); Thomas Poltone (1420–2), ed. W. W. Capes (1916); Thomas Stofford (1422–48), ed. A. T. Bannister (1917); Richard Beauchamp (1449–50), ed. id. (1917); Reginald Boulers (1451–3; register of first year only), ed. id. (1917); John Stanbury (1453–74), ed. J. H. Parry and A. T. Bannister (1918); Thomas Mylling (1474–92), ed. A. T. Bannister (1919); Richard Mayew (1504–16), ed. id. (1919); Charles Bothe (1516–35), with extracts from registers of Edmund Foxe and Edmund *Bonner, ed. id. (1921). J. Barrow (ed.), English Episcopal Acta, 7: Hereford 1079–1234 (1993). W. W. Capes (ed.), Charters and Records of Hereford Cathedral (Cantilupe Society, 1908). Eng. tr. of Extracts from the Cathedral Registers, A.D. 1275–1535, by E. N. Dew (Hereford, 1932). The 'Missal according to the Use of Hereford' was repr. from the Rouen edn. of 1502 by W. G. Henderson (London, 1874); the 'Breviary', orig. pr. Rouen, 1505, was ed. by W. H. *Frere and L. E. G. Brown (HBS 26, 40, and 46; 1904–15). J. *Le Neve, Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae 1300–1541, Hereford Diocese, compiled by J. M. Horn (1962). H. W. Phillott, Hereford (Diocesan Histories, 1888). On the cathedral, W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6 (pt. 3; 1830 edn.), pp. 1210–17; B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Man, Lichfield, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester and Bristol, 2 (1727), pp. 499–622; A. H. Fisher, The Cathedral Church of Hereford (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898); A. T. Bannister, The Cathedral Church of Hereford: Its History and Constitution (Studies in Church History, 1924); G. Marshall, Hereford Cathedral: Its Evolution and Growth (Worcester [1951]). Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, England, An Inventory of Historical Monuments in Herefordshire, 1, South-West (1931), pp. 90–120. R. A. B. Mynors and R. M. Thomson, Catalogue of the Hereford Cathedral Manuscripts (Cambridge, 1993). W. L. Bevan and W. J. Phillott, Mediaeval Geography: An Essay in illustration of the Hereford Mappa Mundi (1873); The World Map by Richard of Haldingham in Hereford Cathedral, with memoir by G. R. Crone (Royal Geographical Society, Reproductions of Early Manuscript Maps, 3; 1954); [E.] M. Jancey, Mappa Mundi: The map of the world in Hereford Cathedral (Hereford, 1987). B. H. *Streeter, The Chained Library (1931), pp. 77–119, 311–39.

Hereford, Nicholas. See NICHOLAS HEREFORD.

heresiarch (Gk. αἱρεσιάρχης; late Lat. haeresiarcha). The originator of a heresy, or founder of an heretical sect.

heresy. The formal denial or doubt of any defined doctrine of the Catholic faith. In antiquity the Greek word αἵρεσις, denoting 'choice' or 'thing chosen', from which the term is derived, was applied to the tenets of particular philosophical schools. In this sense it appears occasionally in Scripture (e.g. Acts 5: 17) and the early Fathers. But it was employed also in a disparaging sense (e.g. 1 Cor. 11: 19) and from St *Ignatius (Trall. 6, Eph. 6) onwards it came more and more to be used of theological error. From the earliest days the Church has claimed teaching authority and consequently condemned heresy, following Christ's command: 'If he refuse to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican' (Mt. 18: 17). On the other hand the need to rebut heresy has sometimes stimulated the formation of orthodox Christian doctrine.

In the early centuries heresy was mainly a matter of erroneous attempts to understand the nature of the Person of Christ (e.g. *Docetism, *Apollinarianism, *Nestorianism, *Monophysitism, *Monothelitism), of the Trinity (e.g. *Monarchianism, *Tritheism, *Subordinationism), or both (e.g. *Arianism). These heresies were condemned at the *Oecumenical Councils. After the Church had become a highly structured and incidentally wealthy institution, many of the heretical movements were inspired by a desire to return to what was seen as the simplicity of the apostolic Church. They thus had much in common with the orthodox reform movements, such as the *mendicant orders, some of whose members (esp. among the *Franciscans) were charged with heresy. Many of the heretical bodies in the Middle Ages (e.g. the *Bogomils, *Cathari, *Waldensians, the followers of *Henry of Lausanne and *Peter de Bruys) came to reject the sacraments as well as other institutions of the Church. The *Inquisition was established to secure the conversion of heretics, and punished the obdurate. With the Reformation, the establishment of Protestant state Churches ended the power of the RC Church to coerce heretics in much of Europe, though in France the hierarchy long continued to regard the *Huguenots as heretics rather than granting them the toleration promised in the Edict of *Nantes; *Calvinists in Switzerland burnt those Protestants whom they regarded as heretics.

Acc. to RC canon law, heresy is defined as the obstinate denial or doubt, after Baptism, of a truth 'which must be believed with divine and catholic faith' (CIC (1983), can. 751). This 'formal' heresy is a grave sin involving ipso facto excommunication. Catholic theology distinguishes it from what is termed 'material heresy'. This means holding heretical doctrines through no fault of one's own, 'in good faith', as is the case, e.g., with most persons brought up in heretical surroundings. It constitutes neither crime nor sin, nor is such a person strictly speaking a heretic, since, having never accepted certain doctrines, he cannot reject or doubt them. Heresy is to be distinguished from *apostasy and *schism (qq.v.). See also BURNING, DE HAERETICO COMBURENDO, and individual heresies.

W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 10; 1934; 2nd edn. by G. Strecker, 1964; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1971; London, 1972). M. Simon, 'From Greek Hairesis to Christian Heresy', in W. R. Schoedel and R. L. Wilken (eds.), Early Christian Literature and the Classical Intellectual Tradition in Honorem Robert M. Grant (Théologie Historique, 53 [1979]), pp. 101–16. A. Le Boulluec, La notion d'hérésie dans la littérature grecque, II^e–III^e siècles (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1985).

W. L. Wakefield and A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages: Selected Sources Translated and Annotated (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 81; 1969). [J. J.] I. von *Döllinger, Beiträge zur Sektengeschichte des Mittelalters (2 vols., Munich, 1890). G. [A.] Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages: The Relation of Heterodoxy to Dissent c.1250–c.1450 (2 vols., Manchester and New York, 1967). J. Le Goff (ed.), Hérésies et sociétés dans l'Europe pré-industrielle 11^e–18^e siècles: Colloque de Royaumont, 27–30 Mai 1962 (Civilisations et sociétés, 10; 1968), with bibl. of post-1900 studies on medieval heresies, pp. 407–67. N. G. Garsoïn, 'Byzantine Heresy. A Reinterpretation', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 25 (1971), pp. 85–113. W. Lourdaux and D. Verhelst (eds.), The Concept of Heresy in the Middle Ages (11th–13th C.): Proceedings of the International Conference, Louvain May 13–16, 1973 (Mediaevalia Lovaniensia, 1st ser., vol. 4; 1976). M. D. Lambert, Medieval Heresy: Popular Movements from Bogomil to Hus (1977; 2nd edn. [1992]). G. G. Merlo, Eretici e Inquisitori nella Società Piemontese del Trecento (Turin [1977]). R. Kieckhefer, Repression of Heresy in Medieval Germany (Philadelphia and Liverpool, 1979).

H. Schlier in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 179–84 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 180–5), s.v. αἱρέομαι. A. Michel in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2208–57, s.v. 'Hérésie, Hérétique'; A. Patschovsky in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 4 (1989), cols. 1933–7, s.v. 'Häresie'. See also works cited under CATHARI and other heresies mentioned in the text.

Hergenröther, Joseph (1824–90), ecclesiastical historian. He was a native of Würzburg, where he taught from 1852 onwards. In 1857 he published *Photius' 'Liber de Spiritus Sancti mystagogia', and in 1867–9 an elaborate work on Photius himself. He represented the more conservative element in German Catholicism, attacking J. J. I. von *Döllinger in 1861 with his Der Zeitgeist und die Souveränität des Papstes. Called to Rome in 1868 to act as a consultor for the forthcoming *Vatican Council, he defended the definition of Papal Infallibility, directing against Döllinger Anti-Janus (1869; see JANUS) and other pamphlets. His later writings include a treatise on Church history (Handbuch der allgemeinen Kirchengeschichte, 3 vols., 1876–80), which in its successive revisions long remained a standard work. In 1879 he was created a *cardinal. In his later years he devoted himself to continuing K. J. *Hefele's Konziliengeschichte.

M. Weitlauf, 'Joseph Hergenröther (1824–1890)', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 2 [1975], pp. 471–551, with complete list of his works. J. P. Kirsch in CE 7 (1910), pp. 262–4, s.v.; V. Conzemius in NCE 6 (1967), p. 1070, s.v.

Heric of Auxerre. See HEIRIC OF AUXERRE.

Herimannus Contractus (1013–54), Hermann the Lame, poet and chronicler. He was educated in the monastery at *Reichenau, where he later took his vows. Though suffering great physical infirmities, he possessed one of the most gifted minds of his age, and wrote extensively on a wide range of subjects including mathematics, music, astronomy, and chronography. His writings included a didactic poem 'De octo vitiis principalibus', based on classical models, and many hymns and antiphons. The widespread attribution to him of the '*Salve Regina' and the 'Alma Redemptoris Mater' rests in each case, however, on insufficient evidence. His 'Chronicon', which stretches from the beginning of the Christian era to 1054, is based, directly or indirectly, on a large variety of important sources and is of esp. value for its record of contemporary history.

His writings are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 143. 9–458; crit. edn. of his 'Chronicon' by G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 5 (1844), pp. 67–133, rev., with Ger. tr. and introd., by R. Buchner in W. Trillmich and R. Buchner (eds.), Quellen des 9. und 11. Jahrhunderts zur Geschichte der Hamburgischen Kirche und des Reiches (1961), pp. 617–707. H. Bresslau, 'Beiträge zur Kritik deutscher Geschichtsquellen des 11. Jahrhunderts. Neue Folge I, Hermann von Reichenau und das Chronicon Suevicum Universale', NA 27 (1902), pp. 127–69, with refs. to other arts. Good popular account by C. C. Martindale, SJ, From Bye-Ways and Hedges (1935), pp. 3–27. G. Michiels in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 293 f., s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under SALVE REGINA.

heritor. In *Scotland, heritors were the owners of heritable property in a parish to whom descended the ancient obligation to pay the *teinds or tithes to the minister and to keep the parish church and manse in repair. By an Act of Parliament, 1925, with a view to union between the Established and the *United Free Churches, provision was made for the termination of their rights and duties and the transfer of these responsibilities to the Church of Scotland itself.

Herman, Emma (1874–1923), writer on spiritual subjects. The wife of a *Presbyterian minister, she spent much of her early married life in *Constantinople and Sydney. In 1908 she began regular work as a journalist at Sydney, soon becoming widely known through her brilliant and penetrating writing. In 1913 she was appointed editor of the Presbyterian and later held posts in the Challenge and the Church Times. Towards the end of her life she joined the C of E, where she became warmly sympathetic to *Anglo-Catholicism. Her two chief books—The Meaning and Value of Mysticism (1915) and Creative Prayer (1921)—are notable for their understanding and interpretation of Christian spiritual values.

'An Appreciation of the Author' by D. C. Macgregor in her posthumously pub. The Secret Garden of the Soul [1924], pp. 11–26.

Hermann of Reichenau. See HERIMANNUS CONTRACTUS.

Hermann of Wied (1477–1552), German reformer. In 1515, while still a *subdeacon, he became Abp.-Elector of *Cologne. He governed his principality with marked efficiency, taking strong measures against the *Anabaptists and at a council at Cologne (1536) tightening up discipline and introducing some liturgical reforms. Throughout his earlier years he was hostile to the Protestant movement; but *c.*1539 he set out to create a parallel movement within the Catholic Church, making a start with his own archdiocese and inviting the assistance of M. *Bucer and P. *Melanchthon. He embodied many proposals for a moderate reform of the Church in his Einfaltigs Bedencken einer christlichen Reformation (1543); a revised Latin translation by A. *Hardenberg was pub. at Bonn, 1545; this in turn was translated into English (A Simple and Religious Consultation by us, Herman, by the grace of God, Archbishop of Cologne, 1547) and was considerably drawn on by the compilers of the Anglican BCP. In 1554 J. Gropper published an 'Antididagma' (q.v.) as a reply. Hermann's increasing adhesion to the Protestant cause was an important accession to its strength, but his policy met with hostility from most of his own subjects, from the Emp. *Charles V, and from Pope *Paul III, who excommunicated and deposed him in 1546. He died a Lutheran.

C. Varrentrapp, Hermann von Wied und sein Reformationsversuch (1878). A. Franzen, Bischof und Reformation: Erzbischof Hermann von Wied in Köln vor der Enstscheidung zwischen Reform und Reformation (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform in Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 31; Münster, 1971). C. Varrentrapp in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 712–14. For his influence on the BCP, see F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (1915), Introd., passim (cf. index, p. 1063), and G. [J.] Cuming, The Godly Order (Alcuin Club Collections, 65; 1983), pp. 68–90.

Hermas (2nd cent.), author of 'The Shepherd'. He is accounted one of the '*Apostolic Fathers'. Of his life nothing certain is known except what he himself says in his work. We learn that he was a Christian slave, sold in Rome to a woman called Rhoda, who set him free. He married, became a merchant, and enriched himself by means that were not always lawful. In a persecution he lost all his property, was denounced by his own children, and finally he and his whole family did penance.

His book, 'The Shepherd' (ὁ Ποιμήν), purports to have been written in consequence of a series of visions. It is divided into three parts: five 'Visions', twelve 'Mandates', and ten 'Similitudes'. In the 'Visions' a matron appears to him who represents the Church, which is pictured as a tower. In the fifth Vision appears the Angel of Penance in the guise of a shepherd, whence the name of the treatise. In the following 'Mandates' Hermas gives us his teaching on Christian behaviour and virtues, such as faith in one God, truthfulness, chastity, etc. The third section, the 'Similitudes', represents various Christian principles under a series of sometimes very forceful images.

The person of the author of the work has given rise to much speculation. Hermas himself says that he is a contemporary of St *Clement of Rome (*fl. c.*96; if he is the Clement mentioned at Vis. 2. 4. 3); but the *Muratorian Canon (*c.*180) attributes the work to a brother of Pope *Pius (d. *c.*154), while *Origen believes the Hermas mentioned in Rom. 16: 14 to be its author. Many modern scholars accept the view of the Muratorian Canon, which would suggest a date between 140 and 155. This would also fit the internal evidence, which seems to suggest that the work was written after a considerable period of peace. In the Greek Church of the 2nd and 3rd cents. the work was widely regarded as Scripture, e.g. by St *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, also by *Tertullian in his pre-Montanist days, though there was no unanimity on the subject. It was, however, greatly esteemed for its moral value and served as a textbook for catechumens, as is testified by St *Athanasius. In the *Codex Sinaiticus it comes after the NT, together with the Pseudo-*Barnabas. In the Latin Church it was valued far less highly; the Muratorian Canon denies its inspiration and *Jerome asserts that it was almost unknown in the West (De vir. illust. 10). From the 4th cent. it came to be also more and more neglected in the East.

The principal aim of the book is the inculcation of the necessity of penance and of the possibility of the forgiveness of sins at least once after Baptism, a doctrine which caused Tertullian, in his Montanist period, to call it the 'Shepherd of the adulterers'. The author seems to identify the Holy Spirit with the Son of God before the Incarnation, and to hold that the Trinity came into existence only after the humanity of Christ had been taken up into heaven.

The Gk. original of 'The Shepherd' is incomplete. In the Codex Sinaiticus the Gk. text is to be found up to Mand. 4, and in the MS of Mt. *Athos, ed. by C. *Tischendorf, Leipzig, 1856, as far as Sim. 9. The rest of the text is known from two Lat. versions, one of which, the 'Versio Vulgata', was first pub. by J. *Faber Stapulensis, Paris, 1513, the other, known as the 'Versio Palatina', by A. R. M. Dressel, Leipzig, 1857. Further additions to Gk. text from papyrus frags. ed. C. Wessely in PO 4 (1908), pp. 195–9, and 18 (1924), pp. 468–81. C. Bonner, A Papyrus Codex of the Shepherd of Hermas (Simil. 2–9), with a Fragment of the Mandates (University of Michigan, Humanistic Series, 22; 1934). Crit. edns. by M. Whittaker (GCS, 1956; 2nd edn., 1967), and, with Fr. tr., by R. Joly (SC 53; 1958). The Gk. text is pr. in all edns. of the Apostolic Fathers (q.v.). J. A. *Robinson, Barnabas, Hermas and the Didache (Donnellan Lectures for 1920; 1920). M. *Dibelius, Der Hirt des Hermas (Hb. NT, Ergänzungsband, Die Apostolischen Väter, 4; 1923). E. Peterson, 'Beiträge zur Interpretation der Visionen im Pastor Hermae', OCP 13 (1947), pp. 625–35; S. Giet, Hermas et les Pasteurs: Les trois auteurs du Pasteur d'Hermas (1963); L. Pernveden, The Concept of the Church in the Shepherd of Hermas (Studia Theologica Lundensia, 27; Lund, 1966); J. Reiling, Hermas and Christian Prophecy: A Study of the eleventh Mandate (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 37; 1973). N. Brox, Der Hert des Hermas (Ergänzungsreihe zum KEK, 7; 1991). R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 381–90. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 22 f (no. 1052). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 55–8 and 553. J. Paramelle and P. Adnès in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 316–34; A. Hilhorst in RAC 14 (1988), cols. 682–701, both s.v., with bibl.

hermeneutics (from Gk. ἑρμηνεύω, 'to interpret'). The science of the methods of *exegesis (q.v.). Whereas exegesis is usually the act of explaining a text, often in the case of sacred literature according to formally prescribed rules, hermeneutics is the science (or art) by which exegetical procedures are devised. In theology, hermeneutical theory arises out of awareness of the ambiguity of a sacred text and the consequent analysis of the act of understanding. There are traces of both these processes in St *Augustine, esp. in De Doctrina Christiana, though patristic and medieval exegesis was largely governed by formal rules of allegorical interpretation and the theory of scriptural infallibility. The Protestant emphasis on the importance of Scripture and belief in the possibility of comprehending it encouraged reflection on the act of understanding, as well as a return to more literal exegesis. Although the Latin term hermeneutica dates from the mid-17th cent. (the English form 'hermeneutics' is found only in the 18th cent.), it was F. D. E. *Schleiermacher who in modern times gave new prominence to the act of correctly understanding human utterance, thereby subsuming biblical hermeneutics into a general theory of interpretation. Building on Schleiermacher's work, W. *Dilthey and M. *Heidegger developed the philosophical analysis of understanding which sees interpretation, rather than perception, as the fundamental mode of man's relationship to the world. Wahrheit und Methode (1960; Eng. tr., Truth and Method, 1975), the work of Heidegger's pupil H.-G. Gadamer, represents a masterly and influential statement of this position. This emphasis has led some modern theologians (esp. R. *Bultmann and those influenced by him) to regard hermeneutics, rather than metaphysics, as the central intellectual task of Christian theology.

F. D. E. Schleiermacher, Hermeneutik (newly ed. from his MSS, with introd., by H. Kimmerle (Abh. (Heid.), 1959, Heft 2; Eng. tr., American Academy of Religion, Texts and Translation Series, 1; Missoula, Mont., 1977). R. Bultmann, 'Das Problem der Hermeneutik', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 47 (1950), pp. 47–69, repr. in his Glauben und Verstehen, 2 (1952), pp. 211–35; Eng. tr., id., New Testament and Mythology and other basic writings (1985), pp. 69–93. G. Ebeling, 'Wort Gottes und Hermeneutik', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 56 (1959), pp. 224–51; Eng. tr. in Ebeling's Word and Faith (1963), pp. 305–32. J. M. Robinson and J. B. Cobb (eds.), The New Hermeneutic (New York, 1964); R. E. Palmer, Hermeneutics: Interpretation Theory in Schleiermacher, Dilthey, Heidegger, and Gadamer (Evanston, Ill., 1969); A. C. Thiselton, The Two Horizons: New Testament Hermeneutics and Philosophical Description with Special Reference to Heidegger, Bultmann, Gadamer, and Wittgenstein (Exeter, 1980); id., New Horizons in Hermeneutics (1992). G. Ebeling in RGG (3rd edn.), 3 (1959), cols. 242–62, s.v.; C. v. Bormann and others in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 108–56, s.v.; B. C. Lategan in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 149–55, s.v.

Hermesianism. The system of philosophical and theological doctrines taught by Georg Hermes (1775–1831), Prof. of Theology at Münster i.W. It was an attempt to adjust the principles of RC theology to the supposed requirements of the philosophy of I. *Kant. Holding that our only certain knowledge was of ideas and notions actually present in the mind, it taught that the criterion of objective truth must be found in our subjective beliefs. Hermes believed that, starting from this principle, it was possible (as against the contentions of Kant) to prove the existence of God by the theoretical reason; and that when this fact had been established, the possibility of supernatural revelation could then be demonstrated. For a time Hermesian doctrines became very popular, esp. in the Rhineland, where many of the chief theological professorships were filled by Hermes' disciples. Soon after his death, Rome pronounced against them, however, and in 1835 *Gregory XVI put a number of Hermes' writings on the *Index.

Hermes' writings include Untersuchung über die Wahrheit des Christentums (1805), Studirplan der Theologie (1819), Einleitung in die christkatholische Theologie (1819–29), Positive Einleitung (1829), and Christkatholische Dogmatik (3 vols., 1834–5; posthumous, ed. J. H. Achterfeldt). His doctrines were condemned in the brief 'Dum Acerbissimas' (26 Sept. 1835); cf. Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 759 f. (nos. 2738–40). Acta Romana, ed. W. J. Braun and P. J. Elvenich (Hanover, 1838; pro-Hermesian). H. H. Schwedt, Das römische Urteil über Georg Hermes (1775–1831): Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Inquisition im 19. Jahrhundert (RQ Supplementheft 37 [1980]), with bibl. J. Schulte in CE 7 (1910), pp. 276–9; A. Thouvenin in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2288–303; E. Hegel in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 156–8, all s.v. 'Hermes'.

Hermetic books. A collection of Greek and Latin religious and philosophical writings ascribed to Hermes Trismegistus ('Hermes the Thrice-Greatest'), a later designation of the Egyptian God, Thoth, who was believed to be the father and protector of all knowledge. Dating probably from between the middle of the 1st and the end of the 3rd cents. AD, these writings represent a fusion of *Platonic, *Stoic, Neo-Pythagorean, and eastern religious elements, in the form of the Platonic dialogues. The aim of their mystic teaching was the deification of man through 'Gnosis', i.e. the knowledge of God. The most important of the writings, '*Poimandres', contains much cosmological and astronomical teaching and describes the ascent of the soul to God through the seven spheres of the planets. Hermetic writings were among the works discovered at *Nag Hammadi.

Corpus Hermeticum, ed. A. D. Nock, with Fr. tr. by A.-J. Festugière, OP (Collection Budé, Paris, 4 vols., 1945–54). Elaborate edn. by W. Scott, Hermetica (4 vols., Oxford, 1924–36), with Eng. introd. and notes, suffers from the editor's over-drastic emendation of the text. The texts found at Nag Hammadi are ed., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by J.-P. Mahé, Hermès en Haute-Égypte (Bibliothèque copte de Nag Hammadi, Textes, 3 and 7; Quebec, 1978–82). A.-J. Festugière, OP, La Révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste (Études bibliques, 4 vols., 1944–54). G. Fowden, The Egyptian Hermes: A historical approach to the later pagan mind (Cambridge, 1986). C. H. *Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935), pt. 2 (pp. 97–248, 'Hellenistic Judaism and the Hermetica'); id., The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (1953), pp. 10–53. G. van Moorsel, The Mysteries of Hermes Trismegistus: A Phenomenological Study in the Process of Spiritualisation in the Corpus Hermeticum and Latin Asclepius (Studia Theologica Rheno-Traiectina, 1; Utrecht, 1953); K.-W. Tröger, Mysterienglaube und Gnosis in Corpus Hermeticum XIII (TU 110; 1971); W. C. Grese, Corpus Hermeticum XIII and Early Christian Literature (Studia ad Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti, 5; Leiden, 1979). L. Delatte and others, Index du Corpus Hermeticum (Lessico Intellettuale Europeo, 13; Rome [1977]). See also bibl. to POIMANDRES.

Hermias (date uncertain), Christian philosophical writer. He is known only as the author of a small treatise, the 'Irrisio' or 'Mockery of the Heathen Philosophers' (Διασυρμὸς τῶν ἔξω Φιλοσόφων), which satirizes the conflicting opinions of pagan writers on the human soul (chs. 1–2) and the fundamental principles of the universe (chs. 3–10). The apology is clearly the work of a writer of very mediocre attainments. Some points of literary contact between the 'Irrisio' and the pseudo-*Justin's 'Cohortatio ad Gentiles' have been observed, but they are probably not sufficiently close to throw light on their relative dates, esp. in view of the possible use of common sources. Modern authors have assigned various dates to the 'Irrisio' from the 2nd to the 6th cents.

The editio princeps was issued by J. Oporinus (Basle, 1553). More recent editions are in J. C. T. de Otto, Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, 9 (Jena, 1872), pp. 1–31, and H. Diels, Doxographi Graeci (Berlin, 1879), pp. 649–56. Crit edn., with introd., by R. P. C. Hanson and others, and Fr. tr. by Denise Joussot (SC 388; 1993). CPG 1 (1983), p. 56 (no. 1113).

hermit (Gk. ἐρημίτης, from ἐρημία, 'desert'). One who from religious motives has retired into a solitary life. Christian hermits first began to abound in Egypt and surrounding regions towards the close of the 3rd cent., and from that date the eremitical life quickly gained in popularity, being esp. cultivated in the cents. which witnessed the disintegration of the Roman Empire. In the W. hermits died out after the *Counter-Reformation, though much of their tradition is retained in certain monastic orders, notably the *Carthusians and *Carmelites. In the 20th cent. there has been a revival of the eremitical life in both the RC and Anglican Churches. In the E. it has continued to exist without interruption. Hermits observe no uniform rule of life. While some live in isolation, others are united in loosely organized communities which have sometimes formed the nucleus of a new monastery or order (e.g. the *Augustinian Hermits). See also ANCHORITES.

P. F. Anson, The Call of the Desert (1964).

Herod family. Herod the Great was appointed King of the Jews by the Romans in 40 BC, and ruled from 37 to 4 BC. He was of an Idumaean (Edomite) family, and married a number of wives, including Mariamme, a granddaughter of Hyrcanus, the last legal *Hasmonaean ruler. By ruthlessness and genuine ability he kept the peace for 37 years in a country very hard to rule. During his reign Christ was born, and the story of the Massacre of the Innocents (Mt. 2: 16) fits his reputation. On his death his territory was divided between his sons: Archelaus, as ethnarch of *Judaea, Idumaea, and Samaria; Antipas, as tetrarch of *Galilee and Peraea; and Philip, as tetrarch of the remaining territory to the NE (Lk. 3: 1). Archelaus was deposed in AD 6 and his territory put under Roman prefects, of whom Pontius *Pilate was the fifth. Antipas, the 'Herod the tetrarch' of the Gospels (4 BC–AD 39), who married Herodias and beheaded St *John the Baptist, and Philip (4 BC–AD 34) were ruling at the time of Christ's ministry. In 37–41 all these territories were successively conferred on Agrippa I, the son of Herod the Great's second son by Mariamme Aristobulus (d. 7 BC); he ruled till AD 44 with the title of King. It was he (called 'Herod' in Acts) who put St *James the Apostle to death and died 'eaten of worms' (Acts 12). Agrippa II, his son, was made king of various territories in N. Palestine *c.*50, and ruled until *c.*93 or 100. He was the 'King Agrippa' before whom St *Paul appeared (Acts 25: 13 ff.).

Much the most important authority is *Josephus (q.v.), who for the careers of Antipas and Herod the Great was mainly dependent on the 'Universal History' of Nicolaus of Damascus, Herod the Great's court historiographer. A. H. M. Jones, The Herods of Judaea (1938; by a first-class scholar, but without bibl. refs.). S. Perowne, The Life and Times of Herod the Great (1956); id., The Later Herods: The Political Background of the New Testament (1958). A. Schalit, König Herodes: Der Mann und sein Werk (Ger. tr. from Heb., Studia Judaica, 4; 1969), with bibl.; M. Grant, Herod the Great [1971]. H. W. Hoehner, Herod Antipas (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 17; Cambridge, 1972). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 234, n. 3, 287–357, 442–54, 471–83, and 571 f. H. Merkel and D. Karol in RAC 14 (1988), cols. 815–49, s.v. 'Herodes der Grosse'. A. C. *Headlam in HBD 2 (1899), pp. 353–62, with useful 'Index of Herod Family'. W. Otto in PW, Suppl. 2 (1913), cols. 1–200, s.v. 'Herodes'.

Herodians. A party twice mentioned in the Gospels (Mk. 3: 6, in Galilee; Mk. 12: 13, cf. Mt. 22: 16, at Jerusalem) as a group hostile to the Lord. They were presumably partisans or retainers of the *Herod family, which was ruling at the time of Christ's ministry in Galilee and Iturea, but no longer in Judaea. The view of Ps.-*Tertullian (De praescr. 45 fin.), *Philaster (Haer. 28), and others that they held Herod to be the Messiah was doubtless a mere (mistaken) conjecture.

H. H. Rowley, 'The Herodians in the Gospels', JTS 41 (1940), pp. 14–27. W. J. Bennett, 'The Herodians of Mark's Gospel', Novum Testamentum, 17 (1975), pp. 9–14. See also comm. on Mark, cited under MARK, GOSPEL OF ST.

Herring, Thomas (1693–1757), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Wisbech, he was educated at Jesus and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, where he early won fame as a preacher. After holding many ecclesiastical appointments he was promoted to the see of *Bangor in 1737. In 1743 he was translated to *York, where he was energetic in defence of the government during the 1745 revolt. In 1747 he became Abp. of Canterbury but did little of note there. In his religious outlook he was a *Latitudinarian without theological interests. His chief claim to fame is his episcopal Visitation Returns for 1743, which are an important document for the religious history of his times.

Seven Sermons (1763), with pref. Life [by W. Duncombe], pp. i–xli; Letters [1728–57] . . . to William Duncombe (1777). B. Garnett, 'Correspondence of Archbishop Herring and Lord Hardwicke during the Rebellion of 1745', EHR 19 (1904), pp. 528–50 and 719–42. Visitation Returns ed. S. L. Ollard and P. C. Walker (Yorkshire Archaeological Society, Record Series, 71, 72, 75, 77, and 79; 1928–31), with Life by S. L. Ollard as Appendix D, vol. 5, pp. 1–30. A. W. Rowden, The Primates of the First Four Georges (1916), pp. 167–229. R. Hooper in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 259 f.

Herrmann, Wilhelm (1846–1922), theologian. After an appointment at Halle in 1875, he became professor of systematic theology at *Marburg in 1879. He was a follower of I. *Kant in philosophy, of A. *Ritschl in theology. While, like the latter, he looked upon the Gospels as in some sense the record of a historical personality, he insisted that the Church should teach only those facts about Christ which will act upon man, e.g. His moral teaching as distinguished from His Virgin Birth or Resurrection. He held, too, that the aspects of Christ's Person which had value for the disciples are not necessarily those important for us. He went beyond Ritschl in excluding both mysticism (or personal religious experience) and metaphysics (or intellectual reasoning about ultimate reality) from religion, contending that religion is centred entirely in 'the historical Christ', whose life, however, is relevant to us only in so far as it possesses ethical value. The book in which these views are most fully expounded is Der Verkehr des Christen mit Gott (1886; Eng. tr., The Communion of the Christian with God, 1896). His other writings include Die Religion im Verhältnis zum Welterkennen und zur Sittlichkeit (1879), Ethik (1901), and Christlich-protestantische Dogmatik (in Die Kultur der Gegenwart, 4. 1 (2), 1906). He influenced both K. *Barth and R. *Bultmann.

Herrmann's 'Vorlesungsdiktate' on Dogmatik were ed. by M. Rade (1925; Eng. tr., Systematic Theology, by N. Micklem and K. A. Saunders, 1927). Several of his minor writings in Gesammelte Aufsätze (ed. F. W. Schmidt, 1923), with bibl. of his works; Schriften zur Grundlegung der Theologie, ed. P. Fischer-Appelt (2 vols., Munich, 1966–7), with introd. The 1906 edn. of The Communion of the Christian with God was repr., with introd. by R. Voelkel (Philadelphia, 1971; London, 1972). P. Fischer-Appelt, Metaphysik im Horizont der Theologie Wilhelm Herrmanns (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, 2. Reihe, 32; 1965), with list of his works, pp. 215–30, and bibl. pp. 233–42. W. Greive, Der Grund des Glaubens: Die Christologie Wilhelm Herrmanns (Forschungen zur systematischen und ökumenischen Theologie, 36 [1976]). M. Beintker, Die Gottesfrage in der Theologie Wilhelm Herrmanns (Theologische Arbeiten, 34; 1976). C. Welch, Protestant Thought in the Nineteenth Century, 2 (New Haven, Conn., and London [1985]), pp. 44–54 and 154–7, with bibl. p. 304. T. Mahlmann in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 165–72.

Herrnhut. The village in Saxony, some 40 miles E. of Dresden, built and settled in 1722 by a group of *Moravian Brethren (hence known on the Continent as 'Herrnhuter') under Christian David, an artisan, on a site presented by Count N. L. von *Zinzendorf. Institutions exist here for the brethren and sisters of the community, and from 1945 until 1992 the Directorate of the Moravian Church in the DDR (East Germany) was centred here. The Districts of the Church with headquarters at Herrnhut and Bad Boll were then united, though some work of the Provincial Board remains at Herrnhut. In 1738 J. *Wesley made a pilgrimage here and for some weeks actively took part in the life of the community.

herse. See HEARSE.

Hertford, Council of (672 or 673). A Council of bishops held on 24 Sept. 672 or 673, under *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury, to promote the reorganization of the English Church. It issued 10 canons, concerned esp. with the rights and duties of clerics and monks. Bishops were not to intrude on the diocese ('parochia') of a neighbouring bishop (can. 2); precedence among bishops was to be determined by their dates of consecration (can. 8); and monks were not to leave their monasteries without their abbot's permission (can. 4). Synods were to be held twice annually, or, if that proved impossible, at least once a year on 1 Aug., at *Clovesho (can. 7). Divorce was forbidden except for fornication, and a man divorced from his wife was not to remarry (can. 10). The date for the keeping of Easter was settled (can. 1). The Council was the first occasion on which the English Church deliberated and acted as a unity.

*Bede, HE 4. 5; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 142–4. A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 118–22. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 240–9 and 441–4. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), p. 310.

Hervetus, Gentian (1499–1584), French theologian, translator, and controversialist. He was a native of Olivet, nr. Orléans, where he studied. In 1519 he came to England, where he formed links with R. *Pole. In 1533 he dedicated an English translation of *Erasmus' De immensa misericordia Dei to Margaret, Countess of Salisbury, Pole's mother. For a short time, *c.*1534, he was professor of Greek at Orléans University. He translated several Greek writings into Latin, among them *Aristotle's De Anima (1544) and Alexander of Aphrodisias' De Fato (1544). He then went to Rome, where he lived in the house of Cardinal Pole, whom he accompanied to *Trent in 1545. In his service he made more translations, esp. of the Greek Fathers, e.g. *Zacharias Scholasticus (1548). He also took an active part in the discussions preceding the decrees of the Council. In 1549 he entered the service of Card. M. Cervini, later Pope Marcellus II, for whom he translated works by *Theodoret (1549), St *Chrysostom (1549), and St *Clement of Alexandria (1551). In 1556 he was ordained priest, and shortly afterwards became Vicar General of Noyon. In 1561 he published a treatise De Reparanda Ecclesiasticorum Disciplina, in which he recommended the enforcing of episcopal residence as the chief means for the reform of the Church. In 1561 he joined the group of theologians formed by Card. Charles of Lorraine for fighting Protestantism and published a number of controversial pamphlets against it. From 1562 he was Canon of *Reims. In 1562 he again went to Trent, in the company of Charles of Lorraine. In 1564 he published a complete French translation of the decrees of the Council entitled Le Saint, Sacré, Universel et Général Concile de Trente. In his later years he wrote chiefly pamphlets, and in 1570 published a French translation of St *Augustine's Civitas Dei.

A. Humbert in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2315–20, s.v. 'Hervet', with additional bibl. in DHGE 24 (1993), col. 246; A. Duval, OP, in Catholicisme, 5 [1963], cols. 693–7, also s.v. 'Hervet'.

Herzog, Johann Jakob (1805–82), Swiss Reformed theologian. A pupil of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and J. A. W. *Neander, he began to teach at Lausanne in 1835, where he was professor of historical theology from 1838 to 1846. Later he held professorships at Halle (from 1847) and Erlangen (from 1854). His fame rests on his editing of the Realencyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche (22 vols., 1854–68), a standard work of reference which was adapted and condensed into an American version by P. *Schaff (3 vols., 1882–4). Both the German and American versions have been rewritten and expanded in more recent editions (see HAUCK, A.).

Herzog also issued a 2nd edn. of the Realencyclopädie (18 vols., 1877–88) in conjunction with G. L. Plitt. F. Sieffert in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1899), pp. 782–7.

Hesperinos. See VESPERS.

Hesychasm (from Gk. ἡσυχία, 'quietness'). In the E. Church, the tradition of inner, mystical prayer associated above all with the monks of Mt. *Athos. Its distant origins extend back to the 4th–5th cent., in particular to St *Gregory of Nyssa, *Evagrius Ponticus, the *Macarian Homilies, and *Diadochus of Photike. Other writers who exercised a formative influence on the growth of Hesychasm were St *John Climacus, St *Maximus the Confessor, and St *Simeon the New Theologian. Hesychasm in its developed form finds full expression in the works of St Gregory of Sinai, St Nicephorus of Mt. Athos, and esp. St *Gregory Palamas (q.v.), all of the 14th cent.

The Hesychasts attached particular importance to the unceasing repetition of the *Jesus Prayer (q.v.). To facilitate this continual recitation they recommended the aspirant to adopt a particular bodily posture—head bowed, eyes fixed on the place of the heart—and they taught that the breathing should be carefully controlled so as to keep time with the recitation of the prayer. This physical method was, of course, not regarded as the essential element in the practice of the Jesus Prayer, but simply as a useful accessory. The immediate aim of the Hesychasts was to secure what they termed 'the union of the mind with the heart', so that their prayer became 'prayer of the heart'. This prayer of the heart leads eventually, in those who are specially chosen by God, to the vision of the Divine Light, which, it was believed, can be seen—even in this present life—with the material eyes of the body, although it is first necessary for a man's physical faculties to be refined by God's grace and so rendered spiritual. The Hesychasts held this Light to be identical with the Light that surrounded the Lord at His *Transfiguration on Mt. Tabor, and to be none other than the uncreated energies of the Godhead. They considered this Light, and not (as in W. theology) God's essence, to be the object of the *Beatific Vision.

The Hesychast way of prayer, and above all the physical method, were fiercely attacked by the Calabrian Barlaam (esp. from 1337), who denounced the Athonite practices as gross superstition. He ridiculed the Hesychast claim to behold the Divine Light with bodily eyes, and he argued that the distinction which they drew between the essence and the energies of God impaired the Divine unity and simplicity. Barlaam's chief opponent, St Gregory Palamas, passionately defended Hesychasm, and was instrumental in securing its acceptance in the 'Hagioritic Tome' (1340–1) and also its formal adoption at the Councils of Constantinople in 1341, 1347, and 1351. Henceforward Hesychasm became an accepted part of the Orthodox tradition.

The chief texts embodying the Hesychast teaching on prayer are collected in the Philocalia* of St *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain.

The fullest accounts are those of M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1777–818, s.v. 'Palamite (Controverse)', with bibl., based largely on unpub. MS material, and J. Meyendorff, Introduction à l'étude de Grégoire Palamas (Patristica Sorbonensia, 3 [1959]; abridged Eng. tr., 1964). V. *Lossky, Vision de Dieu (Neuchâtel, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963). I. Hausherr, SJ, La Méthode d'oraison hésychaste (Orientalia Christiana, 9, pt. 2; fasc. 36 of the series; 1927, paginated pp. 97–209); id., 'L'Hésychasme. Étude de spiritualité', OCP 22 (1956), pp. 5–40, 247–85, both repr., together with other arts. on the subject, in his Hésychasme et prière (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 176; 1966). S. Guichardan, Le Problème de la simplicité divine en Orient et en Occident aux XIVᵉ et XVᵉ siècles: Grégoire Palamas, Duns Scot, Georges Scholarios (thesis; Lyons, 1933). P. Adnès in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 381–99, s.v.; F. v. Lilienfeld in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 282–9, s.v., with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to GREGORY PALAMAS.

Hesychius (fl. c.300), biblical textual critic. Acc. to St *Jerome (Praef. in lib. Paralipp.) he made a revision of the text of the *Septuagint at *Alexandria, which he corrected acc. to the Hebrew. He is perhaps to be identified with an Egyptian bishop, martyred in the *Diocletianic persecution (*Eusebius, HE 8. 13), who in conjunction with his colleagues, Pachomius, Theodore, and Phileas, sent a letter to Melitius of Lycopolis (see MELITIAN SCHISMS) which has survived in a Latin translation.

Lat. tr. of the letter sent to Melitius in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 1565–8. F. G. Kenyon, 'Hesychius and the Text of the New Testament', in Mémorial Lagrange (1940), pp. 245–50, with refs. to older lit. H. *Lietzmann in PW 8 (pt. 2; 1913), cols. 1327 f.

Hesychius of Alexandria (prob. 5th cent.), lexicographer. Nothing is known of his life. His elaborate lexicon (Συναγωγὴ πασῶν λέξεων κατὰ στοιχεῖον) is an important authority for the Greek dialects and the vocabulary of some of the Fathers. Based on the lexicon of Diogenianus of Heraclea (2nd cent. AD), it also drew on the compilations of Aristarchus, Heliodorus, Apion and others; and appears to have made extensive use of a glossary illustrating the vocabulary of St *Cyril of Alexandria. It survives in a single 15th-cent. MS (Venice 622), extensively interpolated and disfigured, from which the refs. to the sources of the words have been excised.

Edns. by J. Alberti (2 vols., Leiden, 1746–66), M. Schmidt (5 vols., Jena, 1858–68), and K. Latte (Copenhagen, 1953 ff.). A. von Blumenthal, Hesych-Studien: Untersuchungen zur Vorgeschichte der griechischen Sprache nebst lexicographischen Beiträgen (1930). H. Schultz in PW 8 (pt. 2; 1913), cols. 1317–22, s.v. 'Hesychios (9)'.

Hesychius of Jerusalem, St (5th cent.), Greek ecclesiastical writer and exegete. In early life he was a monk, and in 412, acc. to Theophanes Confessor, presbyter at *Jerusalem. Little, however, is known of him beyond the fact that he was held in high repute by his contemporaries. In his lost Church History, cited at the second Council of *Constantinople (553), he endorsed St *Cyril of Alexandria's position in the *Nestorian controversy and attacked both the exegetical method and the Christology of *Theodore of Mopsuestia. He was alive and strongly supporting the Alexandrians in the controversies that led up to the Council of *Chalcedon (451); as to whether he played any part in its aftermath, the evidence is scanty and unclear. He is said to have commented on the whole Bible. The surviving portions of his commentaries, glosses, and sermons make moderate use of *allegory, as would befit a supporter of the Alexandrian party. He defended orthodoxy against the *Manichees, *Arians, *Apollinarians, and other heretics. It seems probable that the bulk of the long commentary on the Psalms, ascribed by N. Antonelli, its first editor (1746), to St *Athanasius, is his work. The 'centuries' of ascetic maxims, printed among the works of Hesychius of Jerusalem, belong to an Abba Hesychius of Sinai (perhaps 6th–7th cent.). Feast day in the Greek Church, 28 Mar.

For his life, cf. *Cyril of Scythopolis, Vita S. Euthymii, 31 f. Works, incl. a 6th-cent. Lat. version of his Comm. on Lev. and other exegetical remains, in J. P. Migne, PG 93. 781–1560; Comm. on Pss., ibid. 27. 849–1344 (inter Opp. S. Athanasii). On this last see M. *Faulhaber, 'Eine wertvolle Oxforder Handschrift', Th.Q. 83 (1901), pp. 218–32. Parts of a different Comm. on Pss. (the 'Commentarius Magnus') are pr. in PG 93. 1180–340 and (among the spuria of J. *Chrysostom) in PG 55. 711–84; cf. R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs des Psaumes (ST 264; 1970), pp. 243–301, with further frags. Comm. on Is. ed. M. Faulhaber (Freiburg i.B., 1900). A. Vaccari, SJ, 'Esichio di Gerusalemme e il suo "Commentarius in Leviticum"', Bessarione, 34 (1918), pp. 8–46, incl. frags. of Gk. text. Festal Homilies, ed. M. Aubineau (Subsidia Hagiographia, 59; 2 vols., 1978–80; index pub. separately, Hildesheim, 1983); Paschal Homilies, ed. id. (SC 187; 1972, pp. 35–166). Armenian version of Homilies on Job, ed. C. Renoux, with Fr. tr. by id. and C. Mercier, in PO 42 (1983), pp. 1–612. K. Jüssen, Die dogmatischen Anschauungen des Hesychius von Jerusalem (2 vols., 1931–4); id., 'Die Mariologie des Hesychius von Jerusalem', in J. Auer and H. Volk (eds.), Theologie in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Michael Schmaus zum sechzigsten Geburstag dargebracht (Munich, 1957), pp. 651–70; A. Wenger, AA, 'Hésychius de Jérusalem. Notes sur les discours inédits et sur le texte grec du commentaire "In Leviticum" ', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 2 (1956), pp. 457–70. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 257–69 (nos. 6550–96). M. Faulhaber in CE 7 (1910), pp. 303 f.; J. Kirchmeyer, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 399–408, s.v. 'Hésychius (1) de Jérusalem'.

Hexaemeron (Gk. ἑξαήμερον, '[a work] of six days'). The account of the creation of the universe in six days, as set forth in Gen. 1. The name is also used of the *patristic commentaries on this narrative, notably those of St *Basil and St *Ambrose.

F. E. Robbins, The Hexaemeral Literature (thesis; Chicago, 1912); Y.-M.-J. *Congar, OP, 'Le thème de Dieu-Créateur et les explications de l'Hexaméron dans la tradition chrétienne', in L'Homme devant Dieu: Mélanges offerts au Père Henri de Lubac, 1 (Théologie, 56; 1963), pp. 189–222; In Principio: Interprétations des premiers versets de la Genèse (École pratique des Hautes Études, Section des Sciences religieuses, Centre d'Études des Religions du Livre, Laboratoire associé au C.N.R.S., 152; Études Augustiniennes, 1973); J. Zahlten, Creatio mundi: Darstellungen der sechs Schöpfungstage und naturwissenschaftliches Weltbild im Mittelalter (Stuttgarter Beiträge zur Geschichte und Politik, 13; 1979).

Hexapla (Gk. ἑξαπλᾶ 'sixfold'). The elaborate edition of the OT produced by *Origen, in which the Hebrew text, the Hebrew text transliterated into Greek characters, and the four Greek versions of *Aquila, *Symmachus, the *Septuagint (in a revised text with critical signs) and *Theodotion were arranged in parallel columns. For certain sections of the OT, up to three further Greek versions were added, making a total of nine columns. The work, begun before Origen left Alexandria for Caesarea in 231, was not finished until *c.*245. It was of such huge dimensions that it was probably never copied in its entirety, and St *Jerome expressly stated that he had used the original copy preserved in Origen's library at Caesarea. The text of the LXX in the fifth column, however, was widely copied and circulated on its own. Origen had adapted the LXX to the Hebrew, using asterisks and obeli to mark the differences, and though these signs tended to disappear when the LXX was copied on its own, this Hexaplaric recension was regarded as of great authority in the early Church. Fragments of the Hexapla have been identified at Milan and Cambridge, though in each case the first column (the Hebrew) is wanting. According to *Eusebius, Jerome, and other Fathers, the last four columns (Aquila, Symmachus, LXX, and Theodotion) also existed in a separate form known as the 'Tetrapla'. See also SYRO-HEXAPLA.

The most extensive collection of frags. is in F. *Field, Origenis Hexaplorum quae Supersunt (2 vols., Oxford, 1867–75); that at Cambridge was ed. by C. Taylor, Hebrew-Greek Cairo Genizah Palimpsests (Cambridge, 1900), pp. 1–50; those at Milan by G. *Mercati (Codices ex Ecclesiasticis Italiae Bybliothecis delecti, 8; with photographic reproduction and transcript of text, together with reconstruction of col. 1, Rome, 1958; vol. of 'Osservazioni', ibid., 1965). A. Schenker, OP, Hexaplarische Psalmenbruchstücke: Die hexaplarischen Psalmenfragmente der Handschriften Vaticanus graecus 752 und Canonicianus graecus 62 (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 8; 1975), incl. texts. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 174 f. (no. 1500). C. Taylor in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 14–23, s.v. See also works cited under SEPTUAGINT.

Hexateuch (Gk. ἕξ, 'six' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A name given by J. *Wellhausen (1876), and after him by many other modern biblical scholars, to the first six books of the Hebrew Bible (Genesis to Joshua), in the belief that all are compiled from a single set of literary sources. The word is formed on the analogy of *Pentateuch.

G. von *Rad, Das formgeschichtliche Problem des Hexateuchs (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft von Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 4, Heft 26; 1938; Eng. tr., The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays (Edinburgh, 1966), pp. 1–78).

Hexham, in Northumberland. The site of an abbey founded by St *Wilfrid of York in 674. In 678 the new see of Bernicia was set up here, which survived until 821, when it was united with the bishopric of *Lindisfarne. The abbey church of St Andrew is chiefly Early English and Transitional, and since the *Dissolution in 1536 has been used as the parish church. Only fragments of other parts of the monastery remain.

J. Raine (ed.), The Priory of Hexham, its Chronicles, Endowments and Annals (Surtees Society, 44 and 46; 1864–5). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6 (pt. 1; 1830 edn.), pp. 179–85. C. C. Hodges, The Abbey of St Andrew, Hexham (1888). Id. and J. Gibson, Hexham and its Abbey (1919), pp. 24–122. A History of Northumberland, 3, by A. B. Hinds (1896), pp. 105–200. D. P. Kirby (ed.), Saint Wilfrid at Hexham (Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1974).

Heylyn, Peter (1600–62), Anglican controversialist and historian. Educated at Burford and at Hart Hall and Magdalen College, *Oxford, he became a Fellow of Magdalen in 1618. In 1627 at a public disputation he defended against John Prideaux, the Regius professor of divinity, the visibility of the Church and soon attracted the attention of W. *Laud by his championship of *High Church views. In 1630 he was appointed by *Charles I a royal chaplain and also rector of Hemingford, Cambs. When J. *Williams, Bp. of Lincoln, declined to institute him at Hemingford, Charles made him a prebendary of *Westminster (1631), where he began a long feud with Williams which ended with Williams's suspension by the Star Chamber in 1637. Other preferments followed in the next years. In the 1630s he became the official apologist for the Laudian reforms: in The History of the Sabbath (1636) he defended anti-*sabbatarianism; in A Coale from the Altar (1636) and Antidotum Lincolniense (1637) he upheld the requirements that the *Communion table (or altar) be placed at the east end of the church and surrounded by a rail; and in A Brief and Moderate Answer (1637) he refuted charges of innovation. After 1640 his fortunes altered with the decline in the King's power. During the Civil War his issue of Mercurius Aulicus, a royalist news-sheet, caused his property at Alresford to be plundered and his library dispersed. Under the Commonwealth he lived quietly at first, but later renewed his controversial writings, one of which, Ecclesia Vindicata, or the Church of England justified (1657), again brought upon him the indignation of the government. This was followed in 1659 with an attack on T. *Fuller. At the Restoration (1660) he worked for the reinstatement of the C of E in all her traditional and legal rights and was particularly anxious for the revival of the *Convocations. As a writer, Heylyn was learned, trenchant, and critical, but he was above all a partisan. Among his other works are Historia Quinquarticularis, or a Historical Declaration of the Five Controverted Points reproached in the Name of Arminianism (1660); Ecclesia Restaurata, or the History of the Reformation (1661); Cyprianus Anglicus (1668), a defence of Laud; and Aerius Redivivus: or, The History of Presbyterianism (1670).

Photographic repr. of The History of the Sabbath (Amsterdam and New York, 1969). G. Vernon, The Life of the Learned and Reverend Doctor Peter Heylyn (1682). G. Barnard, Theologico-Historicus, or True Life of the Most Reverend Divine and Excellent Historian, Peter Heylyn, D.D. (1683), repr., with additional information from Vernon, in Heylyn's Ecclesia Restaurata, ed. J. C. Robertson (1849). M. *Creighton in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 319–23.

Hibbert, Robert (1770–1849), founder of the Hibbert Trust. He was born in Jamaica, was a pupil of Gilbert Wakefield at Nottingham, and studied at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from 1788 to 1791. On his estate in Jamaica he kept slaves, for whose conversion he employed a *Unitarian minister. In 1847 he founded the Hibbert Trust for 'the spread of Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form' and also 'the unfettered exercise of the right of private judgement in matters of religion'. Its aims were anti-Trinitarian and its recipients must be 'heterodox'. Its best-known activities are the Hibbert Lectures (1878 onwards), and the publication of the Hibbert Journal (66 vols., 1902–68), which treated philosophical and religious subjects from a liberal point of view.

J. Murch, Memoir of R. Hibbert, Esquire, Founder of the Hibbert Trust, with a Sketch of its History (1874). A. R. Ruston, The Hibbert Trust: A History (1984). A. Gordon in DNB 26 (1891), p. 344.

Hickes, George (1642–1715), *Nonjuring bishop. Educated at Oxford, Hickes first served as Chaplain to the Duke of Lauderdale, *Charles II's Vice-regent in Scotland, where he greatly aided the episcopalian interest. In 1680 he became Vicar of All Hallows, Barking. In 1683 he published Jovian, a major work in defence of the *Divine Right of Kings, and in the same year he was appointed Dean of *Worcester. He opposed the pro-RC measures of *James II, but in 1689 he refused to take the oaths to William and Mary, and in 1690 he was deprived of his deanery. In his retirement, he remained firm in his principles. In 1694 he was consecrated titular Bp. of Thetford by the Nonjurors; and after the death in 1709 of W. Lloyd (formerly Bp. of *Norwich), he was their acknowledged head. Being anxious, in opposition to T. *Ken, to continue the Nonjuring succession, he consecrated three bishops in 1713, viz. J. *Collier, S. Hawes, and N. *Spinckes. Hickes was a man of great piety and wide scholarship. Besides his very learned Linguarum veterum Septentrionalium Thesaurus (1703–5), his writings included The Case of Infant Baptism (1683); Speculum Beatae Virginis (1686); Institutiones Grammaticae Anglo-Saxonicae et Moeso-Gothicae (1689); Of the Christian Priesthood (1707); and Of the Dignity of the Episcopal Order (1707). The posthumous publication of Hickes's Constitution of the Catholic Church and the Nature and Consequences of Schism (1716) was the immediate occasion of the *Bangorian Controversy.

His Two Treatises on the Christian Priesthood and on the Dignity of the Episcopal Order were ed. by I. B[arrow] in LACT (3 vols., 1847–8). There are frequent refs. to him in T. *Hearne's Remains and Collections. J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902), pp. 91–113 and passim; D. C. Douglas, English Scholars, 1660 1730 (1939), ch. 4, pp. 93–119; 2nd edn. (1951), pp. 77–97. W. D. Macray in DNB 26 (1891), pp. 350–4.

Hicks, Elias (1748–1830), American *Quaker. He was born of Quaker parents at Hempstead, Long Island. After taking little interest in religion as a young man, he gradually came to feel a call to preaching and from 1779 onwards made evangelistic tours, becoming a commanding influence. He also took up the cause of the negroes, esp. in Observations on the Slavery of the Africans and their Descendants (1811). He strongly opposed the creation of any credal basis for Quakerism, notably in his Doctrinal Epistle (1824), where he protested against insistence on the orthodox doctrines of the Person of Christ and the Atonement. A schism ensued (1827–8) at Philadelphia and elsewhere between his followers (the 'Liberal Branch', called by their opponents 'Hicksites') and the orthodox, which had repercussions in England (see FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF).

Some of his discourses, taken down in shorthand by M. T. C. Gould, were pub. at Philadelphia in 1825. [V. Hicks and R. Seaman (eds.)], Journal of the Life and Religious Labours of E. Hicks, written by himself (3rd edn., New York, 1832). H. W. Wilbur, The Life and Labours of Elias Hicks (Philadelphia, 1910); E. Russell, The Separation after a Century (ibid., 1928); B. Forbush, Elias Hicks, Quaker Liberal (New York, 1956); R. W. Doherty, The Hicksite Separation (New Brunswick, 1967). R. M. *Jones in Dict. Amer. Biog. 9 (1932), pp. 6 f.

Hicks, George Dawes (1862–1941), philosopher. He was a *Unitarian minister at Islington from 1897 to 1903 and professor of philosophy at University College, London, from 1904 to 1928. From an intensive interest in I. *Kant, he became a lifelong student of the theory of knowledge. In his *Hibbert Lectures on The Philosophical Bases of Theism (1937) he defended the traditional Christian position, arguing that besides the strictly intellectual grounds of theistic belief there was a legitimate place for the argument from religious experience.

A. Dorward in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 387–8.

Hicksites. See HICKS, ELIAS.

Hieracas of Leontopolis (late 2nd–early 3rd cent.), an ascetic and one of the leaders of the monastic movement in Egypt. Learned in both Greek and Coptic, he wrote works in both languages, incl. a commentary on the *Hexaemeron and several hymns, but nothing of his has survived. The main source is *Epiphanius' surprisingly genial account in his Panarion (Haer. 67). Hieracas was an *Origenist, upholding the pre-existence of souls and the spiritual nature of the resurrection body; *Peter of Alexandria's condemnation of Origenism may have been directed against him. He rejected marriage absolutely. *Arius (Ep. ad Alex. 3) mentions him as holding that the Son was derived from the Father as one flame from another, but Epiphanius says nothing of this.

P. Nautin, 'Hiérakas de Léontopolis', École Pratique des Hautes Études, V^e Section, Annuaire, 84 (1975–6), pp. 312–14. G. Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 24 f., s.v.

Hieracites. Followers of *Hieracas (q.v.).

hierarchy. The word has been in use for the ordained body of Christian clergy since patristic times. RC theologians used to distinguish the hierarchy of order from that of pastoral government. The former was subdivided into the three grades of divine institution (bishops, priests, and deacons) on the one hand, and the subdiaconate and minor orders, instituted by the Church, on the other. In the hierarchy of pastoral government, only the papacy and the episcopacy were held to be of divine institution. All the other grades were held to be of ecclesiastical origin. Since the Second Vatican Council the hierarchical constitution of the Church has been conceived differently, and this understanding is reflected in the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 330–572). First there is the supreme Church authority, enjoyed by the Pope and college of bishops, with power over the universal Church. From this authority derives that of the synods of bishops, the cardinals, the Roman Curia, and pontifical legates. Secondly, there are particular Churches and their groupings; from these derive the authority of, e.g., diocesan synods, vicars general, etc. Only those in holy orders (bishops, priests, and deacons) are capable of the power of government or jurisdiction, but the laity can co-operate in the exercise of this power. The threefold hierarchical order of bishops, priests, and deacons has been retained in the C of E in common with the RC and E. Churches.

Hierome, Hieronymus. See JEROME.

Hieronymian Martyrology (Lat. Hieronymianum). A famous *martyrology (q.v.), based on an earlier Greek martyrology of Asia Minor, which was composed in Italy in the middle of the 5th cent. It gives, after the calendar date in the year, the names of the saints commemorated on that day, the places of their tombs (or alternatively where they were venerated), and other details connected with their cultus. It is so named from a statement in an apocryphal correspondence preceding the text that its compilation was the work of St *Jerome.

Ed. princeps by F. Fiorentini (Lucca, 1668). Text also in D. *Vallarsi's edn. of Jerome, 11 (Verona, 1742), cols. 475–524; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 30. 433–86. Crit. edn., with magisterial discussion, by G. B. *de Rossi and L. *Duchesne in AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 1; 1894), pp. [1]–[195], with text of 'Bernensis', 'Epternacensis', and 'Wisseburgensis' in three columns, with the further text of the 'Laureshamensis' for 38 days, and with prolegomena, pp. [i]–[lxxxii]; 'Commentarius Perpetuus', by H. *Quentin, OSB, and H. *Delehaye, SJ, as Nov. 2 (pt. 2; 1931). J. Dubois, OSB, Les Martyrologes du Moyen Âge Latin (Typologie des Sources du Moyen Âge Occidental, 26; 1978), pp. 29–37, with further refs.

Hierusalem. A Latinized form of the word *Jerusalem (Gk. Ἱερουσαλήμ).

High Altar. The main altar of a church, traditionally standing in the centre of the east end. In ancient English Gothic churches the length was commonly the same as that of the splay of the east window, which formed the *reredos. Acc. to modern RC practice there should be only one altar in the principal part of the church, so placed as to form the focal point, and sufficiently separated from the wall to allow Mass to be celebrated facing the people. The altar is normally made of stone, though other solid material may be used. It is normally fixed and consecrated. Either on or near the altar there is to be a cross (crux) and two, four, or six candlesticks.

High Churchmen. A term coined in the late 17th cent. to describe those members of the C of E who emphasized its historical continuity as a branch of the Catholic Church and upheld 'high' conceptions of the divine basis of authority in Church and State, of the rights of monarchy and episcopacy, and of the nature of the sacraments. The descent of the school can be traced from the Elizabethan age, when men such as R. *Bancroft and R. *Hooker resisted the attacks of radical *Puritans. In the 17th cent. the tradition was maintained by L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, and many others. After the *Restoration of *Charles II, the High Church identification of Church and nation received legislative reinforcement, notably from the Act of *Uniformity of 1662 and the *Test Act (1673). The accession, first of William of Orange (1689) and then of the House of Hanover (1714) violated the principle of indefeasible hereditary succession (see DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS) and precipitated the schism of the *Nonjurors, although men such as W. *Law and C. *Leslie continued to work closely with conforming High Churchmen to promote popular piety and to defend the C of E against spreading heterodoxy and toleration of Protestant dissenters. In the early 18th cent. there was strong support for the views of H. *Sacheverell and F. *Atterbury, and writers such as D. *Waterland and C. *Wheatly achieved lasting influence. High Churchmen were instrumental in securing episcopal consecration for S. *Seabury and in resisting the rationalist and democratic impulses of the French Revolution. Later High Churchmen of this school initially shared the concern of the *Oxford Movement at the erosion of the Church's privileges after 1828, but were soon alienated by what they regarded as its tendency to divisiveness and innovation. See also ANGLO-CATHOLICISM.

J. Wickham Legg, English Church Life from the Restoration to the Tractarian Movement (1914); G. W. O. Addleshaw, The High Church Tradition (1941); G. Every, SSM, The High Church Party 1688–1718 (CHS, 1956); K. Hylson-Smith, High Churchmanship in the Church of England from the Sixteenth Century to the late Twentieth Century (Edinburgh, 1993); P. B. Nockles, The Oxford Movement in Context: Anglican High Churchmanship 1760–1857 (Cambridge, 1994). R. Sharp, 'New Perspectives on the High Church Tradition: Historical Background 1730–1780' in [D.] G. Rowell (ed.), Tradition Renewed: The Oxford Movement Conference Papers (1986), pp. 4–23; R. H. Fuller, 'The Classical High Church Reaction to the Tractarians', ibid., pp. 51–63. See also bibl. to Churchmen mentioned in the entry.

High Commission, Court of. From 1549 ecclesiastical commissions to check heresy and enforce the forms of worship prescribed by public authority were frequently appointed in England. From 1559 the power of the Crown to create such bodies was expressly recognized by the Elizabethan Act of *Supremacy. The actual term 'High Commission' begins to appear *c.*1570 and is employed normally after 1580, a development corresponding with the elevation of an ad hoc commission into a permanent court. At this stage the visitatorial function of the commission declined by comparison with the multiplication of suits between party and party, while professional lawyers played an increasing part and rigid procedure developed. The High Commission also became the normal court of appeal from the ancient ecclesiastical courts in doctrinal and disciplinary suits. Together with the other conciliar courts, it incurred the dislike and fear of the common lawyers, even Lord Burghley, Elizabeth's first minister, denouncing the procedure by the oath ex officio as savouring of the *Inquisition. In 1641 it was ended by the Abolition of High Commission Court Act 1640. In 1686 *James II instituted an Ecclesiastical Commission, which some authorities regard as a revival of the Court of High Commission. This in turn was discontinued in 1688 and condemned in the Bill of Rights. Besides the central High Commission, the Crown appointed diocesan ecclesiastical commissions, most of which ceased to be very active after 1600. There was also a High Commission for the Northern Province, which was closely associated with the Council in the North, and took a leading part in the repression of *recusancy.

The greater part of the Act Books and other papers belonging to the Registry of the Commission at London seems to have been lost, having probably been destroyed by order of Parliament during the Civil War; some records, however, survive among the State Papers. A large part of the papers of the Commission at Durham has survived; ed., in part, by W. H. D. Longstaffe, The Acts of the High Commission Court within the Diocese of Durham (Surtees Society, 34; 1858); F. D. Price (ed.), The Commission for Ecclesiastical Causes within the Dioceses of Bristol and Gloucester, 1574 (Bristol and Gloucestershire Archaeological Society, Records Section, 10; 1972). R. G. Usher, The Rise and Fall of the High Commission (Oxford, 1913; repr., with introd. by P. Tyler, and further bibl., 1968). P. Tyler, 'The Significance of the Ecclesiastical Commission at York', Northern History, 2 (1967), pp. 27–44; R. B. Manning, 'The Making of a Protestant Aristocracy: the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of the Diocese of Chester, 1550–98', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 49 (1976), pp. 60–79; C. Cross, 'Sin and Society: The Northern High Commission and the Northern Gentry in the Reign of Elizabeth I', in id. and others (eds.), Law and Government under the Tudors: Essays Presented to Sir Geoffrey Elton (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 195–209. J. P. Kenyon, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Causes 1686–1688: A Reconsideration', Historical Journal, 34 (1991), pp. 727–36. R. G. Usher in DECH, pp. 275–8, s.v.

High Mass (Missa solemnis). In the W. Church for centuries the normal, though not the most usual, form of the Mass. Its essential feature was the presence of the *deacon and *subdeacon assisting the celebrant; they were accompanied by the choir, the *thurifer, and a number of servers or *acolytes. Their respective functions were carefully regulated, the chief office of the deacon being the chanting of the *Gospel and the *Ite, Missa Est, and that of the subdeacon the chanting of the *Epistle; whereas the choir and people sang the *proper and *common of saints respectively. Other distinctive features were the use of *incense and the giving of the *Kiss of Peace. Since the Second *Vatican Council the term 'High Mass' has disappeared from official documents and a more typical pattern of celebration is advocated; greater emphasis is placed on the part of the congregation and on the role of the deacon as their leader, as well as on his traditional functions of assisting the celebrant, while the celebrant is conceived as president of the liturgical assembly.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 257–72; Eng. tr., pp. 195–207.

'High Places', the (Heb. הַבָּמוֹת). In the OT the local (usually hill-top) sanctuaries other than *Jerusalem at which Yahweh was worshipped with sacrifice in early times. Among the most renowned were *Bethel and Gibeon. Worship at these sites, which had Canaanite affinities and was often accompanied by sexual rites, was denounced by many of the Prophets (*Amos, *Hosea, etc.). The 'high places' were finally destroyed under Josiah in 621 BC (2 Kings 23: 5–20).

P. H. Vaughan, The Meaning of 'bāmâ' in the Old Testament: A Study of Etymological, Textual and Archaeological Evidence (Society for Old Testament Study Monograph Series, 3; Cambridge, 1974), with bibl. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 107–13; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 284–8. W. B. Barrick in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 196–200, s.v., with bibl.

High Prayers. A title for service in certain college chapels in Oxford on great festivals.

High Priest. In the OT the head of the *Levitical priesthood whose institution and vestments are described in Exod. 28. Acc. to this account (usually assigned to *P), *Aaron, the brother of *Moses, was appointed the first high priest by Yahweh. The chief function of the high priest was the superintendence of the Temple worship, and his special prerogatives the offering of the Liturgy on the Day of *Atonement, when he alone was allowed to enter the Holy of Holies, and the consulting of '*Urim and Thummim'. His exalted office required an unusually high degree of ritual purity, which forbade him to 'defile himself' with the dead even in the case of his nearest relations. His vestments, more precious than those of the other priests, included a violet robe adorned with bells and tassels, a special mitre with a golden plate in front bearing the inscription 'Holy to the Lord', and a breastplate with the names of the twelve tribes of *Israel.

In post-exilic times, the high priest was the head of the Jewish state as well as the principal religious functionary. At first the office may have been for life and hereditary; but under *Antiochus Epiphanes and his successors the appointment and deposition of high priests passed more and more into the authority of the secular powers. In the time of the *Herods and the Roman occupation the high priests were usually taken from the most influential families; they seem to have adopted a worldly attitude, believing neither in an immortal soul nor in a future life, and, acc. to the *Talmud, they lived in luxury and self-indulgence.

Christian theology holds that the Saviour, by His death on the Cross, abolished for the redeemed the high-priestly office and sacrifices, perfecting them in His own Person. This teaching is developed in the NT in the Ep. to the Hebrews, which sets forth the Christ as the perfect high priest, unique and immortal, of whom the long series of imperfect high priests under the old dispensation had been but types and shadows.

W. W. Graf Baudissin, Die Geschichte des alttestamentlichen Priesterthums (1889), esp. pp. 26–8, 88 f., 127–30, 140–2, 251–3. F. Stummer, 'Gedanken über die Stellung des Hohenpriesters in der alttestamentlichen Gemeinde', in Episcopus: Studien über das Bischofsamt seiner Eminenz Michael Kardinal von Faulhaber . . . zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht (Regensburg, 1949), pp. 19–48. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 266–74, with bibl., p. 450; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 397-

403, with bibl., p. 546. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, Eng. tr. rev. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (1979), pp. 227–36, with bibl. On the high priest's vesture, see J. Gabriel, Untersuchungen über das alttestamentliche Hohepriestertum, mit besonderer Berücksichtigung des hohepriesterlichen Ornates (Theologische Studien der Österreichischen Leo-Gesellschaft, 33; 1933). W. [W.] Baudissin in HDB 4 (1902), pp. 67–97, s.v. 'Priests and Levites', esp. pp. 83 f.; G. Schrenk in TWNT 3 (1938), pp. 265–84 (Eng. tr., 1966, pp. 265–83), s.v. ἱερεύς [ἀρχιερεύς]; A. Cody, OSB, in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 2–5, s.v. 'Aaron, 2: Aaronitisches Priestertum'. For the conception of Christ as the high priest, see bibl. to HEBREWS, EP. TO THE.

Higher Criticism. The critical study of the literary methods and sources used by the authors of (esp.) the Books of the OT and NT, in distinction from *Textual ('Lower') Criticism, which is concerned solely with the recovery of the text of the Books as it left their authors' hands. The phrase, which is little used now, came into currency from its use by W. R. *Smith in The Old Testament in the Jewish Church (1881; p. 105).

Hijra (in older works often spelt Hegira). The emigration of Muhammad from Mecca to Medina, the traditional date for which is 16 July 622. From this event begins the Muslim era, though, as its (lunar) years (commonly AH) consist of only 354 or 355 days, it is not possible to relate it to the Christian era by simple addition or subtraction.

Tables for the conversion of Islamic and Christian dates incl. H. F. Wüstenfeld and E. Mahler, Vergleichungs-Tabellen zur muslimischen und iranischen Zeitrechnung (3rd edn. rev. by J. Mayr and B. Spuler, Wiesbaden, 1961), and G. S. P. Freeman-Grenville, The Muslim and Christian Calendars (1963). There is also a convenient handbook by [T.] W. Haig, Comparative Tables of Muhammadan and Christian Dates [1932].

Hilarion, St (*c.*291–371). The founder of the *anchoritic life in Palestine. A native of Palestine and the son of pagan parents, he was converted to Christianity at *Alexandria, and under the influence of St *Antony retired for a short time to the Egyptian desert as a hermit. In 306 he returned to his own land, where he settled in the wilderness S. of Maiuma, near Gaza, to live a life of extreme asceticism. As his fame and miraculous gifts became increasingly known, enormous crowds visited him, to escape from whom he returned *c.*353 to Egypt. Later he went to Libya, Sicily, and Cyprus, where he died. He was well known to St *Epiphanius, to whom St *Jerome, the chief authority for his life, was doubtless mainly indebted for his knowledge of him. Feast day, 21 Oct.

Jerome's Vita (c. AD 386–91) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 23. 29–54; cf. *Sozomen, HE 3. 14, 5. 10, and 6. 32. The letter of Epiphanius, mentioned by Jerome as his source, is lost. G. Grützmacher, Hieronymus, 2 (1906), pp. 87–91. E. Coleiro, 'St Jerome's Lives of the Hermits', VC 11 (1957), pp. 161–78. J. N. D. Kelly, Jerome (1975), pp. 172–4. J. P. Kirsch in CE 7 (1910), pp. 347 f.

Hilary of Arles, St (*c.*401–49), Bp. of Arles. He became a monk at *Lérins, under the influence of his kinsman, St *Honoratus, and in *c.*430 succeeded him as bishop of the *metropolitan see of Arles. In this capacity he presided over several councils, among them the First Council of *Orange (441) and that of *Vaison (442). In 444, by deposing a bishop, Chelidonius, Hilary appears to have exceeded his rights as metropolitan, and on the dethroned bishop's appeal to *Leo I, the Pope deprived Arles of its metropolitan jurisdiction and obtained from the Emp. Valentinian a decree granting Rome supreme authority over the Church in Gaul. Hilary wrote a Life of Honoratus which is still extant. A Carmen de providentia divina, ascribed to *Prosper of Aquitaine, has recently been attributed to Hilary, but the attribution is very doubtful. Feast day, 5 May.

Frags. of Hilary's works collected in edns. of Leo's Opera by P. *Quesnel (1675) and P. and H. *Ballerini (1753–7; qq.v.). Repr. from the latter in J. P. Migne, PL 50. 1213–92, with additions. Crit. text of Hilary's Life of Honoratus and a Life of Hilary, written *c.*475, ed. S. Cavallin (Skrifter utgivna av Vetenskaps-Societen i Lund, 40; 1952). Life of Honoratus also ed., with Fr. tr., by M.-D. Valentin, OP (SC 235; 1977); Eng. tr. in F. R. Hoare (ed.), The Western Fathers (1954), pp. 248–80. [W.] O. Chadwick, 'Euladius of Arles', JTS 46 (1945), pp. 200–5. É. Griffe, La Gaule chrétienne à l'époche romaine, 2 (1957), pp. 120–7 and 196–201; 2nd edn. (1966), pp. 154–62 and 244–50. G. Gallo, 'Uno scritto filo-pelagiano attribuibile a Ilario di Arles', Aevum, 51 (1977), pp. 333–48. S. Pricoco, L'Isola dei Santi: Il cenobio di Lerino e le origini del monachesimo gallico (Filologia e Critica, 23; 1978), passim. M. Jourjon in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 463 f., s.v. 'Hilaire (1) d'Arles'; S. Pricoco in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1747 f., s.v. 'Ilario di Arles', with bibl.; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 381, s.v.

Hilary of Poitiers, St (*c.*315–67/8), the 'Athanasius of the West'. An educated convert from paganism, he was elected Bp. of Poitiers c. 350 and subsequently became involved in the *Arian disputes. His condemnation at the Synod of Biterrae (356) is usually attributed to his defence of Catholic teaching, but some scholars have suggested that other factors may initially have been involved. It was followed by a four-year exile to Phrygia by the Emp. Constantius, whom Hilary later denounced as *Antichrist. In 359 he defended the cause of orthodoxy at the Council of *Seleucia, and he became the leading and most respected Latin theologian of his age. His chief works were a treatise 'De Trinitate' (against the Arians), in twelve books; 'De Synodis', very valuable for the doctrinal history of the period; and the so-called 'Opus Historicum'. His other writings include commentaries on Matthew and the Psalms, the latter of which clearly shows the influence of *Origen. His style is difficult and occasionally obscure. In matters of detail his doctrinal position deviated at points from later orthodoxy, e.g. he held an almost *Monophysite Christology. He is the earliest known writer of *hymns (q.v.) in the W. Church. In 1851 *Pius XI proclaimed him a '*Doctor of the Church'. His feast day (in the BCP, 13 Jan.; in the RC Calendar, 14 Jan.; from 1969, 13 Jan.) gives its name to the spring term at the Law Courts, and at Oxford and Durham universities.

Editio princeps, by *Erasmus (Basle, 1523). Greatly improved text by P. *Coustant, OSB (Paris, 1693), one of the best of the *Maurist edns.; further improved by F. S. *Maffei (2 vols., Verona, 1730). This last is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 9 and 10; further texts in Suppl. to PL by A. Hamman, OFM, 1 (1958), cols. 241–86 (incl. 'Tractatus Mysteriorum'; see below). Crit. edns. of his Works in CSEL (vols. 22 and 65 by A. Zingerle and A. Feder, SJ, 1891 and 1916: all pub. to 1995) and in CCSL (62 etc.; 1979 ff. [incl. De Trinitate, ed. P. Smulders, 62 and 62A; 1979–80]). New edns., with Fr. tr., of his comm. on Mt. by J. Doignon (SC 254 and 258; 1978–9), of his comm. on Ps. 118 by M. Milhau (ibid. 344 and 347; 1988) and of In Constantium by

A. Rocher (ibid. 334; 1987). His Tractatus Mysteriorum (or 'De Mysteriis'), which treats of NT types in the OT, first pub. from frags. in the Arezzo MS, which contains the 'Peregrinatio *Egeriae', by J. F. Gamurrini (Rome, 1887); new edn., with Fr. tr., by J.-P. Brisson (SC 19; 1947). Three certainly genuine hymns are also preserved in the Arezzo MS; modern edn., with Eng. tr. and notes, by W. N. Myers (Philadelphia, 1928). Eng. tr. of his Works with valuable introds., ed. W. *Sanday, in NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 9, 1899; also of his 'De Trinitate' by S. McKenna, CSSR (Fathers of the Church, 1954).

P. Smulders, SJ, La Doctrine trinitaire de S. Hilaire de Poitiers (Analecta Gregoriana, 32; Rome, 1944). C. F. A. Borchardt, Hilary of Poitiers' Role in the Arian Struggle (Kerkhistorische Studien, 12; The Hague, 1966). J. *Daniélou, SJ, H. I. Marrou, and others, Hilaire de Poitiers, évêque et docteur: Cinq conférences données à Poitiers à l'occasion du XVI[e] centenaire de sa mort (Études Augustiniennes, 1968); E. R. Labande (ed.), Hilaire et son temps: Actes du colloque de Poitiers ... à l'occasion du XVI[e] centenaire de la mort de saint Hilaire (ibid., 1969). J. Doignon, Hilaire de Poiters avant l'exil (ibid., 1971). L. F. Ladaria, El Espiritu Santo en San Hilario de Poitiers (Publicaciones de la Universidad Pontificia Comillas, Madrid, Estudios, 8; 1977); id., La Cristologia de Hilario de Poitiers (Analecta Gregoriana, 255; 1989). M. Figura, Das Kirchenverständnis des Hilarius von Poitiers (Freiburger theologische Studien, 127; 1984). H. C. Brennecke, Hilarius von Poitiers und die Bischofsopposition gegen Konstantius II (Patristische Texte und Studien, 26; 1984). Modern Lives by P. Galtier, SJ (Paris, 1960), and others. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 33–61. X. Le Bachelet in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 2388–462; C. Kannengiesser, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 466–99, s.v. 'Hilaire (4) de Poitiers'; J. Doignon in RAC 15 (1991), cols. 139–67.

Hilda, St (614–80), Abbess of Whitby. Descended from the Northumbrian royal line, she was baptized at Easter 627 by *Paulinus, Bp. of *York. When her sister, Hereswith, had been professed as a nun at Chelles, near Paris, Hilda sought to join her; but having reached East Anglia she was recalled by St *Aidan, who in 649 made her abbess of a religious house at Hartlepool. In 657 she founded a monastery for both men and women at 'Streanaeshalch', later named Whitby by the Danes, which rapidly grew in fame and influence. At the celebrated Synod of *Whitby (664), Hilda sided with St *Colman in his defence of the Celtic customs against St *Wilfrid, though after the decision had gone in favour of the Romanizing party, she loyally accepted it. Feast day, 17 Nov.; 18 Nov. in the American BCP (1979).

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 24 f. and 4. 23; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 163–5 and 232. P. Hunter Blair, 'Whitby as a Centre of Learning in the Seventh Century', in M. Lapidge and H. Gneuss (eds.), Learning and Literature in Anglo-Saxon England: Studies Presented to Peter Clemoes (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 3–32, esp. pp. 3–14. E. Venables in DCB 26 (1891), pp. 381 f.

Hildebert of Lavardin (1056–1133), Abp. of Tours, poet and canonist. He was born at Lavardin near Montoire and came to be Master of the cathedral school of Le Mans, and Archdeacon in 1091. In 1096 he was elected Bp. of Le Mans. He had a powerful opponent in William Rufus, who, alleging that Hildebert had attacked the royal castle from the towers of his cathedral, forced him to follow him to England in 1099. On regaining his freedom (1100) he went to Rome, where *Paschal II confirmed him in his office. After his return to Le Mans he continued the building of his cathedral and made a reputation as a powerful preacher. He was an ardent defender of the freedom of the Church and of sound doctrine; he expelled *Henry of Lausanne (q.v.) from his diocese, consecrated his cathedral on its completion in 1120, and probably took part in the First *Lateran Council of 1123. In 1125 he became Abp. of Tours. He was involved in a dispute with King Louis VI and presided over the important provincial Synod of Nantes (1127).

Hildebert is famous chiefly for his literary works. He had studied the best classical authors, and his Latin, superior to that of most of his contemporaries, was looked to as the model of elegant style in the Middle Ages. The original printed collection of his works contains much spurious material. Certainly genuine are most of the Letters, the 'Vitae' of St *Radegunde and St *Hugh of Cluny, the 'Liber de Querimonia', the longer poems, 'De Sacrificio Missae' and 'Vita Mariae Aegyptiacae', and over 50 other shorter poems on sacred and secular subjects.

Collected edn. of his Works by A. Beaugendre, OSB (Paris, 1708); repr. with certain alterations by J. J. Bourassé in J. P. Migne PL 171. 45–1458. Crit. edns. of Carmina Minora by A. B. Scott (Teub., 1969), and of 'The Biblical Epigrams' by id. and others in Mediaeval Studies, 47 (1985), pp. 272–316. A. Dieudonné, Hildebert de Lavardin, évêque du Mans, archevêque de Tours (1056–1133), sa vie, ses lettres (Paris, 1898; repr. from Revue historique et archéologique du Maine). F. X. Barth, Hildebert von Lavardin (1056–1133) und das kirchliche Stellenbesetzungsrecht (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, ed. U. Stutz, 34–6; 1906); P. von Moos, Hildebert von Lavardin 1056–1133 (Pariser historische Studien, 3; 1965). W. von den Steinen, 'Les Sujets d'inspiration chez les poètes latins du XII[e] siècle, I: Hildebert et l'humanisme', Cahiers de Civilisation médiévale, 9 (1966), pp. 165–75. A. B. Scott, 'The poems of Hildebert of Le Mans: a new examination of the canon', Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, 6 (1968), pp. 42–83; G. Orlandi, 'Doppia redazione nei "Carmina minora" di Ildeberto?', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 15 (1974), pp. 1019–49. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Les Sermons d'Hildebert', R. Bén. 47 (1935), pp. 12–51. Raby, pp. 265–73. Manitius, 3, pp. 853–65. P. von Moos in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 502–4, s.v., with additional bibl. in DHGE 24 (1993), cols. 483 f.; id. in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 5 (1991), cols. 11 f.

Hildebrand. See GREGORY VII.

Hildefonsus, St, of Toledo. See ILDEFONSUS, ST.

Hildegard of Bingen, St (1098–1179), Abbess of Rupertsberg, near Bingen. Born of a noble family in Bermersheim, near Alzey, she was apparently subject to supernatural religious experiences from early childhood. At the age of 8 she was entrusted to the care of Bl Jutta, a recluse attached to the *Benedictine monastery of Disibodenberg (near the convergence of the Rivers Glan and Nahe), and on Jutta's death in 1136 she succeeded her as Abbess of the community which had gathered round her. Under the direction of her confessor, in 1141 she began to record some of her visions. Having won the approval of the Abp. of Mainz, between 1141 and 1151 she dictated her Scivias (prob. intended as an abbreviation of 'scito vias [viventis luminis]'). Meanwhile *Eugenius III, under the influence of St *Bernard of Clairvaux, gave his guarded approbation of sections of that work and permission to continue writing (1147/8). Sometime between 1147 and 1152 she moved her community to Rupertsberg, near Bingen, where a large convent was built. Thence she undertook many journeys in the Rhineland and, prob. in 1165, founded a daughter house at Eibingen, near Rüdesheim. Towards the end of her life she had difficulty with the Chapter of Mainz, and for a short time the convent was placed under an interdict.

Hildegard seems to have exerted a wide influence, numbering the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa and various kings, prelates, and saints among her correspondents. The basis of her writings was an awareness of her divinely appointed office as prophetess, in the conception of which she was indebted to *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and John Scottus *Erigena. Her Scivias, divided into three books containing 26 visions, combines insights into the nature of man and the world with her vision of salvation-history leading to the Last Judgement, a theme which is also taken up in her letters. It was followed by the Liber vitae meritorum in six books (1158–63), which is devoted to the disputation of the virtues and vices before the Divine Man and her visions of the joys and torments with which they are rewarded in the afterlife. Her third major work, the Liber divinorum operum in three books (1163–1173/4), contains visions of the cosmos, the earth, and created things. This work, like the Scivias, was provided with remarkable illustrations. An important element in the Scivias is a body of dramatic songs, also used in her musical play, the Ordo virtutum. Her remaining works include musical compositions (77 carmina), letters, theological treatises, and two important medical texts, the Physica and the Causae et curae, which reflect a degree of scientific observation unusual at the time. In later times various anticlerical prophecies came to be associated with her name. Miracles, already reported during her life, multiplied at her tomb after her death. Various efforts to secure her canonization during the 13th and 14th cents. were unsuccessful; but from the 15th cent. she is called a saint in the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day, 17 Sept. (observed in several German dioceses).

A number of her works are collected in J. P. Migne, PL 197 (incl. the Scivias, Liber divinorum operum, the Physica, and letters, but the text is very corrupt); further works (notably the Liber vitae meritorum, Expositiones evangeliorum and additional letters) ed. J. B. *Pitra, Analecta sacra, 8 (Paris, 1882; repr. Farnborough, 1966). Scivias, ed. J. *Faber Stapulensis, Liber trium virorum et trium spiritualium virginum (Paris, 1513), fols. 28–118v; crit. edn. by A. Führkötter, OSB, and A. Carlevaris (CCCM 43–43A; 1978); Carmina, ed., with Ger. tr., P. Barth and others (Salzburg [1969]); Sequences and Hymns, selected and ed., with Eng. tr., C. Page (Newton Abbot [1982]); Symphonia armonie celestium revelationum, ed., with Eng. tr. and comm. (but without the music), by B. Newman (1988); Ordo virtutum, ed. [E.] P. [M.] Dronke, Poetic Individuality in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1970), pp. 180–92, 202–31; Causae et curae (Liber compositae medicinae), ed. P. Kaiser (Teub., 1903); Epistolarium, ed. L. Van Acker (CCCM 91, 91A, etc.; 1991 ff.). Further edns. are in preparation for CCCM. Eng. trs. of Scivias by C. Hart and J. Bishop (Classics of Western Spirituality [1990]); of Liber divinorum operum with letters and songs by M. Fox (Santa Fe, NM [1987]); of Ordo virtutum by [E.] P. [M.] Dronke, Nine Medieval Latin Plays (Cambridge, 1994), pp. 147–84 (incl. introd., notes, and Latin text); of Liber vitae meritorum (Garland Library of Medieval Literature, 89B; New York, etc., 1994); and of letters by J. L. Baird and R. K. Ehrman (New York and Oxford, 1994 ff.). Ger. trs. of Liber vitae meritorum by H. Schipperges (Salzburg [1972]); of Causae et curae by id. (ibid. [1957]; and of the letters by A. Führkötter, OSB (ibid. [1965]).

The contemporary Life by Godefridus, cont. by Theodericus, pr. in AASS, Sept. 5 (1755), pp. 629–701 (repr. J. P. Migne, PL 197. 91–140); Ger. tr. by A. Führkötter, OSB (Düsseldorf, 1968). Acta inquisitionis de virtutibus et miraculis S. Hildegardis, ed. P. Bruder, Anal. Boll. 2 (1883), pp. 116–29. H. Liebeschütz, Das allegorische Weltbild der heiligen Hildegard von Bingen (Leipzig and Berlin, 1930; repr. Darmstadt 1964). C. Singer, 'The Scientific Views and Visions of Saint Hildegard', in id. (ed.), Studies in the History and Method of Science, 1 (Oxford, 1917), pp. 1–55. M. Schrader, OSB, and A. Führkötter, OSB, Die Echtheit des Schrifttums der heiligen Hildegard von Bingen (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 6; Cologne, 1956). A. P. Brück (ed.), Hildegard von Bingen 1179 1979: Festschrift zum 800. Todestag der Heiligen (Quellen und Abhandlungen zur mittelrheinischen Kirchengeschichte, 33; Mainz, 1979). [E.] P. [M.] Dronke, Women Writers of the Middle Ages (Cambridge, 1984), pp. 144–201. A. Führkötter, OSB (ed.), Kosmos und Mensch aus der Sicht Hildegards von Bingen (Quellen und Abhandlungen zur mittelrheinischen Kirchengeschichte, 60; 1987). B. Newman, Sister of Wisdom: St Hildegard's theology of the feminine (1987). C. Meier, 'Hildegard von Bingen', in H. A. Glasser and others, Deutsche Literatur: Eine Sozialgeschichte, 1 (Rororo Handbuch, 6250; 1988), pp. 94–103; S. Flanagan, Hildegard of Bingen, 1098 1179: A Visionary Life (1989). G. J. Lewis, Bibliographie zur deutschen Frauenmystik des Mittelalters (Bibliographien zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 10; 1989), pp. 66–145. M. Schrader, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 505–21; C. Meier in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 3 (1981), cols. 1257–80; U. Kern in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 322–6, all s.v.

Hilgenfeld, Adolf (1823–1907), German Protestant theologian. He taught in the University of Jena from 1847 till his death, and was editor of the Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie which he founded in 1858. He adopted the principles of F. C. *Baur and the *Tübingen School, but gave them a somewhat less radical cast, e.g. he defended the genuineness of 1 Thess., Phil., Philem. He wrote extensively on later Judaism, biblical criticism, and patristics, and was the author of an important edition of the extra-canonical NT books, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem receptum (4 vols., 1866), as well as a notable work on Jewish *apocalyptic literature, Die jüdische Apokalyptik in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwickelung (1857).

List of his works, with brief Life by H. Hilgenfeld, son (Leipzig, 1906); additional material in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, 50 (1908), pp. 14–24. Obituary notice by F. Nippold, ibid., pp. 154–75. [The Zeitschrift finally came to an end in 1914.]

Hillel, School of. The followers of Hillel, an influential Jewish teacher of the time of Christ. The rabbinic literature records many differences of opinion between this more liberal School and the rival School of *Shammai; indeed it would appear that these differences formed the basis for influential discussions of Jewish practice after the destruction of the *Temple in AD 70. The image of Hillel, seen as the ancestor of the patriarchal dynasty, is clearly romanticized; how much truth there may be in the legends about him it is impossible to say.

A. Schwarz, Die Controversen der Schammaiten und Hilleliten, 1 (1893). I. Sonne, 'The Schools of Shammai and Hillel seen from Within', in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume, on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday: English Section (New York, 1945), pp. 275–91, with refs.; A. Guttmann, 'Hillelites and Shammaites—a clarification', Hebrew Union College Annual, 28 (1957), pp. 115–26. E. E. Urbach, The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs, 1 (Jerusalem, 1975; Eng. tr. from Heb. pub. 1969), pp. 576–93. J. Neusner, The Rabbinic Traditions about Pharisees before 70 (3 vols., Leiden, 1971), esp. 1, pp. 212–340, and 3, pp. 255–72. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 363–7. H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (5th edn., 1930), pp. 118–22 (Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1931), pp. 108–10, with notes, pp. 301–6. P. Rieger, Hillel und Jesus: Ein Wort zur Versöhnung (1904). J. Klausner, Jesus of Nazareth: His Life, Times and Teaching (Eng. tr. from Heb. by H. Danby, 1925), esp. pp. 223–7.

Hilton, Walter (c. 1343–96), English contemplative writer. Of his life little is known. There is much circumstantial evidence that he studied canon law at *Cambridge, and he was one of a circle of clerks associated with T. *Arundel both when he was Bp. of *Ely and particularly in his campaign for spiritual and pastoral orthodoxy after he became Abp. of *York. After a period as a hermit, Hilton became an *Augustinian canon at Thurgarton Priory, Notts, *c.*1386.

His principal work is the Scale of Perfection or Scala Perfectionis, written in English. This describes the renewal of the defaced image of God in the soul. Book 1 contains practical ascetic and moral teaching; Book 2 develops the contrast between 'reforming in faith' and the experiential awareness of the life of grace, 'reforming in feeling' (an expression derived from Rom. 12: 2; reformamini in novitate sensus vestri). Between them is the 'luminous darkness' of mortification, the transition from disordered self-love to love of God. Associated with the Scale of Perfection is the practical booklet Mixed Life addressed to a devout man living in the world. Hilton also wrote in English Angels' Song, which is critical of some aspects of Richard *Rolle, and translated Eight Chapters on Perfection written by a Spanish *Franciscan studying at Cambridge. The Pricking of Love, an English version of the popular Stimulus Amoris, at one time wrongly ascribed to St *Bonaventure, may well be his, though this is not certain; so may the English exposition of the Psalm Qui Habitat. Various other works have at times been attributed to him. Four Latin letters of Hilton survive, together with his academic quaestio on the veneration of images.

Hilton stands in the tradition of St *Augustine, St *Gregory the Great, and St *Bernard, with influence also from St *Anselm and the *Victorines. There is evidence of mutual criticism between him and the author of the Cloud of Unknowing. His teaching on the 'luminous darkness', together with that of the Cloud, has been compared with that of St *John of the Cross on the 'dark night'.

Editio princeps of the Scale of Perfection and the Mixed Life, London, 1494. Crit. edns. of the Scale of Perfection in preparation for the EETS; of Mixed Life by S. J. Ogilvie-Thomson (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Literature, 92: 15; 1986). Earlier edn. of the Mixed Life in C. Horstmann, Yorkshire Writers: Richard Rolle of Hampole . . . and his Followers, 1 (1895), pp. 264–92. Angels' Song, ibid., pp. 175–82; also ed. by T. Takamiya in Studies in English Literature (Tokyo), English Number 1977, pp. 3–31. Eight Chapters on Perfection, ed. F. Kuriyagawa (Keio Institute of Cultural and Linguistic Studies, Tokyo, 1967) and, from different MSS, by id. in Studies in English Literature (Tokyo), English Number 1971, pp. 7–34, and by T. Takamiya in Poetica, 12 (Tokyo, 1981), pp. 142–9. Crit. edns. of Qui Habitat (with the Psalm-commentary Bonum Est, which is unlikely to be Hilton's) by B. Wallner (Lund Studies in English, 23; 1954), and of The Pricking of Love by H. Kane (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 92: 10; 2 vols., 1983). Latin Writings ed. J. P. H. Clark and C. Taylor (Analecta Cartusiana, 124; 2 vols., Salzburg, 1987).

Modernized version of the Scale of Perfection, based on MSS preferred by the EETS eds., by J. P. H. Clark and R. Dorward (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, etc., 1991). Earlier modernized versions by E. *Underhill (London, 1923), G. Sitwell, OSB (ibid., 1953), and L. Sherley-Price ('Penguin Classics', 1957). Modernized versions of The Minor Works of Walter Hilton by D. Jones (London, 1929; incl. dubia); of Eight Chapters and Angels' Song by R. Dorward (Fairacres Publications, 85; Oxford [1983]); of the Goad of Love (the Eng. tr. of Stimulus Amor) by C. Kirchberger (London, 1929).

H. L. Gardner, 'Walter Hilton and the Mystical Tradition in England', Essays and Studies, 22 (1937), pp. 103–27; J. M. Russell-Smith, 'Walter Hilton and a Tract in defence of the Veneration of Images', Dominican Studies, 7 (1954), pp. 180–214; id., 'Walter Hilton', The Month, NS 22 (1959), pp. 133–48; repr. in J. Walsh, SJ (ed.), Pre-Reformation English Spirituality [1966], pp. 182–97; [M.] D. *Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 100–18; S. S. Hussey, 'The Text of the Scale of Perfection, Book II', Neuphilologische Mitteilungen, 65 (1964), pp. 75–92, and other works of this author; J. E. Milosh, The Scale of Perfection and the English Mystical Tradition (Madison, Wis., Milwaukee, and London, 1966); D. G. Kennedy, Incarnational Element in Hilton's Spirituality (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 92: 3; 1982); also a series of arts. by J. P. H. Clark in Downside Review, 95 (1977), pp. 95–109; 96 (1978), pp. 61–78, 281–98; 97 (1979), pp. 69–80, 204–20, 258–74; 100 (1982), pp. 235–62; 101 (1983), pp. 15–29; 102 (1984), pp. 79–118; and 103 (1985), pp. 1–25; also id., 'Augustine, Anselm and Walter Hilton', in The Medieval Mystical Tradition in England: Papers read at Dartington Hall, July 1982, ed. M. Glasscoe (Exeter, 1982), pp. 102–26, and 'The Trinitarian Theology of Walter Hilton's Scale of Perfection, Book Two', in Langland, the Mystics and the Medieval English Religious Tradition: Essays in Honour of S. S. Hussey, ed. H. Phillips (Woodbridge, 1990), pp. 125–40. The introd. to the modernized version of the Scale of Perfection by Clark and Dorward, cited above, with useful bibl. pp. 329–35. BRUC, pp. 305–6. M. D. Knowles and J. Russell-Smith in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 525–30, s.v.

Hincmar (c. 806–82), Abp. of *Reims. He was educated at the abbey of *St-Denis, and in 822 accompanied his teacher, Abbot Hilduin, to the court of *Louis the Pious. In 834 he officially entered the King's service, and after Louis's death attached himself to Charles the Bald, whose loyal supporter he became. Through Charles's influence he was elected Abp. of Reims in 845 and at once began to reorganize his diocese. The Emp. Lothair I initially sought his deposition under the pretext of Hincmar's having unjustly nullified the ordinations of his predecessor. A synod at Soissons in 853, however, came out in his favour, and its decision was confirmed by Benedict III in 855. Hincmar strongly opposed Lothair, King of Lorraine (the second son of Lothair I), when he wished to divorce his wife, Teutberga. In 862 he deposed Rothad, Bp. of Soissons, who had attacked his privileges as metropolitan, but his action was not upheld by *Nicholas I. He succeeded, however, in procuring the condemnation of his own nephew, Hincmar, Bp. of Laon, who had refused to recognize his authority. After King Lothair's death (869) he advanced Charles the Bald's claims to Lorraine and crowned him at Metz, despite the objection of the Pope. In 876 he again opposed the Pope, whose appointment of a *Vicar Apostolic for Germany and Gaul he regarded as an interference with his metropolitan rights. He died at Épernay when fleeing from the Normans.

Though not a speculative theologian, Hincmar took a prominent part in the controversy with the monk

*Gottschalk on predestination. He wrote against him 'Ad Reclusos et Simplices', which elicited a sharp reply from *Ratramnus of *Corbie. Hincmar, after vainly seeking defenders among his friends, finally asked John Scottus *Erigena for help. The latter's work, 'De Divina Praedestinatione', roused a storm of indignation both against its author and against Hincmar. The controversy was continued at the Synods of *Quiercy (853), which gave a decision favourable to the archbishop, and *Valence (855), which was against him. Hincmar wrote in his defence 'De Praedestinatione Dei et Libero Arbitrio', a rather disorderly compilation of scriptural and patristic texts, in which he argued that, if God predestines the wicked to hell, He must be accounted the author of sin. A reconciliation of both parties, largely through weariness with the conflict, was reached at the Synod of Douzy in 860. Another dispute with Gottschalk and Ratramnus arose from Hincmar's changing the words 'Trina Deitas' from the *Vespers Hymn of the Common of Many Martyrs into 'Summa Deitas', because he suspected the former version of *Tritheism. He defended his view in the treatise 'De Una et Non Trina Deitate' (*c.*860), chiefly by quotations from authorities.

In his practical works, esp. 'De Divortio Lotharii et Teutbergae' (860), he displayed a vast knowledge of canon law, while in 'Opusculum LV Capitulorum', directed against Hincmar of Laon, he ably defended the rights of the metropolitan over his bishops. He was among the first writers to know of the *False Decretals, which were a product of the early years of his archiepiscopate. As a loyal and trusted supporter of successive Carolingian rulers he produced several works on kingship and the duties of the monarch, one of which (the 'De Ordine Palatii') contains important information on court administration. He was also the author of a Life of St *Remigius and of a number of poems, and the continuator of a chronicle (the so-called 'Annales Bertiniani') which is one of the chief sources for the political history of his time.

Opera, ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ (2 vols., Paris, 1645), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 125 and 126. Crit. edns. of his Poems by L. Traube (MGH, Poetae, 3, 1896, pp. 406–20); Letters [ed. E. Perels] (ibid., Epistolae, 8, pars prior [up to Mar. 868] only, 1939); De Ordine Palatii, ed. T. Gross and R. Schieffer (ibid., Fontes Iuris Germanici Antiqui in usum scholarum, 3; 2nd edn., 1980); Eng. tr. by D. Herlihy, The History of Feudalism (1970), pp. 208–27; Collectio de Ecclesiis et Capellis, ed. M. Stratmann (MGH, Fontes Iuris Germanici Antiqui in usum scholarum, 14; 1990). Annales de Saint-Bertin, ed. F. Grat and others (Société de l'Histoire de France, 1964), pp. 84–251. Life by H. Schrörs (Freiburg i.B., 1884). Full study by J. Devisse, Hincmar, Archevêque de Reims (3 vols., Geneva, 1975–6), with extensive bibl. Id., Hincmar et la Loi (Université de Dakar, Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines, Publications de la Section d'Histoire, 5; '1962' [1963]); M. Stratmann, Hinkmar von Reims als Verwalter von Bistum und Kirchenprovinz (Quellen und Forschungen zum Recht im Mittelalter, 6; Sigmaringen, 1991). H. H. Anton, Fürstenspiegel und Herrscherethos in der Karolingerzeit (Bonner Historische Forschungen, 32; 1968), pp. 281–355. J. L. Nelson, 'Kingship, Law and Liturgy in the Political Thought of Hincmar of Reims', EHR 92 (1977), pp. 241–79; J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, 'History in the Mind of Archbishop Hincmar', in The Writing of History in the Middle Ages: Essays Presented to Richard William Southern, ed. R. H. C. Davis and J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1981), pp. 43–70; id., The Frankish Church (Oxford, 1983), pp. 292–303. E. S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1962]), pp. 202–83. H. G. J. Beck in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 1122 f., s.v.; R. Schieffer in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 355–60, s.v. 'Hinkmar von Reims', with full bibl.

Hinnom, Valley of. See GEHENNA.

Hinsley, Arthur (1865–1943), Abp. of *Westminster and cardinal. He was educated at Ushaw and the *English College at Rome. After being headmaster of St Bede's grammar school at Bradford from 1899 to 1904, he was pastor of several parishes and from 1917 to 1928 rector of the English College. In 1930 he was made Titular Abp. of Sardis and *Apostolic Delegate in Africa, and in 1935 Abp. of Westminster. He was created cardinal in 1937. He became known to wide circles through his foundation, in 1940, of the '*Sword of the Spirit', and through the vigorous spiritual and national leadership he gave to English RCs during the first years of the Second World War.

J. C. Heenan, Cardinal Hinsley (1944). T. Moloney, Westminster, Whitehall and the Vatican: The Role of Cardinal Hinsley, 1935–43 (1985). D. Newton in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 394 f.

Hippo, Council of. A council of the Catholic (i.e. non-*Donatist) Church in Latin Africa held on 8 Oct. 393. A breviarium of its canons was read at the Council of *Carthage (397) and their substance, then re-enacted, passed, via the *Hispana Collection and the *Quinisext Synod, into general canon law.

C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Africae A. 345–A. 525 (CCLS 149; 1974), pp. 20–53, incl. text of the breviarium and five canons. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 82–91.

Hippolytus, St (*c.*170–*c.*236), ecclesiastical writer and Doctor. Though the most important 3rd-cent. theologian of the Roman Church, the facts of his life as well as his writings were soon forgotten in the W., perhaps by reason of his schismatic activities and of the fact that he wrote in Greek. Of his early life nothing is known. The assertion of *Photius that he was a disciple of St *Irenaeus is doubtful. During the first decades of the 3rd cent. he must have been an important personality among the Roman presbyters; when *Origen came to Rome (*c.*212) he attended one of his sermons. Soon afterwards Hippolytus took an active part in attacking the doctrines of *Sabellius. He refused to accept the teaching of Pope *Zephyrinus (198–217), and under his successor, *Callistus (217–22), whom he rejected as a heretic, he seems to have allowed himself to be elected as a rival Bp. of Rome. He continued to attack Callistus' successors, Urban (222–30) and Pontianus (230–5). In the *persecution of the Emp. Maximin (235–8), however, he and Pontianus were exiled together to Sardinia, and it is very probable that before his death he was reconciled to the other party at Rome; for under Pope *Fabian (236–50) his body with that of Pontianus was brought to Rome (236). The *Liberian Catalogue (q.v., in the part dated *c.*255) already considers him a Catholic martyr and gives him the rank of a priest, not of a bishop. When these facts had been forgotten in Rome, many legends grew up round his person. Pope *Damasus (366–84) makes him a priest of the *Novatianist Schism, a view later accepted by *Prudentius in his 'Passion of St Hippolytus'. In the Roman Passionals of the 7th and 8th cents. he is represented as a soldier converted by St *Laurence, a legend which long survived in the Roman *Breviary. He also has been confused with a martyr of the same name who was buried at Portus, of which city he was believed to have been a bishop. Feast day in the E. 30 Jan.; in the W. 13 Aug.

A list of several of Hippolytus' writings as well as his Easter tables were discovered on a statue, long thought to portray him, but now recognized as originally a female figure, perhaps personifying one of the sciences; it was found in Rome and heavily restored in 1551; it is now kept in the *Vatican Library. Many other works are listed by *Eusebius of Caesarea and St *Jerome. Hippolytus' principal work is his 'Refutation of all Heresies' (not listed on the statue). Books 4–10 of this were found in a MS on Mount *Athos and published (together with the already known Book 1) under the title 'Philosophumena' in 1851 at Oxford by E. Miller, who attributed it to *Origen; but J. J. I. von *Döllinger argued that its author was Hippolytus. Books 2–3 are lost. Its main aim is to show that the philosophical systems and mystery religions described in Books 1–4 are responsible for the heresies dealt with in the later Books. In the summary of 'true doctrine' at the end of the work, Hippolytus expresses his own trinitarian theology in a form of *Logos doctrine calculated to answer the charge of ditheism which Callistus had levelled against him. For this purpose he follows the Greek *Apologists, distinguishing between two states of the Word, the one immanent and eternal (ἐνδιάθετος λογισμός), the other external and temporal as the Father's voice. Containing in Himself all the Father's ideas, the Word is able to actualize them as the Father's creative agent. The absence of any explicit reference to the Holy Spirit in this system lends colour to Callistus' accusation; nevertheless Hippolytus frequently refers to the Holy Spirit at other points in the work. The 'Refutation' illustrates another important divergence between his teaching and that of the Roman bishops, namely his strenuous opposition to the mitigation of the penitential system necessitated by the influx of pagan converts in large numbers.

The other writings usually attributed to Hippolytus are: commentaries on Daniel and the Song of Songs as well as various other exegetical works, some of which survive only in translations or in fragments; a discourse against the followers of *Noetus; a historical work entitled the Chronicon; a treatise on the nature of the universe directed against *Plato, which survives only in fragments; and the Syntagma, an anti-heretical work, of which nothing remains. The statue also attributes to him the important treatise on the '*Apostolic Tradition' (q.v.), an attribution very generally accepted. Differences in style and theology, especially between the 'Refutation' and the Contra Noetum, led P. Nautin to attribute some of the works to a Hippolytus whom he identified as an E. bishop, and others to a virtually unknown Roman presbyter Josipus. Although the Josipus-theory won little support, Nautin's view that the works are to be divided between two authors has been more widely accepted. V. Loi ascribed some to Hippolytus of Rome and others to a second Hippolytus whom he believed to have been an E. bishop. Apart from these works, the '*Little Labyrinth' (q.v.) has sometimes been attributed to Hippolytus, as has a Paschal Homily, at one time ascribed to St John *Chrysostom; this is prob. of a later date.

The first collected edition was that of J. A. *Fabricius (2 vols., Hamburg, 1716–18; repr. with additions in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 261–962). P. A. de *Lagarde, Hippolyti Romani quae feruntur omnia graece (London, 1858). Crit. edn. by H. Achelis, G. Bonwetsch, and others in GCS (4 vols., 1897–1955). Separate edns. of Refutatio omnium haeresium by M. Marcovich (Patristische Texte und Studien, 25; 1986 [occasionally conjectural]); comm. on Dan., with Fr. tr., by M. Lefèvre and G. Bardy (SC 14; 1947); and Contra Noetum by P. Nautin (Paris, 1949); also, with Eng. tr., by R. Butterworth, SJ (Heythrop Monographs, 2; London, 1977). Paschal Homily ed., with Fr. tr., by P. Nautin, PSS, Homélies Pascales, 1 (SC 27; 1950); improved edn., with comm., by G. Visonà (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 15; Milan, 1988). Eng. tr. of many of his writings in ANCL (vols. 6 and 9, pt. 2); of the Refutation of all Heresies by F. Legge (2 vols., 1921). For edns. of the 'Apostolic Tradition', see bibl. s.v. J. J. I. von Döllinger, Hippolytus und Kallistus (1853; Eng. tr., 1876); C. *Wordsworth, St Hippolytus and the Church of Rome (1853); J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, 1 (2) (1890), pp. 317–477 ('Hippolytus of Portus'); G. Ficker, Studien zur Hippolytfrage (1893); H. Achelis, Hippolytstudien (TU 16, Heft 4, 1897; several other items in this series are devoted to Hippolytus); A. d'Alès, La Théologie de Saint Hippolyte (1906); G. Bovini, Sant'Hippolito dottore e martire del III secolo (1943); P. Nautin, Hippolyte et Josipe (1947); A. Hamel, Kirche bei Hippolyt von Rom (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, 49; 1951). R. Cantlamessa, OFM Cap., L'omelia 'In S. Pascha' dello Pseudo-Ippolito di Roma (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi, 3rd ser., Scienze Filologiche e Letteratura, 16; 1967), with refs. to earlier works. Ricerche su Ippolito (Studia Ephemeridis 'Augustinianum', 13; 1977), esp. M. Guarducci, 'La statua di "Sant'Ippolito" ' (pp. 17–30, with ref. to earlier art.), and V. Loi, 'L'identità letteraria di Ippolito di Roma' (pp. 67–88). A. Zani, La Cristologia di Ippolito (Pubblicazioni del Pontificio Seminario Lombardo in Roma, Ricerche di Scienze Teologische, 22; Brescia [1984]). C. [J.] Osborne, Rethinking Early Greek Philosophy: Hippolytus of Rome and the Presocratics (1987). J. Frickel, Das Dunkel um Hippolyt von Rom: Ein Lösungsversuch: Die Schriften Elenchos und contra Noëtum (Grazer Theologische Studien, 13; 1988). J. Mansfeld, Heresiology in Context: Hippolytus' Elenchos as a Source for Greek Philosophy (Philosophia Antiqua, 56; Leiden, 1992). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 256–78 (nos. 1870–925). M. Richard in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 531–71, s.v. See also bibl. to APOSTOLIC TRADITION, esp. the work of J. M. Hanssens.

Hippolytus, Canons of St. A collection of canons, mainly on disciplinary and liturgical subjects, which were compiled in Greek, according to R. Coquin between 336 and 340. The Greek text is lost, but they survive in an Arabic version of a Coptic translation. They are dependent on the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St *Hippolytus, to whom they are wrongly attributed. The extant MSS are not earlier than the 13th cent. In the later 19th cent. they were generally held, notably by H. Achelis, to be prior to the 'Apostolic Tradition' (then dated in the 4th cent. or later) and St Hippolytus often held to be the real author, at least of most of the work; and hence they received disproportionate attention in liturgical studies. Since the researches of E. *Schwartz and R. H. *Connolly on the 'Apostolic Tradition', they have lost most of their importance.

Arab. text ed., with Lat. tr., by D. B. von Haneberg, Bp. of Speyer (Munich, 1870); improved tr. (but with many doubtful conjectures) by H. Achelis (TU 6, Heft 4; 1891); crit. edn., with Fr. tr., and valuable introd. with refs. to previous works, by R. G. Coquin (PO 31, fasc. 2; 1966); Eng. tr. by C. Bebawi in P. F. Bradshaw, The Canons of Hippolytus (Grove Liturgical Study, 50; 1987). See also bibl. to APOSTOLIC TRADITION.

Hispana Collection. A collection of canons and *decretals, so called because of its Spanish origin. Together with the collection made by *Dionysius Exiguus, it was the principal means by which the legislation of the early Church circulated in the W. In its earliest recorded form, which a persistent if disputed tradition associates with *Isidore of Seville, it consists of the canons of various councils arranged geographically, ending with the Fourth Council of *Toledo (633), followed by decretals of Popes from *Damasus to *Gregory I. In later revisions the Spanish councils up to the Seventeenth Council of Toledo (694) were added. The collection exists in a number of revised and rearranged forms, of which the 'Gallican' provided the basis for the '*False Decretals'.

The text as found in the False Decretals is pr. in all the principal edns. of the Concilia from J. Merlin (Paris, 1524 ['1523']) onwards. Only complete edn. based on early MSS is that of F. A. Gonzalez (Madrid, 1808), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 84. Crit. edn., with substantial introd., by G. Martinez Díez, SJ, and F. Rodríguez, SJ (Monumenta Hispana Sacra, Serie Canónica, 1, 2, 3, 4, etc.; Madrid, 1966 ff.). F. Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters, 1 (1870), pp. 667–716; J. Gaudemet, Les Sources du Droit de l'Église en Occident du II^e au VII^e Siècle (1985), pp. 149–61. Mordek, pp. 250–2, with bibl. G. Martinez Díez in NCE 7 (1967), p. 1, s.v.

Historical Jesus, Quest of the. W. Montgomery's English translation of A. *Schweitzer's Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906) was published as The Quest of the Historical Jesus (1910), and this title has provided a label for the post-*Enlightenment attempts to reconstruct the life and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth by critical historical methods. The phrase implies a contrast to Christological definitions ('the dogmatic Christ') and other Christian accounts of Jesus ('the Christ of faith'), though Schweitzer showed that most 19th-cent. 'Lives of Jesus' were heavily influenced by their authors' beliefs.

The pioneer work of H. S. *Reimarus (1694–1768), Apologie oder Schutzschrift für die vernünftigen Verehrer Gottes, was not published in full until 1972, but its conclusions became known after G. E. *Lessing published the *Wolfenbüttel fragments in 1774–8. The subsequent challenges to the historicity of the Gospels by D. F. *Strauss in his Leben Jesu (1835) set Gospel criticism on its modern course. The floodgates of attempts to portray Jesus simply as a human person were opened by J. E. *Renan in 1863. Despite the reservations of A. *Ritschl, it became the central task of later liberal Protestantism in Germany and the *Social Gospel Movement in America. There were, however, some reactions. M. *Kähler issued a spirited protest against these liberal Lives in Der sogenannte historische Jesus und der geschichtliche, biblische Christus (1892, 2nd edn., 1896; abridged Eng. tr., 1964), maintaining that the real Christ is the preached Christ of the whole Bible rather than any hypothesis of historical research. Soon afterwards W. *Wrede cast further doubts on the historicity of Mark by his history-of-traditions approach to the Gospels. K. *Barth and R. *Bultmann repudiated the whole quest for the historical Jesus and were largely successful in removing it from German Protestant theology for a generation. Some of Bultmann's pupils (E. Käsemann, G. Bornkamm, H. Conzelmann, E. Fuchs, and G. Ebeling) renewed it in the 1950s, denying that *Form Criticism had made it impossible or kerygmatic theology unnecessary or irrelevant. This brief movement was dubbed by J. M. Robinson, The New Quest of the Historical Jesus (1959). Outside the Bultmann school, investigation of Jesus' life was continued without a break in many countries by Christian, Jewish, and independent writers. Today it is as strong as ever, stimulated and sustained by increased knowledge of 1st-cent. Judaism, reinforced by the renaissance of RC biblical scholarship and the international and interconfessional acceptance of critical historical methods, and enriched by sociological insights and modern literary analysis of Jesus' parables and aphorisms. The data remain fragmentary, and there is only limited consensus among historians, but the continuation of this investigation corresponds to both theological and wider cultural interests. See also JESUS CHRIST.

D. L. Pals, The Victorian 'Lives' of Jesus (Trinity University Monograph Series in Religion, 7; San Antonio [1982]). W. S. Kissinger, The Lives of Jesus: A History and Bibliography (New York and London, 1985); C. A. Evans, Life of Jesus Research: An Annotated Bibliography (New Testament Tools and Studies, 13; Leiden, 1989).

Representative of the 'New Quest' is G. Bornkamm, Jesus von Nazareth (Stuttgart, 1956; Eng. tr., 1960). Bultmann responded in Das Verhältnis der urchristlichen Christusbotshaft zum historischen Jesus (Sb. (Heid.), 1960, Abh. 3; Eng. tr. in C. E. Braaten and R. A. Harrisville (eds.), The Historical Jesus and the Kerygmatic Christ: Essays on the New Quest of the Historical Jesus (New York and Nashville, 1964), pp. 15–42). N. T. Wright in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 796–802, 'Jesus Christ, Quest for the Historical Jesus', with bibl.

History of Religion School. See RELIGIONSGESCHICHTLICHE SCHULE.

Hoadly, Benjamin (1676–1761), Bp. in succession of *Bangor, *Hereford, *Salisbury and *Winchester. He was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1697 and was a tutor from 1699 to 1701. Ordained priest in 1701, he was lecturer at St Mildred's, Poultry, from 1701 to 1711, and rector of St Peter-le-Poor, London, from 1704 to 1724. At the beginning of his public life he advocated conformity for the sake of union; he soon won the leadership of the *Low Church divines favoured by the Whigs through his controversy with F. *Atterbury and O. Blackall, Bp. of *Exeter (1708–16), on passive obedience and non-resistance. Recommended to the Queen by the House of Commons in 1709, he became rector of Streatham in 1710 and chaplain to the Duke of Bedford. On the accession of George I he became chaplain to the King, and was consecrated Bp. of Bangor in 1716. His sermon of 31 Mar. 1717 on 'The Nature of the Kingdom or Church of Christ' provoked the *Bangorian Controversy (q.v.). Translated to Hereford in 1721 and to Salisbury in 1723, when he resigned the rectory of Streatham, he was translated to Winchester in 1734. He excited stiff opposition by maintaining that the Lord's Supper was purely commemorative and in upholding *Latitudinarian views generally.

He spent very little time in his dioceses, never visiting Bangor, but living mainly in London, where he engaged in political and theological controversy. His many publications include A Defence of the Reasonableness of Conformity (1707; against E. *Calamy the younger), A Preservative against the Principles and Practices of Non-Jurors both in Church and State (1716), A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (1735), and The Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts (1736; a plea for toleration).

J. Hoadly (son [1711–76], ed.), The Works of Benjamin Hoadly (3 vols., 1773), with account of author, 1, pp. v–xxv. N. Sykes, 'Benjamin Hoadly, Bishop of Bangor', in F. J. C. Hearnshaw (ed.), The Social and Political Ideals of some English Thinkers of the Augustan Age (1928), pp. 112–57; id., Church and State in England in the XVIIIth Century (1934), esp. pp. 332–62. G. G. Perry in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 16–21.

Hobbes, Thomas (1588–1679), philosopher. In early life he travelled much abroad as tutor to the Cavendish family, and met and was influenced by F. *Bacon, G. *Galileo, and M. *Mersenne, the philosopher friend of R. *Descartes. He displeased both Royalists and Parliamentarians by holding that, although sovereignty is ultimately derived from the people, it is transferred to the monarch by implicit contract, so that while the power of the sovereign is absolute, it is not of *Divine Right. From 1640 to 1651 Hobbes was in exile, for the most part in Paris, where from 1646 to 1648 he was tutor to the Prince of Wales (later Charles II). In 1651 he returned and submitted to the Commonwealth, and in the same year published his greatest work, the Leviathan, which, though it has been called a reaction against the 'liberty' of the Renaissance and Reformation, is really a philosophical exposition of the system of political absolutism which replaced the supremacy of the medieval Church. In his Questions Concerning Liberty, Necessity, and Chance (1656) he expounded a doctrine of psychological *Determinism in opposition to Bp. J. *Bramhall's defence of free will. In 1666 the Leviathan, which from the first was considered to be atheistic, was censured by name by the House of Commons, and thereafter its author was not allowed to publish ethical writings in England. Hobbes was perhaps the first philosopher to attempt seriously to base a theory of human conduct upon natural science; he was a pioneer in psychology; and his early work De Cive (1642; Eng. tr., 1651) gives him some claim to be considered the founder of modern social science. His doctrine of political absolutism cut at the root of ethics, however, as it left no room for any genuine moral distinction between good and bad.

Collected edn. of Hobbes's Opera Philosophica (Amsterdam, 1668; suppl., London, 1675); of his Moral and Political Works (London, 1720), incl. his autobiog., pp. ix–xxviii. Complete edn. of his English Works (11 vols., London, 1839–45) and his Opera Philosophica (5 vols., ibid., 1839–45), both by Sir W. Molesworth. Philosophical Works also ed. by H. Warrender (Oxford, 1983 ff.). Repr. of the 1651 edn. of the Leviathan, with introd. by W. G. Pogson Smith (Oxford, 1909), and, with modernized spelling, by M. Oakeshott (ibid., 1955).

The vast literature on Hobbes includes studies by G. Croom Robertson (London, 1886), L. Stephen ('English Men of Letters', 1904), A. E. *Taylor (London, 1908), J. Laird (ibid., 1934), and T. Sorell (ibid., 1986). L. Strauss, The Political Philosophy of Hobbes (Oxford, 1936); H. Warrender, The Political Philosophy of Hobbes (ibid., 1957); S. I. Mintz, The Hunting of Leviathan: Seventeenth-Century Reactions to the Materialism and Moral Philosophy of Thomas Hobbes (Cambridge, 1962); F. C. Hood, The Divine Politics of Thomas Hobbes: An Interpretation of Leviathan (Oxford, 1964); K. C. Brown (ed.), Hobbes Studies (ibid., 1965); J. W. N. Watkins, Hobbes's System of Ideas (1965; 2nd edn., 1973); D. P. Gauthier, The Logic of Leviathan: The Moral and Political Theory of Thomas Hobbes (Oxford, 1969); D. D. Raphael, Hobbes, Morals and Politics (1977); J. Hampton, Hobbes and the Social Contract Tradition (Cambridge, 1986); D. Baumgold, Hobbes's Political Theory (ibid., 1988); G. B. Herbert, Thomas Hobbes: The Unity of Scientific and Moral Wisdom (Vancouver, 1989); A. P. Martinich, The Two Gods of Leviathan: Thomas Hobbes in Religion and Politics (Cambridge, 1992). C. H. Hinnant, Thomas Hobbes: A Reference Guide (Boston [1980]).

Hocktide (also 'Hock Monday' and 'Hock Tuesday'). The second Monday and Tuesday after Easter, on which in medieval times money was collected for church and parish uses, and various sports and amusements took place. The merrymaking at this season survived in some places until the 19th cent. The origin of the name is unknown.

Hodge, Charles (1797–1878), American *Presbyterian theologian. He was ordained in 1821, and taught at Princeton for nearly his whole life. His most important works are his commentaries on Rom. (1835), Eph. (1856), 1 Cor. (1857), 2 Cor. (1859), as well as Constitutional History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (2 vols., 1839–40), Systematic Theology (3 vols., 1871–3), and What is Darwinism? (1874). If less an original thinker than a systematizer and defender of traditional *Calvinism, Hodge has a real claim to be considered one of the greatest of American theologians, and he had a great influence and following. He took a broader and more tolerant view of other forms of Christianity than many of those in general sympathy with his position.

Selections from various works under the title The Way of Faith, ed. M. A. Noll (Sources of American Spirituality, New York [1987]). A. A. Hodge (son), The Life of C. Hodge, D.D. (1881); C. A. Salmond, Princetoniana: Charles and A. A. Hodge (1888); L. J. Trinterud in H. T. Kerr (ed.), Sons of the Prophets (Princeton, NJ, 1963), pp. 22–38. R. H. Nichols in Dict. Amer. Biog. 9 (1932), pp. 98 f.; J. W. Stewart in D. K. McKim (ed.), Encyclopedia of the Reformed Faith (1992), pp. 174–6.

Hody, Humphrey (1659–1707), Anglican divine. Having entered Wadham College, Oxford, in 1676, he was elected a Fellow in 1685. In his Contra historiam Aristeae de LXX interpretibus Dissertatio (1684) he proved that the 'Letter of *Aristeas' was a forgery. His support of the Established Church against the *Nonjurors brought him to the notice of Abp. J. *Tillotson, who made him his chaplain; and in 1698 he was made Regius professor of Greek at Oxford. His researches into the text of the *Septuagint are embodied in his De Bibliorum Textis Originalibus (4 vols., 1703). By his will a number of exhibitions for the study of Hebrew and Greek, which still bear his name, were established at Wadham College.

Study (in Latin) of his life and writings by S. Jebb prefixed to his edn. of Hody's De Graecis Illustribus, Linguae Graecae, Literarumque Humaniorum Instauratoribus, eorum Vitis, Scriptis et Elogiis (posthumous, 1742), pp. v–xxix. G. Goodwin in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 77 f.

Hofbauer, St Clement Mary (1751–1820), the 'Apostle of Vienna'. He was a native of Tasswitz in Moravia and the son of a grazier and butcher; and at the age of 15 he became a baker's apprentice. Led by his religious aspirations to become a hermit, and later a student for the priesthood (1780–4) in Vienna and Rome, he entered the congregation of the *Redemptorists at Rome in 1784 and was professed and ordained in 1785. In the same year he returned to Vienna, but, unable to found a house there because of the anti-religious *Josephinist legislation, he went on to Warsaw, where he laboured from 1787 to 1808, chiefly among the German-speaking population. Here he met with remarkable success, devoting himself esp. to the cure of souls and to educational and charitable activities. Appointed Vicar-General for the houses of his congregation N. of the Alps in 1793, he founded several establishments in Poland and one at Jestetten, nr. Schaffhausen (1802). In 1808 he was driven from Warsaw by Napoleon and went back to Vienna. At first he worked mainly at the Italian church, but from 1813 onwards he was confessor to the Ursulines. His influence in the capital, which spread from the highest to the lowest, powerfully counteracted the effects of Josephinism and the Aufklärung. The Redemptorists, however, could not be established in Austria till shortly after his death. He was canonized in 1909. Feast day, 15 Mar.

Monumenta Hofbaueriana (15 vols., Cracow, Thorn, Tournai, and Rome, 1915–51). Selection of his works, ed. J. Heinzmann, CSSR (Fribourg and Constance, 1986). Lives by S. Brunner (Vienna, 1858), A. Innerkofler (Ratisbon, 1910), J. Hofer (Freiburg i.B., 1920; Eng. tr., New York, 1926), G. Hünermann (Innsbruck, 1936; Fr. tr., 2nd edn., 1955), J. Carr, CSSR (London, 1939), E. Hosp, CSSR (Vienna, 1951), and K. Fleischmann (Graz, etc., 1988).

Høffding, Harald (1843–1931), Danish philosopher. From 1883 to 1915 he was professor at Copenhagen. In his earlier years he was much under the influence of S. *Kierkegaard, but almost completely abandoned his teaching later. He sought at once to do full justice to the claims of the natural sciences and to show that all knowledge received meaning only in relation to the realm of value. But while he upheld a spiritual interpretation of the universe, he denied that there were sufficient theoretical grounds for applying the notions of 'cause' and 'personality' to the Absolute or for affirming (or denying) belief in personal immortality. He described his position as 'critical monism'. His many writings included a widely used history of philosophy, Den nyere Filosofis Historie (2 vols., 1894–5; Eng. tr., 1900) and a Religionsfilosofi (1901; Eng. tr., 1906).

His Udvalgte Skrifter (7 vols., Copenhagen, 1902–6); Erindringer [with portrait] (ibid., 1928). Correspondence with E. Meyerson, ed. F. Brandt and others (ibid., 1939); that with Ferdinand Tönnies, ed. C. Bickel and R. Flechner (Beiträge zur Sozialforschung, 4 [1989]). Complete list of his works by K. Sandelin in Harald Høffding In Memoriam (Copenhagen, 1932), pp. 43–76, with bibl. pp. 81–102. F. Brandt in Encyclopedia of Philosophy, ed. P. Edwards, 4 (1967), pp. 48 f., s.v.

Hoffmann or Hoffman, Melchior (*c.*1500–*c.*1543), German *Anabaptist. A leather-dresser by profession, he joined the *Lutherans and became a lay preacher in Livonia in 1523. Having come into conflict with the authorities he left for Stockholm in 1526; there he became more and more imbued with eschatological ideas and prophesied the approaching end of the world. After a short stay in Holstein he had a disputation with J. *Bugenhagen at Flensburg in 1529 in which he denied the Lutheran doctrine of the Lord's Supper, holding it to be a mere sign. He was consequently banished from Denmark, and went to Strasbourg, where he joined the Anabaptists. Between 1530 and 1533 he preached there, in E. Friesland, and in Holland. In 1533 he returned to Strasbourg, which was to be the New Jerusalem, to await the Last Day. He was arrested and sentenced to imprisonment for life, but remained unshaken in his eschatological beliefs till his death. His influence on his contemporaries was considerable, and the 'Melchiorites' survived him as a distinct party among the Anabaptists.

Eng. tr. of his 'Ordinance of God' (first pub. in 1530), from the surviving Dutch tr., by G. H. Williams (ed.), Spiritual and Anabaptist Writers (Library of Christian Classics, 25; 1957), pp. 184–203. P. Kawerau, Melchior Hoffman als religiöser Denker (Haarlem, 1954); K. Deppermann, Melchior Hoffman: Soziale Unruhen und apokalyptische Visionen im Zeitalter der Reformation (Göttingen, 1979; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1987). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, 1957; London, 1962), esp. pp. 259–64, 292–5, 307–9, and 355–8; 3rd edn. (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirkskille, Mo. [1992]), esp. pp. 387–93, 447–50, and 539–45. K. Deppermann in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 470–3, s.v.

Hoffmeister, Johannes (*c.*1509–47), *Augustinian Hermit. He entered the Augustinian monastery at Colmar as a youth, studied at several German universities, and was made prior in 1533. His life was devoted to the defence of his order against *Lutheran teaching and to the inner reform of the Church by preaching and writing. In 1542 or 1543 he became provincial of the Rhenish-Swabian province, which had been severely affected by Protestantism. His powerful sermons soon made him widely known and he was frequently called upon to preach on important occasions, e.g. at the Diet of Worms (1545) and the (second) Colloquy of Ratisbon (1546). In 1546 he was made vicar-general of the Augustinian Hermits in Germany, but his work was cut short by his death in 1547. His writings, which are occasionally marred by their polemical extravagance, include two books of Dialogues (1538) and his Loci Communes (Mainz, 1547; often repr.), a collection of patristic extracts.

N. Paulus, Der Augustinermönch J. Hoffmeister: Ein Lebensbild aus der Reformationszeit (Freiburg i.B., 1891). A. von Druffel, 'Der Elsässer Augustinermönch Johannes Hoffmeister und seine Korrespondenz mit dem Ordensgeneral Hieronymus Seripando', Abh. (Bayr.), hist. Kl. 14, Abt. 1 (1879), pp. 135–96. R. Bäumer, 'Johannes Hoffmeister OESA', in E. Iserloh (ed.), Katholische Theologen der Reformationszeit, 4 (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 47; 1987), pp. 43–57.

Hofmann, Johann Christian Konrad von (1810–77), German *Lutheran theologian. A native of Nuremberg, he studied at Erlangen and Berlin, and became lecturer at Erlangen University in 1838. In 1842 he was called to Rostock as professor of theology, and in 1845 returned in the same capacity to Erlangen, where he remained till the end of his life. His most important works were Weissagung und Erfüllung im Alten und Neuen Testament (2 parts, 1841–4), a study of the theology of prophecy; Der Schriftbeweis (3 parts, 1852–6), a treatise in the course of which the vicarious Atonement was denied; Schutzschriften für eine neue Weise, alte Wahrheit zu lehren (1856–9), written in defence of the preceding; and Die hl. Schriften des Neuen Testaments (8 parts, 1862–78), an unfinished commentary on the NT. Hofmann aimed at being an uncompromising exponent of Lutheran doctrines. His disciples became known as the 'Erlangen School'.

Theologische Briefe der Professoren [F.] Delitzsch und von Hofmann (ed. W. Volck, 1891). Life by P. Wapler (Leipzig, 1914). P. Bachmann, J. C. K. Hofmanns Versöhnungslehre und der über sie geführte Streit (1910); M. Schellbach, Theologie und Philosophie bei von Hofmann (1935). E. W. Wendebourg, 'Die heilsgeschichtliche Theologie J. Chr. K. v. Hofmanns in ihrem Verhältnis zur romantischen Weltanschauung', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 52 (1955), pp. 64–104. W. von Lowenich, 'Zur neueren Beurteilung der Theologie Johann Christian Konrad von Hofmanns', Zeitschrift für bayerische Kirchengeschichte, 32 (1963), pp. 315–31. A. Hauck in PRE (3rd edn.), 7 (1900), pp. 234–41; F. Mildenberger in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 477–9, s.v.

Hohenheim. See PARACELSUS.

Holcot, Robert (d. 1349), scholastic theologian and biblical commentator. A native of Northamptonshire, he entered the *Dominican Order and studied at Oxford. He lectured on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard probably during the two years 1331–3, and incepted in theology *c.1335. He also wrote quodlibets and biblical commentaries on the *Minor Prophets, Wisdom (possibly written at Cambridge), and Ecclesiasticus, as well as Moralitates and Convertimini (both aids to preaching) and sermons. By 1343 he was assigned to the Northampton house of his Order, where he is said to have died while nursing the sick during the plague. His commentary on the Sentences is extant in four redactions, and circulated widely outside England. Holcot was working in Oxford at a time when the impact of *William of Ockham's views was fresh, and when it had become difficult to maintain that a fully demonstrable proof could be found that God exists or that God is the creator of the world. Holcot was reduced to saying that God will communicate to men of goodwill sufficient knowledge of Himself for salvation. Views of this kind are found not only in the commentary on the Sentences, but also in the biblical commentaries. In his commentaries little attention is paid to the literal sense, and the main emphasis is on the application of the text for use in preaching, with many illustrations, and with an extensive use of classical and pseudo-classical quotations. Holcot also developed, but did not originate, the use of emblem-like 'pictures' of mythological and allegorical figures. He was among the scholars said to have been patronized by Richard de Bury (d. 1345), but the ascription of de Bury's 'Philobiblon seu de amore librorum' to Holcot in some MSS is not acceptable. He may have helped de Bury to collect material, but he was not the author of the book.

His comm. on Wisdom was pub. at Cologne, not later than 1474; that on the Sentences at Lyons in 1497; Moralitates at Venice, 1514. They were repr. in the 16th cent., but there are no modern edns. The comm. on Ecclesiasticus, pr. at Paris, 1515, is the work of Ralph Ringstead (d. 1366). Holcot's own comm. on Ecclus. is still unpub. 'Philobiblon' pub. Cologne, 1473; modern edn. by A. Altramura, Naples, 1954; Eng. tr. by J. B. Inglis (anon.), London, 1832. Holcot's 'Sermo finalis' ed. J. C. Wey, CSB, Mediaeval Studies, 11 (1949), pp. 219–24; Quodlibet 'Utrum Theologia sit Scientia', ed. J. T. Muckle, CSB, ibid. 20 (1958), pp. 127–53; E. A. Moody, 'A Quodlibetal question of Robert Holkot, O.P., on the problem of the objects of knowledge and of belief', Speculum, 39 (1964), pp. 53–74, incl. text; W. J. Courtenay, 'A Revised Text of Robert Holcot's Quodlibetal Dispute on Whether God is Able to Know More than He Knows', Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, 53 (1971), pp. 1–21. P. Molteni, Robert Holcot O.P.: Dottrina della grazia e della giustificazione, con due questioni quodlibetali inedite (Pinerolo [*c.*1969]); two other quodlibeta and one quaestio from his comm. on the Sentences ed. H. Goodenough Gelber, Exploring the Boundaries of Reason: Three Questions on the Nature of God (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 62; Toronto [1983]). B. Smalley, 'Robert Holcot', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 26 (1956), pp. 5–97; id., English Friars and Antiquity in the Early Fourteenth Century (Oxford, 1960), pp. 133–202. A. Meissner, SAC, Gotteserkenntnis und Gotteslehre nach dem englischen Dominikanertheologen Robert Holkot (Limburg am Lahn [1953]), with bibl. H. Schepers, 'Holkot contra dicta Crathorn', Philosophisches Jahrbuch, 77 (1970), pp. 320–54; 79 (1972), pp. 106–36 and 361. F. Hoffmann, Die theologische Methode des Oxforder Dominikanerlehrers Robert Holcot (BGPM, NF 5; 1972). W. J. Courtenay, 'The Lost Matthew Commentary of Robert Holcot O.P.', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 50 (1980), pp. 103–112. Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), pp. 313–20, s.v. 'Robertus Holcot'.

Holgate, Robert (*c.*1481–1555), Abp. of *York. He was probably educated at the Gilbertine house of studies in Cambridge, where he was university preacher in 1524. He became Master of the Order of *Sempringham, and, on the eve of its dissolution (1537), Bp. of *Llandaff. He proved an active member of the King's Council in the North, and in 1538 he succeeded C. *Tunstall as Lord President. In 1545 he was translated to York. His marriage and strong support of the Edwardian reforming measures brought about his deprivation by the Marians in 1554. Holgate founded three grammar schools and an almshouse, all in Yorkshire.

A. G. Dickens, 'The Marriage and Character of Archbishop Holgate', EHR 52 (1937), pp. 428–42; id., Robert Holgate, Archbishop of York and President of the King's Council in the North (St Anthony's Hall Publications, 8; 1955), the last repr. in id. Reformation Studies (1982), no. 15. W. Hunt in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 128–30.

Holidays of Obligation. See FEASTS OF OBLIGATION.

Holiness Code, also 'Law of Holiness'. The collection of legal material in Lev. 17–26, so named by A. Klostermann in 1877, and designated 'H'. The subjects dealt with are animal sacrifice and the prohibition of eating blood (17), laws of marriage and chastity (18), miscellaneous religious and ethical precepts (19), penalties for violation of the ritual laws (20), the priesthood (21 f.), the sacred calendar, incl. *Sabbath, *Passover, *Weeks, and the Day of *Atonement (23), the sacred lamp and the *Shewbread (24: 1–9), punishment for blasphemy and the Lex Talionis (24: 10–25), the *Sabbatical Year and *Jubilee (25), with a final exhortation (26). The recurrence of certain phrases (in particular, 'for I, the Lord, am holy', e.g. 19: 2), supports the view that the section is a unity. There are internal indications that it is a product of the Exile in *Babylon (cf. 26: 34–45); moreover, it has a number of parallels with the exilic Book of Ezekiel. Scholars who follow the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origins of the *Pentateuch generally suppose the Holiness Code to have been incorporated into *P, after circulating independently for a period.

A. Klostermann, 'Beiträge zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Pentateuchs', Zeitschrift für die gesammte lutherische Theologie und Kirche, 38 (1877), pp. 401–45; id., Der Pentateuch (1893), pp. 386–418. B. Baentsch, Das Heiligkeits-Gesetz (1893). H. G. Reventlow, Das Heiligkeitsgesetz formgeschichtlich untersucht (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 6; 1961); R. Kilian, Literarkritische und formgeschichtliche Untersuchung des Heiligkeitsgesetzes (Bonner Biblischer Beiträge, 19; 1963). L. E. Elliott-Binns, 'Some Problems of the Holiness Code', ZATW 67 (1955; pub. 1956), pp. 26–40 [favours an earlier dating]. W. Thiel, 'Erwägungen zum Alter des Heiligkeitsgesetzes', ibid. 81 (1969), pp. 40–73; V. Wagner, 'Zur Existenz des sogenannten "Heiligkeitsgesetzes"', ibid. 86 (1974), pp. 307–16 [questions the existence of 'H' as an independent collection]. Eissfeldt, pp. 233–9, with further refs. H. T. C. Sun in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 254–7, s.v. See also works cited under PENTATEUCH and comm. to LEVITICUS, cited s.v.

Holiness, His. A title which in the early Church was regularly used of all bishops. Since *c.*600 it has been restricted to *patriarchs, a use still followed in the E. Church. In the W., since the 14th cent., it has been used only of the Pope. The title was also occasionally given to the Byzantine Emperors, and there is an instance of its use by *John of Salisbury of Henry II of England.

Holiness Movement. A predominantly American religious movement which centres on the belief that entire sanctification takes place instantaneously in a crisis experience. It arose in the mid-19th cent., primarily in the *Methodist Church, in which some groups felt that J. *Wesley's teaching on *perfection was being eroded by declining standards. Their teaching came to be combined with *revivalist techniques. The movement was promoted from 1835 by Phoebe Palmer (1807–74), a Methodist lay leader, who taught that perfection in love was a second blessing distinct from regeneration and that it eliminated all sinful desires. It spread initially through meetings in private houses, and was fostered by the journal Guide to Christian Perfection (1839–45) which became the Guide to Holiness (1846–1901). Similar teaching was being adopted by the revivalist Charles G. *Finney (1792–1875) and his colleagues at the *Congregational Oberlin College in Oberlin, Ohio; this strand is often known as 'Oberlin Perfectionism'.

Aided by W. E. Boardman's The Higher Christian Life (1858) and Hannah Whitall Smith's The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life (1875), the movement reached a wider public through Holiness Camp Meetings, beginning in 1867 at Vineland, New Jersey, where an 'Association for the Promotion of Holiness' was formed. Though still predominantly Methodist, the movement was spreading to other Protestant churches. During the last two decades of the 19th cent., tensions between the Holiness advocates and Methodist bishops led to seceding groups forming new Holiness denominations. Of these, the largest are the Church of the Nazarene, which emerged as a distinct denomination in the USA in 1908, and the Church of God (Anderson, Ind.), which traces its beginnings to 1881.

The movement modified Wesleyan teaching by emphasizing revivalistic techniques of invitation, decision, and testimony, and by an increasing insistence on visible evidence. Holiness groups were among the first to admit women to ministry. By the late 19th cent. physical healing was commonly expected and the experience of sanctification was frequently called '*baptism with (or sometimes of) the Holy Spirit'. Greater emphasis came to be placed on external observance, esp. avoidance of all behaviour seen as worldly. Sharply divided in the early 20th cent. by the rise of *Pentecostalism, the surviving Holiness groups became less exuberant. Holiness Churches have about 2 million members in the USA, with strong missionary work in the Caribbean and E. Asia. The 19th-cent. perfectionist currents gave rise to related movements, incl. the *Keswick Conventions in Britain, but their emphasis on victory over the flesh is different from the teaching of the Holiness Churches on the eradication of sin.

The Holiness denominations in the UK are small. The largest is the Church of the Nazarene, with which three Holiness groupings of British origin have joined.

M. E. Dieter, The Holiness Revival of the Nineteenth Century (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1980). A. C. Piepkorn, Profiles in Belief: The Religious Bodies of the United States and Canada, 3 (New York and London [1979]), pp. 3–85, with bibl. T. L. Smith, Called unto Holiness: The Story of the Nazarenes: The Formative Years (Kansas City, Mo., 1962). C. E. Brown, When the Trumpet Sounded: A History of the Church of God Reformation Movement (Anderson, Ind. [1951]). J. Ford, In the Steps of John Wesley: The Church of the Nazarene in Britain (Kansas City, Mo. [1968]). C. E. Jones, A Guide to the Study of the Holiness Movement (American Theological Library Association Bibliographical Series, 1; Metuchen, NJ, 1974).

Holl, Karl (1866–1926), German Protestant Church historian. After studying at Tübingen and Berlin, he became professor at Tübingen in 1900 and in 1906 at Berlin, where he was the colleague of A. *Harnack. He edited several patristic texts for the Prussian Academy, including the Sacra Parallela of St *John of Damascus (TU 16. 1; 1897) and the Ancoratus and Panarion of St *Epiphanius (GCS, 3 vols., 1915–33). Holl was an original and prolific scholar, dealing with a wide range of historical and theological subjects. His patristic work was noted for its sound philological basis (esp. Amphilochius von Ikonium in seinem Verhältnis zu den grossen Kappadoziern, 1904, and Enthusiasmus und Bussgewalt beim griechischen Mönchtum, 1898); his papers on M. *Luther inaugurated a new era in Luther studies.

Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte (3 vols., Tübingen, 1921–8), with list of his works by H. *Lietzmann in vol. 3, pp. 578–84. Kleine Schriften, ed. R. Stupperich (ibid., 1966). Correspondence with Harnack, ed. H. Karpp (ibid., 1966); with A. Schlatter, ed. R. Stupperich, Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 64 (1967), pp. 169–240. W. Bodenstein, Die Theologie Karl Holls im Spiegel des antiken und reformatorischen Christentums (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 40; 1968). J. Wallmann in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 514–8, s.v., with further bibl.

Holland, Christianity in. See NETHERLANDS, CHRISTIANITY IN THE.

Holland, Henry Scott (1847–1918), theologian and preacher. Educated at Eton and at Balliol College, *Oxford, where he was influenced by T. H. *Green, he was a Senior Student at Christ Church from 1870 to 1884, canon of *St Paul's Cathedral from 1884 to 1910, and Regius professor of divinity at Oxford from 1910 until his death. He shared the outlook of *_Lux Mundi_, to which he contributed the first essay (on 'Faith'). He was a robust and independent philosopher and theologian, keenly interested in relating Christian principles to the social and economic problems of human living. With C. *Gore, he established the Christian Social Union in 1889, under the presidency of Bp. B. F. *Westcott; he was himself its most brilliant spokesman. He was editor of the _Commonwealth_ from 1895 to 1912. His writings, mainly collections of sermons, include _Logic and Life_ (1882), _Creed and Character_ (1887), and _God's City_ (1894). He was also the author of the hymn 'Judge Eternal, throned in splendour' (_EH_ 423).

S. Paget, _Henry Scott Holland: Memoir and Letters_ (1921); E. Lyttelton, _The Mind and Character of Henry Scott Holland_ (1926). D. M. MacKinnon, _Borderlands of Theology and other Essays_, ed. G. W. Roberts and D. E. Smucker (1966), pp. 105–20 ('Scott Holland and Contemporary Needs'; part 1 repr. from _Theology_, 55 (1952), pp. 407–12). T. B. Strong in _DNB, 1912–1921_, pp. 260–2.

Holocaust (Gk. ὁλόκαυστον, 'something entirely burnt up'). A sacrifice completely consumed by fire ('burnt-offering'), and thus a perfect sacrifice. Less accurately, the word is also used of a sacrifice with many victims. Since the 1950s it has come to be applied absolutely ('the Holocaust') to the Nazi persecution of European Jews between 1933 and 1945; this culminated in the attempt from 1942 onwards to exterminate them, esp. in the gas chambers of concentration camps in E. Europe.

Holste, Lucas (1596–1661) (Holstenius), *Vatican librarian. A native of Hamburg, he studied in *Leiden, where he was converted in 1625–6 to the RC Church. He became secretary, and later librarian (1636), to Cardinal Francesco *Barberini, and subsequently librarian of the Vatican. In 1655 he received Queen *Christina of Sweden's public abjuration of Protestantism at Innsbruck. He was a scholar of enormous erudition, whose writings included _Codex Regularum Monasticarum et Canonicarum_ (3 vols., 1661), studies in many classical and ecclesiastical writings (*Porphyry; *Eusebius, _Contra Hieroclem_; the later Pythagoreans) and an edition of the _Liber Diurnus_ (1660).

His correspondence (_Epistolae ad Diversos_) was ed. J. F. Boissonade (Paris, 1817). [N. Wilckens,] _Leben des gelehrten Lucae Holstenii_ (Hamburg, 1723). L. G. Pélissier, 'Les Amis d'Holstenius', _Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire de l'École française de Rome_, 6 (1886), pp. 554–87; 7 (1887), pp. 62–128; and 8 (1888), pp. 323–402 and 521–608. R. Almagià, _L'opera geografica di Luca Holstenio_ (ST 102; 1942). J. Bignami Odier, _La Bibliothèque Vaticane de Sixte IV à Pie XI_ (ibid. 272; 1973), esp. pp. 138 f. and 148 f.

Holtzmann, Heinrich Julius (1832–1910), Protestant theologian and biblical critic. After study at Berlin University and a pastorate at Baden (1854–7), he taught at Heidelberg (1858–74) and Strasbourg (1874–1904). He was a moderate liberal in his beliefs. In _Die synoptischen Evangelien_ (1863) he strongly defended the *Marcan hypothesis, at that date rarely accepted. In his later writings he argued for a psychological development in the Lord's self-consciousness, maintaining that there were two principal periods in His earthly life, that of 'success' which reached its climax at *Caesarea Philippi, and a subsequent period of 'failure', when the new conception of a suffering Messiah supervened. His books include an _Einleitung in das NT_ (1885); commentaries on the Synoptic Gospels (1889), the Johannine books (1890), and Acts (1901); a _Lehrbuch der NT Theologie_ (2 vols., 1896–7); and _Richard *Rothe's Speculatives System_ (1899).

Theologische Abhandlungen: Eine Festgabe zum 17. Mai 1902 für H. J. Holtzmann (1902). Brief Life by W. Bauer (Berlin, 1932). W. G. Kümmel, _Das Neue Testament: Geschichte der Erforschung seiner Probleme_ ([1958]; 2nd edn., 1970), pp. 185–91 and 569; Eng. tr., Nashville [1972]; London, 1973), pp. 151–5 and 478 f. A. Faux in _Dict. Bibl._, Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 112–16, s.v.; O. Merk in _TRE_ 15 (1986), pp. 519–22, s.v.

Holy Alliance. The declaration signed by Alexander I of Russia, Francis I of Austria, and Friedrich Wilhelm III of Prussia on 26 Sept. 1815, and eventually by all the sovereigns of Europe except the Prince Regent of England, the Pope, and the Sultan. It laid down that the relations of the Powers would henceforth be based on 'the sublime truths which the Holy Religion of our Saviour teaches'; that the actions of princes would be guided by justice, charity, and peace; and that the signatories would regard each other as brothers and 'on all occasions and in all places lend each other aid and assistance'. The project originated with the Tsar, under the inspiration of Barbara J. von *Krüdener, and appears to have been conceived in sincerity, though Metternich called it a 'loud-sounding nothing', and Castlereagh 'a piece of sublime mysticism and nonsense'. It soon became synonymous, however, with the combined interests of the Great Powers by whom Europe was ruled after 1815 and their policy of reaction. As a diplomatic instrument it was never effective, though it inspired Nicholas II to summon the first international peace conference at The Hague in 1899.

Text in E. Reich (ed.), _Select Documents Illustrating Mediaeval and Modern History_ (1905), pp. 119–21, with refs.; Eng. tr. in G. A. Kertesz (ed.), _Documents in the Political History of the European Continent 1815–1939_ (Oxford, 1968), pp. 7–9. J. H. Pirenne, _La Sainte Alliance: Organisation européenne de la paix mondiale_ (2 vols. [1946–9]); M. Bourquin, _Histoire de la Sainte Alliance_ (Geneva, 1954). H. A. Kissinger, _A World Restored: Metternich, Castlereagh and the Problems of Peace 1812–22_ (1957), esp. pp. 175–90. On the circumstances leading up to and following the making of the alliance, see also C. K. Webster, _The Congress of Vienna, 1814–1815_ ([1919] 2nd edn., 1934); id., _The European Alliance 1813–1825_ (Calcutta, 1929). H. G. Schenk, _The Aftermath of the Napoleonic Wars_ (1947).

Holy City, the. *Jerusalem (Mt. 27: 53). Among the Arabs the city is now commonly known as _el-Kuds_, i.e. 'the Holy'.

Holy Club. The nickname given to the group of '*Methodists' which John *Wesley formed at Oxford in 1729 for the deepening of personal religion. This developed into a number of overlapping groups in various colleges. Beginning with classical and devotional reading, frequent Communion, and fasting on Wednesdays and Fridays, the groups soon added pastoral, charitable, and educational work, e.g. in Oxford gaol.

R. P. Heitzenrater, 'The Oxford Diaries and the First Rise of Methodism', _Methodist History_, 12 (1974), News Bulletin, pp. 111–35; id., _Mirror and Memory: Reflections on Early Methodism_ (Nashville, 1989), pp. 63–77.

Holy Coat. Both the cathedral of Trier and the parish church at Argenteuil claim the possession of Christ's 'coat without seam' (Jn. 19: 23). Dating alike from about the 12th cent., the two traditions agree both in admitting the other's relic to be a genuine garment of Christ's, and in insisting that their own is that mentioned in Scripture. The Trier tradition would seem to hold the advantage in Papal utterances and popular devotion. Over two million pilgrims visited the Trier relic when it was exposed in 1933. At other places, e.g. Mantua, where an alleged garment of Christ is shown, there is a less-developed cultus.

O. Zöckler in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 58–61; E. Iserloh in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 1348–60, both s.v. 'Rock'; F. Lauchert in CE 7 (1910), pp. 400–2; all with bibl.

Holy Cross Day. The name given in the BCP calendar to 14 Sept., also known as the Feast of the '*Exaltation of the Cross' (q.v.).

Holy Days of Obligation. See FEASTS OF OBLIGATION.

Holy Door, the (Porta Sancta). The door in the façade of *St Peter's, Rome, which is nearest the *Vatican Palace. The Holy Door is normally sealed with brickwork, except during the *Holy Year, when it is opened for the passage of those wishing to gain the *Indulgence of the Holy Year. The opening and closing of the Holy Door at the beginning and end of the Holy Year are ceremonially performed by the Pope, assisted by the Cardinal Penitentiary. There are similar Holy Doors in each of the other Major *Basilicas in Rome; these are opened and closed by cardinal legates simultaneously with the one in St Peter's.

H. Thurston, SJ, The Holy Year of Jubilee (1900), ch. 2, 'The Porta Sancta', pp. 28–54, with refs.; Appendix C, 'The Porta Sancta and the Golden Gate of Jerusalem', pp. 405–11.

Holy Family, the. The Infant Jesus, His Mother (St *Mary, the Blessed Virgin), and His foster-father (St *Joseph). The cult of the Holy Family as such became widely popular in the RC Church in the 17th cent., and since that time several religious congregations have been founded under this title. A feast of the Holy Family was instituted by the Congregation of *Rites on 26 Oct. 1921, and was kept on the First Sunday after the *Epiphany until it was transferred to the First Sunday after Christmas in 1969. Of the innumerable paintings of the Holy Family one of the most celebrated is that by B. E. *Murillo (1670), now in the Louvre.

Institution of Feast in AAS 13 (1921), pp. 543 f. I. Noye, PSS, in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 84–94, s.v. 'Famille (Dévotion à la Sainte Famille)'.

Holy Father, the Most (Beatissimus Pater). A title of the Pope (in common usage abbreviated to 'Holy Father'), which is first quoted in English *c.*1380.

Holy Ghost. An alternative title of the *Holy Spirit (q.v.), esp. in liturgical usage.

Holy Ghost Fathers (or Spiritans), a RC religious congregation of priests and lay brothers dedicated to missionary and social work. The Congregation of the Holy Ghost (Congregatio Sancti Spiritus, C.S.Sp.) was founded in Paris for the training of priests in 1703 by Claude-François Poullart des Places and survived his early death in 1707. After official approval in 1734, the congregation became interested in missionary work and assumed charge of territories in *Canada, French Guiana, and Senegal. It was nearly extinguished during the French Revolution, but it was revived through the efforts of Jacques Bertout (1753–1832), and recognized again for missionary work in the French colonies. In 1848, at the request of *Pius IX, François Marie Paul Libermann, a converted Jew from Alsace, merged the Congregation of the Holy Ghost with his own Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, founded in 1841 for the evangelization of Black ex-slaves. Libermann, who was an important spiritual writer, reorganized the Congregation before he died in 1852. The Holy Ghost Fathers were pioneers of RC missionary work in W. and E. Africa. They also work in N. and S. America, European countries (including Great Britain and Ireland), the West Indies and the islands of the Indian Ocean. Well-known members include Bl Jacques Desiré de Laval (1803–64), the Apostle of Mauritius, E. *Leen, and Bl Daniel Brottier (1876–1936), who transformed the orphanages of Auteuil.

H. J. Koren, C.S.Sp., The Spiritans: A History of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost (Pittsburgh, etc., 1958); id., To the Ends of the Earth: A General History of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost (ibid. [1983]). Poullart des Places's Spiritual Writings, ed., with Eng. tr., by H. J. Koren (ibid., 1959). J. Michel, C.S.Sp., Claude-François Poullart des Places, fondateur de la Congrégation du Saint-Esprit 1679 1709 [1962]. A. [L.] Van Kaam, C.S.Sp., A Light to the Gentiles: The Life of the Venerable Francis Libermann (Milwaukee [1959]). H. J. Koren in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 70 f., s.v.

Holy Helpers. See AUXILIARY SAINTS.

Holy Innocents. The children of *Bethlehem, 'from 2 years old and under', according to the account in Mt. (2: 16–18) massacred by order of Herod the Great, in a vain attempt to destroy the Infant Jesus. Their death is commemorated on 28 Dec. in the W. (29 Dec. in the E.). Until 1960, if it fell on a weekday it was celebrated in purple with a penitential rite, but in the Roman rite it is now kept with the full privileges of a martyrs' day (red vestments and the recital of the Gloria in Excelsis).

H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 608–16, s.v. 'Innocents (Massacre des)'.

Holy Island. See LINDISFARNE.

Holy Lance. See LANCE, HOLY.

Holy Land. A name given to Palestine/Israel since the Middle Ages with reference both to its having been the scene of the Incarnation and also to the existing sacred sites there, esp. the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem.

Holy Mountain, the. A designation of Mount *Athos, called 'holy' because of the large collection of monasteries which covers it.

Holy Name of Jesus. See NAME OF JESUS.

Holy Office. The *Roman Congregation established in connection with the *Inquisition (q.v.) by *Paul III in 1542 to deal with heresy internationally. It came to be known as the 'Congregatio Romanae et Universalis Inquisitionis' or 'Congregatio Sancti Officii'. Originally composed of six cardinals, it was reorganized, and the number raised to 13, by *Sixtus V in 1588; soon afterwards the Pope became the Congregation's Prefect, though he was normally represented by a cardinal-secretary. In 1908 it was affected by *Pius X's general reorganization of the Roman Congregations (q.v.), and its title became definitively 'Congregatio Sancti Officii'. In 1965 *Paul VI reformed it under the title 'Congregatio pro Doctrina Fidei' and assigned it the more positive function of promoting as well as safeguarding sound doctrine on faith and morals. The following year he made the cardinal-secretary into a pro-prefect and in 1968 into a cardinal prefect, thus bringing its structure into line with that of other Congregations. The reforms of Paul VI were substantially preserved by the Apostolic Constitution 'Pastor Bonus' of 1988 reforming the Roman *Curia; the official title is now 'Congregatio de Doctrina Fidei'.

H. Bangen, Die römische Curie, ihre gegenwärtige Zusammensetzung und ihr Geschäftsgang (1854), pp. 91–124. J. Simor, 'De sacris Congregationibus Romanis S. Officii et Concilii. I: De sacra Congr. Officii', Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, 15 (1866), pp. 133–6. For recent history, the fundamental work is the collection of Documenta inde a Concilio Vaticano Secundo expleto edita (1966–1985) issued by the Congregatio pro Doctrina Fidei (Rome, 1985). B. Ojetti, SJ, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 137–9, s.v. 'Roman Congregations'; U. Beste in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 944–6, s.v. 'Doctrine of the Faith, Congregation for the', both with bibl. See also works cited under INQUISITION and ROMAN CONGREGATIONS.

Holy Oils. See CHRISM.

Holy Orders. The higher grades (sacri ordines) of the Christian Ministry, i.e. those of *bishop, *priest, and *deacon (qq.v.). In the RC Church the *sub-diaconate (until suppressed) was also reckoned among the 'Major Orders' (q.v.).

Holy Places. The places in Palestine to which pilgrimage is made on account of their traditional association with many of the principal biblical events.

Holy Roman Empire. *Charlemagne was crowned as universal Roman Emperor by Pope *Leo III in Rome on Christmas Day 800, although Charlemagne himself claimed only to rule the W. section (Europa), thereby leaving the E. empire at *Constantinople to continue until 1453. After his son *Louis the Pious the imperial Roman title was held by W. rulers of diminishing territorial power until its temporary disappearance in 924. In 962 Otto I of Germany, who was already also King of Italy, was crowned Emperor in Rome by Pope *John XII; Otto's successors of the Saxon, Salian, and Hohenstaufen dynasties held the title until 1254. The expression 'holy empire' (sacrum imperium) was used from 1157 by *Frederick I as a counterpart to the spiritual jurisdiction of the Papacy (sancta ecclesia), and eventually the term 'Holy Roman Empire' came to be applied to the territories actually governed by the Emperor. Imperial power was, however, steadily diminishing in face of the claims of the Papacy (e.g. *Innocent III) and of the German princes, although the universal power of the Emperor continued to be asserted in such works as *Dante's Monarchia, prob. written for Henry VII.

Of the German rulers after 1250 who claimed the imperial title only five actually achieved coronation in Italy, *Charles V (at Bologna in 1529) being the last; from 1440 the title was held by successive rulers of the Habsburg dynasty, the empire being known with justice as 'the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation'. *Ferdinand II sought to use the imperial position to further the *Counter-Reformation in Germany, but the Treaty of *Westphalia finally undermined the Habsburg position outside their hereditary lands. The dignity was abolished by Napoleon I in 1806.

J. Bryce, The Holy Roman Empire (1864; enlarged and rev. edn., 1904; classic but outdated). A. Dempf, Sacrum Imperium: Geschichts- und Staatsphilosophie des Mittelalters und der politischen Renaissance (1929). R. Folz, L'Idée d'empire en Occident du V^e au XIV^e siècle (1953; Eng. tr., 1969). K. H. Schulze, Hegemoniales Kaisertum: Ottonen und Salier (Das Reich und die Deutschen [1991]). F. Heer, Das Heilige Römische Reich (Bern, 1967; abridged Eng. tr., 1968). J. W. Stieber, Pope Eugenius IV, the Council of Basel and the Secular and Ecclesiastical Authorities in the Empire (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 13; Leiden, 1978), esp. pp. 114–31.

On the history of the empire in the Middle Ages, see also T. Reuter, Germany in the Early Middle Ages c.800–1056 (1991); H. Fuhrmann, Deutsche Geschichte im hohen Mittelalter (1978; Eng. tr., Germany in the High Middle Ages, Cambridge, 1986); A. Haverkamp, Aufbruch und Gestaltung: Deutschland 1056–1273 (Die Neue Deutsche Geschichte, 2; 1984; Eng. tr., Medieval Germany, Oxford, 1988; 2nd edn., 1992); F. R. H. Du Boulay, Germany in the Later Middle Ages (1983). B. Arnold, Princes and Territories in Medieval Germany (Cambridge, 1991), esp. pp. 17–19, with refs.

Holy Saturday. The day before *Easter Sunday, also known as Easter Even (as in the BCP). It commemorates the resting of Christ's body in the tomb. In early times there were no special services. The BCP provides a special Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for the day; these are commonly used at the *Ante-Communion service, without a Celebration. Some modern Anglican liturgies, while providing a special Collect, etc., specifically state (e.g. in the words of the American BCP (1979)), 'there is no celebration of the Eucharist on this day', though, as the South African Prayer Book of 1989 adds, 'the Easter Vigil may begin in the evening'. In the Middle Ages it became customary to anticipate the first Mass of Easter on the morning of Holy Saturday. This practice is still followed in the E. Orthodox Church, but in the RC Church it was abandoned after 1955, and the liturgy, with the traditional ceremonies, restored to the Saturday–Sunday night. See PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE.

Holy See. The see of the Bishop of Rome. As commonly used, it denotes the Papacy, esp. in reference to the authority, jurisdiction, and functions of government which attach to it.

Holy Sepulchre. The rock cave in *Jerusalem where, acc. to an early tradition, Christ was buried and rose from the dead. The tomb is said to have been 'discovered' by St *Helena, mother of the Emperor *Constantine, and the first 'Church of the Holy Sepulchre' (more correctly, that of the 'Anastasis', or Resurrection) was dedicated *c.*335. In 626 a new church was completed, after the Persians had destroyed the first in 614, but this building was so much damaged in the 10th and 11th cents. that a third building was set up *c.*1050. In place of this church, the Crusaders built a much larger one (dedicated in 1149), to cover all the neighbouring holy places, including the site of *Calvary. This in turn, after having been rebuilt in 1310, was partly destroyed by fire in 1808. The present church largely dates from 1810, though some of the earlier bell tower (1160–80) remains, in a poor state of repair.

The main structure of the church consists of two halves: on the west the domed building which covers the Holy Sepulchre itself, and on the east the church proper. There are also several chapels and shrines in which many of the ancient Christian bodies have rights. The scene on Sunday mornings, when the various rites, all with music, are proceeding simultaneously, is unique in Christendom. Here also the Holy Week rites of the different Churches are carried out, each with its peculiar ceremonies and on the dates fixed by its own calendar. Anglicans, with the permission of the Orthodox authorities, have been allowed since the end of the 19th cent. to celebrate the *Eucharist in the 'Chapel of Abraham', which stands above the site of Calvary. The fact that the Holy Sepulchre lies within the city itself (contrast Heb. 13: 12) is attributed to the circumstance that the modern city occupies a slightly different position from that of NT times. See also GORDON'S CALVARY.

H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1914–26), pp. 89–300, with plates 12–29. E. Wistrand, Konstantins Kirche am heiligen Grab in Jerusalem nach den ältesten literarischen Zeugnissen (Acta Universitatis Gotoburgensis, 58; 1952, 1). A. Parrot, Golgotha et Saint-Sépulcre (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 6; 1955; Eng. tr., 1957). C. Coüasnon, OP, The Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem (1974). V. C. Corbo, OFM, Il Santo Sepolcro di Gerusalemme (3 parts, Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, Collectio Maior, 29; Jerusalem [1982]), with Eng. summary of pt. 1; pts. 2 and 3 (plans and photographs) with captions in Ital. and Eng. H. Busse and G. Kretschmar, Jerusalemer Heiligtumstraditionen im altkirchlicher und frühislamischer Zeit (Abhandlungen des Deutschen Palästinavereins [8]; Wiesbaden, 1987). W. Harvey, Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Jerusalem: Structural Survey. Final Report (1935). H. Cazelles, PSS, and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 11 (1991), cols. 399–431, s.v. 'Saint Sepulchre'.

Holy Shroud. A relic, preserved at Turin since 1578, and long venerated as the winding-sheet in which Christ's body was wrapped for burial (Mt. 27: 59, etc.). The shroud bears the imprint of the front and back of a human body marked with the traditional stigmata. Apart from attempts by I. Wilson and others to identify it with the Edessa Mandylion which was brought to Constantinople in 944, its history cannot be traced before the mid-14th cent., and carbon-dating tests carried out in 1988 indicated a date between 1260 and 1390 for the harvesting of the flax from which it is woven.

C. U. J. Chevalier, 'Le Saint Suaire de Turin est-il l'original ou une copie?', Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société savoisienne d'Histoire et d'Archéologie, 38 (1899), pp. 105–33, also pub. separately; also later works of this author. Supporters of the genuineness of the relic, basing their conclusions on the photographic evidence obtained after the Exposition of 1898 and later, incl. P. Vignon, Le Linceul du Christ: Étude scientifique (1902; Eng. tr., 1902); id., Le Saint Suaire de Turin devant la science, l'archéologie, l'histoire, l'iconographie, la logique (1938); and P. M. Rinaldi, SDB, It is the Lord: A Study of the Shroud of Christ (New York, 1972; in Britain, The Man in the Shroud, 1972). I. Wilson, The Shroud of Turin (New York, 1978; in Britain, The Turin Shroud, 1978); A. Cameron, The Sceptic and the Shroud (Inaugural Lecture, London, 1980), repr. in Continuity and Change in Sixth-Century Byzantium (1981), no. 5. J. [E.] Walsh, The Shroud (New York, 1963; London, 1964). Works which take account of the carbon-dating incl. O. Celier, Le signe du linceul: Le Saint Suaire de Turin. De la relique à l'image (1992), and H. Kersten and E. R. Gruber, Das Jesus Komplott (Munich [1992]).

Holy Spirit. In Christian theology, the Third Person of the Holy *Trinity, distinct from, but consubstantial, coequal, and coeternal with, the Father and the Son, and in the fullest sense God. It is held that the mode of the Spirit's procession in the Godhead is by way of 'spiration' (not 'generation') and that this procession takes place as from a single principle.

Christian theologians point to a gradual unfolding of the doctrine in the OT, where the notion of the 'Spirit' (ruach) plays a large part as an instrument of Divine action, both in nature and in the human heart. The Spirit of God is already operative at the Creation, brooding on the face of the waters (Gen. 1: 2). In early times, the Hebrews saw evidence of the Spirit's action in deeds of valour and prowess. The Divine Spirit inspired the artistic skill of Bezaleel (Exod. 36: 1 f.), the successes of *Joshua (Deut. 34: 9), and the strength of *Samson (Jgs. 14: 6). In particular the Spirit was bestowed on those appointed to communicate Divine truth and esp. on the Prophets (Is. 61: 1 f.). He is also the chief power making for moral purity and holiness (Ps. 51: 11). Above all, the Spirit was to be the possession of the coming Davidic King (Is. 11: 2) and of the Servant of the Lord (Is. 42: 1); and in the future time of fulfilled hope there would be a large extension of the Spirit's activities and power (Ezek. 36: 26 f.; Joel 2: 28–32). In the later OT writings the Spirit was increasingly seen as the bestower of intellectual capacities. It is the Spirit of understanding which fills the devout man (Ecclus. 39: 6) and conveys to him wisdom and religious knowledge (Wisd. 7: 7 and 9: 17).

Although Jesus said little about the Spirit beyond promising that Christians on trial would be assisted by the Spirit (Mk. 13: 11; cf. Mt. 10: 20 and Lk. 12: 12), the Resurrection faith of His disciples was strongly marked by the experience of the Spirit and they interpreted this as God's gift at the dawn of the coming age. This central conviction is epitomized in the quotation of Joel 2: 28–32 in the Acts 2 account of St *Peter's speech on the day of *Pentecost following the dramatic outpouring of the Spirit on the disciples. The rest of Acts represents the early Christian mission as guided by the Spirit (e.g. 11: 12, 15: 28, and 16: 6 f.). On occasion the Apostles convey the Spirit by the laying on of hands (8: 15–17 and 19: 6). See HANDS, IMPOSITION OF.

The Gospels variously present Jesus as empowered by the Spirit at His baptism (Mk. 1: 10 and parallels), driven by the Spirit into the wilderness (Mk. 1: 12 and parallels), and performing *exorcism by the Spirit (Matt. 12: 28). Lk. sees this endowment as the fulfilment of prophecy (Is. 61: 1) and like Matt. 1: 18 and 20 claims the operation of the Spirit in the conception of Jesus (Lk. 1: 35). All agree with Jn. 7: 39 that the Spirit was not more generally available until after Jesus' death and resurrection.

The OT view of this intermittently active but impersonal power of God undergoes two developments in the NT. The Spirit is held to be given to all members at their *Baptism, and, understood in the light of Christ, by St *Paul and Jn. the concept is personalized and given ethical content. In the discourses of Jn. 14–16 the Spirit is 'another Comforter', distinct from Jesus, whom He succeeds, but performing similar works and making present what Jesus had said and done. Paul can call the Spirit 'the Spirit of Jesus' (Phil. 1: 19; cf. Rom. 8: 9 and Gal. 4: 6), and can associate this so closely with Jesus that they are almost identified (Rom. 8: 9–11; perhaps 2 Cor. 3: 17). The whole of Christian life is 'in Christ', or 'in the Spirit', 'being led by the Spirit'. Possessing the Spirit unites believers with the Lord (1 Cor. 6: 17) and has moral implications (1 Cor. 3: 16 and Gal. 5). The Spirit is active in Christian worship (Rom. 8: 26 f.; cf. 1 Cor. 14), proclamation and instruction (1 Cor. 2), and in moral discernment (1 Cor. 7: 40). The gift of the Spirit takes different forms (1 Cor. 12; cf. Rom. 12), implying different roles and responsibilities in the Church. Finally the 'first-fruits of the Spirit' (Rom. 8: 23; or 'earnest of the Spirit', 2 Cor. 1: 22 and 5: 5), possessed by and possessing believers, will be the means by which God raises them (Rom. 8: 11) as spiritual bodies (cf. 1 Cor. 15: 42–44).

The doctrine of the Spirit in a theologically elaborated form, though implicit in the NT, was not reached for some centuries. An important stage was reached in *Tertullian. The *Montanists (q.v.) showed the need to distinguish between true and false operations of the Holy Spirit; but despite the insistence of the Montanists on the Spirit's activities, their strange conceptions of the operation of the Spirit do not seem to have left any permanent mark on the development of the doctrine. *Origen emphasized that the characteristic sphere of the Spirit's operation was the Church, as contrasted with the whole of Creation which was that of the Word. From AD 360 onwards the doctrine of the Spirit became a matter of acute controversy. A group of theologians known as the '*Macedonians', while maintaining against the *Arians the full Divinity of the Son, denied that of the Spirit. The most considerable work which these discussions provoked was St *Basil's De Spiritu Sancto. At the Council of *Constantinople of 381 Macedonianism was finally repudiated and the full doctrine of the Spirit received authoritative acceptance in the Church. In the W. this doctrine was elaborated by St *Augustine in his De Trinitate, notably by his conception of the Spirit as the Bond of Union in the Holy Trinity.

On the difference between the E. and W. doctrines of the Spirit, see also DOUBLE PROCESSION; FILIOQUE.

See also CHARISMATIC RENEWAL MOVEMENT and PENTECOSTALISM.

Important Patristic discussions of the doctrine incl. St *Athanasius, Epp. ad Serapionem; St *Cyril of Jerusalem, Catech. Lect. 16; St Basil, De Spiritu Sancto; and St *Ambrose, De Spiritu Sancto. The doctrine also has a prominent place in St Augustine, De Trinitate. The subject is discussed in all systematic expositions of Christian doctrine, e.g. the works of St *John of Damascus and of St *Thomas Aquinas (S. Theol. 1, qq. 36–43), as well as in the modern treatises of D. *Petavius and K. *Barth. Modern works dealing expressly with the doctrine include: H. B. *Swete, The Holy Spirit in the New Testament (1909); id., The Holy Spirit in the Ancient Church (1912), and other works; H. Watkin-Jones, The Holy Spirit in the Mediaeval Church (1922); id., The Holy Spirit from Arminius to Wesley [1929]. B. H. *Streeter (ed.), The Spirit: God and His Relation to Man considered from the standpoint of Philosophy, Psychology and Art (1919). H. W. *Robinson, The Christian Experience of the Holy Spirit (1928). C. K. Barrett, The Holy Spirit and the Gospel Tradition (1947). M. H. Lavocat, OP, L'Esprit d'amour: Essai de synthèse de la doctrine catholique sur le Saint-Esprit (vol. 1 [1950: no more pub.]). G. S. Hendry, The Holy Spirit in Christian Theology (1957). H. Mühlen, Der Heilige Geist als Person (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 26 [1963]; 4th edn., 1980). H. Berkhof, The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit (Annie Kinkead Warfield Lectures, 1963–4; 1965). W.-D. Hauschild, Gottes Geist und der Mensch: Studien zur frühchristlichen Pneumatologie (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, 63; 1972). J. V. Taylor, The Go-Between God: The Holy Spirit and the Christian Mission (1972). J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit: A Study of the Religious and Charismatic Experience of Jesus and the First Christians as Reflected in the New Testament (1975). G. W. H. Lampe, God as Spirit (Bampton Lectures, 1976; Oxford, 1977). C. F. D. Moule, The Holy Spirit (1978). E. Schweizer, Heiliger Geist (Stuttgart, 1978; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1980; London, 1981). Y. *Congar, OP, Je crois en l'Esprit Saint (3 vols., 1979–80; Eng. tr., 1983). A. I. C. Heron, The Holy Spirit: The Holy Spirit in the Bible, in the History of Christian Thought and in Recent Theology (1983). H. B. Swete in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 113–33, s.v.; E. Schweizer and others in TWNT 6 (1959), cols. 357–453, s.v. πνεῦμα; partial Eng. tr. as Spirit of God (1960); J. Guillet, SJ, J. Gribomont, OSB, and others in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 1246–1333, s.v. 'Esprit Saint'.

Holy Synod. From 1721 to 1917, the supreme organ of government in the *Russian Orthodox Church. It was not a real synod, but an ecclesiastical committee composed of bishops and clergy, established by Peter the Great to replace the earlier government of the Church by the Russian *Patriarch. The lay procurator attended as the Emperor's representative, but was not a member. In 1917, after the first Revolution, it was abolished and the patriarchate restored.

Holy Water. Water which has been blessed for certain specific religious purposes. Acc. to W. usage, it is blessed by a priest acting in the name of the Church; he may add to it a small quantity of *salt, blessed with a separate prayer. In the E. water is blessed at the Great Blessing of the Waters on the feast of the *Epiphany, at Lesser Blessings of Water on the first day of each month, and on other occasions. By a natural symbolism holy water is used for blessings, dedications, and exorcisms, also at burials, and for ceremonial cleansing on entering a church, as well as in the W. in the *Asperges at the beginning of Mass. When the water is blessed during the Mass, the blessing of the water and the Asperges take the place of the normal penitential rite. The Christian use of water for religious purposes other than Baptism can be traced back to the 4th cent. in the E. and to the 5th in the W. The use of 'Holy Water stoups' at the entrance of churches had become general at any rate by Norman times. See also STOUPS.

A. Gastoué, L'Eau bénite: Ses origines, son histoire, son usage (1908); A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter (1909), pp. 43–220; A. A. King, Holy Water: The Use of Water for Ceremonial and Purificatory Purposes in Pagan, Jewish and Christian Times (1926).

Holy Week. The week preceding *Easter, observed throughout Catholic Christendom both in E. and W. as a period of devotion to the Passion of Christ. The various traditional rites of the week, of which each day has its own, probably began to develop at *Jerusalem in the 4th cent., when pilgrimages became easily possible, and Christians could indulge a natural desire to re-enact the last scenes of the life of Christ in liturgical drama. The Pilgrimage of *Egeria, now generally thought to describe a visit in 381–4, gives a detailed account of the contemporary observance of Holy Week in Jerusalem. For the ceremonies proper to each day in more recent E. and W. liturgical practice, see PALM SUNDAY, MAUNDY THURSDAY, GOOD FRIDAY, HOLY SATURDAY, PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE, EASTER.

H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ (ed.), Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3; Rome, 1956–7). J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week, its Services and Ceremonial (*Alcuin Club Collections, no. 29; 1932). A. Löhr, Die Heilige Woche (Regensburg, 1957; Eng. tr., 1958). J. G. Davies, Holy Week: A Short History (Ecumenical Studies in Worship, 11; 1963). J. D. Crichton, The Liturgy of Holy Week (Dublin, 1983). T. J. Talley, The Origins of the Liturgical Year (New York [1986]), esp. pp. 42–54. R. Taft, SJ, 'A Tale of Two Cities: The Byzantine Holy Week Triduum as a Paradigm of Liturgical History', in J. N. Alexander (ed.), Time and Community: In Honor of Thomas Julian Talley (Washington, DC, 1990), pp. 21–41.

Holy Year. A year during which the Pope grants a special *indulgence, the so-called *Jubilee, to all those who visit Rome, on certain conditions. It was instituted in 1300 by *Boniface VIII, who had meant it to be celebrated every 100 years. *Clement VI, in 1343, however, changed the period to 50; *Urban VI, in 1389, to 33 in honour of the years of the Lord's earthly life; and Paul II, in 1470, settled on 25, the regular interval that has been kept ever since. The conditions and special benefits are laid down each time by a special bull, issued on the preceding Feast of the *Ascension. The chief conditions are normally worthy reception of the Sacraments and visits to the four *basilicas during a specified time. The benefits include 'plenary indulgence' and exceptional powers for the confessors, who may absolve from most sins ordinarily reserved to higher authority, and commute all vows except those reserved to the Pope. One of the most important ceremonies of the Holy Year is the opening of the *Holy Door (q.v.) by the Pope before the First Christmas Vespers, and its walling up again at the same time a year later. Originally the Jubilee Indulgence was to be gained only at Rome, but since 1500 it has been extended to all churches throughout the world, to which it is granted for the six months following the Roman year on similar conditions, among them visits to local shrines and works of penance and charity. A regular Holy Year was last celebrated in 1975.

In addition to the regular Holy Years, in the 20th cent. there have been special ones, which have taken two forms: Holy Years of Redemption and Marian Years. The former celebrate the *Crucifixion and *Resurrection of Christ (conventionally dated AD 33) and run from the Feast of the *Annunication to Easter Sunday of the following year; they have taken place in 1933–4 and 1983–4. The Marian Years are in honour of the BVM. The first lasted from 8 Dec. 1953 to 8 Dec. 1954 and celebrated the centenary of the definition of the dogma of the *Immaculate Conception; the second lasted from *Whitsunday 1987 to the feast of the *Assumption 1988 and celebrated the presumed bimillenary of the birth of the BVM.

H. Thurston, SJ, The Holy Year of Jubilee: An Account of the History and Ceremony of the Roman Jubilee (1900). P. Bargellini, L'Anno Santo: Nella storia, nella letteratura e nell'arte (Florence, 1974). H. Smolinsky in TRE 17, pp. 282–5, s.v. 'Jubeljahr, II', with bibl.

Homberg, Synod of. A synod which *Philip, Landgraf of Hesse, convoked at Homberg, 20 miles S. of Cassel, on 21 Oct. 1526 to establish a constitution on Protestant principles for the Church of his domains. A set of 158 articles (paradoxa, pub. in Erfurt, 1527), prepared by F. *Lambert, was taken as the basis of the proceedings, while the opponent of the reforming doctrines was Nicolas Herborn (sometimes called Nicolas Ferber). The one important outcome of the Synod was the appointment of a committee to draw up a Church Order for Hesse, which issued the 'Reformatio Ecclesiarum Hassiae', a set of regulations on a Protestant basis covering the whole area of Church life. By insisting on the independence of each Christian community, responsible for the maintenance of its own discipline, the 'Reformatio' upheld a congregationalism which went far beyond M. *Luther's teachings. Largely through Luther's influence, Philip of Hesse refrained from allowing it to be promulgated, and in consequence it was never enforced, nor even published until 1748.

Crit. text of the 'Reformatio Ecclesiarum Hassiae' in E. Sehling (ed.), Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts, 8, I. Hälfte (Tübingen, 1965), pp. 43–65, with introd. material, pp. 9–42. More important clauses in Kidd, pp. 222–30 (no. 98). W. Schmitt, Die Synode zu Homberg und ihre Vorgeschichte: Festschrift zur vierhundert-Jahrfeier der Homberger Synode (Homberg, 1926). E. Kurten, OFM, Franz Lambert von Avignon und Nikolaus Herborn in ihrer Stellung zum Ordensgedanken und zum Franziskanertum im Besonderen (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 72; 1950). G. Müller, 'Die Synode als Fundament der evangelischen Kirche in Hessen, Homberg 1526–1976', Jahrbuch des hessischen Kirchengeschichtlichen Vereinigung, 27 (1976), pp. 129–46; R. Haas, 'Lamberts "Paradoxa" und die hessischen Kirchenordnungen', in P. Fraenkel (ed.), Pour retrouver François Lambert (Bibliotheca Bibliographica Aureliana, 108; Baden Baden, 1987), pp. 257–72.

homiliary (Lat. homiliarium). A collection of homilies arranged acc. to the ecclesiastical calendar for reading at the office of *Mattins. Homiliaries were compiled esp. in the earlier Middle Ages, and among surviving examples are those of *Paul the Deacon (c. AD 790), made at the command of *Charlemagne, and of Alain of Farfa (d. 770).

H. Barré, C.S.Sp., Les Homéliaires carolingiens de l'école d'Auxerre: Authenticité, inventaire, tableaux comparatifs, initia (ST 225; 1962); R. Grégoire, OSB, Les Homéliaires du Moyen Age: Inventaire et analyse des manuscrits (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 6; 1966); id., Homéliaires liturgiques médiévaux: Analyse des manuscrits (Biblioteca degli Studi Medievali, 12; Spoleto, 1980). Vogel, Sources, pp. 363–5, for further refs.

Homilies, the Books of. The plan of issuing prescribed homilies for the use of disaffected and unlearned clergy was agreed to in the Convocation which met on 20 Jan. 1542. A collection was duly produced 12 months later, but, prob. because *Henry VIII refused to authorize it, not formally issued until early in *Edward VI's reign, when it appeared with the authority of the Council on 31 July 1547. It reflected T. *Cranmer's pastoral concern for sound teaching in the vernacular. The subjects of its 12 homilies were: (1) A fruitful Exhortation to the Reading of Holy Scripture (Cranmer); (2) Of the Misery of all Mankind (Archdeacon John Harpsfield, 1516–78); (3) Of the Salvation of all Mankind (Cranmer); (4) Of the true and lively Faith (Cranmer); (5) Of Good Works (Cranmer); (6) Of Christian Love and Charity (E. *Bonner); (7) Against Swearing and Perjury; (8) Of the Declining from God; (9) An Exhortation against the Fear of Death (prob. Cranmer); (10) An Exhortation to Obedience; (11) Against Whoredom and Adultery; (12) Against Strife and Contention.

A 'Second Book', with 21 further homilies, was issued under *Elizabeth I. It was prob. completed by the beginning of 1563, but it was not published in its final form until 1571. Their titles are listed in Art. 35 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The majority are the work of J. *Jewel; but E. *Grindal wrote no. 5 and M. *Parker (prob.) no. 17. No. 21 ('Against Rebellion') was added in 1571 in view of the Northern Rebellion of 1569.

From Elizabethan times, the Homilies provided a considerable element in Anglican preaching, and acquired status alongside the BCP and Thirty-Nine Articles as a repository of Anglican doctrine. Bishops frequently enjoined that they should be read and inquired into practice during their triennial visitations. At the Restoration (1660) they were revived, and, though hopes of a revision were unfulfilled, they were frequently cited by R. *South, G. *Morley, G. *Hickes, and the later *Nonjurors. Though they are unsuitable for modern use, the Homilies retain a measure of authority in view of Art. 35, while Art. 11 refers to the 'Homily of Justification' (presumably no. 3 of the First Book) for a fuller account of the 'most wholesome doctrine' 'that we are justified by faith only'.

The Books of Homilies have frequently been repr. Crit. edn. of the 1547 Homilies, with Elizabethan Homily 'Against Rebellion', by R. B. Bond (Toronto, etc. [1987]), incl. introd., pp. 3–45. J. N. King, English Reformation Literature (Princeton, NJ [1982]), esp. pp. 123–7 and 131–4.

Homilies, Clementine. See CLEMENTINE LITERATURE.

Homoeans. The Arian party which came into existence *c.*355 under the leadership of *Acacius, Bp. of Caesarea. Repudiating both the *Homoousion and the Homoiousion, they sought to confine theological discussion about the Person of the Son to the assertion that He was like (Gk. ὅμοιος, 'like') the Father. For a brief interval they were closely associated with the much more orthodox *Semiarians.

homoioteleuton (Gk. ὅμοιος, 'like', and τελευτή, 'ending'). In MSS, the repetition of the same sequence of letters or words in two neighbouring places, considered as a source of error in copying. Where the repeated sequence occurs at the beginning of a word or phrase, the alternative expression 'homoioarcton' is occasionally used.

Homoousion (Gk. ὁμοούσιον, 'of one substance'; rendered in Lat. consubstantialis). The term used in the *Nicene Creed to express the relations of the Father and the Son within the Godhead and originally designed to exclude *Arianism. Its earlier associations with the *Gnostics and *Paul of Samosata may have made it suspect at first, and many *Origenists, who had no sympathy with Arianism, preferred the term 'Homoiousion' (ὁμοιούσιον, i.e. 'of like substance with the Father'), which was held to leave more room for distinctions in the Godhead.

J. F. Bethune-Baker, The Meaning of Homoousios in the 'Constantinopolitan' Creed (Texts and Studies, 7, no. 1; Cambridge, 1901). G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), chs. 10 f., pp. 197–241. C. Hauret, Comment le défenseur de Nicée a-t-il compris le dogme de Nicée? (*Gregorian University thesis; Bruges, 1936). J. Lebon, 'Le Sort du "Consubstantiel" Nicéen', RHE 47 (1952), pp. 485–529, and 48 (1953), pp. 632–82. [G.] C. Stead, Divine Substance (Oxford, 1977), esp. pp. 190–266. See also works cited s.v. ARIANISM.

homosexuality. There are few biblical references to homosexual behaviour. In the OT the definite references are in the story of Sodom in Gen. 19: 4–11, the probably dependent incident recorded in Jgs. 19, and in Lev. 18: 22 and 20: 13. Both the infrequency of the references and their contexts encourage the view that this was not a subject of great concern to OT writers, and, although later Christian exegesis used the condemnation of Sodom as evidence of particular Divine displeasure at the homosexual assault intended by its inhabitants, the story itself does not emphasize this particular sin nor does subsequent OT reflection on it (Is. 1, Ezek. 16, and Jer. 23). In the NT homosexual behaviour is mentioned and condemned in 1 Cor. 6: 9–11, 1 Tim. 1: 10, and most influentially in Rom. 1: 27 which many moralists have seen as supporting the view that homosexuality is, with other sexual acts which are not procreative, contrary to *Natural Law.

Patristic, medieval, and later Christian moralists have not questioned this judgement, and it is only in recent times that some writers have argued that the quality of a relationship, be it homosexual or heterosexual, is what determines its moral value. Whether they have taken this view or have continued to regard homosexual behaviour as sinful, Christian Churches have usually favoured the reform of the civil law which has occurred in many countries, removing the harsh penalties previously imposed. In England the Churches played a significant part in supporting the appointment of the Committee responsible for the Wolfenden Report of 1957 and the enactment of its recommendations as the Sexual Offences Act 1967, which removed criminal sanctions from homosexual behaviour between consenting adults in private. These developments have been accompanied by changes in attitude among psychiatrists, who no longer tend to regard homosexual leaning as something to be cured. In 1991 the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the C of E, while emphasising that 'homophile [i.e. homosexual] orientation and its expression in sexual activity do not constitute a parallel and alternative form of human sexual activity as complete within the terms of the created order as the heterosexual', nevertheless did not reject homosexual activity in permanent relationships among the laity, but insisted that the clergy have a particular responsibility to maintain the Scriptural ideal; they 'cannot claim the liberty to enter into sexually active homophile relationships'.

D. S. Bailey, Homosexuality and the Western Christian Tradition (1955). The Report of a Working Party of the Board for Social Responsibility [of the C of E], Homosexual Relationships: A Contribution to Discussion (1979); Issues in Human Sexuality: A Statement by the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England, December 1991 (1991). P. Coleman, Christian Attitudes to Homosexuality (1980; rev. as Gay Christians: A Moral Dilemma, 1989). J. Boswell, Christianity, Social Tolerance, and Homosexuality: Gay People in Western Europe from the Beginning of the Christian Era to the Fourteenth Century (Chicago and London, 1980). J. Dollimore, Sexual Dissidence: Augustine to Wilde, Freud to Foucault (Oxford, 1991).

Honest to God. See ROBINSON, J. A. T.

Honoratus, St (d. 429/30), founder and first abbot of the monastery of *Lérins and later Bp. of Arles. Of consular family, he was converted to Christianity and set out with his brother Venantius on a pilgrimage to the holy places in Syria and Egypt; but on his brother's death in Achaia, he returned through *Rome and with the encouragement of Leontius, Bp. of Fréjus, settled in the island of Lérins, where he founded (c.410) the celebrated monastery. In 427 or early 428 he became Bp. of Arles. St *Hilary of Arles, his successor in the see and biographer, was probably a relative. His writings have been lost. Feast day, 16 Jan.

Crit. text of Hilary's Life of Honoratus by S. Cavallin, Vitae Sanctorum Honorati et Hilarii (Skrifter utgivna av Vetenskaps-Societeten i Lund, 40; 1952), pp. 47–78, with introd., pp. 13–34, and notes, pp. 111–13. It is also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by M.-D. Valentin, OP (SC 235; 1977). [W.] O. Chadwick, 'Euladius of Arles', JTS 46 (1945), pp. 200–5, esp. p. 205. S. Pricoco, L'Isola dei santi: Il cenobio di Lerino e le origini del monachesimo gallico (Filologia e Critica, 23 [1978]), passim.

Honorius I (d. 638), Pope from 625. He came from a noble family of the Campagna, but little is known of his life before his election to the Papacy. Like his predecessor, St *Gregory the Great (d. 604), he interested himself in the Christianization of the Anglo-Saxons, and sent his congratulations to King *Edwin of Northumbria on the occasion of his Baptism in 627. He also sent St *Birinus to preach in Britain, and gave the pallium to Honorius of Canterbury and *Paulinus of York. In 628 he granted the monastery of *Bobbio *exemption from episcopal jurisdiction other than that of the Pope. He gained considerable influence over the government of Italy by his wise administration of the patrimony of Peter, and despite heavy expenditure on churches and other buildings collected a considerable Papal treasure. One of his principal achievements was the ending of the schism of the patriarchs of *Aquileia-Grado, which had been renewed by Fortunatus, whom he deposed, probably with the help of the Exarch of *Ravenna. Gratitude for this assistance may have influenced his attitude towards the Emp. *Heraclius in the matter of the *Monothelite heresy, which has been among the chief historical arguments against Papal Infallibility. About 634 *Sergius, the Patr. of *Constantinople, addressed a letter to the Pope interrogating him on the question of the 'one energy' (μία ἐνέργεια) of Christ. This formula, which, while confessing the two natures, attributed only one mode of activity—that of the Divine Word—to the Incarnate Christ, had been found useful in the E. for reconciling the Monophysites. It was strenuously opposed, however, by *Sophronius of Jerusalem, and Sergius, in his diplomatic letter to Honorius, stressed the unity of the Person of Christ safeguarded by the new formula, while disregarding the duality of natures. Without further inquiries, Honorius sent back a favourable reply in which he used the unfortunate expression 'one will' in Christ. When his injunction of silence on both parties was disobeyed, he wrote a second letter rejecting the expression 'two wills' as giving rise to contentions, though insisting strongly on the two natures. He died in 638, the year of the publication of the *Ecthesis, the charter of Monothelitism, which utilized Honorius' formula of the 'one will'.

His successors repeatedly condemned the heresy, and at the Council of *Constantinople (681) Honorius himself was formally anathematized. This condemnation, which was forgotten in the W. during the Middle Ages, was discussed in the 15th cent. at the negotiations for reunion between the Catholic and Orthodox Churches, and again in the *Gallican controversies of the 17th and 18th cents., and before the definition of Papal Infallibility in 1870. The authenticity of the letter of Honorius as well as of the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, once rejected by some RC scholars, e.g. C. *Baronius, is now generally admitted. The common argument in defence of Honorius is that the letters do not contain heretical teaching, but only gravely imprudent expressions, and that, in these circumstances, condemnation of a Pope's carelessness by a General Council was justified.

J. P. Migne, PL 80. 463–94. J. J. I. von *Döllinger, Die Papstfabeln des Mittelalters (1863), pp. 131–53; C. J. *Hefele, Causa Honorii Papae (Naples, 1870); J. *Chapman, OSB, 'The Condemnation of Pope Honorius', Dublin Review, 139 (1906), pp. 129–54; 140 (1907), pp. 42–72; P. Galtier, SJ, 'La Première Lettre du Pape Honorius', Gregorianum, 29 (1948), pp. 42–61. R. Bäumer, 'Die Wiederentdeckung der Honoriusfrage im Abendland', RQ 56 (1961), pp. 200–14. G. Kreuzer, Die Honoriusfrage im Mittelalter und in der Neuzeit (Päpste und Papsttum, 8; 1975). G. Schwaiger, 'Die Honoriusfrage', ZKG 88 (1977), pp. 85–97. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 347–538. Mann, 1 (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 304–45. E. Amann in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 93–131; G. Schwaiger in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 566–8, s.v.

Honorius III (d. 1227), Pope from 1216. Cencio Savelli was a native of Rome. He entered the household of Cardinal Giacinto Bobone (later *Celestine III) and became a canon of Sta Maria Maggiore and Papal subdeacon under Clement III (1187–91). His administrative career was associated at first with the Papal Chamber (Treasury). He became Papal chamberlain (1188) and from 1194 (when he was made a cardinal-deacon) until 1198 he held the office together with the chancellorship. He was promoted cardinal-priest in 1201. On 18 July 1216 he was elected to succeed *Innocent III and consecrated at Perugia on 24 July. In general he was concerned with the implementation of his predecessor's policies and of the decrees of the Fourth *Lateran Council. On 22 Nov. 1220 he crowned the Emp. *Frederick II in St Peter's on promises that he would uphold the rights of the Church and promote a crusade. He took a prominent part in political affairs throughout Europe, acting as arbitrator between Philip II of France and James of Aragon, supporting Henry III of England (which he virtually ruled during the King's minority), crowning Peter Altisodoreus Emp. of Byzantium (1217), and defending the privileges of the Church in Bohemia (1223). He also approved the *Dominican,

*Franciscan, and *Carmelite Orders and fostered the growth of their Third Orders. The main sources for the pontificate are the Registers (the earliest complete set) and the original letters. In 1226 he approved the official collection of his decretals, the 'Compilatio Quinta'. He was the author of the Liber Censuum (1192, q.v.), of the Ordo Romanus* XII (Mabillon), which included a coronation order, and of sermons. Also attributed to him are a Life of Gregory VII and additions to the Liber Pontificalis.

Opera Omnia, ed. C. A. Horoy, Medii Aevi Bibliotheca Patristica (5 vols., Paris, 1879–83); Selected Letters, ed. C. Rodenberg in MGH, Ep. Saec. XIII, 1 (1883), pp. 1–260; Calendar of his Register by P. Pressutti (2 vols., Rome, 1888–95). Docs. of his pontificate relating to Spain ed. D. Mansilla (Monumenta Hispaniae Vaticana. Sección: Registros, 2; Rome, 1965). J. E. Sayers, Papal Government and England during the Pontificate of Honorius III (1216–1227) (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 21; 1984), with bibl. F. Vernet, Études sur les sermons d'Honorius III (thesis, Lyons, 1888); A. Keutner, Papsttum und Krieg unter dem Pontificat des Papstes Honorius III (1935). W. Ullmann, 'Honorius III and the Prohibition of Legal Studies', Juridical Review, 60 (1948), pp. 177–86; S. [G.] Kuttner, 'Papst Honorius III. und das Studium des Zivilrechts', in Festschrift für Martin Wolff, ed. E. von Caemmerer and others (Tübingen, 1952), pp. 79–101. C. Thouzellier in Fliche and Martin, 10 (1950), pp. 291–304, with bibl. H. Schulz in PRE (3rd edn.), 8 (1900), pp. 318–33, s.v.; G. Mollat in EC 9 (1952), cols. 141–3, s.v. 'Onorio III'.

Honorius 'of Autun' (Augustodunensis) (early 12th cent.), popular theologian. In his De luminaribus ecclesiae he describes himself as 'Honorius Augustodunensis ecclesiae presbyter et scholasticus', and nothing more is certainly known of his life. The view of earlier scholars that 'Augustodunensis' refers to Autun has been abandoned, but no agreed alternative has been found. There are indications that he spent part of his life in England, but was not an Englishman, and that he had some connection with *Canterbury and came for a time under the influence of St *Anselm. It is also usually agreed that the later part of his life was spent in S. Germany as a monk, and probably a recluse. He was a very prolific writer. To his English period belong: the Elucidarium, one of the earliest surveys of Christian doctrine, in the form of a dialogue between pupil and master. It had a wide and lasting popularity, and was translated into several vernaculars, beginning with extracts in Anglo-Saxon in his own lifetime; the Sigillum sanctae Mariae, an exposition of the lessons for the feast of the *Assumption, including a short commentary on the Song of Songs, in which it is given a Marian interpretation; the Gemma animae, a work on the liturgy and liturgical practices with much allegory and symbolism. To his German period belong long commentaries on the Psalter and on the Song of Songs, which is here interpreted as applying to Christ and the Church; a Clavis physicae consisting of extracts from Johannes Scottus *Erigena; and the De luminaribus ecclesiae, a brief catalogue of Christian writers, ending with 21 works of his own, a list which is far from complete. Honorius also wrote Imago mundi, a compendium of cosmology and geography, which enjoyed very wide popularity throughout the Middle Ages and was translated into various vernaculars. Many of his shorter tracts are concerned with themes of topical interest in the period of the reforms associated with *Gregory VII, such as the celibacy of the clergy. Honorius was not an original thinker or writer, but he wrote in simple language for those without access to many books, and he had the art of making interesting any subject on which he touched.

Of the works collected and pr. under the name of Honorius, with prolegomena, in J. P. Migne, PL 172. 9–1270, the De Philosophia (cols. 39–102) is the work of *William of Conches, the De Solis Effectibus (cols. 101–16) is of doubtful authorship, and the Quaestiones et ad easdem Responsiones in . . . Proverbia et Ecclesiasten (cols. 311–48) is the work of Salonius of Geneva. His Cognitio Vitae is pr. among the works of St *Augustine in J. P. Migne, PL 40, 1005–32; further sections of his comm. on the Pss. are pr. among the works of *Gerhoh of Reichersberg in J. P. Migne, PL 193. 1315–72 (on Pss. 31–7), and 194. 485–730 (on Pss. 78–117); further 'Libelli' ed. I. Dieterich in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, 3 (1897), pp. 29–80, with bibl. refs. The orig. text of the Inevitabile was pr. by J. Kelle (Sb. (Wien), 150, Heft 3; 1905). Modern edns. of the Elucidarium by Y. Lefèvre (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 170; 1954; ignores the early Eng. MSS); of the Clavis physicae by P. Lucentini (Temi e Testi, 21; Rome, 1974); and of the Imago mundi by V. I. J. Flint in AHDLMA 49 (1983), pp. 7–153.

J. A. Endres, Honorius Augustodunensis (Kempten and Munich, 1906). M.-T. d'Alverny, 'Le Cosmos symbolique du XII^e siècle', AHDLMA, Année 28 (for 1953; 1954), pp. 31–81. H. Menhardt, 'Der Nachlass des Honorius Augustodunensis', Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Literatur, 89 (1958/9), pp. 23–69. R. W. Southern, St Anselm and his biographer (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge, 1963), pp. 209–17. W. Beinert, Die Kirche—Gottes Heil in der Welt: Die Lehre von der Kirche nach den Schriften des Rupert von Deutz, Honorius Augustodunensis und Gerhoch von Reichersberg (BGPM, NF 13; 1973), with introd. on his life and work, pp. 38–50. M.-O. Garrigues, 'Quelques Recherches sur l'œuvre d'Honorius Augustodunensis', RHE 70 (1975), pp. 388–425, with refs. V. I. J. Flint, 'The Place and Purpose of the Works of Honorius Augustodunensis', R. Bén. 87 (1977), pp. 97–127, repr. in id., Ideas in the Medieval West: Texts and their Contexts (1988), no. 12, with other studies and recent bibl. W. Wattenbach and F. J. Schmale, Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter von Tode Kaiser Heinrichs V. bis zum Ende des Interregnum, 1 (1976), pp. 27–38. Y. Lefèvre in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 730–7, s.v. 'Honorius (2) Augustodunensis'; R. Haacke and M. L. Arduini in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 571–8, s.v. 'Honorius Augustodunensis'.

Hontheim, Johann Nikolaus von (1701–90), founder of *Febronianism. He was a native of Trier, where he spent the greater part of his life. While a student at Louvain, he came under the influence of the *Gallican canonist, Z. B. *Van Espen. In 1728 he was ordained priest and in 1748 became suffragan Bp. of Trier. In 1742 he began an investigation, on behalf of the German Archbishop-Electors, of the historical position of the Papacy, and in 1763, under the pseudonym of 'Justinus Febronius', published his conclusions in his principal work, De statu ecclesiae et legitima potestate Romani Pontificis (see FEBRONIANISM). Owing to its Gallican doctrines the book was put on the *Index in 1764; but though for several years Hontheim was involved in controversy, he was not compelled to make a formal retractation until 1778. In 1781 he published Justini Febroni Commentarius in suam retractationem Pio VI, a work which, despite its conciliatory spirit, showed little real change of view. His other writings include two valuable historical works on the city of Trier, Historia Trevirensis Diplomatica (3 vols., 1750) and Prodromus Historiae Trevirensis (2 vols., 1757). His integrity, devotion to truth, and learning were admired even by his enemies.

See bibl. to FEBRONIANISM.

Hook, Walter Farquhar (1798–1875), Dean of *Chichester. Educated at Winchester and Oxford, he spent some years after his ordination in parochial work at Coventry and Leeds. As vicar of Leeds (1837–59), although sympathetic with the *Tractarian Movement, he became involved in a controversy with E. B. *Pusey over the alleged Romish practices at St Saviour's, Leeds. Differences in their interpretation of the effects of the Reformation on the Anglican Church led to an increasingly heated correspondence until finally their friendship was formally terminated by Hook, who declared himself an enemy of 'Romanism' and 'Puseyism'. In 1859 he became Dean of Chichester. He was the author of many historical and theological works, including a Church Dictionary (1842; often reprinted), a Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Biography (8 vols., 1845–52), and the Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury (12 vols., 1860–76).

W. R. W. Stephens, The Life and Letters of Walter Farquhar Hook (2 vols., 1878). C. J. Stranks, Dean Hook (1954). H. W. Dalton, 'Walter Farquhar Hook, Vicar of Leeds: his Work for the Church and the Town, 1837–1848', Publications of the Thoresby Society, 63 (for 1988; 1990), pp. 27–79, with further refs. W. R. W. Stephens in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 276–9.

Hooker, Richard (*c.*1554–1600), Anglican divine. Born at Heavitree near Exeter, he was admitted through the influence of J. *Jewel at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1577. In 1579 he was appointed deputy professor of Hebrew. Vacating his fellowship on his marriage to Joan Churchman, who, acc. to I. *Walton, 'brought him neither beauty nor portion', in 1584 he was appointed rector of Drayton Beauchamp, and in 1585 Master of the Temple, where he controverted the *Calvinistic views of the Reader, W. *Travers. Later (1591) he became rector of Boscombe, Wilts, and finally (1595) of Bishopsbourne, near Canterbury, where he died.

Hooker was par excellence the apologist of the Elizabethan Settlement of 1559 and perhaps the most accomplished advocate that Anglicanism has ever had. He developed his doctrines in his treatise Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. Of the five Books which appeared in Hooker's lifetime 1–4 were published in 1593 and 5 in 1597. Books 6 (incomplete) and 8 did not appear until 1648 and Book 7 not until 1662. In conception the Laws was a livre de circonstance, designed to justify the constitutional structure of the Elizabethan Church, but it embodied a broadly conceived philosophical theology. His opposition to the *Puritans, who held to the literal following of the Scriptures as an absolute in the sense that whatever was not expressly commanded in Scripture was unlawful, led him to elaborate a whole theory of law, based on the 'absolute' fundamental of natural law, whose 'seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world' (LEP 1. 16. 8). This natural law, which governs the universe and to which both ecclesiastical and civil polity are subservient, is the expression of God's supreme reason, and everything, including the Scriptures, must be interpreted in the light of it. 'Laws human must be made according to the general laws of nature, and without contradiction unto any positive law in Scripture. Otherwise they are ill made' (LEP 3. 9. 2). The Puritans were wholly mistaken in regarding the Bible as a mechanical code of rules; for not everything that is rightful finds precise direction in the Scriptures. In a similar way the permanence of law does not preclude development of detail. The Church is an organic, not a static, institution, and the method of Church government and ecclesiastical administration will change acc. to circumstances. Hence the C of E, though reformed, possesses continuity with the medieval Church. Further, the visible organized Church is a political society, 'a court not temporal merely', yet able to control its own legislation in a way analogous to that in which the civil state through parliament makes its laws. Hooker developed an essentially contractual theory of political government which influenced future political writers, esp. J. *Locke.

In particular matters, Hooker has been less universally acceptable to Anglicans. In his unreadiness to condemn the orders of Continental Protestants, he denied the necessity of episcopal ordination. His doctrine of the Eucharist closely approximates in many places to *receptionism. His argument on points of detail is not infrequently difficult to grasp and not wholly clear. But Hooker remains one of the greatest theologians that the English Church has ever possessed; and he conveyed his beliefs in a masterly English prose. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 3 Nov.

Works ed. J. *Keble (3 vols., Oxford, 1836; 7th edn. rev. by R. W. *Church and F. *Paget, 1888); and, incl. autograph notes found in *Trinity College, Dublin, in 1971 among the papers of Abp. J. *Ussher, by W. S. Hill and others (vols 1–5, Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1977–90; vol. 6, in 2 parts, Binghamton, NY, 1993). Life by I. Walton (1665; repr. in Keble's edn. of Works). C. J. Sisson, The Judicious Marriage of Mr Hooker and the Birth of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1940). A. P. d'Entrèves, The Medieval Contribution to Political Thought: Thomas Aquinas, Marsilius of Padua, Richard Hooker (1939); P. Munz, The Place of Hooker in the History of Thought (1952); J. S. Marshall, Hooker and the Anglican Tradition: An historical and theological Study of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (Sewanee, Tenn., and London, 1963); W. S. Hill (ed.), Studies in Richard Hooker: Essays Preliminary to an Edition of Works (Cleveland, Oh., and London, 1972); R. K. Faulkner, Richard Hooker and the Politics of a Christian England (1981). W. J. T. Kirby, Richard Hooker's Doctrine of the Royal Supremacy (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 43; 1990). S. Lee in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 289–95.

Hooper, John (*c.*1495–1555), Bp. of *Gloucester and *Worcester, and Protestant martyr. A native of Somerset, he was educated at Oxford before entering the *Cistercian Priory of Cleeve. On the dissolution of the religious houses he went to London and began to interest himself in the Continental Reformers, esp. H. *Zwingli and H. *Bullinger, and returned to Oxford to propagate their views. After a disputation with S. *Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, he was exiled for heresy and spent the next years travelling in Europe. From 1547 to 1549 he lived at Zurich, where he became friends with Bullinger and J. *Laski. In 1549 he came back to England and was made chaplain to the Protector *Somerset. In 1550 he was nominated to the see of Gloucester, which he accepted only after the reference to angels and saints had been omitted from the Oath of Supremacy and after further prolonged hesitation on the lawfulness of episcopal vestments, which led to a short term of imprisonment. In 1552, when Gloucester was temporarily reunited with the see of Worcester, Hooper was made bishop of the new diocese. He governed his diocese with exemplary zeal and vigour, introducing, however, many Continental customs. He was also very liberal to the poor. On the accession of *Mary he was imprisoned in the Fleet in 1553. In 1555 he was tried for heresy, and having refused to recant was excommunicated and burned at the stake (9 Feb. 1555). One of the chief English exponents of extreme Zwinglian Protestantism, he exercised a considerable influence on the later Puritans through his writings, which include A Godly Confession and Protestation of the Christian Faith (1551) and A Brief and Clear Confession of the Christian Faith, containing an hundred Articles acc. to the Order of the Creed of the Apostles (1581).

S. Carr (ed.), The Early Writings of John Hooper (*Parker Society, 1843); C. Nevinson (ed.), Later Writings of Bishop Hooper (ibid., 1852), with biog. sketch pp. vii–xxx. H. Robinson (ed.), Original Letters Relating to the English Reformation, 1537–1558 (ibid., 2 vols., 1846–7). E. W. Hunt, The Life and Times of John Hooper (c.1500–1555), Bishop of Gloucester (Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1992]). F. D. Price, 'Gloucester Diocese under Bishop Hooper, 1551–3', Transactions of the Bristol and Gloucester Archaeological Society, 60 (1938), pp. 51–151. BRUO, 1501 40, pp. 296 f.

hope. One of the three *theological virtues. In its widest sense it may be defined as the desire and search for a future good, difficult but not impossible of attainment. In the course of OT history hope played an important part, often with a strong emphasis on material security and prosperity, as well as specifically religious desires. A particular focus of these hopes was the expectation of the *Messiah, which Christians believe to be fulfilled in Christ. By the *resurrection of Christ, mankind was 'begotten again unto a living hope' (1 Pet. 1: 3). As a Christian virtue its primary end, its motive, and its author is God Himself, and like faith it may continue even when charity has been lost by mortal sin. It is confined to this life and to purgatory, and has no place either in heaven (where its object, the *Beatific Vision, is already attained) or in hell. Hope, being confidence in God's goodness tempered by fear of His justice, is opposed to both despair and presumption.

J. *Moltmann, Theologie der Hoffnung (1964; Eng. tr., 1967). W. Zimmerli, Der Mensch und seine Hoffnung im Alten Testament (Kleine Vandenhoeck, Reihe 272 S; Göttingen [1968]; Eng. tr., Man and his Hope in the Old Testament, Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 20; 1971). R. L. Ottley in HERE 4 (1913), pp. 779 f., s.v. 'Hope (Christian)'; R. *Bultmann and K. H. Rengstorf in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 515–31 (Eng. tr., 1964, pp. 517–35), s.v. ἐλπίς, with refs.; J.-H. Nicolas, OP, in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 1208–33, s.v. 'Espérance'.

Hopkins, Gerard Manley (1844–89), poet. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was the pupil of B. *Jowett and W. Pater and the friend of R. *Bridges and D. M. Dolben. At this time he came under the religious influence of E. B. *Pusey and H. P. *Liddon. In 1866 Hopkins joined the RC Church, in 1868 he entered the *Jesuit novitiate, and in 1877 he was ordained priest. In 1884 he was appointed professor of Greek at the Royal University, Dublin, a position which he held till his death. He was unknown as a poet during his life, except to two or three friends, and the preservation of his MSS is due to R. Bridges, who first edited them in 1918. His poems, the most ambitious of which is The Wreck of the Deutschland and perhaps the most representative The Windhover: to Christ our Lord, are marked by their great intensity of feeling, freedom in rhythm, and individual use of words, and have exerted much influence on more recent poets. They show a priest's pastoral care for souls, and conceive the fundamental personal relationship between the soul and its Redeemer as sacrificial. The opening words of The Wreck of the Deutschland, 'Thou mastering me God', were carved over the sculpture of the Re-creation of Man by E. *Gill at Geneva.

Crit. edn. of his Poems by N. H. Mackenzie (Oxford, 1990). Editio princeps with notes by R. Bridges (1918); 2nd edn., with an introduction by Charles *Williams (1930); 3rd edn., with notes and biog. introd. by W. H. Gardner (1948); 4th edn. by W. H. Gardner and N. H. Mackenzie (1967). C. C. Abbott, The Letters of Gerard Manley Hopkins to Robert Bridges (1935); id., The Correspondence of Gerard Manley Hopkins and Richard Watson Dixon (1935); id., Further Letters of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1938; 2nd edn. with additional letters, 1956); H. House, Note-books and Papers of G. M. Hopkins (1937); 2nd edn. by H. House and G. Storey, The Journals and Papers of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1959); C. Devlin, SJ, The Sermons and Devotional Writings of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1959). Poems with selections from his journals, sermons, and letters, ed. C. Phillips (Oxford Authors, 1986). W. H. Gardner, Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844–1889): A Study of Poetic Idiosyncrasy in Relation to Poetic Tradition (2 vols., 1944–9). J.-G. Ritz, Le Poète Gérard Manley Hopkins [1963]; R. B. Martin, Gerard Manley Hopkins: A Very Private Life (1991); N. White, Hopkins: A Literary Biography (Oxford, 1992). The numerous other studies incl. J. Pick, Gerard Manley Hopkins: Priest and Poet (1942); D. A. Downes, Gerard Manley Hopkins: A Study of his Ignatian Spirit (New York and London, 1960); and A. Thomas, SJ, Hopkins the Jesuit (1969). T. Dunne, Gerard Manley Hopkins: A Comprehensive Bibliography (Oxford, 1976). Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 145–237.

Hormisdas, St (d. 523), Pope from 514. His chief importance lies in his success in healing the *Acacian schism which since 484 had divided the E. from the W. After attempts at union in 515 and again in 517 had come to grief through the obstinacy of the Emp. Anastasius I, Hormisdas secured in 519, under the new Emp. Justin I, the signature of John, the Patr. of Constantinople, and afterwards of some 250 E. bishops, to a dogmatic formula (the 'Formula Hormisdae') in which the *Chalcedonian Definition and Leo's *Tome were accepted, Acacius and other heretics were expressly condemned, and the authority of the Roman see (on the basis of Mt. 16: 18) was strongly emphasized. He also took a notable part in negotiating with the (*Arian) Goths matters of ecclesiastical concern to the W. Church, and maintained good relations with *Theodoric. It was under his direction that *Dionysius Exiguus made his second version of the Greek ecclesiastical canons. Feast day, 6 Aug.

Some 90 of Hormisdas' genuine letters survive; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 63. 367–534; crit. texts in the so-called 'Collectio Avellana' ed. O. Guenther (CSEL 35, pt. 2; 1898). Life in LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 269–74. L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIᵉ siècle (1925), pp. 37–40 and 48–65. W. Haacke, Die Glaubensformel des Papstes Hormisdas im Acacianischen Schisma (Analecta Gregoriana, 20; 1939). J. S. Martin, 'La "Prima Salus" del Papa Hormisdas (514–523)', Rivista Española de Teologia, 1 (1941), pp. 767–812. F. Dvornik, The Idea of Apostolicity in Byzantium (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), pp. 124–34. L. Magi, La Sede Romana nella corrispondenza degli imperatori e patriarchi bizantini (VI–VII sec.)

(Bibliothèque de la RHE, 57; 1972), esp. pp. 29–103. A. Grillmeier [SJ], Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 1; 1986), pp. 351–75; Eng. tr. (1987), pp. 310–33. É. Amann in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 161–76, s.v.; J. Chapin in NCE 7 (1967), p. 148, s.v.

Horne, George (1730–92), Bp. of *Norwich. Born at Otham, nr. Maidstone, he was educated at University College, Oxford, where he became a friend of W. *Jones ('of Nayland'), his future biographer, and J. Moore, later Abp. of *Canterbury. In 1750 he was elected Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he became president in 1768. He was appointed vice-chancellor of the University in 1776 and Dean of Canterbury in 1781. In 1790 he became Bp. of Norwich. Horne was a disciple of J. *Hutchinson, but rejected his more fanciful speculations on Hebrew etymology. Though an adherent of *High Church principles, he was in sympathy with the spiritual earnestness of the *Methodists and refused to forbid J. *Wesley to preach in his diocese. He also supported the Scottish bishops' petition to Parliament in 1789. Among his writings are many pamphlets directed in various ways against the views of I. *Newton, D. *Hume, W. *Law, and others, whose importance he seems not always to have understood. Horne was above all a preacher, and his sermons were frequently reprinted. His most important work is his Commentary on the Psalms (1771); in it he maintained that the greater number of the Psalms were Messianic.

Collected edn., 6 vols., London, 1809 (incomplete). W. Jones, Memoirs of the Life, Studies and Writings of the Right Reverend George Horne (1795; with list of Horne's writings, pp. 414–18). A. C. Bickley in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 356–8.

Horne, Thomas Hartwell (1780–1862), biblical commentator and bibliographer. He was the grandfather of T. K. *Cheyne. Educated at Christ's Hospital, where S. T. *Coleridge was his contemporary, he began as a barrister's clerk. To supplement his income he took up literary work and wrote on a great variety of subjects. For many years he was a Wesleyan *Methodist. In 1808 he was invited to catalogue the Harleian MSS in the British Library, and from then on was engaged in several bibliographical undertakings. In 1818 appeared the first edition of his Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures (3 vols.), which at once established itself by its completeness as a standard work, though it was without originality. A supplementary volume appeared in 1821, and it went through a large number of editions both in Great Britain and the USA down to 1860. Among those who helped in the revision of its later editions were S. Davidson and S. P. *Tregelles. In 1819 Horne was ordained by W. *Howley to the curacy of Christ Church, Newgate Street, and held various ecclesiastical offices in the London diocese till his death. His many other writings include an Introduction to the Study of Bibliography (2 vols., 1814), Deism Refuted (1819), The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity briefly stated and defended (1820), and A Compendious Introduction to the Study of the Bible (1827).

Reminiscences Personal and Bibliographical of Thomas Hartwell Horne, with notes by his daughter, S. A. Cheyne (1862), incl. list of Horne's writings (pp. 199–208). T. Cooper in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 363 f.

Horneck, Anthony (1641–97), Anglican divine. He was a native of Bacharach on the Rhine, of Protestant parentage, who studied theology at Heidelberg and came to England *c.*1661. In 1663 he was made a member of Queen's College, Oxford, and vicar of All Saints, Oxford, in 1664. He became prebendary of *Exeter Cathedral in 1670, and in the following year preacher at the Savoy, where he enjoyed great popularity. In 1689 he was appointed chaplain to William III, and in 1693 prebendary of *Westminster. He wrote a number of devotional books which were widely used at the time, dealing esp. with Holy Communion. Among them are The Happy Ascetic (1681), The Fire of the Altar (1683), and The Crucified Jesus (1686).

Collected edn. of Several Sermons upon the Fifth of St Matthew; Being Part of Christ's Sermon on the Mount (2 vols., 1698), with Life by Richard Kidder, Bp. of Bath and Wells, vol. 1, pp. 3–58, and list of his works, pp. 61 f.; also pub. separately (London, 1698). Four Tracts by Horneck were ed. W. Edwards (London, 1697); The Crucified Jesus was also ed. W. F. *Hook (Leeds and London, 1848); extracts from The Happy Ascetic were ed. J. *Wesley, *The Christian Library, 16 (repr. 1823), pp. 291–432; short extract from The Fire of the Altar pr. in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), no. 359, p. 777. L. Stephen in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 367 f.

Horologion (Gk. ὡρολόγιον). In the E. Church, the liturgical book which contains the recurrent portions of the ecclesiastical *Office extending through the whole year.

Horsiesi, St. See ORSISIUS, ST.

Horsley, Samuel (1733–1806), Bp. of *St Asaph. He was born in London and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1759 he succeeded his father as rector of Newington (now part of London). His interests in science led him to become a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1767, and its Secretary from 1773 to 1784. In 1771 he was appointed domestic chaplain to the Bp. of London, who made him Archdeacon of *St Albans in 1781. In 1788 he was consecrated Bp. of *St Davids. He proved an energetic bishop, both in his diocese and in the House of Lords. In 1793 he was translated to *Rochester, and in 1802 once more translated to St Asaph. He is chiefly famous for his controversy with J. *Priestley over the doctrines of the Trinity and Christ's Divinity in which he defended the traditional view that the pre-Nicene Church was unanimous in its theology of the Lord's consubstantiality with the Father. His many writings, largely on scientific and philological subjects, include Providence and Free Agency (1778), The Analogy between the Light of Inspiration and the Light of Learning (1787), Tracts in controversy with Dr. Priestley (1789), An Apology for the Liturgy and Clergy (1790), Hosea translated . . . with Notes (1801), and The Book of Psalms translated (1815; posthumous). He also published many separate sermons.

Sermons [ed. H. Horsley] (2 vols., Dublin, 1810) and later edns.; The Speeches in Parliament of Samuel Horsley [ed. id.] (ibid., 1813); The Charges of Samuel Horsley . . . delivered at his Several Visitations of the Dioceses of St David's, Rochester, and St Asaph (ibid., 1813). H. H. Jebb [great-grandson], A Great Bishop of One Hundred Years Ago, being a Sketch of the Life of Samuel Horsley (1909). F. C. Mather, High Church Prophet: Bishop Samuel Horsley (1733–1806) and the Caroline Tradition in the Later Georgian Church (Oxford, 1992). A. Gordon in DNB 27 (1891), pp. 383–6.

Hort, Fenton John Anthony (1828–92), NT scholar. Educated at Rugby under T. *Arnold and A. C. *Tait, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was from 1852 to 1857 a Fellow of his college, from 1857 to 1872 incumbent of St Ippolyts, near Hitchin, and from 1872 till his death back at Cambridge, where he held various appointments, incl. the Hulsean (1878–87) and the Lady Margaret (1887–92) professorships. In his early years at Cambridge he became a lifelong friend and fellow-worker of E. W. *Benson, J. B. *Lightfoot, and B. F. *Westcott, and also came under the influence of F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, Tom Hughes, and others, with whose social endeavours he was in sympathy. His original intention was to publish large-scale commentaries on the Gospels, Acts, and some of the *Catholic Epistles; but most of his energies were in fact diverted to the Greek text of the NT, at which he worked, in conjunction with Westcott, almost continuously from 1852 till its publication in 1881. His work in this field, summarized in his fine 'Introduction' to the Westcott–Hort NT, was remarkable for the accuracy and sobriety of his judgements. Its somewhat difficult style, combined with a modesty which often conceals the range of its writer's learning, can still hide its distinction and erudition from those who handle it for the first time. From 1882 to 1890 he was engaged, with Westcott and W. F. *Moulton, in preparing the RV of Wisdom and 2 Macc. Of the first importance also were his Two Dissertations (1876) on Μονογενὴς Θεός and the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed, and his (posthumous) Judaistic Christianity (1894) and The Christian Ecclesia (1897). He contributed a number of major articles to the first volume of DCB. Hort had also wide and constructive interests in theology, esp. in its relations with the natural sciences, but these found little expression in writing. His *Hulsean Lectures for 1871, The Way, the Truth, and the Life (pub. posthumously, 1893), were an impressive essay in philosophical theology.

Life and Letters, ed. A. F. Hort, son (2 vols., London and New York, 1896); full review of this work, with appreciation of Hort, by W. *Sanday in American Journal of Theology, 1 (1897), pp. 95–117; further appreciation of Hort by T. B. Strong in JTS 1 (1900), pp. 370–86. E. G. Rupp, Hort and the Cambridge Tradition (Inaugural lecture; Cambridge, 1970). G. A. Patrick, F. J. A. Hort, Eminent Victorian (Sheffield, 1988). H. E. *Ryle in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 443–7.

Hosanna (Gk. ὡσαννά). The Greek form of the Hebrew petition הוֹשַׁע נָא ('Save, we beseech Thee'). It was used by the multitude when they proclaimed Jesus to be the Messiah on His triumphal entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday (Mt. 21: 9, 15, Mk. 11: 9 f., Jn. 12: 13); and was thence introduced into the Christian liturgies at a very early date (e.g. Didache 10. 6). The words 'Glory be to thee, O Lord, most High' in the *Sanctus of the Anglican BCP are a rendering of the Hosanna in excelsis ('Hosanna in the highest') in the medieval and modern Latin rite.

Hosea, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets. Its author, Hosea, son of Beeri, was apparently a near-contemporary of *Amos, prophesying in the northern kingdom of Israel in the years preceding its decline and eventual fall to the Assyrians in *c.*721 BC. Like Amos, Hosea condemns the injustice and exploitation prevalent in Israelite society, but his oracles seem to reflect a slightly later date in that social injustices of a more subtle kind have now given way to outright violence and the beginnings of the political and social anarchy which hastened the fall of the kingdom (cf. 2 Kgs. 15). Central to Hosea's condemnation of Israel is his opposition to the syncretistic worship of the sanctuaries, where Canaanite religious traditions—esp. those centring on fertility—had overlaid or perhaps even replaced the more austere religion of Yahweh. Appropriately enough, in view of the sexual character of these syncretistic rites, Hosea describes the national apostasy as 'adultery' or 'prostitution'. The opening chapters (1–3) relate incidents from the Prophet's own domestic life and draw a parallel between Hosea's relationship with his wife and Yahweh's relationship with Israel. The details are open to more than one interpretation, but it appears that Hosea had married a prostitute (perhaps employed in the fertility cult) as a symbol of Yahweh's own love for his disobedient and 'adulterous' people. Hosea is among the earliest biblical writers to use close human relationships as an illustration of the relationship between God and man, and his realization of God's character of love paved the way for Jewish and Christian teaching on the Fatherhood of God. While sharing Amos's conviction that Yahweh would punish Israel, Hosea (perhaps because of his experience in his own marriage) believed that Yahweh's covenant love would not allow Him to cast off Israel for good. Oracles promising a glorious future thus appear interwoven with others whose ferocity fully matches those of Amos. The Book appears to be very loosely structured, and there is no scholarly consensus on its literary development. The Hebrew text is among the most corrupt of all the Prophetic Books.

Comm. by W. R. Harper (ICC on Amos and Hosea, 1905, pp. 201–417), G. A. F. Knight (Torch Bible Commentaries, London, 1960), H. W. Wolff (Dodekapropheton, 1; Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 14/1; Neukirchen, 1961; 3rd edn., 1976; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1974]), W. Rudolph (KAT 13/1; 1966), J. L. Mays (London, 1969), F. I. Andersen and D. N. Freedman (Anchor Bible, 1980), and G. I. Davies (New Cent. Bib., 1992). H. W. Wolff, Die Hochzeit der Hure (Munich, 1979). K. Koch, Die Profeten, 1 [1978], pp. 88–105; Eng. tr. (1982), pp. 76–93; J. Blenkinsopp, A History of Prophecy in Israel (1984), pp. 96–106. J. Jeremias in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 586–98, s.v. 'Hosea/Hoseabuch', with extensive bibl.

Hosius (or Ossius) (*c.*256–357/8), Bp. of Córdoba. He was consecrated Bp. of Córdoba *c.*295, and suffered in the persecution under Maximian. He took part in the Council of *Elvira and from 313 to the Council of *Nicaea seems to have acted as ecclesiastical adviser to the Emp. *Constantine. In the early stages of the Arian controversy he was sent to *Alexandria to investigate the dispute between *Alexander and *Arius, and it was apparently in consequence of his report that the Emperor summoned the Nicene Council. He prob. presided over the Council of *Antioch in 325, and played an important role at the Nicene Council. He also presided at the anti-Arian Council of *Sardica in 343. In 355 he was banished to Sirmium for his support of St *Athanasius, and from his exile addressed to Constantius a letter in which, on the basis of Mt. 22: 21, he affirmed the independence of ecclesiastical authority from political power. At the Synod of *Sirmium (357) he succumbed to pressure to the extent that he signed the 'Blasphemy' which involved communicating with the Arians and was allowed in consequence to return to his diocese. Acc. to Athanasius, he repudiated his action at Sirmium before his death, though W. writers provide no confirmation of this statement.

Primary sources (scattered) incl. Athanasius, Hist. Ar. 42–5; id., Apol. c. Ar. 89; id., De Fuga, 5; *Hilary, Fragmenta, 2 and 6; id., De Synodis, 10 f.; *Socrates, HE 2. 31. V. C. De Clercq, CICM, Ossius of Cordova: A Contribution to the History of the Constantinian Period (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, 13; 1954). U. Domínguez del Val, OSA, 'Osio de Córdoba', Revista Española de Teología, 18 (1958), pp. 141–65 and 261–81. H. Chadwick, 'Ossius of Cordova and the Presidency of the Council of Antioch, 325', JTS NS 9 (1958), pp. 292–304, repr. in his History and Thought of the Early Church (1982), no. 10. M. Aubineau, SJ, 'La Vie grecque de "saint" Ossius de Cordoue', Anal. Boll. 78 (1960), pp. 356–61. For the spelling 'Ossius' see C. H. *Turner in JTS 12 (1910–11), pp. 275–7. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 188 f. (nos. 537–9a). M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 61 f., with bibl. T. D. C. Morse in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 162–74.

Hosius (or in Polish Hozjusz), Stanislaus (1504–79), Polish cardinal. He was a native of Cracow, of German origin, and studied law at Cracow, at *Bologna, where he came into touch with R. *Pole, and at Padua. Active at first as a royal secretary and *Erasmian Humanist, he was not ordained priest until 1543; after holding several benefices, in 1549 he was appointed Bp. of Kulm (in Polish Chełmno). In 1551 he was translated to the diocese of Ermland (in Polish Warmia), where one of his chief tasks was the fight against Protestantism. Here he preached extensively in Latin, Polish, and German. In 1552–3 he published his chief work, the Confessio Catholicae Fidei Christiana, in which he contrasted the Catholic dogmas with the opposing beliefs of the Reformers and endeavoured to prove from Scripture and tradition that Catholicism and Christianity were identical. The work had a great success, over 30 editions and many translations appearing in the author's lifetime. Among other controversial writings that followed were his Confutatio Prolegomenorum Brentii (1558) against the Württembergian *Lutheran theologian, J. *Brenz, which had a preface by St Peter *Canisius, and De Expresso Dei Verbo (1558), in which he claimed to demonstrate the necessity of an authoritative interpretation of Scripture. In 1558 *Paul IV called him to Rome as his adviser on the religious affairs of Poland and Prussia, and in 1560 *Pius IV appointed him nuncio to Ferdinand I. In this capacity he prepared the reopening of the Council of *Trent and brought back to the RC Church the Emperor's son, Maximilian, who had come under the influence of Protestant preachers. In 1561 he was created cardinal and appointed Papal legate at Trent, where he was entrusted esp. with the leadership in the doctrinal discussions. At the Council he vigorously upheld the primacy of the Pope. After returning to his diocese in 1564, he published the decrees of Trent at the Synod of Parczew (1564) and invited the *Jesuits to open a college, the later 'Lyceum Hosianum', at Braunsberg (in Polish Braniewo). In 1566 he was nominated legate a latere by *Pius V, and from 1569 resided in Rome as the permanent Polish representative. He upheld the use of violence against heretics, but in private life he was a man of a simple and unworldly faith.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Paris, 1562; the best edn. (still incomplete) is that pub. in 2 vols. fol., Cologne, 1584. Modern edns. of selections of his correspondence by F. Hipler and V. Zakrzewski [up to 1558] (Acta Historica Res Gestas Poloniae Illustrantia ab Anno 1507 ad Annum 1795, 4, 9, parts 1 and 2; Editionum Collegii Historici Academiae Litterarum Cracoviensis, 15, 34, 40; Cracow, 1879–88) and S. Steinherz (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, 1560–72, nebst ergänzenden Actenstücken, Zweite Abt., Bd. 1; Vienna, 1897). Correspondence with Albert, Duke of Prussia, on the Council of Trent (1560–2), ed. E. M. Wermter (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 82; 1957). Early Life (in Lat.) by S. Rescius (his secretary, Rome, 1587; repr. in edn. of his letters by F. Hipler and V. Zakrzewski, cited above, vol. 1, pp. ii–cxxiv). Modern studies by A. Eichhorn (2 vols., Kirchheim, 1854–5), B. Elsner (Königsberg, 1911), and J. Lortz (Braunsberg, 1931). S. Frankl, Doctrina Hosii de Notis Ecclesiae, in luce s. XVI considerata (Rome, 1934); L. Bernacki, La Doctrine de l'Église chez le Cardinal Hosius (1936). G. Grabka, 'Cardinal Hosius and the Council of Trent', Theological Studies, 7 (1946), pp. 558–76. F. J. Zdrodowski, The Concept of Heresy according to Cardinal Hosius (Catholic University of America, Studies in Sacred Theology, 2nd ser. 2; Washington, DC, 1947). G. H. Williams, 'Stanislaus Hosius', in J. Raitt (ed.), Shapers of Religious Traditions in Germany, Switzerland, and Poland, 1560–1600 [1981], pp. 157–74. A. Humbert in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 178–90, s.v.; W. Urban in Polski Słownik Biograficzny, 10 (Warsaw, 1962–4), pp. 42–6, s.v. 'Hozjusz'.

Hoskyns, Sir Edwyn Clement (1884–1937), Anglican biblical scholar. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, and on the Continent, where he heard A. *Harnack and became a friend of A. Schweitzer. From 1919 till his death he was Dean of Chapel of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He made a name by his essay 'The Christ of the Synoptic Gospels' in Essays Catholic and Critical (1926), in which he argued that the so-called 'historical Jesus' of liberal Protestantism was unhistorical, and that the teaching behind the Synoptic Gospels was much more complex and 'Catholic' than was generally supposed by liberal NT critics. The Riddle of the New Testament (1931; 3rd edn., 1947), written in collaboration with F. N. Davey, deals with the principles underlying the critical and historical study of the NT. In these studies Hoskyns passed from a *Modernist position, influenced by A. Schweitzer and A. *Loisy, to an objective and dogmatic attitude. Later he took over much from K. *Barth, whose Commentary on Romans he translated (1933). In his posthumously published work, The Fourth Gospel (ed. F. N. Davey, 1940), he upheld the unity of St John's Gospel; he was concerned esp. to bring out the theological meaning of the whole, making full use both of patristic and modern exegetical works.

His sermons ed. with a memoir by C. H. Smyth, Cambridge Sermons (1938). Crucifixion–Resurrection: The Pattern of the Theology and Ethics of the New Testament by Hoskyns and F. N. Davey [orig. conceived as a sequel to the Riddle of the New Testament] was ed. after Davey's death by G. S. Wakefield (1981), with biog. introd., pp. 27–81. R. E. Parsons, Sir Edwyn Hoskyns as a Biblical Theologian [1985]. J. O. Cobham in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 448 f., s.v.

Hosmer, Frederick Lucian (1840–1929), American hymn writer. Born at Framingham, Mass., he was educated at Harvard. He was ordained in the *Unitarian ministry in 1869 and held charges at Quincy, Ill. (1872–7), Cleveland, Ohio (1878–92), St Louis (1894–9), and at Berkeley, Calif. (1899–1904). In 1908 he delivered a series of lectures on Church hymnody at Harvard Divinity School, of which he was president for the year 1920–1. His hymns had a wide appeal, esp. among adherents of the emancipated liberal theology of the late 19th cent. They include 'Not always on the Mount may we', 'O beautiful my country', 'O Name all other names above', and 'Thy Kingdom come, On bended knee'. They were mainly published in three series of The Thought of God in Hymns and Poems, which he edited in conjunction with W. C. Gannett (1885, 1894, and 1918). He also issued Way of Life (1877) for use in Sunday schools and, with W. C. Gannett and J. V. Blake, edited Unity Hymns and Carols (1880, enlarged 1911).

H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog. 9 (1932), pp. 241 f.

hospice movement. See DYING, CARE OF THE.

Hospitallers (also Knights Hospitaller). At the end of the 11th cent. the headquarters of the order was a hospital at *Jerusalem which became dedicated to St *John the Baptist; hence its members were more fully described as 'Knights of the Order of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem'. After 1310 they were also known as the Knights of Rhodes, and from 1530 as the Knights of Malta.

The origins of the order are to be found in the establishment *c.*1080 of a hospice for pilgrims by the old *Benedictine Abbey of S. Maria Latina in Jerusalem. Its first historical personage is Master Gerard, under whom, after the successes of the *Crusaders in 1099, the order greatly developed and obtained Papal sanction. Its original concern was the care of the sick poor, and its ideal of treating the poor as 'lords' and the medical practices in its hospitals were to have significant influence in medieval Europe, but under its second Master, Raymond du Puy (1120–1158/60) it developed a wing of brother knights, probably in imitation of the Knights *Templar (q.v.). All members of the order were bound by the three religious vows, together with a fourth: to be serfs and slaves of their lords the sick. They were divided into three classes: brother knights, from whom the Master was always drawn, at least from the 13th cent.; brother sergeants, -at arms and -at service, who did not need to have the qualifications, by birth and arms, of knights; and brother priests. The great officer in charge of the hospital, the Hospitaller, was always a knight. Nursing was performed by the sergeants-at-service. The order employed surgeons and physicians. There were also sisters of St John, who lived in enclosed communities as *canonesses regular. From the early 12th cent. the order was being granted properties in W. Europe. It developed a provincial structure of priories and subordinate commanderies to manage these and to transmit funds to the central convent in the East. The brothers shared both the successes and the defeats of the Crusaders; and after the fall of Acre (1291) they escaped to Cyprus and subsequently conquered Rhodes (1309), which became the centre of their activities for the next 200 years. Their power and wealth increased greatly after the suppression of the Templars (1312), whose possessions were assigned to the Hospitallers by the Pope. Their principal achievements during this period were their exploits against the Turks, notably the victorious defence of Rhodes by the Grand Master Pierre d'Aubusson in 1480 and that of 1522 against Suleiman II which ended in honourable defeat. After being without a home for seven years the order received the island of Malta from *Charles V in 1530. The knights continued fighting the Turks in many battles and in 1571 took part in the battle of *Lepanto. The 17th and 18th cents. saw the decline of the order in morals and discipline, culminating in the surrender of Malta to Napoleon in 1798. It now devotes itself to the maintenance of hospitals and still has knights under obedience to a Grand Master. Its distinctive sign is the eight-pointed *Maltese cross. Since the Malta period the order has been treated by many states and in international law as a sovereign entity.

There are four other recognized Orders of St John. Those in Germany, *Sweden, and the *Netherlands descend from a province in N. Germany which maintained its existence as a Protestant order after the Reformation. In England the property of the Grand Priory was sequestered in 1540. Apart from a brief revival under *Mary, the English Langue of the Hospitallers remained dormant with a series of non-resident titular priors, the last of whom held office from 1806 to 1815. In the 1820s, however, the French Knights of Malta, seeking money, men, and material for a scheme to reconquer an island in the E. Mediterranean in alliance with the Greeks who were in rebellion against their Turkish overlords, re-established an English branch on a mainly Anglican basis. A royal charter of 1888 constituted it an order of chivalry, with the sovereign as its head, and a charter of 1926 authorized the creation of priories and commanderies in other countries of the Commonwealth. The order was responsible for the foundation of the St John's Ambulance Association in 1877, the St John Ophthalmic Hospital in Jerusalem in 1882, and the St John Ambulance Brigade in 1888.

The term 'Hospitallers' is sometimes used in a wider sense, e.g. to include the *Brothers Hospitallers (q.v.) founded by St *John of God.

J. Delaville Le Roulx (ed.), Cartulaire général de l'ordre de S. Jean de Jérusalem, 1100–1310 (4 vols., 1894–1906). Id., Les Hospitaliers en Terre Sainte et à Chypre, 1100–1310 (1904); id., Les Hospitaliers à Rhodes jusqu'à la mort de Philibert de Naillac, 1310–1421 (1913; repr., with introd. by A. T. Luttrell, London, 1974). Id., 'Les Statuts de l'ordre de l'hôpital de Saint-Jean de Jérusalem', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 48 (1887), pp. 342–56, and other works by the same author. E. J. King, The Rule, Statutes, and Customs of the Hospitallers 1099–1310 [in Eng. tr.] (1934). R. Hiestand (ed.), Papsturkunden für Templer und Johanniter (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 77 and 135; 1972–84). M. Gervers (ed.), The Cartulary of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem in England: Secunda Camera, Essex (Records of Social and Economic History, NS 6 [1982]), with refs. to earlier edns. of records of English Hospitallers. J. Riley-Smith, The Knights of St John in Jerusalem and Cyprus c.1050–1310 (1967), with bibl. A. J. Forey, 'Constitutional Conflict and Change in the Hospital of St John during the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries', JEH 33 (1982), pp. 15–29; T. S. Miller, 'The Knights of Saint John and the Hospitals of the Latin West', Speculum 53 (1978), pp. 709–33. A. [T.] Luttrell, 'The Hospitallers at Rhodes, 1306–1421', in K. M. Setton (ed.), A History of the Crusades, 3 (Madison, Wis., 1975), pp. 278–313, repr. in Luttrell, The Hospitallers in Cyprus, Rhodes, Greece and the West 1291–1400 (1978), no. 1; other relevant papers repr. in this volume and id., Latin Greece, the Hospitallers and the Crusades 1291–1400 (1982), nos. 1–5. R. Cavaliero, The Last of the Crusaders: The Knights of St John and Malta in the Eighteenth Century (1960). [H. T.] M. de Pierredon, Histoire politique de l'Ordre Sou- verain des Hospitaliers de Saint-Jean de Jérusalem, dit de Malte, depuis la chute de Malte jusqu'à nos jours (1926; much enlarged 2nd edn., Histoire politique de l'Ordre Souverain de Saint-Jean de Jérusalem . . . de 1798 à 1955, vols. 1–2 [to 1830], 1956–63). E. J. King, The Grand Priory of the Order of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem in England (1924; 3rd edn., entitled The Knights of St John in the British Realm, by H. Luke, 1967).

hospitals. Christian hospitals were founded throughout E. Christendom from the 4th cent. onwards, and became exceedingly numerous in W. Europe during the earlier Middle Ages, when they were commonly associated with the monastic orders. From the earliest times different types were instituted to meet different problems, e.g. those of orphans, the sick, the aged, and the impotent poor. With some notable exceptions, e.g. St Bartholomew's Hospital, London (begun 1123), the medieval hospitals of England were for the most part almshouses for the aged. By the close of the 15th cent. a large proportion of these had been allowed to perish or to survive only in decadent forms. The secularization of the Reformation period interfered only temporarily with the hospitals of Europe, and numbers of important foundations by rulers, municipalities, and Christian societies took place in the 17th and 18th cents.

T. S. Miller, The Birth of the Hospital in the Byzantine Empire (Henry E. Sigerist Supplements to the Bulletin of History of Medicine, NS 10; Baltimore and London [1985]). R. M. Clay, The Mediaeval Hospitals of England (1909); W. H. Godfrey, The English Almshouse, with some account of its predecessor, the Medieval Hospital (1955); B. [J.] Bailey, Almshouses (1988); B. Howson, Houses of Noble Poverty: A History of the English Almshouse (Sunbury-on-Thames, 1993). J. Imbert, Les Hôpitaux en droit canonique (du décret de Gratien à la sécularisation de l'administration de l'Hôtel-Dieu de Paris en 1505) (L'Église et l'État au Moyen Age, 8; 1947). M. Mollat, Les Pauvres au Moyen Age: Étude sociale [1978], esp. pp. 165–91, with bibl. pp. 378–80. J. J. Walsh in CE 7 (1910), pp. 480–8, s.v.; E. Nasalli-Rocca and A. B. McPadden in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 159–66, s.v. 'Hospitals, History of'; U. Lindgren and E. Kislinger in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 5 (1991), cols. 133–7, s.v. 'Hospital', with bibl.

Host (Lat. hostia). A sacrificial victim, and so the consecrated bread in the *Eucharist, regarded as the Sacrifice of the Body of Christ.

Hostiensis (*c.*1200–71), canonist. Henry de Bartholomaeis, or Henry of Susa from his birthplace in NW Italy, was commonly known as Hostiensis because he was Cardinal-Bishop of Ostia. He ranks high among medieval canonists and was a prolific, even verbose, writer as well as being active internationally in diplomatic and government affairs, both secular and ecclesiastical. He is mentioned by *Dante in Paradiso, 12. 83. He studied law at *Bologna, lectured on the *Decretals at *Paris, and held benefices in England and Provence. He was Bp. of Sisteron (1244–50) and Abp. of Embrun (1250–62), both in Provence, before he was created Cardinal-Bishop of Ostia by Pope Urban IV in 1262. Outstanding among his works are his Summa and his Apparatus or Lectura on the Decretals of *Gregory IX. He began both works while teaching at Paris, completing the Summa by 1253 and the vast and intricate Apparatus only shortly before his death. Possibly less theological in tone than the Apparatus, the Summa provides a synthesis of canon and Roman law, designed to be of practical use. It enjoyed great success, often being described as the Summa Aurea (the 'Golden Summa'), and was the vade-mecum of canonists until the 17th cent. His writings embody a wealth of personal experience and rest on a thorough grasp of sources; they contain a detailed analysis of Papal power.

There are no modern edns. of his works, though the 1581 Venice edn. of the Apparatus was repr. at Turin in 1965. For details of MSS and edns., see J. F. von Schulte, Die Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des Canonischen Rechts von Gratian bis auf die Gegenwart, 2 (Stuttgart, 1875), pp. 123–9. C. Gallagher, SJ, Canon Law and the Christian Community: The Role of Law in the Church according to the Summa Aurea of Cardinal Hostiensis (Analecta Gregoriana, 208; Rome, 1978). C. Lefebvre, '"Aequitas Canonica" et "Periculum Animae" dans la Doctrine de l'Hostiensis', Ephemerides Iuris Canonici, 8 (Rome, 1952), pp. 305–21. J. A. Watt, The Theory of Papal Monarchy in the Thirteenth Century: The Contribution of the Canonists [1965], pp. 107–33. C. Lefebvre in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1211–27; id. in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 170 f., both s.v.

Hours, Canonical. The times of daily prayer laid down in the Divine *Office, and esp. the services appointed to be recited at these times. In the W. Church, the seven commonly recognized Hours have traditionally been *Mattins and *Lauds (reckoned as a single hour), *Prime, *Terce, *Sext, *None, *Vespers, and *Compline (qq.v.). The whole pattern of daily prayer, however, was much simplified in the 1971 Breviary. See OFFICE, DIVINE.

Housel. A medieval English name for the Eucharist, perhaps descended from a Teutonic stem meaning 'holy'. In *Ulphilas' rendering of Mt. 9: 13, a similar word (hunsl) is used for 'sacrifice'.

The 'houselling cloth' was the (late medieval) long white linen cloth spread before, or held by, the communicants at the time of receiving the Sacrament. It has survived continuously at St Mary the Virgin's, Oxford, at Wimborne Minister, and perhaps in a few other places. It has been restored in some other Anglican churches in modern times. In the RC Church the use of such a cloth was ordered by the '*Rituale Romanum' (4. 2. 1) but tended to become obsolete after 1929, when the Sacred Congregation for the Discipline of the Sacraments directed that a small metal plate should be held before communicants.

Arts. 'Housel' and 'Houseling' in OED (2nd edn.), 7 (1989), pp. 444 f.

Howard, John (*c.*1726–90), English philanthropist and prison reformer. A man of Evangelical piety, he was a moderate *Calvinist and though his second wife was a Churchwoman and he accompanied her to the local parish church, he remained a Dissenter (Independent) throughout his life. He maintained a wide religious acquaintance and his belief in the transforming power of religion motivated his reforming activity. In 1773 he became High Sheriff of Bedford, where what he saw of the terrible afflictions of both tried and untried in the county gaol inspired him to his work of prison reform. His first step (1774) was to secure official salaries for gaolers, who had hitherto depended on fees extorted from the prisoners. He then visited numerous prisons and lazarettos (quarantine hospitals) in England and throughout Europe, regardless of the dangers of entering infectious dwellings and noxious cells. His writings included The State of the Prisons in England and Wales (1777) and an Account of the Principal Lazarettos in Europe (1789).

The Howard League for Penal Reform, a small voluntary society, was founded in memory of John Howard in 1866. Its objectives include 'study and research into the treatment of offenders and the prevention of crime'. It championed the abolition of capital punishment and corporal punishment long before these subjects became popular issues, and it was largely instrumental in bringing about the provision of payment of prisoners for work done in prison and the institution of Legal Aid.

Howard's State of the Prisons and Account of the Principal Lazarettos were repr. as Prisons and Lazarettos, with introd. by R. W. England (2 vols., Montclair, NJ, 1973); State of the Prisons, also repr. in facsimile (Abingdon, 1977); and abridged, with some extracts from the vol. on lazarettos, by K. Ruck for Everyman's Library, no. 835 (1929). Principal biogs. by J. Aikin, A View of the Character and Public Services of the late John Howard (1792), and J. B. Brown, Memoirs of the Public and Private Life of John Howard the Philanthropist (1818). [W.] H. Dixon, John Howard and the Prison-World of Europe (1849), contrasts with J. Field, The Life of John Howard (1850), and id., Correspondence of John Howard (1855). Other studies by J. Stoughton (London, 1884), D. L. Howard (ibid., 1958), M. Southwood (ibid., 1958), and G. Pleuger (Bedford [1990]). R. Morgan, 'Divine Philanthropy: John Howard Reconsidered', History, 62 (1977), pp. 388–410; L. Radzinowicz, 'John Howard', in J. C. Freshman (ed.), Prisons Past and Future (Cambridge Studies in Criminology, 41; 1978), pp. 7–13, with other studies on Howard, pp. 15–51. Bibl. by L. Baumgartner in Bulletin of the History of Medicine, 7 (1939), pp. 486–534 and 595–626. G. F. R. Barker in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 44–8.

Howe, John (1630–1705), *Puritan divine and writer. In 1650 he became chaplain (though apparently unordained), and a little later Fellow, of Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1652 he was ordained by the Puritan rector of Winwick, whom he looked up to as a 'primitive bishop'. In 1654 he became incumbent of Great Torrington, Devon, and in 1657 O. *Cromwell made him his domestic chaplain, an office which he continued to hold under Richard Cromwell. On the latter's resignation he returned to Great Torrington, from which he was ejected in 1662 on the passing of the Act of *Uniformity. Unlike most of his contemporary fellow *Nonconformists, his standpoint inclined to *Latitudinarianism. After some years of wandering he published in 1668 The Blessedness of the Righteous Discoursed from Psal. 17, 15, which brought him to the notice of Lord Massereene, and in 1670 he became his chaplain at Antrim Castle with the approval of the bishop of the diocese. In 1676 he was appointed co-pastor of the Presbyterian congregation at Haberdashers' Hall in London, where he continued his publications and lived on friendly terms with eminent Anglicans. In 1685, owing to the increasing severity of measures against the Nonconformists, he went abroad, settling in 1686 at Utrecht, but in 1687 he returned to England to minister to his flock under the protection of *James II's first *Declaration of Indulgence. After the Revolution, he headed the deputation of Nonconformist ministers who congratulated William III in Jan. 1689. He continued to work for mutual forbearance among Christians of differing denominations, and unsuccessfully sought to unite the *Presbyterians and *Congregationalists.

Works (2 vols., London, 1724), with Memoir by E. *Calamy, vol. 1, pp. 1–88; new edn., 3 vols., ibid., 1848. Works also ed. J. Hunt (8 vols., ibid., 1810–22); Posthumous Works, ed. id. (4 vols., ibid., 1832); also pub., with general introd. by H. Rogers, by *Religious Tract Society (6 vols., 1862–3). H. Rogers, The Life and Character of John Howe with an Analysis of his Writings (1836); R. F. Horton, John Howe (1895). N. H. Keeble, The Literary Culture of Nonconformity in Later Seventeenth-Century England (Leicester, 1987), passim. A. Gordon in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 85–8.

Howells, Herbert Norman (1892–1983), English composer. He joined the staff of the Royal College of Music in London in 1920 and taught composition there for over 50 years. He was also Director of Music at St Paul's Girls' School in Hammersmith (1936–62) and King Edward VII Professor of Music at London University (1954–64). His masterpiece is the choral-orchestral Hymnus Paradisi, written in 1938 in memory of his son, and first performed at the Three Choirs Festival in *Gloucester in 1950. He is chiefly known for his choral and organ music that has provided English 20th-cent. Church music with one of its most distinctive sounds. Especially notable is the long series of service settings written for specific cathedral and collegiate choirs, beginning with the 'Collegium Regale' set for King's College, Cambridge, *c.*1944. His anthems include the well-known 'Like as the hart' and 'O pray for the peace of Jerusalem'. The hymn-tune Michael and his early Christmas *carol 'A spotless rose' achieved wide popularity.

R. Spearing, H.H.: A Tribute to Herbert Howells on his Eightieth Birthday (1972). C. Palmer, Herbert Howells: A centenary celebration (1992). K. R. Long, The Music of the English Church (1972), pp. 428–30. H. Ottaway in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 8 (1980), pp. 746 f., s.v.

Howley, William (1766–1848), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the last 'Prince-Archbishop', the revenues of the archiepiscopal see coming under the control of the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners at his death. Educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford, he was appointed Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford in 1809, Bp. of London in 1813, and Abp. of Canterbury in 1828. An 18th-cent. *High Churchman and an extreme Tory, he was opposed to political reform and relief for RCs and Jews, and it was largely his influence that secured the rejection of Lord John Russell's moderate education scheme in 1839. Though he at first supported the *Oxford Movement, he lost sympathy with it when it was perceived as encouraging 'Romish' tendencies, esp. after 1845. On the death of William IV (1837), whom he had attended on his sick-bed, it fell to him to announce to the Princess Victoria (whom he had baptized when he was Bp. of London) her accession to the Crown.

B. Harrison, The Remembrance of a departed Guide and Ruler in the Church of God: A Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Maidstone (1848). E. [F.] Carpenter, Cantuar: The Archbishops and their Office (1971; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1988), pp. 290–9. G. F. R. Barker in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 128 f.

Howson, John Saul (1816–85), Dean of *Chester. He was educated at Giggleswick School and Trinity College, Cambridge. After ordination he taught at Liverpool Collegiate Institute, where W. J. *Conybeare was headmaster, succeeding him in 1849. From 1867 till his death, he was Dean of Chester, where he laboured for the restoration of the fabric of the cathedral and for schools in the city. He is best known for his Life and Epistles of St Paul (2 vols., 1852), in which he collaborated with Conybeare. This book, based on extensive geographical, archaeological, and historical studies, was an impressive work of scholarship for its time, learned yet not beyond the general reader. Most of the descriptive passages were done by Howson. He also wrote other Pauline studies, as well as works on other NT subjects. An article on 'Deaconesses in the Church of England' in the Quarterly Review (1861), re-issued in 1862 as a pamphlet, did much to promote the systematized ministry of women in England.

E. Venables in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 130–2.

Hrabanus Maurus. See RABANUS MAURUS.

Hrosvit (10th cent.), German Christian poetess. Of a noble Saxon family, she became a *canoness of the abbey of Gandersheim in Saxony. She was very learned and well versed not only in Scripture and the Fathers but also in classical literature—Horace, Virgil, Ovid, Plautus, and esp. Terence, whom, acc. to her own admission, she took as her model. The MS of her writings, in Latin, was discovered by the humanist, Conrad Celtis, at Ratisbon and printed for the first time in 1501. Originally her works were divided into three parts containing 8 poems on saints, 6 plays, and a long panegyric on the Ottos which was left unfinished. Among the poems on saints the 'Passio Sancti Pelagii' is esp. interesting, since she claims to have derived her facts from an eye-witness of the martyrdom. It is printed in full by the *Bollandists in the '*Acta Sanctorum'. Other poems treat of the BVM, St *Basil, St *Dionysius of Paris (identified with *Dionysius the Areopagite), and St *Agnes. The main object of her plays was to oppose to Terence's representations of the frailty of women the chastity of Christian virgins and penitents. 'Gallicanus', 'Dulcitius', and 'Sapientia' describe the steadfastness of martyrs, whereas 'Calimachus', 'Abraham', and 'Paphnutius' deal with the struggle between the spirit and the flesh; and many of them reveal a remarkable sense of the dramatic. She was greatly encouraged by the scholars of her time, but soon after her death almost completely forgotten. In modern times she has once more aroused much interest.

Editio princeps by C. Celtis (Nuremberg, 1501); modern edns. by K. Strecker (Teub., 2nd edn., 1930) and H. Homeyer (Munich, 1970), and of her plays (with Ital. tr.) by F. Bertini (Milan, 1986), with introd. by P. Dronke. Eng. trs. of her plays by H. J. W. Tillyard (London, 1923) and K. [M.] Wilson (Saskatoon, 1986; rev. edn., New York and London, 1989), and of her non-dramatic works by Sister M. G. Wiegand (St Louis, 1936). A. L. Haight (ed.), Hroswitha of Gandersheim (New York, 1965), with extensive bibl. Other modern studies incl. those by B. Nagel (Stuttgart, 1965) and K. M. Wilson (Davis Medieval Texts and Studies, 7; Leiden, etc., 1988). Manitius, 1, pp. 619–32.

Hsi-an-Fu. See SIGAN-FU STONE.

Huber, Samuel (*c.*1547–1624), Protestant controversialist. A native of Burgdorf, near Berne, he took an active part in a series of religious disputes, generally defending *Lutheran doctrines against the *Calvinism of the Swiss Reformed Church. He caused special offence by his assertion of Christ's universal *atonement ('Christum Jesum esse mortuum pro peccatis totius generis humani'), and was banished from Switzerland on 28 June 1588. Shortly afterwards he signed the 'Formula of *Concord' (1580) and for a time held offices in the Lutheran Church in Germany until this too found his teaching on the atonement too extreme. The title 'Huberianism' was widely given to doctrines of the atonement identical with or similar to those which Huber advocated.

J. A. Schmid, De Samuelis Huberi Vita Fatis et Doctrina (Helmstedt, 1708), with full list of his works. G. Adam, Der Streit um die Prädestination im ausgehenden 16. Jahrhundert: Eine Untersuchung zu den Entwürfen von Samuel Huber und Aegidius Hunnius (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 30; Neukirchen [1970]). K. R. Hagenbach and G. Müller in PRE (3rd edn.), 8 (1900), pp. 409–12, with bibl.

Hubert, St (*c.*657–727), 'Apostle of the Ardennes'. Perhaps of noble birth, he was a disciple of St *Lambert and active in missionary work in the middle Meuse region. He succeeded Lambert as Bp. of Tongeren/Maastricht in 705/6, and in 718 he had his relics moved from Maastricht to Liège and placed in a church dedicated to him (built four years earlier). The see was moved to Liège in 717/18. In 824 Hubert's bones were transferred from Liège to the monastery of Andagium (presumably St-Hubert in the Ardennes), which became a centre of pilgrimage; in the 9th cent. his cult spread to N. France and the Low Countries, and many religious houses were dedicated to him. The story (originally told of St *Eustace) that while hunting he saw a stag with a crucifix between its antlers, is not found before the 15th cent. He is the patron saint of huntsmen (with St Eustace), of furriers, metalworkers, and butchers, and is invoked against hydrophobia. Feast day, 3 Nov.

AASS, Nov. 1 (1887), pp. 759–930, with seven Lives; crit. edn. of the earliest, written soon after 744, by W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 6 (1913), pp. 471–96. M. Coens, SJ, 'Notes sur la légende de S. Hubert', Anal. Boll. 45 (1927), pp. 345–62 (with review of recent lit.). T. Réjalot, OSB, Le Culte et les reliques de saint Hubert (Gembloux, 1928). F. Baix, 'Saint Hubert. Sa mort, sa canonisation, ses reliques', in Mélanges Félix Rousseau: Études sur l'histoire du pays mosan au moyen âge (Brussels, 1958), pp. 71–80, with refs. Modern studies by L. Huyghebaert (Antwerp, 1949) and A. Paffrath (Hamburg and Berlin, 1961). M. Werner, Der Lütticher Raum in frühkarolingischer Zeit (Göttingen, 1980), pp. 275–80.

Hubert Walter (d. 1205), Abp. of *Canterbury. A nephew and protégé of Ranulf Glanvill, justiciar of England under Henry II, Hubert was already a clerk experienced in the judicial and administrative business of Church and State when he became Dean of *York in 1186. Except for bishoprics, this was the highest office open to a secular clerk in the English Church. Three years later, when King Richard succeeded his father, Hubert became Bp. of *Salisbury. In 1190 he accompanied Abp. *Baldwin on the Third *Crusade; he was much praised for his capacity as a military leader, a diplomat, and a provident organizer of the Crusading army. After the Crusade, as the King's nominee he became Abp. of Canterbury in 1193. He negotiated Richard's release from captivity, and organized his ransom. In the King's absence overseas, Hubert was vicegerent of England, with the office of justiciar, from Dec. 1193 to July 1198. For part of this time he was also Papal legate for England and Wales, having been appointed by *Celestine III in March 1195. After Celestine's death in 1198, *Innocent III did not renew Hubert's legatine commission and Hubert resigned the justiciarship, thereafter held by a layman. But both in Church and State he continued to exert unequalled authority and influence. King *John made him chancellor in May 1199 and Innocent III relied on him greatly in major lawsuits and all other matters affecting the English Church. Many contemporaries noted his thirst for power and wealth, and his ruthless treatment of opponents was condemned by others besides *Giraldus Cambrensis. As leader of the English Church he did not neglect his ecclesiastical duties. His pontificate saw important advances in the practice of Church courts and in the conduct of various kinds of ecclesiastical business, such as canonical *visitations by bishops and legislation in Church councils. He was also instrumental in persuading Innocent III to canonize two English saints (*Gilbert of Sempringham and *Wulfstan of Worcester).

His official letters as Abp. ed. C. R. Cheney and E. John, English Episcopal Acta, 3 (1986). The correspondence over his foundation of a collegiate church at *Lambeth, which caused friction with the monks of Christ Church, Canterbury, is pr. in W. Stubbs (ed.), Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard I, 2: Epistolae Cantuarienses (RS, 1865), pp. 366–538. The constitutions of his legatine council at York in 1195 and his provincial council at Westminster in 1200 ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke, Councils & Synods . . . 1, A.D. 871–1204, 2 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 1042–52 and 1055–74. Modern accounts of Hubert's activities by C. R. Cheney, Hubert Walter (1967), and C. R. Young, Hubert Walter, Lord of Canterbury and Lord of England (Durham, NC, 1968). In a broader setting, see C. R. Cheney, From Becket to Langton (Manchester, 1956), pp. 31–41; id., Pope Innocent III and England (Päpste und Papsttum, 9; Stuttgart, 1976), pp. 27–286 passim. See also histories of the reign of John, cited s.v.

Hubmaier, Balthasar (?1485–1528), German *Anabaptist. He studied under J. *Eck at Freiburg (Breisgau) and Ingolstadt, at the latter place becoming professor and parish priest. In 1516 he was appointed preacher at Regensburg Cathedral, and in 1521 parish priest at Waldshut. Here he came into contact with the Swiss Reformers, allied himself with H. *Zwingli openly in 1523, and forthwith introduced the Reformation. Soon, however, he abandoned Zwinglian doctrines for those of the Anabaptists, and in his Von dem Tauf der Gläubigen, published in May 1525, asserted the necessity of personal faith for baptism and condemned infant baptism as idolatry. Soon afterwards he became entangled in the *Peasants' War and may have been the author of the *Twelve Articles. When in the night of 5–6 Dec. 1525 Waldshut was occupied by Austrian troops, Hubmaier fled to Zurich, where he was forced by Zwingli to abjure his Anabaptist views. But early in the next year he left Zurich, renounced his recantation, and in July 1526 settled at Nikolsburg (now called Mikulow) in Moravia, where he worked for the Anabaptist cause esp. by writing pamphlets on theological questions, e.g. on the Lord's Supper and in defence of free will. Of independent mind, he clashed with some of his fellow Anabaptists, esp. those who were absolute in their rejection of the civil power. In 1527 the Austrian authorities demanded his extradition, and he was taken to Vienna, where he was burnt on 10 Mar. 1528. A few days later his wife, with a stone tied round her neck, was thrown into the Danube and drowned.

Schriften ed. G. Westin and T. Bergsten (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 29; 1962). Eng. tr. of his Works by H. W. Pipkin and J. H. Yoder (Classics of the Radical Reformation, 5; Scottdale, Pa., etc., 1989). Life [in Ger.] by T. Bergsten (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Studia Historico-Ecclesiastica Upsaliensia, 3; Kassel, 1961; abbreviated Eng. tr., Valley Forge, Pa., 1978). C. Windhorst, Täuferisches Taufverständnis: Balthasar Hubmaiers Lehre zwischen traditioneller und reformatorischer Theologie (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 16; Leiden, 1976). J. M. Stayer, Anabaptists and the Sword (Lawrence, Kan., 1972), pp. 104–7, 141–6, and 162–6. W. L. Moore, 'Catholic Teacher and Anabaptist Pupil: The Relationship between John Eck and Balthasar Hubmaier', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 72 (1981), pp. 68–97. J. M. Stayer, 'Radikaler Frühzwinglianismus. Balthasar Hubmaier, Fabers "Ursach" und die Programme der Bauern', Mennonitische Geschichtsblätter, 42 (1985), pp. 43–59. C. Windhorst in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 611–13, s.v.

Huchyns, William, a pseudomyn used by W. *Tyndale.

Huck, Albert (1867–1942), NT scholar. He held pastoral appointments in several places in Germany. He compiled a very widely used 'Synopsis' of the first three Gospels, presenting their Greek text with the parallel passages in adjacent columns. The 1st edition appeared in 1892 and the 9th, much revised by H. *Lietzmann, in 1936. Its existence greatly assisted modern researches (esp. in the years 1895–1925) into the *Synoptic Problem.

Eng. adaptation of the 9th Ger. edn. by F. L. Cross (Tübingen, 1936; Oxford, 1949). Rev. edn., in Ger. and Eng., by H. Greeven (Tübingen, 1981).

Hucusque. The opening word of the preface to the supplement to the '*Gregorian' sacramentary composed at the end of the 8th, or beginning of the 9th, cent., and often applied to the supplement itself. The author explains the deficiencies of the sacramentary sent by *Hadrian I to *Charlemagne (known as the '*Hadrianum') and the means he has taken to remedy them. The supplement proper contains the Sunday masses, those of the *Common of the Saints, *votive masses and other pieces. There follows a series of 221 *prefaces, 52 episcopal blessings, and other texts. The authorship was formerly ascribed to *Alcuin, but it is now widely held that it was compiled by St *Benedict of Aniane.

Crit. edn. by J. Deshusses, OSB, Le Sacramentaire grégorien: Ses principales formes d'après les plus anciens manuscrits (Spicilegium Friburgense, 16; 1971), pp. 351–605, under the title 'Supplementum Anianense'. For earlier edns. see bibl. to GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY. Eng. tr. of the preface in C. Vogel, Medieval Liturgy: An Introduction to the Sources, rev. Eng. tr., by W. G. Storey and N. K. Rasmussen, OP (Washington, DC [1986]), pp. 87 f. J. Deshusses, OSB, 'Le "Supplément" au sacramentaire grégorien: Alcuin ou saint Benoît d'Aniane?', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 9 (pt. 1; 1965), pp. 48–71. Vogel, op. cit., pp. 85–92, with further refs. p. 126, notes pp. 229 f.

Huddleston, Ernest Urban Trevor (1913–), Abp. of the Province of the Indian Ocean. The son of Capt. Sir Ernest Huddleston, Royal Indian Navy, he was educated at Lancing College and Christ Church, Oxford. After training at *Wells Theological College, he was ordained deacon in 1936 (priest in 1937) to the title of St Mark's, Swindon. He joined the *Community of the Resurrection in 1941 and was sent to be in charge of the Community's work in the African townships of Sophiatown, Orlando, and Pimville (the area now known as Soweto). In 1956 he was recalled to become Novice Guardian of his Community at Mirfield. In 1960 he was elected Bp. of Masasi, Tanzania. In 1968 he again returned to England as Bp. of Stepney (in E. London) and in 1978 was elected Bp. of Mauritius and Abp. of the Province of the Indian Ocean. He resigned in 1983. He was closely involved in the struggle of the African people against apartheid; he became President of the Anti-Apartheid Movement in 1981. His writings include Naught for Your Comfort (1956), The True and Living God (1964), and God's World (1966).

D. D. Honoré (ed.), Trevor Huddleston: Essays on his Life and Work (Oxford, 1988).

Huet, Pierre Daniel (1630–1721), French scholar and bishop. In 1652 he accompanied S. *Bochart on a visit to the court of Queen *Christina of Sweden; in the Royal Library at Stockholm he discovered some fragments of *Origen's Comm. in Matt. He went on to produce an important edition of Origen's works (1668). He then edited, with Anne Lefèvre, the famous 'Delphin Classics' in some 60 volumes for the Dauphin, whose tutor (with J. B. *Bossuet) he was. He also wrote a Traité de l'origine des romans (1670; Eng. tr., 1672) and in 1674 was elected a member of the Académie française. His Demonstratio evangelica (1679) was an apology for Christianity. Having been at first sympathetic to the philosophy of R. *Descartes, he later criticized it in his Censura philosophiae Cartesianae (1689). He was nominated Bp. of Avranches in 1689, but was not consecrated until 1692; he resigned in 1699. He then lived with the *Jesuits in the rue St-Antoine in Paris; he bequeathed to them his books and valuable collection of MSS which, when the Society was suppressed, for the most part passed to the Royal Library, now incorporated into the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris.

Huetiana, ou pensées diverses de M. Huet [ed. P. J. T. d'Olivet] ('1822' [1722]). Memoirs of the Life of Peter Daniel Huet ... written by himself, tr. from the Lat. by J. Aikin (2 vols., 1810). Modern collection of extracts from various writings by D. Aubry, Daniel Huet (Paris [1943]). A. Dupront, P. D. Huet et l'exégèse comparatiste du XVII^e siècle (1930); L. Tolmer, Pierre-Daniel Huet (1630–1721), humaniste physicien (Mémoire de l'Académie nationale des sciences, arts et belles-lettres de Caen, NS 11; 1949). C. Urbain, 'La Bibliothèque de P. D. Huet', Bulletin du Bibliophile et du Bibliothécaire, 1910, pp. 133–46. B. Heurtebize in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 199–201.

Hügel, Baron Friedrich von. See VON HÜGEL, BARON FRIEDRICH.

Hugh, St (1024–1109), Abbot of *Cluny. Of a noble Burgundian family, he was brought up by his great-uncle, Hugh, Bp. of Auxerre. At the age of 14 he entered the monastery of Cluny under St *Odilo and owing to outstanding piety was allowed to take his vows only a year later. Before the age of 21 he was Prior and on Odilo's death (1 Jan. 1049) was unanimously chosen Abbot, being installed by the Abp. of Besançon on 22 Feb. 1049. *Leo IX took him into his confidence, and henceforward Hugh, as adviser to nine Popes, came to exercise a dominating influence in ecclesiastical and political affairs. He took part in securing the condemnation of *Berengar of Tours (1050) and upheld the privileges of the Cluniacs against the attacks of successive Abps. of Lyons and Bps. of Mâcon. He warmly encouraged *Gregory VII's efforts for reform and tried to mediate in the bitter feud between the Pope and Emp. *Henry IV. Despite his constant absence, the monastery suffered no relaxation in discipline and, indeed, reached under Hugh a position never surpassed. The Customs of Cluny compiled by Bernard and Ulrich illustrate the development of Cluniac monasticism during his reign, and they were influential both within and beyond the Cluniac family of monasteries. He induced Pope *Urban II (d. 1099) to consecrate in person the high altar of the new basilica at Cluny (25 Oct. 1095), then the largest church in Christendom. During his rule, the first Cluniac house in England, the priory of St Pancras at Lewes, was founded. At the Council of *Clermont (1095), he was present at the preaching of the First Crusade. Among his liturgical reforms was the introduction of the singing of the Veni Creator at terce during Pentecost. He wrote a 'Life of the Blessed Virgin', but this, with most of his letters, has been lost. He was canonized by *Callistus II in 1120. Feast day, 29 April.

Early Lives by Gilo and Hugh the monk, letters, statutes, and other material, ed. H. E. J. Cowdrey in Studi Gregoriani, 11 (1978), pp. 9–175; Life by Rainaud, abbot of Vézelay, pr. in AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 648–53; that by *Hildebert of Lavardin, pr. ibid., pp. 634–48; other material, pp. 654–62, with introd. pp. 628–34; the whole entry in AASS is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 159. 845–928. T. Schieffer, 'Notice sur les vies de Saint Hugues, abbé de Cluny', Le Moyen-Âge, 46 (3rd ser. 7; 1936), pp. 81–103. F. Barlow, 'William I's Relations with Cluny', JEH 32 (1981), pp. 131–41; id., 'The Canonization and Early Lives of Hugh I, Abbot of Cluny', Anal. Boll. 98 (1980), pp. 297–334, both repr. in id., The Norman Conquest and Beyond (1983), pp. 245–95. A. Kohnle, Abt Hugo von Cluny (1049–1109) (Beihefte der Francia, 32; Sigmaringen, 1993). On the development of Cluny under his rule, N. Hunt, Cluny under Saint Hugh 1049–1109 (1967). G. de Valous in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 49–56, s.v. 'Cluny'. See also other works cited under CLUNY.

Hugh, St (1052–1132), Bp. of Grenoble. Born at Châteauneuf, near Valence, he became (when still a layman) a Canon of Valence. In 1080 he was elected Bp. of Grenoble to reform the disorders in the diocese, where in a long episcopate he successfully redressed abuses and fostered devotion. He welcomed St *Bruno and his monks to his diocese, granting them the *Grande Chartreuse (1084). He was canonized by Innocent II in 1134, two years after his death. Feast day, 1 Apr.

The primary authority is the Lat. Life by his friend *Guigo I, Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, pr., with introd., in AASS, Apr. 1 (1675), pp. 36–46; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 153. 759–84; also ed. C. Bellet (Montreuil, 1889); Fr. tr. by M.-A. Chomel, with introd. by B. Bligny (Analecta Cartusiana, 112: 3; Salzburg, 1986). Modern Life by A. Du Boys (Grenoble, 1837).

Hugh, St (*c.*1140–1200), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was the son of the Lord of Avalon in Burgundy. Brought up to be a member of an order of *canons regular near Grenoble, he was early attracted by the much more severe and secluded life of the newly founded *Carthusian Order, and took vows at the *Grande Chartreuse when he was about 25. His character and talents became known to Henry II, who was attempting to establish at Witham in Somerset the first Carthusian house in England, and *c.*1180 he secured the services of Hugh as its third prior. This was the beginning of a frequent intercourse between Hugh and the King. In 1186 he became, at Henry's earnest wish, Bp. of Lincoln, though he insisted that he should be freely elected before he accepted the office. As bishop he administered his huge diocese well and showed a courageous independence of the King, e.g. as champion of the people against the royal foresters. He later took the lead, with the Bp. of Salisbury, in refusing a demand of Richard I for money for the King's wars, an event of significance in constitutional history. But, despite his unwavering stand for the liberty of the Church, he always maintained good personal relations with the kings—Henry II, Richard I, and *John—under whom he lived. He never forgot that he was a monk, and every year retired for a time to the priory of Witham. Already in his own lifetime he was greatly revered for his holiness and devotion, e.g. his Christian love towards lepers, and in 1220 he was canonized. His tomb at Lincoln became second only to that of St Thomas *Becket at Canterbury as a place of popular devotion until it was spoiled by *Henry VIII. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Magna Vita, by Adam, monk of Eynsham and chaplain to St Hugh, ed. F. J. Dimock (Rolls Series, 1864) and, with Eng. tr. and full introd., by D. L. Douie and H. Farmer, OSB (2 vols., London, 1961–2; repr., with corrections and new introd., Oxford Medieval Texts, 1985); Vita, by *Giraldus Cambrensis in Opera, ed. F. J. Dimock, 7 (RS, 1877), pp. 83–147, with 'Legenda ... to be Read ... on the Day of his Obit' in Appendix D, pp. 172–92; metrical Life, written prob. shortly after his canonization (1220–35), ed. id. (London, 1860). H. Farmer, OSB, 'The Canonization of St Hugh of Lincoln', Lincolnshire Architectural and Archaeological Society Reports and Papers, NS 6, pt. 2 (1956), pp. 86–117. Modern Lives by 'Un Religieux de la Grande Chartreuse' (Montreuil, 1890; Eng. tr. with additions by H. Thurston, SJ, 'Quarterly Series', 99; 1898), R. M. Woolley (London, 1927), and D. H. Farmer (ibid., 1985). H. Mayr-Harting (ed.), Saint Hugh of Lincoln Lectures ... (Oxford, 1987).

Hugh of St-Victor (d. 1142), *Victorine theologian. Little is known about his life. About 1115 he entered St-Victor, the house of *Augustinian Canons recently founded in Paris by *William of Champeaux. According to one account he was born in the region of Ypres, according to another he came from Saxony. His uncle is said to have been archdeacon of the church of Halberstadt, and Hugh dedicated his De arrha animae ('The Soul's Betrothal-gift') to the Augustinian Canons of Hamersleben near Halberstadt. The tradition that makes him a member of the family of the Counts of Blankenberg in Saxony is post-medieval. From the time of his arrival in Paris he does not seem to have left it except for a visit to the court of Pope Innocent II.

Hugh's works cover a very wide field. He wrote on grammar and geometry, an Epitome in philosophiam, a chronicle, the Didascalion, which is a guide to the study of the artes and of theology, commentaries on the Octateuch and Lamentations, homilies on Ecclesiastes, a commentary on *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite's Celestial Hierarchy, a large-scale De sacramentis Christianae fidei, and works of spirituality such as De arca Noe (morali and mystica), De vanitate mundi, De laude caritatis, and a number of shorter pieces. In all these fields Hugh made a distinctive contribution with no parade of learning or claims to originality. It has been said that his work is 'rich in new ideas and fresh presentations of old ones' (A. Squire). In his biblical commentaries he gave new emphasis to the historical study of Scripture and to the importance of studying the literal sense. The same feeling for history underlies the organization of the De sacramentis into the work of Creation and the work of Restoration. History was the foundation. From study (lectio) man must go on to meditation (meditatio) by which the soul tries to discover the Divine thoughts hidden under the veil of both creatures and the Scriptures and to achieve purity of life and strive after loving contemplation (contemplatio). For Hugh everything was ultimately to be subordinated to the contemplative life. Nevertheless, he was in close touch with the discussions and controversies of his day, and it is possible to see in his writings how he takes account of the views of e.g. Peter *Abelard, *William of Conches, and St *Bernard.

Collected edn. of his works first pub. at Paris, 1518; also ed. by the Canons of St-Victor, 3 vols., Rouen, 1648, virtually repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 175–7. Further works not incl. in these edns. are 'De Tribus Maximis Circumstantiis Gestorum' first pub. by W. M. Green in Speculum, 18 (1943), pp. 484–93, Opera Propaedeutica ['Practica geometriae', 'De Grammatica', and 'Epitome in philosophiam'] ed. R. Baron (University of Notre Dame Publications in Mediaeval Studies, 20; 1966), and 'Descriptio Mappe Mundi', ed., with Fr. tr., by P. G. Dalché (Études Augustiniennes, 1988). There are also modern edns. of 'De Arrha Animae' and 'De Vanitate Mundi', Books 1–2, by K. Müller (Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, 123; 1913); of 'Didascalion de Studio Legendi' by C. H. Buttimer (Catholic University of America Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Latin, 10; 1939), and of Six Opuscules spirituels, with Fr. tr., by R. Baron (SC 155; 1969). Further details of his works in R. Goy, see below. The 'De Contemplatione' pub. by [J.] B. Hauréau, Hugues de Saint-Victor: Nouvel examen de l'édition de ses œuvres (1859), pp. 177–210, is not genuine; there is a crit. edn. of this work by R. Baron (Monumenta Christiana Selecta, 2; Tournai, 1955). Eng. trs. of 'De Arrha Animae' by F. S. Taylor (London, 1945); of 'De Sacramentis' by R. J. Deferrari (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 58; 1951); of 'Didascalion' by J. Taylor (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, 64; 1961), with important introd. and comm.; and of Selected Spiritual Writings [incl. 'De arca Noe morali' and 'De vanitate mundi', Books 1–2] by Sr. [Penelope], CSMV (Classics of the Contemplative Life, 1962), with introd. by A. Squire, OP, pp. 13–42. The Explanation of the Rule of St *Augustine usually attributed to Hugh of St-Victor, but prob. the work of Lietbert of St-Ruf, tr. into Eng. by A. Smith, OSB (London, 1911). H. Ostler, Die Psychologie des Hugo von St Viktor (BGPM 6, Heft 1; 1906). H. Weisweiler, SJ, Die Wirksamkeit der Sakramente nach Hugo von St-Viktor (1932). R. Baron, Science et sagesse chez Hugues de Saint-Victor (1957). D. van den Eynde, OFM, Essai sur la succession et la date des écrits de Hugues de Saint-Victor (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 13; 1960). J. Ehlers, Hugo von St Viktor: Studien zum Geschichtsdenken und zur Geschichtsschreibung des 12. Jahrhunderts (Frankfurter Historische Abhandlungen, 7; Wiesbaden, 1973.) R. Goy, Die Überlieferung der Werke Hugos von St Viktor (Monographien zur Geschichte des Mittelalters, 14; Stuttgart, 1976). S. Ernst, Gewissheit des Glau- bens: Der Glaubenstraktat Hugos von St Viktor als Zugang zu seiner theologischen Systematik (BGPM, NF 30; 1987). G. A. Zinn, 'Mandala Symbolism and Use in the Mysticism of Hugh of St. Victor', History of Religions, 12 (1972–3), pp. 317–41. J. B. Schneyer, Repertorium der lateinischen Sermones des Mittelalters für die Zeit von 1150–1350, 2 (BGPM, NF 43, Heft 2, 1970) pp. 786–813. F. Vernet in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 240–308, s.v. 'Hugues de Saint-Victor'; D. van den Eynde in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 194 f., s.v.; R. Baron in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 901–39, s.v. 'Hugues de Saint-Victor'; J. Châtillon in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 629–35, s.v. 'Hugo von St. Viktor'.

Hughes, Hugh Price (1847–1902), *Methodist divine. A native of Carmarthen and son of a doctor, he began preaching at the age of 14 and, after entering the Wesleyan ministry, became a great preacher, who concerned himself especially with social problems such as the housing of the poor, conditions at work, and gambling. He was among the first of the Nonconformist leaders to espouse the platform of '*Christian Socialism'—hitherto largely an Anglican movement. Greatly influenced by Josephine *Butler, he came to see the need for moral reformation in society to receive legislative expression; he was thus a powerful spokesman for 'the Nonconformist Conscience', for demands that the State intervene to uphold a code of Christian practice. In 1885 he started the Methodist Times, a weekly which soon became one of the leading organs of Nonconformist opinion. He worked hard to secure co-operation among the various Nonconformist bodies, and in 1896 he became the first president of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. He also took a prominent part in the Education Acts controversy, in which, though supporting the Nonconformist policy, he on one occasion expressed his willingness to accept the *Apostles' Creed as a basis of teaching in the schools.

[D. P. Hughes, daughter], The Life of Hugh Price Hughes (1904). J. [H. S.] Kent, 'Hugh Price Hughes and the Nonconformist Conscience', in G. V. Bennett and J. Walsh (eds.), Essays in Modern English Church History in memory of Norman Sykes (1966), pp. 181–205; N. McG. King, 'Hugh Price Hughes and the British "Social Gospel"', Journal of Religious History, 13 (1984–5), pp. 66–82. E. [R.] Norman, The Victorian Christian Socialists (Cambridge, 1987), pp. 144–61. P. S. Bagwell, Outcast London: A Christian Response. The West London Mission of the Methodist Church 1887–1987 (1987), pp. 5–48, passim.

Huguenots, the *Calvinist French Protestants. The etymology of the name is controversial; Henri Estienne (*Stephanus) in 1566 explained it as a nickname based on a medieval romance about a King Hugo, but a derivation from Eidgenossen (Ger. 'confederates', i.e. those admitted to the Swiss Confederation, Gallicized in Geneva as eigenotz), is widely accepted. The beginnings of the movement have sometimes been traced back to the publication of J. Lefèvre d'Étaples's [J. *Faber's] Sancti Pauli Epistolae XIV . . . cum commentariis (1512), but any direct connection is unlikely. Its real originator was J. Calvin, who, though he had to flee from France in 1534, dedicated his Institutes (1536) to Francis I. At its first Synod in Paris (1539) the French Protestant Church formally organized itself on a Calvinist basis. The movement was fiercely resisted by the family of the Guises who came into power with the accession of Francis II later in 1539. They later founded the Catholic League to fight against the Protestants, enlisting the help of Spain. By the time of their second Synod at Poitiers (1561), the Huguenots had grown into a sizeable national minority; after the Colloquy of *Poissy they obtained a measure of freedom to practise their religion. They came to be seen as a danger to the State and the ensuing religious wars (1562–94) were fought between Huguenots and Catholics, the most terrible event being the Massacre of St Bartholomew's Day (1572). The increasing influence of the Politiques and the tolerant attitude of *Henry IV led to their being granted extensive freedom of worship and other rights in the Edict of *Nantes (1598). The Huguenots built numerous churches (temples), including the one at Charenton (1606) to serve their adherents in Paris. They continued to be regarded as a disruptive element in an increasingly absolute State. After the fall of their fortress at La Rochelle (1628), by the Treaty of Alais (1629) they were deprived of their political rights and lost their fortified towns. Under Louis XIV their freedom continued to be curtailed until the Edict of Nantes was revoked by that of Fontainebleau (1685). Many were forced to accept Catholicism by the *Dragonnades and other pressures. Some two to three thousand went into exile, seeking refuge in the Netherlands, Switzerland, England, Prussia, and America, but the majority remained. In 1702–3 Huguenot extremists raised the rebellion of the *Camisards. After its failure the influence of the Huguenots in the 18th cent. was negligible. Marriages before their ministers were not recognized until Louis XVI issued the Edict of Tolerance in 1787, and only in 1802 was the legal standing of their Church re-established. It then extended its activities in education and missions. A disagreement in 1852 between the liberal and more numerous traditionalist sections led to a split in 1872 and to a complete break in 1906. In 1907, however, the National Union of the Reformed [i.e. Calvinist] Churches of France was formed; in 1909 it combined with non-Calvinist bodies to form the Protestant Federation of France. In the 1970s they formed less than 2 per cent of the population of France. See also FRANCE, CHRISTIANITY IN, and DU PLESSIS-MORNAY, PHILIPPE.

A. J. Grant, The Huguenots (HUL, 1934); R. Stéphan [R. A. P Stoupan], Histoire du Protestantisme français [1961]; R. Mandrou and others, Histoire des Protestants en France (Toulouse [1977]). S. Mours, Le Protestantisme en France au XVI^e siècle (1959); id., Le Protestantisme en France au XVII^e siècle (1598–1685) (1967); D. Ligou, Le Protestantisme en France de 1598 à 1715 (1968); B. Dompnier, Le Venin de l'hérésie: Image du protestantisme et combat catholique au XVII^e siècle [1985]. A. Encrevé, Les Protestants de France de 1800 à nos jours: Histoire d'une réintégration [1985]; id., Protestants français au milieu du XIX^e siècle: Les Réformés de 1848 à 1870 (Geneva, 1986); J. Baubérot, Le Retour des Huguenots: La vitalité protestante XIX^e–XX^e siècle (1985). M. Yardeni, Le Refuge protestant [1985]; M. Magdelaine and R. von Thadden, Le Refuge huguenot [1985]; R. D. Gwynn, Huguenot Heritage: The History and Contribution of the Huguenots in Britain (1985); B. Cottret, Terre d'exil: L'Angleterre et ses réfugiés français et wallons, de la Réforme à la Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes, 1500–1700 [1985]. J. G. Gray, 'The Origin of the word Huguenot', Sixteenth Century Journal, 14 (1983), pp. 349–59. Biogs. of individual Huguenots in E. and E. Haag, La France protestante (9 vols., 1846–59; 2nd edn. by H. Bordier, vols. 1–6 [to Gasparin], 1877–88). Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français (1853 ff.). See also works cited s.v. REFORMATION, esp. that of E. G. Léonard; also bibl. to FRANCE, CHRISTIANITY IN; CAMISARDS; HENRY IV OF FRANCE; NANTES, EDICT OF; and RICHELIEU.

Hulsean Lectures. The course of lectures delivered annually at Cambridge in acc. with the bequest of the Revd John Hulse (1708–90). The original distribution of the bequest provided: (1) two divinity scholarships at St John's College, (2) a prize for a dissertation, (3) a 'Christian Advocate', and (4) a preacher or lecturer. By a revision of the statutes in 1860, a divinity professorship was substituted for (3) and the status of (4) considerably altered. By a further revision in 1934, the Hulsean and Norrisian professorships were united to form the Norris–Hulse professorship, the first holder of the joint professorship being F. C. *Burkitt.

Hulst, Maurice d'. See D'HULST, MAURICE.

Humanae Vitae. The encyclical issued by Pope *Paul VI on 25 July 1968 condemning all forms of birth control except the 'rhythm method'. The majority of the Papal Commission appointed by *John XXIII in 1963 (during *Vatican II) and confirmed by Paul VI, appears to have favoured the legitimacy of contraception. The encyclical, however, taking its stand on the sanctity of *Natural Law, condemned abortion (even for therapeutic reasons), sterilization, or any action which, in connection with the conjugal act, purposes 'to render procreation impossible'. Although it merely reaffirmed the traditional doctrine of the Church, it appears to imply that, in view of the difficulty of its teaching, married couples unable to comply are not to be debarred from the Eucharist. See also CONTRACEPTION, PROCREATION, AND ABORTION, ETHICS OF.

Text in AAS 60 (1968), pp. 481–503; also pr., with Eng. tr. by R. Bogan, in P. Harris and others, On Human Life (1968), pp. 107–61. J. E. Smith, Humanae Vitae a Generation Later (Washington, DC [1991]).

Humani Generis. The encyclical of *Pius XII (12 Aug. 1950) aimed at correcting extreme opinions which had become prominent in the post-war theological revival. It rejected *Existentialism; excessive emphasis of the Word of God to the detraction of reason; distrust of theological dogmatism as incompatible with the language of Scripture and the Fathers; contempt for the authority of the Church and unwillingness to identify the Mystical Body of Christ with the Catholic Church in communion with the see of Rome; distrust of *Scholastic philosophy (esp. of St *Thomas Aquinas); the denial that *Adam existed as a historical person and that *original sin has reached us by direct descent from him; and undue freedom in the interpretation of the Books of the OT.

Text in AAS 42 (1950), pp. 561–78. Eng. tr. by R. A. *Knox in The Tablet, 2 Sept. 1950. J. M. Connolly in NCE 7 (1967), p. 214, s.v., with bibl.

Humbert of Romans (d. 1277), fifth Master of the *Dominican Order. Born at Romans, near Valence, in France, prob. in the last decade of the 12th cent., Humbert studied arts in Paris and then joined the Dominican Order there in 1224. After being prior of Lyons and, successively, provincial of the Roman and Paris provinces, he was elected Master of the Order in 1254. He resigned in 1263 and devoted his remaining years to writing.

Humbert's qualities as a shrewd Churchman were recognized early. In 1243 he received some votes in the Papal election, and at some stage he is said to have been offered the patriarchate of Jerusalem. As provincial and as Master of the Dominican Order, Humbert made definitive contributions to the final codification of the Dominican liturgy and to the organization of the Dominican nuns. He was responsible, as Master, for the incorporation of philosophical studies into the intellectual life of the Order and for the completion of its academic structure. He also clarified many other points of Dominican law and observance. Many of his decisions remained influential for centuries. It was he who, with considerable diplomatic skill, steered the Order through the worst of the anti-mendicant controversy.

His writings were mostly intended for the use of Dominicans and include a treatise on how to be a preacher, complete with 258 sermon outlines (De Eruditione Praedicatorum); an exposition of the Rule of St *Augustine; an unfinished commentary on the Constitutions and a very influential work on the officials of the Order. The chronology of these writings has not been securely established. Prob. in 1272 he was asked by Pope *Gregory X to write a preparatory document for the Second Council of *Lyons, and the resulting work, the Opus Tripartitum, exercised a real influence on the Council. Humbert's comments on the schism between Catholics and Greek Orthodox were a significant factor in medieval and even in modern attempts at ecumenism. After his death he was remembered above all as a man of sound judgement and reliable counsel.

There is no crit. edn. of his works. Most of those on the Dominican life are contained in his Opera de Vita Regulari, ed. J. J. Berthier, OP (2 vols., Rome, 1888–9; repr., Turin, 1956). A partial tr. of De Eruditione Praedicatorum, based on the MSS, by S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP (ed.), Early Dominicans (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982), pp. 181–370. Other edns. of his works listed in Kaeppli, 2 (1975), pp. 283–95, with bibl.

F. Heintke, Humbert von Romans (Historische Studien, 222; 1933); E. T. Brett, Humbert of Romans: His Life and Views of Thirteenth-Century Society (Studies and Texts, 67; Toronto, 1984). P. A. Throop, Criticism of the Crusade: A Study of Public Opinion and Crusade Propaganda (Amsterdam, 1940), esp. pp. 147–213; G. Every, 'The Empire and the Schism in the Opusculum Tripartitum of Humbert de Romanis', Eastern Churches Review, 5 (1973), pp. 136–42. M.-H. Vicaire, OP, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1108–16, s.v.

Humbert of Silva Candida (d. 1061), ecclesiastical reformer and statesman. Originally a monk of Moyenmoutier in Lotharingia, he came to Rome with *Leo IX in 1049; he had been made Cardinal-Bishop of Silva Candida by Feb. 1051 and became Papal Chancellor prob. in 1057. He was a learned man, who, apart from wide reading of the Latin Fathers, also knew some Greek, and he enjoyed a great deal of influence with the reforming Popes. He was deeply involved in negotiations with *Michael Cerularius, Patr. of *Constantinople. In the politics of reform he represented the rigorist party which refused to recognize the orders conferred by bishops guilty of *simony. There has been much discussion among historians about the body of writings which can be assigned to Humbert. Only one major work can be securely attributed to him, the Adversus Simoniacos, which he composed in 1058 as a reply to the Liber Gratissimus of *Peter Damian. Even this was little circulated, but it is a classic statement of the rigorist thesis and contains the first attack on the practice of lay *investiture. See also GREAT SCHISM (1).

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL 143. 929–1218; crit. edn. of his Adversus Simoniacos by F. Thaner in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, 1 (1891), pp. 95–253. A. Michel, 'Die folgenschweren Ideen des Kardinals Humbert und ihr Einfluss auf Gregor VII.', Studi Gregoriani, 1 (1947), pp. 65–92, takes a wide view of the range of his work and influence; see also H. Hoesch, Die kanonischen Quellen im Werk Humberts von Moyenmoutier (Forschungen zur Kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 10; 1970), and H.-G. Krause, 'Über den Verfasser der Vita Leonis IX papae', Deutsches Archiv, 32 (1976), pp. 49–85. Other modern studies include J. J. Ryan, 'Cardinal Humbert De s. Romana ecclesia: Relics of Roman–Byzantine Relations 1053–1054', Mediaeval Studies, 20 (1958), pp. 206–38; and J. T. Gilchrist, 'Humbert of Silva-Candida and the Political Concept of ecclesia in the Eleventh Century Reform Movement', Journal of Religious History, 2 (1962–3), pp. 13–28; id., 'Cardinal Humbert of Silva-Candida', Annuale mediaevale, 3 (1962), pp. 29–42; id., 'Cardinal Humbert of Silva-Candida, the Canon Law and Ecclesiastical Reform in the Eleventh Century', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 58 (1972), pp. 338–49. U.-R. Blumenthal in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 682–5, s.v.

Humble Access, the Prayer of. The prayer in the BCP which opens with the words, 'We do not presume to come to this thy Table, O merciful Lord, trusting in our own righteousness'. Its name derives from the Scottish Liturgy of 1637, where it is entitled 'Collect of Humble Access to the Holy Communion'. It was composed for the new 'Order of the *Communion' of 1548 and thus stood between the Communion of the priest and that of the people. In the Book of 1549 it was moved with most of the items in the 'Order of the Communion' to a place immediately before the Communion of both priest and people. In the Book of 1552, however, it was separated from the other items of the 'Order of the Communion' and (with slight alterations in the wording) inserted immediately after the *Sanctus, and there it remained in the 1662 Book. In some modern Anglican liturgies it has been dropped. Where it is retained it is normally placed either before 'the Ministry of the Sacrament' (as in the ASB) or immediately before the Communion of the priest and people (e.g. in the American BCP (1979) and the BCP of the Church in Wales, 1984) and its use is often made optional. The clause 'that our sinful bodies may be made clean by his body, and our souls washed through his most precious blood' is sometimes omitted. Since about the 1960s in some places the prayer has been said aloud by the congregation as well as the celebrant.

J. Dowden, 'A Contribution towards the Study of the Prayer of Humble Access', The Irish Church Quarterly, 1 (1908), pp. 8–24, repr. in id., Further Studies in the Prayer Book, Appendix, pp. 317–43. W. W. S. March, We do not presume: A Commentary on the Prayer of Humble Access (Derby, 1965).

Hume, Basil. See HUME, GEORGE BASIL.

Hume, David (1711–76), Scottish philosopher and historian. He was a native of Edinburgh, where he was educated, and at an early age resolved to become a philosopher. From 1734 to 1737 he lived in France, where he elaborated his sceptical principles and wrote the Treatise of Human Nature (3 vols., 1739–40), the success of which fell far short of his expectations. In 1741–2 appeared Essays Moral and Political (2 vols.), which was favourably received and much appreciated by Bp. J. *Butler. During the following years he held several secretarial and administrative posts in England and abroad. In 1748 he published Philosophical Essays Concerning Human Understanding which contained his famous 'Essay upon Miracles', followed, in 1751, by An Enquiry Concerning the Principles of Morals. By this time he had also completed his Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion, which was published only posthumously (1779). During the latter part of his life his interests turned to history; in 1752 he published his Political Discourses, the first of his works to attract general attention, and from 1754 to 1761 his famous History of England (6 vols.), written from the Tory standpoint, which long remained a standard work. In 1763 he accompanied Lord Hertford to France, where he was much admired and became the friend of J. Le R. *D'Alembert and A. R. J. Turgot. In 1766 he found for J.-J. *Rousseau a refuge in England. In his last years he almost ceased to write.

Hume's philosophy is based on the experimental method of J. *Locke and G. *Berkeley. By reducing reason to a product of experience he destroyed its claim to sole validity, which had been put forward by the thinkers of the *Enlightenment. All perceptions of the human mind are either impressions of experience or ideas, i.e. faded copies of these impressions. But whereas the relations between ideas can be known with certainty, the facts of reality cannot be established beyond an appearance of probability. Causality is not a concept of logic, but a result of habit and association, impressed on our imagination, and the human soul itself is but a sum of perceptions connected by association. Hence there is no such science as metaphysics; and belief in the existence of God and of the physical world, though a practical necessity, cannot be proved by reason. *Theism is neither the original nor the highest form of religion. The immortality of the soul is doubtful, and *suicide is permissible. Our moral life is dominated by the passions, which determine our will and our actions.

Hume was aware that, by reducing all cognition to single perceptions and by ruling out any purely intellectual faculty for recording and sifting them, he destroyed all real knowledge and taught pure scepticism. This scepticism is particularly evident in his 'Essay on Miracles', in which he argues that reports of miracles should always be doubted, since miracles are, by definition, highly unlikely. 'A miracle is a violation of the laws of nature; and as a firm and unalterable experience has established these laws, the proof against a miracle, from the very nature of the fact, is as entire as any argument from experience can possibly be imagined.'

Hume's influence has been widespread. Among the thinkers indebted to him are I. *Kant, J. Bentham, and A. *Comte; and he has received attention from modern philosophical empiricists.

Hume's autobiography appeared in 1777. His Life and Correspondence were ed. J. H. Burton in 1846. Modern edn. of his Letters, by J. Y. T. Greig (2 vols., Oxford, 1932); New Letters, ed. R. Klibansky and E. C. Mossner (ibid., 1954). J. Y. T. Greig, David Hume (London, 1931); E. C. Mossner, The Life of David Hume (1954; 2nd edn., 1980); A. [G. N.] Flew, Hume's Philosophy of Belief: A Study of his first Inquiry (1961); id., David Hume, Philosopher of Moral Science (Oxford, 1986); J. B. Stewart, The Moral and Political Philosophy of David Hume (New York and London, 1963); D. Forbes, Hume's Philosophical Politics (Cambridge, 1975); B. [G.] Stroud, Hume (London, 1977); J. C. A. Gaskin, Hume's Philosophy of Religion (1978; 2nd edn., 1988); J. L. Mackie, Hume's Moral Theory (1980); J. Harrison, Hume's Theory of Justice (Oxford, 1981). G. Strawson, The Secret Connexion: Causation, Realism and David Hume (ibid., 1989); D. Pears, Hume's System: An Examination of the First Book of his Treatise (ibid., 1990); K. E. Yandell, Hume's 'Inexplicable Mystery': His Views on Religion (Philadelphia, 1990). R. Hill, Fifty Years of Hume Scholarship: A Bibliographical Guide (Edinburgh [1978]). L. Stephen in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 215–26.

Hume, George Basil (1923–), Abp. of *Westminster. The son of Sir William Hume (1879–1960), a distinguished Scottish *Presbyterian physician, Hume was brought up as a RC by his mother. He was educated at *Ampleforth College and joined the *Benedictine Community there in 1941, being professed in 1942. He read Modern History at St Benet's Hall, Oxford, and went on to post-graduate study at Fribourg University in Switzerland. After his ordination as priest in 1950, he taught Modern Languages in the school at Ampleforth and then was a housemaster from 1955 until he was elected Abbot in 1963. In 1976 Pope *Paul VI nominated him Abp. of Westminster and made him a cardinal later in the same year. From 1978 to 1987 he was President of the Council of European Bishops' Conferences and since 1979 has also been President of the Bishops' Conference of England and Wales. In 1994 he was relator of the Synod of Bishops on the consecrated life and its mission in the Church and the world. He quickly became a national leader, widely respected both within and beyond his own communion; during his time at Westminster the RC Church in England came more fully into the mainstream of national life. His books, mainly based on lectures or addresses, are marked by spiritual insight. They include Searching for God (1977) and To be a Pilgrim (1984).

T. Castle (ed.), Basil Hume: A Portrait (1986).

humeral veil. In the W. Church, a silk shawl laid round the shoulders serving to cover the hands. At *High Mass the *subdeacon used to hold the *paten with it, from after the *Offertory till after the *Pater Noster. The humeral veil is already mentioned in the Roman '*Ordines' of the 8th and 9th cents., where it is worn by an *acolyte who then held the paten. When c. the 11th cent. the subdeacon became paten-bearer he used the *pall in place of the humeral veil and the latter did not come into use again for this purpose until the 15th cent. Its adoption became universal only in the 19th cent. It is still worn by the celebrant in processions of the Blessed Sacrament, at the service of *Benediction, and (in some countries) when the *Viaticum is taken to the sick.

Braun, LP, pp. 228–31. N. F. Robinson, SSJE, 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use', Transactions of the St Paul's Ecclesiological Society, 6 (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 129 f. and 153–8. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 7 (1910), pp. 542 f., s.v.

Humiliati. An Italian penitential and apostolic movement, which later developed into a recognized institution in the Church. Its origins are obscure. Its adherents devoted themselves to mortification, the care of the sick and poor, and to preaching. In 1184, along with the *Waldenses and *Cathari, they were condemned for their disobedience to the hierarchy. Most of them, however, were reconciled to the Church and reorganized by *Innocent III in 1201 in the form of three orders, governed by a common general chapter: the first order consisted of double monasteries of canons and nuns, the second of houses of celibate lay men and women, the third of married people living at home. The first two orders shared a single rule and were progressively assimilated to the *mendicant orders, while the third came to be closer to the Order of Penance (see THIRD ORDERS). From *c.*1272 the third order detached itself from the other two and in 1291 held its own general chapter; it disappeared in the course of the 14th cent. The order as a whole was suppressed in 1571, after St *Charles Borromeo's endeavours to reform it led to an attempt on his life.

The principal authority is H. Tiraboschius, SJ, Vetera Humiliatorum Monumenta (3 vols., Milan, 1766–8). L. Zanoni, Gli Umiliati nei loro rapporti con l'eresia, l'industria della lana ed i comuni nei secoli XII e XIII (Milan, 1911). V. d'Alessandro (ed.), Le Pergamene degli Umiliati di Cremona (Università degli Studi di Palermo, Istituto di Storia, Testi e Documenti, 2; 1966). P. Guerrini, 'Gli Umiliati a Brescia', Miscellanea Pio Paschini, 1 (Lateranum, NS 14; 1948), pp. 187–214; G. *Mercati, 'Due ricerche per la storia degli Umiliati', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 11 (1957), pp. 167–94. F. Vernet in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 312–21; A. Mens in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1129–36, both s.v. 'Humiliés'.

humility (Lat. humilitas, from humus, ground). Originally denoting low estate and the cowed attitude likely to result from it, in Judaism and esp. in Christianity the word acquired more positive connotations. Humility, understood as submissiveness before God, came to be regarded as a virtue, modelled on the example of Christ 'who humbled himself and became obedient unto death' (Phil. 2: 8). In both pagan and Judaeo-Christian usage it could be applied to the voluntary adoption of a posture of self-degradation, usually intended to reinforce an appeal for God's mercy and help. In later Christian usage it came to mean primarily the virtue opposed to *pride, but for many centuries it could also be applied to outward gestures of self-abasement, such as bowing. Although humility has sometimes been seen as involving a refusal to regard oneself as superior to other people, St *Thomas Aquinas, for instance, thought of it as meaning essentially submission to God and a consequent moderation of ambition to keep it within the bounds appointed for each individual by God; this is compatible with recognizing that in certain ways one may be better endowed by God than someone else is (cf. Summa Theologiae, 2. 2. q. 161, a. 1 and a. 3). In this sense, humility has been seen as an aspect of truthfulness, neither exaggerating nor denigrating the truth of what one is. Humility has been variously defined by Protestant theologians: M. *Luther regarded it as the joyful acceptance of God's will, and modern Protestant moralists (e.g. A. *Ritschl) identify it as complete resignation to our unconditional dependence on God.

F. [A.] Pakenham, Earl of Longford, Humility (1969). R. L. Ottley in HERE 6 (1913), pp. 880–2, s.v., with useful refs.; P. Adnès, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1136–87, with bibl.

Hundred Chapters, Council of the. See RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Hungary, Christianity in. Christianity was first preached in what is now Hungary in the 4th cent., but made no permanent impression. In the 9th and 10th cents. more successful missionaries arrived, and Christianity spread in both its E. and W. forms; ultimately the W. Church prevailed. In 1001 a formal constitution was laid down for the Church by King (St) *Stephen I, who created 10 bishoprics and the archbishopric of Esztergom (Gran), which since 1279 has been the primatial see. There are now two other archbishoprics. State control of Church affairs has always been strong. In 1404 Sigismund (King of Hungary 1387–1437) introduced the placetum regium, which was acknowledged by the Council of *Constance in 1417. After Maria Theresa (1740–80) had obtained from Pope *Clement XIII the title of 'Apostolic King' (sic), she and Joseph II (1780–90) tried to consolidate their hold by means of their Church policy (see JOSEPHINISM); Joseph dissolved over a third of the monasteries, though some were restored soon after his death. The RC Church maintained great influence over political affairs until 1945, in spite of certain secular laws (esp. those providing for civil marriage) introduced in the last decade of the 19th cent. After the Communist takeover of the country in 1948–9, it was persecuted, with the primate, Cardinal József Mindszenty (1892–1975), imprisoned, and almost all religious orders dissolved. By the 1970s and 1980s the situation was much relaxed, even before the overthrow of the Communist regime in 1989.

In the 16th cent. most of Hungary was won over to the Reformation. Subsequently the RC Church reasserted itself, especially in the western part of the country. In the east and what is now Transylvania, Protestantism remained strong, despite intermittent persecution, particularly in its *Calvinist form (Debrecen, its ecclesiastical and cultural centre, became popularly known as the 'Calvinist Rome'). The territory of historic Hungary (embracing also parts of present-day Romania, Slovakia, Croatia, Slovenia, and Ukraine) still harbours the only significant Protestant populations in the E. half of Europe, including over 3 million Magyar Calvinists, over 1 million Slovak, Magyar, and German *Lutherans, and the lineal survivors of one of the original *Unitarian movements.

A. Theiner (ed.), Vetera Monumenta Historica Hungariam Sacram Illustrantia (2 vols., Rome, 1859–60). Monumenta Vaticana Historiam Regni Hungariae Illustrantia (Budapest; 1st ser. 6 vols., 1884–91; 2nd ser. 3 vols., 1884–1909). L. Lukács (ed.), The Vatican and Hungary 1846–1878: Reports and Correspondence on Hungary of the Apostolic Nuncios in Vienna (Budapest, 1981). P. Bod (1712–69), Historia Hungarorum Ecclesiastica inde ab Exordio Novi Testamenti ad Nostra usque Tempora, ed. L. W. E. Rauwenhoff and C. Szalay (3 vols., Leiden, 1888–90). C. Wolfsgruber, Kirchengeschichte Österreich-Ungarns (Vienna, 1909). E. Mályusz, Das Konstanzer Konzil und das königliche Patronatsrecht in Ungarn (Studia Historica, 18; Budapest, 1959); id., Egyházi társadalom a Középkori Magyarországon (Budapest, 1971). G. Klaniczay, 'Le culte des saints dans la Hongrie médiévale (Problèmes de recherche)', Acta Historica Academiae Scientiarium Hungaricae, 29 (1983), pp. 57–77. E. Hermann, A katolikus egyház története Magyarországon 1914-ig (Dissertationes Hungaricae ex Historia Ecclesia, 1; Munich, 1973), with summaries in Ger. and Fr. M. Bucsay, Geschichte des Protestantismus in Ungarn (Stuttgart, 1959; much expanded 2nd edn., Studien und Texte zur Kirchengeschichte und Geschichte, I. Reihe, Bd. 3; 2 vols., Vienna, 1977–9). G. Gombos, The Lean Years: A Study of Hungarian Calvinism in Crisis (New York, 1960). R. J. W. Evans, 'Calvinism in East Central Europe: Hungary and her Neighbours, 1540–1700', in M. Prestwich (ed.), International Calvinism 1541–1715 (Oxford, 1985), pp. 167–96. Calvin et la Hongrie, ed. Communauté Protestante Hongroise de Genève (Geneva, 1986). J. Zoványi, Magyarországi protestáns egyháztörténeti lexikon (Budapest, 1977). P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 29; Eastbourne, 1988), pp. 141–71. E. Horn in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 41–61, s.v. 'Hongrie', and 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1566–71, s.v. 'Magyarie'; W. Juhász in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 255–66, s.v.; P. Radó and J. Félegyházy in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 675–704, s.v. 'Hongrie'.

Hunt, William Holman (1827–1910), Pre-Raphaelite painter. A native of London, he was destined by his father for a business career, but began to study art in 1843 and was admitted to the Royal Academy Schools in 1844. Here he began his lifelong friendship with J. E. Millais, and later he also formed a close connection with D. G. *Rossetti. In 1848 they founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, in which Hunt was a leading light. In the following year he exhibited his first truly Pre-Raphaelite picture, Rienzi. Though much attacked by the press, he and the Brotherhood were warmly defended by J. *Ruskin. In 1852 he completed The Hireling Shepherd, and in 1854 the famous Light of the World, representing the Lord knocking at the door of the soul. From 1854 to 1856 he travelled, mostly in Palestine, which he revisited several times. Here he made studies for The Scapegoat, exhibited in 1856, The Finding of the Saviour in the Temple, completed in 1860, and The Shadow of Death, painted between 1869 and 1873. In 1875 he began The Triumph of the Innocents, which was finished in two versions in 1885. In 1899 he began a larger replica of The Light of the World, now in St *Paul's Cathedral, the original being in Keble College, Oxford. In 1905 he published a largely autobiographical work, Pre-Raphaelitism and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood (2 vols.). Most of Hunt's works were executed very slowly, and with great love of detail, in which he excelled, though sometimes to the detriment of composition and colouring. His art is imbued throughout with strong religious feeling.

[F. G. Stephens,] William Holman Hunt and his Works (1860); A. *Meynell and F. W. *Farrar, William Holman Hunt: His Life and Work (1893). Lives by A. C. Gissing (London, 1936) and A. C. Amor (ibid., 1989). William Holman Hunt: An Exhibition arranged by the Walker Art Gallery Liverpool, March–April 1969; Victoria and Albert Museum, May June 1969 (Liverpool, 1969), with introd. by M. Bennett. G. P. Landow, William Holman Hunt and Typological Symbolism (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1979); id., 'Shadows Cast by The Light of the World: William Holman Hunt's Religious Paintings, 1893–1905', Art Bulletin: A Quarterly published by the College Art Association of America, 65 (1983), pp. 471–84. J. Maas, Holman Hunt and The Light of the World (1984). W. Armstrong in DNB, 1901–1911, 2, pp. 323–8.

hunting. Though this has been generally held to be lawful for the laity, it was forbidden to the clergy by a series of Gallic councils beginning with a canon (55) of the Council of *Agde (506) which reappears in the '*Corpus Iuris Canonici'. In the Scholastic period a distinction was made between 'quiet' and 'noisy' hunting (quieta and clamorosa), and there was a division of opinion whether both kinds or only the noisy were forbidden to the clergy. The common opinion was that only the noisy was illicit. By 'noisy' was meant the hunting of large or dangerous animals by a crowd of people accompanied by a numerous pack of hounds. 'Quiet hunting' meant the use of snares, nets, or small packs of hounds for the destruction of hares, foxes, and other small animals.

In modern times, hunting, for laity and clergy alike, has occasionally been condemned altogether by Christian moralists on humanitarian grounds. In the RC Church the stricter view forbidding hunting of either kind to the clergy was taken by *Benedict XIV. Current RC Canon Law makes no mention of the subject.

Huntingdon, Selina, Countess of (1707–91). Selina Hastings, foundress of the body of *Calvinistic Methodists known as 'the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion'. She joined the *Wesleys' Methodist society in 1739, and on her husband's death in 1746 gave herself wholly up to social and religious work, making herself the chief medium for introducing Methodism to the upper classes. In 1768 she opened Trevecca House, Talgarth, as a Methodist seminary. Her chief method of supporting Methodist ministers was by constituting them her *chaplains; but her opinion that she could, as a peeress, appoint to the rank of chaplain as many priests of the established C of E as she wished, and employ them publicly, was disallowed by the consistory court of London in 1779. In consequence of this decision she registered her chapels as dissenting places of worship under the *Toleration Act. In the disputes between J. Wesley and G. *Whitefield she took the side of the latter, at whose death she became trustee of his foundations in America. Before her own death she formed her chapels into an association (1790), but many of her followers were absorbed into *Congregationalism. There were 900 members left in 1992.

The Life and Times of Selina Countess of Huntingdon by a Member of the Houses of Shirley and Hastings [i.e. A. C. H. Seymour] (2 vols., 1839); index by F. M. Jackson in Proceedings of the Wesley Historical Society, 5 (1905), following page 256. J. B. Figgis, The Countess of Huntingdon and her Connexion [*c.*1892]. F. F. Bretherton, The Countess of Huntingdon (Wesley Historical Society Lecture, no. 6; 1940); K. M. Davies, 'Lady Huntingdon a Threfeca', Journal of the Historical Society of the Presbyterian Church of Wales, 27 (1942), pp. 66–75. The 1778–1811 minutes of the Spa Fields Chapel (the headquarters of Lady Huntingdon's Connexion), together with the Fifteen Articles and Plan of Association, are ed. E. Welch, Two Calvinistic Methodist Chapels 1743 1811 (London Record Society Publications, 11; 1975), pp. 46–95. Id., 'Lady Huntingdon and Spa Fields Chapel', Guildhall Miscellany, 4 (1971–3), pp. 175–83. J. H. Overton in DNB 25 (1891), pp. 133–5, s.v. 'Hastings, Selina'.

Hupfeld, Hermann (1796–1866), German OT scholar. He was educated at *Marburg and (under W. *Gesenius) at Halle, and for most of his life taught in these two universities. In the history of *Pentateuchal Criticism he occupies an important place through having in his Die Quellen der Genesis und die Art ihrer Zusammensetzung (1853) distinguished for the first time between the two sources *P and *E, both of which in Gen. use the same word *Elohim as the Divine Name. He also wrote a commentary on the Pss. (4 vols., 1855–61) and works dealing with Semitic grammar and philology.

Life by E. Riehm (Halle, 1867). J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in Nineteenth Century England and Germany (1984), esp. pp. 131–4.

Huss, John (*c.*1372–1415), in Czech Jan Hus, Bohemian Reformer. Born of a peasant family at Husinec (whence 'Huss'), he entered Prague university *c.*1390 and took his Master's degree in 1396. In 1401 he was elected Dean of the Philosophical Faculty. Having been ordained priest in 1400, he soon became a well-known preacher in Czech at the 'Bethlehem Chapel' at Prague. This was at the time when knowledge of J. *Wycliffe's writings had become more widespread in Bohemia through the closer relations with England that followed the marriage (1382) of Anne, sister of King Wenceslaus IV (d. 1419), to Richard II; Huss was especially attracted to his political doctrines (rejection of the right to property and of the hierarchical organization of society), which had been independently advocated by *Jerome of Prague, and was also sympathetic to his teachings on *Predestination and the Church of the elect. At first he received considerable encouragement from the new Abp. of Prague, Sbinko von Hasenburg, who made him preacher of the synod in 1403, and supported his attack on the pilgrimage of *Wilsnack in 'De Omni Sanguine Christi Glorificato' (1404); and, despite the university's condemnation of 45 of Wycliffe's propositions in 1403, Huss translated Wycliffe's 'Trialogus' into Czech. But before long his violent sermons on the morals of the clergy provoked hostility. They were denounced at Rome in 1407 and Sbinko, at Innocent VII's orders, forbade Huss to preach. Huss replied by 'De Arguendo Clero pro Concione'. When the country became divided over the two claimants to the Papal see (*Alexander V and Gregory XII), Huss with Wenceslaus and the Czech 'nation' at the university upheld Alexander, while Sbinko and the other three 'nations' (Bavarians, Saxons, and Poles) supported Gregory. His influence was temporarily much increased by a royal decree (18 Jan. 1409) giving control of the university to the Czech nation, which became a stronghold of Wycliffite doctrines, with Huss as Rector. In his isolation Abp. Sbinko transferred his allegiance to Alexander V, who rewarded him with a bull (9 Mar. 1410) ordering the destruction of all Wycliffite books, the retraction of Wycliffite doctrines, and, to stop Huss's influence at the Bethlehem Chapel, the cessation of preaching in private chapels; and in Feb. 1411 Huss was excommunicated by Alexander's successor, *John XXIII. Opinion now moved against him and in 1412 John imposed on Huss the great excommunication and placed his followers under an interdict. To restore peace Wenceslaus forthwith removed Huss from Prague and he found refuge with his supporters among the Czech nobility. Two conferences in 1412 and 1413 having failed to achieve peace, Huss devoted himself to writing his chief work, 'De Ecclesia' (1413), the first ten chapters of which are taken over bodily from Wycliffe. Having appealed from the decision of the Papal curia to a general Council, he left Bohemia in 1414 for the Council of *Constance, with a safe-conduct of the Emp. Sigismund. Arriving on 3 November 1414, he soon found his liberty threatened. When the trial opened he was confined in the conventual prison of the *Dominicans, later in a castle of the Bp. of Constance, and in the end in the convent of the *Franciscans, the Emperor's endeavour to free him being of no avail. He suffered death at the stake with great fortitude on 6 July 1415.

By his death Huss became a national hero. The university of Prague declared him a martyr and fixed his feast on the day of his execution. Social and political grievance among the Czechs of Bohemia at the wealth and corruption of the Church and at the dominant position of Germans in the country, now overflowed into a violent movement of protest which assumed Huss' name. By the Four Articles of Prague (1420) the Hussites laid down a programme of secularization, *Utraquism, vernacular liturgy, and ecclesiastical reform which anticipated the *Reformation in important ways. During the Hussite Wars (1420–34) they were able to implement much of this in Bohemia, despite bitter opposition from Catholic Europe. Although international divisions gradually weakened the cause, it left a lasting legacy in Utraquism and the sect of the *Bohemian Brethren, and in a tradition of national Catholicism which revived in modern times as both a political and—to a lesser extent—a religious ideal (see CZECHOSLOVAK CHURCH).

Opera Omnia, ed. by V. Flajšhans (3 vols., Prague, 1903–8); also ed. under the auspices of the Academia Scientiarum Bohemoslovenica (Prague, 1959 ff.). Modern edn. of De Ecclesia by S. H. Thompson (Boulder, Col., and Cambridge, 1957). Eng. trs. of De Ecclesia by D. S. Schaff (New York, 1915), of his Letters by M. Spinka (Manchester [1972]), and of Peter of Mladoňovice's 'Relatio de Mag. Joannis Hus causa', with introd., notes, and other relevant docs., by M. Spinka, John Hus at the Council of Constance (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 73; 1965). Much of the important lit. is in Czech, esp. the works of F. M. Bartoš, V. Novotný, and A. Molnár. J. Loserth, Hus und Wiclif: Zur Genesis der husitischen Lehre (1884; Eng. tr., 1884; 2nd edn. of Ger., 1925); M. Vischer, Jan Hus: Sein Leben und seine Zeit (2 vols., Frankfurt [1940]); M. Spinka, John Hus and the Czech Reform (Chicago, 1941); id., John Hus' Concept of the Church (Princeton, NJ, 1966); id., John Hus: A Biography (ibid., 1968); P. de Vooght, OSB, L'Hérésie de Jean Huss (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire ecclésiastique, 34; 1960); id., Hussiana (ibid., 35; 1960; 2nd edn. of both vols. under the title of the former, 1975); R. Kalivoda, Husitská Ideologie (Prague, 1961; Ger. tr., Revolution und Ideologie: Der Hussitismus, Cologne, 1976); id. and A. Kolesnyk, Das Hussitische Denken im Lichte seiner Quellen (Beiträge zur Geschichte des religiösen und wissenschaftlichen Denkens, 8; 1969); H. Kaminsky, A History of the Hussite Revolution (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1967); J. Macek, Jean Hus et les traditions Hussites (XV^e–XIX^e siècles) [1973]; F. Šmahel, La révolution hussite, une anomalie historique (Collège de France, Essais et conférences [1985]); F. Seibt, Hussitenstudien (Veröffentlichung des Collegium Carolinum, 60; Munich, 1987). E. Werner, Jan Hus: Welt und Umwelt eines Prager Frühreformators (Forschungen zur mittelalterlichen Geschichte, 34; 1991). F. M. Bartoš, The Hussite Revolution 1424–1437 (East European Monographs, 203; New York, 1986 (Eng. tr. of Husitská revoluce, 2 vols., Prague, 1965–6)). M. Lambert, Medieval Heresy (2nd edn., 1992), esp. pp. 284–326. J. K. Zeman, The Hussite Movement and the Reformation in Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia (1350–1650): A Bibliographical Study Guide (With Particular Reference to Resources in North America) (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1977). F. Machilek in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 710–35, s.v. 'Hus/Hussiten'.

Hutchinson, John (1674–1737), author. He was a native of Yorkshire, and, after being steward to the Earl of Scarborough and the Duke of Somerset, planned a work on the Mosaic account of the Flood. In his chief work, Moses's Principia (1724), he expounds a system of biblical philosophy, maintaining that Hebrew was the primitive language of mankind which, if rightly interpreted, gave the key to all knowledge whether secular or religious. The book was written in opposition to I. *Newton's Principia and had a considerable success. Its theories were developed by a circle of predominantly *High Church Anglicans called the 'Hutchinsonians', to which belonged, among others, G. *Horne and W. *Jones of Nayland. In their sacramental and mystical interpretation of orthodox Christianity, the 'Hutchinsonians' are often seen as precursors of the *Oxford Movement.

The Philosophical and Theological Works ... of John Hutchinson, ed. R. Spearman and J. Bate (12 vols., London, 1748–9). An Abstract of the Works of J. Hutchinson (1753). J. P[arkhurst] (ed.), A Supplement to the Works of John Hutchinson ... being an Index and Explanation of the Hebrew Words cited in the Second Part of his Moses's Principia, with additional Remarks, by R. Spearman (1765), and Life by R. Spearman, pp. i–xiv. G. Horne, An Apology for certain Gentlemen in the University of Oxford, Aspersed in a late Anonymous Pamphlet [B. *Kennicott, A Word to the Hutchinsonians] (Oxford, 1756). L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 1 (1876), pp. 389–91. Id. in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 342 f.

Hutten, Ulrich von (1488–1523), German Humanist and controversialist. He belonged to the lower nobility and was born at the castle of Steckelberg, nr. *Fulda. In 1499 he was placed in the monastery of Fulda by his parents, who designed him for the religious life, probably on account of his weak health. In 1505, however, he fled, and during the next years led an unsettled life, visiting many of the German universities, among them *Cologne, *Wittenberg, and Vienna. In 1512–13 he took part in the wars of Emp. Maximilian in Italy as a Landsknecht. In 1515 he began to write a series of attacks (pub. 1519) against Duke Ulrich of Württemberg, who had murdered a member of his family. About the same time he became a contributor to the famous Humanistic satire Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum*. In 1517 he received the laurel crown of the poet from the Emperor and entered the service of the Elector of Mainz, Abp. *Albert of Brandenburg. He edited L. *Valla's treatise on the '*Donation of Constantine' (pub. *c.*1520), with a sarcastic dedication to the Pope (dated 1 Dec. 1517). In 1518 he delivered an address to the Diet of Augsburg recommending rejection of the Roman taxation to finance a crusade against the Turks. From 1519 he dedicated his life to the propagation of M. *Luther's reformation, in which he saw the instrument for the deliverance of Germany from the power of Rome. His Latin dialogue Arminius (1520), depicts the hero as a symbol of German resistance to Roman tyranny throughout the ages. A series of Latin and German treatises, among them Febris Secunda, Vadiscus Dialogus (both 1520), and the famous Gesprächbüchlein (1521), served this purpose further. Having failed to gain the Archduke Ferdinand for the Reformation, he was dismissed from the service of the Abp. of Mainz and, being under an order of arrest from Rome, fled to Franz von *Sickingen. After the latter's defeat he was exiled from the Empire and sought the protection of *Erasmus (1522), who refused to receive him, and at last went to H. *Zwingli, who provided him, broken by disease and misfortune, with a refuge on the island of Ufenau in the Lake of Zurich.

Works ed. E. Böcking, 5 vols. and 2 suppl. vols., Leipzig, 1859–70. Ger. writings ed. S. Szamatólski, Strasbourg, 1891. Several modern Lives, among them those of D. F. *Strauss (3 vols., Leipzig, 1858–60; new edn. by O. Clemen, 1914; Eng. tr., 1874), H. Holborn (Leipzig, 1929; Eng. tr., Yale Historical Publications, no. 11, 1937), and C. Gräter (Stuttgart, 1988). P. Kalkoff, Ulrich von Hutten und die Reformation (1920), and other works; P. Held, Ulrich von Hutten: Seine religiösgeistige Auseinandersetzung mit Katholizismus, Humanismus, Reformation (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, Jahrg. 46, Heft 1; 1928). F. Rueb, Der hinkende Schmiedgott Vulkan: Ulrich von Hutten 1488–1523 (Zurich [1988]). J. Benzing, Ulrich von Hutten und seine Drucker: Eine Bibliographie der Schriften Hutten im 16. Jahrhundert (Beiträge zum Buch- und Bibliothekswesen, 6; Wiesbaden, 1956); W. Kreutz, Die Deutschen und Ulrich von Hutten: Rezeption von Autor und Werk seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1984). B. Könneker in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 [1986], pp. 217–20, s.v. with further bibl.

Hutterites. See ANABAPTISTS.

Hutton, Richard Holt (1826–97), lay religious writer. The son of a *Unitarian minister, he was educated at University College, London, where he became a lifelong friend of Walter Bagehot (1827–77). In 1847 he entered Manchester New College to prepare for the Unitarian ministry and came under the influence of J. *Martineau; but failing to secure a permanent ministerial charge, in 1851 he became editor of the Inquirer, a Unitarian weekly. His tolerant outlook caused offence to conservative Unitarians and he was soon removed. From 1855 to 1864 he edited with Bagehot the National Review. Under the influence of F. W. *Robertson and F. D. *Maurice he was increasingly drawn to the C of E, of which he became a member. In 1861 he was offered by M. W. Townsend (1831–1911) the joint-editorship and proprietorship of the Spectator. He made the utmost of this opportunity, using the journal as a pulpit from which to challenge, on Christian principles, the prevailing agnosticism (J. S. Mill, T. H. *Huxley) and to present the case for many worthwhile causes; and he held his editorship until his death. He was one of the original members of the *Metaphysical Society (founded 1869) and in his later years became intimate with many leading *High Churchmen (R. W. *Church, H. P. *Liddon) and RCs (W. G. *Ward). In 1891 he wrote a Life of J. H. *Newman. His Essays Theological and Literary (2 vols., 1871) went through several editions.

J. Hogben, Richard Holt Hutton of 'The Spectator': A Monograph (1899); M. Woodfield, R. H. Hutton: Critic and Theologian (Oxford, 1986). DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 19–22 [anon.].

Hutton, William Holden (1860–1930), Dean of *Winchester. Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, he became in 1884 a Fellow of St John's, where he remained a history tutor for 25 years. From 1911 to 1919 he was Canon of *Peterborough, and from 1919 till his death Dean of Winchester. He was a devoted and influential sponsor of the conservative High Church tradition in *Anglicanism. His writings include Lives of *Sir Thomas More (1895), *William Laud (1895), and *Thomas Becket (1910), and a set of *Bampton Lectures on The Lives of the English Saints (1903).

C. W. C. Oman in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 442 f., s.v.

Huvelin, Henri (1838–1910), priest and spiritual director. Born in Laon (and baptized Marie Joseph Philippe), he was brought up in Paris. After studying at the École Normale Supérieure, he trained for the priesthood in Rome. In 1875 he became curate at the church of St-Augustin in Paris, where he remained until his death. A noted spiritual director, sought out by Christian and non-Christian alike, he numbered Charles *de Foucauld and the Baron *von Hügel among his penitents.

He published almost nothing in his lifetime, but after his death two series of lectures were published: Quelques directeurs d'âmes au XVIIᵉ siècle (1911; Eng. tr., 1927), and Bossuet, Fénelon et le quiétisme (2 vols., 1912). M.-T. (L.-) Lefebvre, Un Prêtre: L'abbé Huvelin (1956; rev. edn., 1958; Eng. tr., 1967); L. Portier, Un Précurseur: L'abbé Huvelin (1979), with notes on sources, pub. and unpub., pp. 251–68. J.-F. Six in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1200–4, s.v. See also bibl. to DE FOUCAULD, C.

Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825–95), biologist. A native of Ealing, after a precocious boyhood he studied medicine at Charing Cross Hospital from 1842 to 1845 and in 1846 secured an appointment in the Navy Medical Service, which soon enabled him to pursue scientific investigations in the Rattlesnake (1846–50) in southern tropical waters. Here he carried through some remarkable biological researches. Recognition quickly followed and in 1851 he was elected a FRS. In 1854 he left the Navy and accepted a post as lecturer at the Royal School of Mines. From the publication of On the Educational Value of the Natural History Sciences (1854) he became prominent as an advocate of scientific training as the surest remedy for man's intellectual, social, and moral needs. His campaign on behalf of science was greatly stimulated by the controversy aroused in 1859 by C. *Darwin's Origin of Species. At the meeting of the British Association at *Oxford in 1860 he had a memorable passage of words with the Bp. of Oxford (S. *Wilberforce) on the subject of evolution. In 1863 there appeared his Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature, a defence of man's descent from the lower animal world, and in 1868 he delivered a lecture on 'The Physical Basis of Life' in the course of which he discussed a form of '*agnosticism' (a term of his own coining a year or two later). Man, he argued, cannot know the nature of either spirit or matter; metaphysics is impossible; and man's primary duty in life is the relief of misery and ignorance. From *c.*1870 he filled several important administrative offices, in some of which he exercised great influence. As a member of the London School Board from 1870 to 1872 he laid stress on the merits of physical, moral, and esp. scientific education, but he held that such education should be supplemented by the study of the Bible as the only means by which religious feeling, the basis of moral conduct, could be sustained. In 1879 he published a study of D. *Hume with a special chapter on *miracles, which he declined to reject out of hand: 'Every event must be taken to be a part of nature, until proof to the contrary is supplied'.

Compelled in 1885 to retire from public work for reasons of health, he continued active in writing. His attacks on Christian orthodoxy became more persistent and he carried his agnosticism into the field of NT study, holding that certain knowledge as to the teaching and convictions of Christ was impossible. He summarized his final views in his Romanes Lecture on 'Evolution and Ethics', delivered at Oxford on 18 May 1893.

Collected Essays (9 vols., 1893–4); Scientific Memoirs, ed. M. Foster and E. R. Lankester (5 vols., 1898–1903). Selections from his writings, ed., with brief introd. essays, by C. Bibby (1967). Evolution and Ethics, ed. J. [G.] Paradis and G. C. Williams, with New Essays on its Victorian and Sociobiological Context (Princeton, NJ [1989]). L. Huxley, The Life and Letters of Thomas Henry Huxley (2 vols., 1900). His scientific achievements are treated in P. C. Mitchell, Thomas Henry Huxley (1900); C. Bibby, T. H. Huxley: Scientist, Humanist and Educator (1959). J. G. Paradis, T. H. Huxley: Man's Place in Nature (Lincoln, Neb., and London [1978]). M. A. di Gregorio, T. H. Huxley's Place in Natural Science (New Haven, Conn., and London [1984]). W. F. R. Weldon in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 22–31; W. C. Williams in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 6 (1972), pp. 589–97.

Huysmans, Joris Karl (1848–1907), French Catholic novelist. Of Dutch descent, he was for 30 years a member of the French Ministry of the Interior, but his main claim to fame lay in his literary work. His early novels, Marthe (1876), À rebours (1884), and Là-bas (1891), reveal his association with the Goncourt–Zola school of literary realism, many of their characters being decadent types. He was converted to a living Christian faith by a visit to the *Trappist monastery of Igny. It found expression in En route (1895), La Cathédrale (1898), Sainte Lydwine de Schiedam (1901, a study in the value of suffering), L'Oblat (1903) and other books. His writings generally reflected his deep interest in religious art, ritual, and mysticism.

Œuvres complètes, ed. L. Descaves (18 vols., Paris, 1928–34). Life by R. Baldick (Oxford, 1955). K. Bosch, J. K. Huysmans' religiöser Entwicklungsgang (Constance, 1920); H. Bachelin, J. K. Huysmans: Du naturalisme littéraire au naturalisme mystique (1926). Other studies by L. Deffoux (Paris, 1927), E. Seillière (ibid., 1931), H. Trudgian (ibid., 1934), P. Cogny (Caen thesis; Paris, 1953), H. R. T. Brandreth, OGS (London, 1963), and M. M. Belval (Paris, 1968). Huysmans, ed. P. Brunel and A. Guyaux (Cahiers de l'Herne, 47; 1985), with bibl. covering 1949–84 by P. Rancœur, pp. 446–65.

Hyacinth, St (d. 1257), 'Apostle of *Poland'. It is difficult to disentangle the facts from the fanciful Life composed in the 14th cent. by Stanislaus, who also changed his name from Jacko (modern Polish Jacek) to Hyacinth. It is certain that he was born in Kamien, in the NE of Poland, that he went to Italy, perhaps as a student, and joined the *Dominican Order there *c.*1220. Probably in 1221 he was put in charge of a group of Dominicans sent to Poland. He was delayed by the urgent needs of the Dominicans in Friesach, and only in 1222 reached Cracow, where he founded a priory in 1223. He later established a priory in Gdansk (*c.*1225). From *c.*1229 he worked in Kiev for a few years and then returned to Poland and devoted himself to missionary work, particularly the campaign against the pagans in Prussia. He later retired to Cracow, where he died, having a reputation for sanctity and working miracles. The story of his extensive labours in Scandinavia lacks historical foundation. He was canonized in 1594. Feast day, 17 Aug. (formerly 16 Aug.).

L. Cwiklinski, 'De Vita et Miraculis S. Iacchonis (Hyacinthi) Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum, auctore Stanislao Lectore Cracoviensi eiusdem Ordinis' and other items in Monumenta Poloniae Historica, 4 (Lemberg, 1884), pp. 818–903. B. *Altaner, Die Dominikanermissionen des 13. Jahrhunderts (1924), pp. 196–214. R. J. Loenertz, OP, 'La Vie de S. Hyacinthe du lecteur Stanislas envisagée comme source historique', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 27 (1957), pp. 5–38. J. Gottschalk, 'Zur Geschichte der Hyazinth-Verehrung', Archiv für schlesische Kirchengeschichte, 16 (1958), pp. 60–98, with other arts. by A. Seidel, pp. 99–110 and P. Birkner, pp. 111–36. V. J. Koudelka, OP, in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (1965), cols. 326–31, s.v. 'Giacinto'.

Hydroparastatae (Gk. Ὑδροπαραστάται, 'those who advocate water'). A name used from the 4th cent. of the *Aquarians.

hylomorphism. A metaphysical doctrine derived from *Aristotle, acc. to which the actual specific reality of a physical thing is the μορφή (forma), while the ὕλη (materia) contributes to its being only potentiality and limitation. It had a fundamental place in the systems of St *Albertus Magnus and St *Thomas Aquinas.

hylozoism. The doctrine that all matter is endowed with life. In a crude form it was taught by the ancient Greek philosophers (Thales, Anaximenes, Heraclitus) and the *Stoics ('world soul') and in a more spiritual form by many of the Renaissance thinkers (B. *Telesio, G. *Bruno), by some of the *Cambridge Platonists (H. *More, R. *Cudworth), and by G. T. *Fechner. A materialistic form of the doctrine was revived by E. H. *Haeckel.

Hymnary (Lat. Hymnarium). The medieval liturgical book of the W. rite which contained the metrical hymns of the Divine Office arranged acc. to the Liturgical Year. It was often appended to the *Psaltery and sometimes to the *Antiphonary. Its contents were later incorporated into the *Breviary.

J. Mearns, Early Latin Hymnaries: An Index of Hymns in Hymnaries before 1100 (Cambridge, 1913). See also bibl. to following entry.

hymns (Gk. ὕμνος, 'song in praise of gods or heroes'). Sacred poetry set to music and sung in the course of the services of the Church has always formed part of Christian worship, whether to express doctrine or the devotion of individuals. At first the hymns of the Jewish Church, esp. the Psalms, were in use, and it is recorded that a hymn was sung at the *Last Supper (Mk. 14: 26); this was prob. the *Hallel. At an early date distinctively Christian compositions, e.g. *Magnificat, *Benedictus, and *Nunc Dimittis, appeared. What may to be quotations from early Christian hymns also occur in Eph. 5: 14, Phil. 2: 5–11, 1 Tim. 3: 16, 1 Tim. 6: 15 f., 2 Tim. 2: 11–13, Rev. 15: 3–4, and Rev. 22: 17, while hymns are differentiated from Psalms in Col. 3: 16 and Eph. 5: 19. *Pliny's famous letter (Ad Traj. 96) may refer to an antiphonal hymn or to a form of liturgy. The rhythmical prose in use in the early Church (1 *Clement 59–61, Ep. to Diognetus, Didache, *Melito's treatise On the Passion) furthered the development of hymnody. A 3rd-cent. writer (perhaps *Hippolytus) refers to 'psalms and odes such as from the beginning were written by believers, hymns to the Christ, the Word of God, calling Him God' (Eusebius, HE 5. 28. 5).

The earliest complete Christian hymn that survives, 'Bridle of colts untamed', is a hymn to Christ preserved by *Clement of Alexandria. Other hymns of pre-Nicene date are 'Up, Maidens', included by *Methodius of Olympus in his Symposium, and the Φῶς ἱλαρόν (*Phos Hilaron, 'Hail, gladdening Light', AM 18, EH 269), which is still part of the Evening Office of the E. Church. The *Gnostics (*Valentinus, *Bardesanes and his son Harmonius, *Marcion) made extensive use of hymns, but only traces of these remain. In Syriac there exists a collection of 42 'Odes of *Solomon' (q.v.), as well as two early hymns incorporated into the 'Acts of *Thomas' (q.v.; the 'Hymn on the Daughter of Light', 6–7, and the 'Hymn of the Pearl', 108–13).

From the 4th cent. the use of hymns became more general. A Greek form of the Gloria in excelsis, which is of unknown authorship, is found in the Apostolic Constitutions (7. 47). In the Byzantine rite it forms part of *Orthros (the morning office) and of *Compline; in the W. it was introduced into the Mass, apparently under *Symmachus I (d. 514), though its use was long restricted. From this period hymns were also employed as a powerful means of promoting or refuting heresy. In the E. St *Ephraem Syrus (d. 373) wrote Syriac hymns to counter the heresy of Bardesanes and to celebrate the Christian mysteries. Early Greek hymn-writers include St *Gregory Nazianzen (d. 389/90) and *Synesius (d. c.413). Both used classical models, and the latter is notable for his introduction of *Neoplatonist ideas into Christian hymns. In both E. and W. hymnody played a part in the *Arian controversy. In Constantinople under the Emp. *Theodosius I (d. 395) the Arians sang hymns through the streets, while St John *Chrysostom (d. 407) organized orthodox hymn-singing. Similarly, St *Augustine (Confessions, 9. 7) records the introduction of the custom of singing psalms and hymns in the manner of the E. Church at Milan during the struggle of St *Ambrose with Justina.

From the 5th cent. the belief obtained in some quarters that no words other than those of Scripture should be allowed in the liturgy, and as late as 563 the Council of Braga forbade the singing of non-biblical poetical compositions in church (can. 12), a decision not reversed until the fourth Council of *Toledo in 633 (can. 13). From the 5th cent. *troparia (single-stanza hymns), of which the *Monogenes and the *Cherubicon are the most famous, are found in the E. service books. These were later joined together to form *contakia of 18 to 30 stanzas, and from the 7th cent. *canons. The classical Greek hymn-writers include *Romanos (6th cent.), to whom the authorship of the *Acathistos hymn is frequently attributed, *Sergius I, Patr. of Constantinople (d. 638), St *Andrew of Crete (d. 740), St *John of Damascus (d. c.750), St *Cosmas Melodus (d. c.751), and St *Joseph the Hymnographer (d. 886). Characteristic of Greek hymns are their dogmatic emphasis and faculty of sustained praise, often offset by monotony of thought and repetition of diction.

Latin hymns appear later than Greek. The most famous, the *Te Deum, is written not in verse but in rhythmical prose. The authorship of the first 21 verses has been assigned to *Niceta of Remesiana (d. c.414), but the whole may be derived from a *Paschal Vigil Baptismal Mass. St *Hilary (d. 367) wrote hymns, prob. under E. influence, when he was in exile, but the 'liber hymnorum' ascribed to him by St *Jerome is lost, except for a few fragments. The real impetus, however, came from St Ambrose. Though only three hymns can be ascribed to him with certainty, they laid down the line of development of Latin hymnody as simple, devotional, and direct, and it was through his influence that hymns became a recognized and integral part of the public worship of the W. Church. Though hymns were not admitted to the Roman Office until the 12th cent. the development came to be towards an ordered sequence for use at different times and seasons. Other Latin hymn-writers include *Prudentius (d. c.410), *Sedulius (5th cent.), *Venantius Fortunatus (d. c.610) *Bede (d. 735), *Theodulph of Orleans (d. 821), *Notker of St Gall (d. 1022; the popularizer of *Sequences, the first hymns introduced into the Mass), P. *Abelard (d. c.1142), *Adam of St-Victor (d. between 1177 and 1192; 'the greatest of the sacred Latin poets of the Middle Ages', R. C. *Trench), Philip the Chancellor (d. 1236), and St *Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274). The *Counter-Reformation led to the remodelling of a number of the old *Office hymns and the composition of new ones in a more classical diction and metre, first in Italy under Pope *Urban VIII, and then in France. Among their authors were the brothers Claude and Jean Baptiste de Santeuil (d. 1684 and 1697) and Charles *Coffin (d. 1749). Some monastic orders, including the *Benedictines, did not adopt the new hymns. Two well-known hymns of the 17th or 18th cent. are '*Veni, veni, Emmanuel' (AM 49; EH 8) and '*Adeste Fideles' (AM 59, EH 28), both of obscure origin.

In England hymns first appear in the vernacular with *Caedmon (Bede, HE 4. 24), *Aldhelm (d. 709), and King *Alfred (d. 899). Towards the close of the Middle Ages hymns to Christ as Redeemer and to the BVM, together with translations of Latin hymns, became popular. Among the leading medieval English hymn-writers was Richard *Rolle of Hampole (d. 1349). Hymns in the vernacular were, with some individual exceptions, mainly the work of those outside the main religious stream. The most important, and essentially English, development of the period was the *carol. Its origin, and the derivation of the word itself, are both in dispute. The earliest printed collection of carols is that of Wynkyn de Worde of 1521. The carol flourished in England until the *Puritan ascendancy, and then survived in provincial broadsheet and oral tradition until the 19th cent., when interest rapidly revived; collections of carols were published by Davies Gilbert in 1822 and by W. Sandys in 1833. A fresh stimulus was provided by J. M. *Neale's discovery of the Swedish Piae Cantiones of 1582. Since then carols have been the subject of much serious study.

The Reformation had a deep and varied effect on the development of hymnody. *Lutheranism was marked by a wealth of new hymns written by M. *Luther himself (d. 1546), who was a skilled musician and imitated the pattern of medieval secular music, and by M. Weisse (d. 1534), P. Nicolai (d. 1609), and later by M. A. von Löwenstern (d. 1648) and P. *Gerhardt (d. 1676). Apart from J. S. *Bach (d. 1750), German hymnology has not since attained so high a standard. The first Protestant hymn-book was M. Weisse's Ein New Geseng Buchlen (1531). *Calvinism, on the other hand, would tolerate nothing but the words of Scripture in its services. Hence the Psalms were put into *metrical versions, first in French by C. *Marot (d. 1544) and T. *Beza (d. 1605), with L. Bourgeois (d. 1561) as musical editor; their work was collected in the 'Genevan Psalter' (1563). An attempt by M. *Coverdale to introduce Lutheran chorales into England in his Goostly Psalmes and Spirituall Songes [undated] was unsuccessful, and hymns (with the exception of the two versions of the *Veni Creator in the *Ordinal) disappeared from the English service books, less, it would seem, on grounds of principle than because T. *Cranmer, on his own admission, lacked the 'grace and facility' to render Latin hymns well into English. Metrical versions of the Psalter were made and widely used in England from an early date, and continued in use until they were displaced by hymns in the 19th cent. The 'Old Version' of the Psalter of T. S. *Sternhold (q.v.) and J. Hopkins appeared in 1557, and was authorized by the Royal *Injunctions of 1559. In 1623 Hymns and Songs of the Church was published by George Wither (d. 1667). It gained considerable initial popularity, but was successfully opposed by the Company of Stationers, which had a monopoly of printing the metrical Psalter. The 'New Version' of N. *Tate and N. Brady, with a supplement, appeared in 1696, and was authorized as an alternative to the 'Old Version' by Order in Council. Hymns continued to be written for private and local use, e.g. by G. *Herbert (whose poems were edited and first used as hymns by J. *Wesley), H. *Vaughan, 'the Silurist' (d. 1695) and T. *Ken (d. 1711).

Modern hymn-writing and hymn-singing were mainly the creation of the 18th cent. A prominent place is filled by Isaac *Watts (d. 1748), the *Congregationalist, whose hymns were written to express the spiritual experience of the singer. In 1737 appeared John Wesley's Collection of Psalms and Hymns, the first hymn-book of modern type, followed in 1739 by Hymns and Sacred Poems by John and Charles *Wesley. The latter was the most prolific, and probably the most gifted, of all English hymn-writers. The practice of hymn-singing was much encouraged and developed by the *Methodists. It soon spread among the *Evangelical party of the C of E, though it was long frowned upon by authority. Other hymn-writers of this period were P. *Doddridge (d. 1751) and A. *Toplady (Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Worship, 1776). In 1779 J. *Newton and W. *Cowper published Olney Hymns, a collection of hymns of the subjective and emotional type characteristic of the Evangelical school.

In America, social conditions in the 19th cent. found expression in the Negro *spiritual, which was a powerful factor in the Second *Great Awakening of 1797–1805. The most important collection of Negro spirituals is that of J. Ingall, Christian Harmony (1805). In the same tradition, the mission hymns of D. L. *Moody (d. 1899) and Ira D. Sankey (d. 1908) exerted considerable influence in both America and England.

By the beginning of the 19th cent., prejudice against the use of hymns in the C of E was dying, although the legality of hymns was challenged in the ecclesiastical courts by the parishioners of St Paul's, Sheffield, after the publication of a hymnal by the Vicar, T. Cotterill, in 1805. This dispute was settled in 1820 by a ruling of the Abp. of York, Vernon Harcourt, who sanctioned rhe use of a modified version of the hymnal. The time was now ripe for a hymn-book which could be integrated into the Prayer Book scheme of worship. R. *Heber (d. 1826), who both wrote and collected hymns, intended his (posthumous) Hymns written and adapted to the Weekly Church Services of the Year (1827) to be both 'literary' and 'liturgical'. Though never widely used, it did much to break down the remaining hostility to hymns outside Evangelical circles. J. Montgomery (d. 1854) also wrote many hymns, including some still in use. A further important influence in fostering the use of hymns came from the *Oxford Movement. The hymns of the ancient and medieval Church were employed to emphasize the antiquity and catholicity of the Church. Translations were made by I. *Williams (d. 1865), J. M. *Neale (d. 1865), F. *Oakeley (d. 1880), E. *Caswall (d. 1878), and W. J. Copeland (d. 1885). Original compositions came from J. *Keble (d. 1866; Christian Year, 1827) and J. H. *Newman (d. 1890; Dream of Gerontius, 1865).

By the middle of the 19th cent., hymn-singing was firmly established in the C of E, and in 1890 Abp. E. W. *Benson in the '*Lincoln Judgement' allowed the use of hymns provided they did not interrupt the course of the service. Hymn-books were published which combined ancient hymns with those of recent composition. The Sacred Hymns from the German (1841) of Frances Cox (d. 1897) and the Lyra Germanica (1855) of Catherine Winkworth (d. 1878) introduced a knowledge of German hymnology into England. The Hymnal Noted (mainly the work of J. M. Neale) appeared in 1852 (Part 1) and 1854 (2). This was followed by Hymns, Ancient and Modern* (1861), which set the pattern for Anglican hymn-books with hymns for the liturgical calendar as well as those of personal devotion. The publication of the Yattendon Hymnal (1895–9) of R. S. *Bridges (d. 1930) and the Songs of Syon (1904) edited by G. R. Woodward (d. 1934) set a new literary and musical standard which was followed by the widely used English Hymnal* (1906). The 1980s saw a succession of new C of E hymn-books: Hymns for Today's Church (1982), Hymns Ancient and Modern, New Standard (1983), and The New English Hymnal (1986).

Among RCs there arose in the 19th cent. a demand for popular hymns, which was met by such writers as F. W. *Faber (d. 1863). In its time, a standard work was the Westminster Hymnal (1912; new edn., 1940). Pope *Pius XII's encyclical 'Musicae sacrae disciplina' (1955) and the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy of the Second *Vatican Council (1963) encouraged the use of 'religious songs' by the people, while the new Missal of 1970 makes specific provision for hymns, which no longer have to be confined to those written by RC authors. In addition the Latin hymns in the 1971 Breviary have been extensively revised and many older hymns restored to their original form.

Apart from the Quakers, other English-speaking Churches have all assigned an important place to hymns, as being an integral part of Christian worship rather than an addition to it. Over the years they have issued collections of hymns authorized for use in their own services; these have included the Church Hymnary of the Scottish and other Presbyterians (1898), the Baptist Church Hymnal (1900), and the Methodist Hymn-Book (1904). As in the C of E, recent years have seen the compilation of new hymn-books by the major Churches: a revision of the Church Hymnary (3rd edn., 1973), Hymns and Psalms: A Methodist and Ecumenical Hymn Book (1983; drawn up in consultation with representatives of a number of Churches), Rejoice and Sing for the *United Reformed Church (1991), and Baptist Hymns and Worship (1991).

In addition to the denominational hymn-books, there have been numerous hymnals for particular types of community. The first (successful) attempt to compile an ecumenical hymn book was Songs of Praise (1925), which was widely adopted for use in schools. It was followed by the BBC Hymn Book (1951), the Cambridge Hymnal (1967), and by the Australian Hymn Book (1977), more widely known under the title With One Voice (1979).

All the new hymn-books draw in varying degrees upon the wide range of new and experimental hymnology which had appeared in supplements and smaller books during the 1970s and 1980s. Much of it is more akin to the carol than to the traditional hymn. These hymns and religious songs, often of charismatic inspiration, seek to express the theological and liturgical ideas of the time, and often make use of popular linguistic and musical idiom. But in spite of some attempts to alter hymns from the 'thou' to the 'you' form, most books have retained the traditional language of old and classical hymns.

W. Christ and M. Paranikas (eds.), Anthologia Graeca Carminum Christianorum (Leipzig, 1871). H. Follieri, Initia Hymnorum Ecclesiae Graecae (ST 211–215 bis; 1960–6). J. B. [F.] *Pitra, Hymnologie de l'Église grecque (1867). E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949; 2nd edn., 1961), with extensive bibl. H. A. Daniel (ed.), Thesaurus Hymnologicus (5 vols. bound in 2, Leipzig and Halle, 1841–56); F. J. *Mone, Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters (3 vols. bound in 2, 1853–5); G. M. Dreves, SJ, and C. Blume, SJ (eds.), Analecta Hymnica Medii Aevi (55 vols., Leipzig, 1886–1922; Register by M. Lütolf, 2 vols. in 3, Bern and Munich, 1978); A. S. Walpole and A. J. Mason, Early Latin Hymns (1922). W. Bulst, Hymni Latini Antiquissimi LXXV (Heidelberg, 1956). J. Connelly, Hymns of the Roman Liturgy (1957). H. Gneuss, Hymnar und Hymnen im englischen Mittelalter: Studien zur Überlieferung, Glossierung und Übersetzung lateinischer Hymnen in England (Buchreihe der Anglia, 12; Tübingen, 1968). F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian-Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1927; 2nd edn., 1953). J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung: Ein Handbuch (2 vols., 1964–5); id., Westliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters: Ein Handbuch, 1: Von den Anfängen bis zum Ende der Karolingerzeit (1970); id., Latin Hymns (Typologie des sources du moyen âge occidental, 55; 1989). A. Michel, In hymnis et canticis: Culture et beauté dans l'hymnique chrétienne latine (Philosophes médiévaux, 20; 1976). U. Chevalier (ed.), Repertorium Hymnologicum: Catalogue des chants, hymnes, proses, séquences, tropes en usage dans l'Église latine depuis ses origines jusqu'à nos jours (6 vols., 1892–1921); C. Blume, Repertorium Repertorii: Kritische Wegweiser durch U. Chevalier's Repertorium Hymnologicum (Hymnologische Beiträge, 2; 1901); J. Szövérffy, Repertorium hymnologicum novum (Berlin, 1983 ff.). B. Stäblein (ed.), Die mittelalterlichen Hymnenmelodien des Abendlandes (Monumenta Monodica Medii Aevi, 1; Kassel, 1956).

B. L. Manning, The Hymns of Wesley and Watts (1942). E. [R.] Routley, Hymns and Human Life (1952), and other works of this author. [W.] C. Northcott, Hymns in Christian Worship (Ecumenical Studies in Worship, 13 [1964]). L. Adey, Hymns and the Christian 'Myth' (Vancouver, 1986), and other works of this author. W. Milgate (ed.), Songs of the People of God: A Companion to The Australian Hymn Book/With One Voice (1982). R. Watson and K. Trickett (eds.), Companion to Hymns and Psalms (Peterborough, 1988). A. [R.] Dunstan, The Use of Hymns: A Practical Exploration of the Place of Hymnody within the Liturgy [1990]. D. Davie, The Eighteenth-Century Hymn in England (Cambridge, 1993). Bulletin of the Hymn Society of Great Britain and Ireland (Edinburgh, 1936 ff.); The Hymn: Journal of the Hymn Society of America (New York, 1949 ff.). J. Julian, A Dictionary of Hymnology (1892; rev. edn., 1907). A. *Baumstark, A. J. Maclean, D. S. Margoliouth, G. M. Dreves, SJ, E. Hull, and T. G. Crippen in HERE 7 (1914), pp. 5–38, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2826–928, s.v.; J. Szövérffy and others in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 287–304, s.v. 'Hymnology' and 'Hymns'; E. R. Routley in EB (1968 edn.), 11, pp. 986–91, s.v. See also works cited under entries on individual hymn-books.

Hymns, Ancient and Modern. This famous hymnal (pub. 1861), edited by H. W. *Baker (q.v.), was a product of the *Oxford Movement. It drew freely on ancient, medieval, and modern sources and also incorporated many of the traditional *Office hymns (often in the translation of J. M. *Neale). The music, expressive and tuneful, which greatly assisted its popularity, was edited by William Henry Monk (1823–89). In 1868 a supplement was added. In 1875 the whole work was completely revised; further supplements were added in 1889 and 1916; and from 1922 onwards these were issued as a single book ('Standard Edition'). A more drastic revision ('New Edition'), issued in 1904, never became popular.

In 1950 a completely new edition (Hymns Ancient and Modern: Revised, 1950) appeared, in which much new matter in both words and music was introduced, and many hymns were excised. In 1969, largely through the stimulus of J. A. T. *Robinson, Bp. of Woolwich, a new supplement entitled 100 Hymns for Today, was published, containing many examples from the 20th cent. Almost at once signs appeared of the so-called 'hymn explosion' which continued throughout the decade 1970–80 and beyond. This was reflected in the publication of a second hundred hymns entitled More Hymns for Today (1980). In 1983 an abridgement of the 1950 revised edition (333 hymns out of 626) was combined with the two modern supplements and issued under the title Hymns Ancient and Modern, New Standard.

In its various forms the book has familiarized many generations of Church people with the fundamentals of Anglican doctrine and practice. The Chairmen of the Proprietors, who control the hymnal, have included H. W. Baker, W. H. *Frere, S. H. Nicholson (1875–1947; from 1927 Director of the *Royal School of Church Music), W. K. Lowther Clarke (1879–1968), and H. Chadwick (b. 1920).

A 'Historical Edition', incl. notes on the words and tune of each hymn and the orig. texts in the case of translations, was pub. in 1909, with valuable introd. by W. H. Frere (pp. ix–cxi). W. K. L. Clarke, A Hundred Years of Hymns Ancient & Modern (1960). M. Frost (ed.), Historical Companion to Hymns Ancient & Modern (1962). S. Drain, The Anglican Church in Nineteenth Century Britain: Hymns Ancient and Modern (1860–1875) (Texts and Studies in Religion, 40; Lewiston, Lampeter, etc., 1989).

Hypapante (Gk. ὑπαπαντή, 'meeting'). The name used in the E. Church for the feast of *Candlemas, in reference to the meeting of *Simeon and Anna with the BVM and the Infant Christ at the *Presentation in the Temple. In the Middle Ages the title ('Occursus Domini') was also frequently used in the W.

Hypatia (*c.*375–415), *Neoplatonist philosopher. The daughter of Theon, the mathematician and philosopher, she was the glory of the Neoplatonic School of Alexandria, where *Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais, was one of her pupils. On the suspicion that she had set the pagan prefect of Alexandria against the Christians, she was attacked by a Christian mob under Peter the Reader and put to death. The archbishop, *Cyril, was suspected of complicity, but his responsibility was never proved. She was the authoress of works on philosophy and mathematics.

The chief sources are *Socrates, HE 7. 15 and *Suidas, s.v. W. A. Meyer, Hypatia von Alexandria: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Neuplatonismus (1885). F. Schaefer, 'Cyril of Alexandria and the Murder of Hypatia', Catholic University Bulletin [Washington, DC], 8 (1902), pp. 441–53; J. Rougé, 'La politique de Cyrille d'Alexandrie et le meurtre d'Hypatie', Cristianesimo nella Storia, 11 (1990), pp. 485–504. K. Praechter in PW 9 (1916), cols. 242–9; C. Lacombrade in RAC 16 (1994), cols. 956–67. Her story was the basis of C. *Kingsley's novel, Hypatia (1853).

hyperdulia (Gk. ὑπέρ, 'more than'; δουλεία, 'servitude', 'veneration'). The special veneration paid to the BVM on account of her eminent dignity as Mother of God. It is of a more limited kind than '*latria', the worship due only to God, but higher than '*dulia', the honour paid to angels and saints.

hypocrisy (from Gk. ὑποκρίνομαι, 'to play a part', 'pretend'). The hiding of interior wickedness under the appearance of virtue. The Lord denounced it esp. in the case of the *Pharisees (Mt. 23: 1–36) as the vice of those who do their good deeds only in order to be seen by men and not for the glory of God. According to moral theologians hypocrisy is the fruit of pride. It is a sin against truthfulness, being a lie expressed by external actions with the intention of deceiving.

hypostasis (Gk. ὑπόστασις, lit. 'substance'). The Greek word has had a variety of meanings. In popular language it was used orig. for 'objective reality' as opposed to illusion (so also in *Aristotle and esp. the *Neoplatonists). In the NT this seems to be roughly its meaning at Heb. 1: 3. Allied to this was its use for 'basis' or 'foundation' and hence also 'confidence', e.g. in Heb. 3: 14 and 11: 1 and 2 Cor. 9: 4 and 11: 17. In early Christian writers it is used to denote 'being' or 'substantive reality' and is not distinguished in meaning from οὐσία; it was so used by *Tatian and *Origen, and also in the anathemas appended to the *Nicene Creed of 325.

From the middle of the 4th cent. onwards the word came to be contrasted with οὐσία and used to mean 'individual reality', esp. in Trinitarian and Christological contexts. It was mainly under the influence of the *Cappadocian Fathers that the terminology was clarified and standardized, so that the formula 'Three Hypostaseis in one Ousia' came to be everywhere accepted as an epitome of the orthodox doctrine of the Holy Trinity. But this consensus was not achieved without some confusion at first in the minds of W. theologians, who naturally translated ὑπόστασις by 'sub-stantia' ('substance') and understood the Easterns when speaking of three 'Hypostaseis' in the Godhead to mean three 'Substances', i.e. they suspected them of tritheism.

G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), pp. 162–190. J. Tixeront, 'Des concepts de "Nature" et de "Personne" dans les pères et les écrivains ecclésiastiques des V[e] et VI[e] siècles', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, 8 (1903), pp. 582–92; repr. in id., Mélanges de patrologie et d'histoire des dogmes (1921), pp. 210–27. M. Richard, 'L'Introduction du mot "Hypostase" dans la théologie de l'Incarnation', Mélanges de Science religieuse, 2 (1945), pp. 5–32, 243–70; repr. in id., Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout, 1977), item 42. H. Dörrie, 'Ὑπόστασις. Wort- und Bedeutungsgeschichte', Nachr. (Gött.), 1955, pp. 35–92. A. de Halleux, '"Hypostase" et "Personne" dans la formation du dogme trinitaire (ca 375–381)', RHE 79 (1984), pp. 313–69 and 625–70. A. Michel in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 369–437, s.v. 'Hypostase'; J. Hammerstaedt in RAC 16 (1994), cols. 986–1035, s.v., both with bibl.

Hypostatic Union. The union of the Divine and human natures in the One Person ('Hypostasis') of Jesus Christ. The doctrine was elaborated by St *Cyril of Alexandria and formally accepted by the Church in the Definition of *Chalcedon (451). See also preceding entry.

A. Michel in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 437–568; M. Schmaus and H. Vorgrimler in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 5 (1960), cols. 579–84, s.v. See also bibl. to CHRISTOLOGY.

Hypsistarians (Gk. ὕψιστος, 'highest'). A 4th-cent. sect, probably confined to Cappadocia, which is mentioned by *Gregory of Nazianzus (Orat. 18. 5, where he says that his father had formerly belonged to it) and by *Gregory of Nyssa. It was so named because its members, refusing to worship God as 'Father' (πατήρ), revered Him only as the 'All Ruler and Highest' (παντοκράτωρ καὶ ὕψιστος). They incorporated into their system many oriental and Jewish elements.

C. Ullmann, De Hypsistariis (Heidelberg, 1825). G. T. Stokes in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 188 f.; G. Bareille in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), col. 572; L. Spätling in EC 7 (1951), cols. 181 f.

I

Iamblichus (*c.*250–*c.*330). The chief *Neoplatonist of the Syrian school. Little is known of his life. He was a native of Chalcis in Coele-Syria; he may have studied under *Porphyry or perhaps only studied his works; he later taught in Syria, surrounded by many disciples. He held a very elaborate theory of mediation between the spiritual and physical worlds, radically modifying the doctrine of *Plotinus by duplicating the Plotinian One (ἕν) and distinguishing between its transcendental and creative aspects. This distinction lies at the basis of the negative and affirmative theologies which have differentiated E. and W. theology (see GOD).

Iamblichus incorporated in his system many Greek and Oriental pagan mythologies, whose deities he amalgamated with his orders of hypostases. He also carried a stage further the development of the number-symbolism cherished by the later Neoplatonists. His most substantial works were his commentaries on *Plato and *Aristotle, which we know only from quotations and allusions in later writers. He also wrote a commentary (now lost) on the Chaldean Oracles, which influenced *Proclus; a comprehensive exposition of the Pythagorean philosophy, entitled Συναγωγὴ τῶν Πυθαγορείων Δογμάτων (of this the only parts to survive are a treatise 'On the Pythagorean Life' (Περὶ τοῦ Πυθαγορικοῦ Βίου), an 'Exhortation to Philosophy' (Λόγος προτρεπτικὸς εἰς Φιλοσοφίαν), and various treatises of a speculative kind on mathematics); and, apparently, the 'Liber de Mysteriis', whose ascription has been doubted but is now generally accepted. This last work is of no philosophical importance, but is a curious guide to the superstitions of the age. There are apparently no direct references to Christianity in his writings, but it was from Iamblichus and his school that *Julian the Apostate learnt the Neoplatonism which he used as a weapon against Christianity.

Edns. of the treatise 'On the Pythagorean Life' by L. Deubner (Teub., 1937, rev. by U. Klein, 1975), of three mathematical treatises by N. Festa, H. Pistelli and V. de Falco (ibid., 1891, 1894, and 1922 respectively; all rev. by U. Klein, 1975), and of the 'Exhortation to Philosophy' by É. des Places, SJ, with Fr. tr. (Collection des Universités de France, 1989). 'Liber de Mysteriis', ed. id., with Fr. tr. and introd. (ibid., 1966; 2nd edn., 1989). B. D. Larsen, Jamblique de Chalcis (Aarhus diss., 2 vols., 1972), incl. edn. of testimonia and fragmenta exegetica. Frags. of the comm. on Plato's Dialogues ed., with Eng. tr., by J. M. Dillon (Philosophia Antiqua, 23; Leiden, 1973). Eng. trs. of 'Vita Pythagorica' by T. Taylor (London, 1818) and [E.] G. Clark (Translated Texts for Historians, 8; Liverpool, 1989); of 'De Mysteriis' by T. Taylor (Chiswick, 1821; 3rd edn., London, 1968). M. Sicherl, Die Handschriften, Ausgaben und Übersetzungen von Iamblichos De Mysteriis (TU 62; 1957). B. Nasemann, Theurgie und Philosophie in Jamblichs de Mysteriis (Beiträge zur Altertumskunde, 11; Stuttgart, 1991). H. J. Blumenthal and E. G. Clark (eds.), The Divine Iamblichus: Philosopher and Man of Gods (Bristol, 1993). A. C. Lloyd in A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1967), pp. 294–301, with refs. Überweg, 1, pp. 612–17, with full bibl., pp. 191 f. G. Mau and W. Kroll in PW 17 (1914), cols. 645–51. See also bibl. to NEOPLATONISM.

Ibas, Bp. of *Edessa from 435 to 449 and from 451 to 457. In the contemporary Christological controversies, he took a mediating position between the dualistic teaching of the *Nestorians and the *Alexandrian position of St *Cyril, and was closely associated in doctrine and policy with *Theodoret. On account of his views, summarized in a famous letter addressed to one Mari in 433, he was deposed at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus in 449. Though he was vindicated at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), his epistle was condemned by *Justinian and anathematized by the Fifth General Council (553). None of his writings, apart from the Epistle to Mari in a Greek translation from the original Syriac, has survived. See also THREE CHAPTERS.

Text of Ep. to Mari in acta of Councils, e.g. Mansi, 7, cols. 241–50. A. d'Alès, SJ, 'La Lettre d'Ibas à Marès le Persan', Rech. S.R. 22 (1932), pp. 5–25. Bardenhewer, 4 (1924), pp. 410 f. E. Venables in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 192–6.

Iceland, Christianity in. Christianity reached Iceland from *Norway *c.*980 and was accepted by the Althing (the ruling council) in 999/1000. The medieval Church had two bishoprics, Skálholt and Hólar, and was at first under the administrative jurisdiction of Bremen, then of Lund, and finally of Trondheim (Nidaros). The breakdown of political stability in Iceland led to her subjection to Norway in 1262. *Benedictine and *Augustinian communities were established in the island for several centuries. At the Reformation Iceland followed *Denmark, to whose rule she had been subject since *c.*1380, in adopting *Lutheranism. In modern times there has been a revival of Church life, reflected, e.g., in the production of a new translation of the Bible (1981). The ecclesiastical government is in the hands of the Lutheran bishop, with deanery and parish councils; and the civil government has also some voice in ecclesiastical appointments.

F. Jónsson, Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiae (4 vols., Copenhagen, 1772–8; cont. by P. Pétursson, ibid., 1841). J. Helgason, Islands Kirke fra dens Grundlæggelse til Reformationen (ibid., 1925); id., Islands Kirke fra Reformationen til vore Dage (ibid., 1922). J. C. F. Hood, Icelandic Church Saga (1946). D. [A.] Strömbäck, The Conversion of Iceland, tr. and annotated by P. Foote (Viking Society for Northern Research of University College, London, Text Series, 6 [1975]). J. H. Adalsteinsson, Under the Cloak: The Acceptance of Christianity in Iceland (Studia Ethnologica Upsaliensia, 4; 1978). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, 2, Lieferung 7, pt. 2, 'Die Kirche in Island' (1937). L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches: A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965), pp. 104–17. S. Einarsson in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 358–68, s.v. 'Island'.

ICF. See INDUSTRIAL CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

Ichabod, the son of Phinehas and grandson of the priest Eli, the tragic circumstances of whose birth are described in 1 Sam. 4: 19–22. The name, acc. to 1 Sam. 4: 21, means 'The glory has departed' (lit. 'no glory'); hence the use of 'Ichabod' as an exclamation.

ichthus. See FISH.

icon (Gk. εἰκών). Icons are flat pictures, usually painted in egg tempera on wood, but also wrought in mosaic, ivory, and other materials, to represent the Lord, the BVM, or another saint, which are used and venerated in the E. Church. The scenes depicted often relate to liturgical celebrations rather than directly to historical events. For protection, esp. in Russia, the figures are often covered with a metal shield on which the outlines of the clothes are carved, but which leave free the face and hands belonging to the painting underneath. Icons became numerous in the E. from the 5th cent., and the effect of the *Iconoclastic Controversy of the 8th and 9th cents. was to increase devotion to them among the people. Since then they have always played an essential part in the public as well as in the private worship of the Byzantine Church, and they are accorded all the external marks of veneration common in the E., such as kisses, prostrations, incense, etc. As it is believed that through them the saints exercise their beneficent powers, they preside at all important events of human life and are held to be effective remedies against illness, to drive away devils, to procure both spiritual and temporal blessings, and generally to be powerful channels of Divine grace. Many icons have been famous for their miracles, esp. that of Christ of *Edessa, believed 'not to have been made by hands' (ἀχειροποίητος), and that of the *Theotokos, also 'acheiropoietos', in the monastery of the Abramites at *Constantinople. Perhaps the best-known icon is that of the Trinity by St Andrey Rublev, now in the Tretiakov Gallery in Moscow. See also ICONOSTASIS and IMAGES.

O. Wulff and M. Alpatoff, Denkmäler der Ikonenmalerei in kunstgeschichtlicher Folge (1925). I. Dirks, OSB, Les Saintes Icones (2nd edn., Amay-sur-Meuse, 1939). W. P. Theunissen, Ikonen: Historisch, Aesthetisch en Theologisch Belicht (1948), with bibl. L. Ouspensky and V. *Lossky, The Meaning of Icons (Olten, 1952; repr., with additional material, Crestwood, NY, 1982). E. Kitzinger, 'The Cult of Images in the Age before Iconoclasm', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 8 (1954), pp. 83–150. L. Ouspensky, Essai sur la théologie de l'icone dans l'Église orthodoxe (Recueil d'Études orthodoxes, 2; 1960; Eng. tr., Crestwood, NY, 1978; rev. tr., ibid., 1992); id., La Théologie de l'icône dans l'Église orthodoxe (1982; Eng. tr., Crestwood, NY, 1992). J. Stuart, Ikons (1975). C. von Schönborn, OP, L'Icône du Christ: Fondements Théologiques (Paradosis, 24; 1976). K. Weitzmann, The Icon: Holy Image. Sixth to Fourteenth Century (1978). Id. and others, Le Icone (Milan, 1981; Eng. tr., 1982). N. P. Kondakov (Eng. tr. by E. H. Minns from larger Russian work), The Russian Icon (Oxford, 1927). P. Muratov, Les Icones russes (1928). W. Felicetti-Liebenfels, Geschichte der byzantinischen Ikonenmalerei (Olten and Lausanne, 1956). K. Weitzmann and others, Ikone sa Balkana (1966; Eng. tr., 1968). The 'Painter's Manual' of Dionysius of Fourna, tr. P. Hetherington (1974: a notable source for the conventions of icon-painting). L. Ouspensky in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 324–6, s.v.

Iconoclastic Controversy (from εἰκονοκλάστης, 'iconoclast', 'image-breaker'). The controversy on the veneration of *icons (q.v.) agitated the Greek Church from *c.*725 to 842. At the end of the 7th and the beginning of the 8th cents. several influences hostile to the veneration of icons had made themselves felt in the E. Empire, notably the *Monophysite heresy, which minimized the human side of the Incarnation, the *Manichaean tendencies of the *Paulicians, who held that all matter was evil, and possibly also *Islam. The open outbreak of this hostility was due to the Emp. *Leo III, the Isaurian (717–41), who thought that the use of icons, which had admittedly become excessive, was the chief obstacle to the conversion of Jews and Muslims. In 726 he published an edict declaring all images idols and ordering their destruction. Very soon serious disturbances throughout the Empire followed. The patriarch *Germanus, who appealed to the Pope, was deposed in 730, and a systematic persecution unleashed, esp. against the monks, who were the most ardent defenders of the icons. At the same time St *John of Damascus wrote his famous apologies against the iconoclasts and Pope Gregory III held two synods at Rome condemning Leo's supporters (731).

In 741 Leo was succeeded by his son Constantine V (Copronymus), who, after a quickly suppressed revolt of his brother-in-law, Artabasdus, in favour of the icons, continued his father's policy. In 753 he called the Synod of Hieria, which neither the patriarchs of *Antioch, *Jerusalem, and *Alexandria nor the Pope attended. The synod alleged that, by representing only the humanity of Christ, the icon-worshippers either divided His unity as the *Nestorians or confounded the two Natures as the Monophysites; and it further declared that the icons of the BVM and of the saints were idols and decreed the destruction of all of them. The persecution now raged more fiercely than ever, many of the secular clergy giving way, but a great number of monks became martyrs in the cause of the icons.

Under Constantine's son, Leo IV (775–80), the persecution abated, and after his death his wife, the Empress Irene, regent for her young son Constantine, reversed the policy of her predecessors despite the iconoclastic leanings of the army. In 784 *Tarasius became Patr. of Constantinople and, in concert with Irene, opened negotiations with Pope *Hadrian I, who sent legates to the Seventh General Council which met at *Nicaea in 787. This Council completely undid the work of the Synod of Hieria, defined the degree of veneration to be paid to icons, and decreed their restoration throughout the country.

Though the decrees of the Council were officially received, Iconoclasm retained a strong following esp. in the army. In 814 the outbreak of the 'Second Iconoclastic Controversy' took place under Leo V the Armenian, a general elected Emperor by the army. Leo again began to remove icons from churches and public buildings; the Patr. *Nicephorus was deposed (815); St *Theodore of Studios, the foremost defender of images among the monks, sent into exile; and many others imprisoned and martyred. After Leo's assassination in 820 his successor, Michael II, continued his iconoclastic policy though in a milder form, whereas his son Theophilus, who succeeded him in 829, returned to the violence of Leo, esp. after the enthronization of the iconoclast patriarch John the Grammarian in 832. The persecution ended only with Theophilus' death in 842. His widow, Theodora, like Irene, regent for her son, caused the monk Methodius to be elected patriarch in 843, and on the first Sunday of Lent a great feast was celebrated in honour of the icons, since then solemnly kept in the E. Church as the 'Feast of *Orthodoxy'.

The few repercussions which the controversy had on theology in the W. were mainly caused by the misunderstanding of certain passages from the Acts of the Second Council of Nicaea. A faulty translation of the Acts, sent to *Charlemagne by Hadrian I, together with a general dislike of the Greeks and political friction, led to a manifesto against the Council by the Frankish bishops in 790, later expanded and issued as the 'Libri Carolini' (*Caroline Books). It was reiterated by the Synod of Frankfurt in 794 which formally condemned the Second Council of Nicaea, misunderstanding it to enjoin an adoration of images equal to that due to the Divine Trinity. A similar attitude was taken up by the bishops who met at Paris in 828, who would tolerate pictures only as ornaments. Owing to the authority of the Popes, however, and the influence of theologians such as *Walafrid Strabo and *Hincmar of Reims, the Frankish bishops gradually accepted the Nicene decrees, opposition to them having virtually ceased in the 10th cent.

The Iconoclastic Controversy, more important for its practical than for its theological results, is usually considered the last step towards the great schism between E. and W. before the actual breach. The Caesaro-Papism which showed itself during the struggle encountered in this period relatively little resistance in the Greek Church, esp. among the secular clergy, while it was viewed by the Popes with growing apprehension. The unity achieved by imperial decree in 787 and again in 843 proved artificial, and with the restoration of the Empire by the Franks and the development of the temporal power of the Papacy the ground was prepared for the final separation between the independent Church of the W. and the Church of the Byzantine Empire.

L. Bréhier, La Querelle des images: VIII^e IX^e siècles (1904). G. Ostrogorsky, Studien zur Geschichte des byzantinischen Bilderstreites (Historische Untersuchungen, 5; Breslau, 1929). Id., Geschichte des Byzantinischen Staates (Byzantinisches Handbuch, 12. 1. 2; 1940, pp. 97–146; 3rd edn., 1963), pp. 123–75 (Eng. tr., with additional material, Oxford, 1968, pp. 147–209). A. Grabar, L'Iconoclasme byzantin: dossier archéologique (1957). P. J. Alexander, The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople (Oxford, 1958). P. Brown, 'A Dark-Age crisis: aspects of the Iconoclastic controversy', EHR 88 (1973), pp. 1–34. S. Gero, Byzantine Iconoclasm during the Reign of Leo III (CSCO, Subsidia, 41; 1973); id., Byzantine Iconoclasm during the Reign of Constantine V (ibid. 52; 1977). A. [A. M.] Bryer and J. Herrin (eds.), Iconoclasm: Papers given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975 (Birmingham, 1977). D. Stein, Der Beginn des byzantinischen Bilderstreits und seine Entwicklung bis in die 40er Jahre des 8. Jahrhunderts (Miscellanea Byzantina Monascensia 25; 1980). H. G. Thümmel, Die Frühgeschichte der Ostkirchlichen Bilderlehre (TU 139; 1992), with primary docs. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 30–68. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 214–302, s.v. 'Images'.

iconography, Christian. The subject of Christian iconography is the pictorial or symbolical representation of Christian ideas, persons, and history. It is not a form of aesthetic criticism, but, like *archaeology, an auxiliary to historical and theological studies.

The earliest Christian art was mainly symbolical. Christ was represented by a *fish (Ichthus) or a young shepherd, a ship symbolized the Church, an anchor hope or salvation, a peacock immortality. Pictorial scenes, drawn from the Bible or the *Apocryphal literature, were also typical, not merely illustrative, e.g. Jonah's story symbolized death and resurrection.

From the time of *Constantine, Christian art could display Christianity triumphant. Under the influence of *Neoplatonic aesthetics, which saw art as disclosing a higher, spiritual realm, the conscious symbolism characteristic of *icons in the narrower sense developed. The chief descriptive monuments of the period are *catacomb painting, church mosaics, and *sarcophagi. Already there can be detected a difference of emphasis between E. and W., the E. stressing the liturgical function of art, whereas the W. regarded art as providing pictorial illustrations of biblical events and religious doctrines. Byzantine churches often exhibit a planned system of stylized and didactic decoration, covering the whole interior. After the *Iconoclastic Controvery this plan was adapted more precisely to the Liturgy and stereotyped for centuries.

In the W., partly under the influence of a growing devotion to Christ's sacred humanity, a more realistic, less symbolic style of art began to develop from the 12th cent. Gothic cathedrals, by their sculpture, glass, paintings, and textiles, were encyclopaedias of theology, history, hagiography, natural history (moralized, after the Bestiaries), learning (the seven arts), morality (following *Prudentius' 'Combat of Virtues and Vices'), and the trades and crafts. All activity, this indicated, is religious. While individualism had some play and not all art was didactic, art commonly conformed to a pattern determined by the Church. This was partly based on, partly explained by, the encyclopaedic writings of *Honorius 'of Autun', Bartholomaeus Anglicus (*c.*1250), and, above all, *Vincent of Beauvais, which developed the work of *Isidore of Seville and *Rabanus Maurus. Such a cathedral as *Chartres demonstrates a highly organized scheme of decoration. In the 14th cent. art grew less intellectual and more emotional or mystical. In the next century it became frankly realistic and picturesque. Didactic schemes were already dissolving when the Renaissance killed medieval methods. Since then there have been many experiments in both realism and symbolism, but, while religious art still abounds, it is impossible to discern any dominant tradition or system in Christian art and symbolism.

L. Bréhier, L'Art chrétien: Son développement iconographique des origines à nos jours (1918); K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst (2 vols., 1926–8), with bibl. G. de Jerphanion, SJ, La Voix des monuments: Notes et études d'archéologie chrétienne (1930), esp. no. 2, 'Le Développement iconographique de l'art chrétien', pp. 30–54. D. T. Rice, The Beginnings of Christian Art (1957). F. van der Meer, Oudchristelijke Kunst (Zeist, 1959; Eng. tr., 1967). L. Réau, Iconographie de l'art chrétien (3 vols. in 6, 1955–8). A. Grabar, Christian Iconography: A Study of its Origins (1969). G. Schiller, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst (3 vols., 1966–71; Eng. tr., 1971 ff.). G. Mathew [OP], Byzantine Aesthetics (1963). É. Mâle, L'Art religieux du XII^e siècle en France (1922); id., L'Art religieux du XIII^e siècle en France (1898; Eng. tr., 1913); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du moyen-âge en France (1908); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du XVI^e siècle, du XVII^e siècle et du XVIII^e siècle (1932); iconostasis. The screen which, in Byzantine churches, separates the sanctuary from the nave. Originally a low barrier, sometimes surmounted by columns joined by a decorated parapet and coping, since the 14th to 15th cents. the screen has presented the form of a wall of wood or stone, covered with *icons, from which it derives its name. It is pierced by three doors, the central or Holy Door admitting to the altar, and those on the right and left respectively to the *diaconicon and the *prothesis.

Eng. tr. of parts of these works issued as Religious Art from the Twelfth to the Eighteenth Century (1949). E. Kirschbaum, SJ, and others (eds.), Lexikon der christlichen Ikonographie (8 vols., 1968–76).

K. *Holl, 'Die Entstehung der Bilderwand in der griechischen Kirche', Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, 9 (1906), pp. 365–84; B. Pace, 'Nuova ipotesi sull' origine dell' iconostasio', Byzantion, 19 (1949), pp. 195–205; J. Walter, AA, 'The Origins of the Iconostasis', Eastern Churches Review, 3 (1971), pp. 251–67. A. W. Epstein, 'The Middle Byzantine Sanctuary Barrier: Templon or Iconostasis?', Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 134 (1981), pp. 1–28, with refs. M. Cheremeteff, 'The Transformation of the Russian Sanctuary Barrier and the role of Theophanes the Greek', in A. Leong (ed.), The Millenium: Christianity and Russia (A.D. 988–1988) (Crestwood, NY, 1990), pp. 107–40. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 31–48, s.v. 'Iconostase'.

idiorrhythmic. A term applied to certain monasteries on Mount *Athos which, in contradistinction to the *coenobitic houses, used to allow considerable freedom to their monks, including the right to possess personal property.

Idiot, the (from the Gk. ἰδιώτης, a private person, one of no special skill), the pseudonym used by a medieval spiritual writer generally identified as Raymundus Jordanus, a French Canon Regular of St Augustine and Abbot of Selles-sur-Cher, who flourished *c.*1381. A collected edition of his devotional works in Latin, which were very popular in the Middle Ages, was published in 1654 by Théophile Raynaud, SJ, who first made the identification. The word 'idiot' long retained its original meaning in English; in 1657 some writings of Dame Gertrude *More, OSB (1606–33) were pub. at Paris under the title 'The Holy Practices of a Divine Lover, or, the Sainctly Idiots Devotions'.

Ignatius, Father. The Revd Joseph Leycester Lyne (1837–1908), mission preacher. In 1860 he was ordained deacon to the title of a curacy at St Peter's, Plymouth, under G. R. Prynne. Shortly afterwards he left Plymouth and worked for some months with the Revd C. F. *Lowder at St George's-in-the-East, London. He made it his chief aim to revive the *Benedictine Order in the Anglican Church, and after various abortive steps eventually acquired in 1869 a site for his monastery at Capel-y-ffin, some four miles from Llanthony. A striking preacher with great gifts of popular oratory, he carried out successful missions in many parts of England, mainly in secular buildings. He remained a deacon until 1898, when he was ordained priest by J. R. *Vilatte. On Ignatius's death, the buildings at Capel-y-ffin passed into the possession of the Anglican Benedictines at *Caldey Island; in 1924 they were bought by Eric *Gill.

Baroness de Bertouch, The Life of Father Ignatius, O.S.B. (1904); D. Attwater, Father Ignatius of Llanthony (1931); A. Calder-Marshall, The Enthusiast: An Enquiry into the Life, Beliefs and Character of the Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne alias Fr. Ignatius, O.S.B. (1962).

Ignatius, St (*c.*35–*c.*107), Bp. of *Antioch. Ignatius describes himself as also called 'Theophoros' (Θεοφόρος, 'bearer of God', or perhaps Θεόφορος, 'borne by God'). He was probably of Syrian origin, and J. B. *Lightfoot, basing himself on a passage from his Ep. ad Romanos, believed that he was a pagan and a persecutor of Christians before his conversion. Acc. to *Origen he was the second Bp. of Antioch, the successor of St *Peter; acc. to *Eusebius he was the third, following St Peter's successor, Euodius, *c.*69. Nothing is known of his life beyond his journey to martyrdom from Antioch to *Rome under a guard of ten soldiers. He was received en route at *Smyrna with great honour by St *Polycarp and visited by many members of neighbouring Christian communities, and wrote thence to the Churches of *Ephesus, Magnesia, and Tralles letters of encouragement, and a fourth to the Church at Rome, begging them not to deprive him of martyrdom by intervention with the pagan authorities. He was then taken to Troas, where he wrote three further letters to the Churches of *Philadelphia and Smyrna and to St Polycarp, and thence through Macedonia and Illyria to Dyrrhachium, where he was embarked for Italy. That the martyrdom to which Ignatius looked forward in his letters actually took place is already asserted by Polycarp and Origen, the latter of whom expressly mentions Rome as its place (traditionally the *Colosseum). The statement of *John Malalas (6th cent.) that Ignatius was martyred at Antioch is wholly without warrant. There survive five different accounts of his death (Acta), none of them meriting much credence.

The high esteem in which Ignatius's letters were held is proved both by patristic quotations, e.g. in Eusebius and *Theodoret, and also by interpolations and the circulation of spurious letters under his name. A Latin version of the seven genuine but interpolated letters, together with four spurious epistles, was first pub. by J. *Faber (Stapulensis) in 1498. The genuineness of this collection (the 'Long Recension') was a matter of prolonged dispute. It was accepted as authentic in toto by older RC scholars, but rejected equally in toto esp. by anti-episcopalian Protestant divines. The whole matter appeared in a new light when J. *Ussher, who observed that Ignatian quotations in medieval English authors differed from Faber's text but agreed with those in the Fathers, deduced both that the current text was interpolated and that the original text was probably to be found in England. He subsequently discovered a Latin translation which agreed with the old quotations. His Polycarpi et Ignatii Epistolae (1644) was a work of remarkable critical genius and erudition, its only serious error being the rejection of the lettter to Polycarp. In 1646 Isaak *Voss edited the corresponding Greek text which Ussher had traced to a Florentine MS (Laur. Plut. lvii. 7). For a long time, however, many Protestant scholars continued to reject all the letters owing to their strong emphasis on episcopacy. The controversy was virtually settled in favour of the authenticity of the seven letters by J. *Pearson's Vindiciae Epistolarum S. Ignatii (1672).

In the 19th cent. the dispute arose afresh through W. *Cureton's publication (1845) of a *Syriac MS containing a recension of only the three genuine letters to the Ephesians, to the Romans, and to Polycarp. He maintained that this 'Short Recension' was the only authentic one. Lightfoot's learned defence of the authenticity of the seven letters in his monumental edition of the Apostolic Fathers (1885) has, however, won general acceptance. He maintained further that the six apocryphal letters and the interpolations of the 'Long Recension' are by the same 4th-cent. hand. It is very likely that the forger was the compiler of the Apostolic Constitutions*, and if so, prob. an *Arian.

The authentic epistles, and esp. that to the Romans, reveal a man passionately devoted to Christ. His consuming desire for martyrdom comes out esp. in the Ep. to the Romans. In the other epistles he warns the recipients against a Judaizing heresy with *Docetic elements. He insists on the reality both of the Divinity and the Humanity of the Lord, whom he calls ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός ('our God Jesus Christ'). His Birth, Passion, and Death were not appearances but realities. The life of Christ is continued in the Eucharist, which he calls 'the bread that is the flesh of Jesus Christ, this flesh which has suffered for our sins'. The best safeguard of the unity of the Christian faith is the bishop, who is pre-eminent because he is 'as the Lord', and without whose authority neither the Eucharist nor marriage may be celebrated. The Church of Rome is referred to with special reverence as 'presiding in the region of the Romans' (ἥτις προκάθηται ἐν τόπῳ χωρίου Ῥωμαίων). There is, however, no reference to the Bp. of Rome.

Feast day: 17 Oct. in the RC Calendar (formerly 1 Feb.), some Anglican Churches, and at Antioch; 20 Dec. in the Greek Church. (In the proposed BCP of 1928, 17 Dec., the commemoration of his translation in the *Roman Martyrology.)

The history of Ignatian criticism, with full survey of the MS material and discussions to date, is fully described in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, pt. 2 (3 vols., 1885), with crit. text and Eng. tr. Gk. text and Eng. trs. also readily accessible in edns. of the '*Apostolic Fathers'. Convenient Eng. tr., with notes, by J. H. Srawley (Early English Church Classics, 2 vols., London, 1900); more recent edn., with Fr. tr. and comm., by P. T. Camelot (SC 10, 1944; 4th edn., 1969). Comm. by W. Bauer, rev. by H. Paulsen, Die Apostolischen Väter, 2 (Hb. NT 18; 1985), pp. 20–107, and by W. R. Schoedel (Hermeneia; Philadelphia [1985]). H. Schlier, Religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu den Ignatiusbriefen (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 8; 1929). C. C. Richardson, The Christianity of Ignatius of Antioch (New York, 1935); H. W. Bartsch, Gnostisches Gut und Gemeindetradition bei Ignatius von Antiochien (1940). V. Corwin, St Ignatius and Christianity in Antioch (Yale Publications in Religion, 1; 1960). H. Rathke, Ignatius von Antiochien und die Paulusbriefe (TU 99; 1967). K. Bommes, Weizen Gottes: Untersuchungen zur Theologie des Martyriums bei Ignatius von Antiochen (Theophaneia, 27; 1976). H. Paulsen, Studien zur Theologie des Ignatius von Antiochien (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 29; 1978). P. Meinhold, Studien zu Ignatius von Antiochien (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, 97; 1979). C. Trevett, A Study of Ignatius of Antioch in Syria and Asia (Studies in the Bible and Early Christianity, 29; Lewiston, NY, and Lampeter [1992]). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 12–17 (nos. 1025–36). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 47–50 and 551 f. G. Bareille in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 685–713; P. T. Camelot, OP, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1250–66, s.v.

Ignatius Loyola, St (prob. 1491–1556), founder of the *Jesuits. Born of a noble family at the castle of Loyola, not far south of the Pyrenees, he spent his formative years (*c.*1506–17) in the household of Juan Velázquez de Cuéllar, the Royal Treasurer of Castile, and then embarked on a military career, taking service with the Duke of Nájera. A wound in the right leg which he received during the siege of Pamplona (1521) reduced him to a prolonged state of inactivity, during which the reading of *Ludolf of Saxony's Vita Christi and biographies of saints led him to change his life radically. After his recovery he went to Montserrat, where he made a general confession, hung up his sword at the altar of the BVM, and exchanged clothes with a beggar. He then went to Manresa for a year (1522–3). Here he underwent a series of profound spiritual experiences, from which he derived many of the insights contained in the Spiritual Exercises (q.v.). Leaving Manresa, he travelled to *Jerusalem, subsisting on alms. Compelled to abandon his intention of remaining there permanently, he resolved during his return journey to study in order 'to help souls'. With short interruptions, he was a student for eleven years (1524–35), in Barcelona, Alcalá, Salamanca, and Paris.

In 1534 he and six companions, among them St *Francis Xavier and Bl Pierre Favre, made a vow of lifelong poverty and service to others, either in the Holy Land or, should that not be possible, wherever the Pope should send them. After Ignatius had returned briefly to Spain in 1535, they assembled in Venice early in 1537, planning to sail for Jerusalem. During that year Ignatius and six others from the group (which had already begun to expand) were ordained priests. Owing to Turkish attacks in the Mediterranean, no journey to the Holy Land was then possible, and the group dispersed over Italy, Ignatius himself going to Rome. At La Storta, just outside the city, he felt that God the Father had imprinted in his heart the words, 'I shall be favourable to you in Rome'; he also had a vision of himself being accepted as a servant, at the Father's request, by Christ, who was bearing the Cross. The following year the group finally abandoned the plan to go to Jerusalem, assembled in Rome, and in 1540 were definitively constituted as the Society of Jesus by the bull '*Regimini militantis Ecclesiae', Ignatius becoming its first *General. His remaining years were taken up with the organization of the rapidly spreading Society.

Ignatius's paramount aim was to rekindle religious fervour and practice in the Church through a more efficacious ministry. He also gave priority to pioneering mission work outside Europe and, after 1548, to the education of youth in schools. He was canonized in 1622. Feast day, 31 July.

Crit. edns. in Monumenta Ignatiana, 1st ser., S. Ignatii de Loyola . . . Epistolae et Instructiones (12 vols., Madrid, 1903–14); 2nd ser., Exercitia Spiritualia Sancti Ignatii de Loyola et eorum Directoria (Madrid, 1919; 2nd edn., 2 vols., Rome, 1955–69); 3rd ser., Constitutiones Societatis Jesu (4 vols., Rome, 1934–48); 4th ser., Scripta de Sancto Ignatio de Loyola (2 vols., Madrid, 1904–18; 2nd edn., 5 vols., Rome, 1943–77, incl. as vol. 4, crit. edn. of contemporary Life by P. Ribadeneira, SJ, first pub. Naples, 1572, Eng. tr., 1616). Manual edn. of works by I. Iparraguirre, SJ, and C. de Dalmases, SJ (Madrid, 1952; 5th edn., rev. by M. Ruiz Jurado, SJ, 1991). Collected Eng. tr. of his Spiritual Exercises and of the account of his life during the years 1521–38 which Ignatius dictated, of some selections from his spiritual diary kept between 2 Feb. 1544 and 27 Feb. 1545 and from The Constitutions of the Society of Jesus, and of some letters, ed. G. E. Ganss, SJ (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, etc., 1991). Full Eng. tr. of his spiritual diary by J. A. Munitiz, SJ (London, 1987), and of the Constitutions by G. E. Ganss, SJ (St Louis, 1970). Selection of letters in Eng. tr. by W. J. Young, SJ (Chicago, 1959), and convenient Eng. tr. of all his published Letters to Women (1960), with notes tr. from the German version of H. Rahner, SJ (orig. pub. Freiburg, 1956). Modern Lives by P. Dudon, SJ (Paris, 1934; Eng. tr., Milwaukee [1949]), C. de Dalmases, SJ (Madrid, 1979; 2nd edn., 1982; expanded Eng. tr., St Louis, 1985), R. Garcia-Villoslada, SJ (Madrid, 1986), J. I. Tellechea Idígoras (Madrid, 1986), and P. [G.] Caraman, SJ (London, 1990). F. Wulf, SJ (ed.), Ignatius von Loyola: Seine geistliche Gestalt und sein Vermächtnis 1556–1956 (Würzburg [1956]; partial Eng. tr., St Louis, 1977); P. de Leturia, SJ, Estudios ignacianos (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 10–11; Rome, 1957). H. Rahner, SJ, Ignatius von Loyola als Mensch und Theologe (Freiburg, etc., 1964; Eng. tr. of chs. 11–16 as Ignatius the Theologian, London, 1968; of chs. 3, 7, 9, 17–19 as Ignatius: The Man and the Priest, Rome, 1977; 2nd edn., 1982; and of ch. 4 as The Vision of St Ignatius in the Chapel of La Storta, Rome, 1975; 2nd edn., 1979). A. Ravier, SJ, Ignace de Loyola fonde la Compagnie de Jésus ([1974]; Eng. tr., San Francisco [1987]). D. Lonsdale, SJ, Eyes to See, Ears to Hear: An Introduction to Ignatian Spirituality (1990). W. W. Meissner, SJ, Ignatius Loyola: The Psychology of a Saint (New Haven and London [1992]). I. Iparraguirre, SJ, Orientaciones bibliográficas sobre San Ignacio de Loyola (Subsidia ad Historiam S.I., series minor, 1; Rome, 1957; 2nd edn., 1965); the material after 1965 is covered by M. Ruiz Jurado, SJ, Orientaciones bibliográficas sobre San Ignacio de Loyola (Subsidia ad Historiam S.I., 8, 10, etc.; Rome, 1977 ff.). L. Polgár, SJ, Bibliographie sur l'histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus 1901–1980, 1 (Rome, 1981), pp. 101–234.

ignorance, invincible. See INVINCIBLE IGNORANCE.

IHS. A monogram for the name Jesus, formed by abbreviating the corresponding Greek word which in *uncials is written ΙΗΣΟΥΣ. It is found, e.g., in the Latin text of Lk. 6: 3 in the *Codex Bezae. That the second symbol, H, was really a Greek η and not a Latin h was soon forgotten, and the abbreviation 'ihs' was thus often wrongly expanded to 'Ihesus'. Other attempts to explain the three letters as initials of separate words became very common. Thus they were held to denote Iesus Hominum Salvator (i.e. 'Jesus, Saviour of Men') or In Hoc Signo [vinces] (i.e. 'in this sign [thou shalt conquer]'). In the Middle Ages the IHS was widely used among the *Franciscans and later it became popular among the *Jesuits, who sometimes interpreted it as Jesum Habemus Socium (i.e. 'We have Jesus as our companion').

F. Victorius, De Vetustate et Forma Monogrammatis . . . Nominis Jesu (Rome, 1747). L. Traube, Nomina Sacra (1907), pp. 156–9; F. J. Dölger, ΙΧΘΥΣ: Das Fischsymbol in frühchristlicher Zeit, 1 (RQ, Suppl. 17; 1910), pp. 355–61.

Ildefonsus, St (*c.*607–67), Abp. of Toledo. He came from a noble family, and is traditionally believed to have been a pupil of St *Isidore of Seville. While still young, he entered the monastery of Agali, nr. Toledo, and later became its abbot. As such he attended the Councils of *Toledo in 653 and 655. He was appointed Abp. of Toledo in 657. Acc. to St Julian of Toledo, he was the author of a long list of works, but only four have survived. His 'De Virginitate Beatae Mariae', in praise of the BVM, towards whom he showed great devotion, was a vigorous assertion of the privileges of the Mother of God. His 'Annotationes de Cognitione Baptismi' uses skilfully the works of older writers on the subject, esp. St *Augustine, St *Gregory the Great, and St Isidore of Seville, and contains much valuable information on the discipline of *catechumens. His 'De Progressu Spiritalis Deserti' (also known as the 'De Itinere Deserti quo Pergitur post Baptismum') completes the 'Annotationes' by a mystical application of the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness to the spiritual journey of the soul after baptism. The fourth of his extant works, 'De Viris Illustribus', is an important document of the history of the Spanish Church during the first two-thirds of the 7th cent. St Ildefonsus was a favourite subject for medieval artists, esp. the legend of the apparition of the BVM presenting him with a chasuble. Feast day, 23 Jan.

Works ed. Card. F. de Lorenzana, Abp. of Toledo, in Sanctorum Patrum Toletanorum quotquot extant Opera, 1 (Madrid, 1782), pp. 94–290; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 9–330. Crit. text of 'De Virginitate Beatae Mariae', with discussion, by V. B. Garcia (Textos latinos de la edad media española, Madrid, 1937) and of 'De Viris Illustribus' by C. Codoñer Merino (Acta Salmanticensia, Filosofia y Letras, 65; Salamanca, 1972). Spanish tr. of Life by A. Martínez de Toledo (Clásicos castellanos, no. 134; Madrid, 1952). Sister Athanasius Braegelmann, OSB, The Life and Writings of Saint Ildefonsus of Toledo (Catholic University of America Studies in Mediaeval History, NS 4; 1942). J. M. Cascante Dávila, Doctrina Mariana de S. Ildefonso de Toledo (Barcelona, 1958). J. Madoz, SJ, 'San Ildefonso de Toledo', Estudios eclesiásticos, 26 (1952), pp. 467–505. Mrs Humphry Ward in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 223–5; M. C. Diaz y Díaz in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1323–5, s.v. 'Ildefonse (4)'; J. Fontaine in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1754 f., s.v. 'Ildefonso'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 405, s.v.

Illingworth, John Richardson (1848–1915), English divine. From 1883 he was rector of Longworth, Oxon. A philosopher rather than a theologian, he applied some of the principles of Idealistic philosophy to the exposition of the Christian faith. His rectory became the centre of the 'Lux Mundi*' group, and Illingworth himself contributed two essays to the volume. His books include Personality, Human and Divine (*Bampton Lectures, 1894), Divine Immanence (1898), Reason and Revelation (1902), and The Doctrine of the Trinity (1907).

The Life and Work of J. R. Illingworth, by his wife (1917).

Illtyd or Illtud, St (5th–6th cent.), Welsh saint. All that is known is that he was abbot of a large monastery, which he is said to have founded. This community was later called after him 'Llanilltud Fawr'; it is mentioned in the early medieval Life of St *Samson and is prob. the modern Llantwit Major in Vale of Glamorgan. The 12th-cent. Life, which describes him as a native of Brittany who came to Britain and was converted to Christianity in 476, is of no historical value. Feast day, 6 Nov.

AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), pp. 219–36, incl. text of 12th-cent. Life, pp. 225–34; this is also pr., with Eng. tr., in A. W. Wade-Evans, Vitae Sanctorum Britanniae et Genealogiae (Cardiff, 1944), pp. 194–233. On this Life see J. S. P. Tatlock, 'The Dates of the Arthurian Saints' Legends', Speculum, 14 (1939), pp. 345–65, esp. pp. 353–6. G. H. Doble, Saint Iltud (Cardiff, 1944); repr. in Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (ibid., 1971), pp. 88–145. D. L. Thomas in DNB 28 (1891), pp. 416 f., s.v.

Illuminati. A name applied to several bodies of religious enthusiasts, among them:

(1) The Alumbrados (q.v.).

(2) The Rosicrucians (q.v.).

(3) A masonic sect founded in Bavaria in 1776 by Adam Weishaupt (1748–1830), who had been trained in a *Jesuit school and become a professor of *canon law at Ingolstadt. Its object was to diffuse knowledge and to stimulate humanistic ideals and brotherly fellowship among its members. Those who belonged to it took names of the ancients and called Munich 'Athens' and Vienna 'Rome'. They aimed at forming a classless society and at bringing about the 'restoration' of the patriarchal state. Repudiating the claims of all existing religious bodies, they professed themselves to be those in whom the 'illuminating' grace of Christ (hence their name; cf. Heb. 6: 4: τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας) alone resided, and organized themselves on a new and very elaborate system, which required absolute obedience (largely modelled on Jesuit ideals) to the unknown superiors. In 1784 they were banished from Bavaria, but they continued to survive elsewhere, e.g. in France. They were also known as Perfectibilists. In modern times (1896, and again in 1925) they have been revived in Germany in a modified form.

(3) R. Le Forestier, Les Illuminés de Bavière et la franc-maçonnerie allemande (1914), esp. pp. 14–139 and 193–717. R. van Dülmen, Der Geheimbund der Illuminaten: Darstellung, Analyse, Dokumentation (Stuttgart [1975]). M. Agethen, Geheimbund und Utopie: Illuminaten, Freimaurer und deutsche Spätaufklärung (Ancien Régime, Aufklärung und Revolution, 11; 1984), esp. pp. 106–303. J. M. Roberts, The Mythology of Secret Societies (1972), pp. 118–45.

illuminative way. The intermediate stage of the spiritual life. See PURGATIVE, ILLUMINATIVE, AND UNITIVE WAYS.

Illyricus. See FLACIUS, MATTHIAS.

Image of God. Acc. to Gen. 1: 26 f. and elsewhere, man was created in the image of God. The term was fundamental to the patristic understanding of the human person. However, until St *Augustine, the primary significance of the expression 'Image of God' was the Son Himself, man being a derived image of God, created in accordance with (κατά) the Image, i.e. the Son. The two terms, 'image' and 'likeness' (Heb. צֶלֶם and דְּמוּת; Gk., εἰκών and ὁμοίωσις; Lat. imago and similitudo), used in Gen. 1: 26, were variously distinguished. Some (e.g. St *Irenaeus and *Origen) regarded 'image' as referring to man's original condition, and 'likeness' as referring to man's final state of glory (cf. 1 Jn. 3: 2); such a contrast fitted in conveniently with the *Platonic notion that man's goal is ὁμοίωσις θεῷ (Theaet. 176B) and also with the normal patristic understanding of salvation as *deification (q.v.). Other Fathers (e.g. St *Athanasius, St *Gregory of Nyssa) made no such distinction. The effect of the *Fall on the image received a similar variety of interpretation: for those who made the distinction the 'likeness' was lost, or its attainment rendered impossible apart from redemption; for others the image itself was damaged, or destroyed altogether. *Baptism was seen as an indispensable step in the restoration of the image-likeness. There have also been many theories to explain in what the image consists: most located it in human free will, but others found it in man's superiority to creation, or in a quality of his soul, such as simplicity or immortality, or in his reason. With St Augustine there was a new influential development in the doctrine of the image: the notion of the Son as the Image was dismissed as subordinationist and man's soul came to be regarded as a direct image of the Holy Trinity, manifesting a threefold structure in memory, understanding, and will (memoria, intelligentia, voluntas).

In the 16th cent. the Reformers expressed their doctrine of man's total depravity by asserting that the image was utterly lost as a result of the Fall. For those who opposed this view (not just RCs, but others such as the *Cambridge Platonists, and more recently some liberal Protestant theologians) the doctrine of the abiding image of God in man provided a convenient expression for their belief.

D. Cairns, The Image of God in Man (1953). T. Camelot, OP, 'La Théologie de l'Image de Dieu', RSPT 40 (1956), pp. 443–71. G. A. Jónsson, The Image of God: Genesis 1: 26–28 in a Century of Old Testament Research (Coniectanea Biblica, Old Testament Series, 26; Stockholm, 1988). H. Crouzel [SJ], Théologie de l'Image de Dieu chez Origène (Théologie, 34 [1956]); R. Leys, SJ, L'Image de Dieu chez Saint Grégoire de Nysse (Museum Lessianum, section théologique, 49; 1951); J. E. Sullivan, OP, The Image of God: The Doctrine of St Augustine and its Influence (Dubuque, Ia., 1963). W. Seibel in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 2 (Einsiedeln [1967]), pp. 804–43.

images. The use of any representations of men, animals, and plants, whether carved or painted, was prohibited in the Mosaic Law (Exod. 20: 4), because of the danger of idolatry. In other parts of the OT, however, images are mentioned, such as the *brazen serpent made by *Moses himself (Num. 21: 9), the *Cherubim standing over the *Ark of the Covenant (Exod. 25: 18–22), and the carvings in *Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs. 6: 18–35). From the time of the *Maccabees, however, and prob. earlier, the Palestinian Jews observed the Second Commandment rigorously, at least as far as the Temple was concerned, though it appears that pictures were used to decorate *synagogues. There is no mention of imagery in the NT.

The earliest known Christian pictures are the paintings in the *catacombs, some of which date from the end of the 2nd cent. After the period of the *persecutions sacred images came to play an increasingly important part in the cultus, esp. in the E. This met with opposition from *Eusebius of Caesarea and *Epiphanius, among others, but it was justified by stressing the theological significance of the Incarnation in which God had become visible by taking human nature. After the *Iconoclastic Controversy (q.v.) of the 8th and 9th cents., and its final settlement in favour of icons, these have continued to be an integral element in Orthodox religion, whether public or private, in which they are given a much more important place than in the W. Church.

In the W. the veneration of images, which at an early age began to comprise also statues, made much slower progress. It was given a doctrinal basis by the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas, who developed its theoretical justification on the lines laid down by the E. theologians, applying St *Basil's principle that the honour paid to the image passes on to its prototype, a principle which had already been accepted by the Second Council of *Nicaea (787).

In the 16th cent. the abuses which had grown up around the use of images in the later Middle Ages led the practice to be violently opposed by the majority of the Reformers, esp. U. *Zwingli and J. *Calvin, who were followed by the *Puritans. The *Lutherans were more tolerant of the practice, and to this day the crucifix is retained in the Lutheran churches. The Anglican Article XXII confines itself to condemning the 'Romish doctrine' on the subject. The Council of *Trent defined that due honour should be paid to images of the Lord, the BVM, and the other saints, on the ground not of any virtue inherent in the image, but because in it the person represented is venerated. This veneration is allowed only to images of actual human persons, not to such symbolical representations as that of God the Father as a venerable old man or the Holy Spirit as a dove, and similar devices.

St Thomas Aquinas, In Sent. lib. 3, dist. 9, a. 2, qu. 2; id., S. Theol. 3, 1, qu. 25, a. 3. The relevant clauses from the acts of the Second Council of Nicaea are conveniently repr. with Lat. and Eng. trs. in Tanner, Decrees, 1 (1990), pp. 135–7. The Tridentine ruling promulgated in sess. 25, sect. 'De Invocatione, Veneratione et Reliquis Sanctorum et Sacris Imaginibus', is repr., with Eng. tr., ibid., 2 (1990), pp. 774–6. E. [R.] Bevan, Holy Images (*Gifford Lectures for 1933; 1940). P. Evdokimov, L'Art de l'Icône: Théologie de la beauté [1970]. A. Nichols, OP, The Art of God Incarnate: Theology and Image in Christian Tradition (1980). A. *Fortescue in CE 7 (1910), pp. 664–72, s.v., with bibl.; V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 766–84, s.v., with full refs. to classical lit.; A. D. Lee in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 370–2, s.v. 'Images, Veneration of'. See also bibl. to ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY and to ICONOGRAPHY.

Imago Dei. Latin for *Image of God (q.v.).

Imitation of Christ, The. The purpose of this famous manual of spiritual devotion is to instruct the Christian how to seek perfection by following Christ as his model. The book is divided into four parts. The first two contain general counsel for the spiritual life, the third deals with the interior dispositions of the soul, and the fourth with the sacrament of the Holy Communion. It was first put into circulation (anon.) in 1418, and has traditionally been assigned to *Thomas à Kempis (*c.*1380–1471). Indeed a MS still exists at Brussels (Bibl. Roy., 5855–61) with his signature. Attempts have been made since the 17th cent. to assign it to an earlier writer, among those suggested being St *Bernard of Clairvaux, St *Bonaventure, G. *Groote, and J. *Gerson, none of whom are now considered likely. The attribution to a certain John Gersen of Canabaco, Abbot of Vercelli, suggested by the discovery by J. B. Rossignoli, SJ, in 1605 of a MS at Arona, describing it as the work of 'Abbatis Johannis Gersen', still finds supporters.

Facsimile reprod. of the edito princeps, which was pr. at Augsburg, 1471–2, ed. with introd. by W. J. Knox-Little (London, 1893). Crit. edns. by C. Hirsche (Berlin, 1874), by M. J. Pohl, among the works of Thomas à Kempis, vol. 2 (Freiburg i.B., 1904) and by T. Lupo, SDB (Vatican City, 1982). First Eng. tr. (mid 15th cent.) ed. J. K. Ingram (EETS, extra series, 63; 1892); modern edn. of Eng. tr. made by R. Whitford *c.*1530 by E. J. Klein with full introd. and notes prepared for EETS (New York and London, 1941). There have been a large number of Eng. trs., incl. that with introd. by J. *Wesley (London, 1735) and those by L. Sherley-Price (Penguin Classics, 1952) and R. A. *Knox and M. Oakley (London [1959]). Modern discussions on the authorship by J. Huijben and P. Debongnie, CSSR (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 30; 1957), L. M. J. Delaissé (Publications de Scriptorium, 2; 1956), R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968), pp. 521–36, and A. Ampe, SJ (Sussidi eruditi, 25; 1973), all attributing it to Thomas à Kempis (as do most edns. of the work). J. van Ginneken, SJ (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1940–1), J. Tiecke (Nijmegen, 1941), and F. Kern (Olten, 1947) all attribute the work to G. Groote, mainly on the basis of certain 'pre-Kempistes' texts ed. by J. van Ginneken, op. cit. The attribution to John Gersen was accepted by J. *Mabillon and has been defended in modern times by P. E. Puyol (2 vols., Paris, 1889–1900) and P. Bonardi, CP, and T. Lupo, SDB (2 vols., Turin, 1964). The theory of the authorship of J. C. de Gerson has been championed by D. G. Barron, Jean Charlier de Gerson: The author of the De Imitatione Christi (1936), who gives a full discussion of the classic attempts at assigning the authorship. P. E. Puyol, Descriptions bibliographiques des manuscrits et des principales éditiones du livre De Imitatione Christi (1898). S. G. Axters, OP, De Imitatione Christi: Een handschrifteninventaris bij het vijfhonderdste verjaren van Thomas Hemerken van Kempen †1471 (Kempen and Niederrhein, 1971). A. Ampe, SJ, and B. Spaapen, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2338–68, at end of vol. See also works cited under DEVOTIO MODERNA and THOMAS À KEMPIS.

Immaculate Conception of the BVM. The dogma that 'from the first moment of her conception the Blessed Virgin Mary was, by the singular grace and privilege of Almighty God, and in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, Saviour of mankind, kept free from all stain of original sin' (Bull '*Ineffabilis Deus' of *Pius IX, 8 Dec. 1854). The belief has had a long and varied history, largely bound up with the observance of a feast of the Conception of the BVM. Biblical support has been found for the doctrine in Gen. 3: 15 and Lk. 1: 28. The argument from tradition is taken from the teaching of the Fathers, who as early as *Justin Martyr and *Irenaeus regarded Mary as the 'new Eve' corresponding to Christ as the 'new Adam'. In the E., where *Andrew of Crete and *John of Damascus had extolled the perfect sinlessness of Mary as implicit in the title '*Theotokos', the feast of her Conception was known from the 7th cent. Nevertheless, the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception was never endorsed by E. Orthodox theologians, mainly because they did not share the W. understanding of *original sin. The observance of the feast spread to the W., where it is attested for Naples in the 9th, and for England in the first half of the 11th cent. On its introduction into France (*c.*1130–40) St *Bernard opposed it and a controversy went on for several centuries. Most of the great schoolmen, incl. St. *Albert, St *Bonaventure, and St *Thomas Aquinas, declared against the belief on the grounds that in every natural conception the stain of original sin is transmitted and that, as Mary was conceived in the natural way, she was not exempt from this law. In opposition to the Paris theologians the contrary opinion was defended by *Duns Scotus at Oxford and later in Paris, and in his wake the *Franciscans became its proponents as the *Dominicans, following St Thomas, its opponents. The 15th cent. brought decisive developments. The Council of *Basle affirmed (1439) the belief as a pious opinion in accordance with Catholic faith, reason, and Scripture; ten years later the *Sorbonne required an oath of all its candidates to defend it, and other universities followed. In 1476 Sixtus IV approved the feast with its own Mass and Office, and in 1708 *Clement XI extended it to the Universal Church and even imposed its observance as a *Feast of Obligation. The Council of *Trent had explicitly declared that its decree on original sin did not include the BVM, and from the 16th cent. belief in the Immaculate Conception became general and was defended not only by the Franciscans but also by the *Carmelites, by many Dominicans, and esp. by the *Jesuits. Of this development the definition of 1854 was the natural result. The Feast of the Immaculate Conception is kept on 8 Dec. (In the E. the Feast of the Conception of the BVM is kept on 9 Dec.)

C. Passaglia, SJ, De Immaculato Deiparae Semper Virginis Conceptu Commentarius (3 parts, Rome, 1854–5); A. Ballerini, SJ, Sylloge Monumentorum ad Mysterium Conceptionis Immaculatae Virginis Deiparae Illustrandum (2 vols., Rome, 1854–6). W. B. *Ullathorne, The Immaculate Conception of the Mother of God (1855). M. Jugie, AA, L'Immaculée Conception dans l'Écriture sainte et dans la tradition orientale (Rome, 1952). E. D. O'Connor (ed.), The Dogma of the Immaculate Conception (Notre Dame, Ind., 1958). E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. 10 ('On the Origins of the Feast of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary'). A. W. Burridge, *White Father, 'L'Immaculée Conception dans la théologie de l'Angleterre médiévale', RHE 32 (1936), pp. 570–97; F. M. Mildner, OSM, 'The Oxford Theologians of the Thirteenth Century and the Immaculate Conception', Marianum, 2 (1940), pp. 284–306; I. Brady, OFM, 'The Development of the Doctrine on the Immaculate Conception in the Fourteenth Century after Aureoli', Franciscan Studies, 15 (1955), pp. 175–202. H. S. Box in E. L. Mascall and H. S. Box (eds.), The Blessed Virgin Mary (1963), pp. 77–88. X. Le Bachelet in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 845–1218, s.v. 'Immaculée Conception', with bibl.; P. Bonnetain, PSS, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 233–98, s.v. 'Immaculée Conception', with bibl.

Immaculate Heart of Mary. See SACRED HEART OF MARY.

Immanence, Divine. The omnipresence of God in His universe. The doctrine is a necessary constituent of the Christian conception of God, but, when held without the parallel doctrine of Divine transcendence, it is commonly indistinguishable from *pantheism (q.v.).

Immanuel or Emmanuel (Heb. עִמָּנוּאֵל, 'With us [is] God'). In the OT the word is used only in Is. 7: 14 and 8: 8. There are several interpretations. The prophet may here have meant by the expression (1) Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz; or (2) a son of his own; or (3) the *Messiah. It has also been suggested that no individual is referred to, but only future Divine deliverance. In Mt. 1: 23 the prophecy is interpreted with reference to the birth of Jesus Christ.

Besides comm. on Is. and Matt., see J. Lindblom, A Study on the Immanuel Section in Isaiah (Scripta Minora Regiae Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, 1957–8, no 4; 1958); W. McKane, 'The Interpretation of Isaiah VII 14–25', Vetus Testamentum, 17 (1967), pp. 208–19; R. Kilian, Die Verheissung Immanuels: Jes. 7, 14 (Stuttgarter Bibelstudien, 35 [1968]). J. Jensen in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 392–5, s.v. immersion. A method of *Baptism, employed at least from the 2nd cent., whereby part of the candidate's body was submerged in the baptismal water which was poured over the remainder. The rite is still found in the E. Church. In the W. it began to be replaced from c. the 8th cent. by the method of *affusion, though its use was still being encouraged in the 16th cent., as it still is in the Anglican and RC Churches. The term is occasionally loosely used to include *submersion, from which it is strictly to be distinguished.

immolation (Lat. immolatio, lit. 'the sprinkling of a sacrificial victim with meal' as required by the pagan ritual), an act of sacrificial offering. In early Christian usage the word was applied esp. to the actual slaughter of the victim, in the *Vulgate being often interchangeable with mactatio ('slaying'). In modern Eucharistic theology it has occupied an important place in view of the various doctrines held of the Immolation in the Mass, esp. since the publication of M. *de la Taille's Mysterium Fidei (1921).

immortality. Though in no sense a specifically Christian doctrine, the hope of immortality is an integral element in Christian belief, where it receives emphatic insistence and a characteristic shape. In pre-Christian times, the Greeks esp. developed a reasoned doctrine on the subject. The rationality of the human intellect seemed to imply an essential kinship of the soul with the principles of reason, so that it partook of their eternity. From this kinship *Plato inferred the existence of the soul before birth as well as its survival of death and saw in the process of learning the reminiscence (ἀνάμνησις) of knowledge possessed in a previous life. The striving of the virtuous man after the eternally valid principles of morality also pointed to the same belief. Plato and other Greeks insisted on the limitations which matter imposed on the soul. The body was an impediment, even a prison-house, from which death brought to the soul release into a fuller existence.

Such philosophical conceptions of immortality have commonly been confined to the few. In early times Hebrew thought about the next world hardly exceeded the conception of a very shadowy existence in *Sheol (q.v.). In later pre-Christian Judaism a greater sense of the reality of the future life developed, partly through reflection on the problem of suffering, partly from the ardent desire for abiding communion with God, partly through the recasting of the Messianic expectation. The Jewish hope became increasingly bound up with belief in the resurrection of the body, esp. in the *Apocalyptic writers. Esp. outside Palestine, Judaism borrowed extensively from Greek thought; in the Book of *Wisdom, e.g., the doctrine of immortality has a strong Platonic bent.

The essential shape which the doctrine assumed in Christianity arose from the fact of Christ's Resurrection. Man's highest destiny was more than the survival of an immortal soul. It was a life of abiding union with the risen Christ which reached its completion only by the reunion of body and soul. The teaching of St *Paul, embodied in 1 Cor. 15 and elsewhere, admirably expresses the essence of the Christian belief. Consequently, in Christian philosophy the defence of immortality after the manner of the Greek philosophers, i.e. apart from the resurrection, has always been an argumentum ad hominem.

The Fathers interpret the hope of immortality in close connection with the redemptive work of Christ. The *Fall of *Adam had brought death and it was through the *Second Adam that life was restored (*Irenaeus, *Athanasius, *Gregory of Nyssa). Most of the Fathers and the earlier Scholastics, however, were liable under Platonist influences to consider the relation of the soul to the body as extrinsic; and it was not until the 13th cent. that a fully elaborated defence of the specifically Christian doctrine appeared. Then the acceptance of the *Aristotelian tenet that the soul was the 'form' of the body gave philosophical justification for the beliefs that a disembodied soul was no true being and that the resurrection of the body was necessary for a full human life in the world to come.

The Scholastic arguments for the future life have been taken over since the later Middle Ages into popular apologetics. They were repeated, without substantial additions, by professional philosophers down to the end of the 18th cent. In R. *Descartes, with his sharp separation of mind and matter, they reappeared in a Platonic form. In G. W. *Leibniz they received a new emphasis through his belief that the human soul was the primary monad in man. The famous onslaught on the traditional arguments made by I. *Kant rested on his view of the limits of metaphysics. As the structure of the soul was outside the range of possible experience, it was beyond the competence of the 'theoretical reason' to establish its immortality or the contrary. Nevertheless Kant, who had no doubt about the fact of the future life, maintained that the soul's immortality could be established on the ground of moral experience, i.e. through the 'practical reason'. The abiding character of the moral law and the manifest injustices in this present life were a sure index that there was a purer and fuller life in which these injustices would be remedied. Since Kant's time philosophers have increasingly stressed the moral aspects of the problem of eternal life, and it has been esp. on these lines that immortality has been defended by such thinkers as W. R. Sorley, A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, and C. C. J. *Webb. See also CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY; RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD.

D. R. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (1964), pp. 353–90. F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life: A Study of its Implications and Applications (1912); A. S. Pringle-Pattison, The Idea of Immortality (1922); J. *Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934); A. E. *Taylor, The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938); F. Cumont, Lux Perpetua (Paris, 1949), passim; R. Aldwickle, Death in the Secular City: A Study in the Notion of Life after Death in Contemporary Theology and Philosophy (1972); H. D. Lewis, The Self and Immortality (1973); J. Hick, Death and Eternal Life (1976); H. *Küng, Ewiges Leben? (Munich, 1982; Eng. tr., 1984); S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Human Immortality and the Redemption of Death (1990). H. Grass in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), cols. 1174–8, s.v. 'Unsterblichkeit'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1601–14, s.v., with bibl.

Impanation. A term applied to certain doctrines of the *Eucharist. The first known occurrence of the word is in Guitmund of Aversa (d. *c.*1090), who says that while the followers of *Berengar all hold that in the Eucharist the Bread and the Wine are not essentially changed, some, poss. incl. Berengar himself, think that the Body and Blood of the Lord are 'truly present, but hidden, in such a way that they can in a certain manner be received, that is to say, that they are impanated' (revera sed latenter contineri, et ut sumi possint quodammodo, ut ita dixerim, impanari, J. P. *Migne, PL 149. 1430 D). The reason why this word was used is indicated by a passage in Alger of Liège (d. *c.*1131) where certain unnamed heretics are stated to assert that 'Christ is in person impanated in the bread just as God was in person incarnate in human flesh' (ita personaliter in pane impanatum Christum, sicut in carne humana personaliter incarnatum Deum, id., PL 180. 754 B). In the later Middle Ages, and esp. during and after the Reformation, the term was applied to various Eucharistic doctrines which endeavoured to safeguard a belief in the *Real Presence while denying the destruction of the substance of the natural elements.

impassibility of God. There are three respects in which orthodox theology has traditionally denied God's subjection to 'passibility', namely (1) external passibility or the capacity to be acted upon from without, (2) internal passibility or the capacity for changing the emotions from within, and (3) sensational passibility or the liability to feelings of pleasure and pain caused by the action of another being. The doctrine was a regular tenet of philosophical theology among the Greeks, and its foundation in Christian sources is probably due to direct Greek influences. The human and Divine natures of Christ were often distinguished (e.g. at *Chalcedon, 451) as passible and impassible. On the other hand, Hebrew religion freely ascribed emotions to God (e.g. Hosea 11: 8).

In Christianity there is an acute tension between the Greek-philosophical and the Hebrew conceptions. On the one side there is the immutability, perfection, and all-sufficiency of God which would seem to exclude all passion, and this has been the basis of the traditional emphasis among theologians. But on the other side there is the central Christian conviction that God in His essence is love, that His nature is revealed in the Incarnate Christ and not least in His Passion, and that He 'sympathizes' with His creatures. Recognition of this second aspect has led some modern theologians to doubt whether it is legitimate to speak unreservedly of God's impassibility. Among the earliest writers to challenge the traditional view was James Hinton (The Mystery of Pain, 1866). In the 20th cent. Divine impassibility has been challenged by philosophers as incoherent, by *Process Theologians as a relic of an outmoded metaphysics, and by many other theologians as a blasphemous irrelevance in the light of the enormity of modern suffering, esp. under totalitarian regimes (e.g. J. *Moltmann and E. Jüngel). Nevertheless the traditional view has had its staunch defenders, e.g. F. *von Hügel (on the ground that God is 'Unmixed Joy, Entire Delectation'), J. K. Mozley, and E. L. Mascall.

F. von Hügel, Essays and Addresses, 2nd ser. (1926), ch. 7; J. K. Mozley, The Impassibility of God (1926); J. Moltmann, Der gekreuzigte Gott (1972; Eng. tr., 1974), passim; E. Jüngel, Gott als Geheimnis der Welt (Tübingen, 1977; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids, Mich., and Edinburgh, 1983), passim; E. L. Mascall, Whatever Happened to the Human Mind? Essays in Christian Orthodoxy (1980), pp. 64–96. R. E. Creel, Divine Impassibility: An Essay in Philosophical Theology (Cambridge, 1986). P. S. Fiddes, The Creative Suffering of God (Oxford, 1988).

impediment. In canon law, an obstacle, such as *consanguinity or *clandestinity, standing in the way of a properly constituted marriage. In RC canon law until 1983 impediments were either 'impedient' or 'diriment'. The former character, which prohibited a marriage but did not invalidate it, if contracted despite the impediment, no longer exists as such. A diriment impediment renders such a marriage null and void. Such impediments may be either 'irremovable' (e.g. close blood-relationship or the insanity of either party at the time of marriage) or 'removable' by *dispensation (e.g. the marriage of a RC to an unbaptized person). When a diriment impediment is removed by a post factum dispensation, the marriage is normally validated only from the moment when valid consent is exchanged. Canon law (but not English statutory law), however, provides for retrospective validation by the process termed sanatio in radice*. See also DIRIMENT IMPEDIMENT.

imposition of hands. See HANDS, IMPOSITION OF.

imprecatory Psalms. A term apparently first used by W. Robertson *Smith (1881) for the Psalms which, in whole or in part, invoke the Divine vengeance (e.g. Pss. 58, 68: 21–3, 69: 23–9, 109: 5–19, 137: 7–9). The proposed revision of the BCP in 1928 provided for the omission from public recitation of such portions of the Psalter as were considered incompatible with the spirit of Christianity. In some modern Anglican Prayer Books such passages are printed in brackets and are commonly omitted.

imprimatur (Lat., 'let it be printed'). The certification that a book has been passed for publication by the appropriate authority.

(1) In England the origin of the licensing laws lies in the ordinances issued by the Star Chamber in 1586 and 1637; the latter provided an elaborate system of licensing which was in substance enacted after the Restoration. Acc. to the Licensing of the Press Act 1662 prohibiting the printing or importing of books contrary to the Christian faith or the doctrine and discipline of the C of E, or tending to the scandal of the government, all books were to be entered at the Stationers' Hall and licensed according to their subject by the Lord Chancellor, the Earl Marshal, one of the principal Secretaries of State, or the Abp. of Canterbury or the Bp. of London. Such licence was known as the imprimatur. The Act remained in force until 1679, was renewed in 1685 and expired in 1695.

(2) In the RC Church there is complex legislation relating to the means of public communication, and esp. the publication of books (CIC (1983), cans. 822–32). The approval of the local *Ordinary is needed before publication of certain kinds of books and other writings to certify that they are free from doctrinal or moral error. The Ordinary may appoint 'censors'. If the censor's verdict is favourable, the Ordinary may then give his permission for the work to be published, adding his own name and the place and date of permission. Canon law requires that the imprimatur be printed in the published book. Sometimes the name of the censor is given, with the words nihil obstat ('nothing prohibits'). In addition to this form of censorship, all members of religious orders or congregations (now technically known as *Institutes of Consecrated Life) require the permission of their major superiors, in accordance with their constitutions, to publish works on religion or morals. This permission can be attested by the words imprimi potest ('it can be printed').

Improperia. See REPROACHES.

impropriation. The assignment or annexation of an ecclesiastical benefice, for the use of its property, into the hands of a lay proprietor or corporation. It has come to be distinguished from '*appropriation', which was used of benefices assigned to a religious house, Dean and Chapter, or other spiritual body. Many monastic benefices were impropriated by '*lay rectors' at the *Dissolution, and where the monastery was exempt from the requirement of endowing a *vicar (see APPROPRIATION), the lay rectors inherited this privilege. They would therefore appoint a *perpetual curate to discharge the spiritual duties of their benefices.

imputation (from Lat. imputare, Gk. λογίζεσθαι). A central aspect of classical *Protestant theologies of *justification, according to which the righteousness of Christ is imputed or reckoned to the believer, despite being extrinsic to his person, in order that he may be justified on its basis. This is contrasted with the teaching of the Council of *Trent, that the believer is justified on the basis of an imparted or infused righteousness, intrinsic to his person. Acc. to classical Protestant theology, the justification of the believer on account of the 'alien righteousness of Christ' is followed immediately by a process of renewal and growth in personal righteousness. Support for this doctrine is found in certain passages of St *Paul (notably Rom. 4; Gal. 3: 21 f).

For the concept in Anglican theology, see C. F. Allison, The Rise of Moralism: The Proclamation of the Gospel from Hooker to Baxter (1966), passim.

In Coena Domini (Lat., 'On the Lord's Supper'). A series of excommunications of specified offenders against faith and morals which was issued regularly in the form of a Papal bull at Rome. In later times publication was confined to *Maundy Thursday (hence its name), but originally it was read also on *Ascension Day and the feast of the Chair of St Peter (18 Jan.); and from the 15th cent. onwards it was also read outside Rome. The practice, which dates from at least the time of *Honorius III (1216–27), was constantly attacked by the civil authorities, who objected to its exalted claims for the Papacy, and in 1522 M. *Luther wrote a tirade against it (Die Bulle vom Abendfressen des allerheiligsten Herrn). The issue of the bull was suspended by *Clement XIV in 1773 and the practice finally abrogated by Pius IX's bull 'Apostolicae Sedis' (12 Oct. 1869), which incorporated many of its censures. Some of these found their way into the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici and, with further modifications, are in that of 1983.

The text of the bull issued by Pope Urban VIII 'in die Coenae Domini' 1627, after which its form remained practically unchanged until its abrogation, is pr. in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 13 (Turin, 1868), pp. 530–7; principal clauses repr. in Mirbt, pp. 369–71 (no. 513), with refs. to other lit. The text of 'Apostolicae Sedis' is pr. in the ASS, 5 (1869), pp. 287–312, with notes and refs. J. F. Le Bret, Pragmatische Geschichte der soberufenen Bulla Coena Domini (Ulm, 1769). E. Göller, Die päpstliche Pönitentiarie von ihrem Ursprung bis zu ihrer Umgestaltung unter Pius V, 1 (pt. 1; Bibliothek des Kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 3; 1907), pp. 242–76, and 2 (pt. 1; ibid. 7; 1911), pp. 190–208. K. Pfaff, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Abendmahlsbulle vom 16. bis 18. Jahrhundert', RQ 38 (1930), pp. 23–76. J. Prior in CE 7 (1910), pp. 717 f., s.v.; F. C. Boúúaert in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 1132–6, s.v. 'Bulle In Coena Domini'.

in commendam. See COMMENDAM.

In Hoc Signo Vinces (Lat., 'by this sign thou shalt conquer'). Acc. to tradition, the words which the Emp. *Constantine saw inscribed across the sun (312). They are first mentioned in *Eusebius' Life of Constantine (1. 28), where they have the form 'by this, conquer' (τούτῳ νίκα).

incardination (Lat. cardo, 'hinge'; hence incardinare, 'to hang on a hinge'). In W. canon law, the permanent enlistment of a cleric under the jurisdiction of a new ordinary. From early times (cf. *Chalcedon, can. 6), all ordinands were ordered to be subject to an ecclesiastical superior; and the primitive rule (*Ap. Can. 15; *Nicaea, can. 16; *Antioch, can. 3; Chalcedon, can. 5) bound a cleric for life to the diocese in which he had been ordained. The process of incardination, with its correlative, *excardination (q.v.), was designed to avoid the inconveniences of the latter rule, while upholding its general principle. In the RC Church such transfers are permitted only for 'just causes' and always subject to the strict regulations of canon law. A cleric who has moved into another diocese, with due leave, is automatically incardinated into it if, after five years, he notifies its diocesan *bishop and his own that such is his desire and neither of them objects. The main regulations about incardination and excardination are set out in CIC (1983), cans. 265–72.

J. T. McBride, Incardination and Excardination of Seculars: An Historical Synopsis and Commentary (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, 145; 1941). R. Naz in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1293–6, s.v.

Incarnation. The Christian doctrine of the Incarnation affirms that the eternal Son of God took flesh from His human mother and that the historical Christ is at once both fully God and fully man. It is opposed to all theories of a mere theophany or transitory appearance of God in human form, frequently met with in other religions. By contrast, it asserts an abiding union in the Person of Christ of Godhead and manhood without the integrity or permanence of either being impaired. It also assigns the beginnings of this union to a definite and known date in human history.

The doctrine, which took classical shape under the influence of the controversies of the 4th–5th cents. (for history, see CHRISTOLOGY), was formally defined at the Council of *Chalcedon of 451 (q.v.). It was largely moulded by the diversity of traditions in the schools of *Antioch and *Alexandria, the one stressing the human aspects of the incarnate Christ, the other His Divinity. By its emphasis on the complete manhood of the incarnate Christ, the Antiochene theology sometimes tended to approximate Incarnation to inspiration. In Alexandrian circles, on the other hand, insistence on the full continuity between the Divinity of Christ and the Second Person of the Trinity could lead in careless hands to a view of the Incarnation approximating to a theophany. It was these opposite tendencies which the Chalcedonian formula sought to hold in proper balance.

Yet the Definition was scarcely a solution; it only determined the limits to orthodoxy. Within these limits further refinements were added in the later patristic and medieval periods. Orthodox theologians held that the duality of natures entailed a duality of wills. They also emphasized that the Incarnation was an act of the whole Godhead, not of one Person acting independently. In the Middle Ages a much disputed (but never formally settled) question was whether the Incarnation would have taken place had the *Fall not occurred. While *Thomist theologians identified themselves with the belief that it was contingent on *Adam's transgression, *Scotists maintained the opposing doctrine. But in substance the Chalcedonian teaching was generally accepted by Christian theologians of all schools down to modern times. At the *Reformation both M. *Luther and J. *Calvin laid stress on the wonder of the Incarnation, God present in the child in the manger, God the Word incarnate in the teaching and actions of Jesus Christ. Reflection on the Incarnation has provided a dogmatic basis for the theology of *grace and of the *sacraments. Incarnation leads also to modern reflection on the theology of history, the involvement of God in contingency, *kenosis, and vulnerability.

The doctrine of the Incarnation raises questions of the relation of time and eternity, of finitude and infinity. Post-Kantian Idealists saw in it the religious expression of the principle of immanence, i.e. the essential relatedness of man and God; and with this immanental reinterpretation the liberalizing movement in theology of the later 19th and early 20th cent. was in sympathy (Foundations). Among the more orthodox, the same tendency was reflected in a theological emphasis on the significance of culture and civilization in the purposes of God (*Christian Socialism). In both these schools stress was laid on the Incarnation rather than on the Atonement as the fundamental Christian verity (Lux Mundi). Other theologians have sought to interpret the Incarnation in terms of moral values, and have seen the essence of Christ's Divinity in the complete conformity of His human will with that of God. Traditional theology has continued to emphasize the essential distinctness of the Lord's Divine and human natures, while some liberal theologians have questioned the appropriateness of the concept of Incarnation for expressing the true salvific significance of Jesus.

Useful collection of patristic passages ed. F. Diekamp, Doctrina Patrum de Incarnatione Verbi: Ein griechisches Florilegium aus der Wende des siebenten und achten Jahrhunderts (Münster, 1907). In addition to the items on the history and development of the doctrine cited under CHRISTOLOGY, the following works may be mentioned: H. P. *Liddon, The Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (*Bampton Lectures for 1866; 1867); A. B. *Bruce, The Humiliation of Christ (Cunningham Lectures for 1875; 1876); Lux Mundi, ed. C. *Gore (1889); C. Gore, The Incarnation of the Son of God (Bampton Lectures for 1891; 1891); A. M. *Fairbairn, The Place of Christ in Modern Theology (1893); C. Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895); P. T. *Forsyth, The Person and Place of Jesus Christ (1909); W. *Sanday, Christologies, Ancient and Modern (1910); H. R. *Mackintosh, The Doctrine of the Person of Jesus Christ (1912); J. K. Mozley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1936); W. R. Matthews, The Problem of Christ in the Twentieth Century: An Essay on the Incarnation (Maurice Lectures, 1949; 1950); G. S. Hendry, The Gospel of the Incarnation (Philadelphia, 1958; London, 1959); W. N. Pittenger, The Word Incarnate: A Study of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ (1959); T. F. Torrance, Space, Time and Incarnation (1969); W. [J.] Kasper, Jesus der Christus (Mainz, 1974; Eng. tr., 1976). J. [H.] Hick (ed.), The Myth of God Incarnate (1977); D. Cupitt, The Debate about Christ (1979); R. [C.] Morgan (ed.), The Religion of the Incarnation: Anglican Essays in Commemoration of Lux Mundi (Bristol, 1989). A. Michel in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1445–539, s.v. For studies on the historical Christ, see under JESUS CHRIST.

incense. Incense is used in many religious rites, the smoke being considered symbolical of prayer. It was used in the worship of the Jewish *Temple, at least in later times, while Rev. 8: 3–5 has been held to imply that it was used in sub-Apostolic Christian worship. There is, however, no clear evidence of its Christian use until the last quarter of the 4th cent.; *Egeria mentions its use in *Jerusalem and John *Chrysostom at *Antioch. Censers or *thuribles may at first have been fixed, both in the E. and W., and the portable thurible have originated, at least in the W., in imitation of that carried before Roman magistrates. The incensing of the altar, church, people, etc., is first recorded in the late 5th cent. in the E. (by Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite) and in the W. in the 9th cent. (Ordines Romani and *Amalarius of Metz). Archaeological evidence, however, suggests that small portable thuribles were common in both E. and W. from the early 7th cent. In the W. incense was long used only at solemn services, though since 1969 it is more widely permitted, e.g. at any Eucharistic service. In the E. it is employed at all celebrations of the Liturgy, as well as at *Orthros, *Vespers, and most other services.

The use of incense appears occasionally in the C of E between the 16th and 19th cents., but it only became common in the ceremonial revival which followed the *Oxford Movement. It has been argued that it is required by the *Ornaments Rubric, though Abps. F. *Temple and W. D. Maclagan, in the Lambeth Opinion of 1899, gave it as their personal belief that it was not allowed.

The standard work on the subject is E. G. C. F. Atchley, A History of the Use of Incense in Divine Worship (*Alcuin Club Collections, 13; 1909). The Case for Incense submitted to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury on behalf of the Rev. H. Westall on Monday, May 8, 1899, together with a legal argument and Appendices of the Experts (London, 1899; incl. appendices by W. H. *Frere, W. J. Birkbeck, H. R. Percival, D. *Stone, E. Geldart, T. A. *Lacey, and W. H. St J. Hope). On the early Christian evidence, H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), pp. 86–93; Eng. tr. (Leiden, 1979), pp. 71–76. K. Nielsen, Incense in Ancient Israel (Suppl. to Vetus Testamentum, 38; 1986). E. Fehrenbach in DACL 5 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 2–21, s.v. 'Encens'; M. F. Bond in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 302–4, s.v.; E. Pax in L.Th.K. 10 (1965), cols. 990–2, s.v. 'Weihrauch'.

Incorporated Church Building Society. See CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY.

incubation. The term is used of the practice of sleeping in churches or their precincts in expectation of visions, revelations, and healing from disease. Of pagan origin, the custom was introduced into Christianity after the fall of paganism. Certain saints at definite places were believed in particular to perform the healing miracles formerly attributed to Asclepius, notably St *Michael in the church of Anaplous near *Constantinople, Sts *Cosmas and Damian (who had been physicians in their lifetime) also at Constantinople, St *Andrew at Patras, and the BVM at Athens and in *Notre-Dame de Paris. The practice and the beliefs associated with it are not wholly extinct.

L. Deubner, De Incubatione (Teubner, 1900). M. Hamilton, Incubation, or the Cure of Disease in Pagan Temples and Christian Churches (St Andrews, 1906). R. Herzog, Die Wunderheilungen von Epidauros (Philologus, Supplementband 22, Heft 3; 1931). J. Gessler, 'Notes sur l'incubation et ses survivances', Le Muséon, 59 (1946), pp. 661–70; D. Mallardo, 'L'Incubazione nella Cristianità Medievale Napoletana', Anal. Boll. 67 (1949), pp. 465–98. G. G. Dawson, Healing Pagan and Christian (1935). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 511–17, s.v.; C. Zintzen in Der Kleine Pauly, 5 (1975), cols. 583 f., s.v. 'Tempelschlaf'.

incumbent. In the C of E the holder of a parochial charge. An incumbent may therefore be a *rector, a *vicar, or a *curate-in-charge. In Scotland the word is used only of those holding ecclesiastical office in the Episcopal Church. The term, which in this sense is peculiar to English, is apparently derived from the medieval Latin incumbere in the sense of obtaining possession (obtinere, possidere) of a benefice.

incunabula (Lat. incunabula, 'swaddling-clothes', hence 'cradle'). Books produced in the first stages of the art of printing, and esp. those printed before 1501, of which a very large proportion was religious. The earliest known book printed with movable type is the *Mazarin Bible (q.v.). The first known printed book with a date is the Mainz Psalter of 1457.

Gesamtkatalog ed. Kommission für den Gesamtkatalog der Wiegendrucke (Leipzig, 1925 ff.). K. Haebler, Handbuch der Inkunabelkunde (ibid., 1925; Eng. tr., New York, 1933). F. Geldner, Inkunabelkunde (Wiesbaden, 1978). S. Corsten and R. W. Fuchs (eds.), Der Buchdruck im 15. Jahrhundert: Eine Bibliographie (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1988–93).

Independents. Another name for the *Congregationalists (q.v.), as upholders of the independence or autonomy of each local congregation. It was in very general use in Britain (but not in the USA, where it was much disliked) down to the end of the 18th century.

Index, Congregation of the. See following entry.

Index Librorum Prohibitorum (Lat., 'List of prohibited books'), in short, just 'the Index', the official list of books issued by the RC Church which its members were forbidden, except in special circumstances, to read or possess. The first Index was issued by the Congregation of the *Inquisition under *Paul IV in 1557. In 1571 *Pius V established a special 'Congregation of the Index' to be in charge of the list and revise it as needed; and this Congregation survived until 1917, when *Benedict XV transferred its duties to the *Holy Office. In modern times the control of literature likely to be contrary to faith or morals rested much more than formerly with the diocesan bishops, whose duties were laid down by Leo XIII in 'Officiorum ac Munerum' (25 Jan. 1897), whence they passed into the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 1384–405). Hence the Index came to fill a less prominent place than formerly in the life of the RC Church and in fact many widely circulating books contrary to faith or morals never found their way to it. Besides the Index proper, the Holy Office also issued an 'Index Expurgatorius' of books which might be freely read after certain passages had been deleted from them. In 1966 the Index ceased to have the force of ecclesiastical law, with attached censures, but at the same time the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith stated that it retains its moral force. See also IMPRIMATUR.

J. Hilgers, SJ, Der Index der verbotenen Bücher: In seiner neuen Fassung dargelegt und rechtlich-historisch gewürdigt (1904); id., Die Bücherverbote in Papstbriefen: Kanonistisch-bibliographische Studie (1907). F. H. *Reusch, Der Index der verbotenen Bücher (2 vols., Bonn, 1883–5); id., Die Indices Librorum Prohibitorum des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts (Tübingen, 1886). A. Boudinhon, La Nouvelle Législation de l'Index: Texte et commentaire de la constitution Officiorum ac Munerum du 25 janvier 1897 [1899]. In English, there is much information on the Index in P. F. Grendler, The Roman Inquisition and the Venetian Press, 1540–1605 (Princeton, NJ, 1977). J. Hilgers in CE 7 (1910), pp. 721 f., s.v.; A. Thouvenin in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1570–80, s.v.; A. de Iorio in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1825–9, s.v. 'Indice dei libri proibiti'; H. Wagnon and R. Naz in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1318–30, s.v.

India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh, Christianity in. There are some ambiguous references to Christianity in India (and conceivably Pakistan) in the 4th cent., but the earliest clear testimony is the assertion of *Cosmas Indicopleustes that there were Christians, believers and clergy, in India before 550. All sections of the Thomas Christians (see MALABAR CHRISTIANS) believe that their Church was founded by St *Thomas the Apostle, but this tradition can be regarded as no more than possible. The arrival of the Portuguese at the end of the 15th cent. led to the fragmentation of this Church. Originally it had belonged to the *Church of the East, but in 1599 one large section came under the jurisdiction of Rome. In the second half of the 17th cent. a group became attached to the *Syrian Orthodox patriarchate. In the 19th cent. a small group became Anglican; a larger group formed the 'Mar Thoma' Church. For centuries confined to their small territory in SW India, the 'Syrian' community has in modern times spread extensively in the East and developed strong missionary activity. In India they now number about 1.5 million.

Western Christianity came to India with the ships of Vasco da Gama in 1498. In their small territories of Goa, Cochin, etc., the Portuguese exercised strong pressure, though not actual coercion, on the inhabitants to become Christian, but they made no extensive attempts to convert the inhabitants of the country as a whole. Such general missionary activity was undertaken by the *Jesuits, who arrived in 1542. St *Francis Xavier organized the Church of the Fisher caste on the Coromandel coast. For many years a mission was maintained at the court of the Great Mogul at Lahore. Robert *de Nobili, who reached Madura, adopted the manner of life of a Hindu guru and thereby won a number of high-caste converts, though his methods were much criticized.

Under the padroado (or royal patronage) grants of the Pope, Portugal claimed the right to nominate all bishops and missionaries in the East. Goa, which became an archbishopric in 1557, was the centre of these missionary operations, and its Abp. still retains the honorary title of Patriarch of the East Indies and Primate of the East. By the 17th cent., however, it was clear that Portugal could not fulfil all these obligations and in 1637 the *Propaganda in Rome consecrated a Brahman from Goa as *Vicar Apostolic for the non-Portuguese regions of India. Though the policy of choosing Indians for the office lapsed, Vicars Apostolic were appointed in increasing numbers, esp. after the suppression of the Jesuits in 1773. Portuguese hostility continued, and in the 19th cent. led to the Goa Schism, which lasted into the 20th cent. In 1886 *Leo XIII created a regular hierarchy for India and the future Pakistan and in 1896 he appointed bishops for the *Uniat section of the Thomas Christians.

From 1600 the English and later the Dutch were present in the Indian subcontinent. The greater part of their Church work consisted in the spiritual care of their own people through chaplains, but there are records of missionary work and a few conversions. Protestant missionary work began seriously in 1706, when King Frederick IV of Denmark founded a mission to work in his territory of Tranquebar in S. India. The pioneer, Bartholomäus Ziegenbalg (1683–1719), translated the NT and parts of the OT into Tamil. As the work spread beyond the limits of the Danish possession, the *SPCK took over the support of the missionaries, who served the Society in spite of the fact that they had not received Anglican ordination. The greatest of these *Lutheran missionaries, Christian Friedrich Schwartz (1726–98), who worked continuously in India from 1750 onwards, also served as a chaplain to the East India Company, and, at a time of hostility towards the missionaries, won the support of both the Indians and the British rulers. Another was John Zachary Kiernander (1714–98), who was invited to go to Calcutta by Lord Clive.

In 1793 the first English missionary, a *Baptist, W. *Carey, landed in Bengal. At that time the East India Company was opposed to missionary activity on the ground that it would influence opinion against Europeans. Carey, however, secured the protection of the Danish Crown and established a mission in the Danish territory of Serampore. He and his assistants translated the NT into Bengali and within 30 years had printed parts of the Bible in 37 Indian languages. At the revision of the East India Company's charter in 1813, *Evangelical opinion secured the insertion of provisions for a bishopric of Calcutta as well as freedom for missionary enterprise. T. F. *Middleton became the first bishop (1814–22); he had, however, clear jurisdiction only over chaplains and European congregations and was doubtful whether he had authority to ordain Indians to the ministry of the C of E. During his episcopate, in 1820, Bishop's College, Calcutta, was opened for the training of ordinands in India, but the work lapsed until it was resumed in 1917. R. *Heber, the second bishop (1823–6), licensed the missionaries, including some Lutherans supported by the SPCK, but laid down that for the future the missions should be solely Anglican. He also (re-)ordained a few Lutherans to make them acceptable in the East India Company's churches, including among those whom he (re-)ordained the first Indian Anglican priest (who had previously received Lutheran orders). From about this time the *CMS began to send missionaries, and Anglican clergy from England came in increasing numbers. Bishoprics were created for Madras (1835) and Bombay (1837), and the Bp. of Calcutta was given the title of Metropolitan, though not Archbishop. Under D. *Wilson (Bp. of Calcutta 1835–58), the first Metropolitan, the provision of churches and chaplains for stations, regiments, and schools was much improved.

The removal of the restrictions on missionary enterprise when the East India Company's Charter was renewed in 1813 and 1834 was followed by a great increase in the number of non-British societies working in its territories. By the end of the 19th cent. American missionaries outnumbered British, and there were strong contingents from Switzerland, Germany, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. In the same period the RC Church there became internationalized, receiving missionaries from the Netherlands, followed by Germans, Americans, and others. The British Government maintained an attitude of neutrality towards all religions that did not offend the law, though it did in 1829 abolish the Hindu custom of suttee (the burning of a widow on her husband's pyre), and it subsidized missionary schools prepared to accept a measure of government control. In the second half of the 19th cent. strenuous efforts were made to evangelize the aboriginal peoples, including the 'untouchables'. The Gossner Lutheran Church met with success among the Oraons and other peoples of Chota Nagpur. The Welsh Calvinists converted the Khasis in large numbers, and the Baptists worked among the tribes on the frontiers of Burma. From 1866 onwards there were widespread conversions among the most oppressed and poverty-stricken sections of the community, esp. in the Telugu-speaking areas of the Madras Presidency.

During the 19th cent. a native Indian village ministry was formed through the ordination of those trained in their own language and with no knowledge of English. The first ordination of such a candidate took place in 1850, and gradually the number of Indians ordained came to exceed the number of missionaries. Progress in this matter was slower in the RC Church than among other denominations, the demand for *celibacy posing difficulties. In S. India, Anglican training of candidates for the ministry in English began in 1883, and the United Theological College of Bangalore was founded in 1910. In 1912 the first Indian Anglican bishop in India was consecrated, to be followed by the first RC bishop of the Latin rite in 1923. In 1930 the Anglican Church in India, which had hitherto legally been a part of the C of E, acquired independence as the Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon (Pakistan was added to the title in 1947). This Church, while part of the Anglican Communion, had the right to draw up its own constitution, elect its own bishops, and settle its liturgical principles and practice.

Ecumenical relations developed early in India. Co-operation among non-RC missions began in 1855, and a long series of conferences (notably that of Bangalore in 1879) led to the formation in 1908 of the South India United Church (*Presbyterian and *Congregational), the first trans-confessional union in modern times. Out of this grew the movement which led in 1947 to the formation of the Church of *South India (q.v.), A parallel movement brought into being in 1970 the Churches of *North India and *Pakistan (qq.v.).

When the former British India became independent in 1947, the country was divided into the predominantly Hindu state of India and the mainly Muslim state of Pakistan, of which the eastern part became independent as Bangladesh in 1971. Religious liberty was written into the constitutions of all these states; Christians as well as others may practice and profess their faith. Conversions, however, are discouraged and in India restrictions were soon placed on foreign missionaries. Nevertheless, after Islam Christianity forms the second largest minority religion and the proportion of Christians in the population has remained at about 2.5 per cent. Of these the RC Church claims slightly over half (*c.*14.5 million in 1994), with 18 archdioceses and over a hundred dioceses. Christianity is strongest in the south of India and in the east (where minority tribes have been converted). In all denominations the increase in the proportion of Indians even among the most senior of the clergy accelerated after independence and in 1952 the first Indian was made a cardinal. The development of Christian ashram, both Catholic and Protestant, illustrates the way the Churches have adapted to local traditions. In the latter part of the 20th cent. there has been a shift in the emphasis of missionary work away from education of the upper classes to philanthropic activity among the very poor, exemplified in the dedication of Mother *Teresa and the Missionaries of Charity. In Pakistan there was originally less hostility towards missionaries from countries of the Commonwealth, and in 1950 a RC hierarchy was established. Though religious liberty was preserved when Pakistan became an Islamic republic in 1956, since 1969 the government has exercised increasing control over Christian institutions and the activities of foreign missionaries, and Christians have felt their position to be threatened. While the census figures provide no recent information, in 1972 Christians formed *c.*1.5 per cent of the population and it is unlikely that the proportion has increased. In Bangladesh in the 1980s they formed *c.*0.25 per cent of the population.

Introductory surveys by P. Thomas, Christians and Christianity in India and Pakistan: A General Survey of the Progress of Christianity in India from Apostolic Times to the Present Day (1954) and S. C. Neill, The Story of the Christian Church in India and Pakistan (Grand Rapids, 1970). Major work by id., A History of Christianity in India, 1: The Beginnings to AD 1707 (Cambridge, 1984); 2: 1707–1858 (ibid., 1985: all pub.). History of Christianity in India (6 vols. planned): 1, From the Beginning to the Middle of the Sixteenth Century, by A. M. Mundadan, CMI (Bangalore, 1984); 2, From the Middle of the Sixteenth to the End of the Seventeenth Century, by J. Thekkedeth, SBB (ibid., 1982). J. Rooney, MHM, Shadows in the Dark (A History of Christianity in Pakistan up to the 10th Century) (Pakistan Christian History, Monograph 1; Rawalpindi, 1984); id., The Hesitant Dawn (Christianity in Pakistan 1597–1760) (ibid. 2; 1984). M. F. X. D'Sa, History of the Catholic Church in India (2 vols., Bombay, 1925). E. Maclagan, The Jesuits and the Great Mogul (1932). E. D. Potts, British Baptist Missionaries in India 1793–1837 (Cambridge, 1967). E. Chatterton, A History of the Church of England in India since the Early Days of the East India Company (1924); C. J. Grimes, Towards an Indian Church: The Growth of the Church of India in Constitution and Life (1946); M. E. Gibbs, The Anglican Church in India 1600–1970 (Delhi, 1972). A. Mayhew, Christianity and the Government of India: An Examination of the Christian Forces at Work in the Administration of India and of the Mutual Relations of the British Government and Christian Missions, 1600–1900 (1929). J. C. B. Webster, The Christian Community and Change in Nineteenth Century North India (Delhi, etc., 1976). B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Church of South India: The Movement towards Union, 1900–1947 (1954). A. V. Thomas, Christians in Secular India (Rutherford, NJ, etc.

[1974]). K. N. Sahay, Christianity and Culture Change in India (New Delhi, 1986). Bede Griffiths, Christian Ashram: Essays towards a Hindu-Christian Dialogue (1966); H. Ralston, Christian Ashrams: A New Religious Movement in Contemporary India (Studies in Religion and Society, 20; Lewiston and Queenston [1987]). G. A. Goodie (ed.), Religion in South Asia: Religious Conversion and Revival Movements in South Asia in Medieval and Modern Times (London, 1977), pp. 35–144; 2nd edn. (Monohar, 1991), pp. 39–174. There is also much information in the biographies of bishops and other leaders, and in the history of the various missionary societies. H. Grafe in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 102–16, s.v. 'Indien', with recent statistics. See also bibl. to MALABAR CHRISTIANS and SOUTH INDIA, CHURCH OF.

Indicopleustes. See COSMAS INDICOPLEUSTES.

Indonesia, Christianity in. Christianity was effectively brought to Indonesia through the Portuguese maritime trading empire in the early 16th cent. Its main religious rival was *Islam, which had been expanding through the region from Sumatra since the 13th cent. Apart from the *Church of the East (which may have established a small community in the 7th cent. and was certainly represented later), and visits by *Franciscans travelling to China in the 14th cent., the first Christian missionaries were Franciscans from *Portugal who established themselves in the Moluccas in 1534. They were followed by *Dominicans and *Jesuits; St *Francis Xavier spent 14 months in the region (1546–7). After the Dutch displaced the Portuguese in the Indonesian archipelago in the early 17th cent., the RC Church dwindled and Protestantism was introduced with the support of the Dutch East India Company. For the next 200 years the Dutch Reformed Church was the only officially recognized Church within the Company's sphere of influence. The Company brought clergy from the *Netherlands for its employees and some Indonesians were baptized. During the 19th and early 20th cents, under Dutch colonial rule, the extension of Christianity was largely undertaken by Dutch and German missionary societies. These included the Netherlands Missionary Society, the Netherlands Missionary Union, the Utrecht Missionary Union, the *Mennonites, the Rhenish Missionary Society, and the Basel Mission. RC missionary work was resumed in 1808 and an apostolic *vicariate was founded at Batavia in 1841. Both Protestant and RC missions received financial aid from the Dutch colonial government.

To avoid religious conflict, it was Dutch policy to assign different missionary bodies to separate areas. Christianity made little headway on the island of Java, where the majority of the population were Muslims, but in non-Muslim regions it was more successful. As a result of the work of the Rhenish Mission and the leadership of L. I. Nommensen (1834–1918), a large Protestant Church developed from the late 19th cent. among the Batak people of north Sumatra. Protestants became numerous also in Sulawesi (Celebes) and the Moluccas. Hendrik Kraemer (1888–1965), a notable missionary scholar, worked in Indonesia from 1922 to 1937, when he returned to *Leiden as Professor of the Phenomenology of Religion. In Indonesia he was invited to write his major work, The Christian Message in a non-Christian World (1938) for the *Tambaram Conference. In 1950 the Council (later Communion) of Churches in Indonesia was formed. The RC missions expanded greatly in the 20th cent., esp. in the Lesser Sunda Islands. The first indigenous RC bishop was appointed in 1940 and an Indonesian hierarchy was established in 1961.

Dutch rule and European missionary activity were disrupted by Japanese occupation (1942–5) during the Second World War. In 1949 the new nation of Indonesia came into existence. One of the principles of the Indonesian state is belief in God, and Protestantism and RCism are officially recognized religions. Christians, who numbered 16 million in 1985, form 10 per cent of the population of Indonesia. About a quarter of the Christians are RC; the largest Protestant Churches are the Batak Protestant Christian Church, the Evangelical Christian Church in Minahasa, the Protestant Church in the Moluccas, and the Evangelical Christian Church in Timor.

F. L. Cooley, Indonesia: Church & Society (New York [1968]); id., The Growing Seed: The Christian Church in Indonesia (Jakarta, 1981). B. E. Colless, 'The Traders of the Pearl. The Mercantile and Missionary Activities of Persian and Armenian Christians in South-East Asia. 3. The Malay Archipelago', Abr-Nahrain, 11 (1971), pp. 1–21. M. P. M. Muskens, Partner in Nation Building: The Catholic Church in Indonesia (Aachen, 1979). T. Müller-Krüger, Der Protestantismus in Indonesien: Geschichte und Gestalt (Die Kirchen des Welt, Reihe B, Band 5; Stuttgart, 1968). H. Kraemer, From Missionfield to Independent Church: Report on a Decisive Decade in the Growth of Indigenous Churches in Indonesia (London, 1958). P. van Akkeren, Sri and Christ: A Study of the Indigenous Church in East Java (World Studies of Churches in Mission, 1970). P. B. Pedersen, Batak Blood and Protestant Soul: The Development of National Batak Churches in North Sumatra (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1970]); D. G. McKenzie, The Mango Tree Church: The Story of the Protestant Christian Church in Bali (Brisbane, 1988). R. A. F. P. Webb, Palms and the Cross: Socio-economic Development in Nusatenggara 1930–1975 (Townsville, Australia, 1986).

induction (in logic). The process of reasoning whereby a general law or principle is reached from the observance of particular instances. The word, which in its Lat. form (inductio) occurs in Cicero, is a rendering of *Aristotle's ἐπαγωγή. The opposite process is termed '*deduction'.

induction (to a benefice). The term used to denote the final stage, after nomination and *institution, in the appointment of a new *incumbent. The effect is to place the priest in legal possession of the temporalities of the *benefice, and in control of his parish. The bishop after institution issues a mandate to the *archdeacon or other person having the power to induct, who lays the hand of the person to be inducted on the key of the church door and causes him to toll the bell. The induction is also commonly accompanied by other ceremonial acts.

Indulgence, Declarations of. See DECLARATIONS OF INDULGENCE.

indulgences. The remission by the Church of the temporal penalty due to forgiven sin, in virtue of the merits of Christ and the saints. In the RC Church the granting of indulgences is now ordinarily confined to the Pope. The practice presupposes (1) a retributive basis for Divine justice, i.e. that sin must have a penalty either on earth or in purgatory, even after the sinner has been reconciled with God by penitence and absolution; (2) the doctrine of the *Communion of Saints in the Body of Christ and the belief that through that communion all Christians can share both in the infinite merits of Christ's saving work and in the merits of the BVM and the saints (collectively referred to as the 'treasury of merits'); (3) the belief that the Church, by her power of jurisdiction, has the right of administering the benefit of these merits in consideration of prayers or other pious works undertaken by the faithful.

In the early Church, esp. from the 3rd cent., the intercession of confessors and those awaiting martyrdom was allowed by the ecclesiastical authorities to shorten the canonical discipline of those under penance; with the development of the doctrine of purgatory in the W., canonical penance came to be considered as a substitute for temporal punishment in purgatory, and from there the transition was easy to the belief that the prayers and merits of the saints availed to shorten such punishment itself, even for sins which did not require canonical penance. Later, with the relaxation of the penitential discipline, alternative works were permitted instead of the prescribed penances, and the merits of Christ and the saints applied to make up the deficiency. For general indulgences, there is no certain evidence datable before the 11th cent. In the 12th cent., however, the practice of granting indulgences became more common. *Plenary indulgences were offered to those who took part in the *Crusades, and bishops were authorized to give limited indulgences at the dedication of churches and their anniversaries, one of the most famous of these being the *Portiuncula Indulgence granted to St *Francis in 1221. The later Middle Ages saw the growth of considerable abuses, such as the unrestricted sale of indulgences by professional 'pardoners', whose false doctrine and scandalous conduct were an immediate occasion of the Reformation, and whose activities were finally prohibited by *Pius V in 1567.

Until recent times RC practice was to encourage piety and good works among the faithful by very liberal grants of indulgences, generally by the Pope himself, but also, within certain limits, by metropolitans and bishops. In response to suggestions made at the Second *Vatican Council, however, Pope *Paul VI in the constitution 'Indulgentiarum doctrina' (1 Jan. 1967) substantially revised the practical application of the traditional doctrine in order to make it clear that the Church's object was not merely to help the faithful to make due satisfaction for their sins, but chiefly to induce them to a greater fervour of charity. Under the new discipline, the number of plenary indulgences was greatly reduced, and it was emphasized that no plenary indulgence could be gained without a total conversion of heart from all sin. Partial indulgences are no longer reckoned in days and years; they simply supplement, and to the same degree, the remission which the person performing the indulgenced action has already gained by the charity and contrition with which he does it. At the same time, the former distinction between 'personal', 'real' and 'local' indulgences was abolished, in order to indicate that it is the personal actions of the faithful that are indulgenced, even when they are connected with some sacred office or place. Current RC canon law is to be found in CIC (1983), cans. 992–7. As well as the Pope, cardinals, patriarchs, metropolitans, and bishops can grant indulgences.

Indulgences can also be gained by the living for the souls in purgatory, but only per modum suffragii, i.e. by an act of intercession, since the Church on earth has no jurisdiction beyond the grave. See also MERIT; PLENARY INDULGENCE; and RACCOLTA.

Enchiridion Indulgentiarum: Normae et Concessiones (Rome, 1968; 3rd edn., 1986). E. Amort, De Origine, Progressu, Valore ac Fructu Indulgentiarum (2 pts., Augsburg, 1735; 2nd edn. with additions, Venice, 1738). F. Beringer, SJ, Die Ablässe, ihr Wesen und Gebrauch (1860; ed. P. A. Steiner, SJ, 2 vols., 1921–30; Fr. tr., 1890). A. H. M. Lépicier, Indulgences: Their Origin, Nature and Development (1895; rev. edn., 1928). H. C. Lea, A History of Auricular Confession and Indulgences in the Latin Church, 3 (Philadelphia, 1896; polemical and hostile). J. Hilgers, SJ, Die katholische Lehre von den Ablässen und deren geschichtliche Entwicklung (1914). N. Paulus, Geschichte des Ablasses im Mittelalter, vom Ursprunge bis zur Mitte des 14. Jahrhunderts (3 vols., 1922–3). B. Poschmann, Der Ablass im Lichte der Bussegeschichte (1948). J. E. Campbell, Indulgences: The Ordinary Power of Prelates Inferior to the Pope to Grant Indulgences. An Historical Synopsis and a Canonical Commentary (Ottawa thesis; Ottawa, 1953). K. *Rahner, SJ, 'Bemerkungen zur Theologie des Ablasses', Schriften der Theologie, 2 (1955), pp. 185–210; id., 'Zur heutigen kirchenamtlichen Ablasslehre', ibid. 8 (1967), pp. 488–518, with extensive bibl. (Eng. tr., 'Remarks on the Theology of Indulgences' and 'On the Official Teaching of the Church Today on the Subject of Indulgences', Theological Investigations, 2 (1963), pp. 175–201, and 10 (1973), pp. 166–98). W. E. Lunt, Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 74; 1962), pp. 447–620. E. Magnin in DTC 7 (1922), cols. 1594–636, s.v., with bibl.; G. Löw, CSSR, and S. De Angelis in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1901–10, s.v. 'Indulgenze', with bibl.; E. Jombart in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1331–52, s.v.; G. L. Müller and others in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 1 (1993), cols. 51–8, s.v. 'Ablass'. See also works cited under PENANCE.

indult (Lat. indultum, 'a permission'). A faculty granted by the Pope or some other ecclesiastical authority to deviate from the common law of the Church. It is generally given for a specific case or for a specific period, and is commonly personal in reference, i.e. it cannot be communicated to others unless special permission is given.

Industrial Christian Fellowship (ICF). An Anglican organization which endeavours to present the Christian faith to the world of industry both by missions to industrial workers and by relating the theory and practice of Christianity to modern industry. It was formed in 1918 by the fusion of two earlier bodies, the Navvy Mission and the Christian Social Union, with the Revd P. T. R. Kirk as its first General Director. It was responsible for the convening of the *Malvern Conference in Jan. 1941, and for the meeting in the Albert Hall, London, on 26 Sept. 1942, when Abp. W. *Temple made a strong plea for the application of Christian principles to business and economics. The aims of the Fellowship have similarities with those of *Catholic Action in some RC countries.

[W.] G. Studdert-Kennedy, Dog-Collar Democracy: The Industrial Christian Fellowship, 1919–1929 (1982).

Ineffabilis Deus. The constitution of *Pius IX, issued 8 Dec. 1854, defining the dogma of the *Immaculate Conception. It asserted that the BVM 'in the first instant of her conception was, by a singular privilege and grace granted by God, in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the human race, preserved exempt from all stain of original sin'. During the octave of the Feast (8–15 Dec.) it used to be read in the second *nocturn at *Mattins.

Text in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentiorum. Collectio Lacensis. Auctoribus Presbyteris S. J. e Domo B. V. M. sine Labe Conceptae ad Lacum, 6 (Freiburg i.B., 1882), cols. 836–43. Extract in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 774–6 (nos. 2800–4). See also bibl. to IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

infallibility. Inability to err in teaching revealed truth. It is a negative condition, complementary to the positive quality of 'inspiration'. While many Christians maintain that the Church is infallible, upon the basis of such texts as Jn. 16: 13, Acts 15: 28, various beliefs have been held as to the seat where such infallibility resides. It has sometimes been sought in those doctrines and truths of revelation which have been accepted by all the historic branches of the Church; at other times in the definitions of such councils of the Church as have been generally accepted as *Oecumenical. At the First *Vatican Council (1870) the RC Church declared that the Pope was infallible when he defined that a doctrine concerning faith or morals was part of the deposit of divine revelation handed down from apostolic tradition and was therefore to be believed by the whole Church. In RC doctrine such a definition is infallible even antecedently to its acceptance by the Church. The RC Church also teaches that the same infallibility attaches to whatever is taught as part of the deposit of revelation by the entire body of RC bishops in union with the Pope, whether inside or outside an Oecumenical Council; this point, made in the First Vatican Council, was stressed at the Second Vatican Council.

Infancy Gospels. The apocryphal stories about the birth and childhood of Christ which were put into circulation in early Christian times. They are all of poor literary quality and devoid of historical value. The two most important are the 'Book of *James' (the '*Protevangelium') and the 'Infancy Gospel of *Thomas' (qq.v.).

Infant Baptism. Although from the first *Baptism was the universal means of entry into the Christian community, the NT contains no specific authority for its administration to infants. But by a tradition at least as old as the 3rd cent., and virtually universal until the *Reformation, children born to Christian parents have been baptized in infancy. In the 16th cent. this practice ('paedobaptism') was rejected by the *Anabaptists and since the early 17th cent. also by the *Baptists (and later by the *Disciples of Christ).

In the NT the children of Christian parents are themselves regarded as Christian (Col. 3: 20), while there is no suggestion that they will need to seek Baptism on reaching years of discretion. St *Paul speaks of Baptism as a spiritual counterpart to *circumcision, the rite whereby Jews were admitted as infants to the benefits of the Covenant and to membership of the religious community (cf. Col. 2: 11 f.). In households where Baptism is mentioned in Acts 16: 15 and 33 (cf. 18: 8) and 1 Cor. 1: 16, children may have been baptized along with adults. The absence of positive evidence has sometimes been explained by the fact that the NT documents are concerned mainly with the spread of Christianity in the non-Christian world and hardly at all with the recruitment of the Church from persons of Christian parentage and upbringing. On the other hand, it is claimed that the command to 'make disciples of (μαθητεύσατε) all nations, baptizing them . . .' (Mt. 28: 19) forbids Baptism without conscious discipleship. 1 Cor. 7: 14 has been used on both sides of the argument: the children of mixed marriages are said to be 'holy' and not 'unclean'; this description may perhaps suggest that they have been baptized, but explicitly the cleanness is ascribed to the faith of the believing partner.

In post-Apostolic times evidence for Infant Baptism has been seen in St *Justin Martyr's reference (Apol. 1. 15) to Christians then some 60 or 70 years old who had 'from childhood been made disciples' and in St *Polycarp's claim at the time of his martyrdom (prob. AD 155 or 156) to have been 'Christ's servant' for 86 years. St *Irenaeus (Haer. 2. 22) speaks of Christ as 'giving salvation to those of every age' who are 'regenerated' (renascuntur) through Him, and expressly includes 'infants and little children' among them. More explicitly, in its instructions for Baptism, the Apostolic Tradition* (21) states that little children are to be baptized first, and that if they cannot answer for themselves, their parents or some other member of the family is to answer on their behalf. In the 3rd cent. *Origen (Hom in Lev. 8. 3, and Comm. in Rom. 5. 9) refers to the Baptism of infants as an established practice which the Church had received from the Apostles; he finds the practice justified by the need of infants, no less than of adults, for liberation from *original sin; *Cyprian (Ep. 64) takes a similar view. On the other hand, *Tertullian (De Baptismo, 18) opposed the practice (incidentally witnessing to its existence); he argued that the Baptism of children should be deferred until they can 'know Christ'. Even in the 4th cent. not all children of Christian parents were baptized in infancy: St *Basil and St *Gregory of Nazianzus, with both parents Christian, were baptized only in their twenties, and St *Augustine's deferment of Baptism is well known. But from about this time the Baptism of children became increasingly normal. Augustine's understanding of original sin entailed the corollary that children who died unbaptized were damned (cf. Enchiridion 23. 93); this teaching might have been expected to encourage the practice of baptizing infants at the earliest opportunity, but it was prob. not the principal factor at the time. Other changes fostered the custom of bringing infants to Baptism. With the toleration of Christianity under *Constantine, Baptism no longer entailed risks of persecution, and as the Church became identified with the State in the 5th cent., Baptism came to be regarded as a rite of passage associated with birth; Baptism of infants thus became the norm. In the Middle Ages the practice, by then virtually universal, was rejected only by a few small sects and movements which were heretical in other ways also.

In the E. Church, Infant Baptism is followed at once by the administration of *chrism and also of Holy Communion, while in the W., *Confirmation and Communion are deferred till the age of conscious participation, after instruction. Except in cases of emergency, sponsors (*godparents) are required for every baptized infant, whose duty it is to see that the child receives Christian instruction and is brought for Confirmation at the appropriate age. Acc. to Catholic doctrine (set forth, e.g., in the service of Infant Baptism in the BCP), the rite conveys the essential gift of regeneration, so that 'children which are baptized, dying before they commit sin, are undoubtedly saved'. The Baptists and other Protestants who reject Infant Baptism do so traditionally on the double ground that it is without warrant in the NT and that as a mere ceremony or ordinance (not a sacrament) it could convey no spiritual benefit to the unconscious recipient. Among those who retain it, e.g. *Lutheran, *Reformed (Presbyterian), *Methodist, and *Congregationalist bodies, many regard it as a dedication of the child and a declaration of the universal availability of the salvation wrought by Christ, which is prior to any individual response, holding that full Church membership is granted later in response to profession of faith.

In most Churches which practise Infant Baptism there has in modern times been much reconsideration of the traditional practice by individuals and unofficial groups, esp. in view of the fact that many who bring their children for Baptism are now only nominally Christian, and reasonable expectation of a Christian upbringing is lacking. In such cases the refusal of Baptism, or its deferment on condition of the parents' accepting instruction, has been advocated, and the 1969 RC Order for the Baptism of Infants envisages that in some circumstances Baptism should be delayed. On theological grounds this deferment had been defended by K. *Barth. Against this it is urged that such a rebuff to those who voluntarily, if ignorantly, seek Baptism for their children is inconsistent with the Church's duty to them and that a valuable pastoral opportunity is lost.

The classic Eng. defence of the practice is W. *Wall, The History of Infant Baptism (2 pts., London, 1705). D. *Stone, Holy Baptism (1899), pp. 96–109 and 254–8; N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (1927), esp. pp. 550–54; W. F. Flemington, The New Testament Doctrine of Baptism (1953), pp. 130–47; P. C. Marcel, The Biblical Doctrine of Infant Baptism (tr. from periodical arts. by P. E. Hughes, 1953). K. Barth, Die kirchliche Lehre von der Taufe (2nd edn., Theologische Studien, 14; Zurich, 1943; Eng. tr. 1948); id., Kirchliche Dogmatik, 4, Heft 4: Die Taufe als Begründung des christlichen Lebens, 1967; Eng. tr., 1969), both attacking the practice. A reply to the first by O. *Cullmann, Die Tauflehre des Neuen Testaments (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 12; Zurich, 1948; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 1; 1950); J. Jeremias, Die Kindertaufe in den ersten vier Jahrhunderten (1958; Eng. tr., 1960); K. Aland, Die Säuglingstaufe im Neuen Testament und in der Alten Kirche: eine Antwort an Joachim Jeremias (1961; Eng. tr., 1963); reply by J. Jeremias, Nochmals: Die Anfänge der Kindertaufe (Theologische Existenz heute, NF 101; 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); K. Aland, Die Stellung der Kinder in den frühen christlichen Gemeinden—und ihre Taufe (ibid. 138; 1967); id., Taufe und Kindertaufe [against Barth] (1971). A. S. Yates, Why Baptize Infants? A Study of the Biblical, Traditional and Theological Evidence (Norwich, 1993); C. Buchanan, Infant Baptism and the Gospel: The Church of England's Dilemma (1993). See also bibl. to BAPTISM.

infidel. A person who has a positive disbelief in every form of the Christian faith. In medieval times the word (Lat. infidelis) was employed esp. of the Muslims, and also, though less often, of Jews and pagans; but the distinction 'Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Hereticks' in the third *Good Friday *collect of the BCP points to its use in a narrower sense.

infirmarian. In a monastery or religious house, the person in charge of the sick-quarters.

Infralapsarianism. See SUBLAPSARIANISM.

infusion. See AFFUSION.

